Good-value accommodation in Islamorada includes the very cheap Key Lantern/Blue Fin, MM82-Bayside (☎ 305/664-4572, 🌐 www.keylantern.com; 📶) – ask for a room at the Blue Fin (same price), since these were more recently renovated – and the serene Drop Anchor, MM85-Oceanside (☎ 1-888/664-4863; 📶). As for eating, 🌟 Hungry Tarpon, MM77.5-Bayside (☎ 305/664-0535), serves excellent fresh fish as well as tasty breakfasts, while the pricier – and often packed – Islamorada Fish Company, MM81.5-Bayside (☎ 1-800/258-2559), is also good for seafood.

The Middle Keys

Once over Long Key Bridge, you're into THE MIDDLE KEYS. At the not-for-profit Dolphin Research Center, MM59-Bayside (daily 9am–4.30pm; ☎ 305/289-1121, 🌐 www.dolphins.org), you can swim with the dolphins for $180 (reservations at ☎ 305/289-0002).

The largest of several islands in the Middle Keys, Key Vaca holds the nucleus of the area's major settlement, Marathon. Here you'll find great fishing and water- sports opportunities, as well as a couple of small beaches. Sombrero Beach, along Sombrero Beach Road (off the Overseas Highway near MM50-Oceanside), has good swimming waters and shaded picnic tables.

Close by, at MM50.5-Bayside, nestled inside the 64-acre tropical forest of Crane Point Hammock, the Museum of Natural History of the Florida Keys (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7.50; ☎ 305/743-9100, 🌐 www.cranepoint.org) provides an excellent introduction to the history and ecology of the area. Follow the one-mile nature trail past the hammock forest, an area of dense hardwood trees characteristic of the Keys, until you reach the end of the trail. Here, you'll find the reconstructed remnants of a nineteenth-century village established by settlers from the Bahamas.

Marathon has some well-equipped resorts, such as the lush Banana Bay, MM49.5-Bayside (☎ 1-800/226-2621, 🌐 www.bananabay.com; 📍), which has a private beach. The best budget option is the 🦩 Flamingo Inn, MM59-Bayside (☎ 1-800/439-1478, 🌐 www.theflamingoinn.com; 📍), a lovingly maintained retro motel with large rooms. For eating, there's terrific seafood – including succulent beer-steamed shrimp – at Castaway, 15th Street near MM47.5-Oceanside (☎ 305/743-6247). The tiny, laid-back 🦩 Seven Mile Grill, by the bridge of the same name at MM47.5-Bayside (☎ 305/743-4481), serves delicious conch and creamy Key Lime Pie to locals, sea salts, and tourists alike. For good, cheap Cuban food, try Don Pedro Restaurant, MM53-Oceanside (☎ 305/743-5247).

The Lower Keys

Starkly different from their neighbors to the north, THE LOWER KEYS are quiet, heavily wooded, and predominantly residential. Built on a limestone rather than a coral base, these islands have a flora and fauna all their own. It feels very quiet as you head south: seemingly everyone's either gone fishing or is snoozing in a hammock.

The first place of consequence you'll hit after crossing Seven Mile Bridge is one of the Keys' prettiest spots: Bahia Honda State Park, at MM37-Oceanside (daily 8am–sunset; $3.50 per car and driver, plus $2.50 for first passenger, 50¢ for each additional passenger; pedestrians and cyclists $1.50; ☎ 305/872-2353, 🌐 www.bahiahondapark.com). Its lagoon has an alluring natural beach – the best stretch of sand in the Keys – and pristine, two-tone ocean waters, which can be enjoyed on a leisurely kayak ride ($10 per hour).

Divers should head for the Looe Key Marine Sanctuary, signposted from the Overseas Highway on Ramrod Key: it's a five-square-mile protected reef area, easily the equal of the John Pennekamp Coral Reef State Park (see p.625). The sanctuary office (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 305/743-2437, 🌐 www.fknms.nos.noaa.gov) can provide free maps, but to visit the reef you'll need the services of a dive shop, like the neighboring Looe Key Dive Center (☎ 1-800/942-5397, 🌐 www.diveflakeys.com).

Big Pine Key is the main Lower Keys settlement. Nearby you'll find most of the accommodation in these parts – which is generally more limited and expensive than in the Middle and Upper Keys. Looe Key Reef Resort, MM27.5-Oceanside (☎ 1-800/942-5397, 🌐 www.diveflakeys.com; 📍), is an ideal base for visiting the marine sanctuary, while for a real splurge, stay at the idyllic, adult-only Little Palm Island, MM28.5-Oceanside, Little Torch Key (☎ 1-800/343-8567, 🌐 www.littlepalmisland.com; 📍), a private islet whose thatched cottages are set in lush gardens a few feet from the beach.

For food, the dollar-bill-decorated 🍷 No Name Pub, a mile or so from MM30-Bayside down North Watson Boulevard (☎ 305/872-9115) is known for its superb thin-crust pizza. Further on down the Overseas Highway, on Sugarloaf Key at MM20-Bayside, the friendly Mangrove Mama's (☎ 305/745-3030; closed Sept) serves stupendous local cuisine in a cheery shack with a tropical garden.

Key West

Closer to Cuba than to mainland Florida, KEY WEST often seems rather tenuously bound to the rest of the US. Famed for their tolerant attitudes and laid-back lifestyles, the 30,000 islanders seem adrift in a great expanse of sea and sky, and – despite a million tourists a year – the place resonates with an individual spirit. In particular, liberal attitudes have stimulated a large gay influx, estimated at two in five of the population. Although Key West today has been heavily restored and revitalized for the tourists, the town has retained some of its sense of individualism and isolation, especially away from the main drag of Duval Street. To best absorb this atmosphere – and the mellow pace of local life – take time to amble the gorgeous, lushly vegetated streets, make meals last for hours, and pause regularly for refreshment in the numerous bars.

The airport (☎ 305/296-5439) is four miles east of town, with the Greyhound bus station (☎ 305/296-9072) adjacent to its entrance. There are no shuttle buses into town; a taxi (☎ 305/296-6666) costs around $10.

The best place to head for information is the Greater Key West Chamber of Commerce, in the center of town next to Mallory Square at 402 Wall St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–6.30pm, Sat & Sun 8.30am–6pm; ☎ 305/294-2587, 🌐 www.keywestchamber.org). The Chamber can give precise dates for Key West's annual festivals, the best of which are the Conch Republic Celebration in April and Fantasy Fest in late October, which feels like a gay Mardi Gras crossed with Halloween. A good source of gay information is the Key West Business Guild, 513 Truman Ave (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 305/294-4603, 🌐 www.gaykeywestfl.com).

It's best to explore the narrow streets of the mile-square Old Town – which contains virtually everything that you'll want to see – on foot. You could do it in little more than a day, though dashing about isn't the way to enjoy the place. Cycling is another good way of getting around: bikes can be rented from Adventure Scooter & Bicycle Rentals, with two locations (out of seven around the Old Town) at 1 Duval St and 601 Front St ($15 per day; ☎ 305/293-9933).

Accommodation

During the winter, it's essential to make a reservation for accommodation in Key West; the Fantasy Fest festival at the end of October is another extremely busy time. In summer, competition for rooms is less fierce, and prices drop by up to thirty percent.

Angelina Guest House 302 Angela St ☎ 1-888/303-4480, 🌐 www.angelinaguesthouse.com. This charming guesthouse, tucked away in the backstreets of the Bahamian Village, has a cool, Caribbean feel, and is one of the best deals in town. Room with shared bath ⑤, room with private bath ④.

Atlantic Shores 510 South St ☎ 1-800/526-3559, 🌐 www.atlanticshoresresort.com. Art Deco resort open to all, but attracting mostly gays. Has a popular clothing-optional pool and adjacent nude beach. ⑤

Big Ruby's 409 Applerouth Lane ☎ 1-800/477-7829, 🌐 www.bigrubys.com. Gay guesthouse with stylish rooms clustered round a lagoon pool and patio that's perfect for peaceful lounging. ⑤

Eden House 1015 Fleming St ☎ 305/296-6868, 🌐 www.edenhouse.com. Here, a grotty lobby hides one of the city's best deals – large rooms, free parking, free happy hour every night, and a shaded pool. Room with shared bath from ④, room with private bath from ⑤.

Key West Hostel & Sea Shell Motel 718 South St ☎ 305/296-5719, 🌐 www.keywesthostel.com. The hostel has cheap dorm beds ($28–31), a sunny patio, and no curfew, while the Sea Shell Motel (③) offers standard rooms at the lowest rates in the neighborhood.

Marrero's Guest Mansion 410 Fleming St ☎ 305/294-6977 or 1-800/459-6212, 🌐 www.marreros.com. Antique-filled old mansion that's supposedly haunted; room 18 is where most of the paranormal activity has been reported. Cheapest room ⑤, room 18 ⑥.

Pearl's Rainbow 525 United St ☎ 1-800/749-6696, 🌐 www.pearlsrainbow.com. The lone women-only guesthouse on the island, this attractive former cigar factory serves breakfast and has two pools and two Jacuzzis. ⑤

Tropical Inn 812 Duval St ☎ 1-888/611-6510, 🌐 www.tropicalinn.com. The large, airy rooms in this charming restored “conch” house are at the center of the action. Most rooms sleep three, and the more expensive ones have balconies. ⑤

The Town

Anyone who visited Key West two decades ago would now barely recognize the Old Town's main promenade, the mile-long swath of Duval Street. Teetering just on the safe side of seedy for many years, much of the street has been transformed into a well-tended tourist strip of boutiques and beachwear shops, although it's still a pleasant place for a leisurely stroll. For a sense of the locals' town, take time to explore the side streets, where gnarled banyans, tall skinny palms, creepers, and unruly, exotic blooms threaten to overtake the faded wooden houses. Make sure, as well, to visit the Bahamian Village, centered on Thomas and Petronia streets. Originally settled by Cubans and African-Bahamians, this relatively unrestored, untouristed corner of town is an atmospheric patchwork of single-story cigar-makers' cottages, Cuban groceries, and ramshackle old churches, all covered by a rich green foliage.

Numerous museums in town concern themselves with "wrecking," or the salvaging of cargo from sunken vessels; it's the industry on which Key West's earliest good times were based. The friendly little Wrecker's Museum, 322 Duval St (also known as the Oldest House Museum; daily 10am–4pm; $5; ☎ 305/294-9502), illuminates the lives of the wreckers, portraying them as brave, uninsured heroes who risked all to save cargoes, ships, and lives. Judging by the choice furniture that fills the house – lived in by the wrecker Captain Watlington during the 1830s – they did pretty well for their pains.

Farther up Duval, at no. 516, the San Carlos Institute (Tues–Sun noon–4pm; $3 donation; ☎ 305/294-3887) has played a leading role in Cuban exile life since it opened in 1871. Financed by a grant from the Cuban government, the present building dates from 1924. Cuban architect Francisco Centurion designed the two-story building in the Cuban Baroque style of that period. Soil from Cuba's six provinces covers the grounds, and a cornerstone was taken from the tomb of Cuban independence campaigner José Martí. There's a passable exhibition on Cuban heritage here, and they also distribute the free Cuban Heritage Trail pamphlet, which details sites of interest around town.

The southernmost point in Key West, and consequently in the continental US, is at the intersection of Whitehead and South streets. A daft-looking buoy marks the spot. Watch out for people here who'll kindly offer to take your photograph, and then expect tipping for the pleasure.

△ Ernest Hemingway Home & Museum

Back up and just west from the northern end of Duval Street is Mallory Square. In the early 1800s, thousands of dollars' worth of salvage was landed at the piers, stored in the warehouses, and flogged at the auction houses here. Nowadays, however, it is dominated by tourist shops and worth only a brief linger.

Head rather to the nearby Mel Fisher Maritime Heritage Society Museum, 200 Greene St (daily 9.30am–5pm; $11; ☎ 305/294-2633, 🌐 www.melfisher.org), which showcases the diamonds, pearls, and daggers, as well as countless vases, an impressive emerald cross, and the obligatory cannon, that Fisher pulled up from two seventeenth-century shipwrecks in 1985 – a haul said to be worth at least $200 million.

Finally, down Whitehead Street from Greene, you'll find Key West's most popular tourist attraction: the Ernest Hemingway Home & Museum, at no. 907 (daily 9am–5pm; $11; ☎ 305/294-1136, 🌐 www.hemingwayhome.com). Sadly, the compulsory half-hour guided tour deals more in fantasy than fact: while it's true that Hemingway owned this large, vaguely Moorish house for thirty years, he lived in it for barely ten, and even the authenticity of the furnishings is disputed. That said, some of his most acclaimed novels, including A Farewell to Arms and To Have and Have Not, were written in the study (the hayloft of a carriage house, which the author entered by way of a rope bridge). Divorced in 1940, Hemingway boxed up his manuscripts and moved them to a back room at the original Sloppy Joe's (see p.632), before heading off for a house in Cuba with his new wife, journalist Martha Gellhorn. Today, some fifty cats – many of them with six toes, traditionally employed as ship's mascots – pad contentedly around the gardens. Whatever the guides say, Hemingway kept his feline harem while living in Cuba, not Key West, so it's unlikely that these cats are in any way related to Papa's pets.

Eating

In Key West, it's de rigueur to sample conch fritters; the salmon and white stand (daily 10.30am–6pm; no phone) on Mallory Square does the best in town for under six dollars for a dozen.

Alice's 1114 Duval St ☎ 305/292-5733. The menu at this upscale eatery contains a varied choice of, often Asian-inflected, fusion fare, plus some more offbeat dishes such as Cuban-style ostrich.

Antonia's 615 Duval St ☎ 305/294-6565. Expensive but excellent northern Italian cuisine served in a formal but friendly environment. Sit in the old front room rather than the characterless modern extension out back. Dinner only.

Awful Arthur's Seafood Company 628 Duval St ☎ 305/293-7663. A fair amount of tourists come to this lively fish shack for its good-value nightly specials, such as All You Can Eat Crab Legs for $24.

 Blue Heaven Café corner of Thomas and Petronia sts ☎ 305/296-0867. Sit in a dirt yard and enjoy fresh fish, jerk chicken, and fabulous lobster Benedict breakfasts as chickens peck around your feet.

Café Marquesa inside the Marquesa Hotel at 600 Fleming St ☎ 305/292-1244. This chichi restaurant with its imaginative and pricey New American menu is the town's best fine dining spot.

Camille's 1202 Simonton St ☎ 305/296-4811.

Great, affordable breakfasts and brunches – menu options in the past have included cashew nut waffles and banana buttermilk pancakes.

El Siboney 900 Catherine St ☎ 305/296-4184.

Come to this no-frills family diner for copious, inexpensive, and good-quality Cuban dishes.

 Sarabeth's 530 Simonton St ☎ 305/293-8181. Satisfying homestyle cooking served in the appropriately welcoming setting of an old wooden clapboard house.

 Sandy's Café inside the M&M Laundry, 1026 White St ☎ 305/295-0159. Dingy café offering cheap and excellent Cuban sandwiches and the best café con leche this side of Miami.

Seven Fish Restaurant 632 Olivia St ☎ 305/296-2777. This little-known, mid-priced bistro, easy to miss in its tiny white corner building, serves some of the best food – shrimp scampi, meatloaf, and the like – in town. There are just over a dozen tables, so it pays to call ahead.

Nightlife and entertainment

The anything-goes nature of Key West is exemplified by the convivial bars that make up the bulk of the island's nightlife. Gregarious, rough-and-ready affairs, many stay open as late as 4am and feature regular live music. The most popular places are grouped around the northern end of Duval Street, no more than a few minutes' stagger from one another. For something a little less macho, keep south of the 500 block of Duval.

Blu Room 42 Apperlouth Lane ☎ 305/296-6667. The closest Key West comes to a traditional nightclub, with a bare bar and dimly-lit dancefloor. Come only if you want to dance – the music (mainly hard house) is too loud to talk.

Bourbon Street Pub 724 Duval St ☎ 305/296-1992. This huge pub complex is the largest gay-friendly place to drink in the center of town; there's a pleasant garden out back, complete with a large hot tub.

Captain Tony's Saloon 428 Greene St ☎ 305/294-1838. This rustic saloon was the original Sloppy Joe's, where Hemingway hung out (see p.631). Today, it's one of the less cheesy choices for live music.

Green Parrot Inn 601 Whitehead St ☎ 305/294-6133, 🌐 www.greenparrot.com. This Key West landmark, open since 1890, draws plenty of locals to its pool tables, dartboard, and pinball machine. There's live music on the weekends – check website for schedule.

Hog's Breath Saloon 400 Front St ☎ 305/292-2032, 🌐 www.hogsbreath.com. This bar's one of the best places to catch live music in town (check website for schedule), mostly for a nominal cover – just don't be put off by the boozed-up patrons circling its entrance.

The East Coast

Facing the Atlantic Ocean, Florida's East Coast runs for more than three hundred miles north from the northern fringe of Miami. Each of the communities near Miami – all boasting the palm-dotted beaches and warm ocean waves typical of southern Florida – have something unique to offer. Fort Lauderdale, no longer the party town of popular imagination, is today a sophisticated cultural center with a bubbling, increasingly upscale social scene. To the north, Boca Raton and Palm Beach are quiet, exclusive communities, their Mediterranean Revival mansions inhabited almost entirely by multimillionaires. Beyond Palm Beach, the coast is still mostly undeveloped; even the Space Coast, anchored by the extremely popular Kennedy Space Center, is smack in the middle of a nature preserve. Just north, Daytona Beach attracts race car- and motorcycle-enthusiasts with its festivals and the Daytona International Speedway. Lastly, enchanting St Augustine is the spot where Spanish settlers established North America's first foreign colony.

By car, the scenic route along the coast is Hwy-A1A, which sticks to the ocean side of the Intracoastal Waterway, formed when the rivers dividing the mainland from the barrier islands were joined and deepened during World War II. When necessary, Hwy-A1A turns inland and links with the much less picturesque US-1. The speediest road in the region, I-95, runs about ten miles west of the coastline, and is only worthwhile if you're in a hurry.

Fort Lauderdale

Following the 1960 teen-exploitation movie Where the Boys Are, FORT LAUDERDALE, with its seven miles of palm-shaded white sands, instantly became the number-one Spring Break destination in the US. However, having fueled its economic boom on underage drinking and lascivious excess, the city promptly turned its back on the revelers. By the end of the 1980s, it had imposed enough restrictions on boozing and wild behavior to put an end to the bacchanal. Since then, Fort Lauderdale has transformed itself into a thriving pleasure port, catering to individual yacht-owners and major cruise liners alike. It's also one of the fastest-growing residential areas in the country, and has for years been known as one of gay America's favorite holiday haunts.

Both of Fort Lauderdale's public transit terminals are in or close to downtown. Greyhound buses pull in at 515 NE 3rd St, while the Amtrak and Tri-Rail train station (☎ 1-800/TRI-RAIL, 🌐 www.tri-rail.com) is two miles west at 200 SW 21st Terrace – take bus #22 into town ($1). The main local visitor center is at 100 E Broward Blvd, Suite 200 (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/22-SUNNY, 🌐 www.sunny.org).

Local bus #11 runs twice hourly along Las Olas Boulevard between downtown and the beach. You can also use the water taxi (all-day pass $10; ☎ 954/467-6677, 🌐 www.watertaxi.com), which can take you almost anywhere along Fort Lauderdale's many miles of waterfront.

Accommodation

Although Fort Lauderdale is moving inexorably upscale, plenty of motels near the beach still offer a reasonable room for around $50 in summer (more like $75 in winter). The tourist office's (see above) free annual Superior Small Lodgings Guide has full listings.

Backpackers Beach Hostel 2115 N Ocean Blvd
☎ 954/567-7275, 🌐 www.fortlauderdalehostel.com.
Clean, well-equipped hostel with free parking, Internet, and local calls. Dorm beds $20, private rooms ②.

Bermudian Tropical Garden 315 N Birch Rd
☎ 954/467-0467, 🌐 www.bermudian-tropical.com. Low prices, a wide choice of motel rooms and apartments, and a pretty pool and sundeck area make this worth a try. ②

☎ 954/467-9639, 🌐 www.pillarsshotel.com.

com. Quiet, intimate British-colonial-style hotel in the heart of the beach area (though facing the waterway rather than the ocean). ⑦

Riverside Hotel 620 E Las Olas Blvd ☎ 1-800/325-3280, 🌐 www.riversidehotel.com. Pricey but elegant option in the heart of downtown. ⑦

Funky, family-owned hotel a block from the beach, where the good-value rates include use of tennis courts and a small gym. ④

Downtown Fort Lauderdale

Downtown Fort Lauderdale focuses on a few blocks between E Broward and E Las Olas boulevards, which cross US-1 a couple of miles east of I-95. Heavily prettified with parks and promenades, it's a pleasant place for a stroll, especially if you follow the mile-long pedestrian Riverwalk along the north shore of the New River. Las Olas Boulevard itself, the main shopping district, remains busy day and night, with boutiques, galleries, restaurants, bars, and sidewalk cafés in abundance. It's also home to the stimulating Museum of Art, 1 E Las Olas Blvd (daily 11am–7pm; $6; ☎ 954/525-5500, 🌐 www.moaff.org), whose largely modern collection features the emotionally powerful expressionistic work of the CoBrA movement of artists from Copenhagen, Brussels, and Amsterdam. Not far west, the simulators and interactive displays at the Museum of Discovery & Science, 401 SW 2nd St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–6pm; $15; ☎954/467-6637, @www.mods.org), should pacify kids pining for Disney. There’s also a 3D IMAX theater, a ticket to which is included in admission to the museum; call or visit the website for showtimes.

The beach

Although downtown has its charms and attractions, most visitors come to Fort Lauderdale for its broad, clean, and undeniably beautiful beach. You’ll find it by crossing the arching Intracoastal Waterway Bridge, about two miles along Las Olas Boulevard from downtown. Along the seafront, Fort Lauderdale Beach Boulevard once bore the brunt of Spring Break partying, though only a few beachfront bars suggest the carousing of the past. Today, an attractive promenade draws an altogether healthier crowd of joggers, in-line skaters, and cyclists.

Eating and drinking

The two main drags for eating and drinking in Fort Lauderdale are Las Olas and Sunrise boulevards.

Casablanca Café 3049 Alhambra St ☎954/764-3500. An American piano bar in a Moroccan setting, serving a good, eclectic, and moderately priced menu of Mediterranean-influenced American fare. Live music most nights.

Ernie’s BBQ Lounge 1843 S Federal Hwy (US-1) ☎954/523-8636. Scruffy but likeable place, south of downtown, famous for its glorious conch chowder.

The Floridian 1410 E Las Olas Blvd ☎954/463-4041. Retro decor and outstanding diner food – especially the mammoth breakfasts – at rock-bottom prices. Open 24hr.

Mangos 904 E Las Olas Blvd ☎954/523-5001. Decent dining, though most people go for the people-watching along Las Olas, and the energetic workout, dancing to roaring live rock/R&B/jazz jams at this singles scene.

Seasons 52 2428 E Sunrise Blvd at the Galleria Mall ☎954/537-1052. Health-conscious regional restaurant chain where every one of the fresh and tasty seasonal dishes has less than 475 calories. There’s also a good wine list.

Southport Raw Bar 1536 Cordova Rd ☎954/525-2526. South of downtown, near Port Everglades, this boisterous local bar specializes in succulent crustaceans and well-prepared fish dishes.

Taverna Opa 3051 NE 32nd St ☎954/567-1630. A raucous good time can be had at this fun Greek establishment, complete with flowing ouzo and crashing dishes. Dinner only.

Boca Raton

BOCA RATON (literally, “the mouth of the rat”), twenty miles north of Fort Lauderdale, is noteworthy mostly for its abundance of Mediterranean Revival architecture. This style, prevalent here since the 1920s, has been kept alive in the downtown area by strict building codes. New structures must incorporate arched entranceways, fake bell towers, and red-tiled roofs whenever possible, ensuring a consistent and distinctive “look.”

This all goes back to architect Addison Mizner, who swept into Boca Raton on the tide of the Florida property boom in 1925, buying up 1600 acres of farmland. Mizner was influenced by the medieval architecture he’d seen around the Mediterranean, and the few public buildings he completed (along with close to fifty homes) left an indelible mark on Boca Raton (Mizner also shaped the look of nearby Palm Beach). His million-dollar Cloister Inn, for example, grew into the present Boca Raton Resort and Club, 501 E Camino Real, a pink palace of marble columns, sculptured fountains, and carefully aged wood (☎ 1-888/491-BOCA, 🌐 www.bocaresort.com; 📍). Mizner's spirit is also invoked at Mizner Park, off US-1 between Palmetto Park Rd and Glades Rd, a stylish open-air shopping plaza adorned with palm trees and waterfalls. The park is home to the Boca Raton Museum of Art, 501 Plaza Real (Tues, Thurs & Fri 10am–5pm, Wed 10am–9pm, Sat & Sun noon–5pm; $8; ☎ 561/392-2500, 🌐 www.bocamuseum.org), worth a stop for its drawings by modern European masters – Degas, Matisse, Picasso – and a formidable collection of African art.

A mile north of Hwy-798 (which links downtown Boca Raton with the beach), at 1801 N Ocean Blvd/Hwy-A1A, the Gumbo Limbo Nature Center (Mon–Sat 9am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $3 donation; ☎ 561/338-1473, 🌐 www.gumbolimbo.org) covers twenty acres inhabited by osprey, brown pelicans, and sea turtles. Reserve well in advance for the night turtle-watching tours offered between May and July.

A couple miles north of downtown, Boca Raton's most explorable beachside area is Spanish River Park (daily 8am–sunset; cars $16–18, pedestrians and cyclists free). Most of these fifty acres of lush vegetation and high-rise greenery are only penetrable on trails through shady thickets.

Practicalities

Greyhound does not serve Boca Raton. Tri-Rail stops off I-95, at 680 Yamato Rd (☎ 1-800/TRI-RAIL); there's a connecting shuttle to the town center. The Chamber of Commerce is at 1800 N Dixie Hwy (Mon–Thurs 8.30am–5pm, Fri 8.30am–4pm; ☎ 561/395-4433, 🌐 www.bocaratonchamber.com). The Townplace Suites by Marriott, 5110 NW 8th Ave (☎ 561/994-7232; 📍), and Ocean Lodge, 531 N Ocean Blvd (☎ 561/395-7772; 📍), are two hotels providing reasonable value for money. For eating, the upscale Max's Grill, 404 Plaza Real (☎ 561/368-0080), has appealing American dishes with Asian influences, while the elegantly casual Gigi's, 346 Plaza Real (☎ 561/368-4488), serves good French bistro fare.

Palm Beach

A small island town of palatial homes and gardens, with streets so clean you could eat off them, PALM BEACH has been synonymous for nearly a century with the kind of lifestyle only limitless loot can buy. The nation's wealthy began wintering here in the 1890s, after Henry Flagler brought his East Coast railroad south from St Augustine, building two luxury hotels on this then-secluded, palm-filled island. Since then, the rich and famous have flocked here to become part of the Palm Beach elite. Joe Kennedy – father of John, Robert, and Ted – bought the so-called Kennedy Compound here in 1933.

Lined with designer stores and high-class art galleries, Worth Avenue, close to the southern tip of the island, is a good place to see some of the town's Addison Mizner-inspired architecture: stucco walls, Romanesque facades, passageways leading to small courtyards, and spiral staircases climbing to the upper levels.

Where Coconut Row and Whitehall Way meet, the white Doric columns front Whitehall, also known as the Flagler Museum (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10; ☎ 561/655-2833, 🌐 www.flagler.org). This, the most overtly ostentatious home on the island, was a $4 million wedding present from Henry Flagler to his third wife, Mary Lily Kenan. As in many of Florida's first luxury homes, the interior design was lifted from the great buildings of Europe: among the 73 rooms are an Italian library, a French salon, and a Louis XV ballroom. All are stuffed with ornamentation, but they lack aesthetic cohesion.

Built in 1926 in the style of an Italianate palace, The Breakers hotel, on South County Road off the main strip (☎ 561/655-6611 or 1-888/BREAKERS, 🌐 www.thebreakers.com; 📍), operates as the last of Palm Beach's swanky resorts. Its design includes elaborate painted ceilings and huge tapestries. Take the guided tour on Wednesdays at 2pm (free for guests, $15 for the public; for information, call ☎ 561/655-6611 ext 7691).

Practicalities

In keeping with the upper-crust atmosphere, public transportation options around Palm Beach are limited. The West Palm Beach Amtrak (☎ 1-800/USA-RAIL), Tri-Rail (☎ 1-800/TRI-RAIL), and Greyhound (☎ 561/833-8534) stations are all located at 205 S Tamarind Ave in West Palm Beach on the mainland. To get to Palm Beach from there, take any PalmTran bus ($1.25; ☎ 561/841-4BUS) terminating at Quadrille Blvd, and transfer to the #41, or the #42 (no Sun service). By car, from I-95 and points west, take Okeechobee Boulevard east into Palm Beach.

The Convention and Visitors' Bureau is at 1555 Palm Beach Lakes Blvd, Suite 800 (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 561/233-3000, 🌐 www.palmbeachfl.com). You'll need plenty of money to stay here: prices of $200 a night are not uncommon (rates are cheapest between May and Dec). The elaborate, antique-furnished 🏠 Palm Beach Historic Inn, 365 S County Rd (☎ 561/832-4009, 🌐 www.palmbeachhistoricinn.com; 📍), offers some of the best rates in town, but you'll need to reserve early. The equally opulent The Chesterfield, 363 Cocoanut Row (☎ 561/659-5800, 🌐 www.chesterfieldpb.com; 📍), is another good choice. Charley's Crab, 456 S Ocean Blvd (☎ 561/659-1500), is the place to go for reasonably priced seafood, while the lunch counter at Hamburger Heaven, 314 S County Rd (☎ 561/655-5277), has been serving its delicious burgers since 1945. If money is no object – and you're dressed to kill – make for Café L'Europe, 331 S County Rd (☎ 561/655-4020): spend less than $50 a head in this super-elegant French restaurant and you'll walk away hungry.

The Space Coast

About two hundred miles north of Palm Beach, the so-called Space Coast is the base of the country's space industry. The focal point is the much-visited Kennedy Space Center, which occupies a flat, marshy island bulging into the Atlantic. In stark contrast, the rest of the island is taken over by a sizable nature preserve, the Merritt Island National Wildlife Refuge, offering great opportunities for seeing wildlife, especially birds.

The Kennedy Space Center

The Kennedy Space Center is the nucleus of the US space program: it's here that space vehicles are developed, tested, and blasted into orbit. Merritt Island has been the center of NASA's activity since 1964, when the launch pads at Cape Canaveral US Air Force base, across the water, proved too small to cope with the giant new Saturn V rockets used to launch the Apollo missions.

To reach the Visitor Complex (daily 9am–6pm; $31 adults, $21 children; Maximum Access Badge $38 adults, $28 children; ☎ 321/449-4444, 🌐 www.

kennedyspacecenter.com), take exit 212 off I-95 to Hwy-405, and follow the signs; you can also get here by connecting with Hwy-3 off Hwy-A1A. The best times to visit are on weekends and in May and September, when crowds are thinner – but at any time, you should still allow an entire day for everything the Space Center has to offer and try to arrive early in the morning. Check the weather, too, as thunderstorms may force some attractions to close.

The various exhibits in the Visitor Complex – mission capsules, space suits, lunar modules, a mock-up Space Shuttle flight deck – will keep anyone with the slightest interest in space exploration interested for a couple of hours. Afterwards, be sure to watch the two impressive IMAX movies dealing with some space theme or other and take a stroll around the open-air Rocket Garden, full of deceptively simple rockets from the 1950s, cleverly illuminated to show how they looked at blast off. The remainder of the visit is comprised of a two-hour guided bus tour. The bus passes the 52-story Vehicle Assembly Building (where Space Shuttles are prepared for launch), stops to view the launch pad, and winds up with an opportunity to inspect a Saturn V rocket and witness a simulated Apollo countdown. For the dates and times of real-life launches, call ☎321/449-4444 or check the website listed above. Various launch-viewing packages are offered (and sell out very quickly), but you get almost as good a view from anywhere within forty miles of the Space Center.

Near the Space Center, on Hwy-405 in Titusville, the Astronaut Hall of Fame (daily 9am–6.30pm; $17, or free admission with same-day Maximum Access Badge; see p.636) is one of Florida's most entertaining interactive museums, where exhibits allow you to experience G-force, a bumpy ride along the surface of Mars, and flight simulators.

Practicalities: Cocoa Beach

The closest motels to the Kennedy Space Center are on the mainland along US-1 (in Titusville, for example) – or, if you're looking for a more picturesque location, in COCOA BEACH, a few miles south on a ten-mile strip of shore washed by some of the biggest surfing waves in Florida. Options include the Luna Sea, 3185 N Atlantic Ave (☎ 1-800/586-2732; 🌐 www.lunaseacocoa.com; 📍), Days Inn, 5500 N Atlantic Ave (☎ 321/784-2550; 🌐 www.daysinncoabeach.com; 📍), and Fawltly Towers, 100 E Cocoa Beach Causeway (☎ 321/784-3870; 🌐 www.fawltytowersresort.com; 📍). For great oysters and super riverfront views, head for Sunset Café, 500 W Cocoa Beach Causeway (☎ 321/783-8485) – but go early, as it's frequently mobbed. A good dinner option is Atlantic Ocean Grille, on the Cocoa Beach Pier (☎ 321/783-7549), which has a quality, somewhat expensive menu that's especially strong on seafood.

Merriitt Island National Wildlife Refuge

NASA doesn't have Merritt Island all to itself: the agency shares it with the Merriitt Island National Wildlife Refuge (daily sunrise–sunset; free). Alligators, armadillos, raccoons, and bobcats – as well as one of Florida's greatest gatherings of birdlife – live right up against some of the human world's most advanced hardware. Winter (Oct–March) is the best time to visit, when the skies are alive with birds migrating from the frozen north and mosquitoes are nowhere to be found. At any other time, especially in summer, the island's Mosquito Lagoon is worthy of its name: bring repellent.

Eight miles off I-95's exit 220, Hwy-406 leads to the seven-mile Black Point Wildlife Drive, which gives a solid introduction to the basics of the island's ecosystem; pick up the free leaflet at the entrance. Be sure to walk in the refuge, too: off the Wildlife Drive, the five-mile Cruickshank Trail weaves around the edge of the Indian River. Drive a few miles farther east along Hwy-402 – branching from Hwy-406 just south of the Wildlife Drive and passing the visitor center (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; closed Sun April–Oct; ☎ 321/861-0667) – and then hike the half-mile Oak Hammock Trail or the two-mile Palm Hammock Trail, both accessible from the visitor center parking lot.

Daytona Beach

The consummate Florida beach town, with its T-shirt shops, amusement arcades, and wall-to-wall motels, DAYTONA BEACH owes its existence to twenty miles of enticing light brown sands. Once a favorite Spring Break destination, Daytona Beach has been trying to cultivate a more refined image in recent years. This has only been partially successful, with the partying students replaced by bikers and race-car fanatics. The town hosts three major annual events: the legendary Daytona 500 stock-car race in February (tickets from $95; call ☎ 386/253-7223 or visit 🌐 www.daytonainternationalspeedway.com); Bike Week, in early March, which attracts thousands of leather-clad bikers; and the relatively new Biktoberfest, in October, a scaled down, more family orientated version of Bike Week.

The origin of Daytona's race-car and motorcycle obsession goes back to the early 1900s, when pioneering auto enthusiasts including Louis Chevrolet, Ransom Olds, and Henry Ford came to Daytona's firm sands to race prototype vehicles beside the ocean. In fact, the world land speed record was smashed here five times by the British millionaire Malcolm Campbell. As increasing speeds made racing on the sands unsafe, the Daytona International Speedway, an ungainly configuration of concrete and steel holding 150,000 people, was opened in 1959 three miles west of downtown along International Speedway Boulevard (buses #9, #10 and #60).

Though they can't capture the excitement of a race, guided trolley tours (daily except race days 9.30am–5.30pm, every half-hour; $8.50) do provide a first-hand look at the remarkable gradients that help make this the fastest racetrack in the world. Occupying a large building next to the Speedway, the interactive exhibits that comprise Daytona USA (daily 9am–7pm; $21.50; ☎ 386/947-6800) let you have a virtual try at jacking a race-car off the ground during a pit-stop and commenting on a race, while an engaging wide-screen film complete with excellent 3-D effects tells you all about NASCAR (National Association of Stock Car Auto Racing).

For all the excitement that racing generates, the best thing about Daytona is the seemingly limitless beach: it's 500 feet wide at low tide, and fades dreamily off into the heat haze. Daytona is also one of the few beaches in Florida you can drive on – pay $5 (Feb–Nov only) at the various entrances and follow the posted procedures. Another, less heralded but worthwhile thing to do in Daytona Beach is visit the eclectic Museum of the Arts and Sciences, a mile south of the Speedway at 1040 Museum Blvd (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $12.95; ☎ 386/255-0285, 🌐 www.moas.org), whose diverse collection includes the reassembled remains of a million-year-old giant ground sloth and the first Coca-Cola can sent to space.

US-1 (called, in town, Ridgewood Avenue) plows through mainland Daytona Beach, passing the Greyhound station at 138 S Ridgewood. Trolleys ($1) run the length of the beach until midnight from mid-January to early September. The visitor center is at 126 E Orange Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/854-1234, 🌐 www.daytonabeach.com). If you're going to be in Daytona during any of the big events, accommodation should be booked at least six months ahead; and expect minimum stays and prices to at least double. Any of the motels along the ocean-front Atlantic Avenue makes a good beach base: there's the Driftwood Beach Motel, 657 S Atlantic Ave, slightly north of town in Ormond Beach (☎ 386/677-1331, 🌐 www.driftwoodmotel.com; 📍); or the welcoming, British-run 🏠 Ocean Court, 2315 S Atlantic Ave (☎ 386/253-8185, 🌐 www.oceancourt.com; 📍). Away from the beach, and close to lively Beach Street, the Coquina Inn, 544 S Palmetto Ave (☎ 386/254-4969; 🌐 www.coquinainndaytonabeach.com; 📍), is a cozy B&B.

Atlantic Avenue Ave is lined with the predictable fast food outlets, but for more inspiring eating options head to Beach Street on the mainland, where the fifties-style 🍷 Daytona Diner at no.290 1/2 N (☎ 386/258-8488) dishes up huge breakfasts for under $5 and Angell & Phelps Restaurant & Wine Bar at no. 156 S (☎ 386/257-2677) offers creative American-style gourmet cuisine in an informal setting. For fresh fish and seafood, head south toward Ponce Inlet, where you'll find the equally good Lighthouse Landing, beside the Ponce Inlet Lighthouse at 4940 S Peninsula Drive (☎ 386/761-9271), and Inlet Harbor, overlooking a marina at 133 Inlet Harbor Rd (☎ 386/767-5590). Daytona's excellent nightlife scene centers on Seabreeze Boulevard with its Spring Break-style discos such as Razzles at no. 611 (☎ 321/257-6236), Main Street with its raucous biker bars including Boot Hill Saloon at no.310 (☎ 386/258-9506), and Beach Street with more avant-garde choices like the gay-friendly 🍷 Love Bar at no. 116 N (drag shows Fri & Sat nights; ☎ 386/252-6040).

St Augustine

Forty miles north of Daytona Beach, US-1 passes through the heart of charismatic ST AUGUSTINE. Few places in Florida are as immediately engaging as this old city, with the size and even some of the looks of a small Mediterranean town. The oldest permanent settlement in the US, with much from its early days still intact along its narrow streets, it also offers two alluring lengths of beach just across Matanzas Bay.

Though Ponce de León touched ground here in 1513, European settlement didn't begin until half a century later, when Spain's Pedro Menéndez de Avilés put ashore on St Augustine's Day in 1565. The town developed into a major social and administrative center, soon to be capital of east Florida. Subsequently, Tallahassee (see p.667) became the capital of a unified Florida, and St Augustine's fortunes waned. Since then, expansion has largely bypassed the town – a fact inadvertently facilitating the restoration program that has turned this quiet community into a fine historical showcase.

The Greyhound bus station, 1711 Dobbs Rd, is a couple of miles from the center of town. The visitor center, 10 Castillo Drive (daily 8.30am–5.30pm; ☎ 1-800/653-2489, 🌐 www.visitoldcity.com), shows a film ($1) on the history of the town, has recommendations for a variety of tours (see below), and information on numerous local festivals, including torch-lit processions and a Menorcan Fiesta.

St Augustine is best seen on foot, though two sightseeing trains tour the main landmarks (daily 8.30am–4pm; $18; get tickets from the visitor center or at many B&Bs and hotels). There's no public transportation, so if you want to get to the beaches two miles away and you don't have a car you'll have to either rent a bike from the youth hostel (see below) or take a taxi (Ancient City Cabs; ☎ 904/824-8161). The Old Town Trolley sightseeing train includes free transport on the Beach Bus. As for organized tours, harbor cruises by Scenic Cruise ($15; ☎ 904/824-1806) leave four to six times a day from the Municipal Marina, near the foot of King Street. The well-organized and informative Tour St Augustine ($10; ☎ 1-800/797-3778) leads historical walking tours, while various spooky sites are visited during the “A Ghostly Experience” nighttime walking tour ($12; ☎ 904/461-1009).

Accommodation

The Old Town has many excellent restored inns offering bed-and-breakfast, and there are cheaper chain hotels outside the center of town along San Marco Avenue and Ponce de León Boulevard. Note that rates generally rise by $15–50 on weekends.

Carriage Way 70 Cuna St ☎ 1-800/908-9832, 🌐 www.carriageway.com. Canopy and four-poster beds, clawfoot tubs, and antiques add to the period feel of this 1880s house. ④

Casa Monica 95 Cordova St ☎ 1-800/648-1888, 🌐 www.casamonica.com. Elegant, beautifully restored Spanish-style hotel that has hosted the king and queen of Spain. Book well in advance. ⑤

The Old Town

Bordered on the west by St George Street, and on the south by Plaza de la Constitucion, St Augustine's Old Town holds the well-tended evidence of the town's Spanish period. It may be small, but there's a lot to see: an early start, around 9am, will give you a lead on the tourist crowds, and should allow a good look at almost everything in one day.

Given the fine state of the Castillo de San Marcos Monument, on the northern edge of the Old Town beside the bay (daily 8.45am–4.45pm; $6; www.nps.gov/casa), it's difficult to believe that the fortress was built in the late 1600s. Its longevity is due to its design: a diamond-shaped rampart at each corner maximized firepower, and fourteen-foot-thick walls reduced its vulnerability to attack. Inside, there's not a lot to see besides a small museum and echoing rooms, though venturing along the 35-foot ramparts gives good views across the city and the bay.

A hundred yards west of the monument, the eighteenth-century City Gate marks the entrance to St George Street, once the main thoroughfare and now a tourist-trampled, though genuinely historic, pedestrianized strip. You'll find a bunch of places called "The oldest..." in St Augustine; the Oldest Wooden Schoolhouse, set in lush gardens at 14 St George St (daily 9am–5pm; $3), is one of the most atmospheric – a restored wooden shack with speaking wax dummies portraying nineteenth-century schoolchildren.

Heading south on St George Street, a fair-sized plot between Tolomato Lane and Cuna Street is taken up by the excellent Colonial Spanish Quarter (daily 9am–5.30pm; $6.50). In its nine reconstructed homes and workshops, volunteers dressed as Spanish settlers go about their business at spinning-wheels, anvils, and foot-driven wood lathes.

For a more intimate look at local life during a slightly later period, head a little further south to the Peña Peck House, 143 St George St (Mon–Sat noon–5pm; free). Thought to have originally been the Spanish treasury, by the time the British took over in 1763 this was the home of a physician and his gregarious spouse, who turned the place into a high-society rendezvous.

In the sixteenth century, the Spanish king decreed that all colonial towns must be built around a central plaza; thus, St George Street runs into the Plaza de la

Constitucion, a marketplace from 1598. On the plaza's north side, the Basilica Cathedral of St Augustine (daily 7am–5pm; donation) adds a touch of grandeur, although it's largely a Sixties remodelling of the late eighteenth-century original.

Tourist numbers lessen as you cross south of the plaza into a web of quiet, narrow streets, all just as old as St George Street. West of the plaza along King Street, opposite Flagler College, the opulent Lightner Museum (daily 9am–5pm, last admission 4pm; $8; ☎904/824-2874) displays fine and decorative arts in the former building of one of the most fabulous resorts of the late nineteenth century. More substantial history is available a ten-minute walk southeast from here, at 14 St Francis St, in the form of the fascinating Oldest House (daily 9am–5pm; $8), which is indeed the oldest house in town, dating from the early 1700s. Its rooms are furnished to show how the house – and people's lives – changed as new eras unfolded.

The beaches

Some fine beaches – busiest at weekends – lie just a couple of miles east from the Old Town. Crossing the bay via the Bridge of Lions, and continuing east on Hwy-A1A will bring you to the Anastasia State Recreation Area, on Anastasia Island (daily 8am–sunset; cars $3–5, cyclists and pedestrians $1), which offers a thousand protected acres of dunes, marshes, and scrub, linked by nature walks. A few miles further south, St Augustine Beach is family terrain, with some good restaurants and a fishing pier. North of Old Town (take May St, off San Marco Ave), the broad Vilano Beach pulls a younger crowd.

Eating, drinking, and entertainment

Eating in the Old Town can be expensive, and a number of its cafés and restaurants are closed in the evening. Of those that stay open, several double as drinking spots and some have live music.

95 Cordova at the Casa Monica hotel, 95 Cordova St ☎904/810-6810. This luxurious and elegant restaurant's menu features expensive but masterful nouvelle continental cuisine.

The Bunnery 121 St George St ☎904/829-6166. Good coffee and economical breakfasts, plus tempting sandwiches and paninis, served in an old Spanish bakery.

Columbia 98 St George St ☎904/824-3341. Enjoy paella, tapas and other traditional Spanish/Cuban food in a sumptuous setting of fountains and candlelight.

Florida Cracker Café 81 St George St ☎904/829-0397. Offering an eclectic and reasonably priced mix of combo salads, conch fritters and homemade desserts.

Mill Top Tavern 19 1/2 George St ☎904/829-2329. There's a terrific, funky atmosphere at the top of this nineteenth-century mill, where you'll hear live music and get a great, open-air view of the Castillo.

The Oasis 4000 Ocean Trace Rd, St Augustine Beach ☎904/471-3424. This beach bar is famous for its burgers with their multitude of tasty toppings.

Trade Winds Lounge 124 Charlotte St ☎904/826-1590. Convivial bar where you can tap your feet to country and western and rock 'n' roll bands.

Jacksonville

Situated in the great double loop of the St Johns River, JACKSONVILLE struggled for years to throw off its longstanding reputation as a dour industrial port city with a deeply conservative population. During the 1990s, the city began to gain standing as a new service industry center, bringing a spate of construction projects and new homebuyers to the area. And in the lead-up to the city's hosting of the 2005 Super Bowl football championship, efforts were made to enhance Jacksonville's beauty by creating parks and riverside boardwalks. However, the sheer size of the city – at 841 square miles, the largest in the US – serves to dilute its easygoing character.

The most noteworthy building in the downtown area, which occupies the north bank of the St Johns River, is the Florida Theater, 128 E Forsyth St. Elvis Presley arrived here in 1957 for his first appearance on an indoor stage, an event presided over by juvenile court judge to ensure that it wasn't too suggestive. The theater's interior has since been restored with a dazzling gold proscenium arch, and today it's used for a variety of performances. Five minutes' walk from the theater, at 333 N Laura St, is the Jacksonville Museum of Modern Art (Tues & Fri 11am–5pm, Wed & Thurs 11am–9pm, Sat 11am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $6, free Wed after 5pm; ☎ 904/366-6911, 🌐 www.jmoma.org) has paintings, sculptures, and photography of surprising scope and depth, including large Ed Paschke and James Rosenquist canvases.

Crossing over to the south bank via the River Taxi ($3 one way; $5 roundtrip), you'll find the Museum of Science and History, 1025 Museum Circle (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 1–6pm; $8; ☎ 904/396-6674, 🌐 www.themosh.org), with its hands-on exhibits and planetarium.

Just south of the Fuller Warren River bridge (I-95), the Cummer Museum of Art and Gardens, 829 Riverside Ave (Tues & Thurs 10am–9pm, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8, free Tues after 4pm; ☎ 904/356-6857, 🌐 www.cummer.org), has spacious rooms and sculpture-lined corridors containing works by prominent European and American masters. The two acres of lovely Italianate and English gardens that overlook the river are an added bonus.

From all over Jacksonville you can see the 73,000-seat Alltel Stadium, home to the Jacksonville Jaguars football franchise (tickets from $35–215; ☎ 1-877/4JAGS-TIX). It's also the scene of the Florida–Georgia college football clash each fall – an excuse for 48 hours of citywide drinking and partying. Next door is Metropolitan Park, a pleasant swath of riverside greenery.

Practicalities

From the Greyhound bus station downtown at 10 N Pearl St, it's an easy walk to the Convention and Visitors Bureau, 550 Water St, suite 1000 (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/733-2668, 🌐 www.jaxcvb.com). The train station is an awkward six miles northwest of downtown at 3570 Clifford Lane. The cheapest accommodation can be found at the chain hotels on the city's perimeter, such as Comfort Suites, 1180 Airport Rd (☎ 904/741-0505; 📍). Downtown, the 🏠 Hyatt Regency Jacksonville Riverfront, 225 Coastline Drive (☎ 1-800/233-1234, 🌐 www.jacksonville.hyatt.com; 📍), has a great riverfront location. Alternatively, head to the Riverside-Avondale residential neighborhood (near the Cummer Museum) for a choice of good B&Bs, including the riverfront The House on Cherry Street, 1844 Cherry St (☎ 904/384-1999, 🌐 www.geocities.com/houseoncherryst; 📍). For eating, you'll find several places for a quick and filling lunch at the Jacksonville Landing mall, downtown between Water St and the river. On the south bank, the River City Brewing Co., 835 Museum Circle (☎ 904/398-2299), offers great steaks, home-brewed beer, and river views, while Riverside-Avondale has some appealing cafés such as Biscotti's Espresso Café, 3556 St Johns Ave (☎ 904/387-2060).

Jacksonville's beaches

Traveling south from Jacksonville on I-95, then east on Hwy-202, you'll first hit Ponte Vedra Beach, whose crowd-free sands and million-dollar homes form one of the most exclusive communities in northeast Florida. A few miles north from here on Hwy-A1A is the much less snooty Jacksonville Beach. If you tire of watching the novice surfers, Adventure Landing, 1944 Beach Blvd (Sun–Thurs 10am–11pm, Fri & Sat 10am–1am; ☎ 904/246-4386, 🌐 www.adventurelanding.com), offers an amusement park where each diversion is individually priced, like batting cages ($2), a water park ($23.99), and go-carts ($6). Two miles north of Jacksonville Beach’s old pier, the more commercialized Neptune Beach blurs into the identical-looking Atlantic Beach; both are more family-oriented, and are best visited for eating and socializing.

Practicalities

The best accommodation is at the renovated 🏠 Sea Turtle Inn, 1 Ocean Blvd, Atlantic Beach (☎ 1-800/874-6000, 🌐 www.seaturtle.com; 📍), while the cozy Pelican Path B&B, 11 N 19th Ave, Jacksonville Beach (☎ 1-888/749-1177, 🌐 www.pelicanpath.com; 📍), has bicycles. Good eating options at the beaches are Ragtime Tavern Seafood Grill, 207 Atlantic Blvd, Atlantic Beach (☎ 904/241-7877), with its extensive seafood menu; Sun Dog Diner, 207 Atlantic Blvd, Neptune Beach (☎ 904/241-8221), offering above-average, creative diner fare; and 🏠 Beach Hut Café, 1281 S 3rd St, Jacksonville Beach (☎ 904/249-3516), serving huge, delicious breakfasts.

Central Florida

Encompassing a broad and fertile expanse between the east and west coasts, most of Central Florida was farming country when vacation-mania first struck the beachside strips. From the 1970s on, this picture of tranquility was shattered: no section of the state has been affected more dramatically by modern tourism. As a result, the most-visited part of Florida can also be one of the ugliest. A clutter of freeway interchanges, motels, and billboards arch around the sprawling city of Orlando, where a tourist-dollar chase of Gold Rush magnitude was sparked by Walt Disney World, the biggest and cleverest theme-park complex ever created. The rest of central Florida is quiet by comparison.

Orlando and the theme parks

Once a quiet farming town, ORLANDO now welcomes more visitors than any other place in the state. The reason, of course, is Walt Disney World, which, along with Universal Orlando, SeaWorld Orlando, and a host of other attractions, in varying degrees of quality, pulls millions of people a year to a previously featureless plot of scrubland. Most of the hotels are found along International Drive, Hwy-192 or in and around Disney World, all of which lie several miles south of the downtown area, which has the city’s best nightlife.

The international airport is nine miles south of downtown Orlando; local buses (see p.646) link the airport with downtown (#11 or #51) and International Drive (#42). Alternatively, shuttle buses such as Mears Transportation

The efficient Official Visitor Center, 8723 International Drive (daily 8am–7pm; ☎ 407/363-5872, 🌐 www.orlandoinfo.com) has a plethora of brochures and discount coupons.

Getting around

You have to be determined to get to the theme parks without a car, but it can be done. Local Lynx buses (☎ 1-800/344-LYNX, 🌐 www.golynx.com) converge at the downtown Orlando terminal, 455 N Garland Ave. Route #50 heads to Walt Disney World, while route #8 goes to International Drive. Along International Drive (including SeaWorld Orlando), the I-Ride trolley service (☎ 1-866/243-7483, 🌐 www.iridetrolley.com)

com) operates every twenty minutes daily from 8am to 10.30pm, costing 75¢ one way. Taxis are the best way to get around at night – try Yellow Cab (☎407/699-9999); rates begin at $3.25 for the first mile, plus $1.75 for each additional mile.

Accommodation outside Walt Disney World

If you're on a budget, or want to spend time visiting the other parks, you'd do best to stay outside Walt Disney World. The chain hotels on International Drive are the closest to Universal Orlando and SeaWorld Orlando with numerous restaurants and shops within walking distance. There are several hotels dotted around Disney property in an area called Lake Buena Vista, while budget hotels line Hwy-192 (which is also close to Disney). Downtown Orlando has some charming, privately-run hotels and B&Bs.

Comfort Inn Maingate West 9330 W Hwy-192 ☎407/424-8420 or 1-800/440-4473. This hotel's yellow exterior matches the bright, cheerful rooms. A pleasant, economical place to stay, 5 mins west of Disney. ②

 The Courtyard at Lake Lucerne 211 N Lucerne Cirle E ☎1-800/444-5289, www.orlandohistoricinn.com. Choose from Victorian- and Edwardian-era rooms or airy Art Deco suites at this charming downtown hotel. ④

DoubleTree Castle Hotel 8629 International Drive ☎1-800/952-2785, www.doubletreecastle.com. This elaborate and comfortable theme hotel, complete with Renaissance music and medieval decor, offers free transportation to the theme parks. ④

Accommodation within Walt Disney World

Prices at the fabulously designed Disney World resorts (reservations for all: ☎407/939-6244 or www.disneyworld.com) scattered around the complex are much higher – sometimes more than $300 per night – than you'll pay elsewhere. However, the benefits (top-notch facilities, free transportation and parking, early access to the parks) can make it worth the extra cash. Though rooms may be available at short notice during the quieter times, you should reserve as far in advance – nine months is not unreasonable – as possible.

A good option if you're camping, the Fort Wilderness Campground is set on a lovely 700-acre forested site near the Magic Kingdom. Here you can hook up your RV or pitch your tent for $41–55, or rent a six-berth cabin from $249, and still enjoy the privileges of being a Disney guest.

All-Star Resorts Three resorts in the Disney-MGM area near the Blizzard Beach water park, with themes based on sports, music, and movies. The most affordable options in Disney, but still perfectly comfortable. ④

Animal Kingdom Lodge Wake up to see African wildlife grazing outside your window at one of Disney's more spectacular and luxurious resorts. ⑧

Grand Floridian Resort & Spa Gabled roofs, verandahs, crystal chandeliers, and a full-service spa make this Disney's most elegant – and expensive – resort. ⑨

Wilderness Lodge This convincing re-creation of a frontier log cabin features a wood-burning fire in the lobby and welcoming rooms. ⑧

Walt Disney World

As significant as air-conditioning in making the state what it is today, WALT DISNEY WORLD turned a wedge of Florida farmland into one of the world's most lucrative vacation destinations. The immense and astutely planned empire also pushed the state's media profile through the roof: from being a down-at-the-heel mixture of cheap motels, retirement homes, and down-at-the-heel alligator zoos, Florida suddenly, in 1971, became a showcase of modern international tourism.

Disney World is the pacesetter among theme parks. It goes way beyond Disneyland (see p.1065), which opened in Anaheim, California, in 1955, delivering escapism at its most technologically advanced and psychologically brilliant, across an area twice the size of Manhattan. Its four main theme parks are quite separate entities and, ideally, you should allow a full day for each. The Magic Kingdom is the Disney park of popular imagination, where Mickey mingles with the crowds – very much the park for kids, though at its high-tech best capable of thrilling even the most jaded of adults. Known for its giant, golfball-like geosphere, EPCOT is Disney's celebration of science and technology; this sprawling area involves a lot of walking, and may bore young children. Disney-MGM Studios suits almost everyone: its special effects are enjoyable even if you've never seen the movies they're based on. The newest of the four, Disney's Animal Kingdom, brings all manner of African and Asian wildlife to the theme-park setting.

Along with the main parks, other forms of entertainment have been created to keep people on Disney property for as long as possible. There are two excellent water parks, Blizzard Beach and Typhoon Lagoon, a sports complex called Disney's Wide World of Sports, and Downtown Disney, where you can eat, drink, and dance the night away.

The Magic Kingdom

The Magic Kingdom, dominated by Cinderella's Castle, a stunning pseudo-Rhineland palace, follows the formula established by California's Disneyland, dividing into several themed sections: Tomorrowland, Frontierland, Fantasyland, Adventureland, Liberty Square, and Mickey's Toontown Fair. Fantasyland and Mickey's Toontown Fair are very much for the kids, while the other lands, and in particular Tomorrowland and Frontierland, have the edgier rides. Some attractions are identical to their California forebears, while others are unique or greatly improved. In Tomorrowland, the old favorite Space Mountain is in essence an ordinary roller coaster, yet one whose total darkness makes every jump and jolt unexpected. Splash Mountain employs water to great effect, culminating in a stunning 52-foot death-drop down a waterfall. Big Thunder Mountain Railroad puts you on board a runaway train, which trundles through Gold Rush California at a pace that won't upset younger riders.

You don't have to be a rollercoaster junkie to enjoy the Magic Kingdom. Many of the best rides in the park rely on "Audio-Animatronics" characters – impressive vocal robots of Disney invention – for their appeal. The most up-to-date are seen in Stitch's Great Escape, where the mischievous monster wreaks havoc on the audience, who feel, hear, and smell strange things in the dark. A wonderful visual treat is The Timekeeper, where you're taken on a trip through time by a zany robot (whose voice is provided by Robin Williams).

Elsewhere, make time for the Haunted Mansion, a mildly spooky ghost ride memorable for its spectacular holograms, the leisurely Jungle Cruise down the Amazon, Nile, and Mekong, past ferocious animals and cannibal camps, and Pirates of the Caribbean, the classic boat ride around a pirate-infested Caribbean island.

Fantasyland is mainly full of rather dated rides, but does have the recent Mickey's PhilharMagic, an enchanting 3D journey with Daffy Duck and other well-known characters, set to classic Disney soundtracks.

EPCOT

Even before the Magic Kingdom opened, Walt Disney was developing plans for EPCOT (Experimental Prototype Community of Tomorrow), conceived in 1966 as a real community experimenting with the new ideas and materials of the technologically advancing US. The idea failed to shape up as Disney had envisioned, though: EPCOT didn't open its gates until 1982, when global recession and ecological concerns had put a damper on the belief in the infallibility of science. One drawback of this park is simply its immense size: it's twice as big as the Magic Kingdom, and very sapping on the feet.

The unmissable 180-foot geosphere (unlike a semicircular geodesic dome, the geosphere is completely round) sits in the heart of Future World, which keeps close to EPCOT's original concept of exploring the history and researching the future of agriculture, transport, energy, and communication. Future World is divided into several pavilions (including the geosphere, with its enjoyable Spaceship Earth ride), each corporate-sponsored, and featuring its own rides, films, interactive computer exhibits, and games. The best of the attractions are Mission: SPACE, a realistic recreation of a mission to Mars, including real G-force on take-off; Test Track, a rollercoaster-style ride where you test a high-performance car; Cranium Command, where an Audio-Animatronics character is detailed to control the various functions of a 12-year-old boy's brain – a good mix of Disney imagination and humor; and the 3D cinematic thrill of Honey, I Shrunk the Audience. The newest attraction, Soarin', uses the latest flight simulator technology to sweep you off on a breathtaking hang-glider ride over California.

Information, tickets, and how to beat the crowds

For general Disney World information, call ☎407/939-6244 or visit @www.disney-world.com. Tickets cost $71.36 (children aged 3–9 $59.64), and allow unlimited access to all shows and rides in one park only, for that day only. The Magic Your Way ticket saves money if you spread your visit over a number of days – for example, a seven-day ticket would cost $223.85 (children 3–9 $184.25). You can buy a Magic Your Way ticket for a maximum of ten days and you can only visit one park per day. If you want to move from park to park in the same day, you must add the Park Hopper option for an additional flat fee of $45. The Water Park Fun and More option allows you to add from three to six extra admissions (the exact number depends on the length of your basic Magic Your Way ticket) to Blizzard Beach, Typhoon Lagoon, DisneyQuest, Disney's Wide World of Sports, and Pleasure Island for a flat fee of $50. The parking lots cost $9 a day, but are free if you're staying at a Walt Disney World resort.

Each park is generally open daily from 9am to between 6pm and 10pm, depending on the time of year; pick up the current schedule when you arrive. Note that Disney's Animal Kingdom closes at 5pm. At its worst, waiting times for the most popular rides can be well over an hour. The best way to beat the crowds is to use Disney's FASTPASS system. Place your admission ticket into a machine at the entrance of the attraction; the machine returns it with another ticket that gives you a time to return to the attraction, usually about two hours later. When that time rolls around, you simply show up, hand your new ticket to the attendant and scoot to the front of the line. Another good tactic upon arrival is to rush to the far end of the park and work backwards, or to head straight for the big rides, getting them out of the way before the mid-afternoon crush.

Occupying the largest area in the park is the World Showcase, with eleven different “countries” represented by recognizable national landmarks or stereotypical scenes. The restaurants here are among the best in Disney World, and it’s a great place to watch the spectacular nighttime sound- and light-show, IllumiNations: Reflections of Earth.

Disney-MGM Studios

When the Disney corporation began making films and TV shows for adults – most notably Who Framed Roger Rabbit? in 1988 – they also set about devising a theme park to entertain adults as much as kids. Buying the rights to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (MGM) collection of films and TV shows, Disney acquired a vast array of instantly familiar images to mold into shows and rides. Opening in 1989, Disney-MGM Studios overshadowed the opening of Florida’s Universal Studios (see opposite), and at the same time found an extra use for the real film studios based here – the people you’ll see laboring over storyboards on the Backlot Tour aren’t there for show; they really are making films.

Most of the things to do at MGM take the form of rides or shows, and there are fewer exhibit-style attractions when compared with the other Disney parks. Thrill-seekers will be more than happy with the gravity-defying drops (including moments of weightlessness) in The Twilight Zone Tower of Terror or the exhilarating Rock ‘n’ Roller Coaster with its breakneck-speed launch.

Don’t miss the half-hour behind-the-scenes Backlot Tour, climaxing with the dramatic special effects on the Catastrophe Canyon movie set; the funny Muppet Vision 3D show; and The Great Movie Ride, where Audio-Animatronics figures from famous movies interact with real-life actors.

The most popular of the live shows is Who Wants to be a Millionaire – Play It!, which recreates the TV show with admirable accuracy, and where the audience plays for a three-day Disney Line cruise to the Bahamas. Also worthwhile, The Indiana Jones Epic Stunt Spectacular re-enacts and explains many of the action-packed set pieces from the Steven Spielberg films; and the Lights, Motors, Action! Stunt Show features equally eye-catching stunts involving cars, motorbikes, and jet skis.

The world of Walt Disney

When the brilliant illustrator and animator Walt Disney devised the world’s first theme park, California’s Disneyland (see p.1065), he left himself with no control over the hotels and restaurants that quickly engulfed it, preventing growth and erasing profits Disney felt were rightly his. Determined not to let that happen again, the Disney corporation secretly bought up 27,500 acres of central Florida farmland, acquiring by the late Sixties a site a hundred times bigger than Disneyland. With the promise of a jobs bonanza for Florida, the state legislature gave the corporation the rights of any major municipality – empowering it to lay roads, enact building codes, and enforce the law with its own security force.

Walt Disney World’s first “land,” the Magic Kingdom, which opened in 1971, was a huge success. Unveiled in 1982, the far more ambitious EPCOT represented the first major break from cartoon-based escapism – but its rose-tinted look at the future received a mixed response. Partly due to this, and to some bad management decisions, the Disney empire (Disney himself died in 1966) faced bankruptcy by the mid-1980s. Since then, the corporation has sprung back from the abyss, and despite being subject to a (failed) hostile takeover bid by Comcast in 2004, steers a tight and competitive business ship. It may trade in fantasy, but where money matters, the Disney Corporation’s nose is firmly in the real world.

Disney's Animal Kingdom

Disney's Animal Kingdom was opened in 1998 as an animal-conservation theme park with Disney's patented over-the-top twist. The park is divided into six major "lands" – Africa, Camp Minnie-Mickey, DinoLand USA, Discovery Island, Rafiki's Planet Watch, and Asia – each with its own mock-authentic ambiance, largely the result of the versatility of concrete, which is colored, imprinted upon, and formed into an endless variety of shapes.

The best-realized attraction is Africa's Kilimanjaro Safaris, where a jeep transport takes you on what feels very much like a real African safari, viewing giraffes, zebras, elephants, lions, gazelles, and rhinos, as well as taking part in anti-poacher maneuvers. Elsewhere in Africa, the troop of lowland gorillas at the Pangani Forest Exploration Trail are definitely worth a look. Crossing over to Asia, you'll get an astoundingly up-close look at the healthiest-looking tigers in captivity at the Maharajah Jungle Trek. Asia also has the thrilling Expedition Everest rollercoaster, where a train whizzes (both forward and backward) around a well-detailed replica of a Himalayan mountain. DinoLand USA's DINOSAUR is a slower but still exciting ride full of small drops and short stops in the dark as dinosaurs pop out of nowhere and roar.

The remainder of the park requires no more than casual exploration. The Flights of Wonder bird show exhibits falcons, owls, and other wonderful birds, while classic Disney characters sign autographs in Camp Minnie-Mickey, where you can also catch the Festival of the Lion King, a Broadway-style production of upbeat music with some nifty acrobatics, loosely based on its namesake film.

Universal Orlando

For some years, it seemed that TV and film production would move away from California to Florida, which, with its lower taxes and cheaper labor, was more amenable. The opening of Universal Studios in 1990 appeared to confirm that trend. So far, though, for various reasons, Florida has not proved to be a fully realistic alternative. Even so, this hasn't stopped the Universal enclave here, now known as Universal Orlando, off I-4, half a mile north of exits 74B or 75A (park opens daily at 9am, closing times vary; one-day, one-park ticket $71.36, children 3–9 $59.64, under-3s free; two-day, two-park ticket $122.42/$111.78; parking $10; ☎ 1-407/363-8000, 🌐 www.uescape.com), from becoming a major player in the Orlando theme-park arena. Though Disney World still commands the lion's share of attention, Universal has siphoned off many visitors with Universal Studios' high-tech movie-themed rides, special-effects-laden Islands of Adventure, and CityWalk, an earther lure for nightlife dollars than Downtown Disney (see "Nightlife and entertainment," p.654). Furthermore, Universal has achieved full-fledged resort status with its three luxurious on-site hotels: Portofino Bay, Hard Rock, and the Royal Pacific Resort (all three ☎ 1-888/273-1311, 🌐 www.uescape.com; 7–9).

Universal Studios

Like its competitor Disney-MGM, Universal is a working studio, filling more than four hundred acres with the latest in TV and movie production technology. Unlike MGM, there's more emphasis here on movie-related rides than backstage shows. For sheer excitement, nothing in the park matches Back to the Future The Ride, a bone-shaking flight-simulator trip from 2015 to the Ice Age. The next best thrill ride is Revenge of the Mummy, where you're taken on a medium-paced journey through scenes from the eponymous movie. Don't miss Shrek 4-D, a delightful 3D presentation brought even more to life by an overdose of superb "feelies"

(including a few too many water sprays). Also worthwhile, Earthquake – The Big One gives you an intensely claustrophobic two minutes of terror as you experience what it's like to be caught on a subway train when an 8.3 Richter-scale quake hits. Along the same lines, Twister...Ride It Out is a suffocating but gripping experience in which you stand beside an imitation tornado.

If you want to watch a live show, opt for the two-man Universal Horror Make-Up Show, which reveals movie-makeup secrets amidst comic repartee, or try the new Fear Factor Live (advanced registration required for contestants), which mimics the popular TV show.

Islands of Adventure

Islands of Adventure is Orlando's leader in state-of-the-art, edge-of-your-seat thrill rides. Though there are plenty of diversions for the less daring, these rides are what brings the crowds, and long lines are typical for many of them (though they do thin out as the evening goes on). Use the Universal Express system – akin to Disney's FASTPASS (see p.649) – to avoid waiting in lines for the most popular rides.

The park is really five superb miniparks – Marvel Super Hero Island, The Lost Continent, Jurassic Park, Toon Lagoon, and Seuss Landing – all surrounding a lagoon. The very best of the rides is The Amazing Adventures of Spider-Man, which uses every trick imaginable – 3D, sensory stimuli, motion simulation, and more – to spirit you into Spider-Man's battles with villains. Dueling Dragons is the next most exciting ride: twin rollercoasters ("Fire" and "Ice" – separate lines for each) engineered to provide harrowing near misses with each other. Here, even more so than on other rollercoasters, the front seats provide the greatest thrills. Another exciting ride is the Incredible Hulk Coaster, with its catapult start and plenty of loop-the-loops and plunges. Doctor Doom's Fearfall provides a panoramic view of the park, but the very short controlled drop, during which you experience a few seconds of weightlessness, is anticlimactic. In a similar vein, Jurassic Park River Adventure is a generally tame river-raft trip, where the only thing to shout about is an 85-foot drop.

Offerings for kids include Dudley Do-Right's Ripsaw Falls and Popeye & Bluto's Bilge-Rat Barges, both good for getting a midday drenching; and the whole of Seuss Landing, where everything is based on Dr Seuss characters. There's one live performance offered throughout the day: The Eighth Voyage of Sindbad stunt show, where the set, stunts, and pyrotechnics are as good as the jokes are bad.

SeaWorld Orlando and Discovery Cove

SeaWorld Orlando, at Sea Harbor Drive, near the intersection of I-4 and the Beeline Expressway, is the cream of Florida's sizable crop of marine parks, and should not be missed; allocate a full day to see it all (park opens daily at 9am, closing times vary; $65.98, children 3–9 $53.20; ☎ 407/351-3600, @ www.seaworld.com). The big event is the Shamu Adventure Show – thirty minutes of tricks per-

The Orlando Flexticket

Universal Orlando, SeaWorld Orlando, and Wet 'n Wild (a water park) have teamed together to create a pass that permits access to each park over a period of fourteen consecutive days. The Orlando Flexticket (as it's known) costs $202.31 (children 3–9 $166.10), or $250.46/$213.19, including Tampa's Busch Gardens, with a free shuttle from Orlando to Busch Gardens.

formed by a playful killer whale (you'll get drenched if you're sitting in the first fourteen rows of the stadium). Also, try not to miss the kid-orientated sea lion extravaganza, Clyde and Seamore Take Pirate Island. The Wild Arctic complex, complete with artificial snow and ice, brings you close to beluga whales, walruses, and polar bears, while a flight simulator ride takes you on a stomach-churning helicopter flight through an Arctic blizzard.

The park's first thrill ride, Journey to Atlantis, travels on both water and rails, and has a sixty-foot drop (be prepared to get very wet). Much more exhilarating, however, is Kraken, a rollercoaster that flings you around at speeds of up to 65 miles per hour, free-flying and looping-the-loop at great heights.

With substantially less razzmatazz, plenty of smaller aquariums and displays offer a wealth of information about the underwater world. Among the highlights, Penguin Encounter re-creates Antarctica, with scores of the waddling, flightless birds scampering over an iceberg; the young occupants of the Dolphin Nursery assert their advanced intellect by flapping their fins and soaking passersby; and Shark Encounter includes a walk through an acrylic-sided and -roofed tunnel, offering as realistic an impression on dry land of what swimming with sharks must feel like.

Discovery Cove, next to SeaWorld Orlando on Central Florida Parkway (daily 9am–5.30pm; $169.34–190.64 without dolphin swim, $275.84–297.14 with dolphin swim; ☎ 1-877/4-DISCOVERY, 🌐 www.discoverycove.com) limits visitors to about a thousand a day (reserve well in advance). The main reason for coming here is to swim and play with the dolphins, while other activities include snorkeling with tropical fish, wading in a pool full of harmless sting rays, and feeding exotic birds. Note that the admission charge includes seven-day access to SeaWorld Orlando.

Orlando's water parks

Disney World has two excellent water parks. Blizzard Beach, north of the All-Star Resorts (see “Accommodation within Walt Disney World,” p.647) on World Drive (daily 10am–5pm; slightly longer hours in summer; $38.34, children 3–9 $31.95; ☎ 407/560-3400), is based on the fantasy that a hapless entrepreneur has opened a ski resort in Florida and the entire thing has started to melt. The star of the show is Summit Plummet, which shoots you down a 120-foot vertical drop at more than fifty miles per hour. Gentler rides include toboggan-style slalom courses and raft rides. As well as the slides, Typhoon Lagoon, just south of Downtown Disney (daily 10am–5pm; slightly longer hours in summer; $38.34, children 3–9 $31.95; ☎ 407/560-4141), features a huge surfing pool and a shark reef where you can snorkel amongst tropical fish. Wet 'n Wild, 6200 International Drive (daily 10am–5pm; longer hours in summer; $38.29, children 3–9 $31.90; ☎ 1-800/992-9453, 🌐 www.wetnwildorlando.com), defends itself admirably in the face of the Disney competition, with a range of no-nonsense slides including the almost vertical Der Stuka. Lines are shorter here than at the Disney water parks.

Eating in the Orlando area

Downtown and its environs hold the pick of the locals' eating haunts; most visitors, however, head for International Drive's inexpensive all-day buffets and gourmet restaurants. You are not allowed to take food into any of the theme parks, where the best restaurants are in EPCOT's World Showcase, particularly the French- and Mexican-themed establishments.

Bahama Breeze 8849 International Drive
 ☎ 407/248-2499. Decent Caribbean food in an upbeat atmosphere. Dinner only.

Café Tu Tu Tango 8625 International Drive
 ☎ 407/248-2222. Original, imaginative dishes served in small portions. All the artwork on the walls is for sale.

The Globe 25 Wall St Plaza, downtown
 ☎ 407/849-9904. This is a perfect place for inexpensive Nouveau American snacks and light meals.

Le Coq au Vin 4800 S Orange Ave, downtown
 ☎ 407/851-6980. French restaurant with surprisingly low prices for top-notch food. Closed Mon.

 Ming Court 9188 International Drive
 ☎ 407/351-9988. An exceptional Chinese restaurant, with dim sum and sushi available. Not as costly as you might expect.

Numero Uno 2499 S Orange Ave, downtown
 ☎ 407/841-3840. Inexpensive Cuban restaurant serving dishes such as black beans, grouper, and paella. Closed Sun.

 Panera Bread 227 N Eola Drive, downtown
 ☎ 407/481-1060. One of an inviting local chain, with a wide array of baked goods, soups, salads, and sandwiches. Also a WiFi Hotspot.

 Punjab 7451 International Drive ☎ 407/352-7887. Reasonably priced curries spiced to your personal taste. A good vegetarian choice.

Roy's 7760 W Sand Lake Rd, near International Drive ☎ 407/352-4844. Founded in Hawaii, Roy's offers innovative Hawaiian fusion cuisine.

White Wolf Café 1829 N Orange Ave, downtown
 ☎ 407/895-5590. Down-to-earth café/antique store known for creative salads and sandwiches.

Nightlife and entertainment

Though you'll probably be so exhausted from a long day at the parks that boozing and dancing with thousands of others will be the last thing on your mind, the Orlando area is bursting with themed nightspots of every persuasion, from medieval banquets to piano bars and country-and-western clubs. It's all relentlessly good, clean fun, sanitized to the hilt.

From around 9pm, each Disney World park holds some kind of closing-time bash, usually involving fireworks and fountains. There's also Pleasure Island, exit 26B off I-4 (part of the complex of shops, restaurants, and entertainment venues that comprise Downtown Disney; ☎ 407/939-2648, www.downtowndisney.com), a remake of an abandoned island, whose pseudo-warehouses are the setting for bars and nightclubs (daily 10am–7pm; free before 7pm, after 7pm $21.95 gains access to all bars and clubs). The most enjoyable are the Comedy Warehouse and the Adventurers' Club, loosely based on a 1930s gentlemen's club. Take ID (under-18s must be accompanied by a parent or guardian, while some clubs are 21 and up) and a fat wallet.

Not to be outdone by Disney, Universal Orlando has come up with CityWalk, Universal Boulevard (☎ 407/363-8000, www.citywalkorlando.com), thirty acres of restaurants, live music, dance clubs, and shops, wedged between Universal Studios and Islands of Adventure. Hipper than anything Disney has to offer, CityWalk is also much better value ($9.95 for all-night access to every club, plus free parking after 6pm). Head to Bob Marley – A Tribute to Freedom for live reggae; CityJazz for a cooler, more sophisticated ambience, with all types of jazz, funk, and soul; the Latin Quarter restaurant for Latino beats; and the groove for a full-fledged nightclub.

Away from the theme parks, downtown Orlando has an eclectic crop of bars, lounges, and clubs. Most of the after-dark action focuses along Orange Avenue, at clubs like  The Social, no. 54 (for alt-rock, grunge, and the like), and the chic, Rhythm and Flow Ultralounge, no. 2.

The West Coast

In the three hundred miles from the state's southern tip to the junction with the Panhandle (see p.667), Florida's West Coast embraces all the extremes. Buzzing, youthful towns rise behind placid fishing hamlets; mobbed holiday strips are just minutes from desolate swamplands, and world-class art collections vie with glitzy theme parks. Surprises are plentiful, though the coast's one constant is proximity to the Gulf of Mexico – and sunset views rivaled only by those of the Florida Keys.

The west coast's largest city, Tampa, has more to offer than its corporate towers initially suggest – not least the lively nightlife scene in the Cuban enclave of Ybor City, and the Busch Gardens theme park. For the mass of visitors, though, the Tampa Bay area begins and ends with the St Petersburg beaches, whose miles of sea and sand are undiluted vacation territory. South of Tampa, a string of barrier-island beaches run the length of the Gulf, and the mainland towns that provide access to them – such as Sarasota and Fort Myers – have enough to warrant a stop. Inland, the wilderness of the Everglades is explorable on simple walking trails, by canoeing, or by spending the night at backcountry campgrounds, with only the gators for company.

Tampa

A small, stimulating city with an infectious, upbeat mood, TAMPA, the business hub of the west coast, is well worth a stop. As one of the major beneficiaries of the flood of people and money into Florida, Tampa boasts an impressive cultural infrastructure envied by many larger rivals. In addition to its fine museums and Busch Gardens, one of the most popular theme parks in the state, the city holds, in the Cuban-influenced Ybor City, just northeast of the city center, the west coast's hippest and most culturally eclectic quarter.

Tampa began as a small settlement beside a US Army base that was built in the 1820s to keep an eye on the Seminoles. In the 1880s, the railroad arrived, and the Hillsborough River, on which the city stands, was dredged to allow seagoing vessels to dock. Tampa became a booming port, simultaneously acquiring a major tobacco industry as thousands of Cubans moved north from Key West to the new cigar factories of neighboring Ybor City. The Depression ended the economic surge, but the port remained one of the busiest in the country and tempered Tampa's postwar decline. Today, little seems to stand in the way of Tampa's continued emergence as a forward-thinking and financially secure community.

Tampa's airport (☎813/870-8700, @www.tampaairport.com) is five miles northwest of downtown: local HART bus #30 is the least costly connection (see p.656). Taxis (try United ☎813/253-2424) to downtown or a Busch Boulevard motel cost $20–40; to St Petersburg or the beaches, $40–65. Greyhound buses arrive downtown at 610 Polk St (☎813/229-2174); trains at 601 N Nebraska Ave (☎813/221-7600).

The downtown Visitor Information Center, 615 Channelside Drive, suite 108A (Mon–Sat 9.30am–5.30pm, Sun 11am–5pm; ☎1-800/44-TAMPA, @www.

visittampabay.com), and the Ybor City Visitor Information Center, 1600 E 8th Ave, suite B104 (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; ☎ 813/241-8838, 🌐 www.ybor.org), give out useful leaflets and maps.

Although both downtown Tampa and Ybor City are easily covered on foot, to travel between them without a car you'll need to use the HART local buses ($1.50, one-day pass $3; ☎ 813/254-4278, 🌐 www.hartline.org) or the TECO Line Streetcar System ($2; ☎ 813/254-4278, 🌐 www.tecolinestreetcar.org), a vintage replica streetcar which runs between downtown and Ybor several times an hour. Useful HART bus routes are #8 to Ybor City, #5 to Busch Gardens, #6 to the Museum of Science and Industry.

Tampa is not generously supplied with low-cost accommodation; you'll almost certainly save money by staying in St Petersburg (see p.658) or at the beaches (see p.660). There are some good deals, though, at the motels near Busch Gardens.

Best Western All Suites 301 University Center Drive, behind Busch Gardens ☎ 813/971-8930. A reasonable base for seeing the city by car, and so close to Busch Gardens that the parrots escape into their trees. Features a happy hour every afternoon and free breakfast. ④

Days Inn Busch Gardens Maingate 2901 E Busch Blvd ☎ 813/933-6471. Recently renovated hotel near Busch Gardens. There's an on-site 24hr restaurant, with plenty of others within walking distance. ⑤

 Don Vicente de Ybor Historic Inn 1915 Avenida Republica de Cuba ☎ 1-866/206-4545, 🌐 www.donvicenteinn.com. A luxurious B&B option in Ybor City. Features sixteen suites, a fine restaurant, and a cigar and martini bar that has live entertainment Thurs and Fri nights. ⑥

Gram's Place 3109 N Ola Ave ☎ 813/221-0596, 🌐 www.grams-inn-tampa.com. This funky motel-cum-hostel offers both private rooms – all themed in different musical styles – and rather tatty youth-hostel-style accommodation. $22.50 for a dorm bed; private rooms ②.

Hilton Garden 1700 E 9th Ave ☎ 813/769-9267, 🌐 www.tampayborhistorichistoricdistrict.gardeninn.com. Comfortable digs, even if the decor is a little sterile to be in the heart of Tampa's most historically rich neighborhood. ⑥

Sheraton Tampa Riverwalk 200 N Ashley Drive ☎ 813/223-2222, 🌐 www.tampariverwalkhotel.com. Very convenient downtown location, nicely situated on the banks of the Hillsborough River. ⑥

Downtown Tampa

Of the contemporary buildings in downtown Tampa, none better reflects the city's cultural striving than the highly regarded Tampa Museum of Art, on the banks of the Hillsborough River at 600 N Ashley Drive (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, third Thurs of every month 10am–8pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $8; ☎ 813/274-8130, 🌐 www.tampamuseum.com). Specializing in classical antiques and twentieth-century American art, the museum cleverly blends selections from the permanent collection with prime loaned pieces of recent US painting, photography, and sculpture.

From the Museum of Art, you'll see the silver minarets and cupolas on the far side of the river, sprouting from the main building of the University of Tampa. These architectural ornaments adorn what was formerly the 500-room Tampa Bay Hotel, financed by steamship and railroad magnate Henry B. Plant. To reach it, walk across the river on Kennedy Boulevard and descend the steps into Plant Park.

The structure is as bizarre a sight today as it was when it opened in 1891. Since the Civil War, Plant had been buying up bankrupt railroads, steadily inching his way into Florida to meet his steamships unloading at Tampa's harbor. Eventually, he became rich enough to put his fantasies of creating the world's most luxurious hotel into practice. However, lack of care for the fittings and Plant's death in 1899 hastened the hotel's transformation from the last word in comfort to a pile of crumbling plaster. The city bought it in 1905 and leased it to Tampa University 23 years later. In one wing, the Henry B. Plant Museum, 401 W Kennedy Blvd (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $5; ☎813/254-1891, 🌐www.plantmuseum.com), holds what's left of the hotel's original furnishings.

In Tampa's dockland area, a mile or so southeast of the Tampa Bay Hotel, the splendid Florida Aquarium, 701 Channelside Drive (daily 9.30am–5pm; $17.95; ☎813/273-4000, 🌐www.flaquarium.org), houses lavish displays of Florida's fresh- and saltwater habitats, from springs and swamps to beaches and coral reefs. Animal residents include an impressive variety of fish, birds, otters, turtles, and alligators.

Ybor City

In 1886, as soon as Henry Plant's ships had ensured a regular supply of Havana tobacco into Tampa, cigar magnate Don Vicente Martínez Ybor cleared a patch of scrubland three miles northeast of present-day downtown Tampa and laid the foundations of YBOR CITY. About twenty thousand migrants, mostly Cuban, settled here and created a Latin American enclave, producing the top-class, hand-rolled cigars that made Tampa the "Cigar Capital of the World." However, mass production, the popularity of cigarettes, and the Depression proved a fatal combination for skilled cigar-makers: as unemployment struck, Ybor City's tight-knit blocks of cobbled streets and redbrick buildings became surrounded by drab, low-rent neighborhoods.

In the midst of a revival, Ybor City buzzes with tourists, and at night the atmosphere reaches carnival proportions, especially on the weekends. The town is trendy and culturally diverse, yet its Cuban roots are immediately apparent, and explanatory background texts adorn many buildings. The Ybor City State Museum, 1818 9th Ave (daily 9am–5pm; $3; ☎813/247-6323, 🌐www.ybormuseum.org), helps you grasp the main points of Ybor City's creation and its multiethnic make-up. The museum also offers cigar-rolling demonstrations (Fri–Sun 9.30am–1pm) and historic walking tours (Sat 10.30am).

Busch Gardens and the Museum of Science and Industry

Busch Gardens, located two miles east of I-275, or two miles west of I-75, exit 54, at 3000 E Busch Blvd (opening hours vary almost day to day but generally daily 10am–6pm; $61.72, children $51.07; parking $9; ☎1-888/800-5447, 🌐www.buschgardensstampabay.com) is one of Florida's most popular theme parks, based on a re-creation of Colonial-era Africa and offering some of the fastest, largest, most nerve-jangling rollercoasters in the country. A sedate pseudo-steam train or cable car journey allows inspection of a variety of African wildlife, but by far the most popular of the twenty-odd rides are the rollercoasters: Sheikra, with its terrifying 200-foot, 90-degree dive; Montu, where your legs dangle precariously in mid-air; Gwazi, a giant wooden coaster; and Kumba, with plenty of high-speed loop-the-loops. After this excitement, retire to the Hospitality House for two free cups of Budweiser beer.

Two miles northeast of Busch Gardens, the colossal Museum of Science and Industry, 4801 E Fowler Ave (daily 9am–5pm; $19.95; ☎813/987-6100, 🌐www.mosi.org), demystifies the scientific world through hands-on exhibits and a program of shows where you'll get to feel what it's like to sit in a 74mph wind or ride a bicycle along a tightrope. The ticket price includes one of several different IMAX movies shown throughout the day.

Eating

There are plenty of good places to eat in Tampa, with a huge concentration of lively restaurants in Ybor City.

Au Rendez-Vous 200 E Madison St ☎813/221-4748. At this good French bakery, there's coffee and croissants in the morning or quiche and baguettes at lunchtime. Unusually for a downtown eatery, it's open Sat nights.

Bernini 1702 7th Ave, Ybor City ☎813/248-0099. In the lovely old Bank of Ybor City, an Italian joint serving up wood-fired pizza and pasta.

Big City Tavern 1600 E 8th Ave, Ybor City ☎813/247-3000. Formerly the Centro Español social club, this large, high-ceilinged place offers American cuisine spiced with plenty of ginger and other Asian influences.

Cephas 1701 E 4th Ave, Ybor City ☎813/247-9022. A funky Jamaican restaurant offering jerk chicken and curried goat, chicken, and fish.

Columbia 2117 E 7th Ave, Ybor City ☎813/248-4961. A Tampa – and tourist – institution, the city's oldest restaurant serves fine Spanish and Cuban food. Reservations recommended.

La Creperia Café 1729 E 7th Ave, Ybor City ☎813/248-9700. A wide choice of delicious sweet and savory crepes, plus free WiFi Internet access.

Shells 11010 N 30th St ☎813/977-8456. Convenient to the hotels near Busch Gardens, this cheap and cheerful seafood restaurant serves consistently good fresh fish.

Nightlife and entertainment

Ybor City's renowned nightlife tends to be younger and more raucous than the city's other entertainment areas of Channelside, downtown next to the Florida Aquarium, and the International Plaza and Bay Street, near the airport at the junction of West Shore and Boy Scout boulevards. The free Weekly Planet (🌐 www.weeklyplanet.com) has listings, as does Friday's Tampa Tribune.

Amphitheater 1609 E 7th Ave, Ybor City ☎813/248-2331. A vast, elaborate nightclub playing mainly techno. A good spot for a big night out.

Blue Martini at the International Plaza and Bay Street ☎813/873-2583. Good-looking, professional crowd at this trendy lounge bar.

Green Iguana 1708 E 7th Ave, Ybor City ☎813/248-9555. Rock bands play nightly, and DJs keep the young crowd very much in the party mood.

Side Splitters 12938 N Dale Mabry Hwy ☎813/960-1197. One of the best comedy clubs in the area.

Skipper's Smokehouse 910 Skipper Rd ☎813/971-0666. Blues and reggae rule at this family-oriented live music venue.

Tampa Theatre 711 Franklin St ☎813/274-8981. Foreign-language, classic, and cult films shown in an atmospheric 1920s theater. Tickets $8.50.

St Petersburg

Situated on the eastern edge of the Pinellas Peninsula, a bulky thumb of land poking between Tampa Bay and the Gulf of Mexico, ST PETERSBURG is a world away from Tampa, even though the two cities are just twenty miles apart. Declared the healthiest place in the US in 1885, St Petersburg wasted no time in wooing the recuperating and the retired, at one point putting five thousand green benches on its streets to take the weight off elderly feet. Although it remains a mecca for the retired, the city has worked hard to attract young blood, as well. In addition to rejuvenating the pier, which now offers something for all ages, St Petersburg's diverse selection of museums and plethora of art galleries have contributed to its emergence as one of Florida's richest cultural centers. Most remarkable of all, the town has acquired a major collection of works by Salvador Dalí.

The Salvador Dalí Museum, 1000 S 3rd St (Mon–Wed & Sat 9.30am–5.30pm, Thurs 9.30am–8pm, Fri 9.30am–6.30pm, Sun noon–5.30pm; $15, Thurs after 5pm $5; ☎ 727/823-3767, 🌐 www.salvadoralimuseum.org), stores more than a thousand paintings from the collection of a Cleveland industrialist, A. Reynolds Morse, who struck up a friendship with the artist in the 1940s. Hour-long free tours that run continuously throughout the day trace a chronological path around the works, from the artist's early experiments with Impressionism and Cubism to the seminal Surrealist canvas The Disintegration of the Persistence of Memory.

Once you've done Dalí, the quarter-mile-long pier, jutting from the end of 2nd Avenue North, is the town's focal point. The pier often hosts browsable arts-and-crafts exhibitions, and the inverted-pyramid-like building at its head holds five stories of restaurants, shops, and fast-food counters. At the foot of the pier, the Museum of History, 335 2nd Ave NE (Mon noon–7pm, Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5; ☎ 727/894-1052, 🌐 www.spmoh.org), recounts using modest displays St Petersburg's early twentieth-century heyday as a winter resort. Nearby, the Museum of Fine Arts, 255 Beach Drive NE (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $8, including free guided tour; ☎ 727/896-2667, 🌐 www.fine-arts.org), holds a superlative collection ranging from pre-Columbian art through Asian and African to the European Old Masters. The Florida International Museum, 244 2nd Ave N (during exhibition periods only, Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, last entry 4pm; $10; ☎ 727/341-7900, 🌐 www.floridamuseum.org), occupies an entire block and displays three exhibitions a year on subjects ranging from Ancient Egypt to the Beatles.

Practicalities

The Greyhound bus station is downtown at 180 9th St N (☎ 727/898-1496). The Chamber of Commerce is at 100 2nd Ave N (Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat 9am–7pm, Sun noon–6pm; ☎ 727/821-4069, 🌐 www.stpete.com). Accommodation in St Petersburg can be less costly than at the beaches (see p.660), especially at the dozens of cheap motels along 4th Street (Hwy-92): the Kentucky, at no. 4246 (☎ 727/526-7373; ❷) is a good option. The area is also rich in charismatic B&Bs, such as Dickens House, 335 8th Ave NE (☎ 1-800/381-2022, 🌐 www.dickenshouse.com; ❸). For sheer luxury, stay at 🏰 Renaissance Vinoy Resort, 501 5th Ave NE (☎ 1-888/303-4430, 🌐 www.renaissancehotels.com/tpasr; ❹). Hearty, economical Cuban food can be had at Tangelo's Grill, 226 1st Ave N (☎ 727/894-1695). Alternatively, try Moon Under Water, 332 Beach Drive NE (☎ 727/896-6160); overlooking the waterfront, this inexpensive British tavern is well known for its cocktails and curries.

The St Petersburg beaches

Framing the Gulf side of the Pinellas Peninsula, a 35-mile chain of barrier islands forms the St Petersburg Beaches, one of Florida's busiest coastal strips. When the resorts of Miami Beach lost some of their allure during the 1970s, the St Petersburg beaches grew in popularity with Americans and have since evolved into an established destination for package-holidaying Europeans. The beaches are beautiful, the sea warm, and the sunsets fabulous – yet this is not Florida at its best: the whole area is a little tacky, with large portions lacking in charm and character.

All buses ($1.50; ☎ 727/540-1900, 🌐 www.psta.net) to the beaches originate in St Petersburg, at the Williams Park terminal, on 1st Avenue North and 3rd Street North; an information booth there has route details. Route #35 runs daily to St

Pete Beach on Gulf Boulevard, which links all the St Petersburg beach communities. At St Pete Beach, you can change for the Suncoast Beach Trolley, which links Passe-a-Grille in the extreme south to Sand Key in the north.

The southern beaches

In twenty-odd miles of heavily touristed coast, only Pass-a-Grille, at the very southern tip of the barrier island chain, has the look and feel of a genuine community – two miles of tidy houses, cared-for lawns, small shops, and a cluster of bars and restaurants. During the week, the town is blissfully quiet, while on weekends informed locals come here to enjoy one of the area's liveliest stretches of sand.

A mile and a half north of Pass-a-Grille, the painfully luxurious Don Cesar Hotel, 3400 Gulf Blvd (☎ 727/360-1881 or 1-866/728-2206, 🌐 www.doncesar.com; 7), is a grandiose pink castle, filling seven beachside acres. Opened in 1928, and briefly busy with the likes of Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald, it enjoyed a short-lived glamor. During the Great Depression, part of the hotel was used as a warehouse, and later as the spring training base of the New York Yankees baseball team.

Continuing north from the Don Cesar on Gulf Boulevard brings you into the main section of St Pete Beach, a string of uninspiring hotels, motels, and eating establishments. Further north, Treasure Island is even less varied tourist territory. An arching drawbridge leads to Madeira Beach, essentially more of the same – although, if you can't make it to Pass-a-Grille, the beach here justifies a weekend fling.

The northern beaches

Much of the northern section of Sand Key, the longest barrier island in the St Petersburg chain, and one of the wealthier portions of the coast, is taken up by stylish condos and time-share apartments. The island terminates in the pretty Sand Key Park, where tall palm trees frame a scintillating strip of sand. The park occupies one bank of Clearwater Pass, across which a belt of sparkling white sands marks the holiday town of CLEARWATER BEACH, whose streets still retain an endearing small-town feel despite the recent condo building boom. The staff at the well-positioned Clearwater Beach Hostel, 606 Bay Esplanade (☎ 727/443-1211, 🌐 www.clearwaterbeachhostel.com; dorm beds from $15, private rooms from $46), will help plan excursions around the area and rent bikes for $5 a day. Regular buses (#80) provide links to the mainland town of Clearwater – across the two-mile causeway – where you'll find connections to St Petersburg and a Greyhound station at 2811 Gulf-to-Bay Blvd.

Beach practicalities

The motels that line mile after mile of Gulf Boulevard tend to be cheaper than the hotels – typically $75–100 in winter, $15–20 less in summer. You'll pay $5–10 extra for a room on the beach side of Gulf Boulevard compared with an identical room on the inland side. At the southern beaches, good, cheap accommodation can be found at the peaceful Lamara Motel & Apartments, 520 73rd Ave, St Petersburg Beach (☎ 1-800/211-5108, 🌐 www.lamara.com; 8), while the pick of the hotels at the northern beaches is 🏠 Sheraton Sand Key, 1160 Gulf Blvd, Sand Key (☎ 1-800/456-7263, 🌐 www.sheratonsandkey.com; 6). It's easy to find a decent place to eat around the beaches. Overlooking the sea, Hurricane, 807 Gulf Way, Pass-a-Grille (☎ 727/360-9558), has a well-priced menu of the freshest seafood. Fetishes, 6690 Gulf Blvd, St Pete Beach (☎ 727/363-3700), is ideal for a more upscale and intimate dining experience, serving expensive American cuisine. In Clearwater Beach, Frenchy's Café, 41 Baymont St (☎ 727/446-3607), cooks up good grouper sandwiches and seafood gumbo.

Sarasota

Rising on a gentle hillside beside the blue waters of Sarasota Bay, SARASOTA, 35 miles south of St Petersburg, is one of Florida's better-off and better-looking towns. It's also one of the state's leading cultural centers, home to numerous writers and artists, and the base of several respected performing arts companies. The community is far less stuffy than its wealth might suggest, and downtown Sarasota is fairly lively, with cafés, bars, and eateries complementing the excellent grouping of bookstores. Be sure to visit the house and art collections of John Ringling, a multimillionaire who gave Sarasota its ongoing taste for the fine arts, or the barrier island beaches, a couple of miles away across the bay, which are also spectacular.

The Ringling Museum Complex

John Ringling, one of the owners of the fantastically successful Ringling Brothers Circus, which toured the US from the 1880s, acquired during his lifetime a fortune estimated at $200 million. Recognizing Sarasota's investment potential, he built the first causeway to the barrier islands and made this the winter base for his circus. His greatest gift to the town, however, was a Venetian Gothic mansion and an incredible collection of European Baroque paintings – regarded as one of the finest collections of its kind in the US – displayed in a purpose-built museum beside the house.

The Ringling Museum Complex, which includes the mansion (daily 10am–5.30pm; $15; ☎941/359-5700), is at 5401 Bay Shore Rd, three miles north of downtown beside US-41. Begin your exploration by walking through the gardens to the former winter residence of John and Mable Ringling, Ca' d'Zan ("House of John," in Venetian dialect), built in 1926 for $1.5 million, and furnished with New York estate sale castoffs for an additional $400,000. A gorgeous piece of work and a triumph of taste and proportion, it's serenely situated beside the bay. The artwork is displayed in the spacious museum, built around a mock fifteenth-century Italian palazzo. Five enormous paintings by Rubens, commissioned in 1625, and the painter's subsequent Portrait of Archduke Ferdinand, are highlights, though there's also a wealth of talent from Europe's leading schools of the mid-sixteenth to mid-eighteenth centuries. Free guided tours depart regularly from the entrance.

The Sarasota beaches

Increasingly the stamping ground of European package tourists spilling south from the St Petersburg beaches, the white sands of the Sarasota beaches are worth a day of anybody's time. The two islands on which they lie, Lido Key and Siesta Key, are accessible from the mainland, though there is no direct link between them. A third island, Longboat Key, is primarily residential.

The Ringling Causeway crosses the yacht-filled Sarasota Bay from the foot of Sarasota's Main Street to Lido Key. The causeway flows into St Armands Circle, a roundabout ringed by upmarket shops and restaurants dotted with some of Ringling's replica classical statuary. Continuing south along Benjamin Franklin Drive, you come to the island's most accessible beaches, ending after two miles at the attractive South Lido Park (daily 8am-sunset; free).

The bulbous northerly section of tadpole-shaped Siesta Key, reached by Siesta Drive off US-41, about five miles south of downtown Sarasota, attracts a younger crowd. The soft sand at the pretty but busy Siesta Key Beach (beside Beach Road) has a sugary texture due to its origins as quartz (not the more usual pulverized coral). To escape the crowds, continue south past Crescent Beach and follow Midnight Pass Road for six miles to Turtle Beach, a small, secluded stretch of sand.

Practicalities

In downtown Sarasota, Greyhound buses stop at 575 N Washington Blvd (☎ 941/955-5735). The Amtrak bus from Tampa pulls in at 1993 Main Street. The local bus terminal is a few blocks west on Lemon Avenue, between 1st and 2nd streets: catch buses here for the Ringling estate or the beaches. Call at the visitor center, 655 N Tamiami Trail (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–3pm; ☎ 1-800/522-9799, 🌐 www.sarasotafl.org), for discount coupons and leaflets.

On the mainland, motels run the length of US-41 (N Tamiami Trail) between the Ringling estate and downtown Sarasota, typically charging around $60 a night: try the Best Western Midtown, 1425 S Tamiami Trail (☎ 941/955-9841; 📍). Prices are higher at the beaches: the friendly Lido Vacation Rentals, 528 S Polk Drive, Lido Key (☎ 1-800/890-7991; 📍), is one of the more reasonably priced choices.

Eating options along Main Street include the healthful salads, sandwiches, and smoothies at Nature's Way, no. 1572 (☎ 941/954-3131), as well as the excellent pizza at Il Panificio, no. 1703 (☎ 941/366-5570). 🍷 El Habanero, 417 Burns Court (☎ 941/362-9562), serves plates piled high with mouth-watering Cuban food.

Fort Myers

Fifty miles south, FORT MYERS may lack the elan of Sarasota, but it's nonetheless one of the up-and-coming communities of Florida's southwest coast. Fortunately, most of its recent growth has occurred on the north side of the wide Caloosahatchee River, which the town straddles, allowing the traditional center, along the waterway's south shore, to remain relatively unspoiled.

Once across the river, US-41 strikes downtown Fort Myers, picturesquely nestled on the water's edge. For a thorough insight into the town's history, head to the Southwest Florida Museum of History, 2300 Peck St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–4pm; $9.50; ☎ 239/332-5955), which also has an eye-catching 84-foot-long Pullman rail car.

In 1885, six years after inventing the light bulb, Thomas Edison collapsed from exhaustion and was instructed by his doctor to find a warm working environment or face an early death. Vacationing in Florida, the 37-year-old Edison bought fourteen acres of land on the banks of the Caloosahatchee and cleared a section of it to spend his remaining winters. This became the Edison Winter Estate, 2350 McGregor Blvd, a mile west of downtown (Mon–Sat 9am–5.30pm, Sun noon–5.30pm; $16 for homes and gardens tour, every 30mins; ☎ 239/334-3614, 🌐 www.edison-ford-estate.com). The tours begin in the gardens, planted with such exotics as African sausage trees and wild orchids. However, the house, which you can glimpse only through the windows, is anticlimactic – its plainness probably due to the fact that Edison spent most of his waking hours inside the laboratory, attempting to turn the latex-rich sap of Solidago edisonii (a strain of goldenrod weed he developed) into rubber. However, when the tour reaches the engrossing museum, the full impact of Edison's achievements becomes apparent: you'll see several examples of the phonograph that Edison created in 1877, as well as some of the ungainly cinema projectors derived from Edison's Kinetoscope – which brought him a million dollars a year in royalties from 1907. Next door, you can also traipse through the plain Ford Winter Estate, bought by Edison's close friend

Henry Ford in 1915. Much more awe-inspiring is the enormous banyan tree outside the ticket office – the largest of its kind in the US.

The Fort Myers beaches

The Fort Myers beaches on Estero Island, fifteen miles south of downtown, are appreciably different in character from the west coast's more commercialized beach strips, with a cheerful seaside mood. Accommodation is plentiful on and around Estero Boulevard – reached by San Carlos Boulevard – which runs the seven-mile length of the island. Most activity revolves around the short fishing pier and the Lynne Hall Memorial Park, at the island's north end.

Estero Island becomes increasingly residential as you press south, Estero Boulevard eventually swinging over a slender causeway to Lovers Key State Recreation Area (daily 8am–sunset; $3–5 per car, $1 for pedestrians and cyclists; ☎ 239/463-4588), where a footpath picks a trail over a couple of mangrove-fringed islands and several mullet-filled creeks to Lovers Key, a secluded beach. If you don't fancy the walk, a free trolley will transport you between the park entrance and the beach.

Reached only by crossing a causeway (with a $6 toll), the islands of Sanibel and Captiva, 25 miles southwest of Fort Myers, are virtually impossible to visit unless you have a car. However, if you have a spare day, these islands offer a wildlife refuge, mangroves, and shell-strewn beaches – for which they are widely renowned. In contrast with the smooth beaches along the gulf side of Sanibel Island, the opposite edge comprises shallow bays and creeks, and a vibrant wildlife habitat under the protection of the J.N. “Ding” Darling National Wildlife Refuge (daily except Fri 7.30am–sunset; cars $5, cyclists and pedestrians $1; ☎ 239/472-1100). The main entrance and information center are just off the Sanibel–Captiva Road. If you intend to stay here for a night or two, contact the Fort Myers visitor center beforehand for lodging ideas. By doing so, you'll be treated to a beach experience unlike those in most of Florida – lovely yet with an acute sense of isolation.

Practicalities

Greyhound pulls in at 2250 Peck St, while daily Amtrak buses from Tampa arrive at 6050 Plaza Drive, about six miles east of downtown. The Chamber of Commerce is at 2310 Edwards Drive (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm; ☎ 1-800/366-3622, 🌐 www.fortmyers.org). Distances within Fort Myers, and from downtown to the beaches, are large, and you'll struggle without a car, though it is possible – just – to reach the beaches on local LeeTran buses (☎ 239/533-8726, 🌐 www.rideleetran.com). LeeTran's downtown terminal is at Monroe Avenue and Martin Luther King Jr Boulevard.

Accommodation costs in and around Fort Myers are low between May and mid-December, when 30–60 percent gets lopped off the standard rates. However, in high season, prices skyrocket, and spare rooms are rare. Downtown, look along 1st Street: the riverfront Sea Chest, at no. 2571 (☎ 1-800/438-6461; Ⓜ), is among the cheapest. At the beaches, Estero Boulevard is your best bet: the Beacon, no. 1240 (☎ 239/463-5264; Ⓜ), and Casa Playa, no. 510 (☎ 1-800/569-4876, 🌐 www.casaplayaresort.com; Ⓜ), are both clean and reliable. Of the campgrounds, only Red Coconut, 3001 Estero Blvd (from $31; ☎ 239/463-7200, 🌐 www.redcoconut.com), is right on the beach.

For downtown food, try Bara Bread, 1520 Broadway (☎ 239/334-8216), for inexpensive bistro fare and baked goods, or Oasis Restaurant, 2260 Dr Martin Luther King Jr Blvd (☎ 239/334-1556), for large, cheap breakfasts and lunch specials. At the beaches, sample the Greek and other Mediterranean food at the Orpheus Café, 1165 Estero Blvd (☎ 239/463-1549), or stop for some seafood at Top O' The Mast, 1028 Estero Blvd (☎ 239/463-9424), where there's also live music and DJs.

The Everglades

Whatever scenic excitement you might anticipate from one of the country's more celebrated natural areas – whether you arrive west from Miami or south from Fort Myers, seventy miles from either direction along US-41 – there's nothing to herald your arrival in THE EVERGLADES. The most dramatic sights are small pockets of trees poking above a completely flat sawgrass plain. Yet, these wide-open spaces resonate with life, forming part of an ever-changing ecosystem, evolved through a unique combination of climate, vegetation, and wildlife.

Though it appears to be flat as a table-top, the limestone on which the Everglades stands actually tilts very slightly towards the southwest. For thousands of years, water from summer storms and the overflow of nearby Lake Okeechobee has moved slowly through the Everglades towards the coast. The water replenishes the sawgrass, which grows on a thin layer of soil formed by decaying vegetation. This gives birth to the algae at the base of a complex food chain that sustains much larger creatures, most importantly alligators. After the floodwaters have reached the sea, drained through the bedrock, or simply evaporated, the Everglades are barren except for the water accumulated in ponds – or “gator holes” – created when an alligator senses water and clears the soil covering it with its tail. Besides nourishing the alligator, the pond provides a home for other wildlife until the summer rains return. Sawgrass covers much of the Everglades, but where natural indentations in the limestone fill with soil, fertile tree islands – or “hammocks” – appear, just high enough to stand above the floodwaters.

Several Native American tribes once lived hunter-gatherer existences in the Everglades. The shell mounds they built can still be seen in sections of the park.

By the late 1800s, a few towns had sprung up, peopled by settlers who, unlike the Indians, looked to exploit the land. As Florida's population grew, the damage caused by hunting, road building, and draining for farmland gave rise to a significant conservation lobby. In 1947, a section of the Everglades was declared a national park. However, unrestrained commercial use of nearby areas continues to upset the Everglades' natural cycle. The 1200 miles of canals built to divert the flow of water away from the Everglades and toward the state's expanding cities, the poisoning caused by agricultural chemicals from local farmlands, and the broader changes wrought by global warming could yet turn Florida's greatest natural asset into a wasteland.

Everglades National Park

Throughout the last century, the Everglades' boundaries have been steadily pushed back by urban development. Today, EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK bestows federal protection to only a comparatively small section at the southern tip of the Florida peninsula.

Arrival and information

There are three entrances to the park: Everglades City, at the northwestern corner; Shark Valley, at the northeastern corner; and the one near the Ernest Coe Visitor Center, at the southeastern corner. US-41 skirts the northern edge of the park, providing the only land access to the Everglades City and Shark Valley entrances. There is no public transportation along US-41, or to any of the park entrances.

Park entry is free at Everglades City, although from there you can travel only by boat or canoe. At Shark Valley it's $8 per car and $4 for pedestrians and cyclists; near Ernest F. Coe, it's $10 and $5, respectively. Entry tickets are valid for seven days.

The park is open year-round, but the most favorable time to visit is winter, when the receding floodwaters cause wildlife to congregate around gator holes, ranger-led activities are frequent, and the mosquitoes are bearable. In summer, afternoon storms flood the prairies, park activities are substantially reduced, and the mosquitoes are a severe annoyance. Visiting between seasons is also a good bet.

Accommodation

There are a handful of places to stay in the towns just outside the park's perimeters. In Everglades City, try the charming and clean Ivey House, 107 Camellia St (☎239/695-3299, 🌐www.iveyhouse.com; closed June–Sept; reserve ahead; Ⓢ), or the eccentric The Banks of the Everglades, 201 W Broadway (☎239/695-3151, 🌐www.banksoftheeverglades.com; Ⓢ), housed in what once was the first bank in Collier County. South of Everglades City, at Chokoloskee (see “Everglades City and around,” p.666), you can rent an RV by the night for $69–89, at Outdoor Resorts (☎239/695-2881). Ten miles east of the park, in Florida City, The Everglades International Hostel, 20 SW 2nd Ave, off Palm Drive (☎1-800/372-3874, 🌐www.evergladeshostel.com), is the best option for budget-minded travelers who don't want to camp. Beds go for $20 a night and private rooms are available from $50. The hostel runs canoe and bike tours and, for $5, offers roundtrip transport to the park entrance. Hurricane damage has closed the only hotel within the park, the Flamingo Lodge (☎239/695-3101, 🌐www.flamingolodge.com); call or check the website for reopening dates. There are well-equipped campgrounds (both $14/night; reservations at ☎1-800/365-CAMP or 🌐www.nps.gov) at Flamingo and Long Pine Key, six miles from the Coe entrance. There are also many free backcountry spots on the longer walking and canoe trails (permits are issued at the visitor centers for a $10 fee).

Everglades City and around

Purchased and named in the 1920s by an advertising executive dreaming of a subtropical metropolis, EVERGLADES CITY, three miles south off US-41 along Route 29, now has a population of just under five hundred. Most who visit are solely intent on diminishing the stocks of sports fish living around the mangrove islands – the aptly titled Ten Thousand Islands – arranged like scattered jigsaw-puzzle pieces around the coastline.

For a closer look at the mangroves, which safeguard the Everglades from surge tides, take one of the park-sanctioned boat trips. Try either the Everglades National Park Boat Tours (☎239/695-2591) or Everglades Rentals and Eco Adventures (☎239/695-3299, 🌐www.evergladesadventures.com), at the Ivey House (see p.665). Trips leave from the dock on Chokoloskee, a blob of land – actually a Native American shell mound – marking the southern end of Route 29. The dockside Gulf Coast Visitor Center (daily: May–Oct 9am–4.30pm, Nov–April 8am–4.30pm; ☎239/695-3311) provides details on the cruises, as well as the excellent ranger-led canoe trips.

Shark Valley

Driven out of central Florida by white settlers, several hundred Seminoles retreated to the Everglades during the nineteenth century. Their descendants, the Miccosukees, still live here – though the coming of US-41 brought a fundamental change in their lifestyle, as tourist dollars became more accessible. For example, the souvenir shop at the Miccosukee Indian Village (daily 9am–5pm; $10; ☎305/223-8380) carries both good-quality traditional crafts and items of questionable worth.

A mile east of the village, Shark Valley (entrance open daily 8.30am–6pm) epitomizes the Everglades’ “River of Grass” moniker. From here, dotted by hardwood hammocks, the sawgrass plain stretches as far as the eye can see. Aside from a few simple walking trails close to the visitor center (daily: May–Oct 9.15am–5.15pm, Nov–April 8.45am–5.15pm; ☎305/221-8776), you can see Shark Valley only from a fifteen-mile loop road, ideally covered by renting a bike ($6 an hour; must be returned by 4pm). Alternatively, a highly informative two-hour tram tour (daily; $14; reservations on ☎305/221-8455) stops frequently to view wildlife, but won’t allow you to linger in any particular place, as you’ll certainly want to do.

Pine Island and Flamingo

The Pine Island section of the park – from the Coe Visitor Center entrance to Flamingo, perched at the end of the park road on Florida’s southern tip – holds virtually everything that makes the Everglades tick. Spend a day or two in this southerly portion of the park and you’ll quickly grasp the fundamentals of its complex ecology.

Route-9336 (the only road in this section of the park) leads past the Earnest Coe Visitor Center (daily: May–Oct 9am–5pm, Nov–April 8am–5pm; ☎305/242-7700) to the main park entrance. A mile further on, the Royal Palm Visitor Center (open 24hrs) is a good place to gather information on the Everglades’ various habitats. The large numbers of park visitors who simply want to see an alligator are usually satisfied by walking the half-mile Anhinga Trail here: the notoriously lazy reptiles are easily seen during the winter, often splayed near the trail, looking like plastic props. All manner of birdlife can also be spotted, from snowy egrets to the bizarre, eponymous anhinga, an elegant black-bodied bird resembling an elongated cormorant. To beat the crowds, go early to the Anhinga Trail; after that, peruse the adjacent, but very different, Gumbo Limbo Trail, a hardwood jungle hammock packed with exotic subtropical growths.

If you're game, continue along Rte-9336 for thirty-seven miles (past many short hiking-trail opportunities) to the tiny coastal settlement of FLAMINGO, a former fishing colony now comprising a marina and campground. A century ago, the only way to get here was by boat – the place was so remote that it didn't even have a name until the opening of a post office made one necessary.

Flamingo now does a brisk trade servicing the needs of sports-fishing enthusiasts. On land, the visitor center (Nov to mid-April 8.30am–5pm; intermittent hours rest of year; ☎ 239/695-2945) and the marina of the Flamingo Lodge (see p.665) are the centers of activity. From the marina, the informative Backcountry Cruise (daily except Tues & Wed; $18; reservations on ☎ 239/695-3101) makes a two-hour foray around the mangrove-enshrouded Whitewater Bay, north of Flamingo.

The Panhandle

Rubbing hard against Alabama in the west and Georgia in the north, the long, narrow Panhandle has much more in common with the states of the Deep South than with the rest of Florida. Hard to believe, then, that just a century ago, the Panhandle was Florida. At the western edge, Pensacola was a busy port when Miami was still a swamp. Fertile soils lured wealthy plantation owners south, helping to establish Tallahassee as a high-society gathering place and administrative center – a role which, as the state capital, it retains. But the decline of cotton, the chopping-down of too many trees, and the coming of the East Coast railroad eventually left the Panhandle high and dry. Much of the inland region still seems neglected, and the Apalachicola National Forest is perhaps the best place in Florida to disappear into the wilderness. The coastal Panhandle, on the other hand, is enjoying better times: despite rows of hotels, much is still untainted, boasting miles of blinding white sands.

Tallahassee and around

State capital it may be, TALLAHASSEE is nevertheless a provincial city of oak trees and soft hills that won't take more than two days to explore in full. Around its small grid of central streets – where you'll find plenty of reminders of Florida's formative years – briefcase-clutching bureaucrats mingle with some of Florida State University's 35,000 students, who brighten the mood considerably and keep the city awake at night.

Tallahassee was built on the site of an important prehistoric meeting place, and takes its name from the Apalachee Indian: talwa meaning "town," and ahassee meaning "old." The city's history really begins, though, with Florida's incorporation into the US, and Tallahassee's selection as the state's administrative base; the first Florida government convened here in 1823. Since then, Tallahassee has been the scene of every major wrangle in Florida politics, including the controversial ballot recount of the 2000 presidential election. Today, in contrast to the lightening-paced development of south Florida, Tallahassee has a slow tempo and a strong sense of the past, evoked in its historic buildings and museums.

Tallahassee's Greyhound bus terminal is at 112 W Tennessee St (☎850/222-4249), within easy walking distance of downtown, which can easily be explored on foot. For stacks of background information, drop by the Visitor Information Center, 106 E Jefferson St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 9am–1pm; ☎1-800/628-2866, @www.seetallahassee.com).

Accommodation

Accommodation in Tallahassee is in short supply only during the sixty-day sitting of the state legislature, from early March, and on fall weekends during home football games of the Florida State Seminoles. Hotels and motels on N Monroe Street, about three miles from downtown, are far cheaper than those downtown.

Governors Inn 209 S Adams St ☎1-800/342-7717, @www.thegovinn.com.

Every room in this splendid downtown inn is decorated with antique furniture reflecting the period of the governor each is named after. ⑥

Super 8 2801 N Monroe St ☎850/386-8286.

A good option for the budget traveler, this motel offers simple rooms with basic amenities. ③

University Inn & Suites 691 W Tennessee St

☎850/224-8161, @www.universityinntallahassee.com. Renovated rooms on the perimeter of the FSU campus – perfect for visiting parents or homeless students. ③

The Town

A fifty-million-dollar eyesore dominates the square mile of downtown Tallahassee: the vertical vents of the towering New Capitol Building, at Apalachee Parkway and Monroe Street (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; free). Florida's growing army of bureaucrats had previously been crammed into the more attractive 1845 Old Capitol Building (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; free), which stands in the shadow of its replacement.

For easily the fullest account of Florida's past anywhere in the state, visit the Museum of Florida History, 500 S Bronough St (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; free; ☎850/245-6400, @www.museumoffloridahistory.com). Detailed accounts of Paleo-Indian settlements, and the significance of their burial and temple mounds, some of which have been found on the edge of Tallahassee, are valuable tools in comprehending Florida's prehistory. The colonialist crusades of the Spanish are outlined with copious finds, though there's little on the nineteenth-century Seminole Wars – one of the bloodier skeletons in Florida's closet. There is plenty on the building of the railroads, however.

The Black Archives Research Center and Museum, in the nineteenth-century Union Bank Building, along Apalachee Parkway from the Old Capitol's entrance (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free; ☎850/599-3020), holds one of the largest and most important collections of African-American artifacts in the nation, with oral histories and music stations, as well as some chilling Ku Klux Klan memorabilia.

Eating

With so many politicians and students, there's plenty of good food for all budgets in Tallahassee.

Andrew's Capital Grill & Bar/Andrew's 228 228 S Adams St ☎850/222-3444. Stylish lunch spot with pricier gourmet meals – tuna tartare and succulent lamb chops, for example – upstairs in the evenings.

Barnacle Bill's 1830 N Monroe St ☎850/385-8734. Inexpensive fresh fish and seafood served in a riotous atmosphere.

Capital Steak House in the Holiday Inn Select, 316 W Tennessee St ☎850/222-9555. Even confirmed white-meat-eaters are giving this steakhouse rave reviews for its high-quality Angus beef.

La Fiesta 2329 Apalachee Pkwy ☎850/656-3392. The very best Mexican food in the city.

Po' Boys Creole Café 224 E College Ave ☎850/224-5400. A range of Creole delights; also one of Tallahassee's most popular live music venues.

Wakulla Springs State Park

Fifteen miles south of Tallahassee, off Route-61 on Route-267, Wakulla Springs State Park (daily 8am–sunset; cars $4, pedestrians and cyclists $1; ☎850/224-5950) holds what is believed to be one of the biggest and deepest natural springs in the world. It pumps up half a million gallons of crystal-clear pure water from the bowels of the earth every day – though you'd never guess it from the calm surface.

It's refreshing to swim in the cool pool (in a small roped-off area – this is gator territory), but to learn more about the spring, take the thirty-minute glass-bottom boat tour ($6), and peer down to the swarms of fish hovering around the 180-foot cavern through which the water flows. Forty-minute river cruises ($6) let you glimpse some of the park's inhabitants: deer, turkeys, turtles, herons, egrets, and the inevitable alligators. Built in 1937 beside the spring, the lovely wooden Wakulla Lodge (☎850/224-5950; 4) is a serene hotel, with an excellent restaurant serving home-cooked country food for breakfast, lunch, and dinner.

The Apalachicola National Forest

With swamps, savannahs, and springs dotted liberally about its half-million acres, the Apalachicola National Forest, which fans out southwest of Tallahassee, is the inland Panhandle at its natural best. Several roads enable you to drive through a good-sized chunk, with many undemanding spots for a rest and a snack. To see deeper into the forest you'll need to make more of an effort, by following one of the hiking trails, canoeing on the rivers, or simply spending a night under the stars at one of the basic campgrounds. On the forest's southern edge, the large and forbidding Tate's Hell Swamp is a breeding-ground for the deadly water moccasin snake, and though gung-ho locals sometimes venture in hoping to catch a few to sell to zoos, you're well advised to stay clear.

The main entrances to the forest (free) are off Hwy-20 and Hwy-319; three minor roads, routes 267, 375, and 65, form cross-forest links between the two highways. Accommodation is limited to camping; apart from Camel Lake and Wright Lake ($8 per night for both; hot showers available), all the campgrounds are free (except for a $3 daily vehicle charge), with very basic facilities (no running water). For more information, call the ranger stations at Apalachicola (☎850/643-2282) or Wakulla (☎850/926-3561).

Panama City Beach

Follow Hwy-98 fifty miles west from Apalachicola and you'll hit the orgy of motels, go-kart tracks, mini-golf courses, and amusement parks that is PANAMA

CITY BEACH. Entirely without pretension, the area capitalizes blatantly on the appeal of its 27-mile stretch of white sand. The whole place is as commercialized as can be, but with the shops, bars, and restaurants all trying to undercut one another, there are some great bargains to be found. That said, throughout the lively summer (the so-called “100 Magic Days”), accommodation costs are high and reservations essential. In winter, prices drop and visitors are fewer; most are Canadians and – increasingly – Europeans, many of whom have no problem sunbathing and swimming in the cool temperatures.

Getting a tan, running yourself ragged at beach sports, and going all-out on the nightlife are the main concerns in Panama City Beach, one of the country’s foremost Spring Break destinations. Go-karting, jet-skiing, and parasailing are all available at many locations along the coastal strip; otherwise, splash around at the water park ($28 for a go-on-everything day-ticket). For scuba-divers, several explorable shipwrecks litter the area; get details from any of the numerous dive shops.

Practicalities

Places to stay, while plentiful, fill with amazing speed, especially at weekends. As a general rule, motels at the east end of the beach are smarter and slightly pricier than those in the center. Those at the west end are quieter and more family oriented. The Sugar Sands Motel, 20723 Front Beach Rd (☎ 1-800/367-9221, 🌐 www.sugarsands.com; 📍), is an excellent-value oceanfront motel away from the noise. The cheapest places to eat are the buffet restaurants on Front Beach Road, which charge $5–10 for all you can manage. Alternatively, try one of the regular lunch or dinner restaurants: Shuckum’s Oyster Pub & Seafood Grill, 15614 Front Beach Rd (☎ 850/235-3214); Mike’s Diner, 17554 Front Beach Rd (☎ 850/234-1942), which is also open for breakfast, and until late at night; or the Boatyard, 5323 N Lagoon Dr (☎ 850/249-9273), for al-fresco dining beside a lagoon. At night, party-goers congregate at Club La Vela, 8813 Thomas Drive (☎ 850/235-1061), or Spinnaker, 8795 Thomas Drive (☎ 850/234-7892), each with dozens of bars, several discos, and a young crowd.

Pensacola and around

You might be inclined to overlook PENSACOLA, tucked away as it is at the western end of the Panhandle. The city, on the northern bank of the broad Pensacola Bay, is five miles inland from the nearest beaches, and its prime features are a naval aviation school and some busy dockyards. Pensacola is, however, worth a visit. The nearby white beaches are relatively untouched, and it boasts a rich history, having been occupied by the Spanish as early as 1559. The town repeatedly changed hands between the Spanish, the French, and the British before becoming the place where Florida was officially ceded by Spain to the US in 1821.

Pensacola was already a booming port by c.1900, when the opening of the Panama Canal was expected to boost its fortunes still further. The many new buildings that appeared in the Palafox District, around the southerly section of Palafox Street, in the early 1900s – with their delicate ornamentation and attention to detail – reflect the optimism of the era.

In earlier times, Native Americans, pioneer settlers, and seafaring traders had gathered to swap, sell, and barter on the waterfront of the Seville District, just east of Palafox Street. Those who did well took up permanent residence here, and many of their homes remain in fine states of repair, forming – together with several museums – the Historic Pensacola Village (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; $6; ☎850/595-5985, 🌐www.historicpensacola.org). Tickets are valid for one week, and allow access to all of the museums and former homes in an easily navigated four-block area. Inside the US naval base on Navy Boulevard, about eight miles southwest of central Pensacola, the Museum of Naval Aviation (daily 9am–5pm; free, IMAX movie $8; ☎1-800/327-5002, 🌐www.naval-air.org) exhibits US naval aircraft. They range from the first flimsy seaplane, acquired in 1911, to the Phantoms and Hornets of more recent times.

Pensacola Beach

On the other (south) side of the bay from the city, glistening beaches and wind-swept sand dunes fringe the fifty-mile-long Santa Rosa Island. On the island directly south of Pensacola, PENSACOLA BEACH has everything you'd want from a Gulf Coast beach: fine white sands, watersports rental outlets, a busy fishing pier, and a sprinkling of motels, beachside bars, and snack stands.

Practicalities

The Greyhound bus station is seven miles north of the city center, at 505 W Burgess Rd (☎850/476-4800); ECAT buses #10A and #10B ($1.50; ☎850/595-3228, 🌐www.goecat.com) link it to Pensacola proper. A good local taxi firm is Yellow Cab (☎850/433-3333). ECAT buses serve the city, while #21 goes to the beach three times daily; the main terminal is at 1515 W Fairfield Drive. At the foot of the city side of the three-mile Pensacola Bay Bridge, the visitor center, 1401 E Gregory St (daily 8am–5pm; ☎1-800/874-1234, 🌐www.visitpensacola.com), has the usual worthwhile handouts.

Plenty of budget chain hotels, charging $45–60 per night, line North Davis and Pensacola boulevards, the main approach roads from I-10. Central options are the Seville Inn, 223 E Garden St (☎1-800/277-7275, 🌐www.sevillepensacola.com; 📍), and 🏡 Noble Manor, 110 W Strong St (☎850/434-9544, 🌐www.noblemanor.com; 📍), a charming B&B. At Pensacola Beach, try the comfortable Best Western Resort, 16 Via De Luna Drive (☎850/933-3300 or 1-800/320-8108; 📍). For eating in town, Fish House, 600 S Barracks St (☎850/470-0003), has sushi and steaks along with the seafood. For beachside dining, Peg Leg Pete's, 1010 Fort Pickens Rd (☎850/932-4139), is known for its Cajun food and excellent raw bar.

Louisiana

Swathed in the romance of pirates, voodoo, and Mardi Gras, LOUISIANA is undeniably special. Its history is barely on nodding terms with the view that America was the creation of the Pilgrim Fathers; its way of life is proudly set apart. This is the land of the rural, French-speaking Cajuns (descended from the Acadians, eighteenth-century French-Canadian refugees), who live in the prairies and swamps in the southwest of the state, and the Creoles of jazzy, sassy New Orleans. (The term Creole was originally used to define anyone born in the state to French or Spanish colonists – famed in the nineteenth century for their masked balls, family feuds, and duels – as well as native-born, French-speaking slaves, but has since come to define anyone or anything native to Louisiana, and in particular its black population.) Louisiana’s distinctive, spicy cuisine, regular festivals, and, above all, its music (jazz, R&B, Cajun, and its bluesy black counterpart, zydeco) draw from all these cultures and more. Oddly enough, northern Louisiana – Protestant Bible Belt country, where old plantation homes stand decaying in vast cottonfields – feels more “Southern” than the marshy bayous, shaded by ancient cypress trees and laced with wispy trails of Spanish moss, of the Catholic south.

The French first settled Louisiana in 1682, braving treacherous swamps and plagues to harvest the abundant cypress. The state was sparsely inhabited before its first permanent settlement, the trading post of Natchitoches, was established in 1714, followed by New Orleans in 1718. In 1760, Louis XV secretly handed New Orleans, along with all French territory west of the Mississippi, to his Spanish cousin, Charles III, as a safeguard against British expansionism. Louisiana remained Spanish until it was ceded to Napoleon in 1801, under the proviso that it should never change hands again. Just two years later, however, Napoleon, strapped for cash to fund his battles with the British in Europe, struck a bargain with president Thomas Jefferson known as the Louisiana Purchase. This sneaky agreement handed over to the US all French lands between Canada and Mexico, from the Mississippi to the Rockies, for a total cost of $15 million. The subsequent “Americanization” of Louisiana was one of the most momentous periods in the state’s history, with the port of New Orleans, in its key position near the mouth of the Mississippi River, growing to become one of the nation’s wealthiest cities. Though the state seceded from the Union to join the Confederacy in 1861, there were important differences between Louisiana and the rest of the slave-driven South. The Black Code, drawn up by the French in 1685 to govern Saint-Domingue (today’s Haiti) and established in Louisiana in 1724, had given slaves rights unparalleled elsewhere, including permission to marry, meet socially, and take Sundays off. The black population of New Orleans in particular was renowned as exceptionally literate and cosmopolitan, with a significant number of free people of color who owned businesses, property, and even slaves.

Though Louisiana was not badly scarred physically by the Civil War, with few important battles fought on its soil, its economy was ravaged, and its social structures all but destroyed. The Reconstruction era, too, hit particularly hard here, with the once great city of New Orleans suffering a period of unprecedented lawlessness and racial violence. In time, the economy, at least, recovered, benefiting from the key importance of the mighty Mississippi and the discovery of offshore oil in the 1950s – but during the twentieth century Louisiana came to rely heavily upon tourism, centered on New Orleans and Cajun country. In August 2005, the double whammy of Hurricane Katrina, which swept though the coastal wetlands, and the horrific after-effects of the levee breaks in New Orleans, seemed as if it might put an end to all that. Recovery, however, continues slowly but surely, and though no thinking person can visit southern Louisiana today without feeling a deep sense of loss, the state still has a huge amount to offer. Whether you're canoeing along a cypress-clogged bayou, dining in a crumbling Creole cottage on spicy, buttery crawfish, or dancing on a steamy starlit night to the best live music in the world, Louisiana remains unique – and a place that now, more than ever, needs your support.

Getting around Louisiana

Louisiana is crossed east-west by two major interstates, I-20 in the north and I-10 in the south. New Orleans is the hub, traversed by I-10 and served by I-55 and I-59 from Mississippi. I-49 sweeps across southeast to northwest, connecting Cajun country with the north.

The international airport is in New Orleans; regional airlines serve the rest of the state and surrounding areas. Amtrak trains link New Orleans with New York, Chicago, and Memphis, as well as Los Angeles, via Lafayette. Greyhound buses connect the major towns with the rest of the country, and are supplemented by smaller local lines. In addition to the Mississippi's bridges and causeways, ferries cross the river at New Orleans, St Francisville in Cajun country, and at various points along the River Road to Baton Rouge.

New Orleans

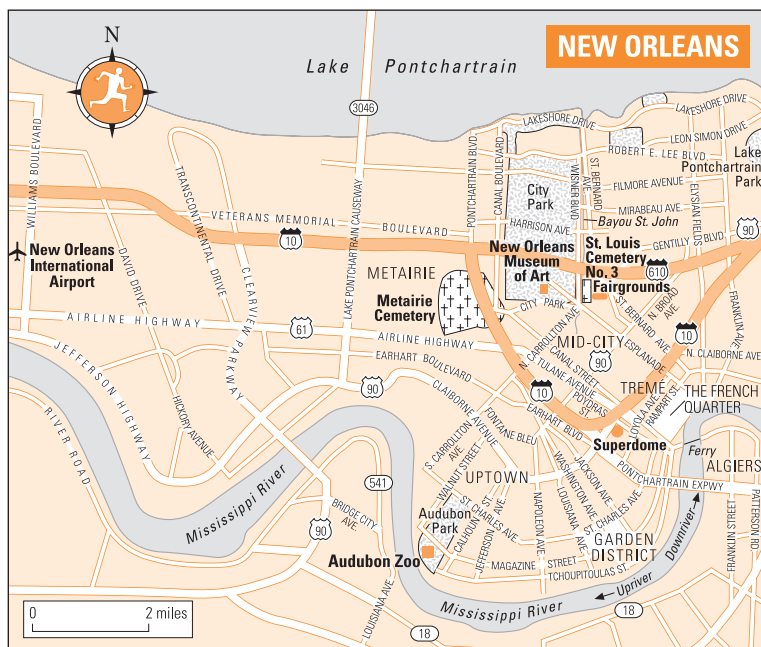

It is painfully clear, since the events of August 2005, that there's a lot more to NEW ORLEANS – the “Big Easy,” the “city that care forgot” – than its image as a nonstop party town. And while this very special place has lost none of its power to bewitch, visiting New Orleans in the shadow of Katrina requires sensitivity and compassion. Even at the best of times this was a contradictory city, repeatedly striking you with the stark divisions between rich and poor (and, more explicitly, between white and black); after Katrina, with the emotional and physical scars still running deep, those contradictions are writ larger than ever. While you can still party in the French Quarter till the early hours, dancing to great jazz bands and gorging on delicious Creole food, just ten minutes away entire neighborhoods stand destroyed, blanketed by a ghostly silence. That's not to say that enjoying life is inappropriate in today's New Orleans – while it has been dealt a crippling blow, let down not only by nature but also by the federal and local governments, the city's vitality and joie de vivre remain real, buffeted but not beaten by the vagaries of commercialism, corruption, poverty and abandonment. The melange of cultures and races that built the city still gives it its heart; not “easy,” exactly, but quite unlike anywhere else in the States – or the world.

New Orleans began life in 1718 as a French-Canadian outpost, an unlikely set of shacks on a disease-ridden marsh. Its prime location near the mouth of the Mississippi River, however, led to rapid development, and with the first mass importation of African slaves, as early as the 1720s, its unique demography began to take shape. Despite early resistance from its Francophone population, the city benefited greatly from its period as a Spanish colony between 1763 and 1800. By the end of the eighteenth century, the port was flourishing, the haunt of smugglers, gamblers, prostitutes, and pirates. Newcomers included Anglo-Americans escaping the American Revolution and aristocrats fleeing revolution in France. The city also became a haven for refugees – whites and free blacks, along with their slaves – escaping the slave revolts in Saint-Domingue (Haiti). As in the West Indies, the Spanish, French, and free people of color associated and formed alliances to create a distinctive Creole culture with its own traditions and ways of life, its own patois, and a cuisine that drew influences from Africa, Europe, and the colonies. New Orleans was already a many-textured place when it experienced two quick-fire changes of government, passing back into French control in 1801 and then being sold to America under the Louisiana Purchase two years later. Unwelcome in the Creole city – today's French Quarter – the Americans who migrated here were forced to settle in the areas now known as the Central Business District (or CBD) and, later, in the Garden District. Canal Street, which divided the old city from the expanding suburbs, became known as “the neutral ground” – the name still used when referring to the median strip between main roads in New Orleans.

Though much has been made of the antipathy between Creoles and Anglo-Americans, in truth economic necessity forced them to live and work together. They fought side by side, too, in the 1815 Battle of New Orleans, the final battle of the War of 1812, which secured American supremacy in the States. The victorious general, Andrew Jackson, became a national hero – and eventually US president; his ragtag volunteer army was made up of Anglo-Americans, slaves, Creoles, free men of color, and Native Americans. They were joined by pirates supplied by the notorious buccaneer Jean Lafitte, whose band of privateers made good use of the labyrinth of secluded bayous in the swamp-choked delta of the Mississippi River.

New Orleans's antebellum golden age as a major port and finance center for the cotton-producing South was brought to an abrupt end by the Civil War. The economic blow wielded by a lengthy Union occupation – which effectively isolated the city from its markets – was compounded by the social and cultural ravages of Reconstruction. This was particularly disastrous for a city once famed for its large, educated, free black population. As the North industrialized and other Southern cities grew, the fortunes of New Orleans took a downturn.

Jazz exploded into the bars and the bordellos around 1900, and, along with the evolution of Mardi Gras as a tourist attraction, breathed new life into the city. And although the Depression hit here as hard as it did the rest of the nation, it also – spearheaded by a number of local writers and artists – heralded the resurgence of the French Quarter, which had disintegrated into a slum. Even so, it was the less romantic duo of oil and petrochemicals that really saved the economy – until the slump of the 1950s pushed New Orleans well behind other US cities. The oil crash of the early 1980s gave it yet another battering, a gloomy start for near on two decades of high crime rates, crack deaths, and widespread corruption.

By the turn of the millennium things were improving, until, of course, Hurricane Katrina hit ground in 2005. At first it seemed as though the city had done relatively well, in light of the full-scale damage wrought along the Mississippi coast. On August 29, however, with the breach of the city's levees, the nightmare began. Over the course of a few days, rising floodwaters covered 80 percent of the city, destroying much of it in their wake. Most damage was sustained by residential areas – whether in the suburban homes around the lakeside, from where most residents had evacuated, to the less affluent neighborhoods of the east, where those too poor or ill or old to move were trapped in attics and on rooftops for days. The French Quarter, which, as the oldest part of the city was built on the highest ground, was physically unhurt by the flooding, although the economic blow – not least the loss of a huge number of the neighborhood's work force – was tremendous. The city's population remains drastically diminished, due to both fatalities and displacement, and many of those who were able to return still face enormous difficulty repairing their lives. While the grass-roots commitment to rebuilding remains, it is clearly going to take time – patience in New Orleans has become not only a virtue but a survival mechanism. And as the number of volunteers arriving to help dwindles, the city needs the support of tourists more than ever. A visit to New Orleans is a show of support, a defiant assertion that, despite the contempt shown it by federal government, this city matters. And for visitors, it's possible to still have a wonderful time here doing all (or most) of the things that you could do before the floods, as has been proven by the continued success, post-Katrina, of both Mardi Gras and Jazz Fest – huge boosts, both, to this beautiful and beleaguered city's battered morale.

Louis Armstrong New Orleans International Airport (MSY), eighteen miles northwest of downtown on I-10, has an information booth (8am–9pm) in its baggage claim area, along with hotel courtesy phones. Flat-rate taxi fares into town are $28 for up to two people, or $12 each for three or more; shuttles can also take you to your hotel (every 10min; tickets available 24hr in the baggage claim area or from the bus driver; $13 to downtown hotels; ☎ 504/522-3500). Greyhound buses arrive next to Amtrak at the Union Passenger Terminal, 1001 Loyola Ave, near the Superdome. This area, in the no-man's-land beneath the elevated Pontchartrain Expressway, is not great; book a cab in advance to take you to your lodgings. United Cabs is the best firm (☎ 504/522-9771).

Before you leave home, it's worth contacting the New Orleans CVB (☎ 1-800/672-6124, @ www.neworleanscvb.com); they mail out stacks of glossy brochures, and the website is full of helpful information. Once you've arrived, the best information, including self-guided walking tours, free maps, and a variety of discount vouchers can be found at the Welcome Center, on Jackson Square at 529 St Ann St in the Quarter (Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; ☎ 504/566-5031).

Staying safe in New Orleans

Although the heavily touristed French Quarter is comparatively safe, to wander unwittingly beyond it – even just a couple of blocks – can place your personal safety in serious jeopardy. While walking from the Quarter to the Marigny is usually safe enough, it's not a good idea to stray far from the main drag of Frenchmen Street. Wherever you are, use the usual common-sense precautions, and at night always take a cab when traveling any distance outside the Quarter.

Visiting post-Katrina New Orleans

Slow and sleepy at the best of times – which has always been part of its immense charm – New Orleans is now a city in recovery. A lot of it is not pretty, and the pain wrought by the flooding remains tangible. While huge efforts are being made to haul the place back to its feet, there are inevitable hitches and delays, last-minute changes, and overnight alterations. While all details in this chapter, including operating hours, were correct at press time, these are still subject to change. Though many places, especially those that had to limit themselves to weekend opening hours during the painfully slow process of rebuilding, have resumed business as normal, others may never do so. Restaurants may change their hours without notice, attractions may suddenly close down for a week or forever; service may be slower and more erratic than in other major American cities. Check websites or call before setting out, be patient, and go with the flow. You may get frustrated sometimes. Spare a thought for those who are living with it every day.

LOUISIANA

New Orleans: Accommodation

City transportation

Though New Orleans's most-visited neighborhoods are a dream to walk around, getting from one to another is not always easy on foot, and if you're traveling anywhere outside the Quarter after dark you'd be better off calling a cab (see above for a number). The Regional Transit Authority (RTA) runs a network of buses ($1.25, exact fare required; information Mon–Fri 8am–4pm ☎ 504/248-3900, www.norta.com). The most useful routes include “Magazine” (#11), which runs between Canal Street in the CBD and Audubon Park uptown; and “Esplanade” (#91), from Rampart Street on the edge of the Quarter up to City Park.

Far more romantic is the handsome St Charles streetcar (a National Historic Monument, dating back around 100 years) that rumbles a thirteen-mile loop from Carondelet Street at Canal Street, along St Charles Avenue in the Garden District, past Audubon Park to Carrollton uptown. Damaged post-Katrina, the route currently runs only from Carondelet and Canal streets to Lee Circle, but is expected to be fully operational again by the end of 2007. The streetcar trundles along at an average speed of 9mph; service is limited after dark.

There's also a riverfront trolley, which makes ten stops between the Convention Center and Esplanade Avenue ($1.50, exact fare required), and a third line that runs up Canal Street to City Park ($1.25, exact fare required).

Accommodation

New Orleans has some lovely places to stay, from rambling old guesthouses seeping faded grandeur to stylish boutique hotels. Room rates, never low (you'll be pushed to find anything half decent for less than $75 a night), increase considerably for Mardi Gras and Jazz Fest, when prices can go up by as much as 200 percent and rooms are reserved months in advance. This is not a city in which you want to be stranded without a room, and though it's possible to take a chance on last-minute cancellations and deals, you should ideally make reservations. If you do turn up on spec, head immediately for the welcome center (see p.679), where you'll find racks of discount leaflets offering savings on same-day bookings (generally weekdays only).

Most people choose to stay in the French Quarter, in the heart of things. Many accommodations here are in atmospheric guesthouses, most of them in old Creole townhouses. In any one place, rooms can vary considerably in size, comfort, Walking tours are especially popular in New Orleans – notwithstanding the possibility of showers and, in summer, debilitating heat and humidity. The Jean Lafitte National Historic Park Service offers scholarly and accessible overviews of the Quarter (daily 9.30am; 90mins; free; ☎504/589-2133; reservations required; sign up at the NPS visitor center, 419 Decatur St, after 9am on the day). Many visitors, especially with kids in tow, take a narrated trot through the Quarter in one of the mule-drawn carriages that wait behind Jackson Square on Decatur. These can be fun, though you should take the “historic” commentary with a pinch of salt. Rates range from $12 to $15 per person for a trip of between 30 and 45 minutes. Another pleasant way to while away a steamy afternoon is on a river cruise. Leaving from the Toulouse Street wharf behind the Jackson Brewery mall, the Natchez steamboat heads seven miles or so downriver before turning back near the Chalmette battlefield, with a running historical commentary from the captain and a live Dixieland band in the dining room (Wed 2.30pm, Thurs 2.30 & 7pm, Fri & Sat 11.30am, 2.30 & 7pm, Sun 11.30am & 2.30pm; 2hr; $19.50, $29.50 with lunch; evening cruise $33.50, $56.50 with dinner; ☎504/586-8777, @www.steamboatnatchez.com). The John James Audubon riverboat allows you to combine a cruise with a trip to the aquarium (see p.683), the zoo (see p.692), or both. It leaves Tues–Sun from the aquarium at 10am, noon, 2pm, and 4pm, and from the zoo an hour later (1hr one way; $17.50 roundtrip, $31 with aquarium admission, $27 with zoo admission; ☎504/581-4629). Tickets for all cruises are sold at booths behind Jackson Brewery and the aquarium.

New Orleans’s local swamps – many of them protected areas just thirty minutes’ drive from downtown – are otherworldly enclaves that provide a wonderful contrast to the city itself. Dr Wagner’s Honey Island Swamp Tours, based ten miles north of Lake Pontchartrain, venture onto the delta of the Pearl River, a wilderness occupied by nutrias, black bears, and alligators, as well as ibis, great blue herons, and snowy egrets (2hr; $25 adults, $15 children, not including transport from downtown; ☎985/641-1769, @www.honeyislandswamp.com).

For details on ghost, voodoo and cemetery tours, see pp.686–7.

and amenities, so be specific if you have certain preferences. Outside the Quarter, the Lower Garden District offers a couple of budget options, while the funky Faubourg Marigny specializes in bed-and-breakfasts, and the Garden District proper has a couple of gorgeous old hotels. The CBD is the domain of the city’s upmarket chain and boutique hotels; space at these is at a premium nowadays, as they are used to house government workers, conventioners and businesspeople post-Katrina.

In the French Quarter

Chateau Hotel 1001 Chartres St ☎504/524-9636, @www.chateauhotel.com. Simple, clean rooms in a quiet part of the Quarter. Some are better than others, so if you feel yours is too small or a bit dark, check to see what else is available. There’s an outdoor café-bar by the pool, and rates include continental breakfast (which you can have in your room). ④

Cornstalk Hotel 915 Royal St ☎504/523-1515, @www.cornstalkhotel.com. Casually elegant, faded place in a turreted Queen Anne house, surrounded by a landmark cast-iron fence decorated with fat cornstalks. The appealing, high-ceilinged rooms have lots of period detail, and the location is great. Rates include a small continental breakfast, which you can eat on the impressive veranda. ④

A Creole House 1013 St Ann St ☎504/524-8076 or 1-800/535-7858, @www.acreolehouse.com. Basic but acceptable guesthouse, bordering on shabby in places, with rooms ranging from cozy nooks with shared bath to suites. Rates include continental breakfast. ③

Hotel Monteleone 214 Royal St ☎504/523-3341, @www.hotelmonteleone.com. This handsome French Quarter landmark is the oldest hotel in the city, owned by the same family since 1886, and hosting a fine array of writers and luminaries since then. At 16 stories, it's something of a giant on Royal St, with an elegant Baroque facade, stunning old marble lobby, very comfy rooms, a revolving bar, and a rooftop pool. ⑥

Olivier House 828 Toulouse St ① 504/525-8456, ② www.olivierhouse.com. Though a bit dark in places, this atmospheric, quintessentially New Orleans guesthouse offers real character. The 42 rooms (all with bath) vary, but most have funky antique furniture and shutters. There's a tropical courtyard, and a tiny pool. ⑥

Omni Royal Orleans 621 St Louis St ① 504/529-5333 ② www.omnihotels.com. Landmark French Quarter hotel, stylish and swanky, with an old-fashioned New Orleans elegance that never intimidates. Rooms have a faded appeal, and the rooftop pool is lovely. ⑥

Hotel Provincial 1024 Chartres St ① 504/581-4995 or 1-800/535-7922, ② www.hotelprovincial.com. This sprawling – yet somehow intimate – place is set in a quiet part of the Quarter, with rooms opening onto five peaceful, gaslit courtyards. Some rooms are filled with antiques, others are more ordinary. There are two nice outdoor pools, a bar, and a fancy restaurant, Stella, on-site. ⑤

Hotel Villa Convento 616 Ursulines St ① 504/522-1793, ② www.villaconvento.com. Friendly, family-run guesthouse, often booked with return visitors. No-frills rooms with bath; some have balconies, while others open onto a patio. ④

Outside the French Quarter

Columns Hotel 3811 St Charles Ave ① 504/899-9308, ② 1-800/445-9308, ③ www.thecolumns.com. Characterful Garden District hotel in a stately

1883 mansion. The whole place seeps louche glamour, especially the Victorian bar (see p.696) and the porch with its namesake columns. Some rooms come with a balcony, but there are no TVs. Rates include continental breakfast. ⑥

The Frenchmen 417 Frenchmen St ① 504/948-2166 or 1-800/831-1781, ② www.frenchmenhotel.com. Funky and friendly Faubourg Marigny guesthouse with 27 rooms, of variable sizes, spread across two 1860 townhouses. There's a patio, a small pool, and a Jacuzzi. Rates include continental breakfast. ④

Hi-New Orleans Marquette House 2249 Carondelet St ① 504/523-3014. Basic but not bad hostel near the Garden District. It's not one of the nicest HI properties, but the staff are friendly. Single-sex dorm beds go for $25; there are double rooms, a few with kitchens, in a separate building. Day use allowed. Reservations recommended. ①–③

Royal Street Inn 1431 Royal St ① 504/948-7499 or 1-800/449-5535, ② www.royalstreetinn.com. Hip Faubourg Marigny lodging above the R-Bar (see p.696), and run by the same people. The six rooms (all with bath) are decorated on themes ranging from Art Deco through Bukowski to bordello; the four-person suites are good value. It's favored by a young crowd who hang out in the bar. ④

St Charles Guest House 1748 Prytania St ① 504/523-6556, ② www.stcharlesguesthouse.com. Bohemian Lower Garden District guesthouse offering a variety of rooms, none with phone or TV. Backpackers choose the basic 6ft by 8ft rooms for $45, but for the pricier en-suite doubles you can get better value elsewhere. It's friendly enough, though, with a hostel-like atmosphere, a pool, and free breakfast. They ask for deposits with reservations. No smoking. ③

The City

New Orleans is sometimes called the Crescent City, because of the way it nestles between the southern shore of Lake Pontchartrain and a dramatic horseshoe bend in the Mississippi River. This unique location makes the city's layout confusing, with streets curving to follow the river, and shooting off at odd angles to head inland. Compass points are of little use here – locals refer instead to lakeside (toward the lake) and riverside (toward the river), and, using Canal Street as the dividing line, uptown (or upriver) and downtown (downriver).

Most visitors spend most of their time in the battered, charming old French Quarter (or Vieux Carré), site of the original settlement. Though it wasn't directly affected by the post-Katrina flooding, the aftershock has nonetheless taken its toll here, with boarded up shopfronts and shattered sidewalks – crushed by the Humvees that prowled the city during the post-flood evacuation – serving as sad reminders of the city's suffering. Places are steadily returning to some version of normal, however, and on busy weekends you could even imagine that the storm had never happened. On the Quarter's fringes, the funky Faubourg Marigny creeps downriver from Esplanade Avenue, while the Quarter's lakeside boundary, Rampart Street, marks the beginning of the historic, run-down African-American neighborhood of Tremé. On the other side of the Quarter, across Canal Street, the CBD (Central Business District), bounded by the river and I-10, spreads upriver to the Pontchartrain Expressway. Dominated by office buildings, hotels, and banks – many of them seriously damaged by the storm – it also incorporates the Warehouse District and, toward the lake, the gargantuan Superdome. A ferry ride across the river from the foot of Canal Street takes you to the suburban west bank and the residential district of old Algiers.

Back on the east bank, upriver from the CBD, the rarefied Garden District is an area of gorgeous old mansions, some of them in delectable ruin. The Lower Garden District, creeping between the expressway and Jackson Avenue, is quite a different creature, its run-down old houses filled with impoverished artists and musicians. Traditionally the preferred way to get to either neighborhood was on the rumbling streetcar (see p.692) along swanky St Charles Avenue, the Garden District's lakeside boundary, but you can also approach using Magazine Street, a six-mile stretch of galleries and antique stores that runs parallel to St Charles riverside. Entering the Garden District, you've crossed the official boundary into uptown, which spreads upriver to encompass Audubon Park and Zoo.

The French Quarter

The heartbreakingly beautiful French Quarter is where New Orleans began in 1718. Today, battered and bohemian, decaying and vibrant, it remains the spiritual core of the city, its fanciful cast-iron balconies, hidden courtyards, and time-stained stucco buildings exerting a haunting fascination that has long caught the imagination of artists and writers. Official tours are useful for orientation, but it's most fun simply to wander – and you'll need a few days at least to do it justice, absorbing the jumble of sounds, sights, and smells. Early morning, in the dazzling light from the river, is a good time to explore, as sleepy locals wake themselves

The Mississippi River

A resonant, romantic, and extraordinary physical presence, the Mississippi River is New Orleans's lifeblood and its raison d'être. In the nineteenth century, as the port boomed, the city gradually cut itself off from the river altogether, hemming it in behind a string of warehouses and railroads. But, as the importance of the port has diminished, a couple of downtown parks, plazas, and riverside walks, accessible from the French Quarter, the CBD, and uptown, have focused attention back onto the waterfront.

Crossing Decatur Street from Jackson Square brings you to the Moon Walk, a paved promenade studded with benches and raised flower boxes, where buskers serenade you as you gaze across the water. Upriver from here, long, thin Woldenberg Park makes a good place for a picnic, watching the river traffic drift by; it's also the location for a number of the city's free music festivals. At the upriver edge of the park, the Aquarium of the Americas, near the Canal Street wharf (Wed–Sun 10am–4pm; $17, children $10; IMAX $8/$5, aquarium and IMAX $22/$12, aquarium and zoo, $25/$14, aquarium, IMAX and zoo $28/$18), features a huge glass tunnel where visitors – rampaging infants, mostly – come face-to-face with rippling rays and ugly sawfish. There's also a swamp complete with a white gator, along with an Amazonian rainforest, petting tank, and IMAX theater.

For details of river tours, see p.681. And to read more about the Mississippi River itself, see p.561.

up with strong coffee in neighborhood cafés, shops crank open their shutters, and all-night revelers stumble home.

The Quarter is laid out in a grid, unchanged since 1721. At just thirteen blocks wide – smaller than you might expect – it's easily walkable, bounded by the Mississippi River, Rampart Street, Canal Street, and Esplanade Avenue, and centering on lively Jackson Square. Rather than French, the famed architecture is predominantly Spanish Colonial, with a strong Caribbean influence. Most of the buildings date from the late eighteenth century, after much of the old city had been devastated by fires in 1788 and 1794. Shops, galleries, restaurants and bars are concentrated in the blocks between Decatur and Bourbon, while beyond Bourbon, up toward Rampart Street, and in the Lower Quarter, downriver from Jackson Square, things become more peaceful. Here, you'll find quiet, predominantly residential streets where the Quarter's gay community lives side by side with elegant dowagers, part-time condo-dwellers, and scruffy artists.

Jackson Square

Ever since its earliest incarnation as the Place d'Armes, a dusty parade ground used for public meetings and executions, Jackson Square has been at the heart of the Quarter. Today, with its iron benches, neat lawns, and blaze of flowerbeds, the park at the center of the square manages to stay tranquil despite the streams of photo-snapping tourists, school groups, bus boys on their breaks, and the odd crashed-out casualty. Presiding over them all, an equestrian statue – the first in the nation, constructed by Clark Mills in 1856 – shows Andrew Jackson in uncharacteristically jaunty mode, waving his hat. The hectoring inscription, “The Union Must and Shall be Preserved,” was added by Union General “Beast” Butler during the Civil War occupation.

During the day, everyone passes by at some time or another, weaving their way through the tangle of artists, Lucky Dog hot-dog vendors, palm readers, shambolic brass bands, and blues musicians. A postcard-perfect backdrop for the Jackson statue, St Louis Cathedral is the oldest continuously active cathedral in the United States. It’s the third church on this spot, built in 1794 after the first two had been destroyed by fire and hurricane. Dominated by three tall slate steeples, the facade, which marries Greek Revival symmetry with copious French arches, is oddly two-dimensional, like some elaborate stage prop for the street drama below. Though the cathedral has always been central to the life of this very Catholic city – Andrew Jackson laid his sword on the altar in thanks for victory at the Battle of New Orleans; voodoo queen Marie Laveau (see p.686) was baptized and married here – the interior offers little to get excited about.

On the upriver side of the cathedral, the Cabildo (Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; $6) was built as the Casa Capitular, seat of the Spanish colonial government. The building – which cuts an impressive dash with its colonnade, fan windows, and wrought-iron balconies – is now part of the Louisiana State Museum (see p.686). Inside, exhibits illuminate the complex tangle of cultures, classes, and races that binds together Louisiana’s history, starting with the Native Americans and winding up with the demise of Reconstruction. Black history is well represented throughout, with as much emphasis on the free people of color as on the city’s role as the major slave-

The Cabildo and the Presbytère (see p.685–6), along with the 1850 House (opposite), the Old US Mint (p.688), and Madame John's Legacy (p.689), together make up the Louisiana State Museum. Since Katrina, the 1850 House, Mint, and Madame John's Legacy have remained closed, but the aim is that all will eventually re-open. Combination tickets give a discount of 20 percent to two or more sites, and are good for three consecutive days.

trading center of the South. On the second floor you can see the bronze death mask of Napoleon, along with the reconstructed Sala Capitular, where the Louisiana Purchase was signed in 1803, and where, in 1892, the historic Plessy vs Ferguson case, which effectively legalized segregation throughout the South, was first argued.

Forming a matching pair with the Cabildo, the Presbytère (Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; $6), on the downriver side of the cathedral, was designed in 1791 as a rectory. It was never used as such, however, and after completion in 1813 went on to serve as a courthouse. Today, it's an unmissable Mardi Gras museum, covering carnival from every conceivable angle. Full of odd treasures – jewel-encrusted costumes, primitive masks, posters, bizarre dance cards – it also features videos, interactive themed rooms and music stations, managing perhaps more than any other museum to give a real sense of what makes this unique city tick.

Spooky New Orleans

Voodoo

Voodoo, still a significant presence in New Orleans, was brought to the city by African slaves via the French colonies of the Caribbean, where tribal beliefs were mixed with Catholicism to create a cult based on spirit worship. French, and later, Spanish authorities tried to suppress the religion (voodoo-worshippers had played an active role in the organization of slave revolts in Haiti), but it continued to flourish among the city's black population. Under American rule, the weekly slave gatherings at Congo Square (in what is now Louis Armstrong Park; see p.689), which included ritual ceremonies, turned into a tourist attraction for whites, fueled by sensationalized reports of hypnotized white women dancing naked to throbbing drum beats.

Unlike in the West Indies, where the cult was dominated by male priests, New Orleans had many voodoo priestesses. The most famous was Marie Laveau, a hairdresser of African, white, and Native American blood. Using shrewd marketing sense and inside knowledge of the lives of her clients, she was in high demand for her gris-gris ("gree gree") – spells or potions – which she prepared for wealthy Creoles and Americans, as well as Africans. Laveau died in 1881, after which another Marie, believed to be her daughter, continued to practice under her name. The legend of both Maries lives on, and their crumbling tombs are popular tourist attractions (see "The Cities of the Dead," below).

Today, voodoo is big business in New Orleans, with a glut of gift shops in the French Quarter selling ersatz gris-gris and exotic voodoo dolls; if you're interested in the real thing, head instead to the Voodoo Spiritual Temple, 828 N Rampart St (☎504/522-9627, @www.voodoospiritualtemple.org), where the charismatic Priestess Miriam offers open services, tours, and consultations.

The Historic Voodoo Museum, 724 Dumaine St (daily 10.30am–5.30pm; $5), is a ragtag collection of ceremonial objects, paintings, and gris-gris. Its aim, to debunk the myths that surround this misunderstood religion, is undermined somewhat by the deliciously spooky atmosphere, not to mention its resident Albino python, crumbling rat heads, and desiccated bats.

The elegant three-story Pontalba Buildings, which line St Peter and St Ann streets where they border the square, were commissioned by the formidable Baroness Pontalba, who, having returned from France in 1849 to find her real estate palling in comparison to the American sector across Canal Street, dreamed of replacing the shabby buildings around the Place d'Armes with elegant colonnaded structures resembling those she'd seen in Paris. Planned as both business and residential units, they are still used as such, and remain some of the city's most desirable places to live. These were not, as is commonly claimed, the first apartment buildings in the US, but they were innovative in their use of mass-produced materials and, in particular, of cast iron – indeed, it was these very balconies that sparked the citywide fad for lacy ironwork, which soon came to replace the plainer iron hand-wrought locally by African slaves. Part of the state museum (see opposite), the cordoned-off rooms of the 1850 House, 523 St Ann St, re-create the tastes of the well-to-do Creole families who lived in these fashionable apartments. Unfortunately, though the self-guided tours draw attention to every piece of Vieux Paris china and fine crystal – a treat for decorative arts fans – they leave you with little sense of any real domestic detail.

Decatur Street and Esplanade Avenue

Something of an anomaly among Upper Decatur's brassy T-shirt shops and theme restaurants, the Jean Lafitte National Historic Park and Preserve Visitor Center, 419 Decatur St (daily 9am–5pm), is not only a starting point for excel-

The Cities of the Dead

So much of New Orleans is at, or below, sea level that early settlers who buried their dead – and there were many of them – found that during the frequent flooding great waves of moldy coffins would float to the surface of the sodden earth. Eventually, graves began to be placed, Spanish-style, in above-ground brick and stucco vaults, surrounded by small fences. These cemeteries grew to resemble cities, laid out in “streets”; today, as the tombs crumble away amid the overgrown foliage, they have become atmospheric in the extreme. The creepiness isn't totally imaginary, either – though armed muggers, rather than ghosts, are the danger these days. You should never venture into one alone. Nearly all the city tours (see p.681) include a trip around one of the most interesting of the cemeteries – Lafayette #1 in the Garden District, St Louis #1 and #2 in Tremé, or St Louis #3 in Mid-City – some (see “Tours,” p.681) specialize in them.

Ghost tours

New Orleans's image as a Gothic, vampire-stalked city has spawned a variety of tours promising magic, voodoo, vampires, and ghosts. Among the campy, the overpriced, and the just plain silly, there are, nonetheless, a couple worth joining. Historic New Orleans Walking Tours (☎ 504/947-2120; 🌐 www.tourneworleans.com) has a good “Cemetery/Voodoo” tour covering St Louis Cemetery #1, Congo Square, Marie Laveau's home, and the Voodoo Spiritual Temple (Mon–Sat 10am & 1pm, Sun 10am; meet at Café Beignet, 334 Royal St), and, after dark, a “Haunted French Quarter” walk, which is slightly more tongue-in-cheek (daily 7.30pm; meet at Snook's bar, at Bourbon and Orleans). Both cost $15, last around 2 hours, and need no reservations. Save Our Cemeteries is a nonprofit restoration organization leading tours of Lafayette #1 (Mon, Wed, Fri & Sat 10.30am; 1hr; $6; no reservations; meet at the Washington Avenue Gate, 1400 block of Washington Ave) and St Louis #1 (Sun 10am; 1hr; $12; no reservations; meet at the Basin Street Station Visitor Center, 501 Basin St; 🌐 www.saveourcemeteries.org).

lent walking tours (see p.681), but also a great introduction to Louisiana's delta region. In addition to panels outlining local history, architecture, cultural traditions, and ecology, listening stations let you eavesdrop on natives expounding, in a variety of accents, on the meaning of all those unique local phrases and expressions, while touch-screen monitors feature classic footage of Louis Armstrong, Mahalia Jackson, and Professor Longhair, among others.

Downriver along Decatur, the specialty shops of the restored French Market – said to be on the site of a Native American trading area and certainly active since the 1720s – sell tourist knick-knacks; for stalls, head toward the old Farmers' Market, just off Decatur on N Peters Street, where fresh produce, spices, hot sauce, and the like are sold around the clock. Next door, a flea market abounds in trashy tack and bargain oddities; for vintage curiosities, head to the funky thrift and rummage stores opposite on Decatur.

The New Orleans Jazz National Historical Park Visitor Center (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 504/589-4841, 🌐 www.nps.gov/jazz), tucked away in the French Market at 916 N Peters St, is a must for music fans. Light and airy, with good acoustics and an intimate scale, it's a superb, informal place to attend frequent jazz concerts, talks, movies, and workshops; afterwards, check out the photo displays, self-guided jazz walking tour brochures, and bookstore.

Continuing downriver, you'll come to the outer boundary of the Quarter, Esplanade Avenue, an exquisite, oak-shaded boulevard lined with crumbling nineteenth-century Creole mansions. Part of the state museum (see p.686), the Old US Mint, on the 400 block near the river, sustained considerable storm damage to its roof and is currently closed. Pre-Katrina, it housed a fascinating Jazz Museum, and though some of the collection was destroyed, plans are underway to re-open as soon as possible. Check 🌐 lsm.crt.state.la.us/mintex.htm for updates.

Across Esplanade from the Quarter, the arty Faubourg Marigny is an appealingly mixed, low-rent area of Creole cottages and shotgun houses. Though the neighborhood is gentrifying, and its gaggle of music venues, coffeeshops, and restaurants expanding further and further beyond the Quarter, it's best not to wander too far away from the blocks around Decatur and Frenchmen Street, the district's main drag. Even Elysian Fields – the street where Stanley and Stella lived in Tennessee Williams's A Streetcar Named Desire – can feel distinctly dodgy, despite its heavenly name.

Chartres and Royal streets

A left turn at the 600 block of Esplanade Avenue brings you to the Old Ursuline Convent at 1114 Chartres St. Built in 1745, this is the only intact French Colonial structure in the city, and quite possibly the oldest building in the Mississippi valley. It's one of the many places in the Quarter that are said to be haunted, its corridors roamed by specters of the “casket girls” – white virgins shipped over in the early days of the colony, who were kept here before being sold off as wives in an attempt to stop the increasing number of couplings between French settlers and African or Native American women. At the time of writing the convent's quirky museum of religious paraphernalia was still closed post-Katrina.

The Beauregard-Keyes House, opposite the convent at no. 1113 (tours hourly Mon–Sat 10am–3pm; $5), owes its name to Confederate General Pierre Beauregard – who ordered the first shot of the Civil War at Fort Sumter and rented a room here during Reconstruction – and to popular novelist Frances Parkinson Keyes. She refurbished this “raised cottage” (with the basement at ground level) as her winter home in the 1940s, and her possessions now fill what is essentially a museum of decorative arts. Keyes's novels – including Madame Castel's Lodger, a romance about the house's “Beauregard period” – are on sale in the gift shop.

A block north at 1132 Royal St, the handsome Gallier House, dating from 1857, is a fascinating little museum (tours Mon–Fri 10am, 11am, noon, 2pm & 3pm; $6, or $10 with the Hermann-Grima House, see p.690). James Gallier Jr was a leading architect of the day, and the innovative features he designed for his home, such as the outdoor cistern, cooling system and indoor plumbing, soon became essential for anyone wanting to live in comfort in this swampy climate. Meanwhile, the house's filigree cast-iron balconies would have been the last word in chic. Tours, which focus as much on social history as fine furniture, are some of the liveliest in the Quarter.

A rare example of the French Quarter's early West Indies-style architecture, with a distinctive deep, wraparound gallery, Madame John's Legacy, just off Royal at 628 Dumaine St (part of the Louisiana State Museum, see p.686), was rebuilt after the fire of 1788 as an exact replica of the 1730 house that had previously stood on the site. The building was constructed using the brique entre poteaux technique, in which soft red brick is set between hand-hewn cypress beams, and raised off the ground on stucco-covered pillars. There never was a real Madame John – the name was given to the house by nineteenth-century author George Washington Cable in his tragic short story “Tite Poulette,” and it simply stuck, attracting hundreds of tourists to the city and spawning a nice line in Madame John souvenirs. On the ground floor, an exhibition details the house's various changes in fortune, while upstairs you'll find a very good museum of Southern folk art – though at the time of writing, Madame John's Legacy had still to re-open post-Katrina. For an account of the Historic Voodoo Museum, across Royal at 724 Dumaine, see p.686.

Back on Royal Street, beyond Jackson Square at no. 533, the Historic New Orleans Collection stands proud among the neighboring antique stores and chi-chi art galleries. Entry to the streetfront gallery (Tues–Sat 9.30am–4.30pm, @www.hnoc.org), which holds excellent temporary exhibitions, is free, but to see the bulk of the collection you'll need to take a guided tour (10am, 11am, 2pm & 3pm; $5). These might cover the galleries upstairs, where fascinating exhibits – including old maps, drawings, and early publicity posters – fill a series of themed rooms, or they might venture into the Williams House, behind the museum beyond a courtyard. The Williamses, prominent citizens in the 1930s, filled their home with unusual, exotic objects, and the house is a must for anyone interested in design and decorative arts.

The quirky Historical Pharmacy Museum, in an old apothecary a block toward the river at 514 Chartres St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; $5), offers great insights into the history of medicine. On the ground floor, hand-carved rosewood cabinets are cluttered with gris-gris, a fine range of Creole “tonics” used to cure “all the various forms of female weakness,” dusty jars of leeches for blood-letting (“to remove irritability”), and various unpleasant-looking drills and corkscrews. Upstairs you can see a nineteenth-century sick room, and a surprisingly intriguing collection of vintage spectacles from around the world.

Bourbon Street

Continuing lakeside up Conti Street brings you to world-renowned Bourbon Street. Though you'd never guess it from the hype, there are two faces to this much-mythologized drag. The touristy, booze-drenched stretch spans the seven blocks from Canal to St Ann: a frat-pack cacophony of daiquiri stalls, novelty shops, and dimly lit girlie bars. This enclave is best experienced after dark, when a couple of its bars and clubs – though by no means all – are worth a look, and the sheer mayhem takes on a bacchanalian life of its own. When the attraction of fighting your way through the crowds of weekendend drunks starts to pall, however, it's easy to dip out again into the quieter parallel streets to regain some sort of sanity. If you do manage to make it as far as St Ann, you come to a kind of crossroads, marked by a brace of raucous gay clubs, beyond which Bourbon transforms into an appealing, predominantly gay, residential area.

Above Bourbon Street, tourists are outnumbered by locals walking their dogs, jogging, or chatting on stoops. Half a block north of Bourbon, at 820 St Louis St, the restored 1831 Hermann-Grima House (Mon–Fri tours 10am, 11am, noon, 2pm & 3pm; $6, or $10 with the Gallier House, see p.689) illustrates the lifestyle of middle-class Creoles in antebellum New Orleans; otherwise, though these quiet streets are fringed by some of the Quarter's finest vernacular architecture, "sights" as such are few.

Rampart Street, the run-down strip separating the Quarter from Tremé, is a boundary rarely crossed by tourists. Though it's home to one of the city's finest jazz clubs (Donna's, see p.697), which is just a short walk from the heart of the Quarter, it can feel hairy at night, and only slightly less so during the day. It's not recommended to wander around Louis Armstrong Park in daylight hours, either, though it's a different story during the occasional weekend music festivals, many of which, continuing its long tradition of black music and celebration, are held in Congo Square (see p.699), the small paved area to the left of the entrance arch.

Outside the French Quarter

Tremé, the historic African-American neighborhood where jazz was developed in the bordellos of Storyville – long since gone – is named for Claude Tremé, a free black hatmaker who in the nineteenth century owned a plantation on what is now St Claude Street. In the 1800s this was a prosperous area, its shops, businesses, and homes owned and frequented by New Orleans's significant – and unique – free black population, but by the late-twentieth century, blighted by neglect and crime, Tremé had become a no-go area. Despite this, a rich tradition of jazz funerals, music, and street parades continued, and the turn of the millennium saw signs of gentrification. Though Tremé was largely unscathed by flooding, Katrina nonetheless dealt a severe blow to this financially poor but culturally rich neighborhood, and many of its houses remain in bad shape. It's not recommended to wander around here at night, but as an embodiment of the spirit of the city, it deserves the attention and support of any visitor.

One way to see the best of Tremé is to make a beeline for the fascinating Backstreet Cultural Museum, in an old funeral parlor at 1116 St Claude St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; $5; @ www.backstreetmuseum.org). This labor of love celebrates local street culture, including jazz funerals and the traditions of the Mardi Gras Indians; it also hosts excellent music events, and acts as a social hub during the city's many festivals.

Directly across the road, St Augustine's Church, 1210 Governor Nicholls, is the earliest African-American church in the nation, active since 1842. Of crucial significance to the local black community, St Augustine's welcomes tourists to its occasional jazz masses and fundraising events, and plans are afoot to start offering tours (@ www.staugustinecatholicchurch-neworleans.org). The spruce, light interior is well worth a look, with its stained-glass windows portraying French saints, and its flags printed with affirmations (Unity, Creativity, Self-Determination, Purpose) in English and Swahili. In the garden, the Tomb of the Unknown Slave, a toppled metal cross entwined with balls-and-chains and shackles, honors all African and Native American slaves buried in unmarked graves.

The CBD and Warehouse District

Along with the Mint (see p.688), the gray granite Custom House, in the Central Business District – or CBD – at 423 Canal St, was key in New Orleans's grand antebellum building program. Work started in 1848 on what was to be the largest federal building in the nation; rooting such a monster in the city's soggy soil proved difficult, however, and what with this, and the vagaries of the Civil War, the Custom House was not completed until 1881. Mark Twain had a point when he dismissed the foreboding Classical interior as "inferior to a gasometer," but fans of Greek Revival architecture should head to the second floor, where a huge marble hall, illuminated by a 54-foot skylight, recalls the lofty aspirations and optimism of the city's golden age.

The lakeside edge of the CBD, a tangle of busy gray highways, is dominated by the colossal home of the New Orleans Saints football team, the Superdome. At 52 acres, with 27 stories and a diameter of 680ft, this is one of the largest buildings on the planet, and has been etched upon the world's consciousness after housing more than 25,000 Katrina evacuees in unthinkable conditions for six days in August/September 2005. Though lurid tales of gang rapes, murders, and suicides were later discovered to have been urban myths, the Superdome remains a monument to the horror of the flooding. Standing sentinel over the battered CBD for a year after Katrina, its damaged roof scarred and flapping, it finally re-opened in fall 2006 with a star-studded line-up – including rock bands U2 and Green Day – and a triumphant defeat by the Saints over the Atlanta Falcons. Emotional in the extreme, the high-profile event provided a huge boost of confidence for the city.

Spreading upriver from the foot of Canal Street, New Orleans's Warehouse District has a handful of attractions. Most of the sights are concentrated in the Arts District, the outcrop of galleries concentrated around Julia and Camp streets. The hub of the scene is the Contemporary Arts Center, 900 Camp St (Thurs–Sun 11am–4pm; ground-floor galleries free, changing exhibitions $5; @www.cacno.org), which always has something interesting going on, from the temporary shows on the ground floor to major exhibitions upstairs.

Around the corner, the colossal National World War II Museum, 945 Magazine St (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm; $14), opened on June 6, 2000, the 56th anniversary of the Allied invasion of Europe known as D-Day. Though its collection concentrates on the events of that devastating day, the museum also does a good job covering the home front and the D-Day invasions in the Pacific.

It can be easy to forget that easy-living New Orleans has its roots entrenched in the Deep South; anyone who needs reminding should take a look at the Confederate Museum, 929 Camp St at Lee Circle (Thurs–Sat 10am–4pm; $5). A gloomy Romanesque Revival hulk, designed in 1891 as a place for Confederate veterans to display their mementos, this so-called "Battle Abbey of the South" is a relic from a bygone age. Inside the church-like hall, glass cases are filled with swords, mess-kits, uniforms, and fragile sepia photos – there remains a funereal air about the place, with its bittersweet remembrances of long-lost generals and their forgotten families.

Next door, at 925 Camp St, the modern, purpose-built Ogden Museum of Southern Art (Thurs–Sun 11am–4pm, Thurs also 6–8pm with live music; $10; @www.ogdenmuseum.org) has an impressive collection that runs the gamut from rare eighteenth-century watercolors through self-taught art to photography and modern sculpture. While many of the artists are lesser known, it's a fascinating place, evoking a strong sense of this distinctive region so preoccupied with notions of the land, of family and religion, poverty and the past, violence and loss.

The Garden District and Audubon Park

Pride of uptown New Orleans, the Garden District drapes itself seductively across a thirteen-block area bounded by St Charles Avenue, Magazine Street, Louisiana and Jackson. Two miles upriver from the French Quarter, it was developed as a residential neighborhood in the 1840s by an energetic breed of Anglo-Americans who wished to display their ever-accumulating cotton and trade wealth by building sumptuous mansions in huge gardens. Today, shaded by jungles of subtropical foliage, the glorious houses – some of them spick-and-span showpieces, others in ruins – evoke a nostalgic vision of the Deep South in a profusion of porches, columns, and balconies. It's a ravishing spectacle, if somewhat Gothic; while it's a pleasure simply to wander around, you can pick up more detail about the individual houses on any number of official or self-guided tours.

Further upriver, peaceful Audubon Park is a lovely space shaded by Spanish-moss-swathed trees and looped by cycling and jogging paths. Its top attraction, Audubon Zoo, a ten-minute walk from the park's St Charles entrance (Wed–Sun 10am–4pm; $12, children $7; zoo and aquarium [see p.683], $25/$14), boasts, among other habitats, a beautifully re-created Louisiana swamp, complete with Cajun houseboats, wallowing alligators (including the milky white, blue-eyed “Mr Bingle”), and knobbly cypress knees poking out of the emerald-green water.

Traditionally, the historic St Charles streetcar has always been the best way to get to and around the Garden District and Uptown, affording front-row views of “the avenue”. At the time of writing, however, the streetcar was still not running post-Katrina; check @www.norta.com for updates. In the meantime, you could always catch the St. Charles bus – #12 – which follows the streetcar's route.

Algiers and Blaine Kern's Mardi Gras World

A free ferry from Canal Street (every 30min 6am–midnight) chugs across the dramatic bend in the Mississippi, bringing you within five minutes or so – depending on the current – to the west bank and the old shipbuilding community of Algiers.

△ Napoleon House

A quiet residential neighborhood of pastel stucco Creole architecture and subtropical terraces, Algiers's main attraction is Blaine Kern's Mardi Gras World, 233 Newton St (daily 9.30am–4.30pm; $17), where year-round you can see artists building and painting the enormous floats used in the Mardi Gras parades. It's a surreal experience wandering these massive warehouses past piles of dusty, grinning has-beens from parades gone by; in keeping with the carnival spirit, there's plenty of opportunity to dress up, fool around, and take photos. A complimentary minibus picks up and drops off at the ferry landing.

Elsewhere in the city

Toward the lake, in the vast area known as Mid-City – much of which was severely damaged in the storm – New Orleans's 1500-acre City Park is crisscrossed with roads, and by no means is as peaceful as Audubon Park. It's a welcome green space nonetheless, streaked with lagoons and shaded by centuries-old live oaks. The chief attraction, the New Orleans Museum of Art (Wed–Sun 10am–4.30pm; $8), includes pre-Columbian pieces, African works, Asian ceramics and paintings, and a fabulous collection of Fabergé jeweled eggs. The five-acre sculpture garden (free) is a must-see, its works – by Louise Bourgeois, Barbara Hepworth, Henry Moore, and others – beautifully dotted among oaks and magnolias.

The Chalmette battlefield, six miles downriver from Canal Street, is where Andrew Jackson's ragtag army defeated the British at the Battle of New Orleans in 1815 (grounds Mon–Thurs 7am–3pm, Fri–Sun 9am–4.30pm, visitor center Fri–Sun 9am–4.30pm; @ www.nps.gov/jela).

Eating

New Orleans is a gourmand's dream. The food, commonly defined as Creole, is a spicy, substantial – and usually very fattening – blend of French, Spanish, African, and Caribbean cuisine, mixed up with a host of other influences including Native American, Italian, and German. Some of the simpler dishes, like red beans and rice, reveal a strong West Indies influence, while others are more French, cooked with long-simmered sauces based on a roux (fat and flour heated together) and herby stocks. Many dishes are served étouffée, literally “smothered” in a tasty Creole sauce (a roux with tomato, onion, and spices), on a bed of rice. Note that what passes for Cajun food in the city is often a modern hybrid, tasty but not authentic; the “blackened” dishes, for example, slathered in butter and spices, made famous by chef Paul Prudhomme. The mainstays of most menus are gumbo – a thick soup of seafood, chicken, and vegetables – and jambalaya, a paella jumbled together from the same ingredients. Other specialties include po-boys, French-bread sandwiches overstuffed with oysters, shrimp, or almost anything else, and muffulettas, the round Italian version, crammed full of aromatic meats and cheese and dripping with garlicky olive dressing. Along with shrimp and soft-shell crabs, you'll get famously good oysters; they're in season from September to April. Crawfish, or mudbugs (which resemble langoustines and are best between March and Oct), are served in everything from omelets to bisques, or simply boiled in a spicy stock. To eat them, tug off the overlarge head, pinch the tail, and suck out the juicy, very delicious flesh.

For an only-in-New-Orleans snack, look out for the absurd, giant, hot-dog-shaped Lucky Dogs carts set up throughout the Quarter. Featured in John Kennedy Toole's farcical novel A Confederacy of Dunces, they've become something of an institution, though in truth the dogs themselves are nothing great.

Gratifyingly, prices are not that high compared to other US cities – even at the swankiest places you can get away with $40 per head for a three-course feast with wine. Lunch, in particular, can be a bargain, especially at the more upmarket establishments.

In the French Quarter

Acme Oyster House 724 Iberville St ☎ 504/522-5973. This noisy, characterful French Quarter hang-out has been the place for raw oysters and cold beers for generations. Tourists, cops, and office workers alike wait patiently in line for those plump, briny bi-valves, inexpensive po-boys, salty fresh crawfish, and gumbo.

Angeli 1141 Decatur St ☎ 504/566-0077. A hit with French Quarter hipsters, night owls, and barflies, this big, dimly lit room is an extension of the groovy Lower Decatur scene outside. The long hours are welcome, and the healthy Mediterranean salads, sandwiches, and pastas make a nice alternative to Creole standards.

Bayona 430 Dauphine St ☎ 504/525-4455. Splendid, romantic, and relaxed restaurant with a lovely courtyard. Local staples are given a global twist – the simple garlic soup, sweetbreads, and lamb dishes are fantastic – and there's a 250-plus wine list. Lunch is a bargain – try the grilled cashew butter, duck, and pepper jelly sandwich for a staggering $9. The pricier dinner menu is well worth it.

Croissant d'Or 617 Ursulines St ☎ 504/524-4663. Tranquil, inexpensive little local place serving delicious French pastries and stuffed croissants, plus quiches, salads, and steaming café au lait, in a pretty tiled building. Breakfast and lunch only.

Fiorella's 45 French Market Place/1136 Decatur St ☎ 504/528-9566. A funky French Quarter classic, this down-home café has long been a local hit for its cheap blue-plate specials, crawfish dishes, and amazing crispy fried chicken.

 Galatoire's 209 Bourbon St ☎ 504/525-2021. Tennessee Williams's favorite restaurant, this grand Creole establishment, with its landmark mirror-lined dining room, is quintessential New Orleans. It's best at lunchtime, on Fri or Sun especially, when you can join the city's old guard (men in seersucker, women in pearls) spending long, convivial hours gorging on turtle soup, oysters en brochette, crabmeat maison, and filet mignon. No reservations, so expect a wait. Jacket and tie required after 5pm and all day Sun.

Mr B's 201 Royal St ☎ 504/523-2078. Buzzy Creole bistro with dark-wood booths, a relaxed, chatty ambiance, and spectacular food. The garlic chicken is the city's finest; the same accolade could go to the signature barbecue shrimp. It can be pricey, but lunch is good value. Walk-ins are welcome.

Napoleon House 500 Chartres St ☎ 504/524-9752. This ravishing old bar (see p.696) – all crumbling walls and shadowy corners – exudes a classic, relaxed New Orleans elegance. The eighteenth-century building was the home of Mayor Girod, who schemed with Jean Lafitte to rescue Napoleon from exile, but since 1914 it has been owned by the same Italian family who continue to run it today. Though their fabulous bistro has yet to re-open post-Katrina, bow-tied waiters continue to serve their nice café menu, including warm muf-fulettes with melted cheese, gumbo, Mediterranean salads and antipasto. Closed Mon eve and Thurs during the day.

Tujague's 823 Decatur St ☎ 504/525-8676. With one of the loveliest dining rooms in the city, seeping old New Orleans style, the beloved “Two Jacks,” both relaxed and elegant, is a must-visit. Little has changed here over the last century, not least the five-course prix fixe menu, which always includes shrimp remoulade and tender beef brisket. Costs can mount, so if money's tight, simply order the tasty chicken Bonne Femme (fried chicken with garlic and parsley) at the beautiful old bar (see p.696).

Outside the French Quarter

Casamento's 4330 Magazine St ☎ 504/895-9761. Spotless and old-fashioned, this uptown oyster bar serves inexpensive ice-fresh oysters, fried crab claws and overstuffed trout “loaves,” or sandwiches, to die for. Closed June–Aug, and Sun and Mon throughout the year. No credit cards.

 Jacques Imo's 8324 Oak St ☎ 504/861-0886. Funky, noisy uptown restaurant with a colorful patio. The cooking, a delicious Creole–Cajun take on soul food, is very good value – from the fried oysters and chicken livers to the buttery blackened redfish. It's a great place to fill up before a gig at the Maple Leaf (see p.700), and well worth a trip any time – ask for a seat in the pick-up truck. Dinner only; closed Sun. Reservations only for groups of five or more; you may have to wait a while at the convivial bar.

Mona's 504 Frenchmen St ☎ 504/949-4115. Popular, no-fuss Middle Eastern restaurant in a handy Faubourg Marigny location. The food – kebabs, flatbread pizzas, meze, split red lentil soup – is fresh, zingy, and inexpensive, with lots of delicious vegetarian options.

Ralph's on the Park 900 City Park Ave ☎ 504/488-1000. The contemporary Creole food at this classy restaurant, directly opposite City Park, is like the dining room itself – minimal, tasteful, and comforting. Try the mussel soup or simple grilled drum with rice. Dinner Tues–Sun, plus Fri lunch and Sun brunch. Reservations recommended.

Rio Mar 800 S Peters St ☎ 504/525-3474. New Orleans seafood meets Spanish cuisine in this terrific Warehouse District restaurant. To start, go for the tuna empanadas or salt cod fritters; proceed with paella or fish-packed zarzuela (stew) and you'll be in heaven. Closed Sun; dinner only Sat.

Coffee bars and picnic food

Café du Monde 800 Decatur St ☎ 504/581-2914. Despite the hype, the crowds, and the sugar-sticky tabletops, this old market coffeehouse, with a large outdoor patio covered by a striped awning, is an undeniably atmospheric place to drink steaming café au lait with chicory, and snack on piping hot beignets – the city's distinctive sweet donuts – for just a couple of dollars. Particularly fun after a night out. Daily 24hr.

Café Rose Nicaud 634 Frenchmen St ☎ 504/949-3300. Friendly, delightfully mixed Faubourg Marigny coffeehouse that's a firm favorite with local academics, artists, and musicians who gather around the marble-topped tables or in the capacious armchairs. Light meals and pastries are served.

CC's 941 Royal St ☎ 504/581-6996. Quarterites linger for hours at the counter or in the leather armchairs, chatting or people-watching through the open French windows. Try their Mochissippi, a creamy iced espresso.

Central Grocery 923 Decatur St ☎ 504/523-1620. Fragrant old Italian deli, famed for its freshly made muffuletta.

Rue de la Course 3121 Magazine St ☎ 504/899-0242. With its pressed-tin walls, café au lait-colored decor, ceiling fans, and reading lamps, the Rue coffeehouse has an Old Europe ambiance, buzzing with a mixed local crowd and a high proportion of students.

Entertainment and nightlife

New Orleans has long been one of the best places in the world to hear live music. From lonesome street musicians, through shambling, joyous brass bands, to international names like Dr John and the Neville Brothers, music remains the heartbeat and lifeline of the Crescent City. The devastation wrought by the post-Katrina flooding hit many musicians – who are among the less wealthy of the population – particularly hard, leaving them homeless and scattering them throughout the country. That said, those who are able to do so return as often as possible, commuting to play regular gigs or to appear at festivals, and while some are gone for ever, still more are determined to come home for good. Though the effects of the storm on the music scene cannot be underestimated, the quality of what does exist – the bulk of it around weekends and festivals – remains high. The city is healing its wounds in the best way it knows how: mourning, remembering, celebrating, and surviving by making and dancing to music.

While the French Quarter has its share of atmospheric clubs and bars, there are plenty of good places elsewhere – and visitors making a beeline for Bourbon Street, hoping to find it crammed with cool jazz clubs, will be disappointed. That said, even this tawdriest of streets has a couple of good spots to hear live jazz. A better bet, however, is Frenchmen Street in the Faubourg Marigny, lined with characterful bars and music venues that get packed on the weekends. In general, it can be hard to separate the drinking scene from the live music scene – most bars feature music at least one night of the week. Those we've listed below under "Bars" tend not to have live music, but many of the places we've reviewed as live music venues (see p.697 & p.700) are great bars in their own right, too.

To decide where to go, check the listings papers – especially the free weekly Gambit (☎ www.bestofneworleans.com) and the music monthly Offbeat (☎ www.offbeat.com), which can be picked up at restaurants and bars all around town – collect fliers in French Quarter record stores such as Louisiana Music Factory, 210 Decatur St, and keep an ear tuned to the fabulous local radio station WWOZ (90.7 FM), which features regular gig information and ticket competitions.

Music in New Orleans often doesn't get going until late. However, many venues put on two sets a night, often by different performers, so with a little creative club-hopping you could easily see three outstanding bands in one evening.

Bars

As befits its image as a hard-drinking, hard-partying town, New Orleans has dozens of truly great bars. However, though 24-hour drinking licenses are common, don't expect every bar to be open all night; even on Bourbon Street, many places close whenever they empty, which can be surprisingly early during slow periods. It is also legal to drink alcohol in the streets – for some visitors it's practically de rigueur – though not from a glass or bottle. Simply ask for a plastic “to go” cup in any bar and carry it with you. You'll be expected to finish your drink before entering another bar, however. The legal drinking age is 21; you should carry ID, though few bartenders bother asking for it.

Lafitte's Blacksmith Shop 941 Bourbon St ☎504/523-0066. Lively, tumbledown bar frequented by artists and writers (how they see by the candlelight remains a mystery), tourists, and relief workers. A front for pirate Lafitte's plottings, the building's practically unchanged since the 1700s – despite its exterior sprucing – and retains its beamed ceilings and blackened brick fireplace.

Molly's at the Market 1107 Decatur St ☎504/525-5169. Once famed for being a haunt of politicians and media stars, Molly's Irish bar is a French Quarter institution – remaining open through Katrina, the flooding, and subsequent evacuation – and pulls a happy crowd of locals, rowdy tourists, off-duty waitstaff, and grungy street punks.

Napoleon House 500 Chartres St ☎504/524-9752. If you visit just one bar in New Orleans, let this ravishing old place be it. Flickering with gaslight, its time-stained walls crammed with ancient oil paintings and classical music booming on the CD player, it's a local institution, and on a warm night its tropical courtyard is one of the best places on earth to be.

Port of Call 838 Esplanade Ave ☎504/523-0120. Strung with tatty nets and lifebuoys, this unpretentious drinking hole is haunted by a noisy mix of Quarterites, Faubourg denizens, and in-the-know tourists who put the world to rights around the large wooden bar or at the small tables. Great burgers, too, served with mushrooms or cheese and a buttery baked potato.

Tujague's 823 Decatur St ☎504/525-8676. Old guard New Orleans restaurant (see p.694) with an equally atmospheric stand-up bar. It's particularly lively on Sun, when regulars gather to catch up and gossip.

Elsewhere in the city

Columns Hotel 3811 St Charles Ave ☎504/899-9308. This gorgeous Garden District hotel bar seeps faded Southern grandeur; on warm evenings, make for the columned veranda, which overlooks the old streetcar line. For more on the hotel, see p.682.

Ernie K-Doe's Mother-in-Law Lounge 1500 N Claiborne Ave ☎504/947-1078, @www.kdoe.com. Since the untimely death of local R&B legend Ernie in 2001, his formidable wife Antoinette has kept their Tremé lounge open as something of a shrine to the self-styled “Emperor of the Universe” – complete with an “Ernie in Heaven” mannequin holding court. Hop in a cab and join the combination of arty hipsters and unimpressed locals that make this place unique.

R-Bar 1431 Royal St ☎504/948-7499. Faubourg Marigny bar with funky thrift-store decor and a pool table played by some of the coolest sharks in town. It's popular with a youngish set, which includes visitors staying at the guesthouse upstairs (see p.682).

Snake and Jake's 7601 Oak St ☎504/861-8202. Dim and derelict, strewn with ancient Christmas tree lights, this quintessential New Orleans dive bar is beloved of uptown students. Go late.

Jazz

It is generally agreed that jazz was born in New Orleans, shaped in the early twentieth century by the twin talents of Louis Armstrong and Joe “King” Oliver from a diverse heritage of African and Caribbean slave music, Civil War brass bands, plantation spirituals, black church music, and work songs.

In 1897, in an attempt to control the prostitution that had been rampant in the city since its earliest days, a law was passed that restricted the brothels to a fixed area bounded by Iberville and Lower Basin streets. The area, which soon became known as Storyville, after the alderman who pronounced the ordinance, filled with newly arrived ex-plantation workers, seamen and gamblers, and, from the “mood-setting” tunes played in the brothels to bawdy saloon gigs, there was plenty of opportunity for musicians – in particular the solo piano players known as “professors” – to develop personal styles. Children too young to enter the bars set up makeshift “spasm bands” in the streets. Their legacy lives on in the streetwise ragamuffins on every corner, tap dancing, shoe-shining, and playing trumpet.

Jazz was originally looked down upon by the white establishment as the “filthy” music of poor blacks, and, after Storyville was officially closed in 1917 – which coincided with a clampdown on live music played throughout the city – there was a mass exodus of musicians to Chicago and New York. Many more jazz artists left the city or gave up playing altogether during the Depression (King Oliver died an impoverished janitor); but in the 1950s, the city fathers literally changed their tune and began to promote jazz as a tourist attraction. Nowadays jazz remains an evolving, organic art form, and you’re spoiled for choice for places to see it, whether in parades, at the city’s many festivals, in dive bars or sophisticated lounges. Local, world-class musicians, including the multitalented Marsalis family and trumpeters Terence Blanchard, Irvin Mayfield, and Nicholas Payton, all perform regularly. Of the pianists, don’t miss Henry Butler, whose superb, superfast modern jazz is matched by his mean R&B and blues repertoire. One of the city’s best-loved performers, trumpeter Kermit Ruffins can always be counted on for a good show with his Barbecue Swingers. A fine jazz stylist and consummate performer, he cut his teeth in local brass bands, the ragtag groups who blast out New Orleans’s homegrown party music, born from the city’s long tradition of street parades. Other favorites include the ReBirth, whose earsplitting spin on anything from trad jazz to hip-hop goes down as well in the student bars as in the parades; the more traditional Tremé and Olympia bands; the younger Lil Rascals and New Birth, and the Soul Rebels and the Stooges, who mix a cacophony of horns with hard funk, hip-hop, carnival music, and reggae.

☎ 504/895-8117. A spirited mix of locals and hard-drinking students fill this convivial neighborhood uptown bar – complete with pool tables and good bar food – where the weekly Soul Rebels gig (Thurs) has become a post-Katrina institution. No cover.

Donna’s 800 N Rampart St ☎ 504/596-6914,
☞ www.donnasbarandgrill.com. Hosting smooth jazz, brass bands, and Mardi Gras Indian shows, this barbecue joint on the fringe of the Quarter feels like a locals’ place but attracts a big out-of-town crowd. In summer 2006, the legendary Monday night Bob French gig moved to Café Brasil on Frenchmen St. Cover varies; one-drink minimum.

Palm Court Jazz Café 1204 Decatur St
☎ 504/525-0200, ☞ www.palmcourtcafe.com. Top-notch trad jazz played in convivial supper club surroundings. Tour groups tend to dominate the dining tables, but as the food is nothing special you’d do best to do as the locals do and sit at the bar. Wed–Sat, shows 8pm, cover $5.
Preservation Hall 726 St Peter St ☎ 504/522-2841, ☞ www.preservationhall.com. This tumbledown old structure – with no bar, a/c, or toilets, and just a few hard benches for seating – has long been lauded as the best place in New Orleans to hear trad jazz. The music is lively and joyous, building steam as the night goes on – tourists adore this spot, and lines form well before the doors open. Thurs–Sat sets every 45min 8–11.45pm; Sun show 3pm. $8 cover.

Ray's Room 508 Frenchmen St ☎504/523-5394.

Local jazz, brass, funk, and soul in this upscale Faubourg Marigny club co-owned by Kermit Ruffins. Cover around $10.

Mardi Gras and other New Orleans festivals

New Orleans's carnival season – which starts on Twelfth Night, January 6, and runs for the six weeks or so until Ash Wednesday – is unlike any other in the world. Though the name is used to define the entire season, Mardi Gras itself, French for “Fat Tuesday,” is simply the culmination of a whirl of parades, parties, street revels, and masked balls, all inextricably tied up with the city's labyrinthine social, racial, and political structures. Mardi Gras was introduced to New Orleans in the 1740s, when French colonists brought over the European custom, established since medieval times, of marking the imminence of Lent with masking and feasting. Their slaves, meanwhile, continued to celebrate African and Caribbean festival traditions, based on musical rituals, masking, and elaborate costumes, and the three eventually fused. From early days carnival was known for cavorting, outrageous costumes, drinking, and general bacchanalia – and little has changed. However, although it has become the busiest tourist season, when the city is invaded by millions, Mardi Gras has always been, above all, a party that New Orleanians throw for themselves. Visitors are wooed, welcomed, and showed the time of their lives, but without them carnival would reel on regardless, masking, drinking and dancing its bizarre way into Lent. Post-Katrina, Mardi Gras has become more important than ever, offering not only celebration but also catharsis. As a symbol of what makes this unique city tick, it can't be bettered, and as a lifeline for a beleaguered population, it is essential.

Official carnival took its current form in 1857, with the appearance of a stately moonlit procession calling itself the “Krewe of Comus, Merrie Monarch of Mirth.” Initiated by a group of Anglo-Americans, the concept of the “krewe,” or secret carnival clubs, was taken up enthusiastically by the New Orleans aristocracy, many of them white supremacists who, after the Civil War, used their satirical float designs and the shroud of secrecy to mock and undermine Reconstruction. Nowadays about sixty official krewe equip colorful floats, leading huge processions on different – often mythical – themes. Each is reigned over by a King and Queen (generally an older, politically powerful man and a debutante), who go on to preside over the krewe's closed, masked balls. There are women-only krewe; “super krewe,” with members drawn from the city's new wealth (barred from making inroads into the gentlemen's-club network of the old-guard krewe), and important black groups. The best known and most important of these is Zulu, established in 1909 when a black man mocked Rex, King of Carnival, by dancing behind his float with a tin can on his head; today the Zulu parade on Mardi Gras morning is one of the most popular of the season. There are also many alternative, or unofficial krewe, including the anarchic Krewe du Vieux (from Vieux Carré, another term for the French Quarter), whose irreverent parade and “ball” (a polite term for a wild party, open to all) is a blast. The gay community plays a major part in Mardi Gras, particularly in the French Quarter, where the streets teem with strutting drag divas. And then there's the parade of the Mystic Krewe of Barkus, made up of dogs, hundreds of whom, during what is surely the campest parade of the season, can be seen trotting proudly through the French Quarter all spiffed up on some spurious theme. Tourists are less likely to witness the Mardi Gras Indians, African-American groups who, in their local neighborhoods, organize themselves into “tribes” and, dressed in fabulous beaded and feathered costumes, gather on Mardi Gras morning to compete in chanting and dancing. Made up predominantly of poor black men, many of whom lost their homes and their communities in the flooding, this is the Mardi Gras group most threatened by the devastation of Katrina. One important New Orleans Mardi Gras ritual is the flinging of “throws” from the parade floats. Teasing masked krewe members scatter beads, beakers, and doubloons (toy coins) into the crowds, who beg, plead, and scream for them. Even outside the parades, tourists embark upon a frantic bead-bartering frenzy, which has given rise to the famed “Show Your Tits!” phenomenon – young co-eds pulling up their shirts in exchange for strings of beads and roars of boozy approval from the goggling mobs. Anyone keen to see the show should head for Bourbon Street.

The two weeks leading up to Mardi Gras are filled with processions, parties, and balls, but excitement reaches fever pitch on Lundi Gras, the day before Mardi Gras. Some of the city's best musicians play at Zulu's free party in Woldenberg Park, which climaxes at 5pm with the arrival of the king and queen by boat. Following this, you can head to the Plaza d'España, where, in a formal ceremony unchanged for over a century, the mayor hands the city to Rex, King of Carnival. The party continues with more live music and fireworks, after which people head off to watch the big Orpheus parade, or start a frenzied evening of clubbing. Most clubs are still hopping well into Mardi Gras morning.

The fun starts early on Mardi Gras day, with walking clubs striding through uptown accompanied by raucous jazz on their ritualized bar crawls. Zulu, in theory, sets off at 8.30am (but can be as much as two hours late), followed by Rex. Across town, the surreal St Ann walking parade gathers in the Bywater, arriving in the Faubourg at around 11am, while the gay costume competition known as the Bourbon Street awards gets going at noon. In the afternoon, hipsters head back to the Faubourg, where Frenchmen Street is ablaze with bizarrely costumed carousers. The fun continues throughout the Quarter and the Faubourg until midnight, when a siren wail heralds the arrival of a cavalcade of mounted police that sweeps through Bourbon Street and declares through megaphones that Mardi Gras is officially over. Like all good Catholic cities, New Orleans takes carnival very seriously. Midnight marks the onset of Lent, and repentance can begin.

Other New Orleans festivals

St Joseph's Day, March 19. Sicilian saint's day, at the mid-point of Lent. Massive altars of food, groaning with bread, fig cakes, and stuffed artichokes, are erected in churches all around town, including St Louis Cathedral, and there's also a parade. The Sunday closest to St Joseph's (“Super Sunday”) is the only time outside Mardi Gras that the Mardi Gras Indians (see above) take to the streets.

French Quarter Festival, early April. Free three-day music festival that rivals Jazz Fest for the quality and variety of music on offer. Stages and food stalls, free evening gigs, parades, and talent contests. ☎ www.fqfi.org.

Jazz and Heritage Festival (Jazz Fest), two weekends (Fri–Sun) end April/early May at the Fairgrounds Race Track, Mid-City. Enormous festival, with stages hosting jazz, R&B, gospel, African, Caribbean, Cajun, blues, reggae, funk, Mardi Gras Indian, rock, and brass band music, with evening performances in clubs all over town. Also crafts stalls and phenomenal food stands (don't miss the crawfish bread). ☎ www.nojazzfest.com.

Satchmo Fest, end July/early Aug. Free weekend festival, staged to celebrate Louis Armstrong's birthday. Talks and art exhibits focus on Satchmo himself, while the best local jazz and brass bands play live. ☎ www.fqfi.org.

Southern Decadence, five days around Labor Day weekend. Huge gay extravaganza, bringing nearly 100,000 party animals to the gay bars and clubs of the Quarter and the Faubourg, with an unruly costume parade of thousands on the Sunday afternoon. ☎ www.southerndecadence.com.

Halloween, Oct 31. Thanks to its long-held obsession with all things morbid, and the local passion for partying and dressing up, New Orleans is a fabulous place to spend Halloween, with haunted houses, costume competitions, ghost tours, and parades all over town.

Spotted Cat 623 Frenchmen St ☎ 504/943-3887. With a regular menu of roots music, this cozy little Faubourg Marigny bar has become the place to see the New Orleans Jazz Vipers, who dish up a high-octane twist on jubilant swing and trad.

Vaughan's 4229 Dauphine St, in the Bywater ☎ 504/947-5562. Tiny neighborhood bar that fills to bursting point on Thurs Kermit Ruffins's night. The band is crammed up against the audience – a mixed bunch of locals, students, and the players' friends and family; between sets, help yourself to free beans and rice. Take a cab. Cover varies; $10 on Thurs.

Other live music

There's far more to New Orleans than jazz alone. Though the “New Orleans sound,” an exuberant, carnival-tinged hybrid of blues, parade music, and R&B, had its heyday in the early 1960s, many of its stars are still gigging, from Al “Carnival Time” Johnson to Irma “It’s Raining” Thomas. Their shows, crowded with devoted locals, make for a quintessentially New Orleans night out.

Since the 1960s the city has also been famed for its homegrown funk – top acts include Galactic and Papa Grows Funk – while New Orleans's version of hip-hop, known as bounce, has taken the nation by storm. While Cajun music is not indigenous to the city, many locals – and tourists – do love to fais-do-do (the Cajun two-step) and there are a couple of fantastic places to dance to zydeco, its raunchier black relation. Blues fans should look out for guitarists Snooks Eaglin and Walter “Wolfman” Washington, and, for powerful gospel-blues, the formidable Marva Wright. For something unique, scour the listings for Mardi Gras Indians (see p.698) such as the Wild Magnolias, whose rare gigs – you’re most likely to catch them around Mardi Gras or Jazz Fest – are the funkier, most extraordinary performances you’re ever likely to see.

Café Brasil 2100 Chartres St ☎ 504/949-0851. At the heart of the Frenchmen Street corridor, this bare-bones, arty room hosts eclectic live music (Latin, jazz, klezmer, reggae, world), poetry readings, and the like, and, on Mon, hosts the inimitable Bob French for an exuberant house party-style jam session.

Circle Bar 1032 St Charles Ave ☎ 504/588-2616. Painfully hip bar in a crumbling old house at Lee Circle. With an inspired, eclectic booking policy, from alt rock to bluegrass, it's renowned for resurrecting R&B legends from ignominy, and always pulls a gorgeous, hard-partying crowd.

House of Blues/The Parish 225 Decatur St ☎ 504/310-4999, @ www.hob.com. This sleek French Quarter venue, part of the national chain, is worth checking out for big-name rock, hip-hop and reggae; smaller, local acts play at the intimate Parish upstairs.

Maple Leaf 8316 Oak St ☎ 504/866-9359. Legendary uptown bar with pressed-tin walls, a large dance floor, and a patio. It's a New Orleans favorite for really great blues, R&B, funk, and brass bands; ReBirth's Tues-night gigs are a must. There's chess and pool, too.

Mid-City Lanes Rock 'n' Bowl 4133 S Carrollton Ave ☎ 504/482-3133, @ www.rockandbowl.com. Its location, in a Mid-City mall, may be unprepossessing, but this eccentric and fun bowling alley-cum-music venue is a New Orleans institution. Though it's especially heaving on Thurs – zydeco night – they also book great local R&B, blues, and swing, and the crowd is always lively. Take a taxi. One Eyed Jack's 615 Toulouse St ☎ 504/569-8361, @ www.oneeyedjacks.net. Loosely conceived as a decadent cabaret lounge in old Bourbon Street style, this hip bar/club presents burlesque, trad jazz, karaoke, rap battles, and indie rock to an in-the-know but friendly crowd.

Tipitina's 501 Napoleon Ave ☎ 504/895-8477, @ www.tipitinas.com. Venerable uptown venue, named after a Professor Longhair song, with a consistently good funk, R&B, brass, and reggae line-up. The Sun Cajun fais-do-do is fun, too.

Cajun country

Cajun country stretches across southern Louisiana from Houma in the east, via Lafayette, the hub of the region, into Texas. It's a region best enjoyed away from the larger towns, by visiting the many old-style hamlets that, despite modernization, can still be found cut off from civilization in soupy bayous, coastal marshes, and inland swamps.

Cajuns are descended from the French colonists of Acadia, part of Nova Scotia, which was taken by the British in 1713. The Catholic Acadians, who had quietly fished, hunted, and farmed for more than a century, refused to renounce their faith and swear allegiance to the English king, and in 1755 the British expelled them all, separating families and burning towns. About 2500 ended up in French Louisiana, where they were given land to set up small farming communities, enabling them to rebuild the culture they had left behind. Hunting, farming, and trapping, they lived in relative isolation until the 1940s, when major roads were built, immigrants from other states poured in to work in the oil business, and Cajun music, popularized by local musicians such as accordionist Iry Lejeune, came to national attention. Since then, the history of the Cajuns has continued to be one of struggle. The whole region was hit hard by the oil slump; the erosion of coastal wetlands threatens the existence of entire communities; the silting up of the Atchafalaya Basin is having adverse effects on fishing and shrimping; and many coastal towns are in the firing line of devastating hurricanes, like Katrina, that hurtle up from the Gulf of Mexico. After Roosevelt's administration decreed that all American children should speak English in schools, French was practically wiped out in Cajun country, and the local patois of the older inhabitants, with its strong African influences, was kept alive primarily by music. Since the 1980s, CODOFIL (the Council for Development of French in Louisiana) has been devoted to preserving the region's indigenous language and culture, and today you will find many signs, brochures, and shopfronts written in French.

Cajun fais-do-dos – dances, with live bands, held mostly on weekends – are good places to encounter the culture at close hand. Everyone is welcome to trip a quick two-step, and visitors will find plenty of opportunity to dance, whether at a restaurant, a club, or one of the region's many festivals. Although Baton Rouge, the capital of Louisiana, is not actually in Cajun country, heading out this way from New Orleans, via the plantations on the banks of the Mississippi, makes a good approach.

Northwest from New Orleans: plantation country

The fastest roads out from New Orleans toward the west are the major I-10 and US-61; you can also drive along the River Road, which hugs both banks of the Mississippi all the way to Baton Rouge, seventy miles upriver. It's not a particularly eventful drive, winding through flat, fertile farmland, but a series of bridges and ferries allows you to crisscross the water, stopping off and touring several restored antebellum plantation homes along the way. Before the Civil War, these spectacular homes were the focal points of the vast estates from where wealthy planters — or rather, their slaves — loaded cotton, sugar, or indigo onto steamboats berthed virtually at their front doors. Generally, the superb Laura plantation excepted (see below), tours, often led by belles in ballgowns, skimp on details about the estates as a whole, and in particular their often vast slave populations, presenting them instead as showcase museums filled with priceless antiques. The cumulative effect of these evocations of a long-lost “gracious” era can be stultifying, so it’s best to pick just one or two. Many of the houses also offer luxurious B&B rooms (rates often include tours), which as well as being rather wonderful places to sleep, allow you to absorb more of the atmosphere of the plantations than is possible on the walkthroughs.

To get to the River Road from New Orleans, take I-10 west to exit 220, turn onto I-310 and follow it to Hwy-48, on the east bank (above the river on the map). This shortly becomes Hwy-44, or the River Road. For the west bank (below the river), cross Destrehan Bridge onto Hwy-18 rather than branching onto Hwy-48. It’s important to note that the levee runs the length of the banks, blocking the river from view, and though you’d never guess it from the tourist brochures, it’s the hulking chemical plants that dominate the River Road landscape. There are rural stretches where wide sugarcane fields are interrupted only by moss-covered shacks — the prettiest views are to be found around the small town of Convent, on the east bank — but you’ll more often find yourself driving through straggling communities of boarded-up lounges and laundromats, scarred by scrap piles and smokestacks.

From Edgard, 25 miles along on Hwy-18, you can cross the river to the San Francisco House (daily 10am–4pm; $10), two miles upriver of Reserve on Hwy-44. Built in a style dubbed “Steamboat Gothic” by novelist Frances Parkinson Keyes, its rails, awnings, and pillars were designed to re-create the ambiance of a Mississippi showboat. The elaborate facade is matched by a gorgeous interior — a riot of pastoral trompe l’oeils, floral motifs, and Italian cherubs. Crossing the river at Lutcher, the settlement a few miles beyond San Francisco, brings you to Vacherie and the fascinating Laura plantation (six tours daily 10am–4pm; $10; 📞 www.lauraplantation.com). Rather than dwelling lovingly on priceless antiques, the standard tours here, which draw upon a wealth of historical documents — from slave accounts and photographs to private diaries — sketch a vivid picture of day-to-day plantation life in multicultural Louisiana.

Nine miles upriver from Laura, Oak Alley is the quintessential image of the antebellum plantation home. It’s a splendid Greek Revival mansion dating from 1839 — and the magnificent oaks that form a canopy over the driveway are 150 years older (daily 10am–4pm; $10). The restaurant (8.30–10am & 11am–3pm) serves Cajun food, and you can stay in pretty B&B cottages in the grounds (📞 225/265-2151, 📞 www.oakalleyplantation.com; 📍).

Eighteen miles south of Baton Rouge on the west bank, Nottoway (1859) is the largest surviving plantation home in the South, a huge white Italianate edifice with 64 rooms (daily 9am–5pm; $10). The house also has 13 fancy B&B rooms (📞 225/545-2730, 📞 www.nottoway.com; 📍) and a restaurant (daily 11am–2pm & 6–8.30pm).

Also on the west bank, in the small town of Donaldsonville at 406 Charles St, the River Road African American Museum (Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $4) offers an intriguing and alternative view of the region’s history, highlighting its cuisine, music, the Underground Railroad, Reconstruction, and the culture of the free blacks.

Baton Rouge

When French explorers first came upon the site of BATON ROUGE in 1699, they found poles smeared in animal blood to designate the separate hunting grounds of the Houmas and Bayougoulas Indians. The area on these shallow bluffs therefore appeared on French maps as Baton Rouge – “red stick.” Now capital of Louisiana and the fifth biggest port in the US, Baton Rouge is an easygoing city for its size. Even the presence of the state’s largest universities, LSU and Southern, has done surprisingly little to raise the town anywhere much above “sleepy” status.

Surrounded by fifty acres of showpiece gardens, the magnificent Art Deco Louisiana State Capitol (daily 9am–4pm; free) serves as a monument to Huey Long, the “Kingfish,” the larger-than-life Democratic governor who ordered its construction in 1931 and was assassinated in its corridors just four years later. First elected governor in 1928 after a vehemently anti-big-business campaign, Long swiftly concentrated power into his own hands and, variously labeled a demagogue, a communist, and a fascist, he set himself apart from other Southern populists of the time by refusing to exploit the race issue. Just as his appeal – with slogans like “Every Man a King” – began to reach national proportions, with a bid for the presidency in the offing, he was shot by a local doctor whose exact motives remain unknown.

The interior of the building, with its huge murals and sculptures, still bears the scars of its checkered political history; spot the stray bullets in the marble pillars of the ground-floor corridor and a pencil embedded in the ceiling of the legislative chamber by an exploding bomb. Long decreed that no building in Baton Rouge could be taller than the 450-foot capitol (it’s the tallest in the nation), and its 27th-floor observation deck is the best vantage point to look out over the surrounding Art Deco complexes and lush greenery, the traffic on the sluggish Mississippi, and the tangle of puffing chemical refineries on the horizon.

Mark Twain referred to Baton Rouge’s Old State Capitol (in use from 1850 to 1932), 100 North Blvd, as “that monstrosity on the Mississippi.” A grey, crenellated structure on a mound overlooking the river, it’s worth a look for the Center for Political and Governmental History (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm, also Mon 10am–4pm in April & May; $4), which illuminates Louisiana’s scandal-ridden political history.

The LSU Rural Life Museum, 4560 Essen Rd, just off I-10 southeast of downtown (daily 8.30am–5pm; $7), re-creates pre-industrial Louisiana life through its carefully restored buildings – among them a plantation house, slave cottages, and a grist mill – spread over 25 acres in a sultry garden setting.

Practicalities

Greyhound buses, as well as connecting buses from New Orleans’s Amtrak station, come in at 1253 Florida St, fifteen minutes from downtown. For Yellow Cabs, call ☎ 225/923-3260. The visitor center is inside the capitol (daily 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 225/383-1825 or 1-800/527-6843, 🌐 www.visitbatonrouge.com). There are plenty of chain motels on and off I-10; La Quinta Inn, 2333 S Acadian Thruway (☎ 225/924-9600, 🌐 www.lq.com; 📍), is convenient and comfortable and offers complimentary breakfast.

For eating, Avoyelles, three blocks from the river at 333 3rd St (☎ 225/381-9385), serves blue-plate lunch specials and great shrimp po-boys, and has a sophisticated bar for nighttime drinking. Most of the city’s nightlife centers on the LSU campus, along College Drive, Chimes Street, and Highland Road. Thirsty Tiger, a hole in the wall at 140 Main St downtown, is the oldest bar in the city (☎ 225/387-9799).

Lafayette and around

LAFAYETTE, 135 miles northwest of New Orleans on I-10, is geographically central in Cajun country, and the key city for its oil business. Originally named Vermilionville, after the orangey bayou nearby, it was renamed in 1844 in honor of the Marquis de Lafayette, the aristocratic French hero of the American Revolution. Today it's a quiet place, a city with a small-town feel and no real center. It

Cajun festivals

Cajun festivals, held almost weekly it seems, provide an enjoyable way to experience the food and music of the region. For some of the larger events, it's a good idea to reserve a room in advance; the rest of the world is catching on to the fun. The following is merely a sampler; for full details, check with any tourist office in the area.

Mardi Gras, Feb/March. Cajun Carnival differs from its city cousin; although there are private balls, parties, and formal parades, it is a far more countrified and very family-oriented affair. There's plenty of music and street dancing, of course, and country villages like Eunice, Church Point, and Mamou are the scene of the mischievous Courir de Mardi Gras (see p.709). @www.swmardigras.com and www.lsu.edu/acadgate/mardmain.htm.

World Championship Crawfish Étouffée Cookoff, last Sunday in March (the third Sun, if Easter falls on the last Sun), Eunice. The place to taste the very best mudbugs, accompanied by great local music and a fierce spirit of competition among the scores of teams. @337/457-2565, @eunice-la.com/cookoffpast.html.

Festival International de Louisiane, last full week in April. Huge, free five-day festival in Lafayette, with big-name participants from all over the French-speaking world, celebrating a wealth of indigenous music, culture and food. @337/232-8086, @www.festivalinternational.com.

Breaux Bridge Crawfish Festival, first full weekend of May (Fri–Sun), Breaux Bridge. Crawfish-eating contests, étouffée cookoffs, and mudbug races, along with music, crafts stalls, and dancing. $5 Fri & Sun, $10 Sat, $15 for three days; @337/332-6655, @www.bbcrawfest.com.

Southwest Louisiana Zydeco Music Festival, Fri evening & Sat before Labor Day, Plaisance, near Opelousas. The culmination of a month of concerts and dances, with top zydeco performers playing “black Creole” music. Also regional cuisine, African-American arts and crafts, talks, dancing, and workshops. $10, $2 for kids; @337/942-2392, @www.zydeco.org.

Mamou Cajun Music Festival, the first weekend in Sept (Fri & Sat), Mamou, 10 miles north of Eunice. Traditional live music, food, crafts, beer-drinking and boudin-eating contests, greasy pole-climbing and a Cajun Queen beauty pageant for the over-65s. @www.mamoucajunmusicfestival.com.

Festivals Acadiens, mid-Sept/Oct, Lafayette. Huge three-day festival, with Cajun, zydeco, and traditional French bands, as well as indigenous crafts and food. @337/981-5652, @www.festivalacadiens.com.

Louisiana Prairie Cajun Capital Folklife Festival fall, Eunice. The superb Prairie Acadian Cultural Center is at the center of this free two-day festival with bands, arts and crafts, storytellers, folklife programs, and a wide variety of food stalls. @337/457-2565.

Louisiana Yambilee, last week in Oct. Opelousas goes all out to celebrate the sweet potato, with food stalls, sweet potato auctions, music, and the marvelously named Lil' Miss Yum Yum contest. @1-800/210-5298, @www.members.tripod.com/yambilee/yambilee.htm.

does, however, offer some lively Cajun history and splendid restaurants – and makes a central base for exploring the swamps, bayous, and dance halls of the surrounding region.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Greyhound arrives in Lafayette at 315 Lee St; Amtrak pulls in a few blocks north at 133 E Grant St at Jefferson. The airport, south of town on Hwy-90, meets daily flights from Houston, Dallas, Memphis, and Atlanta. Pick up essential maps and brochures from the Lafayette Parish visitor center at 1400 NW Evangeline Thruway, exit 103A off I-10 (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; ☎ 337/232-3737 or 1-800/346-1958, 🌐 www.lafayettettravel.com). To get the best from the area you'll need a car, as the dance halls, restaurants, and hotels are spread out, and the local bus system is of little use to visitors. If you need a taxi, try Yellow Checker Cab (☎ 318/237-5701).

Accommodation

Chain hotels line Evangeline Thruway just south of I-10, and US-90 and Hwy-182 toward New Iberia, but if you are after something with more character you'll need to head further out. The friendly hamlet of Breaux Bridge (see p.708), just eight miles east, makes another appealing base.

Aaah! T'Frere's 1905 Verot School Rd, 6 miles south of I-10, Lafayette ☎ 337/984-9347 or 1-800/984-9347, 🌐 www.tfreres.com. Hospitable B&B in an antique-filled, cypress-built home, offering complimentary "T'juleps" and delicious Cajun/Creole breakfasts. ④

Bayou Cabins 100 W Mills Ave/Hwy-94, Breaux Bridge ☎ 337/332-6158, 🌐 www.bayoucabins.com. Nine rustic cabins – most of which date from the nineteenth century – backing onto Bayou Teche. Run by the owners of Bayou Boudin and Cracklin' (see p.707); rates include a free taster of their fantastic Cajun food and breakfast served in the café next door. ③

Bayou Teche B&B 205 Washington St, Breaux Bridge ☎ 337/332-1608, 🌐 www.breauxbridgelive.com/bayoubb. Appealing guesthouse right on the bayou, in an 1812 Creole cottage expanded in the 1880s to become a boarding house. Rates can include a full breakfast at Café des Amis (see p.707) or simply coffee and pastries; the welcoming host leaves you to treat the place like home.

Blue Moon Guest House and Saloon 215 E Convent St, Lafayette ☎ 337/234-2422, 🌐 www.blumoonhostel.com. Cheerful hostel/guesthouse, in a nineteenth-century home downtown, with two dorms ($18–21) and four private rooms. Regular Cajun, zydeco, and bluegrass gigs and a full bar in the back porch saloon; check 🌐 www.blumoonpresents.com for schedule. Rates increase for festivals. ①–②

Plantation Motor Inn 2810 NE Evangeline Thruway, Lafayette ☎ 337/232-7285. Comfortable motel north of town near the Interstate, with plain rooms and free continental breakfast. ③

The Town

In the center, such as it is, of Lafayette stands the Romanesque Cathedral of St John the Evangelist, 914 St John St (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 1–4pm; $3), and the old cemetery, where the crumbling raised graves include that of Jean Mouton, the town's Cajun founder. Each of the magnificent branches of the 500-year-old Cathedral Oak opposite, spreading over 200ft, weighs seventy tons. Three blocks away, the small Lafayette Museum, 1122 Lafayette St (Tues–Sat 9am–4.30pm, Sun 1–4pm; $3), was the "Sunday home" – a townhouse used after Mass, before the family returned to their plantation – of Jean's son Alexandre, Louisiana's first Democratic governor. It's now filled with family memorabilia, Civil War relics, and Cajun Mardi Gras costumes.

South of the town center, the campus of the University of Louisiana at Lafayette boasts a swamp – complete with alligators, turtles, water birds, and tattered Spanish moss. Its art museum showcases local artists, Southern folk art, and some major French works, along with traveling exhibitions (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $10).

Cajun music venues

It's easy to "pass a good time" in Cajun country, especially if you're here on the weekend, when the fais-do-dos are traditionally held. Though things are quieter during the week, you'll still be able to enjoy local music at many of the restaurants. Cajun music is a jangling, infectious melange of nasal vocals backed by jumping accordion, violin, and triangle, fueled by traces of country, swing, jazz, and blues. Zydeco is similar, but sexier, more blues-based, and usually played by black Creole musicians. Though songs are in French, the patois heard in both bears only a passing resemblance to the language spoken in France. Music is never performed without space for dancing; everyone from the smallest child to most aged grandparent can join in. As well as the popular restaurants Café des Amis, Mulate's, Prejean's, and Randol's (reviewed on opposite), plus the Blue Moon Guest House (see p.705), venues include record stores, river landings, and the streets themselves. Sadly, old-time zydeco dance halls – the less touristy places – are dying out in the face of competition from newer clubs and flashy casinos, but a few still exist. Check the music listings in the free weekly Times of Acadiana (Wed), log onto the zydeco listings page @ ceezees.com/CurrentEvents.htm, or simply look for signs saying "French dance here tonight."

Angelle's Whiskey River Landing 1365 Henderson Levee Rd, Henderson, Breau Bridge ☎337/228-8567. Live Cajun and zydeco at Angelle's – the starting point for a swamp tour – on Sun afternoons. It's around 25 minutes from Lafayette.

El Sid O's 1523 Martin Luther King Drive, Lafayette ☎337/235-0647. Dancing Fri–Sun, with great zydeco and blues bands plus Creole food.

Fred's Lounge 420 6th St, Mamou, 10 miles north of Eunice ☎337/468-5411. Welcoming home of the locally famed radio show "Live from Fred's Lounge" (KVPI 1050 AM), with music, dancing, and lots of drinking. You'll want to try Tante Sue's "Hot Damn," which is warm cinnamon schnapps. Sat only, 7am–2pm.

Grant Street Dancehall 113 W Grant St, Lafayette ☎337/237-8513, @ www.grantstreetdancehall.com. Eclectic music venue hosting hip-hop, swamp pop, New Orleans jazz, and blues, as well as Cajun and zydeco.

La Poussière 1215 Grand Point Rd, Breau Bridge ☎337/332-1721. The old folks' favorite, this venerable dance hall hosts fais-do-dos on Sat night and Sun afternoon.

McGee's Landing 1337 Henderson Levee Rd, Breau Bridge ☎337/228-2384, @ www.mcgeeslanding.com. Another swamp tour outfit-cum-café-cum-music venue hosting occasional live music.

Pat's Atchafalaya Club 1008 Henderson Levee Rd, Henderson, Breau Bridge ☎337/228-7512, @ www.patsfishermanswharf.com. Large dance hall on the levee, linked to Pat's seafood restaurant, and hosting Cajun, zydeco, and swamp pop bands Fri–Sun.

Rendezvous des Cajuns Liberty Center for Performing Arts, S 2nd St and Park Ave, Eunice ☎337/457-7389, @ www.eunice-la.com/libertyschedule.html. Family-oriented and hugely popular live Cajun/zydeco radio and TV show, mostly in French. Sat 6–7.30pm. Cover $5.

Savoy Music Center 4413 Hwy-190 E, 3 miles east of Eunice ☎337/457-9563, @ savoymusiccenter.com. The free Sat morning (9am–noon) jam sessions at this Cajun record store/accordion workshop are a local institution. Store closed Sun & Mon.

Slim's Y-Ki-Ki 8393 Hwy-182 N, Opelousas ☎337/942-6242. Famed old venue for zydeco music and dancing. Weekends only.

Lafayette has two excellent reconstructions of early Cajun communities. Vermilionville, 300 Fisher Rd across from the airport, is the most accessible, and impressive, of the two, extending its scope to explore the culture of the early Creoles as well as the Cajuns (Tues–Sun 10am–4pm; $8). Set in 23 attractive acres on the Bayou Vermilion, it's a living history site, filled with authentic old buildings occupied by craftspeople using traditional skills. A large replica of an old cotton gin serves as a theater, hosting storytellers, plays, and noisy fais-do-dos. The restaurant serves good Cajun lunches.

Next to Vermilionville, at 501 Fisher Rd, the Acadian Cultural Center, in the Jean Lafitte National Historical Park and Preserve (daily 8am–5pm; free), offers a thorough background on the displaced Cajuns, with a wealth of artifacts and a forty-minute film shown on the hour. Further southwest, ten miles or so from the Lafayette visitor center, Lafayette's other folk-life museum, the smaller Acadian Village, 200 Greenleaf Drive (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; $7), depicts early nineteenth-century Cajun life along the bayous. Original homes and reproductions of other structures – including a blacksmith's shop and a chapel – line a sluggish bayou set in gardens and woodlands, and are filled with traditional furnishings and crafts.

Eating in and around Lafayette

They say that a Cajun cooks every part of a pig but its squeal, and it's true that Cajun dishes are packed with a jumble of flavors, textures, and pretty much anything that's good and fresh. Though it bears resemblances to the Creole cuisine you'll find in New Orleans – lots of seafood, rice, rich tomatoey sauces and gum-bos – this is rustic food, often spicy, and yes, pork features highly on many menus. It's difficult to eat badly around here, and prices are generally low. At lunchtime, takeout boudin (spicy sausage made with rice) is a treat, as are rich pork cracklin' and salty hogshead cheese. Often, eating in Cajun country is inseparable from dancing and music; evening – or afternoon, or morning – entertainment revolves around restaurants that double as dance halls.

Bayou Boudin and Cracklin' 100 Mills Ave, Hwy-94, Breaux Bridge, exit 109 from I-10 ☎ 337/332-6158. Rustic Cajun cottage on Bayou Teche, serving fantastic boudin – including a seafood variety – hogshead cheese-smothered chicken, crawfish balls, and beignets, all prepared on the spot.

Blue Dog Café 1211 W Pinhook Rd, Lafayette ☎ 337/237-0005. Dine on classy Cajun/Creole food – the crawfish étouffée is great – surrounded by the distinctive blue dog paintings of Cajun artist George Rodrigue. Smooth live jazz in the bar Thurs–Sat nights. Closed Sun and Sat lunch.

 Café des Amis 140 E Bridge St, Breaux Bridge ☎ 337/332-5273, @www.cafedesamis.com. This friendly, atmospheric, rustic/arty restaurant is a buzzing community hub. The Cajun/Creole food, with lots of crawfish concoctions, is beyond delicious. Live zydeco breakfasts Sat 8.30–11.30am, and jazz and Cajun on Wed evening. Closed Mon & Tues.

Dwyer's 323 Jefferson St, Lafayette ☎ 337/235-9364. Downtown favorite for huge, inexpensive breakfasts and plate lunches, homecooked burgers, and local specialties. Mon–Fri 5am–4pm, Sat & Sun 5am–2pm.

Mulate's 325 Mills Ave, Breaux Bridge ☎ 337/332-4648 and 1-800/422-2586. This is the original Cajun restaurant/dance hall and, though touristy, is frequented by locals, too. Seafood, catfish, and gumbo go for less than $15; dancing nightly at 7pm, and at noon on weekends.

Poche's 3015A Hwy-31, north of Breaux Bridge ☎ 337/332-2108. One of the best places to pick up boudin, cracklin', andouille, and old-fashioned pies, as well as tasty home-cooked plate lunches. Restaurant Mon–Sat 10.30am–8pm, Sun 10.30am–5pm.

Prejean's 3480 I-49 N, Lafayette ☎ 337/896-3247. Barn-like restaurant offering very tasty Cajun/Creole food – try the baked oyster platter – nightly live music (from 7pm), and dancing. Daily 7am–10pm or 11pm.

Randol's 2320 Kaliste Saloom Rd, Lafayette ☎ 337/981-7080. Locally famed restaurant with a large dance floor. Live Cajun and zydeco nightly and steamed seafood dinners (boiled softshell crabs are a specialty). Dinner only.

Robin's 1409 Henderson Hwy, Henderson, Breaux Bridge ☎337/228-7594. Innovative Cajun food, with lots of use of Tabasco hot sauce – even in the ice cream – and a killer crawfish étouffé.

Touring Cajun country

You could easily drive through BREAUX BRIDGE, eight miles east of Lafayette, and miss it, which would be a big shame. Quite apart from its sweet, old-fashioned main street, its unusual crawfish-emblazoned steel bridge over the Bayou Teche – announcing in French that this is the “crawfish capital of the world” – and its handful of B&Bs, restaurants, and music venues, it also makes an appealing base for some of the region’s best swamp tours (see p.710), and for exploring the Lake Martin nature reserve, three miles south on Hwy-31. There’s an end-of-the-earth feel to the reserve, where land turns to water, and it’s a great experience to drive – or walk the trails – past vistas of tangled cypress flickering with Spanish moss and encroaching greenery creeping onto the narrow road. From February to June tens of thousands of birds nest at the lake, and there’s a huge abundance of birdlife year-round, including egrets, herons, and spoonbills, not to mention busy nutria splashing through the undergrowth and scores of alligators dozing in the sun. If you fancy paddling a canoe through this lonely wilderness, contact Pack and Paddle in Lafayette (☎337/232-5854, @www.packpaddle.com).

North of Lafayette, the Cajun Prairie has been described by folklorist Alan Lomax as the “Cajun cultural heartland.” A patchwork of rice and soybean fields scattered with crawfish ponds, the region has a few tiny towns of interest. The 1831 Chretien Point Plantation, in SUNSET, ten miles north of Lafayette on Hwy-93 just off I-10, is one of Louisiana’s oldest Greek Revival buildings (Mon–Fri 1–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $10). Its main staircase was the model for the one belonging to Tara in Gone with the Wind, and Mrs Chretien, left to run the plantation after her husband’s death in 1832, was very much in the Scarlett O’Hara mode. She scandalized the community by drinking, smoking, gambling, and sitting with the men after dinner, and once shot an intruder, whose ghost is said to roam the corridors. Bullet holes in the front door date from 1863, when Mrs Chretien's son showed a Masonic sign to an attacking Union general, who thereupon directed fire over the roof. Today the plantation has five luxurious B&B rooms (☎ 337/662-7050 or 1-800/880-7050, 🌐 www.chretienpoint.com; 📍). For eating, stop by Barry's Kitchen, 660 Napoleon Ave (☎ 337/662-7197), a takeout famed for its homemade crawfish rolls.

Sleepy old OPELOUSAS, twenty miles north of Lafayette on I-49, was capital of Louisiana for a short period during the Civil War, and now has five claims to fame. It was the boyhood home of Jim Bowie, Texas Revolutionary hero and inventor of the Bowie knife; the first place in the world to produce an offset newspaper (in 1915); the birthplace of the great zydeco musician Clifton Chenier and celebrity Cajun chef Paul Prudhomme; and today, even more excitingly, it's the yam capital of the universe (see p.704 for a festival celebrating this achievement). You can find out more about the town at the quirky Opelousas Museum, 315 N Main St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; free), which displays such relics of local history as the barber's stool on which outlaw Clyde Barrow got his last shave before being shot dead by the FBI in northern Louisiana. Head for the 1950s Palace Café, on the central square at 135 W Landry Ave (☎ 337/942-2142), for shrimp, crawfish, and gumbo in immaculate diner surroundings. Chain hotels line I-49; the Holiday Inn (☎ 337/948-3300, 🌐 www.ichotelsgroup.com; 📍), just north of town, is a good bet.

To learn a little about the Cajun prairie, head for friendly EUNICE, about twenty miles west of Opelousas. The exemplary Prairie Acadian Cultural Center at the Jean Lafitte National Historical Park, 250 W Park Ave (Tues–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 8am–6pm; free), holds far-reaching displays on local life, ranging across family, language, food, and farming, with regular live Cajun music, storytelling, and cookery demonstrations. There's more music at the Cajun Music Hall of Fame, 240 S C.C. Duson Drive (Tues–Sat: summer 9am–5pm, winter 8.30am–4.30pm; free), which features accordions, steel guitars, fiddles, and triangles among its memorabilia. If time is limited, choose these two over the Eunice Museum, next to the Hall of Fame at 220 S C.C. Duson Drive (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm; free) – though this too has its charms; it's an old train depot crammed with a ragbag of toys, musical instruments, farming implements, and Native American artifacts. However long you're in town, don't miss out on Eunice's splendid food. Allison's Hickory Pit, 501 W Laurel Ave (Fri–Sun 11am–2pm; ☎ 318/457-9218) and Mathilda's Country Kitchen, 611 St Mary St (closed Mon; ☎ 337/546-0329) specialize in tasty, home-smoked barbecue and plate lunches, while at Ruby's, downtown at 221 W Walnut St (closed Sun; ☎ 318/550-7665), you can eat home-cooked soul food in a vintage setting. Eunice is also central to the region's music scene. The regular Savoy Music Center and Liberty Center bashes (see p.706) are supplemented by the riotous annual Courir du Mardi Gras, when masked horsemen gallop through the countryside before parading through downtown, where the drinking and dancing continues all day. The Music Machine, 235 W Walnut St (☎ 337/457-4846), is a good source of local music information, with a fine collection of Cajun, zydeco, and swamp pop. Potier's Prairie Cajun Inn, at 110 W Park Ave (☎ 337/457-0440, 🌐 potiers.net; 📍), next door to the Liberty Center, is a 1920s hospital restored as a friendly place to stay.

From here it's twenty miles north to VILLE PLATTE, and the fabulous Floyd's Music Store, 434 E Main St (Mon–Sat 8.30am–4.30pm; 🌐 www.floydsrecords.com), owned by Floyd Soileau, the world's chief distributor of South Louisiana music, and stocking everything from zydeco reissues to contemporary swamp pop. If the dashing Mr Soileau isn't around, you could well find him listening to the rocking jukebox a couple of doors down at the Pig Stand, 318 E Main St (☎ 337/363-2883), where giant plates of fried chicken, smothered sausage, and ribs come heaped with rice, gravy, black-eyed peas, and potato salad.

Swamp tours are available from many landings in the Atchafalaya Basin; you'll pass numerous signs pinned to the old cypress trees along the roadside. The basin is an eerie place: the bulk of its cypress was harvested last century, and now you'll see the twisted silhouettes of their stumps poke out of the sluggish waters. In some places cars cut right across on the enormous concrete I-10 above, and old houseboats lie abandoned, or get used only for weekend retreats. The best tours take you further out, to the backwoods; wherever you go you'll see scores of fishing boats and plenty of wildlife, including sunbathing alligators. The tours below are conducted by Cajuns who see the basin as more than just a tourist attraction and provide fascinating personal commentaries.

The Atchafalaya Experience 338 N Sterling St, Lafayette ☎337/261-5150, 🌐www.theatchafalayaexperience.com. The son in this father-son team is a geologist; both guides are lifelong explorers of the swamp, and tours are ecologically sensitive. Call for schedule; 3hr; reservations required; $45.

Bryan Champagne Lake Martin Landing, Rookery Rd, Breaux Bridge ☎337/845-5567, 🌐www.champagneswamptours.com. Champagne navigates a small crawfish skiff through the bird-rich Cypress Island Swamp – lots of opportunity for alligator-spotting. Tours daily; call for schedules; 2hr; $20.

McGee's Swamp Tours McGee's Landing, 1337 Henderson Levee Rd, Breaux Bridge ☎337/228-2384, 🌐www.mcgeeslanding.com. Twenty-five minutes from Lafayette, along I-10 to exit 115, then highways 347 and 352, this quiet landing offers leisurely tours from Henderson Swamp, a top fishing spot, as well as live music (see p.706). Daily 10am, 1pm & 3pm; no tours in Jan; 90min; reservations recommended; $18.

South of Lafayette

South of Lafayette, the towns are less immediately welcoming than those in the Prairie, but the surroundings are undeniably atmospheric: this is bayou country, a marshy expanse of rivers and lakes dominated by the mighty Atchafalaya swamp, where the soupy green waters creep right up to the edges of the highway. Unsurprisingly, the economy is based on fishing and shrimping, with hunting in the forests and sugar fields, but it's also a semi-industrial landscape, with a web of oil pipelines running beneath the waterways, and refineries and corrugated-iron shacks sharing space with neat white Catholic churches.

Settled in 1765, old ST MARTINVILLE on the Bayou Teche, off US-90 and 18 miles south of Lafayette, was a major port of entry for exiled Acadians. Hard to believe now, but in the nineteenth century this country town grew to become known as "le petit Paris," filled with French Royalists fleeing the Revolution and re-creating a glittering city life of soirees and balls. It was later decimated by yellow fever, fire, and hurricane, and is now a peaceful hamlet, kept going by a trickle of tourists. You'll see a lot of references to "Evangeline;" to find out why, head for Evangeline Oak Park, on Evangeline Boulevard where it meets the bayou. Here stands the Evangeline Oak, where real-life Acadian Emmeline Labiche, the inspiration for Longfellow's epic poem Evangeline, disembarked after her hard journey from Nova Scotia, only to hear that her lover, Gabriel, was engaged to another. The park, which has a boardwalk along the bayou, also features the St Martinville Cultural Heritage Center (daily 10am–4pm; $2), where the Museum of the Acadian Memorial pays tribute to the thousands of refugees displaced from Canada to Louisiana between 1764 and 1788, and the African-American Museum focuses on the arrival of enslaved Africans into southwest Louisiana during the 1700s, the emergence of free people of color, and the violence of Reconstruction. Nearby, the Acadian Memorial itself has a 30-foot mural marking the Acadians' arrival in Louisiana and a Wall of Names honoring those uprooted during the "Grand Dérangement."

Other sights, such as they are, can be found on or around the town square. The nineteenth-century St Martin de Tours Catholic church, at 133 Main St (daily except Fri morning), contains a gold and silver sanctuary light and intricate carved font said to have been gifts from Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette; next door, the off-beat Petit Paris Museum exhibits local Mardi Gras costumes (daily 9.30am–4.30pm; $1). Behind the church, the bronze Evangeline Monument was donated by the producers of the 1929 movie The Romance of Evangeline, and is modeled on Dolores del Rio, its star. On the bayou just north of town on Hwy-31, the Longfellow-Evangeline State Historic Site (daily 9am–5pm; $2) features a couple of simple Acadian dwellings and, in contrast, an 1815 Creole Plantation House, made with the bousillage mixture (mud, Spanish moss, and animal hair) characteristic of early Louisiana buildings. If St Martinville's sleepy charm wins you over, and you want to stay, try the Old Castillo, 220 Evangeline Blvd next to the Evangeline Oak (☎ 318/394-4010 or 1-800/621-3017, 🌐 www.oldcastillo.com; 🍷), a B&B with huge rooms. Its restaurant serves tasty French Cajun food.

Northern Louisiana

Northern Louisiana is at the heart of the region known as the Ark-La-Tex, where the cottonfields and soft vocal drawl of the Deep South Bible Belt merges with the ranches, oil, and country music of Texas, and the forested hills of Arkansas. Settled by the Scottish and Irish after the Louisiana Purchase, the area is strongly Baptist, with less of a penchant for fun than south Louisiana, though it does share its profusion of festivals.

Angola Prison

Isolated at the end of the long and lonely Hwy-60, hemmed in by the Tunica foothills and the Mississippi River some sixty miles northwest of Baton Rouge, Angola is the most famous maximum-security prison in the United States, its very name a byword for brutality and desperation. Famous inmates have included blues singer Leadbelly, who, as Huddy Ledbetter, served here in the 1930s; today it holds about 5000 prisoners, 77 percent of whom are black. Most of the men are lifers, and around 100 of them are on Death Row. Outside the main gate, the Angola Museum (Tues–Fri 8am–4.30pm, Sat 9am–5pm; free) offers a fascinating insight into this vexed place. For $3 you can have your photo taken in a replica cell; you are not, however, encouraged to fool with Old Sparky, the electric chair used to execute 87 men and one woman between 1941 and 1991. Fading photos and old newspapers reveal appalling prison conditions; the prodding sticks and belts used to beat convicts bring it closer to home. You can also see an array of prisoner-made weapons – a knife carved from a toothbrush, a blade made from a beef rib – used in the many attempted breakouts and uprisings.

Since 1970, Angola has staged a prisoner rodeo every Sunday in October, a harrowing gladiatorial spectacle which draws thousands (there is also a two-day rodeo in April; both $10; reservations required; ☎ 225/655-2030, 🌐 angolarodeo.com). These are extraordinary affairs, the crowds baying while lifers are flung, gored, and trampled in their struggle for dignity, glory, and a simple change of scene.

Natchitoches

Tiny NATCHITOCHES (pronounced “Nakitish”), in the sleepy cottonfields of the Cane River, is the oldest European settlement in Louisiana, having begun life as a French trading post in 1714. A Catholic oasis in a Protestant desert, it was swiftly fortified when its Spanish and Native American customers started to combine aggression with commerce.

With its lovingly restored Creole architecture, Natchitoches’s Front Street, on the river, bears a passing resemblance to New Orleans’s French Quarter, with its lacy iron balconies, spiral staircases, and cobbled courtyards complemented by friendly, old-style stores. Fleurs-de-lis on the St Denis Walk of Honor commemorate celebrities with local connections, such as John Wayne, Clementine Hunter (see below), and the cast of the movie Steel Magnolias, which was set and filmed here in 1988. It’s worth a trip to nearby CLOUTIERVILLE (pronounced “Clooohyville”), where the quirky Bayou Folk Museum (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $5), housed in novelist Kate Chopin’s old home, is filled with all manner of oddities of local interest. There’s plenty relating to Chopin herself, whose nineteenth-century works, in particular her novel The Awakening, about a married woman’s desire for independence, shocked the nation.

Practicalities

Natchitoches lies 140 miles northeast of Lafayette, on Hwy-6 off I-49. Greyhound comes in on the southeast side of town, on Hwy-1; note that the town has no public transportation or taxis. This is B&B territory: one of the most luxurious is the Judge Porter House, 321 Second St (☎ 318/352-9206, 🌐 www.judgeporterhouse.com; 📍).

The visitor center, 781 Front St (Mon–Fri 8am–6pm, Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 1-800/259-1714, 🌐 www.historicnatchitoches.com), provides self-guided walking tours of the historic downtown. The best place to eat is Lasyone’s (☎ 318/352-3353), around the corner at 622 Second St, which specializes in delicious meat pies, cream pies, red beans and sausage, and fresh, crumbly cornbread.

Cane River National Heritage Area

Just south of Natchitoches, the rural Cane River roads are dotted with ramshackle houses and small farms. As you drive past farmers sitting on porches and women hanging out the wash, you’ll come across many plantation homes, some overgrown and in sad disrepair, others beautifully restored.

The Cane River National Heritage Area, a collection of restored plantation homes, churches, and forts, stretches for 35 miles south from Natchitoches. Head first for the fascinating Melrose Plantation, on Hwy-119 (daily noon–4pm; $7), which was granted in 1794 to Marie Therese Coincoin, a freed slave, by her owner, Thomas Metoyer – the father of ten of her fourteen children. Coincoin assembled the original grounds and additional land grants into an 800-acre plantation; she was later able to buy freedom for two of her children and one of her grandchildren. Around 1900, enterprising Melrose owner “Miss Cammie” Henry – a collector and patron of local writing – turned the crumbling Melrose into an arts community, visited by painters and writers such as William Faulkner and John Steinbeck. In the 1940s, a black Melrose cook, Clementine Hunter, began to use materials discarded by visiting artists to paint vivid images of life on and around the plantation. She carried on painting until her death at the age of 101, and her works have since become valuable pieces of folk art. Many of them are on show in the 1800 African House, which resembles a Congo mud hut and was used as the slave jail, and in the Big House, a typical plantation home, made from brick and bousillage.

△ The Alamo

Texas

Still cherishing the memory that it was from 1836 to 1845 an independent nation in its own right, TEXAS stands apart from the rest of the United States. While its sheer size – eight hundred miles from east to west and nearly a thousand from top to bottom – gives it a great geographical diversity, it's firmly bound together by a shared history, culture, and ideology. Independence is key to the Texas mentality, from the overriding distrust of government – any government – to the absence of unionized labor. As the old anti-litter campaign put it, “Don’t mess with Texas.”

Each of the major tourist destinations has its own distinct character. Hispanic San Antonio, for example, with its Mexican population and historic importance, has a laid-back feel absent from Houston or Dallas, while trendy Austin revels in a lively music scene and intellectualism found nowhere else in the state.

Regional differences are vast. The swampy, forested east is more like Louisiana than the pretty Hill Country or the agricultural plains of the northern Panhandle, and the tropical Gulf Coast has little in common with the mountainous deserts of the west. Changes in climate are equally dramatic: snow is common in the Panhandle, whereas the humidity of Houston, in particular, is only made bearable by nonstop high-power air-conditioning.

One thing shared by the whole of Texas is the constant boasting: everything has to be bigger and better than anywhere else. Such chauvinism is tempered both by the state's melting pot of cultures and by a very healthy dose of self-parody.

Some history

Early inhabitants of Texas included the Caddo in the east and nomadic Coahuiltecan further south. The Comanche, who arrived from the Rockies in the 1600s, soon found themselves at war when the Spanish ventured in looking for gold. In the 1700s, threatened by French hopes of westward expansion from Louisiana, the Spanish began to build missions and forts, although these had minimal impact on the indigenous population's nomadic way of life. When Mexico won its independence from Spain in 1821, it took Texas with it as part of the deal. At first, the Mexicans were keen to open up their land, and offered generous incentives to settlers. Stephen Austin established Anglo-American colonies in the Brazos and Colorado River valleys. However, the Mexican leader, Santa Anna, soon became alarmed by Anglo aspirations to autonomy, and his increasing restrictions led to the eight-month Texas Revolution of 1835–36. The romance of the Revolution draws legions of tourists to San Antonio, site of the legendary Battle of the Alamo, which, though a military disaster, pre-saged independence.

The short-lived Republic of Texas, which included territory now in Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado, Kansas, and Wyoming, served to define the state's identity, and in 1845 Texas joined the Union on the understanding that it could secede whenever it so wished. This is still written into its constitution, as is the proviso that it can, at any time, divide itself into five separate states. Not surprisingly, Texans display an unmatched measure of state pride: Texas schoolchildren are as familiar with the heroes of the Alamo as the heroes of the Revolutionary War, and you'll see the ubiquitous state symbol – the Lone Star – emblazoned on everything from advertising to architecture.

The influence, especially in the north and east, of settlers from the Southern states and their attendant slave-centered cotton economy resulted in Texas joining the Confederacy. No major Civil War battles were fought on Texas soil, however. During Reconstruction, settlers from both the North and the South began to pour in, and the phrase "Gone to Texas" was familiarly applied to anyone fleeing the law, bad debts, or unhappy love affairs. This was also the period of the great cattle drives, when the longhorns roaming free in the south and west of Texas were rounded up and taken to the railroads in Kansas. The Texan – and national – fascination with the romantic myth of the cowboy has its roots in this era, and still prevails; today his regalia – Stetson, boots, and bandana – is virtually a state costume, especially in Fort Worth and the west.

Along with ranching and agriculture, oil has been crucial. After the first big gusher in 1901, at Spindletop on the Gulf Coast, the focus of the Texas economy shifted almost overnight from agriculture toward rapid industrialization. Boom towns flew up as wildcatters chased the wells, and millions of dollars were made as ranchers, who had previously thought their land only fit for cattle, sold out at vast profit. Texas today produces one-third of all the oil in the United States, and the sight of nodding pump jacks is one of the state's most potent images.

Getting around Texas

Texas distances are best negotiated by car, and in Dallas and Houston driving is all but essential. Mass transit has proved impractical in a state with long commuting distances and low gasoline prices. Cycling only makes sense within cities like Austin and San Antonio. Greyhound routes are concentrated between the major cities of the east and the central region, though buses also serve the Gulf Coast, the Rio Grande Valley, West Texas, and, to a lesser extent, the Panhandle. Two Amtrak trains pass through Texas: The Texas Eagle travels between Chicago and San Antonio, stopping in Dallas and Austin; while the Sunset Limited stops in Houston, Alpine, and El Paso on its way between Orlando and Los Angeles. An Amtrak Thruway bus links San Antonio with Laredo. Flying saves time and can be very cheap; look out for price wars between airlines such as Southwest and smaller local carriers.

TEXAS
Houston

Southern Texas and the Gulf Coast

The coastline of south Texas curves from Port Arthur on the Louisiana border (a shipping and petrochemical town and the birthplace of Janis Joplin), down past Houston to the Rio Grande, the border with Mexico. While Houston, with its cosmopolitan population and thriving arts scene, dominates the region, geographically and culturally the area has two distinct faces. To the east are the seaside resorts of the prairie, rolling away from the hills and forests of East Texas. Much of the coast is feeling the strain of rapid property development, but there are still unspoiled stretches along the Padre Island National Seashore. In the south, a Hispanic influence spreads north from the fertile Rio Grande Valley. The charmless border towns here are only of interest as points of entry into Mexico for cheap shopping and entertainment. Uniting south Texas is the hot, swampy climate; Houston, especially, is unbearable in the summer, one reason for the mass exodus to the coast.

Houston

In some ways it comes as no surprise that the biggest corporate scandal in American history – the 2001 bankruptcy of the energy company Enron – occurred in HOUSTON. This is a city whose very existence has always depended on wild speculation and boom-and-bust excess. Founded on a muddy mire in 1837 by two real estate-booster brothers from New York – their dream was to establish it as the capital of the new Republic of Texas – Houston was soon superseded by the more promising site of Austin even while somehow establishing itself as a commercial center. Oil, discovered in 1901, became the foundation, along with cotton and real estate, of vast private fortunes, and over the next century wildly wealthy philanthropists poured their cash into swanky galleries and showpiece skyscrapers. That colossal self-confidence helped the city weather devastating oil crises in the 1980s – and will no doubt go a long way to restoring confidence in the wake of the Enron debacle.

The fourth-largest city in the United States, Houston is an ungainly beast of a place, choked with highways and high on humidity. Despite this, its sheer energy, its relentless Texas pride, and above all, its refusal to take itself totally seriously, lends it no small appeal. And in August 2005, its speedy response to the chaos in New Orleans in the wake of Hurricane Katrina dispelled some of the shadow cast by the Enron shame. Sheltering thousands of evacuees in the Astrodome stadium, and providing long-term housing for many of those displaced, the city literally provided a port in a storm. For visitors, its well-endowed museums, highly regarded performing arts scene, and rich nightlife – spiced up with the addition of so many New Orleans musicians – mean there is always something to do.

Downtown Houston lies at the intersection of I-10 (San Antonio–New Orleans) and I-45 (Dallas–Galveston), with most of what you'll want to see encircled by Loop 610. George Bush Intercontinental Airport (☎281/230-3100), 23 miles north, is the main hub for Continental Airlines, while the smaller, domestic William P. Hobby Airport (☎713/640-3000), seven miles southeast of downtown, just west of I-45, is a major hub for Southwest. You'll need to rent a car to see the best of Houston; all the major companies are represented at the airports. The Airport Express shuttle (starting at $23 from Intercontinental, $18 from Hobby; ☎ 713/523-8888, 🌐 www.airportexpresshouston.com) drops off at hotels downtown and in the commercial area near the Galleria mall, west of downtown. Texas Super Shuttle (☎ 713/781-6600) runs longer hours and is slightly cheaper, but takes longer. Taxis downtown cost $40 to $45 from Intercontinental, less from Hobby.

Amtrak arrives at 902 Washington Ave, on the western fringes of downtown. Try to time your arrival here, or at the modern Greyhound terminal, 2121 Main St, during the day, as the surroundings can feel threatening. Book a taxi (try Yellow Cabs; ☎ 713/236-1111) to collect you.

For brochures and essential maps, make for the high-tech tourist office on the first floor of City Hall, 901 Bagby St (Mon–Sat 9am–4pm, Sun 11am–4pm; ☎ 713/437-5556, 🌐 www.visithoustontexas.com).

City transportation

While Houston's public transit system is woefully inadequate for a city of its size, visitors might get use out of its downtown METRORail tram (☎ 713/635-4000, 🌐 www.ridemetro.org), which runs about eight miles – mostly along Main St – from northern downtown via the Museum District down to the Texas Medical Center. Taxis can prove expensive, and the humid climate and huge distances make walking unappealing. If you can, rent a car. The Houston Transportation and Emergency Management Center hotline (☎ 713/802-5074) gives updates on lane closures due to road construction.

Accommodation

Inexpensive hotels are concentrated near the Astrodome, south of downtown, and outside the Loop along I-45 or I-10. Upmarket, business-oriented chains abound downtown and near the Galleria; these often offer lower rates on weekends. Bed-and-breakfasts offer a welcome alternative in a city as potentially alienating as Houston.

🌐 www.druryhotels.com. Good value, clean and comfortable rooms in the swanky uptown area. Rates include full breakfast, evening cocktails, and snacks. ⑤

Houston International Hostel 5302 Crawford St ☎ 713/523-1009, 🌐 www.houstonhostel.com. Clean hostel in a pleasant neighborhood near Hermann Park and Montrose; dorm beds from $15. There are more long-term guests here than tourists.

 Lovett Inn 501 Lovett Blvd ☎ 713/522-5224 or 1-800/779-5224, 🌐 www.lovettinn.com. On a leafy avenue on the edge of the Montrose district, this historic house offers large, comfortable, non-cutesy rooms, first-class service, an abundant continental breakfast, and reasonable

Magnolia Hotel 1100 Texas Ave ☎ 713/221-0011 or 1-888/915-1110, 🌐 www.magnoliahotelhouston.com. This atmospherically restored 1920s downtown building offers luxury and comfort, with a cozy lounge area, billiards room, and rooftop pool. ③
Sara's Bed and Breakfast 941 Heights Blvd ☎ 713/868-1130 or 1-800/593-1130, 🌐 www.saras.com. Less than four miles northwest of downtown and north of Montrose, this pretty Queen Anne house has a fine view of downtown Houston, and serves continental breakfasts on the porch. ④

The City

It's unwise to try and see too much of Houston in one go. If you have just a short time, concentrate on the superb galleries of the Museum District and Hermann Park, which are linked to downtown – some five miles northeast – by light rail. The city's human face is most evident in the Montrose area, which lies west of downtown and overlaps with the Museum District.

Uptown, also called the Galleria district after its upscale mall, is a good three miles west. Just outside the Loop, between West Alabama and Westheimer roads, the Galleria's three hundred or so smart shops and restaurants spread north along Post Oak Boulevard; there is little to do around here except shop and eat.

Downtown Houston

Houston's skyline remains a dramatic monument to ambition, glitz, and sheer chutzpah. The observation deck at the Chase Tower, 600 Travis St, the highest building in Texas, offers views of the endless plateau over which the city sprawls. Nearby, the area now covered by the reflecting pool in front of City Hall was granted to the city by a rancher on the condition that no one could ever be arrested there for public intoxication, so it attracts a somewhat varied crowd.

Nestling below the skyscrapers, Sam Houston Park on Bagby Street (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm) is an appealing green space dotted with restored historic structures from all walks of nineteenth-century life (house tours leave from 1100 Bagby St; $6). The park's Museum of Texas History (same hours; free) is worth a look, with its 1911 Model T Ford, fully restored nineteenth-century store, and quirky traveling exhibitions.

The majority of people escape the Houston heat by staying underground, in the nearly seven miles of air-conditioned tunnels accessible from most downtown hotels and the visitor center. However, despite their shops and restaurants, they're a confusing and visually unappealing way to get around.

The Museum District: The Menil galleries and Montrose

Five miles southwest of downtown, the quiet oak-lined streets of the Museum district are enjoyable to explore on foot. There are two main concentrations of exhibition spaces, with one entire complex dominated by the collections of oil millionaires John and Dominique de Menil. At 1515 Sul Ross St, a magnificent purpose-built gallery, designed by Renzo Piano, houses the private Menil Collection (Wed–Sun 11am–7pm; free; ☎ www.menil.org). Displayed in spacious white-walled rooms and naturally lit, the superb works range from paleolithic carvings dating from 15,000 BC and Sumerian alabaster statues, through Surrealist assemblages right up to contemporary sculptures. Artists with rooms to themselves include Picasso, Max Ernst, and René Magritte. There's also a fine array of African art, including terracottas from Mali and ivories from Benin. A block east, the minimalist Ecumenical Rothko Chapel, 1409 Sul Ross (Sat–Tues 10am–6pm, Wed–Fri 10am–7pm; ☎ www.rothkochapel.org), contains fourteen somber paintings commissioned by the Menils from Mark Rothko shortly before his death. The artist, who worked with architect Philip Johnson in designing the chapel, considered these to be his most important works, and their power in this tranquil space is undeniable. The broken obelisk in the small park outside is dedicated to Dr Martin Luther King Jr. Check the website for talks and events hosted at the chapel, from Sufi dancing to meditations. Diagonally opposite, the Byzantine Fresco Chapel Museum, 4011 Yupon St (Fri–Sun 11am–6pm; free), houses a pair of thirteenth-century Cypriot frescoes – the only intact Byzantine frescoes in the western hemisphere – in a simple contemporary structure.

The Menil galleries are in the Montrose district, which spreads west of downtown. This is one of the hippest neighborhoods in town, and though the forces of gentrification are clearly at work, don't think it's all gone the way of the Gap. Montrose has also long been the base of a very visible gay community, and a high concentration of gay bars and clubs remains, while Westheimer, the district's main drag, still has enough quirky tattoo parlors, vintage clothes stores, experimental art galleries, and junk shops to feel refreshingly bohemian.

The Museum District: Herrmann Park and Rice University

The Museum District extends south to Herrmann Park and the appealing Rice University area, all accessible by the light rail system. At the intersection of Bissonnet and Main streets, the expansive Museum of Fine Arts (Tues & Wed 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm, Fri & Sat 10am–7pm, Sun 12.15–7pm; $7, free Thurs; @www.mfah.org) features an eclectic collection from all eras, filling its impressive buildings with everything from Renaissance art to rare African gold, with a couple of wings entirely devoted to decorative arts. Crane your neck upward from the Matisse and Rodin in the pine-shaded Cullen Sculpture Garden outside for a view of the downtown skyline. A short walk away, at 5401 Caroline St, another eye-catching building, with a massive black funnel emerging from a triangular glass wedge, heralds the hard-hitting Holocaust Museum Houston (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; Sat & Sun noon–5pm; $5 donation suggested). Installations, focusing on the relentless horror of the concentration camps, also feature stories of local survivors.

The Contemporary Art Museum, across Main Street at 5216 Montrose Blvd (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; www.camh.org), is housed in yet another of Houston's showpiece buildings, a low-slung windowless corrugated-steel parallelogram. It hosts strong temporary exhibitions, with artists sometimes on hand to answer questions, and has a particularly hip museum store.

Pleasant Hermann Park, a few blocks south, has a Japanese meditation garden. Well-used during the day, it is best avoided at night. Exhibits at the park's Houston Museum of Natural Science (Mon & Wed–Sun 9am–5pm, Tues 9am–9pm; $9, $25 combination tickets with butterfly center, IMAX and planetarium; www.hmns.org) include the stunning hall of gems and minerals, with its strange and wonderful array of raw gold, spindly filigree silver, and blazing crystals. The museum's Cockrell Butterfly Center (daily 9am–5pm; $8) is a giant three-story greenhouse where you can walk among exotic butterflies as they flutter around a rainforest environment, and there's also an IMAX theater (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 11am–6pm; $8), a planetarium (Mon–Fri 11.30am–5pm, Sat 10.30am–7pm, Sun 11.30am–7pm; $6), and regular big-draw temporary exhibitions.

The Astrodome

Around three miles south of the Museum District, Houston's legendary Astrodome was the world's first domed, climatized stadium when it was built in 1965. This Texas-sized structure, which also lends its name to astroturf, was home to the Astros Major League baseball team (now at the Minute Maid Park; see opposite), and then the NFL's Oilers, but was overshadowed in 2002 by the construction of the 69,500-seat Reliant Stadium nearby. The latter, as well as now being home to the Houston Texans Pro football team, also took over the Astrodome's duties hosting the annual Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo – the largest such event in the world. Lonely and abandoned, the Astrodome hit the news again in September 2005 when it was able to house some thirteen thousand evacuees from New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina, but its future remains uncertain.

East Houston: The Orange Show

The Orange Show (Sat & Sun noon–5pm, summer also Wed–Fri 9am–1pm; $1; www.orangeshow.org), five miles east of Hermann Park at 2402 Munger St, just off I-45 at the Telephone Road exit, is a strange affair. A triumph of folk art, it's not really a show but a suburban house transformed into a paean to the orange by the monomaniacal former postal worker and would-be inventor Jeff McKissack. With one simple purpose – “to get more people to eat more oranges” – McKissack spent twenty years covering his home with celebratory tiles, ironwork, and slogans, with placards displayed by such oddball mannequins as the son of Santa Claus. Broadening its scope to encompass other examples of “visionary art,” the Orange Show also runs tours of local folk art and hosts the annual customized “Art Car” parade.

Eating

Houston's mixed population has left its mark on its cuisine: look for Mexican, Vietnamese, and Indian restaurants, and many good delis – such as the sixteen outlets of Antone's Deli – serving huge salads and sandwiches with an international flavor.

Baba Yoga 2607 Grant St ☎713/522-0042. Cozy neighborhood restaurant in the heart of Montrose, with a warren of rooms, a flower-filled terrace, and zingy food based on fresh, organic ingredients. Try the rotisserie chicken or veggie meat loaf.

Benjy's 2424 Dunstan Rd, off Kirby Rd ☎713/522-7602. Modern American food with an ethnic bent – sesame-crusted tuna, pan-seared pork dumplings, and the like – plus inventive desserts, served in a stylish dining room near Rice University.

Black Labrador 4100 Montrose Ave at Richmond ☎713/529-1199. Open fireplaces and oak beams set the stage for English comfort food (bangers, shepherd's pie) plus black-and-tans and imported Yorkshire bitter.

Café Annie 1728 Post Oak Blvd ☎713/840-1111. Renowned for its classy, innovative Southwestern food – try the tasty crab tostadas – this upscale and uptown restaurant is a local favorite. If money is tight, try it at lunchtime.

There's no shortage of things to do in Houston; just check the listings in the free Houston Press (☎www.houstonpress.com). Downtown's much-trumpeted Theater District (☎www.houstontheaterdistrict.org), a seventeen-block area west of Milam Street between Preston and Rusk streets, includes the Alley Theater at 615 Texas Ave (☎713/228-8421, ☎www.alleytheatre.org), which offers various discount seats, and the stunningly elaborate Wortham Theater Center, 510 Preston St (☎713/237-1439; ☎www.worthamcenter.org), home to Houston's opera, ballet and symphony, among a host of others. Bayou Place, at Smith and Texas avenues, is a brash entertainment and restaurant complex; one of its more interesting options is the multiscreen Angelika Film Center, 510 Texas Ave (☎713/333-3456), which shows art movies and has a late-night coffee house.

Beyond downtown, Miller Outdoor Theater in Hermann Park (☎281/373-3386; ☎www.milleroutdoortheater.com) puts on free performances, from jazz to films and Shakespeare. Montrose, meanwhile, supports a very visible gay scene, with a number of clubs along Westheimer and Richmond.

If you're a baseball fan, Minute Maid Park (previously called Enron Field), home of the Houston Astros, is a great place to see a game, with a retractable roof and its own vintage locomotive (☎713/259-8000, ☎www.astros.com). Tours are also available (1hr; $7).

a38 2204 Louisiana St ☎713/951-9800. Cool but unpretentious midtown lounge where convivial young professionals sip specialty drinks in soft candlelight. DJs spin an eclectic mix of disco, house, and hip pop. Wed–Sun.

The Last Concert Café 1403 Nance St ☎713/226-8563, ☎www.lastconcert.com. Hidden away in an arty neighborhood east of downtown, this funky café has good Tex-Mex food with live R & B and roots bands in the back garden. Knock on the door for entrance.

McGonigal's Mucky Duck 2425 Norfolk St ☎713/528-5999, ☎www.mcgonigals.com. A great club, between Montrose and the Rice University area, featuring folk, alt-country and bluegrass bands, plus terrific Irish jam sessions.

Red Cat Jazz Café 924 Congress ☎713/226-

7870, @www.redcatjazzcafe.com. Smooth downtown club, with nightly blues, jazz and soul, plus comedy nights.

Around Houston

Houston's main attraction, Space Center Houston (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; $18.95, parking $5; @www.spacecenter.org) actually lies some 25 miles south of the city, off I-45 at 1601 NASA Parkway. NASA has been controlling space flight from the Johnson Space Center here since the launch of Gemini 4 in 1965 – locals love to point out that the first word ever spoken on the moon was “Houston.” A working facility, nerve center of the International Space Station, it offers a thrilling insight into modern space exploration, with tram tours giving behind-the-scenes glimpses into various NASA compounds. Space Center Houston boasts numerous hands-on exhibits, including a multi-dimensional experience that simulates a rocket launch. Reckon on a good few hours here, as you try on space helmets, inspect moon-rocks and remarkably rickety-looking rocket replicas, experience what it feels like to eat on a spaceship, and stock up on bagloads of gimmicky space-themed merchandising.

San Jacinto Battleground (daily 9am–6pm), 22 miles east of Houston off I-10, was the site of an eighteen-minute fight, two months after the Alamo in 1836, in which the Texans all but wiped out the superbly trained Mexican army. The battle is commemorated by the tallest stone-column monument in the world (570ft, topped by a 34ft Lone Star), and, inside, a museum of history that, along with a host of artifacts relating to the early history and culture of Texas, screens the stirring 35-minute movie Texas Forever! ($4.50).

The Gulf Coast

You only have to look at the number of condo developments along the Gulf Coast to see that this is a major getaway destination. The climate ranges from balmy at Galveston to subtropical at the Mexican border, but everywhere it's windy: Corpus Christi rivals Chicago as the gustiest city in the States, and a devastating hurricane in 1900 all but leveled the city of Galveston. The fierce tide, progressively gnawing away at the beaches, may pose a threat to tourism, but for now Galveston offers history, shopping, and low-key relief from Houston. Corpus Christi to the south makes the best base for the beaches of Padre Island National Seashore. Rockport, a weathered resort on Hwy-35, is convenient for the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, a haven for endangered whooping cranes, armadillos, and alligators.

Galveston

In 1890 GALVESTON – on the northern tip of Galveston Island, the southern terminus of I-45 – was a thriving port, far larger than Houston fifty miles northwest; many newly arrived European immigrants chose to stay here in the so-called “Queen of the Gulf.” However, the construction of Houston's Ship Canal, after the hurricanes of 1900 killed more than six thousand people and washed away much of the land, left the coastal town to fade slowly away. Thanks to its pretty historic district and its popularity with Houston residents seeking a summer escape, Galveston has undergone a certain revitalization, though its continued vulnerability to storms can give it a somewhat melancholy, beleaguered atmosphere.

Arrival, information, and accommodation

Driving from Houston to Galveston is straightforward: once it crosses over to the island, I-45 (the Gulf Freeway) becomes Broadway, the town's main drag. Greyhound arrives at 714 25th St (around $6 by taxi from downtown). There is no Amtrak service. The main visitor center is south of Broadway at 2027 61st St, with a smaller office in the historic Strand district, north of Broadway at 2215 Strand (both daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 1-888/425-4753, 🌐 www.galveston.com). Trolleys (daily 10.20am–6pm; $1; ☎ 409/797-3900, 🌐 www.islandtransit.net) rattle past the historic homes and main sights.

Hotels in Galveston are pricey in summer and on weekends, but bargains can be found at other times; rates along the coastal strip, Seawall Boulevard, can drop below $50 per night. Within easy walking distance of the Strand, the town's East End historic district holds some relaxing and luxurious B&Bs.

Commodore on the Beach 37th St and Seawall Blvd ☎ 409/763-2375 or 1-800/231-9921, 🌐 www.commodoreonthebeach.com. The adequate, inexpensive rooms overlook the Gulf, and there's a large beachside pool as well. 4–6

Gaido's Seaside Inn 3802 Seawall Blvd ☎ 409/762-9625 or 1-800/525-0064, 🌐 www.gaidosofgalveston.com. A clean, friendly, no-frills choice, with two good fish restaurants attached. 6

The City

The Strand downtown, the nineteenth-century “Wall Street of the Southwest,” has been fitted with gaslights, upmarket shops, restaurants, and galleries. The Texas Seaport Museum nearby, in a complex of shops and restaurants on Pier 21, just off Water Street (daily 10am–5pm; $6), focuses on the port's role in trade and immigration during the nineteenth century; admission includes boarding the Elissa, an 1877 tall ship.

Between the Strand and the beaches to the south, Galveston boasts a profusion of historic homes open for guided tours. Standouts include the ostentatious Bishop's Palace, 1402 Broadway (summer Mon–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; rest of year daily noon–4pm; $6), with its stained glass, mosaics, and marble; the antebellum Ashton Villa, 2328 Broadway (summer Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm, rest of year daily noon–4pm; $6); the Creole planter's-style Samuel May Williams Home, 3601 Ave P (Sat noon–4pm; $3); and the city's oldest building, the Michel B. Menard Home, 1604 33rd St (Fri–Sun noon–4pm; $6), an imposing Greek Revival structure built in 1838. Galveston's old Santa Fe depot, at 25th Street and the Strand, is now the town's Railroad Museum (March–Dec daily 10am–4pm, closed Mon & Tues Jan–Feb; $6), displaying steam trains, Pullman cars, and train-travel-related artifacts in a skillful evocation of a lost era. Look for the eerie white statues of travelers past in the waiting room; you can pick up a telephone and listen to their conversations.

Moody Gardens, Galveston's biggest attraction – for families, at least – lies on the west side of town, at I-45 off the 61st Street exit. The complex (daily: summer 10am–8pm; winter 10am–6pm) centers on three giant glass pyramids: the Rainforest Pyramid ($9.25), housing exotic plants, birds, and fish from around the world; the Discovery Pyramid ($8.95), a science museum with an IMAX cinema; and the Aquarium Pyramid ($14.95). The complex also holds themed outdoor gardens, walking trails along the scenic Offatt's Bayou – where you can take a paddlewheeler cruise ($8.95) – and, probably most popular of all, the kiddy-friendly Palm Beach (May–Sept; $10.95). Costs mount up, so if you don't want to spend $39.95 on a day-pass, concentrate on just one or two attractions.

The downtown beaches of Seawall Boulevard are murky, rocky, and protected behind a ten-mile-long seawall from the ever-encroaching tides and the threat of further hurricanes. Stewart Beach Park, the most convenient beach for downtown, is geared toward family fun and gets very crowded; the wide R.A. Apfell Park, further east, is marginally quieter during the week, but has live music some weekends and a lively bar. Both charge $8 per car.

Eating and drinking

Dining out in Galveston will likely mean settling in at one of the many low-key seafood restaurants along Seawall Boulevard – their mix of fresh fish dishes and kitschy décor is strangely appealing. Nightlife is restricted to sitting in a bar listening to cover bands; there's a glut of places along Post Office Street between 20th and 23rd streets.

Casey's Seafood Café 3802 Seawall Blvd
☎ 409/762-9625. Very good local seafood dishes, linked to Gaido's motel (see p.725) and the more upmarket Gaido's seafood restaurant.

Old Cellar Bar 2015 Post Office St ☎ 409/763-4477. Dark and convivial old tavern with ales on tap and a lovely antique wooden bar.

☎ 409/762-9199, 🌐 www.galvestontexas.com/

oldquarter. A great venue for folk, alt-country and blues; the late Texas singer-songwriter Townes Van Zandt wrote Rex's Blues about the café's owner, musician Rex Bell.

Yaga's Café 2314 Strand ☎ 409/762-6676. Delicious Caribbean food served in gaudy surroundings to the sounds of reggae and calypso music.

Corpus Christi

The unabashed resort town of CORPUS CHRISTI is reached along the coast on Hwy-35 from Houston or Galveston, or on I-37 from San Antonio. Originally a rambunctious trading post, it too was hit by a fierce hurricane, in 1919, but recovered, transforming itself into a center for naval air training, petroleum, and shipping. Much of the population is Hispanic, and the community was devastated in March 1995, when the 23-year-old singer Selena was shot dead in a motel parking lot by the former president of her fan club. Selena was on the verge of becoming the first major cross-over star of Tejano music, a hybrid of Mexican rhythms, German polka, and reggae-influenced Colombian cumbia, and fifty thousand fans turned out for her funeral. The much-visited Selena Museum, 5410 Leopard St, is stuffed with Selena memorabilia, from her famously extravagant gowns to her Porsche (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 1–6pm; $1 suggested donation).

Corpus Christi is an outdoor destination, but apart from fishing, sailing, and watersports across the channel on Padre Island (see opposite), there are a few diversions. The impressive collection of the Philip Johnson-designed South Texas Institute for the Arts, 1902 N Shoreline Blvd (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $6; 🌐 www.stia.org), focuses on fine arts and crafts of the Americas, and stages intriguing temporary exhibitions. Further along N Shoreline Boulevard, at no. 2710, you'll find the massive Texas State Aquarium (summer daily 9am–6pm, rest of year until 5pm; $12.95), and the USS Lexington (daily: summer 9am–6pm, rest of year 9am–5pm; $11.95), a World War II aircraft carrier that's impressive to walk around, though the few exhibits on board are weak. The Corpus Christi Museum of Science and History, 1900 N Chaparral St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10), specializes in hands-on natural history exhibits. Moored in the harbor a short walk from the museum, the Columbus Fleet (included in the museum admission) consists of life-sized replicas of Christopher Columbus's Santa Maria and Pinta.

Greyhound arrives at 702 N Chaparral St downtown. The visitor center is further along N Chaparral at no. 1823 (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 361/561-2000, 🌐 www.corpuschristi-tx-cvb.org). A daytime trolley (25¢; ☎ 361/289-2600, 🌐 www.ccrta.org) connects the major attractions with area hotels (except Sun); other services include a free downtown “Beach Shuttle” tram service (summer only) and a harbor ferry from the South Texas Institute for the Arts to the Texas State Aquarium ($3).

Budget motels line Leopard Street in the northwest. Along N Shoreline Boulevard, the Best Western Marina Grand Hotel, at no. 300 is comfortable (☎ 361/883-5111, 🌐 www.marinagrandhotel.com; 📍 4). Downtown Corpus's main concentration of restaurants is in Water Street Market at 309 N Water St, where the Water Street Oyster Bar (closed Mon–Wed; ☎ 361/881-9448) serves fresh seafood. For fresh fish and Cajun-style seafood, there's Landry's, 600 N Shoreline Drive (☎ 361/882-6666). Just across the JFK Causeway, the popular Snoopy's, 13313 S Padre Island Drive (☎ 361/949-8815), offers splendid fried seafood, crabmeat-stuffed jalapeño peppers, and great sunset views.

South toward Mexico

The barrier islands of Padre Island National Seashore stretch just offshore for 110 miles south of Corpus Christi, almost down to the Mexican border. While Padre Island has its charms, the frontier here has little to offer. Brownsville – a scruffy, semitropical resort populated by retired Texans – and the Mexican town of Matamoros are uninspiring; Laredo, meanwhile, one hundred miles west of Corpus Christi, has seen a vast drop in tourism in the last few years in the face of violent drug wars in its Mexican neighbor Nuevo Laredo. Away from the coast, the fertile landscape begins to dry out and citrus groves give way to the brush and mesquite of a region dominated by huge ranches, where Mexican vaqueros once held sway.

Padre Island National Seashore

Padre Island National Seashore is not quite as unspoiled these days as its reputation might suggest, with its ranks of condos advancing steadily, but it remains a good destination for bird-watching, beachcombing, and camping. Pick up details at the visitor center, 20402 Park Rd 22 (daily: summer 8.30am–6pm; rest of year 8.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 361/949-8068, 🌐 www.nps.gov/pais). The park is open 24 hours, with a $10 admission charge per vehicle, $5 for pedestrians and cyclists, good for one week. Camping on the beach is free, but permits cost $5 for the primitive Bird Island Basin and $8 for the semi-primitive Malaquite Beach Campground. Note that an impassable channel divides the island, meaning that the pricier and much more touristy South Padre Island in the south can only be reached from the mainland – it's a three-hour drive from Corpus Christi.

Central Texas

Central Texas stretches from the prairies of the northeast through the green and fertile Hill Country into the chalky limestone landscape of the west, and includes two of Texas's most pleasant cities: Hispanic San Antonio and the music-oriented student town of Austin, which has a progressive feel uncharacteristic of the rest of the state.

Agriculture has been the economic mainstay here ever since the resistant Comanche population was finally packed off to reservations in the 1840s. The slave-driven cotton plantations of the south and east are gone, but the small communities set up by Polish, Czech, Norwegian, and Swedish immigrants in the Hill Country maintained, even until very recently, the traditions, architecture, and languages of their homelands. Great cattle drives came trampling through after the Civil War and played a large part in the development of San Antonio.

TEXAS

San Antonio

San Antonio

With neither the modern skyline of an oil town, nor the tumbleweed-strewn landscape of the Wild West, attractive and festive SAN ANTONIO looks nothing like the stereotypical image of Texas – despite being pivotal in the state's history. Standing at a geographical crossroads, it encapsulates the complex social and ethnic mixes of all Texas. Although the Germans, among others, have made a strong contribution to its architecture, cuisine, and music, today's San Antonio is predominantly Hispanic.

Founded in 1691 by Spanish missionaries, San Antonio became a military garrison in 1718, and was settled by the Anglos in the 1720s and 1730s under Austin's colonization program. It is most famous for the legendary Battle of the Alamo in 1836, when the Mexican General Santa Anna, seeking to curb the aspirations of the Anglo-Americans, wiped out a band of Texas volunteers: hence San Antonio's claim to be the "birthplace of the revolution," borne out by its role during Texas's ten subsequent years of independence. After the Civil War, it became a hard-drinking, hard-fighting "sin city," at the heart of the Texas cattle and oil empires. Drastic floods in the 1920s wiped out much of the downtown area, but the sensitive WPA program that revitalized two of the city's prettiest sites, La Villita and the River Walk, laid the foundations for its future as a major tourist destination. San Antonio is now the ninth largest city in the US, but it retains an unhurried, organic feel – thanks to a winning combination of small-town warmth, respect for diversity, and a self-confidence rooted in its own history – making it one of the state's nicest places to spend a few days.

San Antonio International Airport (☎210/207-3411, 🌐www.sanantonio.gov/airport) is just north of the I-410 loop that encircles most of the sights. SA Trans Shuttle (☎210/281-9900, 🌐www.saaairportshuttle.com) makes the twenty-minute journey downtown ($14 one way, $24 roundtrip; every 10–15min 4.30am–1am), while taxis cost about $15 (Yellow Cabs ☎210/226-4242). Amtrak arrives centrally at 350 Hoefgen St, while Greyhound operates from 500 N St Mary's St.

Pick up maps and information from the visitor center at 217 Alamo Plaza, directly opposite the Alamo (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 210/225-8587 or 1-800/447-3372, 🌐 www.sanantoniocvb.com). Driving in San Antonio, which is Texas's second largest city, can be stressful – thankfully, most of the main attractions are in walkable distance from each other. Also, in addition to a relatively good bus network, four downtown trolley routes from Alamo Plaza serve the major attractions (every 10min; 80¢). A Day Tripper pass, available from the VIA Downtown Information Center, 260 E Houston St (Mon–Fri 7am–6pm, Sat 9am–2pm; ☎ 210/475-9008, 🌐 www.viainfo.net), costs $3 and can be used on all buses and trolleys. Gray Line's bus tours (☎ 210/226-1706 or ☎ 1-800/256-2757, 🌐 www.grayline.com) are only worthwhile as a way to get to the most distant missions (3hr 30min; $32.50); VIA's #42 service from the Alamo also stops at the San Jose mission.

Boat tours (daily 9am–9pm; $6.50; ☎ 210/244-5700 or 1-800/417-4139, @ www.riosanantonio.com) make a leisurely and enjoyable 35-minute circuit of the San Antonio River's River Walk, departing from three locations: just below the bridge on Market Street opposite the Hilton; below the Commerce Street bridge near the Rivercenter mall; and behind the Holiday Inn near Houston Street. The same company also runs a boat taxi, which costs $4 one way or $10 for a day-pass.

Accommodation

The pleasure of a moonlit amble along the River Walk back to your hotel is one of the joys of visiting San Antonio, so it's worth paying more to stay in the center. If you like things a bit quieter, the King William Historic District, southwest of the main commercial activity, is an appealing neighborhood packed with B&Bs. Motels are clustered near Market Square on the west side of downtown; just north of Brackenridge Park on Austin Highway; or, convenient to the airport, on I-35 north toward Austin.

The rooms don't quite live up to the glamour of the lobby, bar, and communal areas. 6

A Yellow Rose 229 Madison St ☎ 210/229-9903 or 1-800/950-9903, @ www.ayellowrose.com. A relaxed, welcoming option in the peaceful King William Historic District, with stylish rooms and a choice of breakfast options (full, continental, or minimal) brought to your door. 4

The Town

San Antonio is a delight to walk around, its main attractions, including the pretty River Walk, the Alamo, and Hemisfair Park, all within strolling distance of each other. Slightly further out, but still easily accessible, the King William Historic District, lined with grand houses, is a tranquil oasis a world away from the lively, and very Hispanic Market Square.

The River Walk and La Villita

Since mission times, the San Antonio River has been the key to the city's fortunes. Destructive floods in the 1920s and subsequent oil-drilling reduced its flow, leading to plans to pave the river over. Instead, a careful landscaping scheme, started in 1939 by the WPA, created the Paseo del Rio, or River Walk, now the aesthetic and commercial focus of San Antonio. The walk, located below street level, is reached by steps from various spots along the main roads and crossed by humpbacked stone bridges. Cobbled paths, lined with tropical plants and shaded by pine, cypress, oak, and willow, wind for two and a half miles (21 blocks) beside the jade-green water, with much of the city's dining and entertainment options concentrated along the way. You can catch a river taxi (see above) at a number of places, but strolling is just as much fun; watch the riverside slowly change character as it winds from the lively Rivercenter Mall, via the rowdy outdoor restaurants and bars of the River Square area, to the quieter, more park-like outskirts. During peak seasons, the River Walk can become seriously crowded, with high-spirited vacationers packed three to four rows deep – the key is to take a deep breath and enjoy the festive atmosphere. The crowds thin the further from the center you stroll.

La Villita (“little town”), on the River Walk opposite Hemisfair Park, was San Antonio’s original settlement, occupied in the mid- to late eighteenth century by Mexican “squatters” with no titles to the land. Only when its elevation enabled it to survive fierce floods in 1819 did this rude collection of stone and adobe buildings become suddenly respectable. It is now a National Historic District, turned over to a dubious “arts community” consisting mostly of overpriced craftshops. It’s a pretty spot, with its piazzas, soft-edged buildings, and brick streets, best visited off-season or at dusk, when the crowds dwindle and the muted colors, smells, and noises are more evocative of earlier times.

The Alamo

San Antonio’s most distinctive landmark, the Alamo (Mon–Sat 9am–5.30pm, Sun 10am–5.30pm; free), lies smack in the center of downtown at the meeting of Houston, Crockett, Bonham, and Alamo streets. Inextricably associated with the battle that took here in 1836, a defining moment in the Texas struggle for independence against Mexico, the Alamo has been immortalized in movies and songs, and exists now as a kind of rallying cry for Texas spirit. Its fame, however, has little to do with its original purpose. It was built in the eighteenth century by the Spanish, the first in a trail of Catholic missions established along remote stretches of the San Antonio River. Each was laid out like a small fortified town, with the church as aesthetic and cultural focus. The goal was to strengthen Spanish control by “converting” the indigenous Coahuiltecan – in practice, using them as workforce and army. The missions flourished from 1745 to 1775, but couldn’t survive the ravages of disease and attack from the Apache and Comanche, and fell into disuse early in the nineteenth century.

The infamous Alamo battle occurred on March 6, 1836, when five-thousand-strong Mexican troops wiped out 189 rebels, dreaming of Texas autonomy, in one swoop. Driven by the battle cry of “Victory or Death!”, the besieged band – a few native Hispanic-Texans, adventurers like Davy Crockett and Jim Bowie, and aspiring colonists from other states – held out for thirteen days against the Mexicans before their demise. Their massacre was dismissed by the despotic Mexican General Santa Anna as “but a small affair.”

Considering its fame, the Alamo is surprisingly small. All that is left of the original complex is its chapel, fronted by a large arched facade of delicately carved sandstone, and the Long Barracks. A constant stream of bus tours makes visits crowded and hectic, but for anyone curious about the state’s particular brand of pride and stubbornness, the Alamo is unmissable. Disconcertingly, no response but absolute reverence is permitted – effectively this is a shrine, and a sign even insists visitors remove their hats. The battle memorabilia in the chapel is undeniably emotive, while the Long Barracks Museum presents a rousing twenty-minute film on the history of the missions and the battle. The grounds, with four acres of lush blooms, palms, and cacti, are a haven from the commotion both in- and outside the walls.

Other downtown attractions

For a jawdropping slice of kitsch Americana, the Buckhorn Saloon and Museum, 318 E Houston St (daily: summer 10am–6pm or later, winter 10am–5pm or later), can't be beat. During San Antonio's heyday as a cowtown, cowboys, trappers, and traders would bring their cattle horns to the original Buckhorn Saloon in exchange for a drink. The entire bar, a vast and airy space, has since been transplanted to this downtown location, where you can enjoy a beer and a steak in the presence of hundreds of mounted horns. An extra floor ($10.99) displays even more of them, mounted as trophies, chandeliers, and chairs, along with saddles, pistols, a woeful cavalcade of poorly stuffed animals – including “Bimbo,” the two-headed lamb – and a quirky museum of rough-riding Texas history.

△ Detail from the Alamo

It's a long walk on a hot day through the enormous HemisFair Park – a sprawling campus of administrative buildings with scant lawns – to the Institute of Texan Cultures, 801 S Bowie St (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7), but it's worth the trip. Mapping the social histories of 26 diverse Texas cultures, this lively museum has especially pertinent African-American and Native American sections, as well as intriguing exhibits on Chinese, Lebanese, and Wendish communities. Also in the park, the Mexican Cultural Institute (Tues–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun noon–5pm; free) hosts temporary exhibitions of historic and contemporary Mexican art. The 750ft Tower of the Americas (Sun–Thurs 10am–1pm, Fri & Sat 10am–11pm) east of here offers stunning views from its observation deck ($5), a revolving restaurant, and a 4D theater ride, Skies Over Texas ($6). Combo tickets are available for $9.95.

San Antonio's Hispanic heart beats strongly west of the river. At 115 Main Plaza, the handsome San Fernando Cathedral is the oldest cathedral in the US, established in 1731. Mariachi masses are held on Saturday at 5.15pm, when crowds overflow onto the plaza, and there are even two flamenco masses per year. Two blocks west at 105 Plaza de Armas, the beautifully simple, whitewashed Spanish Governors Palace (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–5pm; $1.50) was once home to Spanish officials during the mission era. Just one story tall, it's hardly a palace, but its flagstone floors, low doorways and beamed ceilings, religious icons and ornate wooden carvings give it a wonderful atmosphere, and it provides an illuminating glimpse of the lifestyles of the civil and religious authorities in this remote outpost.

Market Square (daily: summer 10am–8pm; rest of year 10am–6pm), a couple of blocks further northwest on W Commerce St, dates from 1840. Its festive outdoor restaurants and stalls make it an appealing destination, especially during fiestas like Cinco de Mayo and the Day of the Dead. Fruit and vegetables are on sale early in the morning, while the shops are a compelling mix of color and kitsch. El Mercado, an indoor complex, sells tourist-oriented gifts, jewelry, and oddities.

The 25-block King William Historic District to the southwest, between the river and S Alamo Street, offers a different flavor, its shady streets lined with the elegant late nineteenth-century homes of German merchants. It remains a fashionable residential area and has some stylish B&Bs; pick up self-guided walking tours outside the headquarters of the San Antonio Conservation Society, 107 King William St. The Blue Star Arts Center, further south at 116 Blue Star St, makes an appealingly rakish contrast to the rest of the neighborhood with its brewpub, workshops, and funky crafts stores.

San Antonio Museum of Art and McNay Art Museum

The San Antonio Museum of Art, 200 W Jones Ave (Tues 10am–8pm, Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–6pm; $8, free Tues 4–8pm), occupies the old Lone Star Brewery north of downtown. It's full of treasures – including an unusual collection of ancient glass and a preserved, gloriously vivid Tibetan mandala – with distinctive works from the Far East and Oceania, strong pre-Columbian and colonial American collections, and an entire wing of Latin American works, including vivacious folk art.

A little further north, the beautiful McNay Art Museum, 6000 N New Braunfels Ave at Austin Highway (Tues, Wed & Fri 10am–4pm, Thurs 10am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; free, $5 suggested donation) is another treat. This exquisite Moorish-style villa, complete with tranquil garden, was built in the 1950s to house the art collection of millionaire and folk artist Marion Koogler McNay, which includes modern sculpture, Gothic and medieval works, as well as a sprinkling of major players (Picasso, Monet, and Van Gogh).

Any trip to San Antonio will include a visit to the Alamo, but for a real taste of early Spanish influence in Texas, make an effort to see the more distant, less visited missions. The Mission Trail (www.nps.gov/saan) runs ten miles south along the river from Alamo Street, down S St Mary's Street and onto Mission Road. Missions Concepción and San José are covered on the Alamo Trolley Tour, which leaves from the Alamo Visitor Center in the Menger Hotel ($19.95 for a hop-on, hop-off pass). Mission San José can also be reached via bus 42 down Roosevelt Avenue; to get to the others you will need to drive. Each mission has its own character, and acts as an interpretive center, illustrating some aspect of mission life (daily 9am–5pm; free); the churches themselves still serve active parishes. The main visitor center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 210/932-1001) is at Mission San José.

Mission Concepción, 807 Mission Rd, with its distinctive twin towers and cupola, was built between 1731 and 1751. Colorful scraps of original frescoes can still be seen, along with bullet holes from rougher days. Exhibits here concentrate on the religious function of the missions. The 1720 Mission San José, 6701 San Jose Drive, which interprets the mission as a social and defense center, is the most complete of all, restored in the 1930s by the WPA. Other notable features include the beautiful carved stone ornamentation, especially the ornate rose window. A Mariachi Mass is held here each Sunday at noon. Of the two smaller and more isolated missions, Mission San Juan, 9101 Graf Rd, has displays on agriculture (as well as a unique delicate bell tower), while Mission San Francisco de la Espada, 10040 Espada Rd, looks back on ranching life in mission days.

Eating

San Antonio has good Tex-Mex food in all price ranges. Many visitors head straight for the restaurants on the River Walk, but, charming as it is to eat alfresco beside the river, don't be seduced to such an extent that you never venture above ground.

Acenar 146 E Houston St ☎ 210/222-2362. Highly designed and spirited River Walk restaurant – it's quieter on the terrace – serving fabulous cutting-edge Mexican food to a hip, convivial crowd. Closed Sun.

 Boudro's 421 E Commerce St ☎ 210/224-8484. This stylish River Walk Tex-Mex bistro is favored by locals as much as tourists. Enjoy tasty, creative New American/Southwestern entrees, a wonderful guacamole made at your table, and killer prickly-pear margaritas.

Casa Rio 430 E Commerce St ☎ 210/225-6718. The oldest, most established restaurant on the River Walk, this sprawling place – in a relatively quiet spot – offers cheap and cheerful Mexican dining right by the water.

The Guenther House 205 E Guenther St ☎ 210/351-6306. Light lunches, cookies, and cakes in an airy flour-mill-cum-museum in the King William Historic District.

El Mirador 722 S St Mary's St ☎ 210/225-9444. Popular family-owned cantina serving very cheap Mexican breakfasts and lunches, and pricier Southwestern cuisine in the evening. Specialties include xocetl (chicken broth) and azteca (spicy tomato) soups.

Mi Tierra 218 Produce Row ☎ 210/225-1262. With its bedazzlement of piñatas, fairy lights, and fiesta flowers, this festive 24hr joint is the highlight of Market Square, serving good, inexpensive Tex-Mex staples and delicious sugary cakes at their panadería.

Schilo's 424 E Commerce St ☎ 210/223-6692. With none of the razzamatatz of the River Walk, just footsteps away, this old German diner dishes up good solid comfort food – country breakfasts, bratwurst, ham hock, split pea soup – for when you're tiring of tacos.

With its abundance of picturesque settings, San Antonio is a great city for festivals. The year's biggest event is April's ten-day Fiesta San Antonio (www.fiestasa.org), marking Texas's victory in the Battle of San Jacinto, with parades, cookouts, and Latin music. In May, the Tejano Conjunto Festival, hosted by the Guadalupe Cultural Arts Center on Guadalupe Street (📍 www.guadalupeculturalarts.org), west of downtown, celebrates the German-Mexican country music of south and central Texas. June's four-day Texas Folklife Festival at the Institute of Texan Cultures (see p.733; 📍 www.texancultures.utsa.edu/public/index.htm) showcases the state's huge diversity of music, food and culture, ranging from gospel choirs to Lebanese cuisine. Finally, the San Antonio Stock Show & Rodeo (📍 www.sarodeo.com) in February celebrates cowboy culture with more than two weeks of rodeo events and country music.

Downtown, the River Walk offers rowdy bars and clubs – including Polly Esther's, 212 College St. Swig, 111 W Crockett St, is a popular haunt for martinis, cigars and jazz. Somewhat less touristy, Houston Street is fast becoming a party strip with a crop of slick yuppie bars, while in the north, just beyond the bus station, N St Mary's St offers friendly clubs and drinking holes favored by local students. Just a short drive away in the hill country you'll find some great old rural dance halls; the best is Gruene Hall in New Braunfels (see p.742).

Other possibilities include the outdoor Arneson River Theatre, opposite La Villita, where you can watch Mexican folk music and dance on a stage separated from the audience by the river, and Aztec on the River, 201 E. Commerce St, an opulent Art Deco movie theater on the River Walk, complete with Wurlitzer organ. Performances include a short silent movie followed by adventure spectacles designed to show off the massive screen.

For listings, check the free weekly Current (📍 www.sacurrent.com).

Austin

AUSTIN was just a tiny community on the verdant banks of the (Texas) Colorado River when Mirabeau B. Lamar, president of the Republic, suggested in 1839 that it would make a better capital than swampy and disease-ridden Houston. Early building had to be done under armed guard, while angry Comanche watched from the surrounding hills, but despite its perilous location, the city thrived.

These days it wears its status as state capital very lightly; sightseeing rates as a low priority against simply hanging out. Since the 1960s, this laid-back and progressive city – unique in Texas – has been a haven for artists, musicians, and writers, and many visitors come specifically for the music. And while – whisper it – a certain complacency is beginning to creep in, its “alternative” edge being packaged as just another tourist attraction, artists hungry for fame still tumble out of buses here from all over the nation, seeking their fortunes in this vibrant creative hotbed. Local musicians are renowned for their innovative reworkings of Texas's country, folk, and R&B heritage, using Austin's enthusiastic environment as a springboard to national recognition.

Due to a sizable population leap, ugly suburbs have shot up to threaten Austin's small-town ambiance – but it feels wonderfully safe for visitors, and is one of the few cities in the state where cycling is a viable alternative to driving. The presence of the vast UT campus – where almost every shop and streetlamp is adorned with the unsightly burnt-orange and white colors of the college's Longhorns football team – adds to the relaxed atmosphere.

Within the city limits a great park system offers numerous hiking and biking trails and a wonderful spring-fed swimming pool. Looking further afield, Austin makes a fine base for exploring the green Hill Country that rolls away to the west.

Austin spreads about twenty miles north–south and eighteen miles east–west, severed by I-35 (between Dallas and San Antonio) to the east. The Colorado River – called Town Lake where it abuts Congress Avenue – runs south of downtown. Flights come in at the Austin-Bergstrom International Airport (☎512/530-2242, 🌐 www.ci.austin.tx.us/austinairport), eight miles southeast of downtown. From here it's about twenty minutes to downtown by taxi (Yellow Checker Cabs; ☎512/452-9999; around $28) or by SuperShuttle vans (☎512/258-3826, 🌐 www.supershuttle.com; $12.75). Driving, avoid snarl-ups on I-35 by taking Hwy-71 to Riverside Drive and then Congress Avenue.

The visitor center, 209 E 6th St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–6pm; ☎866/GO-AUSTIN, 🌐 www.austintexas.org) is full of useful information about the music scene.

City transportation and tours

Unique in Texas, Austin has a good public transportation system. The Capital METRO (🌐 www.capmetro.org, ☎512/474-1200) runs buses downtown, crosstown, and through the campus for a flat fare of 50¢ (express buses $1), with additional student shuttle routes that everybody uses; look for the Longhorn emblem beside the shuttle's route number. The Dillo, also run by METRO, is a free downtown trolley that runs through downtown and the UT campus (Mon–Fri 6.30am–8.30pm every 10–40min, less frequently Sat & Sun). You can rent bicycles from Bicycle Sport Shop, 517 S Lamar, just south of Barton Springs (Mon–Wed & Fri 10am–7pm, Thurs 8am–8pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 11am–5pm; ☎512/477-3472, 🌐 bicyclesportshop.com) – reserve in advance if possible. Downtown Austin is a pleasant place to take a stroll; pick up free self-guided walking tours from the visitor center.

Accommodation

Austin offers a good variety of places to stay, with the usual budget hotels on I-35, some classy hotels downtown, a couple of hip choices on South Congress, and a variety of comfy B&Bs.

Austin Motel 1220 S Congress Ave

Carrington's Bluff 1900 David St ☎512/479-0638, 🌐 carringtonsbluff.com. Central, very comfortable B&B near the university. It has a country-style feel, with a shady veranda, friendly hosts, and gourmet breakfast. ⑤

Driskill Hotel 604 Brazos St ☎512/474-5911, 🌐 www.driskillhotel.com. The great and the good have stayed at this handsome historic hotel, which, with its opulent marble lobby and updated rooms is Austin's swankiest choice. It's close to the action along 6th Street. ③

Hi-Austin (Hostelling International) 2200 Lakeshore Blvd ☎512/444-2294 or 1-800/725-2331, 🌐 www.hiaustin.org. Not particularly welcoming, but with bargain rates right on Town Lake. $17 for members, $20 for non-members.

La Quinta Inn Capitol 300 E 11th St ☎512/476-1166, @www.laquinta.com. Comfortable, central rooms within a stone's throw of the capitol and on the Dillo shuttle. 4

Hotel San Jose 1316 S Congress Ave ☎512/444-7322, @www.sanjosehotel.com. Chic and funky small hotel in the South Congress district. Restored from an old motel, it has a variety of minimalist rooms, some with shared bath, along with lovely gardens, a tiny pool, and a cool coffee shop, Jo's (see p.740), on site. The courtyard happy hour attracts a local crowd. 4-7

The City

The handsome Texas State Capitol, at 13th Street and Congress Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free public tours usually every 15min Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.30pm, Sat 9.30am–3.30pm, Sun noon–3.30pm – but call to check on ☎512/463-0063), is over three hundred feet high, taller than the national Capitol in Washington, with a red sunset granite dome that dominates the downtown skyline. The chandeliers, carpets, and even the door hinges of this colossal building are emblazoned with lone stars and other Texas motifs, a theme continued in the added extension, a sleek maze of marble halls. After wandering around, stop by the Texas Capitol Visitor Center (same hours), 112 E 11th St, which includes changing exhibits of local interest. Nearby, the antebellum Governor's Mansion, 1010 Colorado St, is the governor's official Texas residence (free tours Mon–Thurs every 20min, 10–11.40am; call to reserve on ☎512/463-5516).

Congress Avenue, an attractive stretch of 1950s shops and muted office buildings that slopes south from the capitol down to the river, is worth a look. The Austin Museum of Art, at no. 823 (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm, Thurs 10am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5; @www.amoa.org) makes a good stop-off, with regularly changing exhibits of contemporary art from Gee's Bend quilts to photographic portraits, while a few blocks further down at no. 419, the Mexic-Arte Museum has a fine collection of traditional and contemporary Latin American art, including Orozco prints and folk art (Mon–Thurs 10am–6pm, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm; $5; @www.mexic-artemuseum.org). If you're visiting between April and November, take a walk at dusk down to where Congress Avenue crosses the Colorado River (known here as Town Lake) to watch 1.5 million bats – the world's largest urban bat colony – emerge in a large cloud from their hangouts under the bridge. Across the river, South Congress has emerged as a hip neighborhood of funky stores, bars and restaurants, with a far more alternative edge than over-commercialized Sixth Street, which runs west from I-35. The elegant Romanesque Driskill Hotel, on the corner of Sixth and Brazos, is impressive and historic enough to have its own self-guided walking tour.

North of the Capitol, the Bob Bullock Texas State History Museum, adjacent to the University of Texas (see opposite) at Martin Luther King Jr Blvd and North Congress, is a marvelous treasure trove of Texas arcana. Among the exhibits are the diary of Stephen F. Austin, generally considered the founder of the state, and a Bible that saved the life of Sam Houston Jr, during the Civil War; a bullet is still lodged in its pages. Interactive exhibits bring the place into the twenty-first century, along with the IMAX cinema and Star of Destiny, a 4-D movie about Texas history complete with wind, smoke, and hurricane effects (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; $5.50, $10 with IMAX, $8.50 with Star of Destiny, $13.50 with both). Further north and beyond downtown, the historic residential area of Hyde Park, a leafy enclave, is home to the Elisabet Ney Museum, 304 E 44th St. A stolid, castle-like building, this was the last studio of Austin's most celebrated sculptor, a German-born woman who made likenesses of many of the major players of the late 1800s; it's an intriguing place, filled with marquettes and finished marbles, and set in lovely grounds (Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free).

Southwest of the center and across the river, the 350-acre Zilker Park is one of the best of the city's many fine green spaces, a perfect retreat on sultry Austin afternoons. One of its main attractions is the spring-fed (and deliciously cold) Barton Springs Pool, a three-acre turquoise rectangle shaded by pecan trees (daily; $3). You can paddle in the pebbly creek below the pool free of charge, take advantage of the hiking and biking trails, or relax on the miniature railroad winding beside the river (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–7pm; $2.75). Another appealing outdoor space, south of the Barton Springs Pool on Robert E. Lee Rd, the Umlauf Sculpture Garden (Wed–Fri 10am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 1–4.30pm; $3.50) is a tranquil, grassy enclave dotted with more than one hundred works in bronze, terracotta, wood, and marble.

The University of Texas

The University of Texas – and its fiercely supported Longhorn football team – has a tangible, almost defining, presence in Austin. You’ll find most student activity in the cafés, vintage clothing shops and bookstores on the “Drag”, the stretch of Guadalupe Street running along campus north from Martin Luther King Boulevard to 24th; the campus itself has a number of attractions, too. Having its own oil well (the drilling rig Santa Rita No. 1 on San Jacinto Blvd) has made this one of the world’s richest universities, its purchasing power almost unmatched when it comes to rare and valuable books. The university’s unparalleled collection of manuscripts is available to scholars amid tight security in the Harry Ransom Center; stories abound of the sums lavished to acquire work from relative unknowns who might someday achieve fame. The Center, in the southwest corner of the campus at 21st and Guadalupe, houses a gallery (Tues, Wed & Fri 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–7pm, Sat & Sun noon–5pm; free; @www.hrc.utexas.edu), whose permanent collection includes a Gutenberg Bible, the world’s first photograph, and a host of contemporary Latin American and American paintings. Excellent rotating literature-related exhibits focus on everything from Modernism to Watergate. Another superb resource, the Blanton Museum of Art, MLK at Congress, has a jaw-dropping collection, particularly rich in Renaissance art, modern American masters, and Latin American works. Temporary exhibits explore elevated themes (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm, Sun 1–5pm; $5, free on Thurs; @blantonmuseum.org).

The LBJ Library and Museum (daily 9am–5pm; free; @www.lbjlib.utexas.edu), on the northeast edge of campus at 2313 Red River St, traces the career of the brash and egotistical Lyndon Baines Johnson from his origins in the Hill Country to the House of Representatives, the Senate, and the White House. JFK is said to have made Johnson his vice president to avoid his establishing a rival power base; but in the aftermath of Kennedy’s assassination, Johnson’s administration (1963–69) was able to push through a far more radical program than Kennedy ever attempted. Johnson’s nemesis, Vietnam, is presented here as an awful mess left by Kennedy for him to clear up, at the cost of great personal anguish.

Eating

Austin has many more vegetarian and wholefood restaurants than is usual in Texas, and even the finer places are refreshingly attitude-free. Sixth Avenue has become something of a frat-boy chug-fest; you’d do better to head for the good budget restaurants along the Drag – just look for the student crowds – the more upmarket crop in the Warehouse District around Fourth and Colorado, or the hipper scene along South Congress. Note, too, that many of the restaurants reviewed below double as music venues, and that many of the music venues and bars listed on p.741 also serve decent food.

El Sol y La Luna 1224 S Congress Ave
 ☎ 512/444-7770, 🌐 www.elsolylaluna.com.
 A fun and funky family-run Mexican/Tex-Mex bistro on the hip South Congress strip. The pozole is outstanding, as are the breakfasts, and there's live Latin music on weekends.

Jo's 1300 S Congress ☎ 512/444-3800. Cool al fresco South Congress coffeehouse serving espresso drinks, pulled pork sandwiches, and cold beer. Occasional movies, too.

Jovita's 1619 S 1st St ☎ 512/447-7825, 🌐 www.jovitas.com. This cozy, colorful, family-oriented cantina dishes up reliable Tex-Mex food, with good live country, folk and bluegrass music played in the early evenings on the outdoor stage.

Las Manitas 211 Congress Ave ☎ 512/472-9357. An Austin original, with tasty, great-value Mexican breakfasts and lunches – lots of veggie choices – festive decor, and a laid-back vibe. Get there early to beat the politicians and the students to a space.

Magnolia Café 1920 S Congress Ave ☎ 512/445-0000. A 24hr joint that's a local favorite for Tex-Mex and pancake breakfasts, and a great place to refuel after a night living it up on South Congress.

Roaring Fork 701 Congress Ave in the Intercontinental hotel ☎ 512/583-0000. Fabulous modern Southwestern food – succulent crab cakes with chili slaw, for example, or tender lamb chops with butternut squash – and specialty margaritas in sophisticated surroundings.

Salt Lick 18300 Farm Rd 1826, Driftwood ☎ 512/858-4959. Commonly agreed to be the city's best BBQ – despite being an eleven-mile drive away in the Hill Country (check the map on 🌐 www.saltlickbbq.com). Fabulous pork ribs soaked in a near-perfect BBQ sauce are dished up in a lovely leafy setting or indoors in a rustic dining room.

 ☎ 512/451-5440, 🌐 www.threadgills.com.

Yet another Austin institution, north of downtown, established when Kenneth Threadgill was given the first license to sell beer in the city after Prohibition. Bringing together hippies and rednecks in the 1960s, Threadgill's was an incubator for the Austin sound, and still features live fiddle music, folk, and country-and-western bands. The comfort food is good, too, with terrific chicken fried steak and veggies like black-eyed peas and okra. There's a downtown branch south of the river at 301 W Riverside Drive (☎ 512/472-9304).

Nightlife and entertainment

Austin's nightlife is legendary, and you're spoilt for choice for places to enjoy it. Though the clubs and bars of 6th Street have become a bit touristy, there are plenty of good places elsewhere downtown, and it's easy enough to hop into a cab to some of the further-flung classic joints. Three first-rate local newspapers carry listings: the Daily Texan, the UT paper (🌐 www.dailytexanonline.com), the "XLent" supplement to the Austin American-Statesman (Thurs; 🌐 www.austin360.com), and the Austin Chronicle (Fri; 🌐 www.austinchronicle.com).

Live music

Although Austin's folk revival in the 1960s attracted enough attention to propel Janis Joplin on her way from Port Arthur, Texas, to stardom in California, the city first achieved prominence in its own right as the center of "outlaw country" music in the 1970s. Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings, disillusioned with Nashville, spearheaded a movement that reworked sentimental country and western with an incisive injection of grubby rock 'n' roll. Venues in Austin, far removed from the hard-drinking honky-tonks of West Texas, provided an environment that encouraged and rewarded risk-taking, experimentation and a lot of cross-breeding. These days the predominant "Austin sound" is a melange of country, folk and blues, with strong psychedelic and "alternative" influences – but the scene is entirely eclectic. The tradition of black Texas bluesmen such as Blind Lemon Jefferson and Blind Willie Johnson, as well as the rocking bar blues of Stevie Ray Vaughan, still lives on, with a top-notch blues club in the form of Antone's.

Austin's ten-day SxSW (South by Southwest) Festival (🌐 www.sxsw.com), held in mid-March, has become one of the biggest music and film conferences/festivals in the nation, an industry showcase attended by all the big players. Naturally, showcasing the best bands from Texas and around the world, along with tons of movies, it's not cheap: passes for all film, music, and interactive events cost $650 in advance, increasing to $900 for a walk-up rate; a music-only pass is $425 ($600 walk-up). Even if you can't afford to attend, the city is an exciting place to be during SxSW, with hundreds of unofficial gigs and events open to all. Another major event, showcasing folk, bluegrass, acoustic, blues, country, jazz, and Americana, is the Kerrville Folk Festival, which lasts nearly three weeks during May and June. It's held at Rod Kennedy's Quiet Valley Ranch in Kerrville, a hundred miles west of Austin on I-10 (@www.kerrville-music.com). You can attend the main shows or camp on site, enjoying campfire jams under the stars.

For restaurants that double as live music venues, see the listings opposite.

Antone's Blues Club 213 W 5th St ☎512/320-8424, @www.antones.net. This old Austin joint in the gentrifying Warehouse District is the best blues club in the city, a hot and sweaty haunt showcasing national and local acts.

The Broken Spoke 3201 S Lamar Blvd ☎512/442-6189, @www.brokenspokeaustintx.com. Neighborhood restaurant (good chicken-fried steak) and stomping honky tonk dance hall in south Austin. The barn-like dance floor attracts great country acts; it's a lot of fun. Two-stepping begins at 9pm.

Cactus Café The Texas Union, 24th and Guadalupe sts, UT ☎512/475-6515, @www.utexas.edu/student/txunion/ae/cactus/. One of Austin's favorite acoustic venues, specializing in singer-songwriters and putting on consistently good country, rock, and folk music.

 Continental Club 1315 S Congress Ave ☎512/441-2444, @www.continentalclub.com. This longstanding classic is the city's premier place to hear hard-edged country or bluesy folk sung the Austin way.

Emo's 603 Red River St ☎512/477-EMOS, @www.emosaustin.com. A hub for the rock-oriented Red River District, with a friendly, tattooed, and pierced crowd supporting Austin's best alternative/punk bands.

Flamingo Cantina 515 E 6th St ☎512/494-9336, @www.flamingocantina.com. The best of the Sixth Street venues, this reggae club features everything from ragga to ska with the occasional Latin band thrown in.

Stubb's BBQ 801 Red River St ☎512/480-8341, @www.stubbsaustin.com. Indoor and outdoor stages feature eclectic bands of national repute – including a Sunday gospel brunch – which you can watch while chewing through great Texas-style brisket, sausage, and ribs.

La Zona Rosa 612 W 4th St ☎512/263-4146, @www.lazonarosa.com. Kitschy music venue with an eclectic roster, including English indie bands and new hip-hop artists.

Bars

Note that, like the restaurants listed opposite, many of Austin's bars double as music venues.

Club de Ville 900 Red River St ☎512/457-0900. Excellent cocktails, comfy sofas, and a cozy patio setting are the draw at this friendly, intimate bar just a few minutes from the Sixth Street morass.

Ego's 510 S Congress Ave ☎512/474-7091. Unpretentious, friendly, and dark little dive where locals chill out and play pool. Occasional live music.

Scholz Garten 1607 San Jacinto Blvd ☎512/474-1958, @www.scholzgarten.net. This historic Austin joint, a biergarten-cum-social hub since 1866, is famed for its beer, gutsy bratwurst and BBQ, energetic political debates, and occasional live gompah bands.

Other nightlife

There's usually something to catch on campus. Big drama and dance names appear in the UT Performing Arts Center, 23rd Street and Robert Dedman Drive (@www.utpac.org), and you can see independent movies at the Dobie Theater, on the Drag at 2021 Guadalupe (@www.landmarktheatres.com/market/Austin/DobieTheatre.htm). Esther's Follies, 525 E 6th St (@www.esthersfollies.com) is Austin's hippest and funniest cabaret, which combines spoofs of local and national politicians with Texas-style singing and dancing. Symphony Square, at Red River Rd and 11th St (@www.austinsymphony.org) is a rough-hewn outdoor amphitheater, below street level on the river, hosting jazz and classical concerts in summer.

The Hill Country

The rolling hills, lakes, and valleys of the HILL COUNTRY, north and west of Austin and San Antonio, were inhabited mostly by Apache and Comanche until after statehood, when German and Scandinavian settlers arrived. Many of the log-cabin farming communities they established are still here, such as New Braunfels (famous for its sausages and pastries, and, more recently, its watersports) and Luckenbach. You may still hear German spoken, and the German influence is also felt in local food and music; conjunto, for example, is a blend of Tex-Mex and accordion music. The whole region is a popular retreat and resort area, with some wonderful hill views and lake swimming, and a lot of good places to camp.

New Braunfels

NEW BRAUNFELS, just thirty miles north of San Antonio on I-35, was founded by German immigrants – mostly artisans and artists – in 1845 and quickly became a trade center. Nowadays, the community, along with its equally historic satellite, Gruene, just northeast, makes its living from tourism. The town's two rivers – the Comal and the Guadalupe – are ideal for easy rafting and tubing, making this a hugely popular weekend destination (especially for UT students).

New Braunfels also has the excellent Schlitterbahn water park (hours and admission vary; 📞 www.schlitterbahn.com), and, south of town on I-35, the equally family-friendly Natural Bridge Caverns (daily, hours and admission vary; 📞 210/651-6101, 📞 www.naturalbridgecaverns.com). These offer a variety of tours, including the physically intense Adventure Tour ($95, reservations necessary), which lowers visitors 160 feet by rope into the South Cavern and takes them hiking and spelunking where there are no trails or lights. If outdoor activities don't appeal, downtown's historic district has enough antique stores, galleries, and restored buildings to fill a couple of hours. There's more of the same in picturesque Gruene, along with the intriguing New Braunfels Museum of Art and Music, 1259 Gruene Rd (summer Mon–Thurs 10am–6pm, Fri & Sat 10am–8pm, Sun noon–8pm; rest of year Mon & Wed–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; $4.50), which concentrates on popular culture of the region – from blues to poster art – and hosts live roots American music and a live radio show.

New Braunfels' visitor center, off I-35 at exit 187 (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; 1-800/572-2626, 📞 www.nbjumpin.com), provides a list of accommodation, as well as information on renting rafts and tubes. Should you need to stay, the Heidelberg Lodges (📞 830/625-9967, 📞 www.heidelberglodges.com; 📍), 1020 N Houston St, are rustic, but their lovely riverfront location makes them a bargain. For food, skip the town's kitschy sausage houses and head for the elegant Huisache Grill, 303 W San Antonio St (📞 830/620-9001), for sophisticated, reasonably priced contemporary cuisine.

The best nightlife is to be had at the atmospheric clapboard 🍷 Gruene Hall, 1281 Gruene Rd (📞 830/606-1281, 📞 www.gruenehall.com), where you can see top country stars from Thursday to Saturday.

The Lyndon B. Johnson Historical Park

Sixty-five miles west of Austin on US-290, the Lyndon B. Johnson State and National Historical Park preserves LBJ's birthplace (1908) and the ranch house where Lady Bird Johnson continued to live long after her husband's death in 1973 (90min tours leave from the visitor center, daily 10am–4pm; $6).

The visitor center (daily 8.45am–5pm; 📞 830/868-7128, 📞 www.nps.gov/lyjo) and Johnson's boyhood home (daily 9am–4pm; free guided tours every 30min) are at sleepy Johnson City, fourteen miles further east; for a good lunch – chicken fried steak, BBQ, catfish and the like – stop off at the Hill Country Cupboard, at the junction of US-281 and US-290 (☎ 830/868-4625).

Fredericksburg

FREDERICKSBURG, smack in the middle of the Hill Country, might at first glance look like a pastiche of a German village, overrun by Biergartens and gingerbread storefronts. In fact it's still pretty much the town founded by six hundred enterprising Germans in 1846. They managed to make – and, uniquely, keep – treaties with the local Comanche, and their community survived through epidemics and civil war.

On weekends, crowds of day-trippers from San Antonio and Austin throng Main Street's cutesy specialty stores and fancy tearooms. Several original structures make up the Pioneer Museum at 309 W Main St, including a church and a store (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 1–5pm; $4). A little more incongruous, the National Museum of the Pacific War, 340 E Main St (daily 9am–5pm; $6), features a Japanese garden of peace, lays out a historical trail past aircraft, tanks, and heavy artillery, and incorporates the historic Nimitz Steamboat Hotel – which, with its looming tower really does look like a steamboat.

Practicalities

The CVB, one block off Main St at 302 East Austin St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–4pm; ☎ 830/997-6523, 🌐 www.fredericksburg-texas.com), has details of budget hotels along E Main Street; of these, the pool-equipped Sunday House at no. 501 (☎ 830/997-4484, 🌐 www.sundayhouseinn.com; Ⓢ) is one of the more luxurious. Bed-and-breakfast is big in historic Fredericksburg; The Full Moon Guesthouse, ten miles southeast of Fredericksburg at 3234 Luckenbach Rd (☎ 1-800/997-1124, 🌐 www.luckenbachtx.com; Ⓢ), offers luxurious accommodation in rural cottages and cabins in the sleepy musical hamlet of Luckenbach, immortalized in song by both Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings. For a list of welcoming getaways, contact Be My Guest, 110 N Milam (☎ 830/997-7227; 🌐 www.bemyguestfredericksburgtexas.com). There's camping in the lovely surrounds of Lady Bird Johnson Municipal Park, three miles southwest on Hwy-16 S, or in the Enchanted Rock State Natural Area, eighteen miles north on Ranch Road 965.

Restaurants and bakeries line Main Street. Dietz Bakery, at no. 218 (☎ 830/997-3250; closed Sun & Mon), is the oldest family-owned bakery in town. You can eat more substantially at Friedhelm's Bavarian Inn at no. 905 (closed Mon; ☎ 830/997-6300), which specializes in starchy plates of dumplings and sauerkraut.

North and east Texas

Early immigration into north and east Texas, during the days of the Republic and following the devastation of the Civil War, was largely from the Southern states. In the 1930s, the northeastern oil fields near the drab town of Tyler proved to be the richest ever found in the US. In addition to oil, agriculture has become a prime source of commerce, with logging important in the densely forested east. The grand exception is, of course, the Metroplex – the area that includes Dallas and Fort Worth. The main tourist attractions and cultural life of the region are concentrated here, but if you enjoy exploring small-town America, and have a car, the north and east can yield more subtle pleasures. The national forests of Angelina, Davy Crockett, Sabine, and Sam Houston in the east are delightful: the forest supervisor (☎ 936/639-8501) in Lufkin, midway between Davy Crockett and Angelina on US-59, has details of free and private camping facilities. Fans of Wim Wenders' movie will want to check out Paris, Texas, northeast on US-82.

East Texas

The tall pine forests of East Texas bear more relation to Louisiana than to the rest of the state; while undeniably Texan, the locals also identify themselves culturally and geographically with the adjacent corners of Arkansas and Louisiana – the “Arklatex” – and you'll find jambalaya and gumbo in restaurants along with standard Texas dishes.

Burial sites and reconstructed dwellings of the sophisticated Caddo Indians, an early southeastern mound-building culture, can be seen at the Caddoan Mounds State Historic Site, thirty miles west of Nacogdoches on Hwy-21. Active between the ninth and fourteenth centuries, the site includes a self-guided walking tour and videos on Caddoan history (Fri–Sun 9am–4pm; $2; ☎ 1-800/792-1112).

Big Thicket National Preserve

The Big Thicket National Preserve, south of the Piney Woods on US-96, is a remarkable composite of natural elements from the southwestern desert, central plains, and Appalachian Mountains, with swamps and bayous to boot. The area once offered ideal refuge for outlaws, runaway slaves, and gamblers; now it just hides a huge variety of plant and animal life, including deer, alligators, armadillos, possums, hogs, and panthers, and over three hundred species of birds. Wild flowers, orchids, and towering trees share space with cacti and yucca.

Before entering the site, check in at the visitor center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 409/951-6725, 🌐 www.nps.gov/bith), south of Angelina National Forest off US-69; casual rambling isn't allowed, and hiking or canoeing is best done with the preserve's guides. There is primitive camping in designated areas.

Nacogdoches

NACOGDOCHES, north of Angelina National Forest on US-59, claims to be the oldest town in Texas. One of the state's first five Spanish missions was established here in 1716, to keep a watchful eye on the French in Louisiana, though a pyramidal Caddo Indian Mound on the 500 block of Mound Street testifies to more ancient history. The 1830 Sterne-Hoya House, 211 S Lanana St, the town's oldest surviving and unreconstructed home, illustrates early pioneer life (Tues–Sat 8.30–11.30am & 1–5pm; free).

The visitor center is at 200 E Main St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; ☎ 1-888/OLDEST-TOWN, 🌐 www.visitnacogdoches.org). If you want to stay, the Jones House, 141 N Church St (☎ 936/559-1487, 🌐 www.thejones-housebandb.com; 📍), offers good bed-and-breakfast near downtown. The Clear Springs Café, 211 Old Tyler Rd (☎ 936/569-0489), is the best place to eat, serving fried catfish and onion rings in an old train depot.

Dallas

Contrary to popular belief, there's no oil in glitzy, status-conscious DALLAS. Since its foundation as a prairie trading post, by Tennessee lawyer John Neely Bryan and his Arkansas friend Joe Dallas in 1841, successive generations of entrepreneurs have amassed wealth here through trade and finance, using first cattle and later oil reserves as collateral. One early group of European settlers of the 1850s – French intellectuals and artists known as the La Réunion co-operative – had to pack up and move on after a series of summer droughts and a harsh winter; the few who stayed would include a future mayor of Dallas. The city still prides itself on their legacy of arts and high culture.

The power of money in Dallas was demonstrated in the late 1950s, when its financiers threw their weight behind integration. Potentially racist restaurant owners and bus drivers were pressured not to resist the new policies, and Dallas was spared major upheavals. The city's image was, however, catastrophically tarnished by the assassination of President Kennedy in 1963, and it took the building of the giant Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport in the 1960s, and the twin successes of the Dallas TV show and the Cowboys football team in the 1970s to restore confidence. Nowadays, competitive with Houston, and unjustifiably smug about its cowtown neighbor Fort Worth, Dallas boasts of its “sophistication” and its “old” wealth. Its occasional stuffiness is tempered by a typically Texas delight in self-parody – this is the city that calls itself “Big D,” after all – and as well as some good museums, there's fun to be had if you know where to look, especially in the Deep Ellum district, with its hip restaurants and nightlife.

Dallas is served by two major airports. Dallas/Fort Worth (DFW; ☎ 972/574-8888, 🌐 www.dfairport.com) is exactly midway between the two cities (around seventeen miles from each). Telephones in the baggage claim area link up to a variety of different shuttle buses, such as Super Shuttle (☎ 817/329-2000, 🌐 www.supershuttle.com), all charging around $16–23 to downtown; taxis cost around $40 (Yellow/Checker ☎ 214/426-6262). The other major airport, Love Field (☎ 214/670-6073, 🌐 www.dallas-lovefield.com), used mostly by Southwest Airlines, lies about nine miles northwest of Dallas, from where taxis to downtown cost around $17, shuttles around $11. Greyhound is at 205 S Lamar St downtown, while Amtrak's 1916 Union Station is further west at 400 S Houston St. The Trinity Railway Express (☎ 214/979-1111, 🌐 www.trinityrailwayexpress.org) service runs commuter service to Fort Worth for $2.25.

The downtown visitor center is in the “Old Red” Courthouse, 100 S Houston St, near the Kennedy-related sights (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; ☎ 214/571-1300, 🌐 www.visitdallas.com).

Dallas proper is circled by Inner Loop 12 (or Northwest Highway) and the Outer Loop I-635 (which becomes LBJ Freeway). Though downtown's main sights are easy to tour on foot, you'll do far better with a car. DART, the Dallas Area Rapid Transit system (☎ 214/979-1111, 🌐 www.dart.org), operates the city's buses and a swish light rail network that links downtown and the Dallas Convention Center with the West End and various sights ($1.25 local services, $2.25 express buses and trains, $2.50 day-passes). The McKinney Trolley (☎ 214/855-0006, 🌐 www.mata.org) runs north from the downtown Dallas Museum of Art up McKinney Avenue to the West Village, a complex of yuppie restaurants and bars (every 30min Mon–Fri 7am–10pm, Sat 10am–10pm; free, volunteer fares accepted).

Accommodation

Downtown Dallas is firmly geared toward business travelers, though the upscale hotels offer some reasonable weekend deals. Chain motels are concentrated way out on the freeways; there are lots on LBJ Freeway near the Galleria mall, a dozen miles north, for example. For atmosphere and value, you are better off staying in nearby Fort Worth (see p.751).

The Adolphus 1321 Commerce St ☎214/742-8200, @www.hoteladolphus.com. Stunning historic downtown hotel, decorated with antiques. Said to be the most beautiful building west of Venice, Italy, when it was built in 1912, it's still by far Dallas's most glamorous place to stay. ③

Hotel Lawrence 302 S Houston St ☎1-877/396-0334, @www.hotellawrencedallas.com. Very central European-style hotel in a 1920s building. Small, comfortable rooms, a good continental breakfast, and milk and cookies every evening. ⑤

lq.com. Decent-priced rooms near the Galleria mall and the burgeoning Lower Greenville shopping and entertainment district. ④

Springhill Suites Downtown 1907 N Lamar St ☎214/999-0500, @marriott.com/property/propertypage/DALWE. Its unbeatable West End location, clean, large rooms, and substantial continental breakfast make this one of downtown's best deals. ④

Stoneleigh Hotel 2927 Maple Ave ☎214/871-7111, @www.stoneleighhotel.com. Characterful, comfortable 1920s hotel in the wealthy Turtle Creek area, three miles north of downtown. ⑥

The City

Downtown Dallas is a paean to commerce. Studding the rather elegant modern skyline, many of its skyscrapers are landmarks in themselves. At night, more than two miles of green argon tubing delineate the 72-story Bank of America building at Lamar and Main, while the microphone-shaped Reunion Tower, 300 Reunion Blvd, on the west side of downtown next to the Amtrak station, illuminates the dark skies with a sparkly light show. Its 55th-story observation deck (Sun–Thurs 10am–10pm, Fri & Sat 9am–11pm; $2) offers great views, as does the revolving Dome Lounge cocktail bar.

Main Street and the Arts District

The original Neiman Marcus department store, famed for its glamorous Christmas catalog, was set up in Dallas by sister and brother Carrie Neiman and Herbert Marcus in 1907. The first store was destroyed in a fire, but its replacement, built in 1914, still lords it over busy Main Street. One refuge from the downtown hub-bub is the Philip Johnson-designed Thanksgiving Square (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm), at the intersection of Akard, Ervay, and Bryan streets and Pacific Avenue, with its meditation garden, fountains, and modern spiraling chapel. Seven blocks south of the square on Ervay Street looms the cantilevered upside-down pyramid of City Hall, designed in 1977 by I.M. Pei and possibly familiar as the police station in Robocop.

On the north edge of downtown, the Arts District boasts an excellent gaggle of galleries. The terrific Dallas Museum of Art, 1717 N Harwood St (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm, Thurs until 9pm; $10 including audio tour, free Thurs 5–9pm, $16 combination ticket with Nasher Sculpture Center; @www.dallasmuseumofart.org), has an especially impressive pre-Columbian collection in the Gallery of the Americas, along with splendid artifacts from Africa, Asia and the Pacific and some major players from Europe. Across Harwood Drive, the Nasher Sculpture Center (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm, Thurs until 9pm; $10, $16 combination ticket with the Dallas Museum of Art) has a few galleries inside, but saves the best of its collection – large-scale modern works by the likes of Alexander Calder, Barbara Hepworth and Roy Lichtenstein – for the garden. Don't miss James Turrell's meditative walk-in installation Tending (Blue). Cross Flora Street to get to the smaller Crow Collection of Eastern Art (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs until 9pm; free), which fills its very peaceful space with delicately hewn works from China, Tibet, Cambodia, and India.

West End, Dealey Plaza, and around

The restored redbrick warehouses of the West End Historic District, the site of the original 1841 settlement on Lamar and Munger streets, are filled with specialty stores and theme restaurants; it's a lively, touristy place, thronged at weekends with families and singles out to party. The sharks and rainforest creatures at the Dallas World Aquarium, 1801 N Griffin St, keep the children happy (daily 10am–5pm; $15.95, $8.95 children). In complete contrast, a few blocks south and west lies Dealey Plaza, forever associated with the Kennedy assassination (see p.749). A small green space beside Houston Street's triple underpass, originally designed in the 1930s by a committee that included LBJ, it has become one of the most recognizable urban streetscapes in the world. Whenever you come, you will find tourists snapping pictures, many of them talking earnestly with the virulent conspiracy theorists who have taken up residence outside. The Texas Schoolbook Depository itself, at 411 Elm St, is now the Dallas County Administration Building, the penultimate floor of which houses The Sixth Floor Museum (daily 9am–6pm; $10, $13.50 with audio tour). Displays build up a suspenseful narrative, culminating in the infamous juddering 8mm footage of Kennedy crumpling into Jackie's arms; the images remain deeply affecting, and many visitors exorcize their grief by writing in the memory book provided at the end. The “gunman's nest” has been recreated and, whatever you believe about Oswald's guilt, it is undeniably chilling to look down at the streets below and imagine the mayhem the shooter must have seen that day.

One block east of Dealey Plaza, in the Dallas Historical Plaza on Main and Market streets, an open cenotaph, designed by Philip Johnson and enclosing an 8ft flat granite block, stands as the John F. Kennedy Memorial. Opposite, at 110 S Market St, the Conspiracy Museum (daily 10am–6pm; $9) is a dreadful waste of money. It strives to impress with its CD-ROM technology, but in fact displays the usual amateurish hand-drawn diagrams and wild accusations, interpreting virtually every public act in America since the late 1950s as the work of the Professional War Machine.

Pioneer Plaza and Old City Park

The city's main business and administrative district, on the south side of downtown, is focused around City Hall on Marilla Street. Pioneer Plaza, at Young and Griffin streets, holds the world's largest bronze sculpture, a monument to the mighty cattle drives of the West, depicting forty longhorn steers under the guidance of three cowboys.

The assassination of President Kennedy

It was 12.30pm on November 22, 1963, as John F. Kennedy greeted the Dallas crowds from his ceremonial motorcade, when the shots rang out over Dealey Plaza that not only killed a president but also definitively ended America's "Camelot" era.

Within hours, a gunman's nest was discovered in the nearby Texas Schoolbook Depository, and one of its employees, Lee Harvey Oswald, was arrested. Two days later, he in turn was shot and killed in a police station by nightclub owner Jack Ruby, who said he wanted to spare Kennedy's wife Jackie from having to testify at Oswald's trial. The Warren Commission, which investigated the assassination, concluded that Oswald had acted alone, but conspiracy theories have flourished ever since. Most accept that Oswald (an ex-Marine who defected to Russia and returned with a Russian wife) fired the shots, but see him as the fall guy in a larger plot, variously attributed to the Mafia, anti-Castroists, Cuba, the KGB, and US government agencies. Claims by witnesses to have heard shots on the famous Grassy Knoll on the north side of Elm Street remain unsubstantiated, but visitors can usually be found sniffing around here for clues – along with self-styled guides, ready to engage them in costly conversation. Senate inquiries were finally closed down by the Justice Department in 1988, arguing that there was no "persuasive evidence" of any plot.

Farther southeast, across I-30, near Harwood Street at 1717 Gano St, Dallas's first park, Old City Park, now serves as both recreational area and the Dallas Heritage Village, a living museum that charts the history of north Texas from 1840 to 1910. More than thirty buildings have been relocated here from towns in north Texas, among them a farmhouse, a bank, a train station, a store, a church, and a schoolhouse (Jan, Feb & Aug Tues–Sun 10am–2pm, rest of year Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $7).

Deep Ellum

Deep Ellum – five blocks east of downtown between the railroad tracks and I-30 at Elm and Main streets – is the city's alternative district. Famous in the 1920s for its jazz and blues clubs (and supposedly named by Blind Lemon Jefferson, though it's more likely to stem from the Southern pronunciation of "elm"), the old warehouse district now accommodates avant-garde galleries, tattoo parlors, hip clothes stores, and a gaggle of good restaurants and clubs. To the despair of its original inhabitants, prices are rocketing as the area drifts toward the mainstream, but the nonconformist edge remains.

Fair Park

Not far southeast of Deep Ellum, Fair Park, a gargantuan Art Deco plaza bedecked with endless Lone Stars, was built to house the Texas Centennial Exposition in 1936, and hosts the annual State Fair of Texas, the biggest event of its kind in the US. Its plethora of fine museums include the lively Women's Museum (Tues–Sun noon–5pm; $5; ☎ www.thewomensmuseum.org), full of intriguing facts and figures (women smile eight times a day more than men, apparently) and with temporary exhibits exploring subjects as varied as Marilyn Monroe, female photographers, and the lure of the shoe. The nearby African-American Museum (Tues–Fri noon–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; suggested donation $2; ☎ www.aamdallas.org) is also terrific, with a superb collection of folk art in its permanent collection, complete with detailed biographies. Changing exhibits focus primarily on African art. The Museum of Nature and Science (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8.50) boasts a reconstruction of the 20,000-year-old "Trinity River Mammoth," a lagoon nature walk, and exhibits on everything from fossils to dental health, while the Art Deco Dallas Aquarium (daily 9am–4.30pm; $3), known for its salamanders and pupfish, also has a “Seahorse Rodeo,” featuring a lively array of those mysteriously elegant creatures.

The centerpiece of the park is the magnificent Hall of State Building, an Art Deco treasure of bronze statues, blue tiles, mosaics, and murals, with rooms decorated to celebrate the different regions of Texas (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free). The park also holds the Cotton Bowl stadium, home of the annual college football classic, while for three weeks in October, Fair Park spills over with more than three million revelers enjoying the riotous State Fair (📧 www.bigtex.com) itself.

Eating

Dallas has a number of restaurant districts. Downtown, the West End Historic District is lively, if touristy, with rowdy chains including Dick's Last Resort and Joe's Crab Shack; in Deep Ellum young hipsters chow down on anything from sushi to ribs. Uptown, chic West Village, accessible on the McKinney trolley, is a squeaky-clean cluster of bars and eateries catering to youthful loft-dwellers; to the northeast of downtown, parallel to I-75, Lower Greenville Avenue has a funkier feel.

All Good Café 2934 Main St ☎214/742-5362, 📧 www.allgoodcafe.com. Fresh home-style cooking at this cheery Deep Ellum haunt, which is more evocative of Austin than Dallas and transforms into a live Texas music venue – zydeco, alt-country, jazz – in the evenings.

El Fenix 1601 McKinney Ave ☎214/747-1121. Don't let its ubiquity within the Metroplex stop you from trying out this family-owned Tex-Mex favorite – a Dallas institution since 1918. The tortilla soup is delicious.

Firehouse 1928 Greenville Ave ☎214/826-0097. An inventive fusion menu, with lots of spicy dishes, served in a comfortably elegant spot smack in the middle of Lower Greenville.

Gloria's 3715 Greenville Ave ☎214/874-0088. Catfish ceviche, hot banana-leaf tamales, and other low-priced, top-quality El Salvadorean dishes, along with occasional live salsa.

Monica's Aca y Alla 2914 Main St ☎214/748-7140. Wood-grilled, creative Mexican food, with dashes of Mediterranean and Asian influences, in a Deep Ellum hot spot jumping with live salsa and mambo on weekends.

Sonny Bryan's Smokehouse 2202 Inwood Rd ☎214/357-7120. The original location – it still looks like a shack – of this favorite local barbecue chain lies uptown. Get there in good time as the deliciously tender, smoky meat can be all snapped up by early afternoon. Mon–Fri 10–4, Sat 10–5; closed Sun.

Entertainment and nightlife

The two nightlife destinations in Dallas have to be Deep Ellum and the ever-so-slightly gritty Lower Greenville. Elsewhere nightlife is pretty formal. The Dallas Symphony Orchestra at the showpiece Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center (☎214/670-3600, 📧 www.dallasymphony.com), and the touring Dallas Black Dance Theater at 2627 Flora St (☎214/871-2376, 📧 www.dbdt.com) are highly regarded. If you're looking for a genuine Wild Western night out, however, head for Fort Worth (see opposite).

Full listings can be found in Thursday's free Dallas Observer (📧 www.dallasobserver.com) or in Friday's Dallas Morning News (📧 www.dallasnews.com).

Adair's 2624 E Commerce St ☎214/939-9900, 📧 www.adairssaloon.com. A Deep Ellum hole-in-the-wall that attracts both old-timers and students with its hard-edged live honky-tonk music. Plus shuffleboard and pool tables.

Bar of Soap 3615 Parry Ave ☎214/823-6617, 📧 www.barofsoap.net. Groovy dive bar-cum-laundromat on the outskirts of Deep Ellum, opposite Fair Park.

Club DaDa 2720 Elm St ☎214/744-3232, 📧 www.clubdada.com. Eclectic, intimate, Deep Ellum club, which features open-mike on Sundays, live bands, and club nights.

Granada Theater 3524 Greenville Ave ☎214/824-

9933, @www.granadatheater.com. Lovely old movie theater hosting big name acts.
Gypsy Tea Room 2548 Elm St ☎214/747-9663, @www.gypsytearoom.com. This grand old place, with a gorgeous ballroom and state-of-the-art facilities, is the city's top venue for big-name, mostly roots American music.
Muddy Waters 1518 Greenville Ave ☎214/823-1518. A down-home blues bar, with cheap beer and live acts on weekends.

New West 6532 E Northwest Hwy ☎214/361-6083, @www.newwestdallas.com. Great Tejano music on Friday nights and a laid-back, dressed up, festive crowd.
Sons of Hermann Hall 3414 Elm St ☎214/747-4422, @www.sonsofhermann.com. Delightfully old-school country venue, just beyond Deep Ellum, where the Texas masters come to play, and respectful young outfits pay tribute. Plus swing lessons, open-mike nights and acoustic jams.

Fort Worth

Yes, Dallas does have something Fort Worth doesn't have – a real city thirty miles away.

Amon Carter, publisher, Fort Worthian, philanthropist

Often dismissed as some kind of poor relation to Dallas, FORT WORTH in fact has a rush and an atmosphere largely missing in its neighbor thirty miles east, and, unlike Big D, is an unmissable stop on any Texas itinerary. This is one of the most “Western” cities in Texas. In the 1870s it was the last stop on the great cattle drive to Kansas, the Chisholm Trail; when the railroads arrived, it became a livestock market in its own right, with its own packing houses, while remaining a haven for cowboys and outlaws. While the cattle trade is still a major industry, and the Stockyards provide a stimulating, atmospheric slice of Old West life, Fort Worth can also pride itself on a number of truly excellent museums – the best in the state, funded by local millionaire philanthropists – and a buzzing downtown that exists on a human scale.

The main road between Fort Worth and Dallas, I-30, runs east–west through the city; Loop 820 encircles it, while I-35 runs north–south to the west of town. The Yellow Checker shuttle service (☎817/267-5150, @www.yellowcheckershuttle.com) runs to and from DFW International Airport, seventeen miles northeast (around $28). Amtrak pulls in four times per week just southeast of downtown at 1001 Jones St (☎817/332-2931), while Greyhound operates from 901 Commerce St (☎817/429-3089), next to the Convention Center. Fort Worth's public transportation system, The T (@www.the-t.com, ☎817/215-8600) operates useful buses and shuttles ($1.25), with the Trinity Railway Express (☎817/215-8600, @www.trinityrailwayexpress.org) running commuter service to Dallas for $2.25.

There are three visitor centers (@www.fortworth.com): in the Stockyards at 130 E Exchange Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 11am–5pm; ☎817/624-4741, @www.stockyardsstation.com), downtown in the CVB at 415 Throckmorton St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm; ☎817/336-8791 or 1-800/433-5747), and in the Cultural District at the Will Rogers Memorial Center at 3401 W Lancaster Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; ☎817/882-8588). The downtown Sundance Square and Stockyard areas are well patrolled and safe to walk around after dark; for a taxi between the two, call Yellow Checker (☎817/426-6262).

Accommodation

The liveliest places to stay are around Sundance Square downtown, or in the cowtown atmosphere of the Stockyards; standard motel rooms can be found along I-35.

☎ 817/626-6018, 🌐 www.amerisuites.com.

Though it has less cachet – and is quieter – than the Stockyards Hotel, this is a comfortable, clean, reliable option near Stockyards Station, with a small pool. 5

Courtyard Fort Worth Downtown/Blackstone
601 Main St ☎ 1/817-885-8700, 🌐 marriott.com/property/propertypage/dfwms. Friendly hotel in an old downtown building. Rooms on the upper floor have great views, and there's a pool. 5

Etta's Place 200 W 3rd St ☎ 817/255-5760, 🌐 www.ettas-place.com. Ten large and stylish B&B rooms in the heart of the Sundance Square area. The breakfast is great, and there are several patios and lounges. Named after the schoolteacher girlfriend of the Sundance Kid. 5

Residence Inn Cultural District 2500 Museum Way ☎ 1/817-885-8250, 🌐 marriott.com/property/propertypage/DFWRW. New hotel in the peaceful green environs of the cultural district, with spacious, tasteful suites, a gym and pool, and good complimentary breakfast. 5

☎ 817/625-6427 or 1-800/423-8471.

Lovely, historic Stockyards hotel, reputedly a favorite haunt of Bonnie and Clyde, with themed rooms like Western, Mountain Man, Indian, and Victorian, and an atmospheric saloon. If you want quiet, ask for a room at the back. 5

The City

TEXAS
Fort Worth

Fort Worth's main attractions fall tidily into a triangle anchored by downtown, with the Stockyards and the Cultural District two miles away to the north and west respectively. The chief focus of downtown Fort Worth is the lively Sundance Square, a leafy, redbrick-paved fourteen-block area of shops, restaurants, and bars between First and Sixth streets, ringed by glittering skyscrapers and pervaded with a genuine enthusiasm for the town's rich history. Filling the block bounded by Commerce, Calhoun, Fourth, and Fifth streets, the glorious Bass Performance Hall (free tours Sat 10.30am, from the West Portal entrance in the Grand Lobby; 🌐 www.basshall.com) is something of a showpiece for the district, a breathtaking building, fronted by exuberant trumpet-blowing angels, that recalls the great opera houses of Europe. Elsewhere, notice the carvings of longhorn skulls everywhere, and the many trompe-l'oeil murals – especially the Chisholm Trail mural on Fourth Street between Main and Houston. Fans of cowboy art should head for the Sid Richardson Collection of Western Art, tucked away at 309 Main St (Tues & Wed 10am–5pm, Thurs & Fri 10am–8pm, Sat 11am–8pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; 🌐 www.sidrmuseum.org), which has an excellent collection of late works by Frederic Remington, including some of his best black-and-white illustrations, and early elegiac cowboy scenes by Charles Russell; it also hosts temporary exhibitions.

Incidentally, the real Sundance Kid, along with other outlaws such as Bonnie and Clyde, spent their time a few blocks south, just north of I-30 at the city's original settlement. Even into the 1950s "Hell's Half Acre" was renowned for bawdy lawlessness; these days the area is far less lively, known mainly for the bubbling fountains and pools of its central Water Gardens.

Midway between downtown and the cultural district, the Cattle Raisers Museum, 1301 W Seventh St (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm; $3; 🌐 www.cattleraisersmuseum.org), uses lots of talking dummies to trace the cattle trade from the days of the open range and the great cattle drives to modern ranching and latter-day cowboys – with some interesting history on the travails of early women pioneers.

The Stockyards

With its wooden sidewalks and old storefronts, streetside corrals, grizzled wranglers, rodeos, and saloons, the ten-block Stockyards area – centered on Exchange Avenue, two miles north of downtown – offers a glorious evocation of the days when Fort Worth was "the richest little city in the world." While there are plenty of opportunities to satisfy cowboy-hungry tourists – not least the daily cattle drive down East Exchange Avenue – this is less a Wild West theme park than a step back in time. The cattle drives, a huffing, shuffling cavalcade of fifteen or so Texas Longhorns with six-foot horn spans, occur, weather permitting, at 11.30am from the corrals behind the Livestock Exchange Building (see below) with the herd arriving back around 4pm; stake a place in front of the visitor center (see p.751) at 130 E Exchange Ave for the best views. The visitor center is also the starting point for lively walking tours of the Stockyards (around 1hr; from $6).

Along with the steakhouses and honky-tonks, the stores in Fort Worth are heaven for Wild West fans. Make a beeline for the Maverick Trading Post, 100 E Exchange Ave, which is packed with hip cowgirl regalia, some of it vintage, and even has a bar serving cold beers. (They encourage you to drink first and buy later – this is not a good idea.) Other good bets include Fincher's rodeo equipment store and M.L. Leddy's hat, boot and saddle shop nearby. The shops and restaurants in the Stockyards Station, a brick-floored enclave in the old hog pens east of the visitor center, are more obviously touristy; the best is the Ernest Tubb Record Shop, which sells great Americana, folk and country and western. From here, a lovely old steam train puffs along to Eighth Avenue downtown ($10; 1hr; ☎817/410-3123, @www.grapevinesteamrailroad.com).

Museums in the Stockyards have an appealing small-town feel. The Stockyards Collection Museum (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, summer also Sun noon–5pm; free), in the huge 1902 Livestock Exchange Building at 131 E Exchange Ave, offers a lovingly compiled jumble of local memorabilia including steer skulls, pre-Columbian pottery, and rodeo posters. The Texas Cowboy Hall of Fame (Mon–Thurs 10am–6pm, Fri & Sat 10am–7pm, Sun noon–6pm; $5), next to the visitor center, places a judicious emphasis on cowboy duds, with lots of boots on proud display in a room dominated by old wagons. There's some great rodeo footage here, but if you want to see the real thing, head for the mission-style Cowtown Coliseum, next door to the Livestock Exchange (☎817/625-1025, @www.cowtowncoliseum.com; ticket prices vary), which also stages Wild West shows and country music hoedowns. It's fronted by a statue of Bill Pickett, the African-American rodeo star who invented the unsavory but effective practice of “bulldogging” – stunning the bull by biting its lip.

Even if you don’t fancy a drink, a two-step, or a live pro bull-riding show, you can’t visit the Stockyards without paying tribute to Billy Bob’s (Mon–Sat from 11am, Sun from noon; 📞 www.billybobstexas.com). A neon-spangled Wild West institution covering a full three acres, Billy Bob’s is the largest honky tonk in the world, bursting with gift stores, restaurants, lots of Western memorabilia, and delightfully cheesy photo ops. There’s a small cover, depending on the time of day; see opposite.

The Cultural District

It’s a little known fact that Fort Worth has the best galleries and museums in Texas, most of them concentrated in the Cultural District, two miles west of downtown. The most recent addition to the area, the unmissable Modern Art Museum, 3200 Darnell St (Sept–Nov & Feb–April Tues 10am–7pm, Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; Dec, Jan & May–Aug Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $8, free Wed; 📞 www.themodern.org), is a Tadao Ando-designed modernist structure whose light-flooded rooms hold the largest collection of modern art in the nation after New York’s Museum of Modern Art. All the heavyweights are represented; an entire floor is devoted to major touring exhibitions. Across the street, the smaller Kimbell Art Museum, 3333 Camp Bowie Blvd (Tues–Thurs & Sat 10am–5pm, Fri noon–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; free, admission charged for special exhibits; 📞 www.kimbellart.org), is another splendid building, a vaulted, naturally lit structure designed by Louis Kahn. The small, impeccable collection includes pre-Columbian and African pieces, with some noteworthy Mayan funerary urns, unusual Asian antiquities, and a handful of Renaissance masterpieces.

The Amon Carter Museum, just up the hill at 3501 Camp Bowie Blvd (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; 📞 www.cartermuseum.org), concentrates on American art, with stunning photographs of Western landscapes, as well as a fine assortment of Remingtons and Russells, and works by Winslow Homer and Georgia O’Keeffe. Kids will enjoy the wide-ranging Fort Worth Museum of Science and History (Mon–Thurs 9am–5.30pm, Fri & Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 11.30am–5.30pm; $8 includes entry to the National Cowgirl Museum, $14 with planetarium and film show; 📞 www.fwmsh.org) with its planetarium, IMAX theater, and Lone Star Dinosaurs exhibit, but don’t overlook the National Cowgirl Museum and Hall of Fame, opposite at 1720 Gendy St (Mon–Thurs 9.30am–5.30pm, Fri & Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 11.30am–5.30pm; $8 includes entry to the Museum of Science and History; 📞 www.cowgirl.net). Celebrating female pioneers, artists, ranchers, and rodeo riders, this gloriously interactive museum offers endless diversions; you can even take home a film of yourself riding a bucking bronco.

Eating

If you love steak, Fort Worth is for you, and especially the Stockyards area, where the many good steakhouses are frequented as much by cattle ranchers as by visitors. Mex and Tex-Mex tastes are also well served.

Angelo’s Barbecue 2533 White Settlement Rd
📞 817/332-0357. Venerable westside barbecue joint, north of the cultural district. Locals declare the brisket here to be the best in the city; the hickory-smoked ribs (afternoons only) are delicious, too. No reservations.

St 📞 817/624-3945. Dim lighting and wall-sized portraits of prize steers set the scene at this cozy Fort Worth institution, beloved for its juicy steaks – from T-bones to sirloin – and icy margaritas.

Joe T. Garcia's Mexican Dishes 2201 N Commerce St ☎ 817/626-4356. Just south of the Stockyards, this nationally famed Mexican restaurant is inside the owners' 1930s home. There are no menus, just a choice of two hefty tortilla/fajita dinners (around $10) that go very nicely with the frosty margaritas. Outdoor seating is available next to the family swimming pool. No credit cards; no reservations.

Lanny's Alta Cocina 3405 W 7th St ☎ 817/850-9996. Sophisticated, scrumptuous Mexican fusion food – foie gras with mezcal aspic, for example – in a warmly elegant dining room in the cultural district. Closed Mon; reservations recommended.
Reata 310 Houston St ☎ 817/336-1009. One of the nicest places to eat in Sundance Square, with a tempting Southwestern menu that ranges from upscale cuisine to home-style comfort food.

Nightlife and entertainment

You'd be hard pushed not to find something to your taste in after-dark Fort Worth, a city where roustabouts will happily down a few beers with modern jazz fans. Bar crawling is fun, and there's a great mix of live music venues (though the pick-up joints in the Stockyards are best avoided). Check the Fort Worth Weekly (📧 www.fwweekly.com) or the Fort Worth Star-Telegram (📧 www.star-telegram.com) for listings. For the performing arts, there's the splendid Bass Performance Hall downtown (see p.752; ☎ 817/212-4325; 📧 www.basshall.com), home to the city's orchestra, opera, theater, and dance companies. At the other end of the spectrum, if you're after a rambunctious Wild Western night out, head for the Stockyards. In addition to the places reviewed below, the Cowtown Coliseum (see p.753) hosts rodeos, Wild West shows, and special events throughout the year, and there are many places to hear live music, from Western swing to honky tonk. Check 📧 www.stockyardsstation.com for selected listings.

8.0 111 E 3rd St ☎ 817/336-0880, 📧 www.eight-o.com. Though it serves food, this highly popular Sundance Square joint is best known as a singles bar, with flamboyant decor, sidewalk seating, fancy cocktails, and frequent live music.

Billy Bob's Texas 2520 Rodeo Plaza ☎ 817/624-7117, 📧 www.billybobstexas.com. The jewel in Cowtown's crown, this is the largest honky-tonk in the world, down in the Stockyards, with pro bull-riding (Fri & Sat 9pm & 10pm; $2.50), pool tables, bars, restaurants and stores, weekly swing and country dance lessons, and big-name concerts. Sun–Tues $1 before 7pm, $3 after; Wed & Thurs $1 before 8pm, $4 after; Fri

Flying Saucer 111 E 4th St ☎ 817/336-7468, 📧 www.beerknurd.com. Choose from over 200 beers from around the world, often at enticing promotional prices, in a lively Sundance Square setting. Live music on the weekends.

 White Elephant Saloon 106 E Exchange Ave ☎ 817/624-8273, 📧 www.whiteelephantsaloon.com. Notoriously wild and authentic old Stockyards saloon with a cowboy hat hall of fame. Prop yourself up at the long wooden bar or settle into the beer garden and enjoy the live cowboy music. Closed Mon and sometimes Tues.

Toward the Panhandle

Routes west from central Texas lead you through the state's "backyard," where farmlands and rough-cut, juniper-covered hills give way to treeless, sandy landscapes. Of the towns, only Abilene and Sweetwater, both on I-20 toward El Paso, are even marginally interesting enough to be possible stopovers for long-distance drivers; both have a reasonable selection of budget motels. In theory, this is rich, oil-bearing land, but the cities have taken a battering since the slump.

The Panhandle

The inhabitants of the Panhandle, the southernmost portion of the Great Plains, call it “the real Texas”; a starkly romantic landscape strewn with tumbleweeds and mesquite trees, it certainly fulfills the fantasy of what Texas should look like. When Coronado’s expedition passed this way in the sixteenth century, the gold-seekers drove stakes into the ground across the vast and unchanging vista, despairing of otherwise finding their way home. Hence the name Llano Estacado, or staked plains, which still persists today.

Once the buffalo – and the natives – had been driven away from what was seen as perilous and uninhabitable frontier country, the Panhandle began in the 1870s to yield great natural resources. Helium, especially in Amarillo, and oil, as well as agriculture, have brought wealth to the region, which is also home to some of the world’s largest ranches. Many of these grand old places have diversified into tourism; some just open for the day, others provide (usually expensive) accommodation. The ranchers who entertain you are often natural showmen and women, whose welcome is utterly genuine, though to be sure they’d rather be working the animals for real than providing entertainment. Contact Amarillo’s CVB for details (see p.759).

Otherwise, the region holds few actual tourist attractions – its real appeal is its quirky ends-of-the-earth feel and its strange, rural beauty. Music has particular significance in an area famous for songwriters such as Buddy Holly, Roy Orbison, Waylon Jennings, Mac Davis, Joe Ely, Butch Hancock and Natalie Maines from the Dixie Chicks, and although most musicians relocate to cosmopolitan centers like Austin, many of them keep the hauntingly lovely West Texas close to their hearts.

Lubbock

LUBBOCK, the largest city in the Panhandle, was built on cotton. In recent years, with farming in crisis, the town’s economy has come to rely on manufacturing and retail, but you will still see the odd field of fat white puffballs, testimony to those defiant cotton farmers who have refused to sell out.

With its fields, farms, lumpy bungalows, and faceless block buildings, Lubbock is relentlessly ordinary-looking, its muted downtown area dotted with fading 1950s shopfronts. Which is not to say that it’s dull – though Southern Baptism has left its mark (famously, in 2004, Lubbock High School’s Gay-Straight Alliance lost a lawsuit to be granted recognition by the school board), Lubbock has a certain buzz, due in no small part to the large student population of Texas Tech. The ghost of Buddy Holly, the town’s favorite son, still looms large; the Buddy Holly Center is a must-see for music fans.

Loop 289 circles Lubbock proper, with the airport (☎806/775-2044, 🌐 www.flylia.com) a few minutes north; taxis to downtown cost around $10 (Yellow Taxi ☎806/765-7474). Citibus (☎806/712-2000, 🌐 www.citibus.com) runs commuter routes within the Loop, stopping at around 7.15pm (Mon–Sat only). The visitor center is at 1301 Broadway (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎806/747-5232 or 1-800/692-4035, 🌐 www.visitlubbock.org).

Prices for accommodation are reasonable, and rooms are plentiful; Avenue Q has a string of reliable chain hotels.

The Town

Downtown Lubbock, and Texas Tech University, are on the northern side of town. Few buildings of interest survive, thanks to the construction boom of the 1950s and a tornado in 1970. However, you can get a stimulating overview of local history at the university's Ranching Heritage Center, Fourth Street and

Buddy Holly

Lubbock's claim to world fame is as the birthplace of Charles Hardin Holley on September 7, 1936. Inspired by the blues and country music of his childhood – and a seminal encounter with the young Elvis Presley, gigging in Lubbock at the Cotton Club – Buddy Holly was one of Rock 'n' Roll's first singer-songwriters. The Holly sound, characterized by steady strumming guitar, rapid drumming, and his trademark hiccupping vocals, was made famous by hits such as Peggy Sue, Rave On, Not Fade Away, Oh Boy!, and That'll Be the Day. Buddy was killed at the age of 22 in the Iowa plane crash of February 3, 1959 (“the day the music died”) that also claimed the Big Bopper and Ritchie Valens.

Don't leave town without visiting the Buddy Holly Center, 1801 Crickets Ave (Ave G; Tues–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat 11am–6pm; 🌐 www.buddyhollycenter.org), an impressive space – fronted by a pair of giant spectacles – that holds Lubbock's collection of Holly memorabilia (contracts, clothes, rare records, fan letters, autographed items, and yes, those glasses). It also features a Texas Music Hall of Fame and various temporary exhibition galleries. All exhibits are free except for the Holly collection ($5).

Fair Park Coliseum 10th St and Ave A. Where Buddy opened shows for Bill Haley and Elvis Presley. His “discovery” here in 1955 led to a contract with Decca.

Buddy's grave in Lubbock's cemetery at the end of 34th St. Take the right fork inside the gate, and the grave, decorated with flowers and guitar picks, is on the left. Placed between his parents and his brother-in-law, this is Holly's second headstone; the original was stolen.

Indiana Avenue (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free), where more than thirty original ranch buildings, from simple cowboy huts to grand overseers’ houses, are set in a harsh landscape spiked with cacti and mesquite. The adjacent Texas Tech Museum (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8.30pm, Sun 1–5pm; free) is rather more far-reaching, with further Southwestern displays – including a superb textile collection, Buddy Holly memorabilia, and even some Italian frescoes for good measure.

Eating

Lubbock has a surprising variety of places to eat, with good barbecue and Tex-Mex and even some New American restaurants. Note that many establishments close before 10pm.

Abuelo's 4401 82nd St ☎ 806/794-1762. Upscale Mexican chain with good fish dishes and punch-packing margaritas.

Café J 2605 19th St ☎ 806/743-5400. An eclectic menu, with Mediterranean and Far Eastern influences, hip bar (chocolate martini, anyone?), and live country music on weekends keep this a firm favorite with students from Texas Tech across the road.

The County Line half a mile west of I-27, exit 8, in Escondido Canyon ☎ 806/763-6001. First-rate barbecue set in 22 landscaped acres complete with roaming peacocks and ducks.

Hub City Brewpub 1807 Buddy Holly Ave (Ave H) ☎ 806/747-1535. Lively, youthful spot, with decent grilled food, sandwiches, and some very fine beers.

Entertainment and nightlife

Designated the “Music Crossroads of Texas” by the state legislature in 1999, Lubbock exerts surprisingly little energy supporting young local musicians; many decamp to Austin. A new annual music festival (☎ 806/747-5232), held in the fall, is attempting to rectify that, showcasing local talent and attracting big names like Joe Ely.

The Depot District downtown, which spreads for a few blocks from 19th Street and Hwy-27, has a mix of lively chain bars and clubs. At the heart of the area, the lovely old Cactus Theater, 1812 Buddy Holly Ave (☎ 806/762-5233, @ www.cactustheater.com) features nostalgic musicals and variety shows, with frequent nods to you-know-who. The local Lubbock Avalanche-Journal (@ www.lubbockonline.com) carries listings.

Rodeos are always fun: Texas Tech holds one each year (@ www.orgs.ttu.edu/tturodeoassociation), and there's the ABC Rodeo at Lubbock Municipal Coliseum every spring (@ www.abcrodeo.com/prod01.htm). In the same spirit, the Panhandle South Plains Fair (@ www.southplainsfair.com) in late September, offers twirling contests, bull-riding, big-name country performers, and livestock exhibits.

AMARILLO may seem cut off from the rest of Texas, up in the northern Panhandle, but it stands on one of the great American cross-country routes – I-40, once the legendary Route 66 – roughly three hundred miles east of Albuquerque and 250 miles west of Oklahoma City. The name comes from the Spanish for “yellow,” the color of the soil characteristic to these parts. An early promoter of the city was so delighted with its potential as a site for lucrative buffalo hunting

(for those who braved the Apache and Comanche threat) and as excellent ranching land, that he painted all the buildings bright yellow. Today, sitting on ninety percent of the world's helium and hosting a world-class cattle market, Amarillo is a prosperous, laid-back city with a nice mix of cowtown appeal, vintage kitsch, and arty eccentricity.

I-40 cuts right through Amarillo, running south of downtown; the old Route 66 (Sixth Street) runs parallel to the north. Greyhound arrives downtown at 700 S Tyler St (☎806/374-5371), and there's a small airport (☎806/335-1671) seven miles east. You can pick up information from the downtown visitor center in the Civic Center (entrance 2), 401 S Buchanan St (May–Sept Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; Oct–April Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.30pm, Sat noon–4pm; ☎806/374-8474, 🌐www.amarillo-cvb.org).

Innumerable chain hotels are concentrated along I-40 – for good-fun cowboy kitsch, you can't beat the 🐎 Big Texan Steak House Motel, 7701 I-40 E at exit 75 (☎1-800/657-7177, 🌐www.bigtexan.com; 🍷), with its Texas flag shower curtains, cowhide bedcovers and saloon doors – and famed restaurant (see below). For a little luxury in the heart of town, Auntie's House, 1712 S Polk St (☎806/371-8054, 🌐www.auntieshouse.com; 🍷), is a sweet, welcoming B&B, complete with hot tub.

Amarillo's small “old town” consists of a few tree-lined streets and staid old homes. More interesting is the Route 66 Historic District, known locally as Old San Jacinto, a quirky stretch of restaurants and stores that runs west along Sixth Street (the old Route 66) from Georgia for about a mile to Western Street.

For more classic Americana, drive ten miles west of town on I-40 to exit 60 (Arnot Road) and Cadillac Ranch. An extraordinary vision in the middle of nowhere, ten battered roadsters stand upended in the soil, their tail fins demonstrating the different Cadillac designs from 1949 to 1963. Since the cars were installed in 1974, they have been subject to countless makeovers at the hands of graffiti artists, photographers, and members of the public – all encouraged by owner Stanley Marsh 3 (he prefers to use 3 rather than III), eccentric helium millionaire and art patron, on whose land the cars are planted, and who is also responsible for the wacky signs (“Strong drink!”) dotted around Old San Jacinto.

Amarillo is also host to the world's stompingest, snortingest livestock auction (☎806/373-7464, 🌐www.amarillolivestockauction.com), held on Tuesdays in the stockyards at 100 Manhattan off Third, on the east side of town – it's a great show.

Eating and drinking

Carnivores will be in heaven – this is steak country through and through.

Big Texan Steak House 7701 I-40 E, exit 75 ☎1-800/657-7177. Rip-roaring Wild Western fun in this famed old restaurant, which as well as serving fried rattlesnake and ostrich burgers, offers the 72oz steak challenge: if you can eat it within an hour, you get it free (losers pony up around $50).

Jorge's Tacos Garcia 1100 S Ross St ☎806/371-0411. Amarillo's most festive environment in which to enjoy delicious West Texas Mexican food.

OHMS Gallery Café 619 S Tyler St ☎806/373-3233. Very tasty, decidedly international dishes – lasagna, shepherd's pie, enchiladas – served cafeteria-style for lunch (Mon–Fri); a more upmarket ambiance sets in on weekend evenings.

Stockyard Café 100 Manhattan, in the livestock auction building ☎806/374-6024. Join hungry traders and cattlemen tucking into massive steaks from chicken-fried to sirloin. Try to get there on a Tuesday, when the auction is in full throttle.

Canyon

In the former cattle town of CANYON, fifteen miles south of Amarillo on I-27, the superb Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum, 2503 4th Ave, has engaging exhibits on, among other things, pioneer history, Texas ranching, Western and American-Indian art; it even boasts the oldest known assembly line automobile (a 1903 Model A Ford). Temporary shows, highlighting local themes, are always worth a look (daily: June–Aug Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 1–6pm, Sept–May Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–6pm; $7; @ www.panhandleplains.org).

Palo Duro State Canyon Park

Palo Duro Canyon, twelve miles east of Canyon and twenty miles southeast of Amarillo, is one of Texas's best-kept secrets. Plunging one thousand feet from rim to floor, it splits the plains wide open and offers breathtaking views and colors, especially at sunset and in spring, when the whole chasm is scattered with wild flowers. Pillars of sturdy sandstone loom over the flame-colored rocks, which Coronado's explorers named "Spanish Skirts" on account of their resemblance to striped flouncers.

The park (daily 8am–10pm; $4 per person; ☎ 806/488-2227 ext 100, @ www.palodurocanyon.com) is in the most scenic part of the 130-mile canyon. You can explore the depths on horseback (☎ 806/488-2180), though backpackers and hikers may want to escape the tourist busloads by following the Prairie Dog Town fork into more remote sections of the park. To camp, or to stay in one of the rustic cabins (📍), call ☎ 512/389-8900.

You may balk at heart-warming musical extravaganzas, but the outdoor production TEXAS, about the settling of the Panhandle in the 1800s, has an undeniable pull in an area not exactly throbbing with nightlife, with the dramatic prairie sky as a ceiling, a 600-foot cliff as a backdrop, and genuine thunder and lightning (June–Aug Tues–Sat 8.30pm; $11–27; pre-show barbecue 6pm, $10; ☎ 806/655-2181, @ www.heritageent.com).

West Texas

West Texas is the stuff of Wild West fantasy: parched deserts, ghost towns, looming mesas, and above all, a sense of utter isolation. Although the area south from the Panhandle down to Del Rio on the Rio Grande is, for convenience, also known as West Texas, the fantasy really begins west of the Pecos River; you can drive for hours without a sign of life to El Paso, Texas's shabby westernmost city. Most travelers only venture into the desolation to explore Big Bend National Park, nearly three hundred miles southeast of El Paso in the curve of the Rio Grande, but the region also boasts a handful of quirky little towns that provide delightfully offbeat stopovers.

Minimal rainfall and harsh land were not the only hindrances to settlement. The Apache and Comanche, though accustomed in the 1820s to trading with Mexican comancheros, were infuriated when hapless white pioneers began to trickle in during the 1830s. With their horsemanship and ability to find scarce water supplies, the Native Americans posed a real threat; upon statehood, a string of cavalry forts was set up with the help of federal money to protect Mexican and Anglo settlers from attack. As trading posts and cattle ranges began to spring up after the Civil War, the paramilitary Texas Rangers were sent out on violent vigilante missions. Eventually, as in the Panhandle, a brutal program of buffalo slaughter, supported by the US Army, starved the natives out. Not long afterward, oil was discovered in West Texas and boom towns appeared, with all the attendant lawlessness, gunslinging, and brawling. Those days are long gone, but the area has been capitalizing on its Wild West image ever since.

The Davis Mountains

The temperate climate of the verdant Davis Mountains, south of the junction of I-10 and I-20, makes them a popular summer destination for sweltering urban Texans, while the glassy, starry nights facilitate the work of the McDonald Observatory about twenty miles north of Fort Davis on Hwy-118 (guided tours of dome and 107-inch telescope daily 11am and 2pm $8; self-guided tours daily 9am–5pm, free; ☎ 432/426-3640, 🌐 www.mcdonaldobservatory.org). Nocturnal “star parties” here provide the opportunity to look at the constellations for yourself (Tues, Fri & Sat, time depends on sunset). Davis Mountains State Park ($3 per person; ☎ 1-800/792-1112, 🌐 www.tpwd.state.tx.us/spdest/findadest/parks/davis_mountains/), which starts four miles northwest of Fort Davis, offers good hiking, as well as fishing and swimming at the foot of the canyon in Limpia Creek. Rooms at its romantic 1930s Indian Lodge are clean and comfortable – and often booked up, so call in advance (☎ 432/426-3254 or 1-800/792-1112; ④).

Fort Davis itself, a one-street town at the junction of highways 118 and 17, is a peaceful base for exploring the state park, en route to or from Big Bend. The visitor center, on Memorial Square (☎ 432/426-3015, 🌐 www.fortdavis.com) offers road maps for the 75-mile scenic loop of the Davis Mountains.

Charmingly placed above a wood-fronted drugstore on Main Street, the rustic 🏠 Old Texas Inn has cozy, colorful rustic-style rooms; breakfast is served in the café downstairs, accompanied by country tunes on the jukebox (☎ 432/426-3118, 🌐 www.oldtexasinn.com; ③). The more expensive Hotel Limpia, opposite (☎ 432/426-3237 or 1-800/662-5517, 🌐 www.hotelimpia.com; ④), is also full of character, serving home-cooked dinners in its cozy dining room. There’s delightfully little to do in Fort Davis at night, though you can buy “membership” to the hotel’s bar for $3.

Marfa

MARFA, a small ranching town and arts community 21 miles south of Fort Davis on Hwy-17, has three claims to fame. Firstly, James Dean’s last film, the 1956 epic, Giant, was filmed here; the cast stayed at the historic and swanky Hotel Paisano on Hwy-17 (☎ 432/729-3669 or 1-866/729-3669, 🌐 www.hotelpaisano.com; ④), where the sumptuous, ranch-style lobby, resplendent with dead animal heads and leather furniture, screens Giant continuously.

Next, there’s the “Marfa Lights”: mysterious bouncing lights that have been seen in the town’s flat fields since the 1880s, attracting conspiracy theorists and alien-hunters. The town’s visitor center, in the Hotel Paisano, can give advice on good vantage points to see the ghostly illuminations; if in doubt, head for the viewing center, nine miles east of town, between two and four hours after sunset.

Marfa’s third attraction, just outside town, is the extraordinary Chinati Foundation (tours Wed–Sun 10am & 2pm; $10; ☎ 432/729-4362, 🌐 www.chinati.org).

org). Founded by minimalist Donald Judd, the avant-garde works on show here – from artists like Judd, Dan Flavin and John Wesley – include some of the world’s largest permanent art installations, set in dramatic contexts both indoors and out.

Jett’s (☎ 432/729-3838), inside the Hotel Paisano, serves good, eclectic food, best enjoyed in the hotel’s romantic courtyard. At the friendly Marfa Book Co, 105 S Highland St (daily 9am–7pm; ☎ 432/729-3906), you can sip espresso drinks and fine wines while browsing their excellent selection of books.

Big Bend National Park

The Rio Grande, flowing through 1500-foot gorges, makes a ninety-degree bend south of Marathon to form the southern border of BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK – thanks to its isolation one of the least visited of the US national parks, and very much of a kind with the great desert parks of the Southwest.

The Apache, who forced the Chisos Indians out three hundred years ago, told that this hauntingly beautiful wilderness was used by the Great Spirit to dump all the rocks left over from the creation of the world; the Spanish, meanwhile, called it terra desconocida, “strange, unknown land”. A breathtaking million-acre expanse of pine-forested mountains and ocotilla-dotted desert, Big Bend has been home to prospectors and smugglers, a last frontier for the true-grit pioneers at the end of the nineteenth century, who took advantage of the rich cinnabar deposits for mercury mining. Today there is camping in specific areas, and some trailer parks, but much of the park remains barely charted territory. Ruins of primitive Mexican and white settlements are testament to Big Bend’s power to defeat earlier visitors. Wild animals have fared somewhat better: coyotes, roadrunners, and javelinas (an odd-looking, bristly black pig-like creature with a pointy snout) all roam free. Violent contrasts in topography and temperature result in dramatic juxtapositions of desert and mountain plant and animal life. Despite the dryness, tangles of pretty wild flowers and blossoming cacti, including peyote, erupt into color each April. In the heightened security measures since September 11th, it has become illegal to cross the Rio Grande into Mexico.

The most interesting route into Big Bend is from the west. You can’t follow the river all the way from El Paso, but Hwy-170 – the River Road, reached on Hwy-67 south from Marfa (see p.761) – runs through spectacular desert scenery for around thirty miles west from Ojinaga, climbing stark buttes from where you can peek down to the river. Before reaching the park boundary just beyond Study Butte, you pass through the haunting communities of Lajitas and Terlingua (see p.764).

Once in the park, unless you’re prepared to do some strenuous hiking, there are few opportunities to see the river itself; the main road is obliged to run across the desert, north of the outcrop of the Chisos Mountains. A spur road starting west of the headquarters at Panther Junction leads south for six miles, up into the alpine meadows of the Chisos Basin, ringed by dramatic (though not amazingly high) peaks. The one gap in the rocky wall here is the Window, looking out over the deserts and reached by a relatively simple trail. Driving twenty miles southeast of Panther Junction brings you to the riverside Rio Grande Village – unless you choose to detour just before, to bathe in some rather dilapidated natural hot springs that feed into the river.

At three separate stages within the park boundaries, the river runs through gigantic canyons. The westernmost, the Santa Elena, is the most common rafting trip; outfitters at Terlingua (see p.764) and Study Butte rent equipment and lead tours. Although there is virtually no whitewater, the canyon boasts the technically challenging Rock Slide, as well as stretches where the river swirls between awesome high rock walls, striated at an angle that makes it seem like you're plunging into an abyss. It's possible to drive within the park to the eastern end of the canyon, where the towering cliffs suddenly end and the river meanders through marshy fields; a short hike from here shows the gorge in all its splendor.

Practicalities

The park headquarters at Panther Junction (daily 8am–6pm; ☎ 432/477-2251), where you can pay the $15-per-vehicle entrance fee (good for seven days), has orientation exhibits and a daytime gas station. You can also pay the entrance fee at the Rio Grande Village visitor center (Nov–April daily 8.30am–4.30pm); Rio Grande Village itself has hot shower facilities in the grocery store, a laundry, and a daytime gas station. Most camping at the park's three developed campsites ($10; pay at a visitor center) is first-come, first-served, though some reservations can be made for the high season (Nov–April; 🌐 www.reserveusa.com; ☎ 1-877-444-6777). Primitive campgrounds are scattered along the many marked hiking trails. These have no facilities, and you'll need a wilderness permit (small fee) from a visitor center, plus a map, compass, flashlight, and first-aid kit before you can venture onto the trails.

The Chisos Basin, which has a visitor center (daily: Nov–March 8am–noon & 1–3.30pm, April–Oct 9am–noon & 1–4.30pm), a store, and a post office, is the site of the park's only roofed accommodation. The 🏡 Chisos Mountains Lodge (reservations essential; ☎ 432/477-2291, 🌐 www.chisosmountainslodge.com; 📍) offers motel-style rooms with balconies and gorgeous views, rustic lodge rooms, and a few stone cottages; you'll often hear javelinas snuffling for food outside your door. The good onsite restaurant, which serves American and Southwestern food, closes at 8pm.

There are additional visitor centers at Persimmon Gap (daily 9am–4.30pm), at the north entrance to the park, and Castolon (Nov–April daily 10am–noon & 1–5pm).

Terlingua and Lajitas

Some of the long-abandoned mercury-mining communities on the fringes of Big Bend are now stuttering back to life as alternative tourist centers. TERLINGUA in particular, an appealing little ghost town scattered across the scrubby hills along Hwy-170, is populated by adventurous types who work for the local rafting companies, along with assorted artisans, musicians, writers, and drifters lured by the vast, unending skies and strangely beautiful environs.

For such a tiny place, Terlingua has a lot to recommend it. Desert Sports offers a variety of rafting trips, from one to ten days (☎ 432-371-2727, 🌐 www.desertsportstx.com), leads group hikes, rents rafts and bikes, and provides shuttles into the back country. Allow around $125 for a full day's guided trip along Santa Elena Canyon (see p.762); canyons further out can cost up to $165.

There's also a vibrant little music scene, with a couple of friendly, hip venues; the Terlingua Bash, in October, sees musicians from around Texas gather for a weekend of gigs and campfire jams. Soon after, during the first weekend in November, the community hosts its world championship chili cookoff (🌐 www.chili.org/terlingua.html), when the place is absolutely buzzing.

La Posada Milagro, at the top of the hill, offers six luxuriously rustic rooms (☎ 432/371-3044, 🌐 www.laposadamilagro.com; 📍) in a beautifully restored dry-stack stone building, along with a four-bed bunkhouse (📍); the cheaper Chisos Mining Company Motel on Hwy-170 (☎ 432/371-2254, 🌐 www.cmcm.cc; 📍), three-quarters of a mile west of Hwy-18, has its own offbeat atmosphere. Near Terlingua's fly-blown cemetery, set against a backdrop of evocative ruins, a 1930s movie house has been converted into the welcoming 🏡 Starlight Theater, Bar and Restaurant (☎ 432/371-2326, 🌐 www.starlighttheatre.com), which, with its funky Southwestern decor, is the perfect place to enjoy a cold beer and soak up the haunting desert view. Serving upscale Southwestern cuisine and featuring frequent live music, it's Terlingua's social hub.

West of Terlingua, the once tiny community of LAJITAS has reinvented itself as Lajitas – The Ultimate Hideout, a 25,000-acre resort complex complete with golf course, pool, shops, theater and spa, and six very luxurious accommodation options (☎ 432/424-5000, 🌐 www.lajitas.com; 📍). Despite this drastic gentrification, the community's distinguished political figurehead remains in place: Clay Henry III, a beer-drinking goat who beat three other candidates – a wooden Indian, a dog, and a real person – for the mayoral post. Look for his pen, littered with empty Lone Star Longneck bottles, outside the adobe Lajitas Trading Post.

El Paso

Back when Texas was still Tejas, EL PASO, the second oldest settlement in the United States, was the main crossing on the Rio Grande. It still plays that role today, its 600,000 residents joining with another 1.7 million across the river in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, to form the largest binational (and bilingual) megalopolis in North America. At first sight it's not an especially pretty place – massive rail-yards fill up much of downtown, the belching smelters of copper mills line the riverfront, and the northern reaches are taken up by the giant Fort Bliss military base. Its dramatic setting, however, where the Franklin Mountains meet the Chihuahuan desert, gives it a certain bold pioneer edge, bearing more relation to old rather than new Mexico, with little of the pastel softness of the Southwest US. Local legend has it that when Wyatt Earp arrived in sharp-shooting El Paso, he thought it too wild for him, and boarded the first train to Tombstone.

El Paso's airport is about twenty minutes' drive northeast of downtown; a taxi to the center will cost $18, although most downtown hotels offer free van rides. Greyhound buses stop at 200 W San Antonio Ave (☎ 915/532-2365), while Amtrak (☎ 915/545-2247) pulls in at the Daniel Burnham-designed Union Station at 700 San Francisco St, slightly to the west.

The visitor center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 915/534-0601 or 1-800/351-6024, 🌐 www.visitelpaso.com) is at 1 Civic Center Plaza in the Convention Center complex.

Accommodation

Room rates in El Paso tend to be reasonable. The usual cheapie chains line I-10.

Camino Real 101 S El Paso St ☎ 915/534-3000, 🌐 www.caminoreal.com/elpaso. Downtown hotel in a grand old 1912 building with an elegant Southwestern restaurant (Azulejos) and a romantic bar topped with a colorful Tiffany dome and surrounded by rose and black marble. ④

Gardner Hotel & Hostel 311 E Franklin St ☎ 915/532-3661, 🌐 www.gardnerhotel.com. Rooms in this atmospheric hotel – where John Dillinger bedded down in the 1920s – vary from dorms ($18 members, $19 for others) through singles with shared bath to simple en suite doubles furnished with antiques. ①–④

Quality Inn & Suites 6099 Montana Ave ☎ 915/772-3300, 🌐 www.choicehotels.com. Convenient for the airport, this spick-and-span place has huge, comfortable rooms, free coffees and pastries and a free full breakfast. ④

Sunset Heights B&B Inn 717 W Yandell Drive ☎ 915/544-1743. Opulent Victorian B&B, a few minutes from downtown, serving evening meals on request. ④

The Town

Downtown El Paso holds surprisingly little to see other than a couple of passable art museums; what character it has continues to be shaped by the US–Mexico border. In times past outlaws and exiles from either side of the border would take refuge across the river, and today's traffic remains considerable and not entirely uncontroversial. Manual workers come north to find undocumented jobs, and US companies secretly dump their toxic waste on the south side. The border itself, the Rio Grande, has caused its share of disagreements: the river changed course quite often in the 1800s, and it was not until the 1960s, when it was run through a concrete channel, that it was made permanent. An attractive, 55-acre park, the Chamizal National Memorial, on the east side of downtown off Paisano Drive, was built to commemorate the settling of the border dispute; it has a small museum (daily 8am–5pm; free) and provides a pleasant green space for walks and picnics. The small but engrossing Border Patrol Museum, 4315 Transmountain Rd at Hwy-54 (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm; free), explains the work of the patrollers and highlights the ingenuity of smugglers.

On the river itself, the Cordova Bridge – or Bridge of the Americas – heads across into Mexico, where there's a larger park and a number of museums; there are no formalities, so long as you have a multiple-entry visa for the US and don't travel more than twenty or so miles south of the border. Crossing here is free; at the three other bridges – two downtown and one near the Ysleta Mission – you have to pay a small fee.

Although El Paso is predominantly Hispanic, there is also a substantial population of Tigua Indians, a displaced Pueblo tribe, based in a reservation (complete with the almost statutory casino) on Socorro Road, southeast of downtown. The reservation's arts-and-crafts center sells pottery and textiles. Adjacent to the reservation, the simple Ysleta del Sur, the oldest mission in the United States, marks the beginning of an eight-mile Mission Trail (☎915/534-0630), with three missions – still active churches – set among scruffy cotton, alfalfa, chili, onion, and pecan fields. Two miles southeast, the Socorro mission, moved from its original seventeenth-century site on the river, shows an unusually heavy Native American influence; the crenellation on either side of the bell tower represents a Tigua rain god. It is relatively unadorned inside, with hand-carved ceiling beams and lattices. The most remote and intriguing of the three missions, the cathedral-style San Elizario, lies six miles further along the trail. The chapel for the Spanish military, it's a striking place, with whitewashed walls, jewel-colored stained glass, and a decorative tin ceiling.

In Concordia cemetery, just northwest of the I-10 and Hwy-54 intersection, a shambling collection of crumbling stones and plain wooden crosses commemorates assorted pioneers and desperados. The grave of John Wesley Hardin, the much romanticized gunslinger, is marked by a crooked headstone northwest of the Chinese graveyard, a section walled-off since the Chinese built the railroads in the 1880s. El Paso is also the home of Tony Lama, makers of top-quality cowboy boots, available at substantial discounts at three outlets across town.

Eating and nightlife

Dining is, naturally, mostly Mexican. After dark, downtown practically expires; you'd do best to head to the university area (UTEP), northwest of downtown, and in particular the gaggle of restaurants and bars at Kern Place at Stanton and Cincinnati. Check the free monthly El Paso Scene (☎www.epscene.com) for listings.

Cattleman's Steakhouse Indian Cliffs Ranch, Fabens, north of I-10 ☎915/544-3200. This sprawling place, about 25 miles east of El Paso, is a regional legend, serving superb steaks and mesquite-smoked BBQ in its themed dining rooms – you can also wander around the working ranch, and there's a mini-zoo for the kids.

H&H Coffee Shop & Car Wash 701 E Yandell Drive ☎915/533-1144. Quirky time-warp diner dishing up tasty Tex Mex – reputed to be a favored stop for President Bush and assorted governors. Stop by in the morning for their wicked huevos rancheros.

Rol Ultra Lounge 2711 N Stanton St ☎915/313-9765. Classy Asian Fusion – sushi with a South-western twist, noodle dishes, salmon with ginger – in the Kern Place area near UTEP. The bar is a popular late-night spot.

Guadalupe Mountains National Park

Roughly one hundred miles east of El Paso, Hwy-62/180 climbs toward Carlsbad Caverns along the southern fringes of the Guadalupe Mountains, once a stronghold of the Mescalero Apache. The national park here ($3; park headquarters in Park Springs ☎915/828-3251, 🌐www.nps.gov/gumo) is very much a hiking and camping destination, barely penetrated by roads and without accommodation, food, or even gas. It's possible to hike right to the top of Guadalupe Peak, at 8749ft the highest point in Texas, but most walkers head instead for the painlessly flat trek through McKittrick Canyon, passing from bare desert into lush mountain forests beside sheer canyon walls. Camping within the park ($8 per night per tent site, check the rangers station) is allotted on a first-come, first-served basis.

The Great Plains

Stretching west of the Mississippi through Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, and North Dakota, THE GREAT PLAINS are lumped together in the popular imagination as an unappealing expanse of unvarying flatness and conservative “Middle American” values, to be passed through as fast as possible. Once, however, this was the West, an empty canvas on which outlaws, fur trappers, buffalo hunters, and cowboys painted their dreams. In the 1870s, the wide-open range of the lone prairie, which had originally been known as the Great American Desert but was then promoted as a bountiful Garden of Eden, inspired such fascination that General Custer was moved to call it “the fairest and richest portion of the national domain.”

The Plains, today so apparently uneventful, share a troubled history. The systematic destruction by white settlers of the awesome herds of bison presaged the virtual eradication of the Plains Indians. Reservations, agencies, and “assigned lands” dwindled as the natural resources of the area attracted white settlement; after 1874, when gold was discovered in the Black Hills, the fate of the Native Americans was practically sealed. However, thanks to warriors like Crazy Horse and Sitting Bull, the struggle for control of the Plains was by no means as easy as the Hollywood Westerns imply. Today the region is ambivalent about this history: many of its museums and monuments to Native Americans seem almost like a veiled celebration of the destruction of their culture.

The Plains are more comfortable glorying in a romantic myth of the Wild West and flaunting sanitized versions of wicked old cowtowns like Deadwood in South Dakota, Dodge City (once called the Beautiful, Bibulous Babylon of the Frontier) in Kansas, and St Joseph, Missouri, the birthplace of the Pony Express. Calamity Jane, Wild Bill Hickok, Billy the Kid, and Annie Oakley all left their marks here when this was the wild frontier, and today, in the sandy scrublands of northern Nebraska and North Dakota, you can still see real cowboys and cattle country.

There is also evidence of nineteenth-century Russian and German settlement here. Many of the oldest families on the Plains are descendants of European Mennonites who escaped religious persecution in the 1870s, bringing with them new farming methods that heralded the region's great agricultural prosperity. The Plains still provide the nation with much of its food and export two-thirds of the world's wheat, seas of which wave over the flat fields of Nebraska and Kansas. The economy has also long been dependent on oil, especially in Oklahoma, and gold in the Dakotas.

Defining the geographical limits of the Plains is difficult, and the term itself is almost a misnomer — there are vast flat expanses and long uninterrupted roads, but there are also canyons, forests, and splashes of unexpected color, as well as two of the nation's mightiest rivers: the Missouri, which weaves its course southeast from North Dakota, and the Mississippi, which it joins at St. Louis.

The woods, caves, and springs of the Ozarks, the lunar landscapes of South Dakota's Badlands, and stately Mount Rushmore are the region's most visited areas. Otherwise, there are few immediate attractions, and only St. Louis stands out as an urban destination. Drama comes instead in the form of such unpredictable weather as freak blizzards, dust storms, lightning storms, and the notorious “twister” tornadoes. Images of the devastating Thirties’ dustbowl Depression (when topsoil was whisked as far away as Washington, DC) remain as potent as the fantasy of Dorothy and Toto being swept up from Kansas by a tornado to the land of Oz.

A car is practically obligatory in the Plains, where distances are long, roads straight and seemingly endless, and the population sparse. The main routes (I-94, I-90, I-80, I-70, and I-40) cross from east to west, while north–south travel is often limited to quiet, curving byways. Greyhound buses travel the Interstates, but often bypass the small towns that provide a real sense of the region. Subsidiary bus lines include Jack Rabbit in South Dakota, and the Jefferson Line, which covers at least the urban areas in all the Plains states, and sometimes small towns too. Amtrak trains cross the Plains almost exclusively at night, with South Dakota not covered at all. St Louis, Missouri, has the major airport, while Wichita, Kansas, is a regional hub.

Oklahoma

Often ridiculed by the rest of the country as dust-filled and boring, OKLAHOMA has had a traumatic and far from dull history. In the 1830s all this land, held to be useless, was set aside as Indian Territory – a convenient dumping ground for the so-called Five Civilized Tribes who blocked white settlement in the southern states. The Choctaw and Chickasaw of Mississippi, the Seminole of Florida, and the Creek of Alabama were each assigned a share, while the rest (though already inhabited by indigenous Indians) was given to the Cherokee from Carolina, Tennessee, and Georgia, who followed in 1838 on the notorious four-month trek known as “the Trail of Tears” (see box, p.578). Today the state has a large Native American population – “oklahoma” is the Choctaw word for “red man” – and even the smallest towns tend to have museums of Native American history.

Once white settlers realized that Indian Territory was, in fact, well worth farming, they decided to stay. The Indians were relocated once more, and in a series of manic free-for-all scrambles starting in 1889, entire towns sprang up literally overnight. Those who jumped the gun and claimed land illegally were known as Sooners; hence Oklahoma’s nickname, the Sooner State. White settlers didn’t have an easy life, however; they faced, after great oil prosperity in the 1920s, an era of unthinkable hardship in the 1930s. The desperate migration, when whole communities fled the dust bowl for California, has come to encapsulate the worst horrors of the Depression, most famously in John Steinbeck’s novel (and John Ford’s film) The Grapes of Wrath, but also in Dorothea Lange’s haunting photos of itinerant families, hitching and camping on the road, and in the sad yet hopeful songs of Woody Guthrie. After the slump of the early Thirties, improved farming techniques brought life, and people, back to Oklahoma. Today the state is a Bible Belt stronghold, known for its staunch conservatism.

Oklahoma, however, is not all plains. Most of its places of interest, including Tulsa, lie in the hilly wooded northeast; the far side of the central “tornado alley” prairie grassland holds the state’s revitalized capital, Oklahoma City. The lakes and parks of the south, which bears more than a passing resemblance to neighboring Arkansas, have made tourism Oklahoma's second industry after oil.

Getting around Oklahoma

Car travel is the only way to get around. Amtrak serves Oklahoma City with one train a day from Fort Worth, Texas, and Greyhound buses speed along I-35 and I-40, which converge on Oklahoma City – but public transportation within the towns is minimal. Tulsa and Oklahoma City have airports. Route 66, which passes through both cities on its way from Missouri to Texas, is no longer a national highway, but if you have plenty of time (and sturdy tires: much of the road is in a bad way), it makes a nostalgic alternative to the interstates. Travel literature detailing small communities and ghost towns is plentiful at roadside information centers; or, you can contact the Oklahoma Route 66 Association (☎405/258-0008, @www.oklahomaroute66.com).

Eastern Oklahoma

Eastern Oklahoma includes the “Green Country” of the northeast, patterned with the foothills of the Ozarks, as well as woods, streams, lakes, and rivers that make it a popular camping destination. Tulsa is its cultural center; Tahlequah and Pawhuska are the capitals of the Cherokee and Osage nations respectively.

Tulsa

TULSA is a good-looking city, thanks in part to the Art Deco architecture that dates from its Twenties heyday as a wealthy oil town. Despite – or possibly because of – its pleasant atmosphere, two excellent museums, and thriving art scene, the city tends towards complacency. In addition, fundamentalist Christian attitudes are hard to ignore; Tulsa is known as “the Buckle of the Bible Belt.”

Arrival, information, and getting around

Tulsa International Airport lies a few minutes by cab ($25) east of downtown. Hwy-169 from Kansas City skirts the city's east side; I-44, which gives access from the south, is also the main route east–west across town. Greyhound comes in downtown at 317 S Detroit Ave. The CVB, Williams Center Tower II, 2 W. Second St, Suite 150 (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎918/585-1201 or 1-800/558-3311, @www.visittulsa.com), provides information on a self-guided walking tour of downtown. Local bus service operates between 5am and 8.30pm, with no Sunday service ($1.25).

Accommodation

Most of Tulsa's budget hotels are on the interstates and along W Skelly Drive, forking southwest from I-44. There's camping at the KOA, 19605 E Skelly Drive (☎918/266-4227; $24). There are a few B&Bs in town, including the Dream Catcher B&B (☎918/743-6704; 📍), which often books up nearly a year in advance; check the CVB website (see above) for other listings.

Ambassador Hotel 1324 S Main St ☎918/587-8200 or 1-888/408-8282. Restored to its 1929 elegance, rooms are pricey but lovely at this historic hotel. 📍

Best Western-Airport 222 N Garnett Road ☎918/438-0780. Clean rooms near the airport.

Rate includes a hot breakfast. 📍

Doubletree Hotel 616 W 7th St ☎918/587-8000.

Good downtown location, with tasteful rooms. 📍

Ramada Inn Tulsa 3175 E 51st St ☎918/743-9811. Comfortable rooms at the roadside, with an indoor pool. 📍

The City

Downtown Tulsa's most obvious landmark is the ornate Art Deco Union Depot, on the First Street and Boston Avenue Overpass, built in the early 1930s and now housing offices. One distinctive Twenties skyscraper, the Philtower, 527 S Boston Ave, has a green- and red-tiled sloping roof and crouching gargoyles, a lobby richly decorated in brass and marble, and a small gallery of Tulsa history. Lyons' Indian Store, an old trading post a few blocks east at 401 E 11th St, sells authentic goods made by more than thirty Oklahoma tribes, including feather headdresses, bead work, rugs, and jewelry. At 1301 S Boston Ave, the huge and gloriously exuberant Art Deco Boston Avenue Methodist Church offers good views of the city from its fourteenth story.

The Greenwood Historic District, a small section of narrow streets north of downtown, is where most of the town's black population once lived. In 1921, a brutal race riot erupted after a black man was accused of assaulting a white woman in a downtown elevator and houses, businesses, and churches in Greenwood were burned to the ground. Other properties fell victim to urban renewal in the mid-1960s, but a small grouping of buildings remains along Greenwood Avenue and Archer Street. The Greenwood Cultural Center, at 322 N Greenwood Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free), houses the Goodwin-Chappelle Gallery, a photographic portrait of the neighborhood's history, as well as the Oklahoma Jazz Hall of Fame, a fascinating tribute to jazz greats who were either residents of the state (Wardell Gray, Charlie Christian) or passed through on national tours (Cab Calloway, Dizzy Gillespie, Count Basie) to jam with local talent.

The airy and stylish Philbrook Museum of Art, 2727 S Rockford Rd (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm; $7.50), in the house of oilman Waite Phillips in the well-heeled suburb of Mapleridge, is a Florentine-style mansion set amid an oasis of fountains and greenery. Though displays include Native American pottery, African sculpture, and Renaissance paintings, the house itself is every bit as decorative as the art, with ostentatious marble floors, indoor fountains, and sweeping staircases.

Oral Roberts University, 7777 S Lewis Ave, is something of a must for its kitsch factor. The campus, which bears a striking resemblance to Disney's Tomorrowland, welcomes visitors with a 60ft monument of hands in prayer. The university and television station concept was inspired by visionary Oral Roberts, who, back in 1987, announced that God had decided to "call him home" unless he could raise $4.5 million before a certain deadline. Roberts retreated to a lonely vigil at the top of his Prayer Tower, a kind of B-movie spaceship, until he got his money. In the base of the tower, you can now see an exhibition on Roberts's life (Tues–Sat 10am–3.30pm, Sun noon–3.30pm). In the upper level, the Abundant Life Prayer Group works 24 hours a day to answer phone calls from faith-seekers worldwide.

Just northwest of downtown, the Gilcrease Museum, 1400 N Gilcrease Museum Rd (10am–5pm; $7; tours daily at 2pm), is set in the gently rolling Osage Hills, with a fine vista from the back and a good view of downtown from the front. Thomas Gilcrease, of Indian heritage, grew very rich after oil was found on his land. His private collection of Western art includes Native American works, as well as excellent Remingtons, Russells, and Morans.

Eating

Tulsa's restaurants are diverse and scattered; good options can be found along E 15th Street and S Peoria Avenue in the Brookside district, while downtown holds several down-home diners.

Bourbon Street Café 1542 E 15th St
 ☎918/583-5555. Extensive New Orleans-style

... menu, featuring excellent $6 gumbo. Live jazz
 ... Fri at 7pm.

Camerelli's 1536 E 15th St ☎918/582-8900. Inexpensive but tasty Italian pasta dishes, with a heavy carnivorous bent.

Casa Viva 2120 S Sheridan Rd ☎918/836-7200. Large, spicy dinners are served at this enormous restaurant, in rooms featuring a 20ft waterfall and an erupting volcano.

The Garlic Rose 3509 S Peoria Ave ☎918/746-4900. Good Italian dishes and an extensive wine list, with outdoor seating on a quiet courtyard.

Metro Diner 3001 E 11th St ☎918/592-2616. Fifties-style diner east of downtown, serving good home-baked pies and chicken-fried steaks, as well as great ice-cream sodas.

Nightlife and entertainment

There is even less to do in downtown Tulsa after dark than during the day; 15th and Cherry streets just south of downtown, and S Peoria Avenue by the river, are much livelier. Newspapers like the Urban Tulsa Weekly and Tulsa World carry full nightlife listings.

Boston's 1738 S Boston Ave ☎918/583-9520. Popular live music venue, with pub food and pool.

Club Majestic Brady St and Boston Ave ☎918/584-9494. Tulsa's biggest gay club, featuring dance music and drag shows.

Discoveryland! 10 miles west of downtown on W 41st St ☎918/245-6552, www.discoverylandusa.com. Outdoor venue for performances of Rodgers and Hammerstein's Oklahoma!. June–Aug Mon–Sat; $16.95; pre-show barbecue at 6pm for $10.

Spotlight Theatre 1381 Riverside Drive ☎918/587-5030. This Art Deco building has been hosting the freakishly popular melodrama The Drunkard for the past fifty years – accompanied by pretzels and sandwiches, every Sat at 7.45pm.

Claremore

Thirty miles northeast of Tulsa on Route 66, CLAREMORE, the birthplace of Will Rogers, populist comedian, journalist, and Twenties film star, is a shrine to a man being slowly forgotten as his films are no longer seen. His career began with a vaudeville show that included lassoing a horse and its rider while giving a witty commentary, and he was renowned for his pithy and good-natured one-liners. Incredibly, when he died in a plane crash in 1935 there was a nationwide thirty-minute silence. One of his most famous declarations, “I never met a man I didn’t like,” is inscribed on his statue at the Will Rogers Memorial, 1720 W Will Rogers Blvd (daily 8am–5pm; free), which displays his possessions, such as his “gag book,” together with stills and clips from his films.

In September, the Chili Cookoff and Bluegrass Festival comes to Claremore with its spicy chili competitions, clogging, and bluegrass gigs.

Bartlesville

For forty miles north of Tulsa, the monotony of the plains is relieved only by clumps of spindly scrub oaks. Then comes quiet BARTLESVILLE, dominated by the extraordinary, anachronistic Price Tower (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; tours Tues–Sat 11am and 2pm, Sun 2pm). This cantilevered green oddity, at Sixth St and Dewey Ave, was designed by Frank Lloyd Wright in 1956 and resembles a tall tree. Today it holds art galleries, the stylish Copper Restaurant + Bar, on its 15th and 16th floors, and the modern Inn at Price Tower, an Arts and Crafts-style hotel (☎1-877/424-2424; Ⓞ). The Frank Phillips Home, 1107 SE Cherokee Ave (Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $3 donation), built in 1908 by the founder of Phillips Oil, displays oil wealth at its gaudiest, with gold faucets, mirrored ceilings, and marble floors. More impressive is his Woolaroc Ranch, thirteen miles southwest in the Osage Hills, now a wildlife refuge and museum of Western art and history (daily 10am–5pm; Sept–May closed Mon; $8; 4.30pm last admission; www.woolaroc.org), where over sixty thousand artifacts are scattered throughout seven huge rooms. The great outdoors

From the Wild West outcrops of Monument Valley to the churning surf of California's Big Sur shoreline, the USA abounds in stupendous scenery. Many first-time visitors – especially those from Europe – are often staggered by the immensity and diversity of the country's wide-open spaces, and even if you think of yourself as a "city person," you should seize the opportunity to venture into at least some of that spectacular wilderness. While not all of the USA's finest landscapes lie within its fifty or so national parks, these parks, which combine practical amenities with environmental stewardship, make the obvious focus for a rewarding outdoors itinerary.

Hiking

America's national parks offer the perfect opportunity to experience the thrill of hiking in genuine wilderness while minimizing the risk of becoming lost or injured. Almost all of them hold networks of marked and maintained trails (designed to access the most scenic areas) on which it's nonetheless possible to escape the crowds and test your response to real physical challenges.

Hiking isn't about ticking off the hardest trails at the biggest-name parks; instead, it has much more to do with simply taking the time to engage with the landscape, and to appreciate where you are. That said, it is possible, of course, to single out some truly fabulous trails that are worth going out of your way for. At the Grand Canyon, try to clear time for the two-day hike along the steep, exposed South Kaibab Trail that leads you to the Colorado River. (Ideally, start the hike before dawn so you can watch the sun rise and avoid the midday heat.) Spend the night at Phantom Ranch on the canyon floor and climb back the next day along the gentler, shadier Bright Angel Trail. Spell-binding Zion National Park, further north, offers a wider range of trails, from the easy but spectacular Riverside Walk to the more demanding West Rim Trail, which climbs to and beyond the awesome viewpoint known as Angel's Landing. For great mountain hikes, there's the Skyline Trail in Washington's Mount Rainier National Park and the Hidden Lake Trail through the wildflowers of Glacier National Park. On the Hawaiian island of Maui, the Sliding Sands Trail enables hikers to descend into the multi-colored crater of a dormant volcano in Haleakala National Park, while fearless adventurers in California's Yosemite can climb to the summit of the amazing Half Dome, for vertiginous views over the awesome valley below.

Before you attempt any long trail, ask park rangers about current conditions. However, while it's important not to underestimate the difficulties – whether posed by the desert climate in the Southwest, the high altitude in the mountains, or the potential for cold and rain almost anywhere – don't let them put you off either; just be sure you take all proper precautions.

▽ Sawtooth National Recreation Area

Scenic driving

While the ideal way to experience the American wilderness is to set off on foot, if you choose your route carefully, it's possible to have as much fun on the road as on the trail. Time your trip to coincide with the coming of the fall colors, which arrive at different times in different parts of the country, and you'll have an experience you'll never forget.

Biking

For some outdoor enthusiasts, the best way to enjoy the scenery is to get on a bike and pedal your way straight through it. Whether it's the countryside of northern Vermont or the wilderness of southern Alaska, you'll never be wanting for spectacular scenery in the US. If you'd like camaraderie while hitting the trails, Backroads Bicycle Tours (@www.backroads.com) arranges multi-day excursions through breathtaking spots like the California Wine Country, Bryce Canyon, and Glacier National Park, with stays in campgrounds, country inns, or luxury hotels. More independent-minded travelers might contact the Adventure Cycling Association (@www.adv-cycling.org) for maps of 400-mile routes and detailed information on accommodation, restaurants, bike shops, and interesting sites along the way. Additionally, many states issue their own cycling guides. If you do take to the road as a cyclist, plan a route that avoids interstate highways (on which riding is unpleasant and usually illegal). RVs, huge eighteen-wheelers, and logging trucks can scream past and create intense backdrafts – capable of pulling you out into the middle of the road.

mountain passes to connect a string of atmospheric old mining towns, while down in Texas the River Road parallels the Rio Grande along the Mexican border, passing through quirky semi-ghost towns such as Terlingua. And then there's California, where Hwy-1 sets off from San Francisco for an utterly superb coastal drive south towards Los Angeles, with the sublime canyon-cut landscape of the Big Sur Coast as its undisputed highlight.

Great scenic drives can be found all over the US. The Blue Ridge Parkway curves along the crest of the Appalachian mountains for hundreds of miles through Virginia and North Carolina, sweeping through endless forested vistas with barely a sign of human habitation in sight. Similarly, the Natchez Trace Parkway follows a native American trail from Tennessee down to the Mississippi at Natchez, through dense woodland scattered with ancient settlements, while further north you can drive along the Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore for close-up views of the dramatic cliffs of Michigan's Upper Peninsula.

As a general rule, the further west you go, the more spectacular the scenery tends to be. Even the interstates can serve up unforgettable views, while less-used roads like US-14, which climbs through Wapiti Valley from Cody, Wyoming, up to Yellowstone, are often truly magnificent. In Idaho, Hwy-75 heads north from Ketchum to pass through the stunning serrated peaks of the Sawtooth National Recreation Area; further south in Utah, the officially designated Scenic Hwy-12 spends a hundred miles skirting the northern fringes of remote Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, with its extraordinary red-rock formations. Colorado's Million Dollar Highway climbs 11,000-foot

Acadia, Maine Tiny Mount Desert Island, just off the northern New England coast, is the first place in the US the sun hits each morning. A narrow fjord teems with wildlife, while the rugged hills offer fine hiking. p.293

Big Bend, Texas A dramatic, colorful, high-desert wilderness on the border with Mexico, cradled within a sweeping curve of the Rio Grande, where there's also high-grade white-water rafting. p.762

Bryce Canyon, Utah As bizarre a sight as it's possible to imagine: a throng of tottering sandstone pinnacles, glowing red, yellow, and orange, and burning like the flames of a forest fire into a remote Utah hillside. p.990

Canyonlands, Utah The Colorado and Green rivers thread through this mind-boggling labyrinth of contorted canyons and desiccated plateaus, but no roads cross it and hikers have hundreds of miles of trails to explore. p.994

Crater Lake, Oregon Exactly what the name suggests: a staggeringly beautiful blue lake, filling the interior of a collapsed volcanic caldera – and there's another cinder cone rising from its depths. p.1215

Denali, Alaska Visitors flock to the remote home of America's highest peak, Mount McKinley, for rafting, skiing, hiking, and the virtual certainty of seeing a bear. p.1252

Glacier, Montana Straddling the Continental Divide, holding spectacular waterfalls and lush Alpine meadows as well as mighty massifs, Glacier is the crown jewel of the Rockies. p.905

Hawaii Volcanoes, Hawaii Where the Big Island grows bigger before your very eyes, as torrents of incandescent lava explode into the steaming Pacific Ocean. p.1275

Yellowstone, Wyoming With its spurting geysers and bubbling mud pots, not to mention its lakes and mountains and wolves and bison, Yellowstone is a true natural wonder. p.880 art, from Native American works to the epic Western scenes of Remington and Russell, line the walls, while artifacts belonging to various tribes, pioneers, and cowboys are gathered in too great an abundance to take in. Look out for the 95-million-year-old dinosaur egg, exquisite Navajo blankets, scalps taken by Native Americans, and Buffalo Bill's weathered saddle. The Travelers Motel, 3105 SE Frank Phillips Blvd (☎ 918/333-1900; ①), provides bare-bones lodging; the more upscale Hotel Phillips is at 821 S Johnstone Ave (☎ 918/336-5600 or 1-800/331-0706; ④).

Tahlequah

A seventy-minute drive southeast from Tulsa on Hwy-51 brings you to TAHLEQUAH, the capital of the Cherokee nation that formed in 1839 when the Trail of Tears finally reached its end.

Tahlequah is uncommercialized, but three and a half miles south, off US-62, the Cherokee Heritage Center (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; closed Jan; $8.50; ⑩ www.cherokeeheritage.org) presents Native American culture in a largely interactive museum, leading the visitor across the Trail of Tears with the use of powerful audiovisual displays. The entrance fee also gets you into a reconstructed sixteenth-century Indian village that offers arts and crafts demonstrations. Summer performances are put on at the Tsa-La-Gi Amphitheater (☎ 1-888-999-6007).

For a town with such a lovely Main Street, Tahlequah has a pretty poor selection of hotels. The best is the Holiday Inn Express, 701 Holiday Drive (☎ 918/456-7800; ④), which has a pool. The not-so-exciting but slightly cheaper Tahlequah Motor Lodge, at 2501 S Muskogee Ave (☎ 918/456-2350; ③), is another option. The Restaurant of the Cherokees, on US-62 (☎ 918/456-2070), offers an American-food buffet and is next to the excellent Cherokee Nation Gift Shop.

Muskogee

In the 1830s, the Creek Indians relocated fifty miles southeast of Tulsa to MUSKOGEE. After establishing the town as the central meeting place of the Civilized Tribes, in 1905 Native American leaders gathered here to draw up a plan for their own separate state, which was never to be. The arrival of the railroad in the 1870s and the discovery of oil in 1903 both guaranteed that the white settlers would usurp the town. The Five Civilized Tribes Museum, Honor Heights Drive, Agency Hill (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $3), tells the Native Americans' story through costumes, documents, photographs and jewelry. The other unlikely attraction in town is the USS Batfish, a World War II-era submarine moored in the Oklahoma grass at 3500 Batfish Rd (Mon–Sat 9am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $5).

Muskogee is an appealing place, with a dozen motels within a few blocks along US-69, including a Days Inn at 900 S 32nd St (☎ 918/683-3911; ④). It also makes a good base for the crystal-clear Lake Tenkiller, thirty miles southeast on US-64. Surrounded by woods, cliffs, and quiet beaches, the lake is perfect for fishing, boating, swimming, and scuba-diving. There are camping facilities, but the place is very touristy; call ☎ 918/489-5641 for full details.

One hundred surprisingly green miles along the Will Rogers Turnpike and the famed Route 66 separate Oklahoma City and Tulsa. Along this historic highway, known as the “mother road,” the Blue Whale in Catoosa and the Round Barn in Arcadia are classic American roadside attractions. West of the state capital, I-40 carries you across empty agricultural communities, the tedium only broken by the worthwhile Route 66 Museum in Clinton. I-44 to Wichita Falls passes near the ruggedly beautiful Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge; to the north, in the Oklahoma Panhandle, ranches and tiny hamlets are the only signs of life.

Oklahoma City

OKLAHOMA CITY was created in a matter of hours on April 22, 1889, after a single gunshot signaled the opening of the land to white settlement. What was barren prairie at dawn was by nightfall a city of ten thousand. In 1911 the capital was moved here from nearby Guthrie, and in 1928 oil was discovered. Sitting on one of the nation’s largest oilfields, the city was brought up short by the slump in the 1980s, though it remains the largest stocker and feeder cattle market in the world. The economy came alive again in the 1990s, aided by tourism development and an inflated sales tax that funded redevelopment in run-down neighborhoods.

The devastating bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building on April 19, 1995, which killed 168 people, nineteen of them children, literally tore the heart out of the city; the massive community rescue effort has since helped Oklahoma City regain some of its self-confidence, though it will be a while before the city is fully healed. In June 2001, ex-military recluse Timothy McVeigh was executed for the crime; his accomplice, Terry Nichols, is serving a life sentence in jail for his part. A permanent landscaped memorial has been constructed at the former site of the Murrah building, while the Journal Record Building next door has been turned into the Museum and Institute for the Prevention of Terrorism.

Will Rogers World Airport lies southwest of the city and is connected to downtown by an airport shuttle (around $17 one-way; ☎ 405/681-3311). The CVB is downtown at 189 W Sheridan Ave (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 405/297-8912 or 1-800/225-5652, @ www.visitokc.com), not far from Greyhound at no. 427. Amtrak comes in once a day from Fort Worth at historic Santa Fe Station, on Santa Fe Street.

The city bus depot (@ www.gometro.org, ☎ 405/235-7433) is at 5th Street and N Hudson Avenue in the northwest part of downtown. Buses run daily except Sunday from 6am until 6pm ($1.25). The Oklahoma Spirit Trolleys (Mon–Sat 10am–11pm; 25¢–$1) run from the hotel strip in the Meridian and the stockyards to downtown.

Accommodation

Rooms are very cheap; try along the interstates, especially I-35 S and I-40 at Meridian, for chain motels. B&Bs are a good deal, but even the downtown luxury hotels can be affordable. There is a KOA campground fifteen miles east of downtown, on I-40 at exit 166 (☎ 405/391-5000; $20).

Best Western Saddleback Inn 4300 SW 3rd St ☎ 405/947-7000. One block north of I-40, on the west side of town. Pseudo-Indian decor, with luxurious touches like poolside service. ⑤

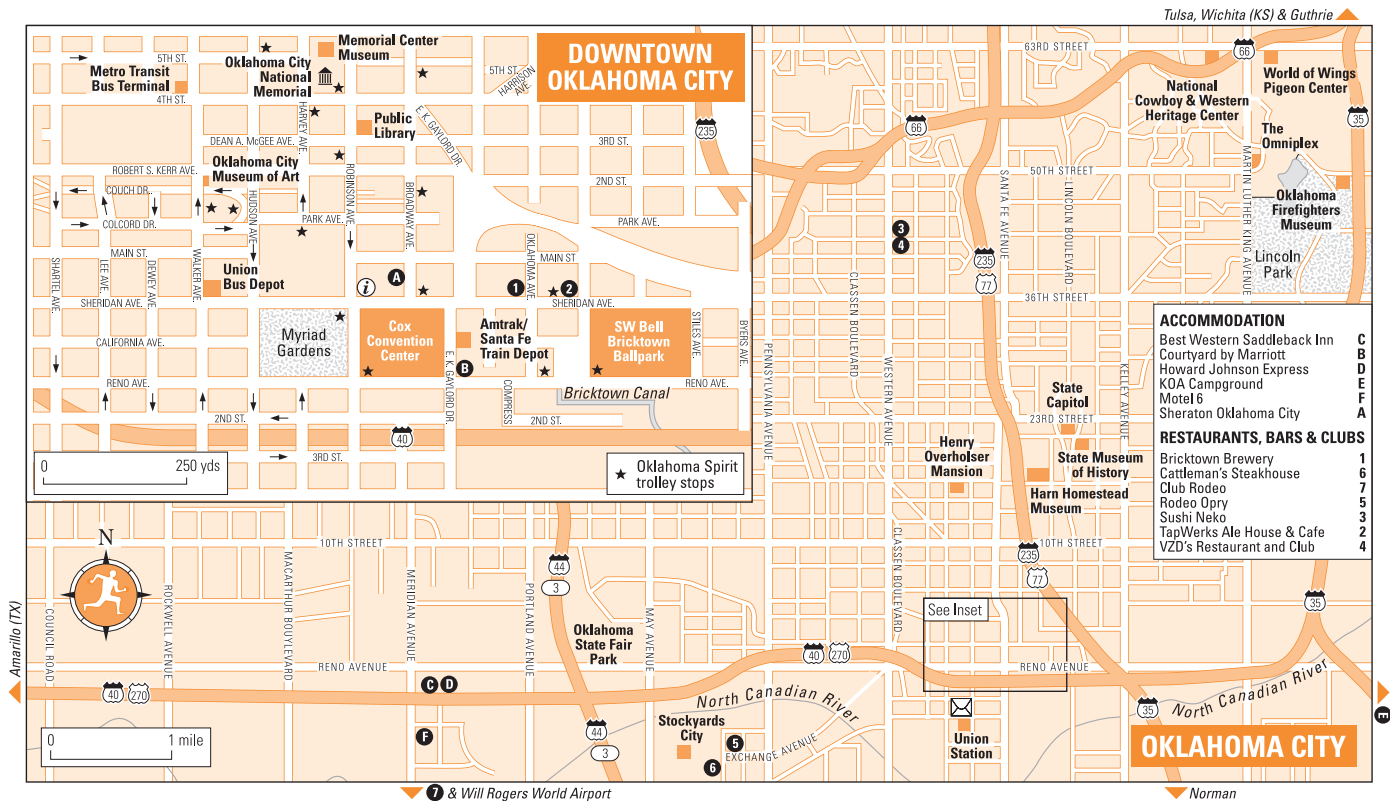

Courtyard by Marriott 2 W Reno ☎ 405/232-2290. Smart rooms with very comfortable beds in the heart of Bricktown. ⑥

Howard Johnson Express 400 S Meridian Ave

☎ 405/943-9841. Standard rooms close to the freeway, with breakfast included. ③

Motel 6 - Airport 820 S Meridian Ave ☎ 405/946-6662. No-frills accommodation to suit a backpacker’s budget. ②

Sheraton Oklahoma City 1 N Broadway ☎ 405/235-2780. Newly refurbished, but pricey, rooms right downtown. ⑦

The City

Tumbleweeds no longer roll through downtown Oklahoma City, but the city center remains a quiet affair, with low-key skyscrapers and little in the way of commercial activity. After work, people gravitate to the renovated warehouses of Bricktown, on Sheridan Ave east of the Santa Fe Railroad, which has a good selection of restaurants and bars. Myriad Gardens on Sheridan Ave, gives great views of the brick-towered downtown skyline from its prettily landscaped hills, gardens, and waterways. On a sunny day the Crystal Bridge tropical botanical garden, in a glass tube in the middle of the park, abounds in garish exotic blooms (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; $6).

A few blocks north, at 620 N Harvey Ave, where the Federal Building stood until the 1995 bombing, visitors mill somberly about the Oklahoma City National Memorial (open 24hrs; free). The site, which dominates the center of the city, includes a field of 168 empty bronze and glass chairs, and a black reflecting pool flanked by two massive gold barriers marking 9.01–9.03am – the period of destruction. Nearby, an elm tree that continued to bloom after the blast stands as a lone sentinel. The Memorial Museum behind it (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 1–6pm; $8) is also worth a visit, recounting the tragedy in gruesome detail, with TV news coverage from the day, interviews with survivors, and items pulled from the wreckage, such as shredded clothing, cracked coffee mugs, and twisted filing cabinets. Other sections describe the ensuing FBI investigation and McVeigh trial, and on the ground floor are tributes to the victims. Outside, the complex is surrounded by a chain-link fence weighed down by tokens and talismans left by mourners.

Close to the memorial, at 415 Couch Drive, is the new Oklahoma City Museum of Art (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; $9; www.okcmoa.com). The lobby is host to a 55ft blown-glass tower by Dale Chihuly, as well as a permanent exhibition of his work. Other galleries hold European and American art, as well as numerous traveling exhibitions.

Just northeast of downtown, a working oil well pumps crude from underneath the Capitol Building at 2300 N Lincoln Blvd (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; free). The Capitol Complex includes the State Museum of History (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free), across from the Governor's Mansion. The Heritage Hills area to the south, where the cattle barons, oil millionaires, and bankers used to live, is worth a visit for the luxurious Victorian Overholser Mansion, 405 NW 15th St (Tues–Sat 10am–3pm; hourly tours $3); nearby, the Harn Homestead Museum, 313 NE 16th St (Mon–Fri 10am–4pm; guided tours only; $5), is also worth a wander for its old barn and wagons, and general pioneer spirit.

Sitting atop Persimmon Hill overlooking Route 66, the National Cowboy Museum and Heritage Center, 1700 NE 63rd St (daily 9am–5pm; $8.50; www.nationalcowboymuseum.org), is a real treat, combining “high art” and popular art in one loving collection. In the works of Remington and Russell the link between Western art and Western movies is very clear. The paintings look like film stills, and titles such as Waiting for Trouble evoke the cinema's endlessly reworked myths of the West. Large exhibitions focus on contemporary Native American work, much of it colorful, bitter, and subversive. John Wayne's collection is a delight for the cowboy fetishist, and the Western Performers Hall of Fame pays homage to movie cowboys and cowgirls in hilariously reverent oil paintings and memorabilia.

Squeezed between Martin Luther King Drive and Hwy-35 are the Firefighters Museum, the City Zoo, and the Omniplex (ten acres of futuristic exhibits, with an aquarium, planetarium, and IMAX). At the northern end of the park, the modest World of Wings Pigeon Center (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm; free; www.pigeoncenter.org) specially breeds homing pigeons for racing. You can inspect the Storm chasing

With such unpredictable weather, it's no surprise that storm chasing has become big business in Oklahoma and surrounding "tornado alley" states. If you're either very foolhardy or very brave, you can spend a week or two driving around the prairies chasing tornadoes and some wicked, wild weather. Companies such as Storm Chasing Adventure Tours (☎303/888-8629, 🌐www.stormchasing.com) and Cloud 9 (☎405/323-1145; 🌐cloud9tours.com) claim that their operations are perfectly safe and all but guarantee you an upclose and personal encounter with a tornado. Tours run from one to two weeks, cover many Midwestern states and will set you back anywhere from $2,500 to $3,000.

small museum and aviary that houses racing breeds and "fancy" pigeons bred for their looks.

Oklahoma City's stockyards, on Agnew Ave and Exchange St, are the busiest in the world, having sold over one hundred million cattle since 1910. They're well worth a visit, though vegetarians and animal-lovers should steer clear. This is the real thing, stomping, snorting, and smelly, with scrawny animals shunted in and out of tiny pens for auction. The roughnecks who spend their lives here – smoking, chatting, even sleeping – take no apparent notice of the quick-fire auctioneer, but nonetheless millions of head of cattle are bought and sold each year, and it can make for addictive entertainment. Morning sales, starting at 6am (Monday and Tuesday only), are the most intense, fizzling out by late afternoon.

Eating

Beef is, of course, good in Oklahoma City, especially around the stockyards. The warehouse restaurants of Bricktown are popular with the after-work and singles crowds.

Catfish Cabin 6317 N Meridian Ave ☎405/721-7553 This local joint serves up legendary catfish to a loyal crowd.

Cattleman's Steakhouse 1309 S Agnew Ave ☎405/236-0416. Cattlemen from the adjacent stockyards eat in this comfortable, pub-like restaurant, which has served great steaks since 1910. The place was allegedly won in a craps game. Lunchtime specials are a good deal.

Sushi Neko 4318 N Western Ave ☎405/528-8862. Trendy Japanese restaurant with excellent sushi and outdoor seating.

TapWerks Ale House and Café 121 E Sheridan Ave ☎405/319-9599. Very popular Bricktown restaurant with a British-influenced menu and 108 beers on tap.

Nightlife and entertainment

If you're into country music, Oklahoma City will set you right, with quite a few live music and dance venues. Beyond that, there's a few pubs and some progressive clubs – especially those in Bricktown, which attempt to part Oklahoma City from its cowtown image. Wednesday's Oklahoma Gazette, along with lively articles, carries good listings.

Bricktown Brewer 1 Oklahoma Ave ☎405/232-BREW. Large brewpub, with giant tanks of beer on show in its restaurant. Live music most nights.

Club Rodeo 2301 S Meridian Ave ☎405/686-1191. Popular dance hall and saloon with nightly live music. Can get a little cheesy some nights, other nights are rollicking fun. Quite a way southwest of downtown, but worth the trip. Hours and cover vary.

Rodeo Opry 221 Exchange Ave ☎405/297-9773. Popular venue for authentic country music shows, in the style of Nashville's Grand Ole Opry. One show a week, Sat 7.30pm.

VZD's Restaurant and Club 4200 N Western Ave ☎405/524-4203. Cheap and varied food by day, garage rock and the city's few hipsters by night.

Guthrie

GUTHRIE, thirty miles north of downtown Oklahoma City on I-35, was Oklahoma's capital from statehood in 1907 until 1911. Today the 1400-acre Guthrie Historical District forms a remarkably complete collection of tastefully restored Victorian architecture. The State Capitol Publishing Museum, 301 W Harrison Ave (Thurs–Sat 9am–5pm; donation), exhibits printing technology dating back to the earliest newspaper printed in the Oklahoma Territory, while the Oklahoma Territorial Museum (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; $2 donation) focuses on the first (white) residents of the territory. The ornate Doric Scottish Rite Masonic Temple, 900 E Oklahoma Ave (tours Mon–Fri 10am & 2pm; $5), is the largest Masonic complex in the world, featuring hundreds of bright stained-glass windows. Guthrie is also home to the Lazy E Arena, four miles east of downtown, a huge site that hosts world-champion rodeos and roping competitions, as well as big-name concerts (☎405/282-7433).

Guthrie's visitor center is at 212 W Oklahoma Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎405/282-1947 or 1-800/299-1889, 🌐www.guthrieok.com). The town has several good B&Bs, including the Stone Lion Inn, 1016 W Warner Ave (☎405/282-0012; 📍), a 1907 Victorian mansion with clean rooms and antique claw-foot tubs. The Pollard Inn, 124 W Harrison Ave (☎405/282-1000 or 1-800/375-1001; 📍), is housed in Guthrie's first bank building. Cheaper is the Townhouse Motel, 223 E Oklahoma Ave (☎405/260-2400; 📍). The Blue Belle Saloon, 224 W Harrison, is Oklahoma's oldest saloon; the place boasts that Tom Mix tended bar here before going on to Hollywood fame.

THE GREAT PLAINS

Missouri

Missouri

The state of MISSOURI, where the forest meets the prairie and the Mississippi River meets the Missouri River, has two significant cities: dominant St Louis sits midway down the state's eastern fringe; Kansas City is almost directly across on the western border. The pair are linked by I-70, but there's not much in between. In contrast, the south features the beautiful hillsides, streams, and ragged lakes of the Ozark Mountains, as well as the booming country-and-western town of Branson. In the east, small river towns such as Hannibal and Ste Genevieve brighten the course of the Mississippi. The northwest, home of the Pony Express and outlaw Jesse James, still strikes up images of frontier times.

Although the first French colonists honored the claims of local Native Americans, such as the original Missouri, when the area was sold to the US in 1803 as part of the Louisiana Purchase, the Indians were driven west by a great rush of settlers. In the 1840s and 1850s immigrants from Germany and Ireland flooded into eastern Missouri. Outnumbering their pro-slavery predecessors, they swung the balance in favor of staying in the Union during the Civil War – however, Confederate guerrilla forces attracted considerable support among slave-owners in the west of the state. Meanwhile, Missouri, and St Louis in particular, was establishing itself as an important gateway to the West. Today, the “Show Me State” (so called because of the supposed skepticism of the typical Missourian) retains a conservative air, particularly in its rural areas.

Getting around Missouri

It takes Greyhound about six hours to traverse the central corridor between St Louis and Kansas City. Infrequent Greyhound buses run through the southeast, to Springfield and a few Ozark towns, but you'll need a car to see the mountains and the river towns in the north. St Louis and Kansas City have major airports. Daily Amtrak trains from Chicago run to St Louis, from where direct connections can be made to points west. For keen cyclists, there's the popular Katy Trail, which stretches 230 miles from St Charles to Clinton.

Eastern Missouri

The Mississippi defines Missouri's eastern border, absorbing as major tributaries the Missouri, Ohio, Illinois, and Des Moines rivers. Over the years, innumerable towns have sprung up along the river, their aspirations reflected by such classical names as Alexandria, Antioch, and Athens. Hannibal, the boyhood home of Mark Twain, is the largest in the northeast, while Gallic Ste Genevieve is the prettiest in the south. All have, however, decreased in importance with the growing pre-eminence of St Louis. Away from the river, the land rises to the Ozark Plateau, whose deep green valleys are cut by swift, clear streams.

Hannibal

HANNIBAL might well have been just another medium-sized river settlement, had not Samuel Langhorne Clemens spent his boyhood here. (Clemens renamed himself Mark Twain, after the depth-marking cry of pilots on the Mississippi.) Although Hannibal does have other industries, downtown is little more than a Twain theme park of museums, period buildings, and wax displays.

Twain wrote surprisingly little about his hometown in his extensive nonfiction works; you could say he spoke with his feet when he left for good at seventeen to become a journeyman printer, riverboat pilot, journalist, and writer. However, although he calls the rowdy frontier river port "St Petersburg" in The Adventures of Tom Sawyer and the sequel The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, Hannibal is the inspiration for the novels.

The Town

Hannibal's riverside location and historical buildings make it almost disturbingly picturesque. Squeezed between two steep bluffs – Tom Sawyer's "Cardiff Hill" to the north and Lover's Leap to the south – the once-busy community is now quiet except for the occasional creaking of a crane loading cement. You can get an intimate look at the Mississippi aboard the slow-moving Mark Twain riverboat (1hr tours 11am, 1.30pm & 4pm, $12; 2hr dinner cruise by reservation 6.30pm, $33; ☎ 573/221-3222). Twain's youthful stomping-ground was the short, cobbled incline of Hill Street, at the north end of town. Adjoining the restored Mark Twain Boyhood Home, a simple white-clapboard house where Twain lived between 1844 and 1853, the Mark Twain Museum (summer daily 8am–6pm; rest of year times vary; $8; ☎ 573/221-9010) includes such memorabilia as first editions, letters, photos, original artwork, and one of the author's trademark white coats. Immediately opposite, there's a bookstore in the original home of Laura Hawkins (the model for Tom Sawyer's first love, Becky Thatcher), who visited Twain in Connecticut in 1908 and lived on in Hannibal until 1928. Nearby stands the law office of Twain's father, a justice of the peace who died of pneumonia while the writer was still a boy. Antique, souvenir, and gift stores stretch away from here down Main Street, which also holds the New Mark Twain Museum (summer daily 9am–6pm; rest of year times vary; same phone as above). Included in the admission price to the original museum and home, the exhibits here recreate scenes from Twain's books, the cave and Huck Finn's raft among them. Upstairs at the gift shop are the fifteen original Norman Rockwell paintings commissioned for limited editions of Twain's most popular titles.

About two miles south of town is the Mark Twain Cave (summer daily 8am–8pm; times vary rest of the year; $14; ☎573/221-1656), where one-hour tours recall Tom and Becky's frightening misadventure in the dark. Further south, Hwy-79 towards St Louis offers one of the most scenic drives along the Mississippi, continually broken by thin, elongated, thickly wooded islands, and bounded by towering limestone bluffs.

Practicalities

Pick up full details on Hannibal from the visitor center, 505 N Third St (April–Oct daily 8am–6pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun limited hours; ☎573/221-2477, 🌐www.visithannibal.com). Motel rates vary wildly according to season. The very central Hotel Clemens, 401 N Third St (☎573/248-1150; Ⓜ–Ⓟ), with a pool, offers pretty good value, as does the Hannibal Inn, US-61 at Market St (☎573/221-6610; Ⓜ–Ⓟ), albeit on the edge of town. One of nearly a dozen B&Bs, Lula Belle's, 111 Bird St (☎573/221-6662 or 1-800/882-4890; Ⓜ–Ⓟ), has rooms of varying degrees of luxury, including some with river views, and serves tasty food. The Mark Twain Family Restaurant, just up from the Mark Twain Museum at 400 N Third St (☎573/221-5300), serves classic American fare. A mile south of town on Hwy-79, you can camp at the shaded Mark Twain Campground (☎573/221-1656 or 1-800/527-0304; $18 for tents, $22 for RVs).

St Louis

Perched just below the confluence of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, three hundred miles south of Chicago and the same distance north of Memphis, cosmopolitan ST LOUIS (pronounced, whatever any song might say, “Saint Lewis”) owes its vaguely European air to its history and cultural infrastructure. Any city capable of producing one of the twentieth century's greatest poets, as well as one of its greatest rock ‘n’ rollers – namely, T.S. Eliot and Chuck Berry – probably has a lot going for it.

St Louis was founded in 1764 by the French fur trader Pierre Laclède. However, the American immigration that followed its sale to the US under the Louisiana Purchase all but extinguished the refinement it had gained during French and Spanish rule. It subsequently became crucial as the major gateway for pioneers on the wagon trails westward. Transportation – first steamboats, then trains, and now air haulage – has long been the basis of its considerable industrial strength. However, St Louis has not always had an easy ride. Downtown reached a nadir during the 1970s, but the years since have seen a remarkable turnaround, with attractions on the revitalized riverfront including the magnificent Gateway Arch and the restored warehouses of Laclede's Landing.

Try not to leave without sampling the outlying districts. To the west lie arty Central West End and young University (or “U”) City, on either side of prodigious Forest Park, with its museums and playing fields. The blue-collar Southside features the markets, antique shops, and jazz pubs of Soulard and the Italian shops and cafés of the Hill. Directly across the river in Illinois, East St Louis, once the stomping ground of jazz stars like Miles Davis and John Coltrane, has very little to offer visitors.

Lambert-St Louis International Airport is a dozen miles northwest of downtown – $36 by taxi or $3.50 by bus or MetroLink. Some Greyhound buses call at the airport, though you cannot buy tickets there. You can either purchase tickets by mail, or you can board at the airport without a ticket and pay for one when you arrive in the bus main terminal downtown at 1450 N 13th St. Amtrak stops at 551 S 16th St.

The city has visitor centers at the America Center in the massive Cervantes Convention Center (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–2pm; ☎ 1-800/916-0092), and at Kiener Plaza (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–2pm; closed Jan & Feb; ☎ 314/231-0336). For the latest events, visit @ www.explorestlouis.com.

The Bi-State Transit System (☎ 314/231-2345) operates the MetroLink, a light-rail system serving the airport and most significant tourist sights ($1.75; free in downtown Mon–Fri 11.30am–1.30pm). BSTS buses also go to all of the city's suburbs, though service can be slow and infrequent. Big Shark Athletic Company, near Forest Park at 6176 Delmar Blvd ($5/hour or $20/day; ☎ 314/862-1818), rents bikes.

Good-value lodging can be found downtown, with appealing weekend rates. The CVB will have information on the area's numerous B&Bs.

Best Western Inn at the Park 4630 Lindell Blvd ☎ 314/367-7500 or 1-800/373-7501. Good chain motel on the northeast corner of Forest Park, right by the cafés of Central West End. 4–5

Drury Inn – Union Station 201 S 20th St ☎ 314/231-3900 or 1-800/325-8300. Very tastefully restored accommodation. 4–5

EconoLodge Downtown 1100 N 3rd St ☎ 314/421-6556. The least expensive downtown option, just a short walk from Laclede's Landing. The area's not pleasant at night, though. 3

Embassy Suites 901 N 1st St ☎ 314/241-4200. Comfortable suites in the heart of Laclede's Landing. Buffet breakfast included. 5

Hi-Great Rivers Hostel 2800 Normandy Drive, Bel-Nor ☎ 314/241-4200; @ www.greatrivershostel.org. This clean hostel, two blocks from a MetroLink stop, is in a former dormitory on the south campus of UMSL. Dorms are $20, private rooms are $30.

The Huckleberry Finn Youth Hostel 1904-1908 S 12th St ☎ 314/644-4660. Dorms ($20) on the edge of a dodgy area in Soulard, so take bus #10 or #30 from downtown. Office hours 8–10am & 6–10pm.

Millennium Hotel 200 S 4th St ☎ 314/241-9500 or 1-800/325-7353. Ideal downtown setting, with all the facilities you'd expect from a hotel of its size, including a restaurant, fitness center, and business center. 4–7

 Park Avenue Mansion 2007 Park Ave ☎ 314/588-9004. Attractive, homey B&B on Lafayette Square, with friendly service and a lovely outdoor patio and garden. 5

Red Roof Inn St Louis Hampton 5823 Wilson Ave ☎ 314/645-0119. Rooms were nicely refurbished in 2006 and it has a great location on the edge of the Hill and near I-44 and I-64. 4

The riverfront

The one-and-a-half-mile cobbled granite wharf along the Mississippi used to lie in the shadow of a dense tangle of warehouses and factories. When river trade decreased, most were ripped down. However, some restored structures between the Eads and Martin Luther King bridges now form Laclede's Landing Historic District, their cast-iron facades fronting touristy antique stores, restaurants, and live music venues. In early September, the district hosts the Big Muddy Blues Festival, featuring artists of national prominence and a great party atmosphere (information on ☎ 314/241-5875, @ www.lacledeslanding.org).

On the waterfront itself, where roustabouts once handled cargoes of cotton and ores, assorted permanently moored vessels hold museums, theater shows, a heliport, and casinos. Cruises aboard replica paddle-wheelers leave from under the Gateway Arch (April–Nov daily 10am–4.30pm; $10; dinner cruises depart at 7.30pm, $37; ☎ 314/621-4040 or 1-800/878-7411).

Ten minutes' walk south, more than thirty blocks of derelict buildings were torn down to clear space for the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial, dedicated to the US president who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase and thereby opened up the West, and to the pioneers who journeyed along the Oregon and Santa Fe trails. The highlight of the expansive green space is the Gateway Arch. Designed by Eero Saarinen and completed in 1965, the arch is a 630ft stainless steel parabola of majestic symmetry; in technical terms it's a weighted catenary curve, the outline formed by a heavy cable hanging freely from two points. So long as you're not claustrophobic, it's fun to take the four-minute tram ride up the hollow curving arch. Tiny five-seater capsules carry you to a viewing gallery at the top of the arch, where you can linger as long as you like – the views of St Louis, the Midwestern plains, and the mighty Mississippi are spectacular. Lengthy lines are inevitable in the summer, but you can pick up a numbered ticket earlier in the day and come back at an appointed time. Still, you'll have to wait in another line for the elevator, so expect an hour roundtrip (daily: summer 8am–9.15pm departures; rest of year 9am–5.15pm; $10).

In a massive bunker beneath the arch, the visitor center (daily: summer 8am–10pm; rest of year 9am–6pm; ☎ 314/982-1410) shows a riveting film about the construction of the monument, and another on the Lewis and Clark Expedition, which set off from St Louis in 1804 to explore the Missouri River, as well as potential water passages to the Pacific Ocean ($7 for one film, $11 for two). The expedition returned two years later with details of trade routes, Native American settlements, and observations on animal and plant life. Also in the visitor center complex, the spacious Museum of Westward Expansion (free) recounts the Lewis and Clark story, drawing heavily on the pair's very readable journals.

Nearby, engineering buffs will take note of the extraordinary (if not all that attractive) Eads Bridge. Completed in 1876, the massive steel structure was St Louis' first bridge across the Mississippi, doing much to facilitate the railroad boom of the gilded age. Pedestrians and cyclists can cross the bridge for excellent views of the city's skyline.

One block from the arch along St Louis' main east–west thoroughfare, Market Street, old photographs at the stately Old Courthouse Museum (daily 8am–4.30pm; free) record the development of the city and the settling of the West. Two restored courtrooms were the site of the trial of Dred Scott, a black slave who argued that having spent time with his owner in non-slave Illinois and Wisconsin, he had the right to be set free. His case was upheld in 1850, but overturned two years later. On appeal, the Supreme Court declared that Scott, born a slave in a slave state, might, like any other chattel, be taken anywhere his master chose to go. The decision, which meant that the US Constitution saw slaves as legitimate personal property, sent shock waves through the corridors of government and hastened the onrush of the Civil War. Scott himself, by now a nationally known figure, was voluntarily freed by his new owner, though he died a year later.

The International Bowling Museum and Hall of Fame, at 111 Stadium Plaza (April–Sept 9am–5pm; rest of year 11am–4pm Tues–Sat; $7.50, includes four free frames), is devoted to the favorite sport of such diverse figures as Martin Luther and Homer Simpson, tracing its history from ancient Egypt to the present. It may come as some surprise to learn of bowling's rowdy history: excessive betting on games got it denounced by the Church in fifteenth-century Germany and, three centuries later, the behavior of drunken fans led to all lanes being shut down in London.

See the world's largest pair of underpants and witness the mystic power of the corn-dog at the whimsical City Museum, 701 N 15th St (hours vary, call ☎ 314/231-2489 for details; $12; @ www.citymuseum.org). The exhibits, made almost entirely of junk, often border on the bizarre, as one floor is devoted to secret passages and dead-ends. There's also a small, but worthwhile, aquarium onsite ($6). Over on Market St at 18th, the focal point of the giant Romanesque Union Station is a 230ft clock tower. The station, erected in 1884, was transformed in the early 1980s into a huge complex of mostly tacky shops, chain restaurants, and a hotel. An artificial lake, where you can rent boats, is in the back. The Hyatt Hotel's ornate lobby, once the station's main waiting room, is well worth visiting.

West of downtown

Three miles west of downtown, the theater district, called Grand Center, is staked out with ornate street lamps along Grand Avenue between Lindell and Delmar Boulevards. Bright posters advertise the current shows at the Fabulous Fox Theater, 527 N Grand Ave (tours Tues, $5; Thurs & Sat, $8, including a special organ performance at 10.30am; ☎ 314/534-1111), where you can have a look at the magnificent Siamese-Byzantine interior and massive Wurlitzer organ.

About a mile further west, on the edge of Forest Park, trendy shops, wine bars, and c.1900 mansions line the leafy thoroughfares of the Central West End district. A few blocks away at 4431 Lindell Blvd, the Romanesque-Byzantine Cathedral of St Louis houses the world's largest collection of mosaic art (daily 10am–4pm; tours Mon–Fri 10am–3pm, Sun 1pm; free).

The decision to put Forest Park four miles directly west of downtown (served by MetroLink every ten to thirty minutes depending on time of day) aroused much criticism during the 1870s, with opponents claiming that its inaccessibility would make it merely a pleasure ground for the local rich. It's larger than New York's Central Park, and every bit as full of attractions; in summer, the 12,000-seat amphitheater is regularly filled for the Broadway-style musical theater productions (☎ 314/361-1900, @ www.muny.com).

Standing on Art Hill in the central western section of the park, the striking Beaux Arts Saint Louis Art Museum (Fri 1pm–9pm, Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; tours at 1.30pm; free), is the only surviving structure from the 1904 World's Fair. Its mission – to cover international art from prehistoric times onwards – is ambitious. It houses one of the world's most extensive collections of German Expressionism, devoting an entire gallery to the powerful, spiraling, jagged images of Max Beckmann, and its pre-Columbian artworks cover every significant style, medium, and culture from Mexico to Peru.

In addition to the animals in its “cageless displays,” the St Louis Zoo (daily summer 8am–7pm, 9am–5pm rest of year; free), set in beautiful grounds in the park, boasts a “Living World” exhibit, in which an animatronic robot of Charles Darwin gives synopses of his theories.

The main strengths of the History Museum, on the northern fringe of the park (Tues 10am–8pm, Wed–Sun 10am–6pm; free), are its thematic collections of old photos of St Louis, documenting river life, black music in the city, and Charles Lindbergh's 1927 flight in the Spirit of St Louis (sponsored by the city's aircraft industry) from New York to Paris. The St Louis Science Center (Mon–Thurs and Sat 9.30am–5.30pm, Fri until 9.30pm, Sun 11.30am–5.30pm; free) straddles I-64 and can be entered from either side of the freeway; use one of the radar guns on the covered access bridge to check the speed of cars on the freeway below. General admission is free, but it costs a few dollars to get into the planetarium, the OMNI-MAX Theater, and other major exhibits.

Southside

The tens of thousands of Germans who came to St Louis in the mid-eighteenth century settled mostly in the Southside, where the Teutonic influence is noticeable. These immigrants were skilled brewers; only one of the breweries they opened from the 1850s onwards still stands, but it does happen to be the largest in the world. The one hundred intricate redbrick buildings of the Anheuser-Busch plant, 12th and Lynch streets (hours vary seasonally; ☎ 314/577-2626 or @ www.budweisertours.com for details; free), produce annually a sizeable proportion of the company's 14.3 million barrels of beer, including Budweiser and Michelob. Free tours (80min) are mostly company PR, but they're still good fun, and you get two glasses of beer before being shunted into the gift shop.

A few blocks towards downtown, the colorful Soulard Market, at Broadway and Lafayette avenues (Wed–Fri 8am–5.30pm, Sat 6am–5.30pm), is a great place to pick up picnic items and fresh fruit, especially on a Saturday. The terraced streets behind it hold the city's best blues and jazz pubs.

Red-white-and-green fire hydrants let you know that you're in the thirty-square-block Hill district, a small, neat Italian community three miles west of Soulard. At its heart, St Ambrose Church displays a statue of Italian immigrants; all around, the aroma of freshly baked bread drifts out of the small specialty bakeries that share the area with one-room grocery stores and many restaurants.

Just east of the Hill District, at 4344 Shaw Blvd, the 79-acre Missouri Botanical Garden (daily 9am–5pm; $8; @www.mobot.org) is a haven of peace and tranquility, just a few hundred yards from busy I-44. The grounds contain everything from a magnificent Japanese garden through scented rose and English woodland gardens to the Climatron, a huge greenhouse that recreates a tropical rainforest complete with waterfalls and cliffs.

Eating

Thanks to heavy Italian immigration in the early twentieth century, Italian food predominates in St Louis, from humble salami sellers upwards. Otherwise, there are many friendly Irish pubs, serving beef sandwiches and stew, while University City's Delmar Boulevard offers African, Middle Eastern, Chinese, Indian, and other ethnic places. More expensive cafés are located in Laclede's Landing, and the Central West End has a scattering of upmarket espresso bars such as the Coffee Cartel, 2 Maryland Plaza.

Baileys' Chocolate Bar 1915 Park Ave, Lafayette Square ☎314/241-8100. A must for dessert lovers, offering a delicious variety of chocolate concoctions, both edible and drinkable. Notice the murals on the wall – they're painted with cocoa.

Duff's 392 N Euclid Ave, Central West End ☎314/361-0522. Small, relaxed, and moderately priced, with a French-flavored international menu, as well as homemade desserts and Sunday brunch. Outdoor seating available.

John D. McGurk's Irish Pub 1200 Russell Blvd, at 12th St, Soulard ☎314/776-8309. Freshly baked soda bread, corned beef and cabbage, Irish stew, and imported Guinness on offer. Live Irish music every night and great outdoor seating.

O'Connell's Pub 4652 Shaw Ave, at Kingshighway Blvd ☎314/773-6600. The best burgers in the city, and the beef sandwiches aren't bad either. Near the Hill district.

Rigazzi's 4945 Daggett Blvd, the Hill ☎314/772-4900. Popular trattoria, famous for "frozen fish-bowls" of beer. Over thirty different pasta dishes on the menu plus pizzas, veal, chicken, and steak.

Saleem's 6501 Delmar Blvd, U City ☎314/721-7947. "Where garlic is king" and St Louisians reckon you get the best Lebanese food in the city.

Ted Drewes Frozen Custard 6726 Chippewa Ave ☎314/481-2652; also 4224 S Grand Blvd ☎314/352-7376. A legendary slice of Americana. Try a "concrete" – an ice cream so thick it won't budge if you turn your cup upside down. Open March–Dec.

Nightlife and entertainment

Downtown St Louis' highest concentration of bars and clubs can be found in Laclede's Landing, with nightly jazz, blues, rock, and reggae. Some of the outlying districts are well worth checking out; these include the Loop in U City, whose bars and cafés are not only popular with students, and the slightly more upmarket cafés and wine bars of Central West End. Unpretentious Soulard is the place to go for good jazz and blues. You should also check out Grand Center, centered on North Grand Blvd in midtown, home to stage shows and the St Louis Symphony Orchestra (☎314/534-1700). Excellent listings can be found in the free weekly Riverfront Times.

1860 Hard Shell Café & Bar 1860 S 9th St, Soulard ☎314/231-1860. One of the liveliest bars in Soulard with dancing to blues, R&B, and soul bands. Also serves good Cajun and fish dishes.

Blueberry Hill 6504 Delmar Blvd, U City
☎314/727-4444, 🌐www.blueberryhill.com.
Crammed full of memorabilia, with the downstairs dedicated to Elvis and a jukebox acclaimed by Cashbox magazine as the best in the country. The drinks and burgers are good, and live entertainment is offered every weekend (Chuck Berry himself comes in for monthly cameos).

Broadway Oyster Bar 736 S Broadway, downtown ☎314/621-8811. Cramped, crowded, and dark blues club, in an atmospheric old bar.

Mississippi Nights 914 N 1st St, Laclede's Landing ☎314/421-3853. The city's top venue for nonstadium bands.

Pageant 6161 Delmar Blvd, U City ☎314/726-6161. Large bar and live entertainment venue that brings in big-name rock groups.

Riddles Penultimate 6307 Delmar Blvd, U City
☎314/725-6985. Very lively bar in the heart of U City, with a young crowd and some sidewalk seating.

St Charles

The beautiful little river town of ST CHARLES, 25 miles northwest of downtown St Louis and forever threatened by flooding, remains redolent with lazy charm, despite the advent of its first riverboat casino. Three small though distinct historic districts are crammed with antique shops, specialty outlets, and good cafés and restaurants, including the Trailhead Brewery, 921 S Riverside Drive (☎636/946-2739), a modern pub housed in an eighteenth-century grist mill. Lewis and Clark set up strategic camp here in 1804, and are remembered in the interesting small museum.

St Charles's CVB, 230 S Main St (☎636/946-7776 or 1-800/366-2427, 🌐www.historicstcharles.com), has details of downtown's growing range of elegant and amply porched B&Bs. The popular Katy Trail, which hugs the river along the route of an old railroad before turning west to Clinton, is excellent for hiking or cycling. Momentum Cycles (☎636/946-7433) rents bikes ($6 per hour or $30 per day) for the trail.

Ste Genevieve

Sixty miles south of St Louis, Missouri's oldest community, the tiny, French- and German-heritage STE GENEVIEVE retains its eighteenth-century charm through historic cottages, a redbrick square, and summer festivals. A perennial favorite of Mississippi flood waters, the town, with a population of 4500, has recently been sheltered by a $50 million levee, a measure taken to ensure the safety of homes that pre-date the American Revolution. The St Gemme Beauvais, 78 N Main St (☎573/883-5744; 4-7), is a nineteenth-century Greek Revival inn downtown. Home-cooked catfish, chicken, and seafood are on the menu in the Anvil Saloon, 43 S Third St (☎573/883-7323).

Western Missouri

As the Mississippi River defines Eastern Missouri, its tributary the Missouri (which gave the state its name) dominates the northwest border. Here along the river, jazz and barbeque flourish in Kansas City, while the small town of Independence lays on the homespun charm made famous by its favorite son, President Harry S. Truman. Further south, surrounding the hokey family-entertainment center of Branson, cool lakes and forested hills provide some breathtaking natural beauty.

Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, 250 miles due west of St Louis, straddles the state line between Kansas and Missouri. Virtually all its main points of interest are on the Missouri side, where the fountains, boulevards, Art Deco and Mediterranean-style buildings, and the encouraging revitalization of downtown, are welcome features in a Midwestern city. Kansas City, Kansas, doesn't have much to attract visitors.

Kansas City was a convenient staging post for 1830s wagon trains heading west. Its consequent prosperity – and rough-and-tumble “sin city” image – was brought to an abrupt end by the Civil War. However, its fortunes revived in the 1870s, when the railroads brought the boom in meatpacking that was responsible for the development of the huge stockyards, which finally closed down in 1992.

Thanks to political boss Tom Pendergast, an outrageous figure with whom the city had a love-hate relationship, Kansas City's many jazz clubs continued to sell alcohol during Prohibition. As in Chicago and New Orleans, speakeasies, brothels, and gambling dens went hand in hand with superlative jazz – and, to a lesser extent, blues – spawning the careers of Count Basie, Duke Ellington, and, in the Fifties, Charlie Parker. KC's resurgent jazz scene, fine restaurants, professional football and baseball teams, and theme parks help make it a popular short-break destination.

From the Kansas City International Airport, twenty miles northwest of downtown, a convenient forty-minute shuttle bus (half-hourly 6am–11.55pm; ☎816/243-5000) heads to major downtown hotels ($16) and Westport ($17). The equivalent taxi-ride costs around $45; call Yellow Cab (☎816/471-5000). The isolated Greyhound terminal lies well out from downtown in a miserable area at 1101 Troost Ave. Amtrak is in the Union Station at 23rd and Main streets, opposite Crown Center.

The city's main visitor center is tucked away on the 22nd floor of City Center Square at 1100 Main St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 816/221-5242 or 1-800/767-7700, @ www.visitkc.com); additional information offices are housed in the Country Club Plaza at 4709 W Central St (daily 8am–6pm; ☎ 1-800/767-7700) and in the Grand Hallway of Union Station.

The Metro Buses system ($1.25; ☎ 816/221-0660, @ www.kcata.org) covers downtown, and has routes out to Independence.

Accommodation

Kansas City's budget motels lie along the interstates or out towards Independence, though reasonable central options do exist. The visitor center is the best place to inquire about B&Bs. Depending on which direction you are coming from, camping choices include the Trailside Camper's Inn, I-70 exit 24, 24 miles east of downtown in Grain Valley (☎ 816/229-2267 or 1-800/748-7729; $17 for tents), or the Cottonwood RV Park, on Hwy-7 just off I-70 exit 224, 24 miles west of downtown in Bonner Springs (☎ 913/422-8038; $20 for tents).

The City

Kansas City is doing a good job of reinvigorating its downtown, and wandering past the restored lofts and small businesses of the Garment District, between Sixth and Ninth streets, makes for a pleasant way to reach City Hall, 414 E 12th St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.15pm; free), a fine Art Deco building with an observation deck on its thirtieth floor. Also downtown is the historic district known variously as River Market or City Market, on the banks of the Missouri. As well as colorful shops, cafés, and a lively farmers' market at Fifth and Walnut streets, there's a good museum in the complex, The Treasure of the Steamboat Arabia, which tells the story behind the 1988 salvaging of a side-wheeler that sank on its way to Council Bluffs in 1856 (400 Grand Blvd; Mon–Sat 10am–5.30pm, Sun noon–5pm; $12.50; @ www.1856.com). Perfectly preserved artifacts – china, guns, gold, and Kentucky bourbon, to name a few – afford unexpected and intriguing insights into frontier life.

The sprawling concrete Crown Center, on Grand Ave and Pershing Rd, owned by Hallmark Cards, calls itself “a city within a city,” and houses apartments, shops, restaurants, offices, a hotel, cinemas, and an ice rink. Interesting displays in its splendidly awful Hallmark Visitors Center (Tues–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9.30am–4.30pm; free) trace styles of greeting cards alongside political and cultural changes; designs from the 1940s, for example, featured stars and stripes and Uncle Sam. There are also demonstrations of dyeing and engraving techniques. The nearby Union Station, built in 1914, is a Kansas City landmark: huge, beautifully renovated, and home to Science City (Tues–Fri 9.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $13.95 for all attractions; @ www.sciencecity.com), an incredible arena of futuristic games, movies, and exhibits.

The 18th and Vine Historic Jazz District, south of I-70 as it sweeps east–west, was the hub of the city's 1930s jazz scene. A huge revitalization project in the 1980s culminated with the opening of the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum, 1616 E 18th St (Tues–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; $6; @www.nlbm.com) – an enthralling collection of photographs, interactive exhibits, and game equipment that traces the turbulent history of black baseball in America, which was segregated from the white major leagues for the first half of the twentieth century. In the same complex is the American Jazz Museum (Tues–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; $6), which tells the history of jazz through interactive exhibits that profile some of its greatest performers, including Kansas City native Charlie Parker and others who cut their teeth in the smoky halls of 18th and Vine. The Blue Room functions as a working jazz bar, with Thurs through Saturday and Mon-night jam sessions bringing many stars out of the woodwork. If you're going to visit both museums, the $8 combo ticket is your best bet.

Westport, an attractive district of good restaurants, cafés, and trendy shops between 39th and 45th streets, was the original jumping-off point for the Santa Fe Trail. Stop in for a drink at the city's oldest building, Kelly's Westport Inn, 500 Westport Rd (☎816/561-5800), a shabby but friendly redbrick bar. Five miles south of downtown, beginning at 47th and Main streets, the elegant Country Club Plaza dates from the early 1920s. Tree-shaded and upmarket (with branches of stores like Anthropologie and Saks), its tiling, mosaics, fountains, and orange trees evoke the streets of Spain; a replica of Seville's La Giralda tower completes the effect.

Highlights at the extensive Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art, a few blocks east at 4525 Oak St (Tues–Thurs 10am–4pm, Fri 10am–9pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free), include superb Oriental exhibits, with figurines from Tang and Egyptian tombs, plus canvases by Titian, Caravaggio (St John the Baptist), and Monet, plus twelve Henry Moore sculptures in a landscaped setting. The pretty Toy and Miniature Museum, further south at 5235 Oak St (Wed–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $6), houses an offbeat collection of antique toys, games, and puppets.

During the summer, if the Midwestern humidity gets to be too much, head for the tropically themed water world called Oceans of Fun, or the adjoining Worlds of Fun, with its 140-plus rides, out at exit 54 of I-435 (daily or weekends mid-April–mid-Oct, hours vary; $26 for Oceans, $37 for Worlds).

Eating

Barbecue, once the unfashionable food of the poor, is big news in Kansas City – cheap, cheerful, hickory-smoked, and served with tasty sauces. The Country Club Plaza has some decent places to sample the spicy cuisine, but they tend to be overpriced and some require formal dress. The restaurants in Westport are more casual.

Arthur Bryant's 1727 Brooklyn Ave ☎816/231-1123. The place for barbecue, a mile east of downtown in a desolate area. Serving the largest portions you've ever seen of barbecue and beans; the combo plate easily feeds two hefty appetites. This is serious business – don't take too much time deciding, as rookies aren't given any hand-holding.

 Fiorella's Jack Stack Barbecue 101 W 22nd St ☎816/472-7427. This relative newcomer to the K.C. barbecue pantheon serves the best in town, some locals reckon.

Gates Bar-B-Q 3205 Main St ☎816/753-0828. Massive portions of BBQ served on platters in a family-style atmosphere.

Grand St Café 4740 Grand St ☎816/471-6300.

In an office building between the Plaza and the art museum, the food is worth seeking out here. Delicious items include grilled pork chops and roasted duck, which run from $16 to $25.

Hereford House 20th and Main streets ☎816/842-1080. KC's top steakhouse, in a handy downtown spot.

Jerusalem Café 431 Westport Rd ☎816/756-2770. Small Middle Eastern restaurant serving superb falafel and kebabs.

LaMar's Donuts 3395 Main St ☎1-800/533-7489. A KC institution, now with branches in several states; this one is the original.

Lidia's 101 W 22nd St ☎816/221-3722. Popular spot housed in an old freight house near Jack Stack (see above). Excellent pasta and an extensive wine selection, at affordable prices.

Stroud's 5410 NE Oakridge Rd ☎816/454-9600. Renowned fried chicken in a converted farmhouse well worth the drive north of downtown.

Nightlife and entertainment

Check out Kansas City's jazz and blues scene, especially the authentic dives holding wonderful jam sessions into the early hours. The Friday and Sunday editions of the Kansas City Star carry listings, as does the freebie Pitch Weekly. You can also call the Jazz Hotline (☎816/753-JASS) or check @ www.jazzkc.org. Downtown is otherwise pretty dead by mid-evening, with most people heading to Westport for nightlife from country-and-western to alternative rock.

Blaney's Irish Tavern 415 Westport Rd ☎816/561-3747. A good Westport venue with a varied live music schedule all week.

The Grand Emporium 3832 Main St ☎816/561-2560. Live blues, DJs, and salsa dancing weekly. Twice voted the Best Blues Club in America by the National Blues Foundation.

Jardine's 4536 Main St ☎816/561-6480. Live jazz seven nights a week and Sat & Sun afternoons as well as a good meat and pasta menu.

Jazz/A Louisiana Kitchen 1823 W 39th St ☎816/531-5556. Cajun cuisine and live jazz and blues.

Mutual Musicians Foundation 1823 Highland Ave ☎816/471-5212. National Historic Landmark in the 18th and Vine district. Fierce jam sessions begin at 1am Fri & Sat and last till 5am, with musicians competing in a frenzy. Things can get a bit rough, and it's recommended that women not attend solo.

Phoenix Piano Bar and Grill 302 W 8th St at Central Ave ☎816/472-0001. Downtown jazz piano venue featuring popular Sat afternoon sessions.

Independence and Liberty

Bus #24 from Kansas City goes to the small town of INDEPENDENCE, twenty minutes east of the city and most famous as the former home of President Harry S. Truman. The Truman Presidential Museum and Library, on US-24 and Delaware St (Mon–Wed & Sat 9am–5pm, Thurs 9am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7), includes a reconstruction of his White House office, and chilling documents pertaining to the development of the atomic bomb. The Victorian Truman Home, a mile south at 219 N Delaware St (daily 8.30am–5pm, in winter closed Mon; $4; purchase tickets at museum), is decorated as it was when it functioned as the summer White House.

Fifteen miles northeast of Kansas City, on the Old Town Square of LIBERTY, Jesse James staged the first-ever daylight bank robbery in 1866 in what's now the Jesse James Bank Museum, 103 N Water St, (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; $5). Among the memorabilia and dusty relics of early banking, you can see the vault and the safe the outlaw raided.

St Joseph

Sixty miles north of Kansas City, ST JOSEPH boomed as a supply depot for the California Gold Rush, and today is a busy manufacturing town. For a brief eighteen months, beginning in 1860, it was the home of the legendary Pony Express, which delivered mail to Sacramento, California, by continuous horseback relay in ten days. The Pony Express was a financial disaster, driven out of business by its inability to compete with the transcontinental telegraph, but riders such as Buffalo Bill Cody went on to become legends. Charlie Miller, the last of the riders, rode from New York to San Francisco in 1931, and died aged 105 in 1955. The full story is told in lively dioramas at the Pony Express Museum, 914 Penn St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $4), which is attractively set in the company's original stables.

It was in St Joseph, on April 3, 1882, that the notorious Jesse James was shot in the back by Robert Ford, a 20-year-old member of his own gang who had negotiated a $10,000 reward from the governor. Countless books and films have portrayed Jesse James as a latter-day Robin Hood; in fact, he spent most of the Civil War riding with a band of Confederate guerrillas. The Jesse James Home Museum (June–Nov Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Nov–May Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $4), the one-story frame cottage where James was living incognito while he planned his next bank job, now stands at 12th and Penn streets, having been moved closer to the main highway in the hope of attracting sightseers. A ragged hole in the wall is pointed out as the spot where the bullet supposedly hit, after striking James as he was hanging a picture; you can also see where bloodstained splinters were chiseled from the floor to be sold as souvenirs. As for the assassin, Ford was himself gunned down ten years later, and his killer in turn was also shot.

There are thirteen museums in town, most about the Old West, but none really warrants lingering, though the one next to the James home does purport to contain the world's largest ball of twine. If you do want to leave the drive to Kansas City or Omaha for another day, you'll find motels strung along I-29 as it passes east of downtown, including a Motel 6 (☎816/232-2311; ②) and a Days Inn at the intersection with Frederick Blvd (☎816/279-1671; ③).

Southwest Missouri – Ozark country

There's little to see south of Kansas City before the Ozark Mountains. Occupying most of southern Missouri and northern Arkansas (see p.603), the area remained frontier territory until the timber companies moved in at the end of the nineteenth century. When they moved on, the hill-dwellers were left to eke out a living from the denuded terrain; severe droughts forced many to leave for the cities. For those who remain, fishing resorts and tourist attractions supply some work, though the region remains poor. None of the Ozark peaks are particularly high, though the roads through them switch, dip, climb, and swerve to provide stunning views of steep hillsides thick with oak, elm, hickory, and redbud, all quite resplendent in the fall. Springfield is the region's main city, 130 miles south of Kansas City, but the gateway to the Ozarks, the country music town of Branson, is more popular by far.

Branson

Nestled among beautiful Ozark lakes, the resort of BRANSON, forty miles south of Springfield on US-65, is one of the top tourist destinations in the United States. Over seven million visitors a year are attracted to what's become known as the "Ozark Disneyland" for its forty-nine music venues (almost all of a country or nostalgia bent), a few theme parks, and lots of good old family fun.

"The Strip," until recently merely Hwy-76, looks like it was thrown together with a pitchfork – a hideous agglomeration of theme parks and theaters owned and/or performed in by "big-name" stars. The spectrum ranges from Japanese fiddler Shoji Tabuchi and ancient crooner Andy Williams to superb acts like Alison Krauss and Union Station. Tickets for a two-hour show are fairly priced at around $20. There's no shortage of takers in summer for most, if not all, of the town's 57,000 seats – a figure said to exceed that of Nashville. Branson shows are firmly geared toward families; you won't find anything remotely edgy or avant-garde, although the Ripley's Believe It or Not performance is a step in a new direction.

When you've had it with Branson, escape to nearby Table Rock Lake, a scenic area offering hiking, biking, camping, water-skiing, and world-class fishing.

Practicalities

Greyhound connects Branson with Springfield, Kansas City, and Memphis. Call ahead, or drop in at the local Chamber of Commerce, at the intersection of Hwy-65 and Hwy-248 (Mon–Sat 8am–6pm, Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 417/334-4084 or 1-800/214-3661, @ www.explorebranson.com), or at the North Welcome Center (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm) at 4910 Hwy 65, for a copy of their show guide detailing performance schedules of all the theaters. During the high season (May–Oct), hotel prices rise, especially on weekends, but you can still find some bargains. Branson Vacation Reservations (☎ 1-800/221-5692) will try to sell you a package deal, but can also book you into a motel, including one of three Best Westerns (☎ 1-800/528-1234; 📍). The Ozark Mountain Country B&B, Box 295, Branson, MO 65616 (☎ 1-800/695-1546), is another reliable reservation service, but if you're visiting in the main season call at least a week in advance. Table Rock State Park (☎ 417/334-4704) has campsites for $8–$17. Most places to eat are of the family-diner ilk. McGuffey's on the Strip (☎ 417/336-3600), and the down-home cookin' at The Farmhouse Restaurant, downtown (☎ 417/334-9791), are both good options.

Kansas

KANSAS may be associated with quaint, gingham-pinafore images from Little House on the Prairie and The Wizard of Oz, but the region was at one time known as “bleeding Kansas.” The 1854 Kansas-Nebraska Act, which gave both territories the right to self-determination over slavery, led to fierce clashes between Free Staters and pro-slavery forces. Runaway slaves from the South were given passage through the area, aided by abolitionist John Brown, and Kansas eventually joined the Union as a free state.

After the Civil War, the mighty cattle drives from Texas made towns like Abilene, Wichita, and Dodge City centers of the “Wild West.” The debauched, masculine image of the West, spawning such “heroes” as Wyatt Earp and Wild Bill Hickok, is, however, challenged in Kansas, which, as well as being the first state to give women the vote in municipal elections, boasts the nation's first female mayor and senator – though its politics have taken a decidedly conservative turn in recent years, with the Kansas school board removing evolution from the science curriculum.

In 1874, Russian Mennonites brought the grain that was to transform the state into the bountiful “breadbasket” that now harvests most of the nation's wheat. However, only in the west do miles of golden stalks sway in Kansas's infamous gusty wind. The green and hilly northeast, patterned with woods and lakes, is home to the unattractive, industrial capital city of Topeka, liberal college town Lawrence, and the dull suburbs of Kansas City (though downtown lies across the state line in Missouri). The once-wicked cowtown of Dodge City is in the southwest, while Wichita, the state's largest city, lies in the south-central area.

Getting around Kansas

Greyhound buses run to all Kansas's main cities, supplemented by erratic smaller companies; services to the west and southwest are especially poor. Amtrak trains head east–west between LA and Chicago through the center of the state, calling, usually in the middle of the night, at Lawrence, Topeka, Newton (for Wichita, but without a connecting service), Hutchinson, Dodge City, and Garden City. Wichita has the state's biggest airport, but you may find flights to Missouri's Kansas City International Airport more convenient.

East Kansas

Undulating east Kansas is laced with lakes, streams, and rivers. The northeast, once crossed by the Oregon, Santa Fe, and Smoky Hill trails, and now home to both Topeka and Lawrence, is more heavily visited than the southeast, where the major attraction is the Little House on the Prairie historical site, located 13 miles southwest of Independence on Hwy-75. The heritage of Kansas's four Indian tribes comes alive in annual powwows, held in major towns as well as the northwestern reservations.

Lawrence

The mellow town of LAWRENCE lies on the Kansas River, roughly halfway between Kansas City and Topeka. Tree-lined streets, a welcoming historic downtown, and an aura of old-hippie artsiness make it an appealing destination, with a cultural energy owed in part to the University of Kansas (home of the Jayhawk, the mythical bird which is the emblem of its sports teams), and a long liberal and intellectual history. Founded by the New England Emigrant Aid Company in 1854, and a center of Free State activities, Lawrence was the site of a violent Civil War skirmish in 1863, when Missouri Confederate guerrilla William Quantrill led about three hundred men against the town, killing over 150, wounding hundreds more, and setting the place ablaze. Rebuilding was quick, however, as evidenced by the limestone and brick buildings of today's downtown, centered on Massachusetts Street, and the KU campus, which stands on a steep, tree-covered grassy bank known as Mount Oread.

Amtrak comes into Lawrence at 413 E 7th St, and Greyhound arrives at 2447 W 6th St. The visitor center is north of downtown in the renovated Union Pacific Depot, at N 2nd and Locust streets (Mon–Sat 8.30am–5.30pm, Sun 1–5pm; ☎ 785/865-4499 or 1-888/LAWKANS, @ www.visitlawrence.com).

Comfy rooms, which include a good breakfast, can be found near the bus station at the Hampton Inn, 2300 W 6th St (☎ 785/841-4994; ④), while the EconoLodge practically next door at 2222 W 6th St (☎ 785/842-7030; ③) is a reliable fall back. If you have a little extra cash, head instead to the lovely all-suite Eldridge Hotel, at 7th and Massachusetts streets (☎ 785/749-5011 or 1-800/527-0909; ⑤); twice burned down by pro-slavery forces, it has been restored to an evocative elegance, and houses the stylish Ten restaurant (☎ 785/749-5011) and the atmospheric Jayhawker bar in the lobby. You can camp near downtown at KOA, 1473 Hwy-40 (☎ 785/842-3877; $23 per tent site), or three miles out along W 23rd St at Clinton Lake State Park, where the vehicle fee is $7 and a tent site $8.50 (☎ 785/842-8562).

The Town

Studded with cafés and eclectic shops, downtown Lawrence is a delight to walk around – and just as busy outside of term time, when day-trippers flock in from less congenial Kansas cities. However, most of the town's formal attractions are clustered on campus. The University of Kansas Natural History Museum, on Jayhawk Blvd, at 14th St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $3 suggested donation), holds a chronological panorama of North American flora and fauna, as well as the now-stuffed horse Comanche, the lone survivor of Custer's cavalry at the Battle of Little Bighorn. The Spencer Museum of Art, 1301 Mississippi St (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; free), specializes in world art, with an Oriental gallery, Old Masters, and a pre-Raphaelite masterpiece.

Native American traditions are preserved and packaged for the public each year by the exhibitions of the Lawrence Indian Arts Show, held the second weekend in September at the Haskell Indian Nations University at 23rd and Massachusetts streets. Also on campus are the Hiawatha Visitor Center and American Indian Athletic Hall of Fame, open year-round (☎ 785/749-8404).

As befits a college town, the restaurant scene in Lawrence is dominated by inexpensive eats. Nightlife, too, is defined by the students, who can be found in droves along Massachusetts Street. As for the performing arts, one of the better places to investigate is Liberty Hall, 642 Massachusetts St (☎ 785/749-1972). Once a social and political center, this building housed Lawrence's first newspaper until pro-slavery agitators burned it down in 1863. Today it puts on art-house films, plays, and concerts.

Free State Brewing Co. 636 Massachusetts St ☎ 785/843-4555. Trendy brewpub serving award-winning amber beer and robust steaks.

Jazzhaus 926 Massachusetts St ☎ 785/749-3320.

As the name suggests, this dimly-lit bar hosts weekend jazz gigs.

La Parilla 814 Massachusetts St ☎ 785/841-1100.

There's always a line out the door for this tasty, reasonably priced Latin American joint.

Pachamama's 800 New Hampshire St ☎ 785/841-0990. Emphasizing seasonal and organic food, the eclectic and well-executed menu changes nearly monthly at this upscale downtown eatery.

Teller's 746 Massachusetts St ☎ 785/843-4111.

Excellent nachos and pizza served in a beautifully restored bank building.

WheatFields 904 Vermont St ☎ 785/841-5553.

All of the delectable pastries and artisan breads are made in-house at this cozy downtown bakery. Lunch and dinner specials are also offered.

West through Kansas

Further west across Kansas, three towns recreate the state's Wild West heritage, although only in the westernmost, Dodge City, does the scrubby landscape conform to the cowboy-movie image. Abilene, if less famous than Dodge City, has as many outlaw and gunslinger stories, and Wichita, about two hundred miles southwest of Kansas City, holds an excellent, authentic reconstruction of frontier days in its Old Cowtown Museum.

Abilene

Like all the old cattle-trail cowtowns, ABILENE, 115 miles west of Lawrence on I-70, claims to have been the most uproarious of the lot. By the time legendary lawman Wild Bill Hickok became its marshal in 1871, the unruly behavior was already dying down, and little today reminds you of those raucous days.

These days, Abilene prefers to stress its connections with Dwight Eisenhower. The Eisenhower Center, 201 SE Fourth St (daily: May–mid-Aug 8am–5.45pm; mid-Aug–April 9am–4.45pm), encompasses his boyhood home, with its original furnishings, the obligatory film, and many photos and papers on display in the spacious museum ($8). The former president and his wife are buried in the meditation chapel.

Abilene's visitor center is at 201 NW Second St (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; ☎ 785/263-2231 or 1-800/569-5915). Most of the town's budget motels are off I-70 at Hwy-15. The very basic Budget Lodge, 101 NW 14th St (☎ 785/263-3600; 📍), has faded but clean rooms, not far from the I-70 exit. The Best Western President's Inn, 2210 N. Buckeye (☎ 785/263-2050; 📍) offers comfortable rooms closer to the I-70 exit.

Wichita

WICHITA, about 165 miles southwest of Lawrence on I-35, is the largest city in Kansas, split by the Arkansas River, which forks just north of downtown into the Big and Little Arkansas rivers (incidentally, Kansans take umbrage if you pronounce it "Arkansaw"; pronounce it here the way it is spelled). Originally settled by the Wichita Indians, who by 1865 had been relocated to Oklahoma Indian Territory, Wichita grew up as a stop on the Chisholm Trail, a Texas-to-Kansas cattle route. Its glory days were to be short-lived, however, as farmers, angry about the damage done by stampeding cattle, erected fences, which forced the drives onto different trails further west, creating new cowtowns such as Dodge City. Today the city, already supporting a rich arts scene, has been invigorated with a downtown revival.

The City

Downtown Wichita is enlivened mainly by the public art and sculpture that pops up unexpectedly all over the place, in empty lots and even in tree stumps. The exceptional Wichita-Sedgwick County Historical Museum, 204 S Main St (Tues–Fri 11am–4pm, Sat & Sun 1–5pm; $4; 🌐 www.wichitahistory.org), is in Old City Hall, a heavy stone building decorated with turrets, gargoyles, and arches. The cozy interior is crammed with exhibits on everything from the Wichita Indians through decorative art to Carry Nation, who campaigned against everything from tobacco to corsets. The stately church with vivid stained-glass windows at 601 N Water St houses the Kansas African American Museum (Tues–Fri 10am–5pm, Sun 2–6pm; $4; 🌐 www.thekansasafricanamericanmuseum.org), an eclectic antidote to more mainstream views of Great Plains history, with details on Buffalo Soldiers, inventors from across the country, early black Wichitans, and some African art.

Excellent museums in the Riverside stretch of parkland (which also holds walking and bike trails) include the Indian Center and Museum, 650 N Seneca Drive (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm; $7; 🌐 www.theindiancenter.org). The 44ft Keeper of the Plains statue, facing east at the confluence of the Little and Big Arkansas rivers, was designed in the 1970s by a Kiowa-Comanche artist, Blackbear Bosin. Native Americans and city officials smoked the peace pipe at its dedication ceremony. The museum itself is small, with changing exhibits of traditional and contemporary Native American art.

Western artist C.M. Russell is the best represented of the veritable who's who of American painters assembled at the Wichita Art Museum, 1400 West Museum Blvd (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5, Sat free; 📞 www.wichitaartmuseum.org). Old Cowtown Museum, 1871 Sim Park Drive (Apr–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7.75), is a seventeen-acre riverside exhibit recreating the buildings of 1870s Wichita. Looking and feeling like a movie set, the area includes – along with some docile longhorns – the city’s first one-room jail, a schoolroom, a store, a smithy, churches, stables, and old homes.

To the north of the city, the surreal geodesic Bright Spot for Health Center, 3100 N Hillside Ave (Mon–Thurs 8am–5pm; free), houses the Center for the Improvement of Human Functioning, which aims, by using holistic medicine, to find a cure for cancer. It’s all very worthy, but weird: road signs, for example, tell you to “de-stress to 25.” In the southeast of the city, the products of Wichita’s airplane industry are on display at the Kansas Aviation Museum, in the old Art Deco air terminal at 3350 George Washington Blvd (Tues–Fri 9am–4pm, Sat 1–5pm; $5; 📞 www.kansasaviationmuseum.org). A more interesting detour is to Hutchinson (on Hwy-50, 45 miles northwest of Wichita), for the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center (Mon–Sat 9am–9pm, Sun noon–9pm; 📞 www.cosmo.org; $13 includes IMAX and planetarium;), which features, among other aerospace paraphernalia, the Apollo 13 command module.

Practicalities

Domestic flights arrive at the Mid-Continent Airport, five miles southwest of downtown on Hwy-54 (W Kellogg Drive). Amtrak stops at Newton, a small Mennonite town 25 miles north, with a local bus connection to Wichita throughout the day; Greyhound comes in to 312 S Broadway Ave, two blocks east of Main Street. City transportation consists of buses (WMTA; $1 per ride; 📞 316/265-7221) and, more appealingly, trolleys, which run from 11am–3pm during the week and on Saturdays for just 25¢. The resourceful CVB is in the heart of downtown at Douglas Avenue and Main Street (Mon–Fri 7.45am–5.15pm; 📞 316/265-2800 or 1-800/288-9424, 📞 www.visitwichita.com). City trolley tours ($10; June–Aug Thurs–Sat 10am) depart from CityArts, 334 N Mead, as well.

Inexpensive lodgings in Wichita are plentiful, especially near the airport on W Kellogg Drive – try the Super 8 at no. 6245 (📞 316/945-5261; 📍). On the opposite flank of the city is a good Fairfield Inn, 333 S Webb Rd (📞 316/685-3777; 📍). More upscale, the Hotel at Oldtown, at First and Mosley streets (📞 316/267-4800; 📍), has a stylish turn-of-the-twentieth-century flavor and perfect location. Nine miles from town, Blasi Campground, 11209 W Hwy-54 (📞 316/722-2681), offers tent sites for $21.50.

There are a horde of restaurants, clubs, and bars around the quaint Old Town Marketplace. Good places to eat include the River City Brewing Co, 150 N Mosley St (📞 316/263-2739), which has good Kansas steaks, locally brewed beer, and sandwiches. The Old Mill Tasty Shop, by the railroad tracks at 604 E Douglas Ave (📞 316/264-6500), serves great sandwiches and Southwestern food. The Brickyard at 125 N Rock Island St (Wed–Sun; 📞 316/263-4044) is an American-style restaurant with a huge patio where rock, jazz, and blues bands perform most nights; the biggest discotheque is America’s Pub, at 116 N Mead St (📞 316/267-1782).

Dodge City

DODGE CITY, 150 miles west of Wichita, is perhaps the most famous of all America’s cowtowns. It has certainly been committed to celluloid more times than any other, especially in 1930s Westerns like My Darling Clementine and Dodge City. However, this wildest of Wild West cities had a heyday of only a decade, from 1875 until 1886. Established in 1872 along with the Santa Fe Railroad, which transported the hides of millions of Plains buffalo, by 1875 the town of traders, trappers, and hunters had to find a new economic base – the buffalo had been exterminated. The era of the great cattle drives was already under way, and Dodge City became a den of iniquity where gambling, drinking, and general lawlessness were the norm. Such wickedness led to gunfights galore, and the notorious Boot Hill cemetery (where the villains were buried with their boots on) was kept busy by charismatic, morally suspect lawmen such as Bat Masterson and Wyatt Earp.

The Town

Dodge City today is rather more staid, with its old downtown area enveloped by a hinterland of railroad tracks and giant silos. Outside of the Dodge City Days and Rodeo (www.dodgecityroundup.com), held in late July or early August, the town is content to replay its movie image in the Boot Hill Museum, 400 Front Street (June–Aug daily 8am–8pm; Sept–May Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $7, $8 in summer). The museum centers on the single-sided Historic Front Street, which was constructed in 1958 and has been acquiring old buildings from all over the West ever since. There's a bank and a grocer, stagecoach rides, a funeral parlor, a smithy, and even a full-sized railroad station, as well as the Long Branch Saloon, scene of a variety show with cancan dancers every night at 7.30pm ($6.95; summer only). Boot Hill cemetery is higher up the hill, still on museum grounds; there's just a sorry little patch of lawn on one corner of the original site, which was in any case abandoned in 1879 after just six years and thirty-four burials. The bodies were reinterred elsewhere, and as the graves were never marked in the first place, the wooden crosses in the cemetery are more than a little bogus.

Other sights in town include the Mueller-Schmidt Home of Stone, 112 E Vine St (June–Aug Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 2–4pm; free), an emotive memorial to pioneer mothers, often forgotten amid the macho Wild West myth-making. The house looks pretty much as it would have when built in 1881, with domestic memorabilia that belonged to early plainswomen. El Capitan, at Second St and

△ Dodge City, KS

Wyatt Earp Blvd, is a massive bronze longhorn, facing south towards an identical north-facing statue in Abilene, Texas. Together they mark the beginning and the end of the cattle drives.

Practicalities

Amtrak comes right into downtown, to the historic and renovated Santa Fe Station at Central Ave and Wyatt Earp Blvd. The CVB at 400 W Wyatt Earp Blvd (summer daily 8.30am–6.30pm; winter Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 620/225-8186 or 1-800/653-9378, 🌐 www.visitdodgecity.org) can offer advice on tourist activities. The Dodge City Trolley runs narrated town tours ($6) four times a day, in summer only, from a booth on the Boot Hill parking lot.

Most of Dodge City's motels are spread out roughly a mile west of downtown along US-50, still known here as Wyatt Earp Boulevard. The Budget Host Inn at no. 2200 (☎ 620/227-8146; ②–③) is inexpensive but a little noisy; the Dodge House at no. 2408 (☎ 620/225-9900; ③) has a reliable restaurant; and the EconoLodge at no. 1610 (☎ 620/225-0231; ②–③) has an indoor pool and sauna area. Camping is an option even for the car-less: the lakeside Water Sports Campground Recreation, 500 Cherry St (☎ 620/225-8044; $17 tent sites), lies ten blocks south of Front Street. If you feel like some Western-style fun, head for the Marchel Ranch, 10873 W Hwy-50 (☎ 620/227-7307), a small ranch offering a Wild West show and chuckwagon dinner.

As for food, Marchel Ranch Restaurant, in town at 2408 W Wyatt Earp (☎ 620/227-6151), offers a more varied menu than the one on offer at the show, with soups, salads, and steaks. Peppercorns, out near the motels at 1301 W Wyatt Earp Blvd (☎ 620/225-2335), is a conventional highway steakhouse with meals for about $13.

Iowa

Although at times serene, and almost always verdant, nothing about IOWA truly stands out. The state is the very essence of smalltown America, close to the geographical center of the mainland US, and ranking decidedly average in size, population, and level of personal income. Even the cities seem at times to be merely villages grown large.

Iowa's history, too, has been relatively uneventful. It was opened for settlement after the Black Hawk Treaty of 1832, a one-sided exercise in negotiation with the Sauk Indians, conducted after many of them had been chased down and slaughtered in neighboring Wisconsin and Illinois. The Northern European immigrants who replaced them made agricultural development their prime concern, turning the Iowa countryside into the rolling corn farms so common today.

Tourist attractions in Iowa are few and far between; the state's most visited destination is the throwback Germanic enclave of the Amana Colonies. However, Iowa does hold a few oddball sites, such as the original locations for the movies The Bridges of Madison County (in south-central Winterset, birthplace of John Wayne) and Field of Dreams (near Dubuque in the northeast). You can also see, but not enter, the original house that featured in Grant Wood's much-parodied American Gothic painting (at Eldon in the southeast, and now owned by the state).

Getting around Iowa

Greyhound buses out of Chicago call at all of Iowa's major towns. Daily buses also run from St Louis to Des Moines and Iowa City; these towns are connected less frequently with Minneapolis/St Paul. Amtrak's east–west route misses the cities, stopping instead at assorted small communities in the south. The only sizeable airport is in Des Moines.

Somewhat surprisingly, Iowa is a good place for cycle touring. Each year the extremely popular cross-state bike ride – the Register's Annual Great Bike Ride Across Iowa, or the RAGBRAI – attracts thousands of entrants, any of whom can tell you that the Plains aren't always flat (tour details ☎ 1-800/474-3342, @ www.ragbrai.org).

Eastern Iowa

Eastern Iowa, in the Mississippi River hinterland, is liberally sprinkled with agribusiness towns that display the continuing influence of their central and northern European pioneers, plus religious communities – Amish, Mennonite, and the Amana Colonies. All are easily accessible from Iowa City; as home to a huge university it's one of the state's livelier centers. Riverside towns such as northerly Dubuque and Burlington, near the Missouri state line, have been enlivened since 1991 by gambling, though so far games can only be played on board Mississippi paddle-wheelers, decked out in less-than-authentic Mark Twain-era trimmings.

Dubuque

The handsome town of DUBUQUE, overlooked by rocky bluffs on the Mississippi around 150 miles west of Chicago, was founded as the first white settlement in Iowa by French-Canadian lead miners in 1788. In the nineteenth century it became a boisterous river port and logging center. Buildings from this era still stand, but the companies that use them are in meatpacking and other food industries.

A complex of buildings at Third Street in the old Ice Harbor area, cut off from downtown by Hwy-61, includes an assortment of river-related museums (daily 10am–5.30pm; $9.95). Precisely which exhibits are housed in the Mississippi River Museum, the Riverboat Museum, and the National Rivers Hall of Fame (which focuses on “Pathfinders” such as Lewis and Clark, rather than the rivers themselves) seems to vary, but together they tell the story of Mississippi navigation from the days of Robert Fulton's first commercial steamboat in 1807 until the floods of 1993. The fifteen-minute introductory film River of Dreams is a good starting point for your explorations. The complex completed a $188 million renovation in 2003 and includes an aquarium, hotel, and entertainment complex, among other attractions.

Once your appetite has been whetted, you can travel along the high-banked Mississippi on a Spirit of Dubuque paddle-wheeler cruise (May–Oct daily; $14.25 for 90min; ☎ 563/583-8093 or 1-800/747-8093; @ www.dubuque-riverrides.com), or on board one of the more expensive gambling boats. Alternatively, what's said to be the world's shortest and steepest cable-car ride (April–Nov daily 8am–10pm; $1 one-way, $2 roundtrip) grinds its way from Fourth Street downtown up a sheer bluff to Fenelon Place, a residential street of old money and Victorian architecture. The top offers a sweeping view across the Mississippi to Illinois and Wisconsin. If cable cars don't appeal, then head north to the lovingly maintained, 164-acre Eagle Point Park (daily May–Oct 7am–10pm; $1 per car), set on bluffs high above the river.

Film buffs who enjoyed the 1989 baseball fantasy Field of Dreams can meet like-minded souls in surprising numbers at the original movie location, three miles north of Dyersville, which is 25 miles west of Dubuque on US-20. True to the movie's catchphrase – “if you build it, they will come” – crowds still gather on the bleachers to watch phantom games at the edge of the cornfields (April–Nov daily 9am–6pm).

Practicalities

The Iowa Welcome Center at 300 Main St (daily 9.30am–5.30pm; ☎ 563/556-4372 or 1-800/798-8844, 🌐 www.traveldubuque.com) is the best place to pick up information on Dubuque. As for places to stay, try the Richards House B&B, 1492 Locust St (☎ 563/557-1492; 📍), which is well-managed and has a homey, Victorian feel. Bargain hunters might want to stay at the grand redbrick Julien Inn, 200 Main St (☎ 563/556-4200 or 1-800/798-7098; 📍), which was once owned by mobster Al Capone; he used it as his safe house when trouble was brewing in Chicago. Picturesque campsites can be found at Miller Riverview Park, off Greyhound Park Road (☎ 563/589-4238; $10 per tent site). The Shot Tower Inn, at the foot of the cable car at Fourth and Locust streets (☎ 563/556-1061), serves a standard menu of pizzas and meat dishes. Café Manna Java, 269 Main St (☎ 563/588-3105), offers great baked goods and coffee.

Cedar Rapids

Seventy miles southwest of Dubuque, CEDAR RAPIDS, home of Quaker Oats, is Iowa's industrial leader. In the late 1840s, a meatpacking boom lured thousands of Czechs here. The National Czech & Slovak Museum, 16th Ave SW and First St (May–Oct Mon–Sat 9.30–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; Nov–April Tues–Sat 9.30am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $7; ☎ 319/362-8500), features gift shops, traditional houses, and a new museum of national costumes and immigrant artifacts. The very modern Museum of Art, 410 Third Ave SE (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $6), boasts a comprehensive collection of paintings by Grant Wood, best known for his depictions of 1930s farm life.

Cedar Rapids' CVB is based at 119 First Ave SE (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 319/398-5009 or 1-800/735-5557, 🌐 www.cedar-rapids.com). For reasonably priced rooms, there's the Best Western Cooper's Mill, 100 F Ave NW (☎ 319/366-5323 or 1-800/858-5511; 📍).

The Amana Colonies

The Amana Colonies are situated at the intersection of Hwy-151 and Hwy-220, midway between Cedar Rapids and Iowa City. They were founded in 1855 by the Community of True Inspiration, pacifist German refugees (not linked to the Amish or Mennonites) who believed that God spoke through prophets – themselves, for example – rather than ordained ministers. Members led a simple, collective lifestyle: each family lived in its own home, but they all ate together and shared profits from the farms. During the Depression, communal ownership became increasingly difficult to maintain, and in 1932 stock was redistributed among all the adults. However, they did keep up their commitment to close family ties, a sense of community, and religious principles.

The Amana Colonies today, consisting of seven separate villages set in an immaculate, serene valley, feel like a cross between a ski resort with no mountains and a reservation for Midwestern pioneers. Their prosperity is very evident, though in addition to tasteful clapboard houses standing on well-groomed lawns, and neat plank fences dividing rolling meadows, you'll also come across factories, pizza parlors, and even a golf course. It's geared less toward families and more toward Iowan couples on a weekend getaway. The twee streets of the largest village, Amana, are lined with restaurants and craft shops, a brewery, several wineries, and a woolen mill – plus a small Museum of History (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, April–Nov also Sun noon–5pm; $7).

Picturesque and less commercialized Homestead, three miles south of Amana, is enhanced by a 3.5-mile walking trail around a dam on a scenic bend of the Iowa River, built centuries ago by Indians to concentrate fish into one area.

Practicalities

Conventional addresses are seldom used in the Amana Colonies, but points of interest are well signposted. The visitor center, in Amana at 622 46th Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 319/622-7622 or 1-800/579-2294, 🌐 www.amanacolonies.com) has details on the many local B&Bs. There are tent spaces at the Amana Colonies RV Park (☎ 319/622-7616; $12 per tent site). Across the road from the RV park, The Old Creamery Theatre Company hosts afternoon and evening theater (☎ 1-800/352-6262 for schedule; $22) five nights a week.

Probably the most compelling reason to visit the colonies is their undeniably excellent old-style German food. The Ox Yoke Inn (☎ 319/668-1443) in Amana village dishes up family-style meals of fried chicken, potatoes, sauerkraut and the like; for a lighter snack, call in at Hahn's Hearth Oven Bakery in Middle Amana (☎ 319/622-3439). As alcohol is not prohibited, some eateries, like the Ronnenberg Restaurant and Bar (☎ 319/622-3641), are also popular for locally produced wine.

Iowa City and West Branch

IOWA CITY, on I-80 55 miles west of the Mississippi, is refreshingly young at heart. The gold-domed Old Capitol is a reminder of its days as state capital, before government was transferred to the more central Des Moines. Residents were placated by getting the University of Iowa instead. The arty shops and sidewalk cafés of the compact downtown touch the east end of campus, but its red and gray buildings, closeted by tall dark trees, remain aloof from the rest of the town.

About 12 miles east of Iowa City, the tiny Quaker town of WEST BRANCH attracts a steady stream of traffic from I-80 for its Herbert Hoover Library & Museum (daily 9am–5pm; $6). Informative exhibits and a documentary film cover Hoover's youthful adventures in China, his presidential victory and subsequent disgrace when the nation blamed him for the Great Depression, and his comeback after World War II as the leader of the European humanitarian relief effort. A self-guided walking tour begins at the library and includes Hoover's birthplace, a replica of his father's blacksmith shop, and the Friends Meeting-house where he attended Sunday services.

Greyhound stops at 170 E Court St, right downtown. The CVB is at 900 First Ave in Coralville, a little over a mile northeast of downtown (☎ 319/337-6592 or 1-800/283-6592, 🌐 www.icccvb.org). Iowa House is a comfortable central hotel in the student union building, beside the river on Madison Street (☎ 319/335-3513; 🍷). To the west, inexpensive motels in Coralville include the very clean and good-value Super 8, 611 First Ave (☎ 319/337-8388; 🍷). The Coralville Park, three miles north of I-80 at exit 242 (☎1-877/444-6777), is a good place to cast a fishing line, has a Devonian-era fossil bed, and offers grassy tent sites for $10. Inexpensive food is easy to find, be it the pastries and espressos served on long comfortable sofas at Java House, 211 E Washington St (☎319/341-0012); or the burgers at Micky's, 11 S Dubuque St (☎319/338-6860), a friendly, dimly-lit Irish bar. For something a little more upscale, the Atlas World Grill, 127 Iowa Ave (☎319/341-7700) serves great eclectic dishes, from macaroni and cheese to Jamaican jerk chicken.

Central and western Iowa

Pigs outnumber people in central Iowa. The only city among the cornfields, state capital Des Moines, struggles to lift the monotony, and many visitors may prefer the college town of Ames. The humdrum west has little to offer.

Des Moines

DES MOINES, near the center of Iowa amid tree-covered hills at the confluence of the sluggish Des Moines and Raccoon rivers, owes its origins to a military fort set up in 1843. The area had already grown into a trading center for farmers by the time the 18-year-old Frederick Hubbell arrived in 1855; within a decade he had founded the Equitable Life and Insurance Corporation to service their need for investment capital. Other companies soon realized the potential of agrarian business, and today the city is the world's third-largest insurance center, behind London and Hartford, Connecticut. Illustrious former denizens of Des Moines include President Ronald Reagan, who started out as a sportscaster on Radio WHO, and arch-cowboy John Wayne, who was born and raised in nearby Winterset.

Arrival, information, and accommodation

Des Moines' Greyhound station is just northwest of downtown at 1107 Keosauqua Way. From the very efficient transfer depot at Sixth Ave and Walnut St, MTA buses ($1.25; ☎515/283-8100) run practically everywhere in the city. The CVB is at 400 Locust St, suite 265 (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎515/286-4960 or 1-800/451-2625, @www.seedesmoines.com).

Accommodation-wise, downtown Des Moines caters mostly to insurance company business, though there are still some fairly inexpensive places to stay. You can camp at Walnut Woods State Park, off Hwy-35 exit 68, where tent sites are $14.

Butler House 4507 Grand Ave ☎515/255-4096 or 1-866-455/4096. Lovely B&B, with whimsically decorated rooms, across the street from the Des Moines Art Center. 4–6

Hotel Fort Des Moines 1000 Walnut Ave at 10th St ☎515/243-1161 or 1-800/532-1466. Historical downtown gem with Old World elegance and exemplary service. The indoor swimming pool/spa area has won awards for its tasteful design. 4–7

Motel 6 4817 Fleur Drive ☎515/287-6364. Clean rooms near the airport. 2

Quality Inn & Suites 929 3rd St ☎515/282-5251. Reasonably priced downtown rooms. 4

Renaissance Savery Hotel 401 Locust St ☎515/244-2151. Modern hotel in the heart of downtown with comfortable rooms and touches from the early 1900s. 5–6

The City

The steel-and-glass skyline of downtown Des Moines, most of which shot up during the 1980s, is testimony to the town's ever-growing insurance business.

For such a fast-track financial center, the streets are curiously empty; pedestrians instead use the Skywalk, a three-mile network of air-conditioned corridors linking twenty blocks of offices, banks, parking lots, restaurants, hotels, and movie theaters.

Most businesses stand on the west bank of the Des Moines River, which cuts downtown in two. In 1857, a group of speculators attempted to shift the commercial hub to the east side by bribing commissioners to site the state capitol at E Ninth St and Grand Ave. Their hopes of huge spin-offs were dashed when the nationwide financial crash later that same year saw property prices collapse. As a result, the five-domed Italian Renaissance-style mass, on the crest of a steep hill, is now detached from the heart of the city (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm, Sat 9am–4pm; free; call for tour times ☎ 515/281-5591). A short walk downhill, in the futuristic pink-and-brown State of Iowa Historical Building, E Sixth and Locust streets (Tues–Sat 9am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; free), are displays covering Indian civilization, pioneer times, and the development of Iowa farming, along with plenty of solemn portraits of former governors.

Three miles west, the impressive Des Moines Art Center, in a leafy suburb at 4700 Grand Ave (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 11am–4pm, Thurs 11am–9pm, Sun noon–4pm; free), is housed in a trio of buildings designed by world-renowned architects Eliel Saarinen, I.M. Pei, and Richard Meier. Works by Matisse, Picasso, and Renoir stand alongside twentieth-century Americans such as Wood, Hopper, and O’Keeffe. The most dynamic exhibits are in the Meier wing, including a gigantic and disturbing Anselm Kiefer canvas.

Eating, drinking, and nightlife

That Iowans eat well is reflected in the quality – and quantity – of food on offer in Des Moines’ many restaurants. As for nightlife, most of it is confined to local watering holes – there’s not much at all in the way of dance clubs or live music.

High Life Lounge 200 SW 2nd St
☎ 515/280-1965. Though just a few years old, this retro bar and grill has the feel of a long-time neighborhood fixture. The bar serves great roasted chicken and beer only produced before 1979.

Iowa Beef Steakhouse 1201 E Euclid Ave
☎ 515/262-1138. You’ll leave this homey restaurant feeling full, thanks to huge steaks (like the 20-ounce New York strip) supplemented by a salad from the salad bar, a baked potato, and garlic bread.

Java Joe’s 214 4th St ☎ 515/288-5282. Late-closing coffee bar and sandwich place, featuring live entertainment at weekends. Wireless Internet access available. Open until 11:30pm on weekdays, midnight on weekends.

Spaghetti Works 310 Court Ave ☎ 515/243-2195. Spacious Italian outfit with original interior decor (it has variously served as a glove factory, hat millinery, and fruit market). The all-you-care-to-eat pasta dishes from $5 are great value.

Stella’s Blue Sky Diner 3281 100th St
☎ 515/727-4408. Kitsch diner decked out in lurid pink, turquoise, and yellow. Wash down burgers and fries with divine chocolate, peanut butter, and banana malts.

Around Des Moines

Ten miles west of downtown Des Moines, at I-80 exit 125, the Living History Farms in Urbandale (May–Oct daily 9am–5pm; $11) trace the evolution of agriculture on the Plains. Self-guided tours progress through five historic sites, from the oval bark homes of an eighteenth-century Iowan settlement, through an 1850s homestead, to a look at the high-tech methods of today. If you want to continue the rural theme, eat colossal portions of meat loaf and chops in the Iowa Machine Shed Restaurant (☎ 515/270-6818), or stay in the country-style Comfort Suites Hotel (☎ 515/276-1126; 4); both are next to the farm entrance.

Thirty miles north of Des Moines, Ames is the home of Iowa State University. Smaller and slightly less trendy than Iowa City, it's still a lively little community (by Iowa standards, at least). The visitor center, 1601 Golden Aspen Drive, suite 110 (☎ 515/232-4032 or 1-800/288-7470, 🌐 www.acvb.ames.ia.us), can advise on concerts and area attractions. Room rates are reasonable out at the Super 8, three miles from campus at I-35 and Hwy-30 (☎ 515/232-6510; 📍); Hickory Park, 1404 S Duff St (☎ 515/232-8940), is a popular barbecue joint.

Winterset

Until Robert Waller's The Bridges of Madison County changed everything, sleepy, rundown WINTERSET, 25 miles southwest of Des Moines, seemed a long way off the beaten path. The town's one tourist attraction was the modest former home of the local pharmacist at 216 S Second St (daily 10am–4.30pm; $3), run as a museum in tribute to his son, Marion Robert Morrison. Born in 1907, Morrison grew up to become Hollywood hardman John Wayne.

These days, Winterset's visitor center, on Courthouse Square in the heart of town (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; ☎ 515/462-1185 or 1-800/298-6119, 🌐 www.madisoncounty.com), has become accustomed to handling inquiries from all over the world about the locations for Waller's tale. You can drive out to view the covered bridges; six (out of an original nineteen) nineteenth-century bridges still stand. Afterwards, you can have a meal in the old-style Northside Café, a few doors along from the visitor center, where Clint Eastwood was made to feel decidedly uncomfortable in the movie version of the book. A good time to visit Winterset is the second full weekend of October for the Bridge Festival, featuring local bands and artists. Accommodation possibilities nearby include the Super 8, 1312 Cedar Bridge Rd (☎ 515/462-4888 or 1-800/800-8000; 📍). There is a small campground at the Winterset City Park on the east end of town (☎ 515/462-3258; $10).

Nebraska

Though modern transcontinental travelers tend to see NEBRASKA in much the same light as those heading west during the Gold Rush did – as just another dreary expanse of prairie to get through as fast as possible – this flat and sparsely populated state in fact holds a few places of interest. However, a good three hundred miles of underwhelming, livestock-rearing flatlands separate its most appealing cities, commercial Omaha and the livelier state capital, Lincoln, from the western Panhandle, where the landscape finally erupts into giant sand hills and valleys, broken by towering rocky columns and hemmed in by sheer-faced buttes.

Western Nebraska was still embroiled in vicious and bloody battles against Native Americans long after the east had been settled; from the first serious uprising in 1854, it was thirty-six years before the US Army could make white control unchallengeable. Close to the South Dakota state line, Fort Robinson, where Crazy Horse was murdered, remains one of the West's most evocative historic sites.

Without navigable rivers, Nebraska had to rely on the railroads to help populate the land. During the 1870s and 1880s, rail companies, encouraged by grants that allowed them to accumulate one-sixth of the state, laid down such a comprehensive network of tracks that virtually every farmer was within a day's cattle drive of the nearest halt. Thus the buffalo-hunting country of the Sioux and Pawnee was turned into high-yield farmland, which today has few rivals in terms of beef production.

Getting around Nebraska

The Omaha airport offers the best domestic links, though planes from other cities in the region also fly to Lincoln. Several Greyhound buses traverse I-80 each day on the coast-to-coast marathon, stopping at all the major towns. Amtrak trains, traveling through the night, follow a similar route, calling at Omaha, Lincoln, Hastings, Holdrege, and McCook. Driving on I-80 can get tedious; if you're not in a rush, Scenic Hwy-2 (see p.813) is a good alternative.

Eastern Nebraska

The silt-laden Missouri River separates Nebraska from Iowa and Missouri to the east. There are few natural ports on this stretch, and Omaha remains the only riverfront community of any size. Lincoln, 58 miles southwest, is the state's capital and seat of its university.

Omaha

Although OMAHA, Nebraska's largest and most easterly city, has a great zoo, several museums, and a lively entertainment district, the atmosphere remains sedate and predominantly suburban. As a major terminus on the first transcontinental railroad, Omaha made a logical alternative to distant Chicago as a marketplace for Wyoming and Nebraska ranchers to sell their herds of cattle. By the end of the 19th century, massive stockyards had spread along the southern edge of town, and the city still handles well over one million head of livestock per year.

In downtown Omaha you'll find good bars and cafés along the cobbled streets of the Old Market district, plus interesting specialist shops such as the Antiquarian Bookstore, 1215 Harney St (☎ 402/341-8077), packed with dusty volumes. Train buffs will be impressed with the Durham Western Heritage Museum, converted from the Union Pacific Railroad station, at 801 S 10th St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1pm–5pm; $6), where old train cars and huge model train sets are featured alongside a gallery of Omaha history. Behind its pink-marble Art Deco exterior, the Joslyn Art Museum, 2200 Dodge St (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $6, free Sat before noon), contains an eclectic selection of Indian art and twentieth-century American paintings.

Malcolm X was born in Omaha in May 1925, though his family moved to Michigan immediately thereafter, in the face of Ku Klux Klan death threats to his father, a preacher who followed the back-to-Africa teachings of Marcus Garvey. Omaha tourist authorities don't promote his birthsite, at 3448 Pinkney St. Years of debate over how to develop the site have yielded a solitary placard, hidden behind some trees, offering a brief biography. By way of contrast, the lavish birthplace of President Gerald R. Ford, at 32nd St and Woolworth Ave (daily 7.30am–9pm; free), is open to the public; he too moved to Michigan in his infancy, after his parents divorced.

The Henry Doorly Zoo, 3701 S 10th St (daily 8.30am–5pm June–Aug, 9.30am–5pm Sept–May; $10.50), rightfully considers itself one of the best zoos in America and is well worth a visit. It started off with two buffalo borrowed from Buffalo Bill; now there's a gigantic aviary, some rare white Siberian tigers, a magnificent bear canyon, and the large Kingdoms of the Seas aquarium.

Twenty-nine miles southwest of Omaha, at exit 426 on I-80, is the Strategic Air and Space Museum (daily 9am–5pm; $7; www.strategicairandspace.com), inside two huge hangars containing giant 1950s- and 1960s-era warplanes, some of which were designed and built by the Martin Bomber Company of Omaha. Films, photos, and exhibits concentrate on World War II and the Cold War, the latter highlighted by various weapons including an Atlas-D Intercontinental Ballistic Missile, located outside the museum entrance.

Practicalities

Omaha's Greyhound station is at 1601 Jackson St; Amtrak trains depart very late at night, and arrive long before the city wakes up, at 1003 S Ninth St. Both depots are well placed for downtown; however, local public transportation is poor. The CVB is at 1001 Farnam, right downtown (Mon–Sat 9am–4.30pm; 402/444-4660 or 1-866/937-6624, www.visitomaha.com). There's also a welcome center for Nebraska as a whole, just off I-80 exit 454, across from the zoo at Tenth St and Bob Gibson Blvd (May–Oct daily 9am–5pm, Nov–April Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; 402/595-3990).

Hotel rates are good, except in mid-June when the college baseball World Series comes to town. Rooms at the downtown Hilton Garden Inn, 1005 Dodge St (402/341-4400; 4), are clean and comfortable. The circular, almost cute, and certainly pretty unusual Satellite Motel, 6006 L St (402/733-7373; 3) offers clean, recently remodeled rooms. Located next to the SAC Museum, the Eugene T. Mahoney State Park (402/944-2523) has campsites ($17), cabins, and a lodge (3–4), in a family-oriented setting. The Pinecrest Farms B&B, located 50 miles west of Omaha, on Country Road A between highways 77 and 79 (402/784-6461; 3), offers an idyllic and romantic setting.

The Old Market district, centered on Tenth and Howard streets, has the liveliest restaurants and bars. The Indian Oven, 1010 Howard St (402/342-4856), a superb Asian restaurant, features paneer and vegetable dishes on its extensive menu. M's Pub, at 422 S 11th St (402/342-2550), serves soups, salads, and sandwiches, while the Upstream Brewing Company, 514 S 11th St (402/344-0200), has excellent beers and a standard American menu. Mr Toad's, 1002 Howard St (402/345-4488), is a reliable jazz venue, with good jam sessions on Sundays.

Lincoln

Tiny Rochester was selected to be state capital in 1867 – on the condition that it change its name to LINCOLN in honor of the recently assassinated president. Such was the disappointment in the territorial seat of government, Omaha, that state officials had to smuggle documents, books, and office furniture out of the city in the middle of the night to avoid armed gangs.

Fifty-eight miles southwest of Omaha, the city now serves as an oasis of culture for a large chunk of the Plains. At night, when the students emerge, its compact downtown comes into its own. Of its alphabetical array of broad boulevards, O Street (the subject of Allen Ginsberg's poem "Zero Street") is the main drag; 13th and 14th streets are packed with bars and places to eat.

Dwarfing the rest of downtown, the central tower of the 1932 Nebraska state capitol, 1445 K St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; tours every hour; free), protrudes 400ft into the sky. Topped by a 20ft statue of a sower on a pedestal of wheat and corn, its remarkably phallic appearance has prompted the nickname "penis of the prairies." The superb iridescent murals in the foyer are a welcome alternative to old portraits, flags, and emblems, and from the fourteenth-floor observation deck you can survey the flatness of the surrounding farmland.

Twelve thousand years of life on the plains are covered at the Museum of Nebraska History, Centennial Mall at 15th and P streets (Tues–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat–Sun 1–4pm; $2 suggested donation), where displays focus on anthropology rather than history. The Elephant Hall, a gallery of towering mammoth, mastodon, and four-tusker skeletons, is the highlight of the University of Nebraska State Museum at 14th and U streets (Mon–Sat 9.30am–4.30pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; $5). A few blocks away, the Sheldon Memorial Art Gallery, 12th and R streets (Tues–Thurs 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–8pm, Sat 10am–5pm; free), traces the development of American art, and has a twenty-piece sculpture garden. The 76,000-seater Memorial Stadium, at the northern end of campus on Vine Street (tickets ☎402/472-3111 or 1-800/8-BIGRED), is where the brutal “Big Red” Cornhuskers invariably thrash their football opposition.

Practicalities

Lincoln’s Greyhound station is downtown at 2400 NW 12th St, while Amtrak passes through 201 N 7th St at crazy early-morning hours. Star-Tran (☎402/476-1234) runs good local buses ($1.25). The visitor center is in Lincoln Station, right next to Amtrak (June–Sept Mon–Fri 9am–8pm, Sat 8am–2pm, Sun noon–4pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 10am–2pm; ☎402/434-5348 or 1-800/423-8212, @www.lincoln.org).

Except on football weekends, it’s easy to find inexpensive accommodation out by the airport, off I-80 exit 399 – at the Days Inn (☎402/475-3616; ③), for example. Downtown, the Holiday Inn, 9th and O streets (☎402/475-4011; ④), offers good value. The Branched Oak State Park, off Raymond Road from Hwy-79, has tent sites for $6–11; the more expensive sites have showers.

Restaurants downtown tend to be less than compelling, with grills, pizzerias, and family diners predominating. The Oven, 201 N 8th St (☎402/475-6118), offers Indian cuisine with a range of cheap breads and inventive specials, while the Italian menu at Valentino’s, 35th & Holdrege (☎402/475-1501), is tasty and well-priced. The Z-Bar, 136 N 14th St (☎402/435-8754), attracts big-name jazz and blues acts en route between Chicago and Kansas City; Duffy’s Tavern, 1412 O St (☎402/474-3543), pulls in a younger crowd and some good rock bands. Across the street at no. 1329, O’Rourke’s Tavern (☎402/435-8052) is a lively, well-priced hangout. The Historic Haymarket District, by the Amtrak station, holds more bars and restaurants, including The Mill, at 800 P St (☎402/475-5522), which has good coffee and Internet access.

Western Nebraska

After the unerringly flat journey across eastern Nebraska, the far west comes as a refreshing change. In the Panhandle, as it’s often called, wave upon wave of rumpled sandy hills, thinly coated with prairie grass, back off toward the horizon like a sea in constant turmoil. Early pioneers wrote the area off as unproductive, and it remained barren until massive irrigation work at the start of the twentieth century enabled agricultural settlement. In the northwest the sand hills yield to classic John Ford-style Western scenery: pancake-flat valleys, crisscrossed by dry meandering riverbeds and corralled by crusty, contorted bluffs, all under the constant shadow of fast-moving clouds. Emigrants on the Oregon Trail used the bizarre outcrops, which sprout along the way, as “road signs.”

West along I-80

Interstate 80 is one of the most popular coast-to-coast routes simply because it's the shortest. Scenery is not its strongest suit, and the central swath through 450 miles of Nebraskan farmland is not a prospect drivers cherish. If time doesn't matter, then it's better to head northwest at dreary Grand Island, 93 miles west of Lincoln, onto Scenic Hwy-2, for a lonesome yet exhilarating drive through the Sandhills.

If you stick to I-80, decent pull-off points are few and far between. It's hard to miss the newest attraction at KEARNEY – the Great Platte River Road Archway Monument (☎ 1-877/511-2724; daily 9am–6pm in summer, rest of year hours vary; $10) actually spans the Interstate near exit 272. Exhibits inside tell the story of a transient nation and recreate the hardships of life on the westward trail.

Just over halfway across the state at exit 177, NORTH PLATTE makes a big deal about its Buffalo Bill Ranch Historical Park (April–May & Sept–Oct 9am–4pm weekdays; June–Aug 9am–5pm daily; $4 per car), another property of the ubiquitous William “Buffalo Bill” Cody. Today the ranch is run by the state, which places more emphasis on history than tacky folklore. Cody's mansion and various barns can be examined, and an excellent documentary film, shown on request, features movie clips of his “Wild West Show,” which toured America and Europe for thirty years. The park offers camping ($6 per night). The Rambler Motel, 1420 Rodeo Rd (☎ 308/532-9290; 📍), has decent rooms and an outdoor pool. Eating options are mostly limited to national chains.

Thirty miles west, aiming to entertain bored drivers in the one-horse hamlet of PAXTON, off exit 145 Ole's Big Game Lounge & Grill (☎ 308/239-4500) serves tasty fried food, with over two hundred wildlife trophies from around the world mounted on its walls, cabinets, and shelves. Fascinating, but not a place for the animal-rights activist.

At OGALLALA, twenty miles further along, Old West outlaws were interred at Boot Hill Cemetery (10th St and Parkhill Rd; free) in the 1880s. The town sits just nine miles south of the Lake McConaughy reservoir, famous for fishing, watersports, and the sandy beaches along its hundred miles of shoreline. From Ogallala, it's 165 miles to Cheyenne, Wyoming, though Sidney (exit 59) takes you into rugged Oregon Trail country (see p.814).

Scenic Hwy-2 and Alliance

Scenic Hwy-2 meanders and dips for over 330 miles from I-80 to South Dakota's Black Hills. It passes through the Sandhills – a mesmerizing landscape carpeted with short-grass prairie and softened by delicate wild flowers and shiny ponds. Apart from a few farmsteads, grain silos, and tiny churches, all you're likely to see on the open road are lazing cattle, a few sluggish rivers, and the occasional mile-and-a-quarter-long freight train weaving its way through the hills. It's a long, desolate, yet incredibly beautiful drive through an anachronistic corner of the US.

The road dawdles for miles through scattered villages before drifting into ALLIANCE – a nice enough little prairie town, which pulls in over fifty thousand visitors per year for its one big attraction. Carhenge, two and a half miles north on State Hwy-87 (always open; free; 🌐 www.carhenge.com), is a rough copy of Stonehenge – but made with old cars rather than stone. Erected in a cornfield during a family reunion in 1987, this intriguing collection of Chevys, Cadillacs, and Plymouths, painted a brooding battleship grey and tilted at unusual angles, has to be the best picnic site in America's heartland. To some it's an ingenious piece of Pop Art; others view it as great black humor, or an appalling eyesore. The Nebraska Department of Roads rapidly declared it a junkyard, and ordered the city of Alliance to remove it, forcing locals to form Friends of Carhenge, whose work seems to have secured the monument's future.

Alliance's helpful downtown CVB office, 111 W Third St (☎ 308/762-1520), provides information and sells Carhenge souvenirs. There is no reason to linger in Alliance, but if you arrive late, try the Days Inn, 117 Cody Ave, just off Third St (☎ 308/762-8000; 📍), or the Holiday Inn Express, 1420 W Third St (☎ 308/762-7600; 📍). For food, there's Ken & Dale's, 123 E Third St (☎ 308/762-7252), which serves succulent all-day breakfasts and great pecan pancakes.

The Oregon Trail landmarks

Two of the first landmarks encountered by travelers on the Oregon Trail, which in western Nebraska paralleled the route of modern US-26, were the lumpy Courthouse and Jail rocks, which lie four miles beyond the likeable little town of Bridgeport, 36 miles south of Alliance. Fourteen miles west, along Hwy-92, the Chimney Rock National Historic Site (daily 9am–5pm; $3; tours available; 🌐 www.nps.org/chro) rises almost 500ft above the North Platte River. Although this phallic outcrop's nineteenth-century stature may have been chipped away by erosion and lightning, it remains one of the most recognizable and memorable landmarks in the West.

The twin towns of GERING and SCOTTSBLUFF, 25 miles further west, are the commercial center for the farmlands of western Nebraska. Southwest of Gering, the rugged 800ft rampart of Scotts Bluff National Monument (daily: summer 8am–7pm; rest of year 8am–5pm; $5 per car) stands like a Nebraska Gibraltar. Known to the Sioux as Me-a-pa-te (“hill that’s hard to get around”), it earned its anglicized name in 1828 after fur trader Hiram Scott was mysteriously found dead at its base. Trips to the top (by foot or free shuttle bus) are rewarded with a magnificent view, and the entrance fee includes the absorbing Oregon Trail Museum, which relates the experiences of the early emigrants. Just outside Gering, to the southwest, the spiky Wildcat Hills hold some delightful vistas and hiking terrain.

△ Carhenge

Well-kept rooms are available in the Lamplighter American Inn, 606 E 27th St, Scottsbluff (☎ 308/632-7108; 📍); Woodshed, 18 E 16th St (☎ 308/635-3684), is the best spot for family-style food, and has a full bar. The towns' visitor center can be found at 1517 Broadway, Scottsbluff (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 308/632-2133).

Fort Robinson State Park

Some eighty miles north of Scottsbluff, just west of Crawford village, Fort Robinson State Park, beside 1000ft crenelated cliffs in the inhospitable White River Valley, preserves the spot where the US Army coordinated its campaign to rid the gold-rich Badlands of the native Sioux. Today, it's a cross between a dude ranch and a living history village – a smoothing over that makes the memories of the obliteration of an entire way of life all the more poignant.

Restored fort buildings contain period furnishings, and there are two small museums. The State Historical Society Museum traces the fort's history from 1874-1946, and the Trailside Museum interprets the geology and natural history of the region. A simple stone marks the spot where Crazy Horse was killed (see box, below); the horse-drawn tour (six per day; $4) acknowledges it with a mere ten-second halt. Good-value horseback rides pass some wondrously weird rock formations, and Fort Robinson Lodge (☎ 308/665-2900; 📍 2-4) has nice rooms as well as bargain cottages; the Lodge's restaurant serves cheap buffalo tacos and

Crazy Horse

The life of Oglala Sioux leader Crazy Horse is shrouded in confusion, misinterpretation, and controversy. So thoroughly did the most enigmatic figure in Plains Indian history avoid contact with whites (outside battle, at least) that no photograph or even sketch of him exists; unlike other Indian chiefs, he refused to visit Washington, DC, or talk to reporters.

Crazy Horse earned his title as a youth, after he single-handedly charged rival Arapahoe and took two scalps. The finest moment in a brilliant military career came in June 1876, when he led a thousand warriors in inflicting a stinging defeat on the superior forces of General George Crook at the Battle of the Rosebud River. Just eight days later Crazy Horse headed the attack at the Battle of Little Bighorn, where Custer and his entire company were killed (see p.894).

After Little Bighorn, US Army efforts to round up the Indians were redoubled. In May 1877, Crazy Horse surprised friend and foe alike by leading nine hundred of his people into Fort Robinson. They gave up their weapons, and Crazy Horse, keen to stay in his native land (unlike Sitting Bull, who had retreated to Canada), demanded that the buffalo grounds along the Powder River should remain in Indian hands. Tensions at the army camp rose after a rumor went around the barracks that the Sioux chief had come to murder General Crook. Crazy Horse was arrested on September 5, 1877; during a tussle outside the fort jail, he was bayoneted three times, and died the next morning.

Quite why this undefeated warrior should have surrendered without a fight, and whether he fell victim to a deliberate assassination, remains unclear. What is certain is that his death signaled the closing chapter of the Indian Wars. The Oglala Sioux were forcibly moved to the poor hunting country of Missouri, and settlers immediately swept in their thousands into western Nebraska, South Dakota, Wyoming, and Montana.

Crazy Horse, so one story goes, was buried by his family in an unmarked grave in an out-of-the-way creek called Wounded Knee – the very place where thirteen years later three hundred Sioux men, women, and children were slaughtered in the bloody finale to over half a century of barbarism (see p.820).

other beef and bison dishes. There is good camping for $11-19 per person, or you could really rough it at the beautiful but remote Toadstool Geological Park, 25 miles to the north.

The town of Chadron, 23 miles east of Fort Robinson, is worth a visit principally for the small Museum of the Fur Trade, four miles east on US-20 (summer daily 8am-5pm; $5). The museum is a valuable historical archive illustrating the unique barter system that operated between fur traders and local Native Americans.

The wide-open spaces of the Great Plains roll away to infinity on either side of I-90 in SOUTH DAKOTA. Though the land is more green and fertile east of the Missouri River, vast numbers of high-season visitors speed straight on through to the spectacular southwest, site of the Badlands and the adjacent Black Hills – two of the most dramatic, mysterious, and legend-impacted tracts of land in the US. For whites, they encapsulate a wagonload of American notions about heritage and the taming of the West; to Native Americans, they are ancient, spiritually resonant places.

The science-fiction severity of the Badlands resists fitting into easy tourist tastes. The bigger, more user-friendly Black Hills, home of that most patriotic of icons, Mount Rushmore, have been subjected to greater exploitation (dozens of physical, historical, and downright commercial attractions, as well as the mining of gold and other metals), but encourage more active exploration, via hiking trails, mountain lakes and streams, and scenic highways.

Time and Hollywood have mythologized the larger-than-life personalities for whom the Dakota Territory served as a stomping-ground: Custer and Crazy Horse battled here for supremacy over the Plains, while Wild Bill Hickok and Calamity Jane were denizens of the once-notorious Gold Rush town of Deadwood.

Sioux tribes dominated the plains from the eighteenth century, having gradually been pushed westwards from the Great Lakes by the encroaching whites. To these nomadic hunters, unlike the gun-toting Christian settlers and federal politicians, the concept of owning the earth was utterly alien. They fought hard to stay free: the Sioux are the only Indian nation to have defeated the United States in war and forced it to sign a treaty (in 1868) favorable to them. Even so, they were compelled, in the face of a gung-ho gold rush, to relinquish the sacred Black Hills, and ultimately the choice lay between death or confinement on reservations. For decades their history and culture were outlawed; until the 1940s it was illegal to teach or even speak their language, Lakota. More Sioux live now on South Dakota's six reservations than dwelled in the whole state during pioneer days, but their prospects are often grim. Nowhere is the legacy of injustice better symbolized than at Wounded Knee, on the Oglala Sioux Pine Ridge Reservation – scene of the infamous 1890 massacre by the US Army, and also of a prolonged "civil disturbance" by the radical American Indian Movement in 1973.

Today Native American traditions are celebrated by music, dance, and socializing at powwows, held in summer on the reservations; the state tourist office can supply dates and locations. The outdoors-minded state also has 170 parks and recreation areas for hikers and campers. In winter, downhill skiing is limited to Terry Peak and Deer Mountain, outside Lead in the Black Hills; cross-country skiing and snowmobiling are more prevalent.

You'll be hard put to see much of South Dakota without a car. Amtrak routes bypass the state entirely, though Jefferson (☎ 1-800/444-6287) bus lines serve points between Rapid City and Sioux Falls, sites of the two major airports. Powder River buses (☎ 1-800/442-3682) serve Black Hills I-90 towns such as Rapid City, Spearfish, and Sturgis, as well as making the two-hour trip to Cheyenne, Wyoming. To see iconic attractions such as Mount Rushmore and the Crazy Horse Memorial, you might hook up with Discovery Tours (☎ 605/722-5788), which runs lively minibus tours from Rapid City and Deadwood.

East of the Missouri

For tourists, little in eastern or central South Dakota can be considered essential. Sioux Falls, the state's biggest city, is faceless but handy. As one of the country's quietest and smallest capitals, Pierre has its charms, while Mitchell has a few curiosities, and Yankton has the excellent Lewis and Clark Recreation Area on its doorstep. The town marks the start of an alternative cross-state route to I-90, trundling through nearby Vermillion, home to the exceptional Shrine to Music Museum, plus the Rosebud and Pine Ridge reservations. About sixty miles northwest of Sioux Falls, De Smet is known as "Little Town on the Prairie" thanks to the autobiographical books of Laura Ingalls Wilder. You can tour eighteen sites she mentions for smatterings of history, pretty scenery, and homely pride. Chamberlain holds the worthwhile Akta Lakota Museum and Cultural Center.

Mitchell

MITCHELL makes a mildly diverting stop on the seemingly endless drive along I-90. It's known for its Corn Palace at 604 N Main St (summer daily 8am–9pm; winter Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; free), which has been called "the world's largest bird-feeder"; the first one was built in 1892 to encourage settlement and to display local agricultural products. A large arena topped with brightly painted onion-shaped domes and minarets, the "palace" hosts various performance and sports events and is decorated annually (at a cost of about $125,000) with large murals depicting farming and other outdoor scenes. The artists' materials consist exclusively of native corn, grains, and grasses of varying natural colors. Mitchell's visitor center is across the street at 601 N Main St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 605/996-5567 or 1-866/273-CORN, 🌐 www.cornpalace.com). Other places where you can while away time in Mitchell include a surprisingly engaging museum of dolls, including a salt-carved Shirley Temple; a pioneer museum; and a prehistoric Native American village.

Both the Best Western (☎ 605/996-5536; 📍) and the Super 8 (☎ 605/996-9678; 📍) motels lie just off I-90 at exit 332. The Lake Mitchell Campground, one mile north of town on Hwy-37 (☎ 605/995-8457), has grassy tent sites ($14) that overlook the water.

The railroad-themed Depot, 210 S Main St (☎ 605/996-9417), is a fun place to grab a meal.

Pierre

Straggling along the east bank of the Missouri River at the center of South Dakota, PIERRE is the second smallest and by far the least sophisticated of all the US state capitals; it is instead a typical South Dakota town, whose fifteen thousand residents do their best to ignore the fact that it's the seat of state government.

Apart from the black-domed capitol building itself, which sits in a pleasant park at the northeast edge of downtown and is open for tours (daily 8am–10pm; free), there's not a lot to detain you here. One exception is the worthwhile Cultural Heritage Center (Jun–Aug Mon–Sat 9am–6.30pm, Sun 1–4.30pm; Sept–May Mon–Sat 9am–4.30pm, Sun 1–4.30pm; $4), located high on a hill half a mile north of the capitol, and modeled on traditional Plains Indian dwellings. Repository for the usual barrage of pioneer implements and prehistoric artifacts, the museum is one of few such places that does more than pay lip service to the state's significant Native American cultures.

Pierre's visitor center is at 800 W Dakota St (☎605/224-7361 or 1-800/962-2034, 🌐www.pierre.org). Pier 347, 347 S Pierre St (☎605/224-2400), offers bagels and coffee drinks, while the fast-food chains line up along Sioux Avenue, which also holds the bulk of the town's motels, including the clean and comfortable Governor's Inn, 700 W Sioux Ave (☎605/224-4200; 📍).

The Badlands

The White River BADLANDS could be considered a pocket-sized cousin to Arizona's Grand Canyon. What's most impressive about the "Badlandscape" is not its scale, as at the Canyon, but rather its sheer strangeness. More than 35 million years ago this area of southwest South Dakota was a saltwater sea; later it became a marsh, into which sank the remains of such prehistoric mammals as sabre-toothed cats and three-toed horses, to be covered with white volcanic ash. Drying as it evolved, the terrain became unable to support the deep-rooted shrubs or trees that might have preserved it, and over the last few million years erosion has slowly eaten away layers of sand, silt, ash, mud, and gravel, to reveal rippling gradations of earth tones and pastel colors. The crumbly earth is carved into all manner of shapes: pinnacles, precipices, pyramids, knobs, cones, ridges, gorges, or, if you're feeling poetic, lunar sandcastles and cathedrals. The Sioux dubbed these incredible contortions of nature Mako Sica – literally, "land bad"; early French trappers echoed that with Mauvaises Terres à Traverser, or "bad lands to travel across"; they have also been aptly described as "hell with the fires out." Despite this daunting reputation, animals such as bighorn sheep, mule deer, and prairie dogs are at home here, while on average a million visitors pass through each year.

The most spectacular formations can be found within the Badlands National Park, particularly its northern sector, while the poverty-stricken Pine Ridge Indian Reservation encompasses the southern stretches. Clean-cut Wall, just a few miles north of the park boundaries, is the most-visited commercial center in the region.

Badlands National Park

About one-tenth of the Badlands – the most amazing parts – were declared a national park (open year-round) in the 1970s. The two most accessible entrances are off I-90 at exits 131 (northeast entrance) and 109-110 (at the town of Wall), connected by the forty-mile paved loop of Hwy-240, peppered with scenic overlooks; see p.822 for a map of the area. Visitors can backpack or climb just about anywhere; among the best of the marked hiking trails are the Door Trail, a half-hour loop that enters the eerie wasteland through a natural “doorway” in the rock pinnacles ten miles south of the northeast entrance, and the even shorter Fossil Exhibit Trail, ten miles further on. The Badlands’ rainbow colors are most vibrant at dawn, dusk, and just after rainfall.

Adjoining the Ben Reifel visitor center, five miles from the northeast entrance (daily: June–Aug 7am–7pm; rest of year 8am–5pm; $15 per vehicle for seven days; ☎605/433-5361), is the only in-park accommodation option, Cedar Pass Lodge, which has its own restaurant (☎605/433-5460; cabins ③, cottages ④; mid-April to Oct). Another visitor center, White River (June–Aug daily 10am–7pm), stands on Hwy-27 in the less-visited and less spectacular southern end of the park. A handful of seasonal campgrounds operate both in the park and in Wall (see below).

Wall

The town of WALL, eight miles north of the Badlands, may look like nothing special, yet thanks to Wall Drug, begun modestly in 1931 as a pharmacy and veterinary supplies shop on Main Street, it’s now pretty famous. You’ll learn about Wall Drug’s presence long before you reach town. Over five hundred billboards along I-90 tout its wares, including the free ice water that was its original sales gimmick. By the time you get to exit 110 (the one with the 85ft Wall Drug dinosaur), you’ll be compelled to pull off and see what all the fuss is about.

Behind the hype lies a kitschy emporium that serves up to twenty thousand visitors per day. You can fill up on steaks or cakes in the 520-seat café-cum-Western art gallery, or simply enjoy the wall-to-wall collection of photos, memorabilia, animal trophies, and mechanical automata like the Cowboy Orchestra and the Chuckwagon Quartet. The merchandise, separated into individual stores, runs the gamut from quality (see the Western bookstore and trail outfitters) to junk (anyone for a rattlesnake mold?).

The impressive Buffalo Gap National Grasslands, an empty and remote portion of South Dakota so bleak it's almost beautiful, start at Wall and encompass the Badlands. The National Grasslands Visitor Center, at 708 Main St (daily in summer 8am–5pm, 8am–4.30pm; Mon–Fri rest of year), makes a good jumping-off point and will provide maps.

There's absolutely no reason to spend the night in Wall, but if you're stuck, try the Best Western Plains Motel, 712 Glenn St (☎ 605/279-2145; ④), or the slightly less expensive Super 8, across the road at no. 711 (☎ 605/279-2688; ④). The Cactus Café and Lounge on Main Street (☎ 605/279-2561) offers a mixed menu of reasonably priced Mexican, Italian, and American food.

Pine Ridge Indian Reservation

Pine Ridge, the second largest Indian reservation in the United States (after Arizona's Navajo Nation; see p.978), overlaps the southern Badlands. It is also located in one of the nation's poorest counties. Its prefab homes and beat-up trucks blend sadly and uneasily with the surrounding dry grasslands, rocky bluffs, and tree-lined creeks.

The largest town, also called PINE RIDGE, comprises a collection of shabby, paint-stripped structures. Though the emergence of the profitable Prairie Wind casino in Oglala has improved life here, in many ways the reservation towns are an even more bitter pill to swallow than places like the nearby site of the Wounded Knee massacre. This area posts the highest poverty- and alcohol-related death statistics on the continent, and the average lifespan is just 52 years.

Red Cloud Indian School, four miles north of Pine Ridge on US-18, is named after a former chief whose fight against the US forced the closure of military forts on Sioux hunting grounds. The school is doing its best to counteract the ill-effects of life on the reservation, and each summer it holds an Indian art show featuring work by tribes in the US and Canada; it also has a gift shop (daily summer 8am–5pm; winter Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free). Red Cloud, who later signed a peace treaty with the US and invited Jesuits to teach his tribe “the ways of the white man,” is buried in a cemetery on a nearby knoll. The Oglala Nation Fair, held over the first weekend in August, features a powwow and rodeo. For details, contact the Oglala Sioux Tribe, P.O. Box 2070, Pine Ridge, SD 57770 (☎ 605/867-6121). For news and both traditional Lakota Sioux and contemporary American music, tune in to KILI 90.1 FM, “the Voice of the Lakota Nation.” If you want to stay on the reservation, the 🏠 Wakpamni Bed & Breakfast (☎ 605/288-1800; 🌐 www.wakpamni.com; ④–⑤), offers lovely guest rooms as well as accommodation in tepees; tours of the reservation or horseback rides with a Lakota guide can be arranged.

Wounded Knee

No other atrocity against Native Americans remains so potent and poignant as the massacre at WOUNDED KNEE. On December 29, 1890, the US Army delivered a coup de grace to the vestiges of Plains Indian resistance, killing several hundred unarmed Sioux men, women, and children. Most were Ghost Dancers, followers of a messianic cult who believed that by trance-inducing dancing and singing they could recover their lost way of life. The massacre was triggered by a misunderstanding during a tribal round-up: a deaf Indian, asked to surrender his rifle along with his peers, instead held it above his head, shouting that he'd paid a lot for it. An officer grabbed at the gun, it went off, and the troops started shooting.

A commemorative stone monument, surrounded by a chain-link fence, marks the victims' collective gravesite, off Hwy-27 toward the bottom of Pine Ridge Reservation. Somehow it has an intangible feeling of grief and anger, the mass murder here having left an indelible scar on all First Americans. Eighty-three years later, members of the radical American Indian Movement (AIM) grabbed headlines by occupying Wounded Knee in a dispute over the federal imposition of a tribal government; they were eventually dispersed by armed FBI agents and a paramilitary unit. More peaceably, since the mid-1980s the Sitanka Wokiksuye movement has organized an annual pilgrimage to the site, arriving in harsh winter weather by horse and travois, to symbolically release the spirits of their dead ancestors. The tribe has so far refused federal funds to turn the site into a national monument, wanting instead to leave it uncommercialized; a concrete block nearby offers a few souvenirs and local knowledge.

The Black Hills

Our people knew there was yellow metal in little chunks up there, but they did not bother with it, because it was not good for anything.

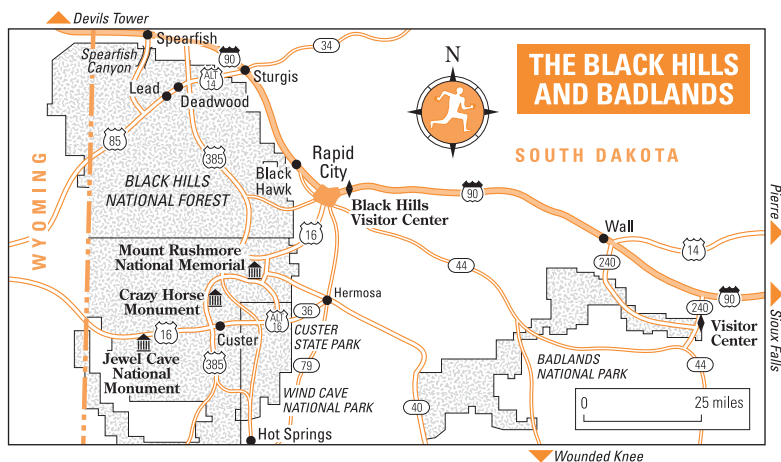

Black Elk, Oglala Sioux holy man

The timbered, rocky BLACK HILLS rise like an island from a sea of rolling hills and flat, grain-growing plains, stretching for a hundred miles between the Belle Fourche River in the north and the Cheyenne to the south, and varying in width from forty to sixty miles. For many generations of Sioux, their value was and still is immeasurable. The Hills are "the heart of everything that is," a kind of spiritual safe, a place of gods and holy mountains where warriors went to speak with Wakan Tanka (the Great Spirit) and await visions. They were dubbed Paha Sapa, or Black Hills, even though they are actually mountains (the highest, Harney Peak, rises 7242ft), and the blue spruce and Norway pine trees that cover them only appear to be black from a distance.

Imagining the Hills to be worthless, the United States government drew up a treaty in the mid-nineteenth century that gave them and most of the land west of the Missouri River to the Indians. All such treaties were destined to be broken when the discovery of gold turned the Indians' Eden into the white explorers' El Dorado, and fortune-hunters came pouring in.

The Hills these days are a major tourist destination, but despite the T-shirt stores, pseudo-historical wax museums, cowboy supper shows, and water slides, the Hills have not been robbed of all their beauty and dignity.

The more thickly wooded north is noted more for urban activities, with the casino town of Deadwood its busiest spot. No place in the Hills is much more than ninety minutes from the four presidential heads carved into Mount Rushmore or the remarkable Crazy Horse Memorial, one of the world's most ambitious works-in-progress. In the shade of these great monuments, the less spoiled southern hills are home to the bison of Custer State Park and Wind Cave National Park, along with the town of Hot Springs.

THE GREAT PLAINS

The Black Hills

The North Hills

The predominantly privately owned northern Black Hills are more commercialized than their southern siblings, with Rapid City, the hub, surrounded by more interesting smaller towns, such as Sturgis, Spearfish, and Deadwood. The back roads, especially in the Spearfish Canyon area, form a network of prime driving and cycling country. The Black Hills Information Center, exit 61 off I-90 (June–Aug daily 8am–8pm; rest of year daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 605/355-3700), is just outside of Rapid City and has an abundance of information on the Black Hills, the Badlands, and Native American points of interest.

Rapid City

South Dakota's second largest town, RAPID CITY, is all but swamped with family-fun attractions, though it makes a convenient base for exploring the charms of the Black Hills' lesser communities. In town, the Journey Museum, 222 New York St (daily 9am–5pm; $7), leads you through time, beginning with the geologic evolution of the Plains and the era of dinosaurs, right through the life of the Plains Indians to the pioneers who invaded their territory.

Greyhound pulls into town at 333 Sixth St. The visitor center is in the Civic Center, 444 Mount Rushmore Rd N (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 605/343-1744 or 1-800/487-3223, 🌐 www.rapidcitycvb.com). Rapid City has the cheapest lodgings in the Black Hills. The Bavarian wood trimmings and soft Sioux furnishings of the delightful Hotel Alex Johnson, 523 Sixth St (☎ 605/342-1210 or 1-800/888-2539; 5–6), provide a great escape from the dull corporate decor prevalent in Rapid City, while the Best Western Ramkota Hotel, I-90 exit 59 (☎ 605/343-8550; 5–6), is right off the highway and has an indoor waterpark. Both the food and beer at Firehouse Brewing Co., 610 Main St (☎ 605/348-1915) – which has plenty of outdoor seating – are worth sampling.

Sturgis

The sleepy town of STURGIS, thirty miles north of Rapid City, comes to life in a big way during the first full week of August, when the world-famous Sturgis Rally and Races (☎ 605/720-0800, 🌐 www.sturgismotorcyclerrally.com) packs out virtually every motel and campground in the region with motorcycle enthusiasts. For the rest of the year, bikers have to make do with an abundance of Harley souvenirs in the downtown stores, plus the worthy Sturgis Motorcycle Museum and Hall of Fame, 999 Main St (daily 9am–5pm, Sun–Fri 9am–5pm & Sat 10am–4pm in summer only; $5).

East of town, off Hwy-34, the volcanic outcrop which dominates Bear Butte State Park stands as a lonely sentinel, detached from the rest of the hills. Hundreds of Native Americans come to this site on retreat each year; to avoid disturbing anyone, check with the park's visitor center (☎605/347-5240) before setting out on the excellent hike to the summit. Campers can secure a tent site within the park for $6.

The Sturgis visitor center (☎605/347-2556, 🌐www.sturgis-sd.org) lies off I-90 exit 32. There's a wide range of motels in Sturgis; the Starlight Motel, 2426 S Junction Ave (☎605/347-2506; 📍), is good value. For a taste of the biker culture that pervades Sturgis year-round, head to the Full Throttle Saloon, 12997 E Hwy 34 (☎605/423-4584), a raucous venue with dubious activities including mechanical bull riding.

Deadwood

One of the West's wildest Gold Rush towns, DEADWOOD, in a deep gulch high in the hills 42 miles northwest of Rapid City, has the rare accolade of being a National Historic Landmark in its entirety. Within a year of the discovery of gold here in 1876, six thousand gold-diggers had swarmed in to stake their claims; con artists, outlaws, and other dubious frontier types were not far behind. Among them were James Butler, aka Wild Bill Hickok – sometime spy, scout, bullwhacker, stagecoach driver, sheriff, and gambler, who spent only a few weeks in Deadwood prior to his murder here by a young drifter in 1876. Martha “Calamity Jane” Canary Burke, an illiterate alcoholic whose checkered career included stints as scout, prostitute, nurse, and Wild West Show performer arrived the same time as Hickok. She died penniless in 1903; despite barely knowing him, her last wish was to be buried beside Hickok in Mount Moriah Cemetery, a short but blustery hike from town.

Gambling was outlawed in Deadwood in 1889, the year South Dakota achieved statehood, but betting parlors and brothels flourished well into the twentieth century. Now the old ghosts have been revitalized, since the passing of limited-stakes gambling legislation in 1989. Corny but entertaining gunfights, sing-alongs, and community theater are shown sporadically; for details, check with the CVB, 767 Main St (☎1-800/999-1876, 🌐www.deadwood.org). For an overview of Deadwood past and present, start by visiting the History and Information Center, in the heart of town at 3 Siever St (daily: June–Sept 8am–7pm; rest of year 9am–5pm; ☎605/578-2507). Main Street boasts several grand old hotels, including the Bullock at no. 633 (☎605/578-1745 or 1-800/336-1876; 📍–📍), and the Franklin Hotel at no. 700 (☎605/578-2241 or 1-800/688-1876; 📍), which has an elegant Old World dining room. Motels are plentiful in and around Deadwood. The Penny Motel, 818 Main St (☎605/578-1842, 🌐www.pennymotel.com; 📍) is a good budget option, close to downtown, while the Main Street Manor Hostel, 515 W Main St, in Lead (☎605/717-2044, 🌐www.mainstreetmanorhostel.com), offers cozy, homey accommodation five minutes from Deadwood. 🍷 Saloon #10, 657 Main St (☎605/578-3346), has cold beer, sawdust floors, and lots of memorabilia. Above the door is the chair in which Hickok was sitting when he was shot dead, while holding two aces, a pair of eights, and the nine of diamonds – forever after christened the Dead Man's Hand. Several casinos along Main Street aim to lure in the gamblers with cut-price buffets, but Deadwood's finest dining is at the dinner-only Jake's, on the top floor of Kevin Costner's Midnight Star casino, 677 Main St (☎605/578-1555).

From Deadwood, you can hike or bike the 114-mile George S. Mickelson Trail, part of a rails-to-trails project. It winds through the heart of the Hills from Edgemont to Deadwood, much of it passing through national forest. You can rent a bike for $25 per day from Deadwood Bicycles, 180 Sherman St (☎605/578-1345).

Aspen, birch, and white spruce spread over the towering limestone cliffs above the nineteen-mile Spearfish Canyon National Scenic Highway, which starts on Hwy-14A half an hour's drive west of Deadwood, and threads past sights such as Bridal Veil and Roughlock falls. The route reveals almost as many gastronomic pleasures as it does scenic ones. Twenty minutes out of Spearfish, the Latchstring Restaurant (☎605/584-3333) serves steaks, pasta, shrimp, and excellent rainbow trout almandine. Marking the southern mouth of the canyon at Hwy-14A and Hwy-85, the Cheyenne Crossing Store (☎605/584-3510) is a must if you have a hearty appetite; popular menu items include all-day breakfasts with buffalo sausage, enormous Indian tacos, and traditional Indian fry bread.

Marking the canyon's north end, SPEARFISH itself reels in the crowds each summer for the popular Black Hills Passion Play, a re-enactment of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ (June–Aug Tues, Thurs & Sun 8pm; tickets $20–25; ☎605/642-2646 or 1-800/457-0160). The visitor center is at 106 W Kansas St (☎605/642-2626 or 1-800/626-8013, 🌐www.spearfish.sd.us). For accommodation, Yesterday's Inn B&B, 735 Eighth St (☎605/644-0210; 4–6), offers lovely rooms downtown in a restored 1889 Victorian home, while the All Star Travelers Inn, 517 W Jackson Blvd (☎605/642-5753 or 1-800/201-5753; 3), has comfortable rooms and features hand-painted wall murals. Camping is possible at the Spearfish City Campground, 404 S Canyon St (☎605/642-1340, $16 plus $1 for each additional person). As far as food goes, try Roma's, 701 Fifth St (☎605/722-0715), a classy, modern Italian restaurant serving great homemade pastas.

From Spearfish, the spectacular Devils Tower (see p.877) stands just an hour's drive away across the Wyoming state line.

The South Hills

The southern Black Hills encompass lower foothills and wooded pastureland; from a purely physical standpoint they are more attractive than the north, drawing visitors for their scenery and wildlife rather than kitsch or gambling. The two big mountain carvings, Mount Rushmore and Crazy Horse, mark the northern end of the region; Custer State Park and Wind Cave National Park account for much of the central zone; while the pleasant town of Hot Springs sits on the southern edge.

Mount Rushmore National Memorial

America's two largest stone carvings are a mere seventeen miles apart – no more than spitting distance when you consider the scale on which they're conceived. The better-known Mount Rushmore National Memorial (daily: summer 8am–10pm; rest of year 8am–5pm), originally dubbed “The Shrine of Democracy,” is the linchpin of the Hills' tourist circuit. It's an easy 24-mile drive southwest of Rapid City, though by far the most impressive approach is to take Iron Mountain Road (US-16A) from Custer State Park (see p.826), which runs for seventeen miles up and over 5500ft Iron Mountain.

In 1923, state historian Doane Robinson and the sculptor Gutzon Borglum, known for carvings such as the leaders of the Confederacy in Stone Mountain, Georgia (see p.529), talked over the possibility of turning the imposing fingers of granite known as the Needles into a dramatic patriotic sculpture. They discussed depictions of such heroic figures of the West as Lewis and Clark, Buffalo Bill Cody, and Jim Bridger. Borglum opted for a nearby mountain named after New York attorney Charles E. Rushmore, upon which he would fashion the faces and heads of four certifiably great American presidents: George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Borglum's buddy, Theodore Roosevelt.

Borglum talked, dreamed, and worked big. "American art ought to be monumental, in keeping with American life," he opined. Sixty when the project began in 1927, he died fourteen years later, $200,000 in debt, just a few months prior to the dedication of the last head – Roosevelt's – in 1939. Inclement weather and uncertain funding had meant that the actual sculpting took about six and a half years, at a total cost of $993,000. Half a million tons of rock were removed to reach the softer, more malleable granite from which the heads were dynamited, drilled, and chiseled into recognizable shape.

The Big Four gaze out impassively, cheek by jowl, arguably a greater engineering feat than an artistic one. Each head is about sixty feet from chin to crown. (By way of comparison, the Statue of Liberty's head is only seventeen feet.) Lincoln, Borglum's favorite, has an eighteen-foot-long nose and the glint in each eleven-foot-wide eye is thirty inches. If he and his fellow presidents had been done full-figure to scale, they'd stand 465ft tall and be able to stride across the Potomac River in Washington, DC, without getting their knees wet.

The best time to view Rushmore is dawn or dusk, when there are fewer people and better lighting. Patriots flock here for a massive fireworks display on July 3. Although there is no admission charge, an $8 parking fee has been introduced since the construction of a hideous new multilevel parking lot and high-tech visitor center. The café here, complete with panoramic windows, as seen in Hitchcock's North by Northwest, serves full meals and "Monumental Breakfasts" of hash browns, eggs, country-fried steak with gravy, and a biscuit piled on one plate. With alternative bases such as Rapid City or Custer State Park so close to hand, there's no particular reason to stay in the nearest town, Keystone – a once quiet mining town turned T-shirt hawker's paradise.

Crazy Horse Memorial

In 1939, prompted by the sight of the Rushmore monument, Sioux leader Henry Standing Bear wrote to Korczak Ziolkowski, who had just won first prize for sculpture at the New York World's Fair, telling him that Indians "would like the white man to know that the red man has great heroes, too." The chief invited Ziolkowski to take on a similar project – and, less than a decade later, pushing forty and with just $174 to his name, the New Englander moved permanently to the Black Hills to undertake a vastly more ambitious mission than Rushmore – the Crazy Horse Memorial, on US-16, five miles north of Custer.

The subject, the revered warrior Crazy Horse on horseback (see p.815), so appealed to Ziolkowski that he set out to make his monument the biggest statue in the world, higher even than the Great Pyramid. The work he began on Thunderhead Mountain in 1948 – five Native American survivors of the Battle of Little Bighorn attended the dedication ceremony – didn't stop with his death in 1982; his widow, children, and grandchildren continue to realize his vision. National and international interest has greatly increased as the monument finally starts to take recognizable shape; the 90ft-high face was completed in time for the fiftieth anniversary celebrations in 1998, although it will easily be another fifty years before the project is finished. Neither words nor photographs can articulate the enormous scale of the thing. The main viewing terrace at the visitor center is nearly a mile from the carving itself and the 20ft scale model on show there is 34 times smaller than the end result, which will be 563ft high and 641ft long.

The Bison of the Great Plains

In the fifteenth century, the Great Plains were roamed by one hundred million shaggy, short-sighted American bison (popularly known as buffalo, a corruption of the French boeuf). Apart from eating their flesh, Native Americans used the fur and hide for clothing and shelter, the bones for weapons, utensils, and toys, and the droppings for fuel. Eliminating the bison en masse was a mercilessly effective way to deplete the Indians as well. By 1900 there were fewer than one thousand bison left in North America.

Custer State Park was instrumental in helping to raise that meager number to a head count of 250,000 in the US and Canada. The park's own 1200 bison constitute the country's second largest publicly owned herd, surpassed only by Yellowstone National Park (see p.880). However, over ninety percent of bison in the US are now privately owned – the meat, higher in protein and lower in cholesterol than either chicken or tuna, is becoming something of a cross between a novelty and a delicacy item in restaurants (you can try it in burger form at the State Game Lodge in Custer State Park, as well as dozens of other places around South Dakota). The Triple U Ranch, outside Pierre, South Dakota, boasts a herd of 3500 strong, though Ted Turner owns around twenty thousand, split between his ranches in several western states.

The Custer State Park bison are free to roam where they please until either the last Monday of September or the first Monday in October, when the park stages its annual roundup. From selected viewing points, the public is welcome to witness one of the Midwest's more thrilling occasions: helicopters, jeeps, and pickup trucks, as well as riders on horseback, steer the often recalcitrant herd down a six-mile "corridor" and into a series of pens. There the calves are branded and vaccinated, and the whole herd sorted to determine which five hundred will be auctioned off on the third Saturday in November. Proceeds from the sale account for twenty percent of the park's annual revenue.

Don't let the tranquil, easygoing appearance of North America's biggest mammal lull you into a false sense of security. An average bull can stand six feet high at the hump, weigh up to a ton, outrun a horse, turn on a dime, and gore a human most efficiently.

Ziolkowski himself raised and spent $4 million on the non-profit project, refusing to accept federal or state funds, instead relying entirely on admissions and contributions. The site, open dawn to dusk year-round (and illuminated for an hour each night), is free to Native Americans. Admission costs $10, though you can see the face just as well if you're just passing by from the highway. The premises include an exhibit of Native American artifacts and crafts, a Native American Cultural Center, a restaurant (May–Oct), and a gift shop. Private tours of the construction site at the top of the mountain are given in exchange for a high-level contribution. On the first weekend in June, the public is invited to hike to the top and see the work close-up.

Custer State Park

The 73,000 sublime, billboard-free acres of Custer State Park fill much of the southern-central Black Hills, a perfect antidote to the commercial crassness elsewhere. The Needles Highway (Hwy-87; open mid-April to mid-Oct) winds for fourteen miles through pine forests and past the eponymous jagged granite spires in the park's northwestern corner, between Sylvan and Legion lakes. Not far from Sylvan Lake, as you pass close to the summit of Harney Peak (South Dakota's highest point, at 7242ft), look south to spot the Needle's Eye, a slender gap in one of the pinnacles that measures three to four feet wide and fifty to sixty feet tall. The eighteen-mile Wildlife Loop (separate from the Needles Highway) undulates through the rolling meadows along the park's southern edge. Sunrise and sunset are prime times to spy such critters as elk, bighorn sheep, antelope, deer, burros, and the most plentiful species, bison. Finally, Iron Mountain Road (US-16A), to the northeast, makes a dramatic route to Mount Rushmore (see p.824). This is the most likely place to bump into the park's famous "begging burros": tame and disarming four-legged panhandlers who stick their snouts through the windows of passing vehicles in search of handouts.

For a fuller appreciation of the beauty of Custer State Park, forsake your car and set off into the wilderness. Rangers at the park entrances – where you're required to pay entrance fees of $5 per person, or $12 per vehicle (the pass remains valid for a week, and admits you to all other South Dakota state parks) – can advise on hiking and biking trails, while concession firms offer horseback rides, boat rental, and cross-country drives in open-topped jeeps. Good short hikes include the one-hour Stockade Lake Trail in the west, which climbs to give distant views across the lake to Harney Peak and the Needles, and the two-hour Lovers Leap Trail, which starts from the park's main Peter Norbeck visitor center, on Hwy-16A in the east (daily: summer 8am–8pm; rest of year 9am–5pm, closed Dec–March; ☎ 605/255-4464).

As long as nightlife isn't high on your agenda, the park's four state-run resorts make it a splendid place to stay (for reservations call ☎ 1-800/658-3530). The finest is the State Game Lodge (☎ 605/255-4541) on Hwy-16A not far from the visitor center, which operates a motel-style lodge and also has some lovely individual cabins (4–5) at the edge of the woods; the Pheasant Dining Room offers hearty, meaty meals. Tucked in the northwest corner on its own artificial lake, the Sylvan Lake Resort (☎ 605/574-2561; 4–6) similarly offers comfy cabins, more traditional rooms in its tasteful main building, and the upscale Lakota Dining Room. Custer State Park also has eight campgrounds (☎ 1-800/710-2267), which cost $13–15 a night, plus park entrance fees.

Custer

In little CUSTER, five miles west of the park on US-16, the Bavarian Inn on the main highway has classic German dining and rooms (☎ 605/673-2802 or 1-800/657-4312; 4), while the Custer Mansion, 35 Centennial Dr (☎ 605/673-3333 or 1-877/519-4948; 3–4), offers comfortable B & B accommodations. Of many garish campgrounds, Flintstones Bedrock City (☎ 605/673-4664; $19.50), with its own small theme park ($8), manages to steal the show. The visitor center is at 615 Washington St (☎ 605/673-2244 or 1-800/992-9818, 🌐 www.custersd.com).

Twelve miles west of Custer is the Jewel Cave National Monument (daily 8.30am–6pm; $4–27 for 20min–4hr tours; ☎ 605/673-2288, 🌐 www.nps.gov/jeca), where spelunkers are sure to receive a layer of manganese dust; call ahead for tour details.

Wind Cave National Park

Beneath wide-open rangelands, Wind Cave National Park, fifteen minutes north of Hot Springs (see over), comprises over one hundred miles of mapped underground passages etched out of limestone. One of the largest caves in the US, it was discovered, by white settlers anyway, in 1881 when a loud whistling noise on the plains led a settler to a hole in the ground – the cave's only natural opening. Nowadays rangers lead a variety of cave tours ($7–23 based on length of tour) from the visitor center (hours vary seasonally; ☎ 605/745-4600, 🌐 www.nps.gov/wica/), pointing out delicate features such as frostwork and boxwork along the way. If you come in summer, forget the standard walking tours and opt for the ones that allow you to crawl around in the smaller passages, or explore the caves by candlelight (call ahead).

Even if you lack the time or inclination to delve into the Dakotas' dank bowels, simply driving through the park is yet another unmissable Black Hills experience. Its native grass prairieland is home to deer, antelope, elk, coyote, prairie dogs, and a sizeable herd of buffalo. There's also a primitive campground in the park ($12 per night).

Hot Springs

The Black Hills' southern anchor, HOT SPRINGS, differs from other regional towns in that it hasn't torted up its downtown to look like a movie set. It doesn't need to. Several dozen utilitarian yet handsome sandstone structures dominate its center, through which flows the sprightly Fall River.

Battles over the town's thermal pools have caused as much grief as the clamor for gold. Before white settlement, the Sioux drove out the Cheyenne, and later land-owners, speculators, and settlers dodged and outwitted each other for ownership of the springs. The disputes ceased in 1890 when Fred Evans incorporated numerous small springs and one mammoth hot-water pool into a spa center. Today, Evans Plunge, on the north edge of town at 1145 N River St (summer Mon–Fri 5.30am–10pm, Sat & Sun 8am–10pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 5.30am–8pm, Sat & Sun 10am–8pm; $9; ☎ 605/745-5165), is a popular family-fun center, where three great slides zoom down into the 87° waters.

The unique Mammoth Site on the Hwy-18 bypass is the only in situ display of mammoth fossils in the US (mid-May through Aug daily 8am–8pm; rest of year times vary; $7). In 1974, building on a housing project here came to an abrupt halt when a tractor driver unearthed a seven-foot tusk. Paleontologists soon declared that the workers had discovered the 26,000-year-old grave of Columbian and Woolly mammoths – to date, 55 animals, all male, have been found. Inside the dome, fascinating guided tours explain how these ten-ton mammoths, along with camels, bears, and rodents, were trapped in a steep-sided sinkhole (a pond formed by a collapsed underground cave) and were gradually covered by sediment. Complete skeletons are easy to pick out in the excavation site, which is still being uncovered slowly by groups of summer volunteers.

Seven miles south of Hot Springs, the huge reservoir of the Angostura Dam State Recreation Area ($5 per car), set against contorted sandstone bluffs, is a picture-perfect spot for boating and jet-skiing.

Information for visitors to Hot Springs is available from the old train depot (June–Aug only Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat 8am–6pm, Sun noon–7pm) at 630 N River St, or from the CVB, 801 S Sixth St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 605/745-4140 or 1-800/325-6991, 🌐 www.hotsprings-sd.com). Accommodation rates are a bit more reasonable than in the hectic northern towns. The Super 8, 800 Mammoth St (☎ 605/745-3888 or 1-800/800-8000; 📍), offers comfortable rooms adjacent to the mammoth site; alternatives include the sumptuous A Dakota Dream B&B, 801 Almond St (☎ 605/745-4633; 📍), set on a bluff above town. The Flat Iron, 745 N River St (☎ 605/745-6439), offers serves great coffee, sandwiches and salads on a sunny terrace or in a cozy dining room, as well as offering five suites upstairs from the restaurant (☎ 605/745-5301; 📍–📍).

North Dakota

NORTH DAKOTA has no nationally recognizable landmarks, nor is the state's history particularly lurid or glamorous. It seems like somebody's quiet afterthought, a place to pass through. Grain silos loom on the horizon, and the haystacks resemble loaves of bread. In the summer, with the sun baking in a defiantly blue sky and the wind raking strong fingers through tall fields of golden wheat and flax, North Dakota epitomizes all things rural American. Charming, picturesque – and a bit maddening.

The influx of Europeans into the Dakota Territory, spurred by the Homestead Act of 1862, precipitated a population and agricultural boom that lasted into the twentieth century. As in South Dakota, the fertile east is more thickly settled than the west, where vast cattle and sheep ranges predominate. It was the east that was hardest hit by the so-called 500-year flood of 1997, when 1.7 million low-lying acres of farmland were inundated, and the entire state was declared a disaster area.

From Fargo, the state's largest city, I-94 passes through the central capital of Bismarck, and on to the Bad Lands of the west, once cherished by President Theodore Roosevelt. Though the national park bearing his name is a key destination, Roosevelt would surely not be pleased about the continuing disfiguration of much of western North Dakota by strip-mining operations.

Getting around North Dakota

Amtrak runs one train per day in each direction between Fargo and Williston in the northwest, via Grand Forks. Greyhound operates one interstate bus per day, making the ten-hour trip from Minneapolis/St Paul to Bismarck, via Grand Forks and Fargo, before heading west along I-94 into Montana.

East of the Missouri River

Far more of North Dakota lies east of the big winding Missouri River, the state's uneven dividing line, than west. The Red River Valley, the state's furthest eastern strip, is home to two sizeable cities, easygoing Grand Forks and the less attractive Fargo. Pelicans, geese, swans, prairie chickens, and ring-necked pheasants live off the sloughs and potholes of the rolling, glaciated prairie of south-central North Dakota, while lakes and woodlands dominate the north and the Canadian border. Spirit Lake Sioux Indian Reservation at Devils Lake is midway between Grand Forks and the low-slung Turtle Mountains, which are topped by Lake Metigoshe and the International Peace Garden (more of a political symbol than a compelling sight).

Grand Forks

GRAND FORKS sits eighty miles north of I-94, right next to Minnesota and a mere 75 miles south of the Canadian border. Even before its foundation a century ago, fur traders had used the area to rest and barter during their travels between Winnipeg and Minneapolis. It's a small, friendly, outdoorsy city, with nineteen parks and several tree-lined avenues of fine homes. Furious construction has rebuilt the downtown area, ravaged in the 1997 floodwaters, which now holds a smattering of interesting shops and restaurants.

The most interesting distractions can be found on the redbrick main campus of the University of North Dakota. The North Dakota Museum of Art (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 11–5pm; donation) offers an eclectic assortment of contemporary art and top touring exhibits. Fascinating tours of the John D. Odegard School of Aerospace Sciences (☎701/777-2791; weekday tours offered 8am–4:30pm by appointment), one of the largest civilian pilot-training schools in the world, take in flight simulators, the air-traffic control room, and an altitude chamber.

Grand Forks' visitor center is at 4251 Gateway Drive (☎701/746-0444 or 1-800/866-4566, 🌐www.visitgrandforks.com). Greyhound stops at US-81 and Hwy-2 and on the UND campus, while Amtrak pulls in at no. 5555 W Demers Ave. Downtown's Best Western Town House, 710 First Ave N (☎701/746-5411; 📍), is a comfortable, nicely situated motel; if you want to spend less, the Super 8, 1122 N 43rd St (☎701/775-8138; 📍), has clean, serviceable rooms near the UND campus. The most serene place to camp is twenty miles west on US-2, in the grounds of Turtle River State Park (☎800/807-4723; $8; reservations recommended). For dining, Dakota Harvest Bakers, 17 N Third St (☎701/772-2100), serves good soups and sandwiches, as well as tasty baked goods.

Devils Lake

The scruffy town of DEVILS LAKE, ninety miles west of Grand Forks on US-2, shares its name with the state's largest natural body of water, which boasts a state park and a number of private campgrounds along more than three hundred sprawling, irregular, and growing miles of shoreline. The damming of rivers in the northern part of the state inadvertently caused Devils Lake to rise; so far it has gone up 25 feet and quadrupled in area since 1997. Pastureland has been submerged, dikes built, roads raised, and one town, nearby Churchs Ferry, evacuated. Embarrassed engineers, nervous politicians, and a frustrated public are still at a loss about how to stem the tide – $300 million has already been spent on relief.

Downtown, now saved by a seven-mile-long dike, holds a smattering of nineteenth-century buildings and a few rough-and-ready bars. Most of the places to stay, such as the Super 8 (☎701/662-8656; 📍), are strung along US-2. The Woodland Resort, on Creel Bay, about six miles from town (☎701/662-5996, 🌐www.woodlandresort.com; 📍), includes cabins, a motel, and campgrounds, and you can also rent boats, pontoons, and fishing gear. For other camping options, head 25 miles southwest of town to Grahams Island State Park (☎800/807-4723; $13 per tent site); contact the Devils Lake CVB, 208 W US-2 (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; in summer also Sat 9am–5pm & Sun 10am–4pm; ☎701/265-8188), for more information.

Fifteen miles south of town, Spirit Lake Sioux Indian Reservation is the site of Fort Totten Military Post (daily 8am–5pm in summer; $4), one of the best-preserved frontier military posts in the country. During the last weekend in July, the reservation hosts the thrilling Spirit Lake Oyate Wacipi Powwow and Rodeo. It's an impassioned, alcohol-free, multitribal party at which hundreds of magnificently clothed dancers of all ages compete for cash prizes.

The West

Anyone with a hankering to play cowboy could do worse than follow in the footsteps of Theodore Roosevelt, who declared "I never would have been president if it had not been for my experiences in North Dakota." Roosevelt initially came to the state in search of spiritual and physical renewal after the deaths (on the same day) of his mother and first wife. He dubbed what he discovered during his few years in this “grimly picturesque” area, with its clear skies, panoramic views, and weird, colorful landforms, a “perfect freedom.” The national park named after him is the choicest destination in the North Dakota Bad Lands (distinct from South Dakota’s Badlands) that dominate the state’s western half.

The Missouri River wriggles like a giant raggedy worm out of Montana, down past North Dakota’s capital, Bismarck, and into South Dakota. En route it is transformed into Lake Sakakawea, a virtual inland sea nearly two hundred miles long that’s the state’s premier water playground. Scenic state highways 1804 and 1806 follow the routes mapped out by the Lewis and Clark expedition in those respective years.

Bismarck and Mandan

The West seems to begin as soon as you cross the Missouri River from BISMARCK, a capital city with a small-town feel, to Mandan. Both were founded in 1872, Bismarck as a military camp to protect railroad crews from hostile Indians and outlaws. Named in honor of German Chancellor Otto von Bismarck in the hope of attracting Germanic settlers, the scheme failed, but the name stuck. The city survived an early lawless period (present-day Fourth Street was once dubbed “Murderers’ Gulch”) and a major fire to become first the territorial and then the state capital.

Contemporary Bismarck is pretty much contained within the oblong between I-94 in the north and Main Avenue to the south. Locals are proud of their nineteen-story limestone capitol building, 600 E Boulevard Ave, dating from the mid-1930s and set at the crest of a public park. The interior, a model of spatial economy and marbled Art Deco elegance, is open for free guided tours (Mon–Fri 8–11am & 1–4pm; in summer also Sat 9–11am & 1–4pm & Sun 1–4pm). Across the street, the superb North Dakota Heritage Center (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; donation) divides the state’s past into six sections, from the dinosaurs onwards. Look out for Sitting Bull’s painted robe and the bison “smell box,” which offers curious tourists a whiff of buffalo dung.

The major reason to venture into MANDAN is Fort Abraham Lincoln State Park ($5), five miles south of downtown via Hwy-1806, where the centerpiece is the Custer House (daily: summer 9am–7pm; Sept 9am–5pm; Oct 1–15 1–5pm; Nov–Apr by appointment; $6), an admirable reconstruction of the 1874 original designed by the brutally ambitious, indefatigable horseman himself. The guided tour supplies nuggets of quirky information about Custer (he loved to eat raw onions), his wife, and their household prior to his death at Little Big Horn in 1876. Nearer the river, four earth lodge reconstructions stand on the site of the once-vast On-A-Slant village, occupied by the Mandan (or River-Dweller) tribe from about 1610 to the late 1700s. After the Mandan abandoned On-A-Slant, they moved upstream and settled on the site that became Fort Mandan, where in 1804 the explorers Lewis and Clark came into contact with the Shoshone woman Sakakawea (aka Sacajawea), who helped guide them west towards the Pacific. The site and adjacent historical museum (daily: summer 9am–7pm; Sept 9am–5pm; Oct daily 1–5pm; Nov–Apr by appointment; free with purchase of Custer House ticket) sit below a bluff topped with replicas of the Fort Lincoln infantry post.

Bismarck’s Greyhound terminal is at 3750 E Rosser Ave; its visitor center is at 1600 Burnt Boat Drive (Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat 8am–6pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 701/222-4308 or 1-800/767-3555, 🌐 www.bismarckmandancvb.com). For clean rooms near downtown, try the Expressway Inn, 200 E Bismarck Expressway (☎ 701/222-2900; 📍). Great rooms, a pool, and breakfast are on offer at Fairfield Inn, which has two locations, one near the airport at 135 Ivy Ave (☎ 701/223-9293; 📍) and the other near the I-94/US-83 interchange at 1120 E Century Ave (☎ 701/223-9077; 📍). For camping, try the excellent Cross Ranch State Park, thirty minutes north of Bismarck on Hwy-1806 (☎ 701/794-3731; vehicle fee $5, campsites $8). Overlapped by a six-thousand-acre nature preserve, the park features sixteen miles of trails. Closer to town, you can camp in Fort Abraham Lincoln State Park (☎ 1-800/807-4723; $8-14).

There is limited dining and nightlife in Bismarck. Peacock Alley, 422 E Main St (☎ 701/255-7917), serves tasty Italian and American cuisine. In Mandan, the Drug Store and Soda Fountain, 316 W Main St (☎ 701/663-5900), is a good place to grab a cheap lunch and some ice cream. There is fine dining at Meriwether's Restaurant at the Port of Bismarck (☎ 701/258-0666), where the Lewis & Clark riverboat takes visitors on narrated historical rides ($15 daytime, $40 Sat dinner cruise; ☎ 701/255-4233).

Theodore Roosevelt National Park

The Theodore Roosevelt National Park, a huge tract of multihued rock formations, rough grassland, and lazy streams, is split into north and south units approximately seventy miles apart; the area between comprises a checkerboard of federal, state, and privately owned territory. Exploring the park's seventy thousand acres is like entering different rooms, from desert to woods to mountains. Both units (daily dawn–dusk; $5 per person, maximum $10 per car) are at their most subtle at sunrise or sundown, the best times to observe such fauna as elk, antelope, bison, and several fascinating, closely-knit prairie dog communities.

Your first taste of the larger, more popular southern unit is likely to be at the breathtaking Painted Canyon, seven miles east of the town of Medora off I-94 exit 32. Here and elsewhere in the park, the land is like a sedimentary layer cake that for millions of years has been beaten by hard, infrequent rains, baked by the sun into a kaleidoscope of colors, and cut through to its base by erosive streams and rivers. A mile-long nature hike, accessible in the summer months, begins at the end of the canyon's boardwalk.

The southern unit's main visitor center in Medora (June to early Sept Mon–Fri 8am–6pm, Sat & Sun 8am–8pm; early Sept to May Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 701/623-4466) counts as park headquarters, and runs tours, nature walks, and lectures by campfire in high season. Out back, the simple cabin was used by the young Roosevelt while a partner in the Maltese Cross Ranch (free guided tours daily until 4.15pm). A highlight of the scenic 36-mile loop road is the sublime view from Wind Canyon, ten miles out of Medora. Peaceful Valley Ranch (☎ 701/623-4568), seven miles from Medora and a mile from the park's first-come, first-served Cottonwood Campground ($10 per tent site), arranges horseback tours in summer for $25 for 90 minutes.

The smaller northern unit, off Hwy-85 near Watford City, receives only a tenth as many visitors, though it's more spectacular than its southern counterpart; the highlight is Oxbow Overlook, at the end of a 15-mile scenic drive. The visitor center here is open daily (9am–5.30pm; ☎ 701/842-2333). Keep in mind that the northern unit is on Central time, while the southern unit is on Mountain time (see p.68).

Medora

MEDORA, the southern gateway to Theodore Roosevelt National Park, languished in obscurity until the early 1960s, but has become one of North Dakota's principal attractions, an inoffensively touristy place with enough to keep you busy, and reasonably interested, for most of a day. The biggest noise in town is the Medora Musical (daily 8.30pm; $24–30; ☎ 1-800/633-6721; 🌐 www.medora.com), a pseudo-Western, super-Americana variety show staged beneath the stars in a vast, modern amphitheater. There is a lot of clogging and yodeling, plenty of accolades to a certain 26th US president, and special guest appearances that range from Chinese chair-stackers to double-jointed Lithuanians. The extravaganza is preceded by a fantastic feed whereby 240 steaks are simultaneously fondued on pitchforks inside giant oil vats (6.30pm; $22.50).

A better idea is to take to the hills on a mountain bike – the Maah Daah Hey Trail dips and curves through spectacular country for 96 miles. Rent from Dakota Cyclery in Medora (☎ 701/623-4808; $25–35 for a half-day). The conservative Theodore Roosevelt Medora Foundation owns and operates most of the town and its attractions, including the quaint and central Rough Rider Hotel (☎ 701/623-4444; 📍) and Badlands (☎ 701/623-4422; 📍) motel, which has an outdoor pool. (Check-in for both motels is at the Badlands motel.) While these hotels only operate from May to September, the Americinn Motel (☎ 701/623-4800 or 1-800/634-3444; 📍–📍) is open year-round. The Medora Campground (☎ 701/623-4435) caters to both tents ($18) and RVs ($25–30). For something a little more rural, try the Buffalo Gap Guest Ranch (📍–📍; ☎ 701/623-4200, 🌐 www.buffalogapguestranch.com), six miles west of Medora at the trailhead of the Buffalo Gap Trail. The ranch offers accommodation ranging from tent sites to cabins and has stables as well. Eating options are limited to a few bars and restaurants clustered in the downtown.

The Rockies

Exploring the Rocky Mountain states of Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho could literally take forever. Stretching over one thousand miles from the virgin forests on the Canadian border to the deserts of New Mexico, America's rugged spine encompasses an astonishing array of landscapes – geyser basins, lava flows, arid valleys, and huge sand dunes – each in its own way as dramatic as the region's magnificent white-topped peaks. The geological grandeur is enhanced by wildlife such as bison, bear, moose, and elk, and the conspicuous legacy of the miners, cowboys, outlaws, and Native Americans who fought over the area's rich resources during the nineteenth century.

Apart from the Ancestral Puebloan cliff-dwellers, who lived in southern Colorado until around 1300 AD, most Native Americans in this region were nomadic hunters. They inhabited the western extremities of the Great Plains, the richest buffalo-grazing land in the continent. Spaniards, groping through Colorado in the sixteenth century in search of gold, were the first whites to venture into the Rockies. But only after the territory was sold to the US in 1803 as part of the Louisiana Purchase was it thoroughly charted, starting with the Lewis and Clark expedition that traversed Montana and Idaho in 1805. As a result of the team's reports of abundant game, the fabled “mountainmen” had soon trapped the beavers here to the point of virtual extinction. They left as soon as the pelt boom was over, however, and permanent white settlement did not begin until gold was discovered near Denver in 1858. Within a decade, speculators were plundering every accessible gorge and creek in the four states in the search for valuable ores. The construction of transcontinental rail lines and the establishment of vast cattle ranches to feed the mining camps led to the slaughter of millions of buffalo, and conflict with the Native Americans became inevitable. The Sioux and Cheyenne, led by brilliant strategists like Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse, achieved decisive victories over the US Army, most notably at Little Bighorn – “Custer's Last Stand.” However, a massive military operation had cleared the region of all warring tribes by the late 1870s.

Most of those who came after the Native Americans saw the Rockies strictly in terms of profit: they took what they wanted and left. Small communities in this isolated terrain remain exclusively dedicated to coal, oil, or some other single commodity, and all too often the uncertain tightrope walk between boom and bust is evident in their run-down facades.

Each of the four states has its own distinct character. Colorado, with fifty peaks over 14,000ft, is the most mountainous and populated, as well as the economic leader of the region. Friendly, sophisticated Denver is the only major metropolis in the Rockies. It's also the most visited city, in part because it's that much more accessible, and it plays the role of gateway to some of the best ski resorts in the country. Less touched by the tourist circus is vast, brawny Montana, where the “Big Sky” looks down on a glorious verdant manuscript scribbled over with gushing streams, lakes, and tiny communities.

Vast stretches of scrubland fill Wyoming, the country’s least populous state, best known for gurgling, spitting Yellowstone, adjacent Grand Teton National Park, and the nearby Bighorn Mountains. Rugged, remote, and desolate Idaho holds some of the Rocky Mountains’ last unexplored wildernesses, most notably the mighty Sawtooth range.

Between early June and early September you can expect temperatures in the high sixties all the way up to a hundred degrees Fahrenheit, depending on whether you are in the high desert of Wyoming, the plains of Idaho, or the mountains of Colorado. In the mountains, you should be prepared for wild variations – and, of course, the higher you go the colder it gets. The altitude is high enough to warrant a period of acclimatization, while the intensity of the sun at these elevations can be uncomfortably fierce. In fact, parts of Wyoming and Colorado bask in more hours of sunshine per year than San Diego or Miami Beach. Spring (the “mud season”), when the snow melts, is the least attractive time to visit the Rockies, and while the delicate golds of quaking aspen trees light up the mountainsides in early fall, by October things are generally a bit cold for enjoyable hiking or sports. Most ski runs are open by late November and operate well into March – or even June, depending on snow conditions. The coldest month is January, when temperatures below 0°F are common.

Attempting to rush around every national park and major town is a sure way to miss out on one of the Rockies' real delights – coaxing your car along the tight switchback roads that wind up and over precipitous mountain passes, especially through the majestic Continental Divide. Remember to check in the rear-view mirror as you go, though – you might be missing that perfect photo for your album. At some point it's worth forsaking motorized transportation, though, to see at least some of the area by bike; the Rockies contain some of the most challenging and rewarding cycling terrain on the continent. And of course, you cannot count yourself a visitor to the area without embarking on a hike or two.

Colorado

Geographically diverse COLORADO veers from the flat, endless plains of the east to the colossal mountains of the west. In the north, Native Americans hunted and trapped in lush mountain valleys in summer, and returned to the prairies for the winter; in the south, the Ancestral Puebloans of Mesa Verde grew corn on their isolated mesas and shared in the great early civilization of the Southwest.

Parts of what's now Colorado accrued to the US at different times: the east and north were acquired under the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, while the south was won 45 years later in the war with Mexico. (Land grants issued under Mexican rule were honored by the Americans, which accounts for a still-strong Hispanic influence.) Gold-hungry Spaniards came through in the sixteenth century, and US Army Colonel Zebulon Pike ventured into the mountains on an exploratory expedition in 1806, but the Native American way of life only became seriously threatened with the discovery of gold west of Denver in 1858. At that time Colorado was still part of Kansas Territory; it became a territory in its own right in 1861, and a state in 1876. The distractions of the Civil War gave the Native Americans the opportunity to fight back, but they were soon overwhelmed. From then until the end of the century, Colorado boomed; the quantities of gold and silver extracted from the mountains did not compare with the riches found in California, but they were sufficient to fuel a rip-roaring frontier lifestyle.

For the modern visitor, the obvious first stop is Denver, at the eastern edge of the Rockies and the biggest city for six hundred miles. Outside Denver, the northern half of the state holds the most popular destinations, starting with the dynamic college town of Boulder and the spectacular Rocky Mountain National Park. The majority of the resorts that have made Colorado the continent's foremost skiing destination snuggle into the mountains to the west of Denver: Summit County attracts the most visitors, Vail is considered best for terrain, and Aspen boasts the glitziest apres-ski scene. The far west of the state stretches onto the red-rock deserts of the Colorado Plateau, where the dry climate has preserved the extraordinary natural sculptures of Colorado National Monument. Pikes Peak towers over the enjoyable city of Colorado Springs, but the rest of the state's southeast quarter is mostly agricultural plains. To the southwest, old mining towns like Crested Butte and Durango stand revitalized in the mountains, while Mesa Verde National Park preserves perhaps the most impressive of all the cliff cities left by the ancient Ancestral Puebloan civilization.

Getting around Colorado

By far the largest airport in Colorado is in Denver. Shuttle buses radiate from here to all the main towns and ski resorts – as do commuter-style aircraft. Denver is also a major hub for Greyhound buses to all neighboring states. Amtrak trains run straight across the middle of Colorado, timed in both directions to pass through magnificent Glenwood Canyon in daylight hours, but are so slow that they're barely more efficient than the hugely enjoyable tourist train, the Durango & Silverton Narrow Gauge Railroad, in the southwest.

Colorado is also one of the best destinations in the world for cyclists, hosting numerous on- and off-road championships. For excellent maps and guides to cycle routes in the state, contact the State Department of Transportation (☎ 303/639-1111 or 1-877/315-7623, @www.cotrip.org).

Denver

Its skyscrapers marking the final transition between the Great Plains and the American West, DENVER stands at the threshold of the Rocky Mountains. Despite being known as the “Mile High City,” and serving as the obvious point of arrival for travelers heading into the mountains, it is itself uniformly flat. The majestic peaks are clearly visible but begin to rise roughly fifteen miles west of downtown, allowing Denver plenty of room to spread out.

Mineral wealth has always been at the heart of the city's prosperity, with all the fluctuations of fortune that this entails. Though local resources have been progressively exhausted, Denver has managed to hang on to its role as the most important commercial and transportation nexus in the state. Its original “foundation” in 1858 was by pure chance; this was the first spot where small quantities of gold were discovered in Colorado. There was no significant river, let alone a road, but prospectors came streaming in, regardless of prior claims to the land – least of all those of the Arapahoe, who had supposedly been confirmed in their ownership of the area by the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1851.

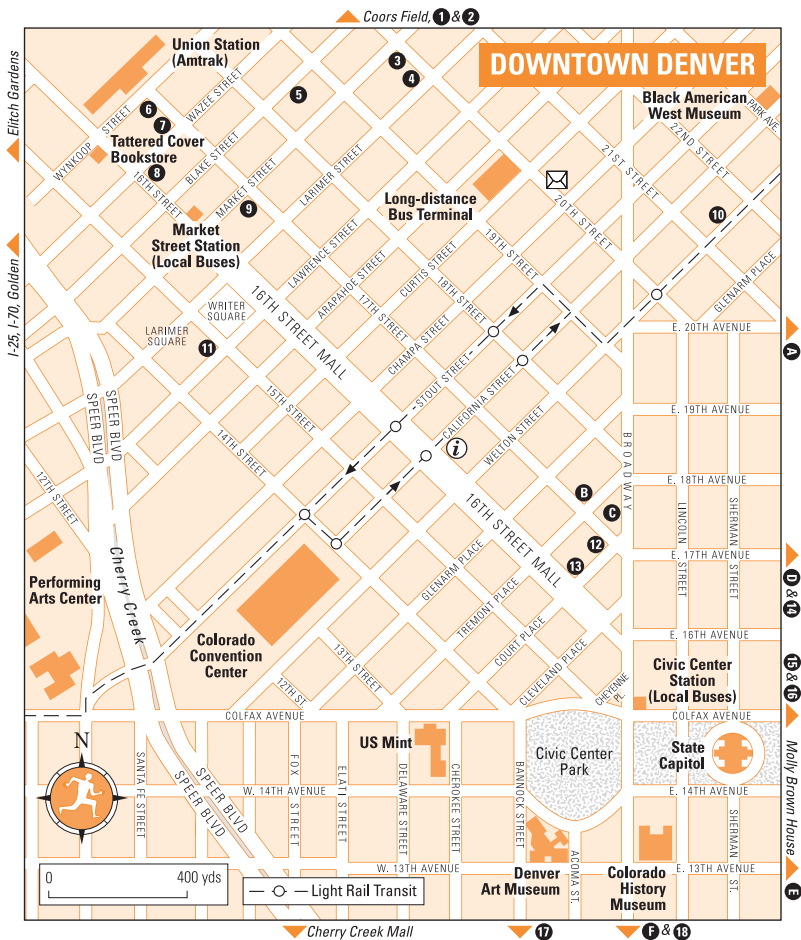

There was actually very little gold in Denver itself; the infant town swarmed briefly with disgruntled fortune-seekers, who decamped when news came in of the massive gold strike at Central City. Denver survived, however, prospering further with the discovery of silver in the mountains. All sorts of shady characters made this their home; Jefferson “Soapy” Smith, for example, acquired his nickname here, selling bars of soap at extortionate prices under the pretence that some contained $100 bills. When the first railroads bypassed Denver – the death knell for so many other communities – the citizens simply banded together and built their own connecting spur.

These days, Denver is a welcoming and enjoyable city, with a fairly liberal outlook. Tourism is based on getting out into the great outdoors rather than on sightseeing in town, but somehow the city's isolation, a good six hundred miles from any conurbation of even vaguely similar size, gives its 2.5-million population a refreshing friendliness; and in a city that is used to providing its own entertainment there always seems to be something going on.

outside exit 506 in the East terminal and 511 in the West terminal. There are also a number of independent shuttles that, for $20, will drop you off at a downtown hotel; shuttles to many of the state's major ski resorts can also be arranged within the terminal, though advance reservations are recommended.

Amtrak trains arrive on the northwest side of downtown Denver at the beautiful old Union Station on Wynkoop Street, and the Greyhound bus terminal is every bit as close to the action at 1055 19th St.

For information, stop by the Official Visitor Information Center, conveniently located downtown at 1600 California St (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 11am–3pm; ☎ 303/892-1505 or 1-800/233-6837, 🌐 www.denver.org) with the main entrance on the pedestrian-only 16th Street.

Negotiating downtown Denver on foot is pretty straightforward, though the free buses (daily 6am–1am) that run for a mile up and down the 16th Street Mall at the heart of the city's grid-like street pattern are hard to pass up. RTD, Denver's excellent public transportation network (☎ 303/229-6000, 🌐 www.rtd-denver.com), also runs pay-to-ride buses ($1.25); frequent services to the various sports stadiums and airport leave from the underground Market Street Station at Market and 16th. The bus network is supplemented by a light railway (same local fares as buses) and all RTD services are designed to carry bikes (free) and accommodate wheelchair users.

From late-May to August, you can also ride the Grey Line-operated Cultural Connection Trolley (8.30am–5.30pm; hourly; $16 for 1-day pass; $25 for 2-day pass), which links Denver's main points of interest; passes can be purchased – cash only – on the trolleys.

Accommodation

Denver has a good selection of central accommodation, ranging from hostels to motels to homey B&Bs, as well as grand historic downtown hotels. Chain motels are located further out on Colfax Avenue and alongside many of Denver's major cross-town highways. If you're planning to camp, the drab Camping Denver North, I-70 exit 229 (☎ 303/622-9274 or 1-800/562-6538, 🌐 www.campdenver.com; RVs $29–36, tents $20–22), is the most central option – but you'd do better heading twenty miles out of town to Boulder, Golden, or further into the mountains.

Broadway Plaza Motel 1111 Broadway ☎ 303/893-0303. Within walking distance of downtown, this plain but friendly motel has large and clean rooms (with phones and cable TV), free parking, and reasonable rates. ③

Brown Palace Hotel 321 17th St ☎ 303/297-3111 or 1-800/321-2599, 🌐 www.brownpalace.com. Beautifully maintained downtown landmark dating from 1892, with elegant dining rooms and public areas. Step inside and marvel at the eight-story cast-iron atrium. ③–⑨

Capitol Hill Mansion 1207 Pennsylvania St ☎ 303/839-5221 or 1-800-839-9329, 🌐 www.capitolhillmansion.com. This luxurious B&B in a turreted Victorian sandstone mansion is on a leafy street near the state capitol. Each of its eight antique-furnished rooms are delightful, and several include large whirlpool tubs. ⑥

Comfort Inn Downtown 401 17th St ☎ 303/296-0400. This very central comfortable chain hotel has good continental breakfast and shares some faci-

ties with the Brown Palace Hotel (see above). ⑤

Hostel of the Rockies 1717 Race St ☎ 303/861-7777, 🌐 www.innkeeperrockies.com. Denver's best hostel is a 20min walk east of the capitol down seedy Colfax Ave to a far better part of town, with free and safe street parking. The hostel has laundry, kitchen, and TV room, and dorm beds go for $17 a night. Private rooms ($35) are in a separate building five blocks from the hostel. On Fridays sociable cookouts take place in the back garden.

Hampton Inn DIA 6290 Tower Rd, next to the airport ☎ 303/371-0200 or 1-800/426-7866, 🌐 www.hamptoninn.com. A comfortable place close to the airport with basic continental breakfast and airport shuttle included. ④

 Queen Anne Inn 2147 Tremont Place ☎ 303/296-6666 or 1-800/432-4667, 🌐 www.queenannebnb.com. Central and very hospitable 1879 B&B near a peaceful park where you can catch carriage rides; each of the 14 rooms is tastefully and individually decorated. ④–⑦

If you're not here to work, downtown's main draw is the shops and restaurants of 16th Street, a pedestrian zone that's also served by free buses. There's also a range of galleries, brewpubs, shops, and lofts in LoDo, or Lower Downtown, a revitalized late-Victorian district bordered by 14th and 20th, and Wynkoop and Larimer streets. It was here, between 14th and 15th streets, that William Larimer built Denver's original log cabin. That burned down in a general conflagration within a few years, whereupon a city ordinance decreed that all new construction should be in brick. Opposite the venerable Union Street train station is a branch of one of the best bookstores in the US: the Tattered Cover Bookstore at 1628 16th St and Wynkoop.

Denver's black community is most prominent in the old Five Points district, northeast of LoDo, created to house black railroad workers in the 1870s. The Black American West Museum at 3091 California St (May–Sept daily 10am–5pm; Oct–April Wed–Sun 10am–2pm; $6; ☎ 303/292-2566, 🌐 www.blackamericanwest.org), has intriguing details on black pioneers and outlaws. Perhaps the most interesting section is on cowboys, which debunks a lot of Western myths: one-third of all cowboys were black, many former slaves who left the South after the Civil War.

Three blocks from the southeastern end of 16th St, the State Capitol at Broadway and E Colfax Avenue (Mon–Fri 7am–5.30pm), offers a commanding view of the Rockies swelling on the horizon. Its thirteenth step up to the entrance is exactly one mile above sea level. The capitol is a rather predictable copy of the one in Washington, DC, but the free tours (every 30mins; 9.30am–3.30pm) are pleasantly informal, and you can climb its dome for an even better view.

Civic Center Park, right in front of the capitol, is flanked by two of Denver's finest museums. The glass-tile-covered Denver Art Museum at 100 W 14th Ave (Tues & Thurs–Sat 10am–5pm, Wed 10am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; tours Tues–Fri & Sun 1.30pm, Sat 11am & 1.30pm; $8; 🌐 www.denverartmuseum.org) has a solid collection of paintings from around the world, but is most noteworthy for its superb examples of Native American craftwork, with marvelous beadwork by Plains tribes and some finely detailed Navajo weavings. Some of the pre-Columbian art from Central America – particularly the extraordinary Olmec miniatures – is also spectacular. Also flanking the park is the Colorado History Museum at 1300 Broadway (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5; 🌐 www.coloradohistory.org) whose most interesting exhibits are in the downstairs galleries. Several dioramas, made under the auspices of the WPA in the 1930s, show historical scenes in fascinating detail, starting with the Ancestral Puebloans of Mesa Verde, following up with trappers meeting with Indians at a “fair in the wilderness” in the early 1800s, and a model of Denver in 1860. An exhaustive archive of photographs of the early West showcases the work of W.H. Jackson (1843–1942).

Two or three miles east of downtown en route to the airport, the enormous City Park is home to the Denver Museum of Nature and Science, 2001 Colorado Blvd (daily 9am–5pm; museum $10, planetarium $8, IMAX $8, all three $20; ☎ 303/322-7009 or 1-800/925-2250, 🌐 www.dmns.org). Its exhibits extend beyond the (very good) dinosaur exhibits and wildlife displays to include anthropological material on Native Americans. There's also a large zoo nearby (daily: April–Sept 9am–5pm, Oct–March 10am–4pm; admission April–Sept $11, Oct–March $9; ☎ 303/376-4800, 🌐 www.denverzoo.org), whose four thousand inmates include a couple of huge lowland gorillas in a large, thickly wooded sanctuary.

Denver's Six Flags Elitch Gardens theme park, on the western edge of downtown at 2000 Elitch Circle (June–Sept daily 10am–10pm; Oct–May irregular hours; $38, parking $9; ☎ 303/595-4386, 🌐 www.sixflags.com), is surprisingly close to the city center (a ten-minute walk along the Cherry Creek cycle path), and has some great white-knuckle rides as well as a decent water park. Finally, twenty miles west of downtown (though essentially a Denver suburb), lies the town of Golden, which is linked by regular buses to Market Street Station. Since the 1860s the town has been virtually synonymous with beer giant Coors, the world's largest brewery (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; free; ☎ 303/277-2337, 🌐 www.coors.com). Located three blocks east of Washington Avenue, Golden's main thoroughfare, the brewery serves up 90min tours full of corporate self-promotion. The tour ends with a tasting session (bring ID) of their numerous products, including their much-maligned (or loved, depending on whom you talk to) “Silver Bullet,” the light beer for which the company is most famous. On the opposite side of Golden's downtown, mountains rise sharply from the plains, among them Lookout Mountain, site of the Buffalo Bill Museum (May–Oct daily 9am–5pm, Nov–April Tues–Sun 9am–4pm; $3; 🌐 www.buffalobill.org) and final resting place of William Cody, famed frontiersman, buffalo-hunter, army scout, and showman, who died in Denver in 1915 (see also p.879). Though now surrounded by huge electricity pylons, the gravesite offers great views in both directions, over the city and out to the mountains. The adjacent museum does a thorough job of outlining Buffalo Bill's past, and one of the more gruesome elements on display is a pistol whose handle has been fashioned from human bone.

Eating

As well as plenty of Western-themed steak and barbecue places, Denver has a cosmopolitan selection of international restaurants. Several of the city's famed brewpubs serve good quality meals, too. Of the several distinct restaurant districts, the Larimer Square area is the most easily accessible on foot.

Bump and Grind 439 E 17th Ave ☎ 303/861-4841. Cheap café/bistro just outside downtown that's the flamboyant hub for the local gay social scene, particularly during Sunday brunch when the waitstaff is almost exclusively transvestite. The food is excellent, creative, and inexpensive – the eggs Benedict on sourdough bread costs just $6.

Casa Bonita 6715 W Colfax Ave ☎ 303/232-5115. Absolutely wild Mexican place, seating 1200 diners, a long way out on Colfax. Gunfights, cliff divers, abandoned mines to explore – the only weak link is the food itself, but it's all a lot of fun (especially for kids) and far from expensive.

Duffy's Shamrock 1635 Court Place ☎ 303/534-4935. Late-night downtown pub serving food, including sandwiches, steaks, and seafood, until 1.30am.

 El Azteca 301 16th St. Lunchtimes, office workers arrive en-masse for the authentic top-notch Mexican food served in this small eatery in the basement of a dreary food-court. Prices are low, service quick, and the food – particularly the carne asada – excellent.

The Palace Arms 321 17th St ☎ 303/297-3111. This small and classy restaurant tucked in the Brown Palace Hotel (see p.842) is the ultimate splurge in town, with a menu of mostly seasonal game specialties, and decor of Napoleonic period antiques – including a pair of Napoleon's dueling pistols.

Racine's 850 Bannock St ☎ 303/595-0418. Just south of downtown, this large, laid-back place is a Denver institution. Housed in a former auto showroom, the inexpensive restaurant serves excellent egg-based breakfasts, with imaginative pastas, reliably good sandwiches, and spicy Mexican entrees later in the day.

Taki's 341 E Colfax Ave. Giant and inexpensive portions of Japanese food are served in this friendly and longstanding local family business, with cafeteria-style ordering that gets you the food fast. The miso soup is too good to miss and the salmon bowl – a sizeable piece of salmon smothered in a zesty, mustardy sauce with rice – is exceptional, and costs under $5.

 Tom's Diner 601 E Colfax Ave and Pearl St ☎ 303/861-7493. Wonderfully gritty and authentic 24hr diner, providing cheap deals on big portions of stock diner food at the seedy end of town.

Vesta Dipping Grill 1822 Blake St ☎ 303/296-1970. Attractive restaurant in a renovated LoDo warehouse serving tasty food in unusual combinations, based around the “art” of dipping meat or veggies in a spectrum of flavors (Mediterranean, Asian, Mexican).

Wazee Supper Club 1600 15th St ☎303/623-9518. Well-established LoDo dining room, serving good cheap burgers, deli sandwiches, and superb pizzas, plus a full range of beers, in an Art Deco atmosphere. One of the few places open really late (1.30am most nights).

The congregation of brewpubs and sports bars in the LoDo district, particularly near Coors Field, have made this the city's liveliest nightlife area. There are plenty of other more stylish or relaxing places to drink here, too. Most bars close around 1am. For news of musical happenings, consult the weekly free Westword, found in sidewalk dispensers and cafes around downtown.

The remarkable Red Rocks Amphitheater (☎303/694-1234, 🌐www.redrocksonline.com), fifteen miles west of downtown Denver via I-70 (exit 259), has been the setting for thousands of rock and classical concerts; U2 recorded Under a Blood Red Sky here. This 9000-seat venue is squeezed between two 400ft red-sandstone rocks that seem to glow in early morning and late evening. The surrounding Red Rocks Park is open to visitors free of charge during the day.

Denver's pride and joy, the modern Denver Performing Arts Complex (the "PLEX") on 14th and Curtis streets (☎303/893-4100, 🌐www.artscplex.org), is home to the Denver Center Theater Company, Colorado Symphony Orchestra, Opera Colorado, and the Colorado Ballet, and hosts performances nightly. Facilities in the complex include eight theaters, as well as the Symphony Hall (which is in the round, giving it superb acoustics).

In the hunt for tickets to all cultural and sporting events, both Ticketmaster (☎303/830-8497) and Ticketman (☎303/430-1111) can usually help. You can try the Ticket Bus, parked on 16th and Curtis, in person (daily 10am–6pm), where you'll often find last-minute deals on shows that have yet to sell out.

Breckenridge Brewery 2220 Blake St ☎303/297-3644. Cozy and lively brewpub opposite Coors Field – making it an ideal hangout after a ballgame – with quality craft beer, brewed on the premises, and a killer range of delicious barbecue grub.

Brendan's 1624 Market St ☎303/595-0609. Small basement pub in the LoDo with regular live blues; big-name acts pop by a few times a month and cover is rarely more than $10.

El Chapultepec 20th and Market streets ☎303/295-9126. Tiny, popular LoDo venue near Coors Field, with nightly live jazz and occasional big names.

The Church 1160 Lincoln St ☎303/832-3528. A dance club inside a gutted cathedral, combining a downtown nightlife landmark, a wine bar, sushi bar, and three invariably busy dance floors. Plays mostly hard house or garage, though the music and crowd can be eclectic. $5–15 cover.

Comedy Works 1226 15th St ☎303/595-3637 🌐www.comedyworks.com. Right off Larimer Square, Denver's major comedy venue is the most likely place to find visiting big-name stand-up acts. Shows kick off nightly at 8pm, with several performances on weekend nights.

Cruise Room Bar The Oxford Hotel, 1600 17th St ☎303/628-5400. This place is a replica of the Art Deco bar on the Queen Mary ocean liner. Worth a stop for the atmosphere alone.

Grizzly Rose 5450 N Valley Hwy ☎303/295-1330 🌐www.grizzlyrose.com. Celebrated Country and Western venue a 10min drive north of downtown on I-25 (take exit 215). The huge venue has bands every night, attracts famous names regularly, and has been named the Country's Best Country Music Club several years running. Cover $5–10.

 Mercury Café 2199 California St ☎303/294-9281, 🌐www.mercurycafe.com. When there's not jazz on at The Merc, there's swing dancing, poetry readings, or some other form of entertainment. The club is combined with a good-value restaurant, which serves lots of healthy choices, many vegetarian.

Polly Esthers 2301 Blake St ☎303/382-1976.

Enormous and consistently popular club with '70s and '80s hits playing on two floors. Cover $5–10.

The Soiled Dove 1949 Market St ☎303/299-0100 🌐www.soileddove.com. Hugely popular bar with an often rowdy rooftop overlooking Market St. Features an eclectic variety of live music almost every night, from local to national names and from jazz to rock.

Wynkoop Brewing Co. 1634 18th St ☎303/297-2700. Opposite Union Station, the state's first brewpub serves up good home-brewed beers and great bar food. There's an elegant pool hall upstairs, and live entertainment Thurs–Sat. Brewery tours, with free samples, are given on Saturdays (1–5pm).

Northern Colorado

The major attraction for visitors in the Denver area is Rocky Mountain National Park to the northwest. Though on the map the distances involved may not look that great, it would be a mistake to attempt to see the whole park on a day-trip from Denver. Segments of its loop drive can be very slow and laborious, and in a single day it's more realistic just to dip a few miles into the park's eastern fringes.

The lively foothill town of Boulder can be used as a base, though the smaller mountain towns give you more time in the wilds: Grand Lake, near the western entrance, makes a more attractive stopover than overblown Estes Park on the east, while Winter Park is an affordable, enjoyable ski resort. Further west, midway across the state on either side of the I-70 freeway, you'll find the famous Rocky Mountain ski resorts of Vail, Aspen, and the rest, and the evocative mining town of Leadville. Continuing toward the Utah border, the landscape dips and rises in a patchwork of granite peaks, raging rivers, and red-sandstone canyons, winding up at Grand Junction and the memorable scenery of Colorado National Monument.

Boulder

BOULDER, just 27 miles northwest of Denver on US-36, is one of the liveliest college towns in the country, filled with a young population that seems to divide its time between phenomenally healthy daytime pursuits and almost equally unhealthy nighttime activities – the town is often referred to as “seven miles surrounded by reality.” It was founded in 1858 by a prospecting party who felt that the nearby Flatiron Mountains, the first swell of the Rockies, “looked right for gold”; in fact they found little, but the community grew anyway.

With an easygoing, forward-looking atmosphere and plenty of great places to eat and drink, Boulder makes an excellent place to return each night after a day in the mountains. Downtown centers on the leafy pedestrian mall of Pearl Street, lined with all sorts of lively cafés, galleries, and stores – including several places where you can rent mountain bikes. The most obvious short excursion is to drive or hike up nearby Flagstaff Mountain for views over town and further into the Rockies; any road west joins up with the Peak to Peak Highway, which heads through spectacular scenery to Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. For rock climbing, Eldorado Canyon State Park offers many opportunities and the excellent Neptune Mountaineering, south of town in the Table Mesa shopping center, at 633 S Broadway (☎ 303/499-8866), can answer any questions and, of course, provide gear.

The adventurous University of Colorado offers regular arts events, including in summer the Colorado Music Festival (☎ 303/449-1397, 🌐 www.coloradomusicfest.org) held in the Chautauqua Auditorium, and the seven-week Colorado Shakespeare Festival (☎ 303/492-0554, 🌐 www.coloradoshakes.org). Even the small Naropa Institute (☎ 303/444-0202), a university founded in 1974 by a Tibetan Buddhist, has a notable presence in this liberal, alternative-thinking town, sponsoring events throughout the year.

Practicalities

The main point of entry for local and long-distance buses is the Transit Center, 14th and Walnut streets (☎ 303/442-1044). Regular services from Denver International ($10) and the city itself ($3.75) arrive here as well. For city information, visit the hospitable, low-key Boulder Convention & Visitors Bureau, 2440 Pearl St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 303/442-2911 or 1-800/444-0447, 🌐 www.bouldercoloradousa.com). For information on public lands around Boulder, contact the City of Boulder Open Space & Mountain Parks department (☎ 303-441-3440, 🌐 www.ci.boulder.co.us/openspace). One of Boulder's chief attractions is that it's easy and pleasant to get around on foot, but the town's bus service is also excellent: the frequent HOP and SKIP services link the University Hill area with downtown and a major mall (approximate hours: Mon–Fri 5.30am–midnight, Sun 7.30am–10.30pm; $1). For a taxi, try Boulder Yellow Cab (☎ 303/777-7777).

Even if you're not staying in the historic Hotel Boulderado, wonderfully located near Pearl Street at 2115 13th St (☎ 303/442-4344 or 1-800/433-4344, 🌐 www.boulderado.com; 5–6), wander in for a drink and a free evening jazz. Nearby, in another grand old restored building, the Pearl Street Inn, 1820 Pearl St (☎ 303/444-5584 or 1-888/810-1312, 🌐 www.pearlstreet.com; 6), offers elegant B&B-style accommodations. The Foot of the Mountain, 200 W Arapahoe Ave (☎ 303/442-5688 or 1-866/773-5489, 🌐 www.footofthemountainmotel.com; 4), is a friendly, log-cabin-style motel, nine blocks from downtown beside Boulder Creek. There's also the welcoming Boulder International Youth Hostel in a Victorian building at 1107 12th St, near the campus (☎ 303/442-0522 or 1-888/442-0522, 🌐 www.boulderhostel.com; 2); dorm beds cost $20, and there are lots of private rooms ($49 double).

Plenty of bars and restaurants mark the Pearl Street area. The free Boulder Weekly newspaper is replete with dining and boozing information. One of the student favorites, 🍷 Tra-Ling's Oriental Café, 1305 Broadway (☎ 303/449-0400), is a grungy canteen-style restaurant with outstanding and amazingly cheap Chinese food bought by the scoop. A far more sophisticated choice is Sunflower, 1701 Pearl St (☎ 303/440-0220), which has that typically Boulder combination of high prices, a healthy menu of organic and free-range items, and informed ethics. Gourmet vegetarians find plenty of options, though so do omnivores. If you really feel like splurging, try the Flagstaff House, 1138 Flagstaff Rd (☎ 303/442-4640), where the menu frequently changes but often includes gamey "Rocky Mountain Cuisine." The Hotel Boulderado (see above) also houses two popular nighttime haunts: the Corner Bar, with armchair seating, and creative, reasonably priced dishes served until late at night on the patio; and the Catacombs, which features nightly live blues, jazz, and acoustic guitar music. It's also one of only three bars in Boulder where you're allowed to smoke. The West End Tavern, 926 Pearl St (☎ 303/444-3535), is a great venue for live jazz and comedy, with local microbrews and spectacular Flatiron mountain views from the roof terrace. For getting your groove on, Round Midnight at 1005 Pearl St (☎ 303/442-2176) with its packed weekend dance floor is your best bet.

Rocky Mountain National Park

You don't have to go to ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK to appreciate the full splendor of the Rockies; it is simply one small section of the mighty range, measuring roughly twenty-five by fifteen miles. A tenth of the size of Yellowstone, it attracts around the same number of visitors – around three-and-a-half million per year, and with the bulk of those coming in high summer, the one main road through the mountains can get incredibly congested. However, it is undeniably beautiful, straddling the Continental Divide at elevations often well in excess of ten thousand feet. A full third of the park is above the tree line, and large areas of snow never melt; the name of the Never Summer Mountains speaks volumes about the long, empty expanses of arctic-style tundra. Lower down, among the rich forests, are patches of lush greenery; you never know when you may stumble upon a sheltered mountain meadow flecked with flowers. Parallels with the European Alps readily spring to mind – helped, of course, by the heavy-handed Swiss and Bavarian themes of the region's motels and restaurants.

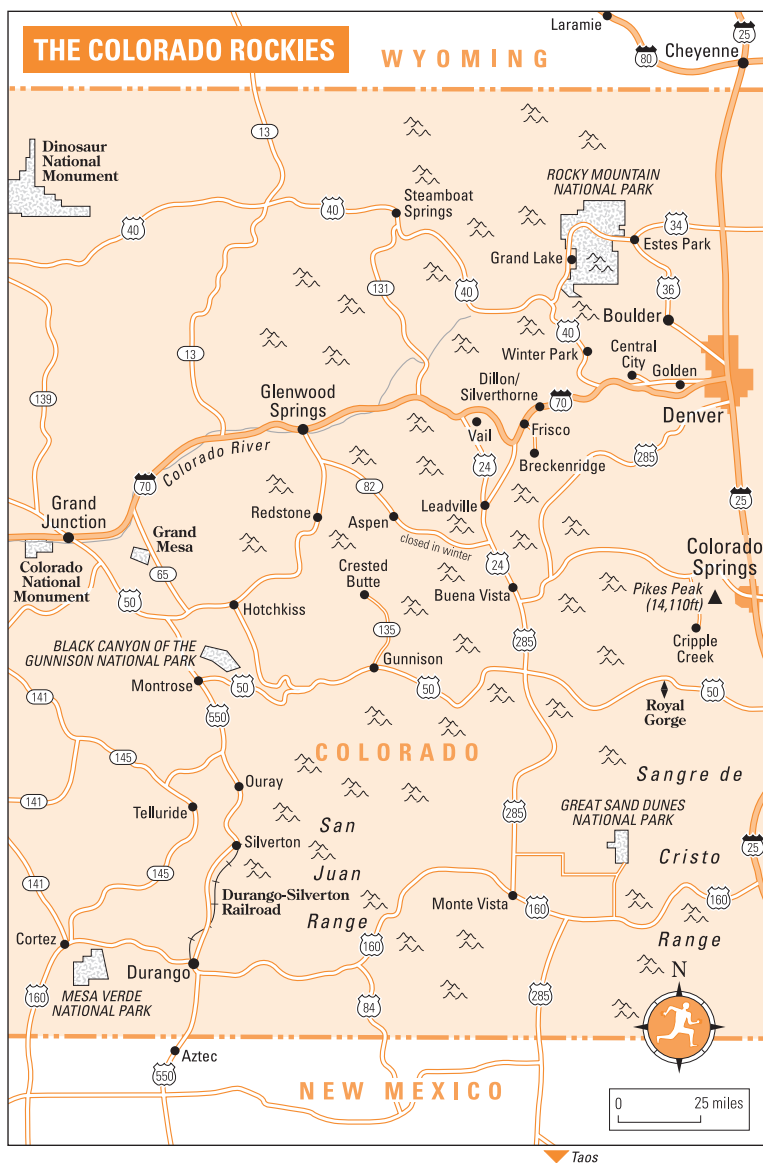

Approaching the park

Approaching the park from the east, you barely penetrate the foothills of the Rockies before you arrive at the unattractive but bustling gateway town of ESTES PARK, 65 miles northwest of Denver. At the end of the nineteenth century, Estes Park was the private hunting preserve of the Irish Earl of Dunraven; once he was squeezed out, the town took on the more democratic function it still serves: providing visitors with food, lodging, and other services. The park headquarters and main visitor center (daily: June–Aug 8am–9pm; Sept–May 8am–5pm; park admission $20 per vehicle, $5 pedestrians and cyclists; information ☎ 970/586-1206) is a couple of miles north, on US-36.

To reach the western entrance, 85 miles from Denver, turn north off I-70 onto US-40, which negotiates Berthoud Pass en route to GRAND LAKE, a more low-key version of Estes Park. This unlikely yachting center, high in the mountains, consists of one main boardwalk-lined street beside the lake with family amusements, lodgings, and restaurants. The Kawuneeche Visitor Center of Rocky Mountain National Park is a mile north of town (daily: May–Sept 8am–6pm; Oct–April 8am–5pm; ☎ 970/627-3471).

Exploring the park

The showpiece of the park is Trail Ridge Road (late May to mid-October), between Estes Park and Grand Lake. This 45-mile stretch of US-34, said to be the highest highway in the world, affords a succession of tremendous views, and several short trails start from parking lots along the way. There are no services on the route, which generally takes three to four hours to drive. The definite highlight is the stretch of road on either side of the Alpine Visitor Center, halfway along Trail Ridge Road at Fall River Pass (daily May–Aug 9am–5pm, Sept 10am–4.30pm); here the peaks and alpine tundra will take your breath away. It's really the only requisite stop for any visitor who is happy enough to see the alpine tundra by car. The center's exhibits relate to the flora and fauna of the tundra. Good areas for wildlife viewing are a little further east along Trail Ridge Road.

The other scenic drive in the park is along the unpaved, summer-only Old Fall River Road, which was the park's first road, completed in 1920. Running east–west along the bed of a U-shaped glacial valley, it doesn't have open mountain vistas, but it's much quieter than the Trail Ridge, and there's far more chance of spotting wildlife. Roaming the park are moose, coyote, mountain lions, and a total population of perhaps thirty black bears, which, with a plentiful natural food supply, tend to avoid contact with humans.

While many people do little more than the drive along Trail Ridge Road, the park is best appreciated on foot. As there are dozens of superb hikes to choose from, think about the kind of experience you're after – photographing a particular animal, for instance, or hiking across the Continental Divide – and plan around this with a ranger's help. Bear in mind that the delicate ecosystem of the wild, wind-blown tundra makes it essential to stay on the paths. Be watchful of your own system at this altitude, too. Plan hikes conservatively and drink plenty of fluids to avoid altitude sickness and dehydration.

The obvious launching point for numerous day- and overnight hikes is Bear Lake, a pretty lake at the end of a spur road from Estes Park where mountains are framed to perfection in its cool, still waters. On the way, the road passes Moraine Park Museum (summer only, daily 9am–4.30pm; free), where well-laid-out exhibits explain the park's natural history. To ease traffic, frequent and free shuttle buses operate beyond the museum. The museum itself is on the Moraine Park Route (mid-June to mid-Sept daily 7.30am–7.30pm; every 30min), which connects the Fern Lake trailhead in the west with the Glacier Basin campground in the south. Here you can jump on a connecting shuttle to Bear Lake (mid-June to mid-Sept daily 7am–7pm every 10–15min).

Park practicalities

Public transportation to Estes Park from Denver International Airport is provided by Estes Park Shuttle (three or four daily, $45 one-way, $85 roundtrip; ☎ 970/586-5151 or 1-800/950-3274, 🌐 www.estesparkshuttle.com). To get around the park without a car, you can either pick up a tour from Estes Park, which with admission (not always included in the quoted price) should cost around $70 a day or $35 a half-day, or you can make the trip from Denver, with Gray Line (mid-May to mid-Oct; ☎ 303/289-2841, 🌐 www.coloradograyline.com).

Five official campgrounds provide the only accommodation within the park ($20 per night). All fill early each day; in summer, reservations are essential for Moraine Park and Glacier Basin (☎ 301/722-1257 or 1-800/365-2267, 🌐 reservations.nps.gov), while the others are first-come first-served. Longs Peak campground imposes a maximum stay of three days, the rest allow one week. For backcountry camping you need a permit ($20 fee May–Oct only), valid for up to seven days, and available from park headquarters or the Kawuneeche Visitor Center (see p.848).

Lodges, motels, and places to eat abound in Estes Park where the Chamber of Commerce, 500 Big Thompson Ave (May–Sept Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 9am–5pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 8am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 970/577-9900 or 1-800/443-7837, 🌐 www.estesparkcvb.com), can provide full listings. The Colorado Mountain School, 341 Moraine Ave (☎ 970/586-5758; $20 per bed), is the nearest thing to a hostel in town, with dorm beds in cramped rooms and no cooking facilities. Other budget options include the Alpine Trail Ridge Inn, 927 Moraine Ave (☎ 970/586-4585 or 1-800/233-5023, 🌐 www.alpinetrailridgeinn.com; ④), and the Bighorn Mountain Lodge, 1340 Big Thompson Ave (☎ 970/586-4376, 🌐 www.bighornmtnlodge.com; ③), both of which have clean, standard motel rooms and outdoor pools. If it's glamour you're after, head straight to the 1909 Stanley Hotel, with its fantastic mountainside location at 333 Wonderview Ave (☎ 970/586-3371 or 1-800/976-1377, 🌐 www.stanleyhotel.com; ⑦). For meals, the relaxed Molly B, 200 Moraine Ave (☎ 970/586-2766), has an extensive all-day menu, and the excellent dinner buffet at the historic Baldpate Inn, 4900 S Hwy-7 (☎ 970/586-5397; reservations essential), includes hearty soups, freshly baked gourmet breads, and a range of salads, for only $12.

Grand Lake has an excellent youth hostel: the gorgeous, rambling log-built  Shadowcliff Lodge, perched high in the woods on Tunnel Road (June–Sept only; ☎970/627-9220; ②), with dorm rooms for $20 and clean and comfortable doubles for $50. Among a number of moderately priced motels is the Western Riviera Motel & Cabins, in an attractive spot down by the lake at 419 Garfield St (☎970/627-3580, @www.westernriv.com; ⑤); note that during summer, some places in Grand Lake insist on a minimum three-night stay. One of the better places to eat is EG's Garden Grill, 1000 Grand Ave (☎970/627-8404), where the menu ranges from burgers to grilled wild boar sausages and seafood specials like marlin and grilled salmon – you can also sit in the beer garden (happy hour Mon–Sat 5–7pm). Don't miss the fabulous $7.95 breakfast buffet at Grand Lake Lodge, 15500 US-34 (☎970/627-3185; open June to mid-Sept), a National Historic Landmark that offers accommodation in rustic cabins (⑤) that cluster around the property and have access to a pool and hot tub.

Winter Park

The former railroad center of WINTER PARK, 67 miles northwest of Denver, may not be Colorado's trendiest resort, but its wide, ever-expanding variety of ski and bike terrain, friendly atmosphere, and good-value lodgings draw over one million visitors a year. It also has exceptional facilities for kids and disabled skiers – and the 200-acre Discovery Park, an excellent, economical area for beginners. Experienced skiers, in turn, relish the country's best mogul runs on the awesome Mary Jane Mountain, the fluffy snows of the Parsenn Bowl, and the backcountry idyll of Vasquez Cirque.

In addition to skiing, you can snowmobile the Continental Divide on a one-hour tour with Trailblazers in Fraser ($55/hr, $180/day; ☎970/726-8452 or 1-800/669-0134, @trailblazerssnowmobile.com) or around a 25-mile course just north of town with Mountain Madness ($40/hr; ☎970/726-4529 or 1-800/547-3101). Summer visitors can enjoy six hundred miles of excellent mountain-bike trails, some of the best of which are accessible from the chair lift ($22 for an adult day bike pass; from $55 with bike rental), in addition to the super-fun mile-and-a-half-long Alpine Slide ($10), and several contemporary music festivals.

Year-round service to Winter Park is provided by Greyhound, stopping downtown outside the visitor center at the junction of Hwy-40 and Vasquez Road (daily 8am–5pm; ☎970/726-4118 or 1-800/903-7275, @www.winterpark-info.com); by Amtrak, five miles north in Fraser; and on Home James shuttles from Denver International Airport ($42 one way; ☎1-800/359-7503, @www.homejamestransportation.com). The Winter Park Ski Train does roundtrips from Denver every Saturday and Sunday during ski season, leaving at 7.15am and starting back at 4.15pm ($49; 2hr; reservations required; ☎303/296-4754, @www.skitrain.com). An excellent network of free shuttle buses means that a car is not essential in town. Trail maps and general outdoor information are available at the visitor center.

As well as the hotels and condos surrounding the ski area that can be booked through Winter Park Central Reservations (☎970/726-1564 or 1-800/979-0332, @www.skiwinterpark.com; ④ and up), inexpensive motels line the main street of Winter Park itself; including the downtown Viking Lodge (☎970/726-8885 or 1-800/421-4013; ②–⑤). Places to eat and drink downtown include Carlos and Maria's in Cooper Creek Square (☎970/726-9674), good for low-cost margaritas and Mexican food; Deno's (☎970/726-5332), with its hundred-plus beers and tasty pasta and Cajun seafood; and Hernando's Pizza Pub (☎970/726-5409), which has fantastic grub, low prices, and a warm, family atmosphere.

Steamboat Springs

Surrounded by wide valleys, STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, 65 miles north of I-70 via Rte-131, looks like no other Colorado mountain resort. Its roots are in ranching rather than mining, and its downtown area still evokes a pioneer feel – until you spot the upmarket boutiques. In this ski-mad town, rancher-types judge the quality of snowfall by the number of fence wires it covers; they're usually satisfied with a three-wire winter, which corresponds to its average snowfall of 334 inches per year.

The town's top-notch ski resort (lift tickets $76 per day), snuggled into Mount Werner four miles south of downtown, is boosted by such activities as dogsled expeditions, hot-air ballooning, and snowmobiling, available in and around town. A favorite year-round activity is soaking in the secluded 105°F Strawberry Park Hot Springs (Sun–Thurs 10am–10.30pm, Fri & Sat 10am–midnight; $10; ☎970/879-0342, 🌐www.strawberryhotsprings.com), seven miles north of town but only accessible by four-wheel-drive vehicles in winter. In town, the Steamboat Springs Health and Recreation Center offers hot mineral pools (Mon–Fri 5.30am–10pm, Sat & Sun 8am–9pm; $7.50; ☎970/879-1828), as well as workout facilities. In the summertime, opportunities for mountain biking, whitewater rafting, and horseback riding abound. Outfitters throughout the town can assist you with gear and guides.

Practicalities

Most winter visitors fly into Yampa Valley Airport, 22 miles from Steamboat Springs, though it's possible to drive, weather permitting, from Denver on Hwy-40 over scenic Rabbit Ears Pass, or take the Alpine Taxi shuttle direct from Denver International Airport ($75; ☎970/879-2800 or 1-800/343-7433; 🌐www.alpinetaxi.com). Visitor information is at 1255 Lincoln Ave, two miles east of downtown (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 10am–3pm, also Sun 9am–6pm during peak times in summer and winter; ☎970/879-0880, 🌐www.steamboatcchamber.com).

From town, free SST buses run the four miles to the ski resort. Slopeside lodging, such as the comfortable Best Western Ptarmigan Inn (☎970/879-1730 or 1-800/538-7519, 🌐www.steamboat-lodging.com; winter Ⓢ, summer Ⓢ), costs more than downtown options like the Rabbit Ears Motel (☎970/879-1150 or 1-800/828-7702, 🌐www.rabbitearsmotel.com; winter Ⓢ, summer Ⓢ). Steamboat Central Reservations (☎970/879-0740 or 1-877/783-2628, 🌐www.steamboat.com) can supply information on lodging and packages. You can camp at the Steamboat Springs KOA Campground, two miles west of downtown on US-40 (☎970/879-0273; sites from $27).

For food, Azteca Taqueria, 402 Lincoln Ave (☎970/870-9980), has great inexpensive Mexican take-out; Antares, 57 1/2 8th St (☎970/879-9939), is one of Steamboat's very best restaurants, serving an eclectic range of fish and meat dishes. Another venue for delicious but expensive dining is 🍷 Hazie's, up on the mountain (open Tues–Sat for lunch and dinner in ski season, Fri and Sat nights in summer; ☎970/871-5252), which includes a free gondola ride; best of all is their superb $34 summer-only Sunday brunch (10am–1.30pm). Microbrews and decent pub food are available near the ski area at The Tugboat Grill and Pub (☎970/879-7070), which also has live music and a dance floor; Wolf's Den Tavern, 703 Lincoln Ave (☎970/871-0008), is a good downtown venue for live bands, too.

Summit County

The mix of purpose-built ski resorts, old mining towns, snow-covered peaks, alpine meadows, and crystal lakes that make up Summit County lie alongside I-70, around seventy miles west of Denver. Before white settlement, the Ute hunted here every summer: the swanky Keystone Ranch Golf Club now occupies the meadow where they once pitched their tepees. During the late nineteenth century the county witnessed several gold-mining booms; dilapidated ghost towns cling to the mountainsides, but one settlement that survived is BRECKENRIDGE, whose streets are lined with brightly painted Victorian houses, shops, and cafés. This is the liveliest of Summit County's four towns; FRISCO, stretching sedately along a quiet valley, appeals to those looking for a less hectic pace. Both the other towns, DILLON and SILVERTHORNE, are dull, though the latter contains dozens of cut-price factory outlet stores. The formulaic ski resort villages of Keystone and Copper Mountain are also unexciting unless you're here to ski or board.

By car, Summit County is about two hours from Denver. Greyhound buses stop at the Frisco Transit Center ($11 one way) from where free buses radiate to the ski resorts Copper Mountain, Keystone, and Breckenridge. There are also shuttles from Denver International Airport. Resort Express serves Silverthorne and Breckenridge ($52; ☎ 970/468-7600 or 1-800/334-7433, 🌐 www.resort-express.com), while Supershuttle (☎ 1-800/258-3826) and Colorado Mountain Express (☎ 1-800/222-2112) run a more expensive door-to-door service to hotels. Summit Stage (6.30am–1.30am; ☎ 970/668-0999) provides free local transportation around the county, and the Breckenridge Downtown Trolley (☎ 970/453-5000) runs through town and up to the resort. The main visitor center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 970/668-2051 or 1-800/424-1554, 🌐 www.townoffrisco.com) is by the lake at the end of Frisco's Main Street, and there's a small welcome center in Breckenridge at 309 N Main St (☎ 970/453-6018).

Accommodation

Lodgings in Summit County cover all price ranges, with prices doubling in winter. Frisco has the best-priced inns and motels. There are also a few downtown B&Bs in Breckenridge, where otherwise accommodation usually means a slopeside condo; The Breckenridge Resort Chamber (☎ 970/453-6018 or 1-888/796-2825, 🌐 www.gobreck.com) can advise on prices and package deals. Resort accommodation at both Copper Mountain (☎ 970/968-2882 ☎ 1-800/458-8386, 🌐 www.coppercolorado.com) and Keystone (☎ 1-800/468-5004, 🌐 www.keystonereresort.com) is first class, but so too are the prices; virtually nothing costs under $100 a night, unless you find an unusual package deal.

Fireside Inn 114 N French St, Breckenridge ☎ 970/453-6456 🌐 www.firesideinn.com. Homey little B&B with floral, antique-filled bedrooms (all with private bath) and several cramped dorm rooms ($26–38) which all share a TV lounge and kitchenette. Free Internet access, afternoon tea and cakes. Winter ③, summer ③

Frisco Lodge 321 Main St, Frisco ☎ 970/668-0195 or 1-800/279-6000, 🌐 www.friscolodge.com. Creaky old B&B in an old railroad inn, usually the cheapest deal in town. Units have kitchenettes and access to an outdoor hot tub, and cooked buffet breakfast and teatime snacks are served in the cluttered lounge. Winter ⑤, summer ③

Hi-Alpen Hütte 471 Rainbow Drive, Silverthorne ☎ 970/468-6336. Clean bunkrooms in comfortable environs, and there's a midnight curfew. Winter $40, summer $20. Private, motel-style rooms are also available. ④

Ridge Street Inn 212 N Ridge St, Breckenridge ☎ 970/453-4680. Comfortable, luxurious B&B in the heart of the historic downtown area. Winter ⑥, summer ③–④

Outdoor activities

Winter is still the busiest time in Summit County. Breckenridge Ski Area, the oldest of the four top-class resorts, spans four peaks and offers ideal terrain for all skiers – and snowboarders, with a six-acre park with half-pipe – as does the plush Keystone Resort, where the biggest night-ski operation in the US permits skiing until 10pm. The smallest resort in the county, Arapahoe Basin (generally known as “A-Basin”; ☎ 970/468-0718, 🌐 www.arapahoebasin.com; lift ticket $51 per day), offers great above-tree-line bowl skiing. All three are covered by one lift ticket ($75 per day), making this one of the best-value deals in the country. The slopes at the other ski area, the ingenious Copper Mountain ($75 for one day), are divided into three clear sections to keep beginners, intermediates, and experts out of each other’s way.

In summer, mountain-bikers and road-racers alike will be happy with the opportunities for cycling, particularly the stretch between Frisco and Breckenridge; Racer’s Edge at 114 N Main St in Breckenridge (☎ 970/453-0995) rents out the best bikes. Each resort runs a chair lift or gondola to the top of the mountains for access to great hiking and cycling trails. Keystone is particularly outstanding for its mountain bike trails with world-class downhill and cross-country trails accessed by its lifts (mid-June to mid-Sept daily 10am–5pm; day-pass $28). Breckenridge offers toboggan rides down the dry Superslide (summer daily 9am–5pm; $10), mini-golf ($7), and a giant maze ($6).

Eating

With the exception of Keystone Resort, Summit County doesn’t have a reputation for fine dining, though there’s no end of good-value places to eat, especially in Breckenridge.

Alpenglow Stube Keystone Mountain ☎ 970/496-4386. The best dining experience in Summit County – take the free gondola ride to the top of 11,444ft North Peak and feast on New American cuisine with a Bavarian edge in beautiful surroundings. It doesn’t come cheap though – the six-course meals run around $70.

 Butterhorn Bakery & Café 408 Old Main St, Frisco ☎ 970/668-3997. Superb bakery churning out huge delicious breads, bagels, cookies, and cakes. It’s also well-known for its breakfast burrito, smoked salmon omelette, and good range of sandwiches or soup lunches (all $6–7). Daily 7.30am–3pm.

Mi Casa 600 S Park Ave, Breckenridge ☎ 970/453-2071. The best Mexican food around, including fine chiles rellenos. The tangy fajitas are good value, as is the daily 3–6pm happy hour.

The Prospector 130 S Main St, Breckenridge ☎ 970/453-6858. Tasty traditional home-cooked breakfasts (try the spicy and excellent huevos rancheros) and lunches including roasts and meatloaf. Prices are among the lowest in town.

Rasta Pasta 411 S Main St, Breckenridge ☎ 970/453-7467. Good, fairly cheap pasta with a Caribbean twist and served to a soundtrack of reggae music.

Drinking

Apres-ski drinking is alive and well at the slopeside bars of all four resorts. As the night wears on, head to Breckenridge for several late-night music venues, though Frisco too has some good options.

Breckenridge Brewery 600 S Main St, Breckenridge ☎ 970/453-1550. This huge brewpub, one of the first in Colorado and now a landmark at the southern edge of town, serves good-quality microbrews and hearty pub food.

Chill 610 Main St, Frisco ☎ 970/668-9930. Frisco’s only late-night venue, complete with debonair decor, low lighting, billiards and nightly events that include live music, dance lessons, karaoke and poker tournaments.

Dillon Dam Brewery 100 Little Dam Rd, Dillon ☎ 970/262-7777. The place for good microbrew ales and inexpensive quality bar food – salads, burgers, and pasta – with entrees from around $8.

Downstairs at Eric’s 111 S Main St, Breckenridge ☎ 970/453-1401. Lively basement sports bar, with a good range of microbrews and filling bar food.

Leadville

Standing at an elevation of over ten thousand feet, south of I-70 and eighty miles west of Denver, the wonderfully atmospheric old mining town of LEADVILLE is the highest incorporated city in the US, with a magnificent view across to broad-shouldered, ice-laden mounts Elbert (14,433ft) and Massive (14,421ft), Colorado's two highest peaks. As you approach from the south, your first impression is likely to be of giant slag heaps and disused mining sheds, but don't let this put you off: Leadville is rich in character and romance, its old redbrick streets abounding with tales of gunfights, miners dying of exposure, and graveyards being excavated to get at the seams.

For an illuminating romp through the town's grim early history, head for the Heritage Museum, 102 E Ninth St (summer daily 10am–6pm; $3.50). Glass cases hold snippets on local fraternal organizations, quack doctors, music-hall stars, and the like, while a host of smoky photographs portray the lawless boomtown that in two years grew from a mining camp of two hundred people into Colorado's second largest city.

Of all Leadville's extraordinary tales, perhaps the most compelling is that of Horace Tabor, a storekeeper who supplied goods to prospectors in exchange for a share in potential profits. He hit the jackpot when two prospectors developed a silver mine that produced $20 million within a year. Tabor collected a one-third share and left his wife to marry local waitress “Baby Doe” McCourt in the society wedding of 1883 in Washington, DC, attended by President Chester Arthur. By the time of his death in 1899, Tabor was financially ruined. Baby Doe survived Tabor by 36 years, living a hermit-like existence in the godforsaken wooden shacks on his only remaining mine – the Matchless Mine. The buildings still stand, two miles out on Seventh Street, and in the crude wooden shack in which she died, emaciated and frostbitten, guides recount the story of Baby Doe's bizarre life in full, fascinating detail (May–Sept 9am–4.15pm, Oct–April call for hours; $4; ☎ 719/486-4918).

Back in town, don't miss the Tabor Opera House, 308 Harrison Ave (May–Sept daily 10am–5pm; $4; ☎ 719/486-8409, 🌐 www.taboroperahouse.net), where you're free to wander onto the stage, through the ranks of red velvet and gilt seats, and around the eerie, dusty old dressing rooms. Recorded oral histories tell tales of the theater's golden days. They give no details, sadly, of the time in 1882 when Oscar Wilde, garbed in black velvet knee britches and diamonds, addressed a host of dozing miners on the “Practical Application of the Aesthetic Theory to Exterior and Interior House Decoration with Observations on Dress and Personal Ornament.”

Practicalities

Leadville's visitor center is at 809 Harrison Ave (June–Sept daily 10am–5pm; ☎ 719/486-3900 or 1-800/939-3901, 🌐 www.leadvilleusa.com). A good place to stay is the historic landmark Delaware Hotel, 700 Harrison Ave (☎ 719/486-1418 or 1-800/748-2004, 🌐 www.delawarehotel.com; 4–6), an atmospheric Victorian place where rates include a full breakfast. South of town on US-24 you'll find a string of cheaper motels, among them the dependable Super 8 (☎ 719/486-3637; 5). Leadville has a gratifying choice of places to eat and drink. Cloud City Coffee House and Deli, 711 Harrison Ave (☎ 719/486-1317), serves bagels, buns, and espresso in a grand old hotel lobby, while further along the street at no. 612, Columbine Café (☎ 719/486-3599) dishes up imaginative fresh food with lots of vegetarian options, in simple diner surroundings. There's great Mexican and Southwestern food at the spartan La Cantina, a mile south on Hwy-24 (☎ 719/486-9021), which anti-poverty WPA program that gave the struggling community the cash to build its first crude ski lift in 1936. Entrepreneurs seized the opportunity presented by the varied terrain and plentiful snow, and the first chair lift was dedicated on Aspen Mountain (now known as Ajax) in 1947. Skiing has since spread to three more mountains – Aspen Highlands, Snowmass, and Buttermilk Mountain, and the jet set arrived in force during the 1960s. Development is a burning political issue: tight architectural constraints have been placed on businesses (McDonald's is forbidden to have a neon sign), but the last decade has seen the arrival of yet more Scandinavian-style lodges, condo blocks, and giant houses that remain empty for most of the year.

In winter, Independence Pass on Hwy-82, which provides the quickest access to Aspen, is closed, and the detour through Glenwood Springs adds an extra seventy miles to the trip from Denver. Many instead choose to fly into Sardy Field (☎ 970/920-5384, 🌐 www.aspenairport.com), the small airport four miles north of town on Hwy-82; if you fly into Denver, connecting flights may only cost another $80 or so. Or, you can take a shuttle (make sure to book in advance) from Denver International Airport; shuttle companies include Colorado Mountain Express (☎ 970/926-9800 or 1-800/525-6363, 🌐 www.cmex.com), who charge a whopping $108 each way. Another option is to fly into Eagle County Airport near Vail, an 80-minute drive away; and also served by Colorado Mountain Express.

Once in Aspen, there's no problem getting around: the Roaring Fork Transit Agency (☎ 970/925-8484) runs a free skiers' shuttle between the four mountains and serves the airport and outlying areas. The main Rubey Park transit center terminal is in the center of town on Durant Avenue.

Aspen's visitor center is at 425 Rio Grande Place (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 970/925-9000 or 1-800/262-7736, 🌐 www.aspenchamber.org). The free Aspen Daily News (“If you don't want it printed, don't let it happen”) is an excellent source of local gossip, news, and food and drink offers.

Accommodation

Stay Aspen Snowmass Central Reservations (☎ 970/925-9000 or 1-888/649-9582, 🌐 www.stayaspensnowmass.com) runs a superb service, and doesn't balk if you ask for the cheapest available room. It also arranges package deals combining accommodation with lift tickets. Rates vary considerably even in winter; the least expensive times to come are in the “value seasons” (last week in Nov, first two weeks of Dec, and first two weeks of April). Between mid-December and January 4, you'll be hard-pressed to find a double for less than $160. If you're traveling in a group, you can save money by renting a condo; the McCartney Property Management (☎ 1-877/369-8354, 🌐 www.mc-cartneyprop.com) is a good source. Prices in the entire area at least halve during the summer, when camping is also a good cheap option; there are nine USFS campgrounds around Aspen, of which only a handful of sites are reservable (☎ 1-877/444-6777, 🌐 www.reserveusa.com). Several campgrounds are on Maroon Creek Road south of Aspen, and there are some smaller options out toward Independence Pass.

Hotel Jerome 330 E Main St ☎ 970/920-1000 or 1-800/331-7213, 🌐 www.hjerome.com. Stately downtown landmark built at the height of the 1880s silver boom. Spacious rooms feature period wallpaper, antique brass, and cast-iron beds, and a gamut of modern amenities. The elegant lobby is worth a look even if you're not staying. Ⓜ

Innsbruck Inn 233 W Main St ☎ 970/925-2980, 🌐 www.preferredlodging.com. Bright basic rooms in an Austrian-style lodge with hand-carved beams, a few blocks from downtown. Continental breakfast is included in rates. Winter Ⓜ, summer Ⓜ
L'Auberge D'Aspen 435 W Main St ☎ 970/925-8297, 🌐 www.preferredlodging.com. Idyllic little cabins, superbly outfitted with kitchens and fireplaces close to downtown. Winter 7, summer 5

Mountain Chalet 333 E Durant Ave ☎970/925-7797 or 1-800/321-7813, @www.mtchaletaspen.com. Friendly mountain lodge with large, comfortable rooms, pool, hot tub, gym, and fine buffet breakfast. Some dorm-style beds ($40–60) are available in winter, otherwise a variety of straightforward rooms are offered with prices dropping by two-thirds in the off-season. Winter 7, summer 4

Sky Hotel 709 E Durant Ave ☎970/925-6760 or 1-800/882-2582, @www.theskyhotel.com. Funky slopeside hotel with chic 1970s-style decor; the 39° Bar (see p.860) is one of the hippest après spots around. The playful rooms have faux-fur throws, iPod docks, WiFi, and Nintendo. Also has outdoor pool and hot tub, and fitness room. Prices are steep, and even the basic rooms sometimes top $500 per night, though the price includes an evening wine reception. 8

St Moritz Lodge 334 W Hyman Ave ☎970/925-3220 or 1-800/817-2069, @www.stmoritzlodge.com. Five blocks from downtown and Aspen's unofficial youth hostel, the lodge's private rooms and dorms are some of the best bargains in town and hard to get. Facilities include a small heated pool and a comfortable common room. Continental breakfast included in winter. Winter 6, summer 3

The town and the mountains

Despite the virtually limitless recreation opportunities in the mountains, there's not all that much to do in Aspen itself. Even so, hanging out on the benches around the town's leafy pedestrianized streets, or browsing in the chichi stores and galleries is a pleasant way to spend a couple of hours.

In summer, the Aspen Historical Society who run the excellent Wheeler/Stal-lard Museum, 620 W Bleeker St (Tues–Sat 1–5pm; $6; ☎970-925-3254), offers walking tours of Aspen and nearby ghost towns (guided $10, or self-guided, free). The Aspen Art Museum at 590 N Mill St (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; $5, free Fri; ☎970/925-8050, @www.aspenartmuseum.org) holds changing exhibits and puts on lectures and special events, while Aspen Center for Environmental Studies, 100 S Puppy Smith St (Dec–April Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, May–Nov Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; $2; ☎970/925-5756, @www.aspennature.org), is a wildlife sanctuary that offers a range of guided hikes and ski and snowshoe tours (bring your own gear) led by naturalists.

Aspen's four mountains are run by the Aspen Ski Co (☎970/925-1220 or 1-800/525-6200, @www.aspensnowmass.com; snow report ☎1-888/277-3676). The mogul-packed monster of Aspen Mountain, looming over downtown, is for experienced skiers only. On the other hand, Buttermilk is great for beginners, with an excellent ski school that offers a three-day guaranteed “Learn to Snowboard” program, and the wide-open runs of Snowmass, though mostly for intermediate skiers, feature some testing routes. Aspen Highlands has some new high-speed lifts and offers excellent extreme skiing terrain. Daily lift tickets for all mountains cost $78. Rental of skis or snowboard gear runs $20–40 with discounts on multi-day rentals or if booked online a week in advance – you can also rent snowshoes if you want to trek up and down the mountains. However, the town's best value has to be its fifty miles of groomed Nordic ski trails – one of the most extensive free cross-country trail networks in the US. If you don't want to wait for the snow, consider mountain boarding – lessons on these snowboards with wheels are offered by the Ski & Snowboard Schools of Aspen (June–Aug; ☎877/282-7736).

Cycling is the main summer pursuit; Timberline, 516 E Durant Ave (☎970/925-3586 @www.timberlinebike.com), has mountain bikes for hire, organizes tours or can offer sound guidance on routes and difficulty levels. The Roaring Fork River, surging out of the Sawatch Range, is excellent for kayaking and rafting during a short season that's typically over by July. Beware, though, as sections of Class V rapids here are dangerous and every summer sees fatalities. Blazing Adventures, Snowmass Village ($50/half-day; ☎970/923-4544 or 1-800/282-7238, @www.blazingadventures.com) is a good guide choice.

△ Skiing in Aspen, CO

If you fancy walking in the mountains be sure to pick up the free Ute Scout Hiking and Biking Guide, available free from the visitor center. An easy way to quickly get your bearings along with great valley views is to take the Silver Queen gondola from 601 Dean St to the summit of Ajax (early June to early Sept daily 10am–4pm; $20/day, $35/week; ☎970/925-1220), where guided nature walks set off on the hour from 11am to 3pm. Occasional free lunchtime concerts and talks are held up here, and there's a good restaurant as well. Even more alluring is the landscape around the twin purple-gray peaks of the Maroon Bells, fifteen miles southwest, soaring above the dark-blue Maroon Lake. The Bells are reached via the eleven-mile-long Maroon Creek Road, closed between 8.30am and 5pm to all except overnight campers with permits, disabled travelers, bikers, in-line skaters, and RFTA buses, which leave from the Aspen Highlands Ski Area (mid-June to Sept every 20min 9am–4.30pm; $6 roundtrip) and the Rubey Park transit center.

Eating and drinking

Many of Aspen's classy cafés and restaurants charge over $25 for a main course, but good budget places exist and competition is keen. New restaurants open and close with alarming regularity; the list below consists of tried and trusted favorites. Note, too, that many of Aspen's bars serve good, reasonably priced food (see below).

Boogie's Diner 534 E Cooper Ave ☎970/925-6610. Inexpensive 1950s-style diner occupying an airy second-floor atrium lined with vinyl and chrome. The menu includes great meatloaf and killer shakes, but also a few imaginative tofu veggie options too.

Explore Booksellers and Bistro 221

E Main St ☎970/925-5336. Great bookstore with a shady roof terrace, serving creative, high-quality vegetarian food, good espresso, and pastries.

Little Annie's 517 E Hyman Ave ☎970/925-1098.

Lively, popular, and unpretentious saloon-style restaurant serving potato pancakes and hearty stews at lunch, and huge trout, chicken, beef, or rib dinner platters for around $15.

Main Street Bakery Café 201 E Main St ☎970/925-6446. Scrumptious and inventive

New American cuisine, plus an excellent wine list, in a casual, chatty setting. Always busy in the morning for its massive, fresh-fruit-packed breakfasts.

Mezzaluna 624 E Cooper Ave ☎970/925-5882. Mid-priced Northern Italian dishes for lunch or dinner, including wood-fired pizzas.

Takah Sushi 420 E Hyman Ave ☎970/925-8588. Phenomenally good sushi and pan-Asian cuisine, in a buzzing, cheerful atmosphere. Highly recommended but quite expensive.

Hickory House 730 W Main St ☎970/925-2313. Rib house that turns out the best breakfasts in town, from buttery waffles to meaty, southern-style platters. The place packs out for big-screen Monday Night Football when wings are 25¢ and domestic beers $1.

Entertainment and nightlife

Going out in Aspen, the capital of apres-ski, is fun year-round and need not be expensive. Check the free papers for special offers. In summer, downtown hosts several top-notch festivals. The flagship event is the nine-week-long Aspen Music Festival (☎970/925-9042, 🌐 www.aspenmusicfestival.com), between late June and late August, when orchestras and operas feature well-known international performers, as well as promising students who come to learn from musical masters. July and early August see the Dance Aspen Festival (🌐 www.aspenballet.com), which showcases reliably good contemporary shows. Tickets to all events can be purchased at the Wheeler Opera House (☎970/920-5570, 🌐 www.wheeleroperahouse.com), whose program of concerts, plays, and dance performances runs year-round.

39° Lounge 709 E Durant Ave ☎970/925-6760.

The place to be when the lifts close, this chic club and bar with its Seventies aesthetic would be equally at home in Manhattan or Berlin. But amid the geometric curves, low lights, flickering fires, and leather sofas, ski boots tap to DJ-spun ambient beats.

Belly Up 450 S Galena St ☎970/920-6905. cavernous basement venue that hosts everything from big-name bands to calendar-girl contests and has an almost cinema-sized screen for sports events. Not a bad place for a drink on busy nights, otherwise you tend to rattle around in the space.

J-Bar Hotel Jerome, 330 E Main St ☎970/920-1000. This grand bar is a good place to soak up the hotel's atmosphere and rub elbows with the well-heeled hotel guests.

Red Onion Cooper St Mall ☎970/925-9043.

Aspen's oldest bar, serving big portions of Mexican food and good burgers. A popular apres-ski spot, especially for its lethal line in jello shots.

Shooter's Saloon 220 S Galena St ☎970/925-4567.

Rowdy and raucous Country & Western bar with pool tables, dance floor, and frequent Eighties nights.

Woody Creek Tavern Upper Never Rd, Woody Creek ☎970/923-4585. Locals' bar where ranch hands and rock stars shoot pool, guzzle fresh lime-juice margaritas, and eat good Tex-Mex. The bar is in tiny Woody Creek, seven miles north of Aspen along Hwy-82.

Vail

Compared to most other Colorado ski towns, VAIL, 96 miles west of Denver on I-70, is a new creation: only a handful of farmers lived here before the resort was opened in 1952. Built as a relatively unimaginative collection of Tyrolean-style chalets and concrete-block condos, at least the town is a compact and pedestrian-friendly place, albeit pockmarked by pricey fashion boutiques and high-priced, often painfully pretentious restaurants. Vail Resorts, which operates the ski area at Vail, also owns an even more exclusive gated resort, Beaver Creek, eleven miles farther west on I-70. Tickets between the two are interchangeable, which – given the exceptional quality of the snow, and the sheer size and variety of terrain available – produces a formidable winter sport destination. In summer, you can use the lifts at both resorts to go mountain biking – best at Vail, given its former World Cup Downhill and cross-country courses (lifts run mid-June to Aug daily 10am–4.30pm; $29); and hiking – best at the quieter Beaver Creek.

Practicalities

From Denver International Airport, several companies offer shuttles to Vail and Beaver Creek, including Colorado Mountain Express ($73 per person one-way; 3hr; ☎ 970/926-9800 or 1-800/525-6363, 🌐 www.cmex.com). More convenient but more expensive are flights to Eagle County Regional Airport (☎ 970/524-9490), 35 miles west of Vail. Ground transportation from the airport to either resort is just $3 on public buses (9 daily; 1hr), while the Airlink Shuttle (☎ 970/845-7119 or 1-800/554-8245, 🌐 www.airlinkshuttle.com) charges $39 per person.

Vail spreads for eight miles along the narrow valley floor, with successive nuclei from east to west at Vail Village, Lionshead, Cascade Village, and West Vail. Each is pedestrianized and linked by free shuttle buses to one another and to the lifts. Central parking lots are free in summer but steeply priced in winter. Vail Buses (6am–2am; ☎ 970/477-3456) also run regular free shuttles year-round between different areas of town; schedules are printed in the Vail Valley magazine.

For information on skiing and accommodation, contact the Vail Valley Tourism & Convention Bureau (☎ 970/476-1000 or 1-866/362-8245, 🌐 www.vailalways.com) who will reserve rooms, organize transportation and ski packages, and have a website dedicated to cut-price last-minute bookings (🌐 www.vailonsale.com). Finding an affordable place to stay can be a problem. By Vail standards at least, the condos in Avon, just below Beaver Creek, are inexpensive. Rates in Vail Village, the main social center, are higher; try Tivoli Lodge (☎ 970/476-5615 or 1-800/451-4756 🌐 www.tivolilodge.com; winter 7, summer 5), where rates include a continental breakfast and use of an outdoor pool, whirlpool, and sauna; or the Roost Lodge, 1783 N Frontage Rd, West Vail (☎ 970/476-5451 or 1-800/873-3065, 🌐 www.roostlodge.com; 5) a drab motel with outdoor hot tub that's generally Vail's cheapest accommodation option. To live it up check into the seamless Sonnenalp Resort 20 Vail Rd Village (☎ 970/476-5656 or 1-800/654-8312, 🌐 www.sonnenalp.com; 9), a luxury hotel straight out of a snowy European Christmas card, bang in the center of Vail with a full complement of facilities and an excellent spa. The Eagle River Inn, 145 N Main St (☎ 970/827-5761 or 1-800/344-1750; winter 7–8, summer 5), is a B&B decked out in tasteful Santa Fe style in the hamlet of Minturn, seven miles south of Vail on US-24.

Eating out can also prove expensive. Elegant Vendetta's, 291 Bridge St in Vail Village (☎ 970/476-5070), offers fine Italian lunch specials and pasta dinners (around $15), while the best-value feed is to be had at La Cantina (☎ 970/476-7661), little more than a few tables crammed into a corner of Vail Transportation Center, but the Mexican food is first class and the margaritas seriously potent.

Nightlife revolves around The Circuit on Bridge Street, Vail Village. Most people tour between the bars and discos. The checklist of places to see and be seen includes The Club (☎970/479-0556), a basement bar playing loud rock. Loud music rules upstairs at Vendetta's, the ski patrol hangout; but for something completely different try Kaltenberg Castle (☎970/479-1050), the former Lionshead gondola building that's now a massive mock-palace where entertainers wear lederhosen and Bavarian beer is brewed in giant vats.

Glenwood Springs

Bustling, touristy GLENWOOD SPRINGS sits at the end of impressive Glenwood Canyon, 160 miles west of Denver and within easy striking distance of Vail and Aspen and so offering those with their own vehicle a budget base for either. Just north of the confluence of the Roaring Fork and Colorado rivers, the town was long used by the Ute as a place of relaxation thanks to its hot springs, which became the target for unscrupulous speculators who broke treaties and established resort facilities in the 1880s. North from downtown and across the Eagle River is the town's main attraction, the large and somewhat institutional Glenwood Hot Springs Pool, 410 N River St (daily: summer 7.30am–10pm; rest of year 9am–10pm; $12; ☎970/945-6571 @www.hotspringspool.com). More intimate are the natural subterranean steam baths of the Yampah Spa Vapor Caves at 709 E Sixth St (daily 9am–9pm; $12; ☎970/945-0667, @www.yampahspa.com) next door, where you can destress on cool marble benches set deep in ancient caves. Also on the north side of town are the Glenwood Fairy Caves, 508 Pine St (June–Nov; daily, call for tour times; $10; ☎970/945-4228 @www.glenwoodcaverns.com). The caverns extend for two miles, with some chambers reaching a height of fifty feet. There are two sightseeing options here; the regular two-hour Tram/Cave Tour ($18) and the more adventurous four-hour dimly lit Wild Tour ($50; no kids).

Some of the West's most colorful characters came here in the early days, including Dr John R. "Doc" Holliday, a dentist better known as a gambler, gunslinger, and shooter in the gunfight at the OK Corral (see p.957). A chronic tuberculosis sufferer, Holliday came to the springs for a cure but died just a few months later in November 1887, at the age of 35. He is buried on a bluff overlooking the town in the picturesque Linwood Cemetery. In the paupers' section lies the grave of Harvey Logan, alias bank robber Kid Curry, a member of Butch Cassidy's notorious Hole-in-the-Wall gang.

Amtrak trains arrive at 413 7th St, at the end of a scenic route through the canyons, gorges, and valleys of central Colorado. Greyhound, traveling along the less inspiring I-70, stops close to downtown at the Ramada Inn, 124 W 6th St. The visitor center, 1102 Grand Ave (open 24 hours, staffed Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–3pm; ☎970/945-6589) stocks the useful Glenwood Springs Official Guide. Regular RFTA buses link the town with Aspen (daily 6am–10pm; 1hr; $6; call for schedule ☎970/925-8484).

The beatnik HI-Glenwood Springs Hostel, near downtown at 1021 Grand Ave (☎970/945-8545 or 1-800/946-7835), has spacious dorms (beds $12–14), cheap private rooms ($26), plus kitchen facilities, a giant record collection, and a wealth of local knowledge. They also arrange tours and whitewater trips, and are closed from 10am–4pm. Reasonable motels include the First Choice Inn of Glenwood Springs, 51359 6th St (☎970/945-8551 or 1-800/332-2233; ③–④), at the west end of town, which has striking mountain views, a guest laundry, and a free, good breakfast. The Daily Bread Café and Bakery, downtown at 729 Grand Ave (☎970/945-6253), has delicious breakfasts, soups, and salads. Fiesta Guadalajara, 503 Pine St (☎970/947-1670), is a decent family-run Mexican place near the hot springs and offers a huge variety of filling options, with its many combination plates priced around $9. A block away in the Hotel Denver, the Glenwood Canyon Brewpub, 402 7th St (☎970/945-1276), will certainly quench your thirst, with its great hand-crafted microbrews.

Grand Junction

The immediate environs of GRAND JUNCTION, 246 miles west of Denver on I-70, abound with outdoor opportunities, and within a fifty-mile stretch you can trace the transition from fertile Alpine valley to full-blown desert. Another town that sprang into life in the 1880s with the arrival of the railroads, it now makes its living primarily through the oil and gas industries. Although initial impressions are bound to be unfavorable – an unsightly sprawl of factory units and sales yards lines the I-70 Business Loop – the tiny downtown is much nicer, with leafy boulevards encircling a small, tree-lined historic district dotted with sculptures and stores.

Although the Colorado section of Dinosaur National Monument is ninety miles north of Grand Junction along Hwy-139, the town itself holds the superb Dinosaur Valley Museum, 362 Main St (summer daily 9am–5pm; rest of year Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm; $4.50). The museum's collection includes reconstructed reptiles, replica eggs, and casts of footprints and giant bones excavated locally – all helping to create a vivid picture of these beasts. The museum sometimes organizes one- to five-day digs at local sites. The main local attraction around town, however, is the splendid local network of hiking and biking trails and rock climbing sites, in and through parched, rugged, and spectacular desert country. All activities are possible year-round, and are in fact generally more pleasant in the winter months. The only really seasonal activity here is the sampling of Colorado wine and the excellent local peaches; contact the visitor center for information on touring the thirteen wineries in the surrounding Grand Valley.

Particularly enticing for hikers is the remarkable scenery of the Colorado National Monument, just four miles west of Grand Junction. More than two hundred million years of wind and water erosion have gouged out rock spires, domes, arches, pedestals, and balanced rocks along a line of cliffs to form an enthralling painted desert of warm reds, stunning purples, burnt oranges, and browns. The monument has two entrances ($5 day-pass) at either end of the twisting, 23-mile Rim Rock Drive that passes through it (a 39-mile loop from Grand Junction) linking a string of spectacular overlooks with the visitor center at the north end of the park (June–Aug 8am–7pm; Sept–May 9am–5pm; ☎970/858-3617, 🌐www.nps.gov/com). Good short hikes along the way include the one-hour John Otto's Trail, which allows better views of several monoliths. Longer trails like the Monument Canyon Trail get right down to the canyon floor. Climbers should investigate the excellent rock climbing in Unaweep Canyon; back in Grand Junction itself Summit Canyon Mountaineering, 549 Main St (☎970/243-2847), can supply you with the necessary information and gear.

The Grand Junction area, specifically the small town of Fruita to the west, is also a big magnet for mountain-bikers who flock to its smooth, rolling single-track trails. Trail information and rental bikes (front suspension $28 per day) are to be had from Over the Edge Sports, 202 E Aspen Ave (☎970/858-7220), a block east of the roundabout at the center of Fruita.

Amtrak stops at Second Street and Pitkin Avenue. Greyhound buses serve Durango, Denver, and Salt Lake City from 230 S Fifth St. The friendly and insightful visitor center at 740 Horizon Drive (☎ 970/244-1480 or 1-800/962-2547, 🌐 www.visitgrandjunction.com) can provide information on daytime excursions and nightlife. Budget motels on the interstate – such as the dependable Best Western Horizon Inn, 754 Horizon Drive (☎ 970/245-1410; 📍), with pool, spa, and continental breakfast – offer great rates; alternatives include the downtown HI-Grand Junction in the historic Hotel Melrose, 337 Colorado Ave (☎ 970/242-9636 or 1-800/430-4555), where bunks cost $12 and private rooms start at around $30. Daniel's Motel, at 333 North Ave, is basic but cheap and clean, and convenient to downtown (☎ 970/243-1084; 📍). If you want to camp, try the Colorado National Monument's only campground, the basic Saddlehorn Campground where sites go for $8; or pitch a tent anywhere over a quarter of a mile from the road for free.

You can eat inexpensively at the busy Blue Moon Bar & Grill, 120 N 7th St (☎ 970/242-5406), which serves sandwiches, salads, and bar food, or at the excellent Rockslide Brew Pub, 401 Main St (☎ 970/245-2111), offering filling portions of tasty bar food (Alpine burgers $6.50, Cobb salad $6.50) alongside an impressive array of local beers. Breakfast, meanwhile, is best taken at the Main St Café, 504 Main St (☎ 970/242-7225), an authentic 1950s-style diner.

THE ROCKIES

Southeast Colorado

Southeast Colorado

The gently undulating plains of southeast Colorado come as a surprise to travelers expecting the ski resorts and alpine splendor that characterize the rest of the state. Here instead are hundreds of small farming towns and endless acres of grassland, much of which looks as it did 150 years ago, when traders and early explorers crossed the region along the Santa Fe Trail, following the Arkansas River between Missouri and Mexico.

The southeast's most popular destination is the engaging small city of Colorado Springs, which sits at the foot of towering Pikes Peak.

Seventy miles south of Denver on I-25, COLORADO SPRINGS was originally developed as a vacation spot in 1871 by railroad tycoon William Jackson Palmer. He attracted so many English gentry to the town that it earned the nickname of "Little London." Despite sprawling for ten miles alongside I-25, modern Colorado Springs, a bastion of conservatism compared to liberal Denver, still retains much of Palmer's vision, thanks to a high military presence (notably the North American Defense Command Headquarters, or NORAD, deep inside Cheyenne Mountain), fundamentalist religious organizations, the exclusive Colorado College, and a well-to-do Anglo-American community.

Surprisingly, the most popular man-made attraction in Colorado is the United States Air Force Academy, located fifteen miles north of town on I-25 (daily 9am–5pm; free; 🌐 www.usafa.af.mil), where beyond observing cadets in march to lunch in the noon formation there's precious little to see. A small museum outlines the academy's work-hard/play-hard philosophy and its commitment to excellence. More entertaining is the Pro Rodeo Hall of Fame, 101 Pro Rodeo Drive, off I-25 exit 147 (daily 9am–5pm; $6; 🌐 prorodeo.org/hof), where videos and displays explain the sport's various disciplines (calf roping, barrel racing, and the like).

Motorists whisk through the incredible Garden of the Gods, on the west edge of town off US-24 W, without bothering to get out of their vehicles. This gnarled and warped red sandstone rockery was lifted up at the same time as the nearby mountains (around 65 million years ago), but has since been eroded into finely balanced overhangs, jagged pinnacles, massive pedestals, and mushroom formations. The visitor center (daily: summer 8am–9pm, winter 9am–6pm; ☎ 719/634-6666, 🌐 www.gardenofgods.com) at the park's eastern border, has details on hiking and mountain-biking trails.

Practicalities

From Denver International Airport there are a number of inexpensive flights, or you can book the Colorado Springs Shuttle (☎ 719/578-5232 or 1-877/587-3456, 🌐 www.coloradoshuttle.com; $27). Greyhound buses stop at 120 S Weber St downtown. Colorado Springs' visitor center is at 104 Cascade St (daily: June–Aug 8.30am–6pm, Sept–May Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 719/635-7506 or 1-877/745-3773, 🌐 www.experiencecoloradosprings.com). For accommodation, there's the elegant, rustically themed Old Town Guesthouse, 115 S 26th St (☎ 719/632-9194 or 1-888/375-4210, 🌐 www.oldtownguesthouse.com; 📍), where hors d'oeuvres at check-in and a turn-down service are among the many personal touches. In summer, the neat and busy Garden of the Gods Campground, 3704 W Colorado Ave (☎ 719/475-9450), has $40 cabins for two, and a $28 campground.

Appealing places to eat downtown include the excellent Olive Branch, 23 S Tejon Ave (☎ 719/475-1199), for good vegetarian food. The Phantom Canyon Brewing Co, 2 E Pikes Peak Ave (☎ 719/635-2800), is a great place for -microbrews and authentic pub food. Out in Old Colorado City, the family-owned Henri's Mexican, 2427 W Colorado Ave (☎ 719/634-9031), pulls in the crowds with home-style food and superb margaritas. Nearby is one of the area's best bars, Meadow Muffins, 2432 W Colorado Ave (☎ 719/633-0583), festooned with movie memorabilia, and serving good burgers, sandwiches, and salads. It also hosts live music and stays open late (until 2am Fri & Sat).

Pikes Peak and the Royal Gorge Bridge

Though there are thirty taller mountains in Colorado alone, PIKES PEAK, just west of Colorado Springs, is probably the best known – largely because the view from its summit inspired Katherine Lee Bates to write the words to America The Beautiful. The 14,110ft peak was first mapped by Zebulon Pike in 1806, who never climbed it himself. By the end of the century gondola trails had been built to carry rich tourists like Ms Bates to the top. In 1929 it took Bill Williams, a Texan, twenty days and 170 changes of trousers to scale the mountain, pushing a peanut with his nose.

You can reach the top by a long hike, or by a difficult toll road (May–Sept 7am–7pm, Oct–April 9am–3pm; $10/person up to $35/car; ☎ 719/385-7325 or 1-800/318-9505, 🌐 www.pikespeakcolorado.com). The thrilling Pikes Peak Cog Railway (mid-May to Nov; $29, reservations advised; ☎ 719/685-5401, 🌐 www.cograilway.com) grinds its way up an average of 847ft per mile on its ninety-minute journey to the summit; from 11,500ft onward it crosses a barren expanse of tundra, scarred by giant scree flows. From the bleak and windswept top, it's possible to see Denver seventy miles north, and the endless prairie to the east, while to the west mile upon mile of giant snowcapped peaks rise into the distance. The train leaves from 515 Ruxton Ave in Manitou Springs, six miles west of Colorado Springs.

About 45 miles south of Pikes Peak, beside the town of Cañon City – via Hwy-115 and US-50 from Colorado Springs – is the ROYAL GORGE BRIDGE (daily 7am–dusk; $19; ☎ 1-888/333-5597, 🌐 www.royalgorgebridge.com), the world's highest (and rather rickety) wooden suspension bridge that spans a vertiginous 1053ft crack over the roaring Arkansas River. The gorge is the focus of several other attractions, which though quite commercialized, can still terrify you, including an aerial tram, incline railway, and the Skycoaster – a bungee-swing that for $25 will send to reeling over the canyon.

Great Sand Dunes National Park

Fifty square miles of silky shifting sand, the GREAT SAND DUNES NATIONAL PARK huddles against the craggy Sangre de Cristo Mountains, around 170 miles southeast of Colorado Springs along I-25 and Hwy 160. Over millions of years, fine glacial sands have been blown east from the San Juan Mountains and deposited at the base of the Sangre de Cristo range.

A place of strange and eerie beauty, the dunes harbor a number of small, endemic creatures, including the giant sand-treader camel cricket and the small kangaroo rat. Most visitors go little further than the “beach” beside Medano Creek, which runs along the eastern and southern side of the dune mass; but the climb up the dunes themselves, though incredibly tiring, is not to be missed – for the fun slide down (bring your own dune board) as much as for the views of the amazing desolate scenery. A walk along sandy trails, squeezed between the dunes and the mountains, and a night spent out at one of the underused backcountry campsites are also worthwhile.

The visitor center (📍 719/378-2312, 🌐 www.nps.gov/grsa) is three miles beyond the park entrance ($4 per vehicle), behind which lies the Mosca picnic area – the main gateway for exploring the dunes. To pitch a tent on the dune mass itself you’ll need to pick up a free backcountry permit at the visitor center; the permit is also required for the park’s seven primitive backcountry sites ($14). Most campers, however, stay at the large Pinyon Flats Campground ($14), the only site in the park accessible by car and usually crowded with RVs; it’s run on a first-come, first-served basis and is often full in July and August. The Great Sand Dunes Oasis Store, 7900 Hwy-150 N (📞 719/378-2222) just before the monument entrance offers showers, laundry, and arid tent sites ($10), as well as a small number of basic cabins (📍). Behind the store the Great Sand Dunes Lodge (📞 719/378-2900, 🌐 www.gsdlodge.com; 📍), has pleasant rooms with dunes views, an indoor pool, and a restaurant that closes at 7pm. Otherwise, the closest restaurant is thirty miles away in Alamosa, where cheery Mrs Rivera’s, 1019 6th St (📞 719/589-0277), serves excellent Mexican food: great chile rellenos cost only $6.

Southwest Colorado

The high mountain passes of southwest Colorado are classic mining territory; dotted through the valleys you’ll find all sorts of well-preserved late-Victorian frontier towns. As the pioneers moved in, first illegally and then backed by the federal government, they drove the Ute away into the poorer land of the far southwest.

From Durango, the main town of southwest Colorado, the dramatic San Juan Skyway completes a loop of over two hundred miles through the mountains, north along US-550 and then back via Hwy-145 and US-160. The stretch of road north of Durango, negotiating its way over stunning high passes, is known as the Million Dollar Highway for the gold-laden gravel that was used in its construction. Remote Crested Butte, to the north of the San Juan Mountains, is a gorgeous nineteenth-century mining village turned ski resort and one of Colorado’s major attractions.

Durango

DURANGO is the largest town in southwest Colorado and the best hub for exploring the Four Corners region. Such is the attractiveness of the town and surrounding wooded low hills that it has attracted a large influx of long-distance telecommuters. This freelance crowd joins the student populace from Fort Lewis College and the many outdoors enthusiasts who come to ride and hike the area's superb trails, resulting in a town with a youthful, energetic buzz.

The town was founded in 1880 as a refining town and rail junction for Silverton, 45 miles north. Steam trains continue to run along the spectacular old mining route through the Animas Valley, though nowadays tourists, not sacks of gold, are the money-making cargo. The Durango & Silverton Narrow Gauge Railroad runs up to four roundtrips daily (all leave in early morning; $62 roundtrip; ☎ 970/247-2733, 🌐 www.durangotrain.com) between May and October, from a depot at 479 Main Ave at the south end of town. The views from the train as it chugs through huddles of lush aspen are spectacular, framed by the clear Animas River below and rocky outcrops looming above. (The trains are slow, however, so if you want to save time you can take a bus one way to Silverton on the Million Dollar Highway).

Greyhound services between Denver and Albuquerque call in at 275 E 8th Ave. Durango's visitor center, near the train station (summer Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 11am–5pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 8am–6pm, Sat 8am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 970/247-0312 or 1-800/525-8855, 🌐 www.durango.com), has full lists of accommodation, topped by the landmark Strater Hotel at 699 Main Ave (☎ 970/247-4431 or 1-800/247-4431, 🌐 www.strater.com; summer 6–7, winter 4). The innumerable motels north of town along Main Avenue increase their rates in summer; try the good-value Siesta at 3475 Main Ave (☎ 970/247-0741; 2–3), on the northern fringes of town, or the small, comfortable End O' Day Motel, 350 E 8th Ave (☎ 970/247-1722; 3), only a ten-minute walk southeast from downtown. There are plenty of places to eat and drink: Carver's Bakery & Brewpub, 1022 Main Ave (☎ 970/259-2545), opens at 6.30am for breakfast, serves Southwestern lunches and dinners, and keeps buzzing later on in its brewpub role. Steamworks Brewing Co, 801 E 2nd Ave (☎ 970/259-9200), is another good choice for sampling local brews and also has a varied menu.

Silverton

Journey's end for the narrow-gauge railroad from Durango comes at SILVERTON: “silver by the ton,” allegedly. Spread across a small flat valley surrounded by high mountains it's one of Colorado's most atmospheric mountain towns, with wide, dirt-paved streets leading off toward the hills to either side of its one main road. Silverton's zinc- and copper-mining days only came to an end in 1991, and the population has dropped since then, with those that remain generally reliant on the seasonal tourist train; so while the false-fronted stores along “Notorious Blair Street” may remind one of the days when Wyatt Earp dealt cards in the Arlington saloon, the town is defined by the restaurants and gift shops that fill up between 11am and 2pm when tourists are deposited in town.

Outside these hours Silverton is very quiet and offers inexpensive accommodation at the Triangle Motel, 848 Greene St (☎ 970/387-5780, 🌐 www.trianglemotel.com; 3), at the south end of town, which also offers good-value two-room suites and jeep rental. For a little extra cash you can soak in the atmosphere of the Grand Imperial Hotel, 1219 Greene St (☎ 970/387-5527 or 1-800/341-3340; 4–6), in one of its forty creaky, antique-furnished rooms. The thin-walled Silverton Hostel, 1025 Blair St (check-in daily 8–10am & 4–10pm; ☎ 970/387-0115, has $13 dorm beds. For food, there's Romero's, 1151 Greene St (☎ 970/387-0123), an enjoyable Mexican cantina with a menu of tasty, authentic food, plus fantastic salsa.

Ouray

The equally attractive mining community of OURAY lies 23 miles north of Silverton, on the far side of the 11,018ft Red Mountain Pass, where the bare rock beneath the snow really is red, thanks to mineral deposits. The Million Dollar Highway twists and turns here, passing abandoned mine workings and rusting machinery in the most unlikely and inaccessible spots; back roads into the mountains offer rich pickings, for hikers or drivers with four-wheel-drive vehicles.

Ouray itself squeezes into a narrow but verdant valley, with the commercially run Ouray Hot Springs beside the Uncompahgre River at the north end of town. A mile or so south, a one-way-loop dirt road leads to Box Canyon Falls Park (daily 8am–8pm; $3), where a straightforward 500ft trail, partly along a swaying wooden parapet, leads into the dark, narrow Box Canyon. At the far end, the falls thunder through a tiny cleft in the mountain.

The local visitor center (daily 8am–6pm; closed Mon & Tues in winter; ☎ 970/325-4746 or 1-800/228-1876, 🌐 www.ouraycolorado.com) is on the northern edge of town beside the hot springs. At Box Canyon Lodge, an old-style timber motel at 45 Third Ave below the park (☎ 970/325-4981 or 1-800/327-5080; 🍷), you can bathe in natural hot tubs. The luxurious B&B St Elmo Hotel, 426 Main St (☎ 970/325-4951, 🌐 www.stelmohotel.com; 🍷), holds a good restaurant, and the Grounds Keeper Coffee House 524 Main St (☎ 970/325-0550) is a central café serving espresso drinks and healthy light lunches that include a fine veggie lasagna.

Telluride

Lying at the flat base of a bowl of vast steep-sided mountains, TELLURIDE, 120 miles northwest of Durango on Hwy-145, is located in one of the Rockies' most picturesque valleys. In the 1880s the former mining village was briefly home to the young Butch Cassidy, who robbed his first bank here in 1889. These days the town is better known as the home of a top-class ski resort that rivals Aspen for celebrity allure. Happily it has achieved its status without losing its character, exemplified by the low-slung buildings on the wide main street, beautifully preserved as a National Historic District. Healthy young bohemians with few visible means of support but top-notch ski or snowboarding equipment seem to form the bulk of the twelve hundred inhabitants, while most visitors tend to dwell two miles above the town in Mountain Village; the two places are connected by a free year-round gondola service. In summer, the hiking opportunities are excellent; one three-mile roundtrip walk leads from the head of the valley, where the highway ends at Pioneer Mill, up to the 365ft Bridal Veil Falls, the largest in Colorado. Come winter, nearly half the ski terrain in Telluride is geared for experts, with its steep mogul fields particular favorites.

Accommodation is much less expensive in summer than during ski season, though prices do go up for the Bluegrass Festival in June, the Jazz Festival at the beginning of August, and the Film Festival at the start of September. As well as being the town's official information service, Telluride Central Reservations, 666 W Colorado Ave (summer daily 9am–7pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 970/728-4431 or 1-800/525-3455, 🌐 www.telluridemm.com), coordinates lodging and package deals, with free lift tickets for the first month of the season for guests in certain lodges. Skiing comes half-price if you stay in any of seven neighboring towns. Of specific places, the 1895 New Sheridan Hotel, 231 W Colorado Ave (☎ 970/728-4351 or 1-800/200-1891, 🌐 www.newsheridan.com; winter 🍷, summer 🍷), offers surprisingly good rates, a cozy library, and a rooftop hot tub, as well as its own bar and chop house (with vegetarian options). The Victoria Inn, 401 W Pacific Ave (☎ 970/728-6601 or 1-800/611-9893 🌐 www.tellurideinn.com; 🍷), has clean, motel-style doubles.

Honga's Lotus Petal, 133 S Oak St (☎970/728-5134) offers a variety of good pan-Asian entrees from around $12 in stylish surroundings, while Smugglers Brewpub and Grille, at San Juan Avenue and Pine Street (☎970/728-0919), is a lively evening hangout with a wide-ranging menu and some good local brews.

Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park

The BLACK CANYON OF THE GUNNISON NATIONAL PARK, seventy miles southeast of Grand Junction and reachable from US-50 to the south or Hwy-92 from the north, more than lives up to its bleak-sounding name. The view down into the fearsome, black-rock canyon to the foaming Gunnison River below is about as foreboding as mountain scenery gets. Over two million years the river eroded a deep, narrow gorge, leaving exposed cliffs and jagged spires of crystalline rock more than 1.7 billion years old. The aspen-lined road leading to the top of the canyon winds uphill until the trees abruptly come to an end, the road levels out, and the scenery takes a dramatic turn – stark black cliffs, with the odd pine clinging to a tiny ledge in desperation. Snowshoeing and cross-country skiing are possibilities here in winter, while in summer there are good opportunities for fishing, hiking, and advanced-level climbing and kayaking.

The visitor center (open year-round 8.30am–4pm; ☎970/641-2337, @www.nps.gov/blca; $8 per vehicle) on the south rim has details on the two first-come, first-served campgrounds, one on each side of the canyon, as well as information on activities – particularly watersports, hunting and fishing – in the nearby Curecanti National Recreation Area and Gunnison Gorge National Conservation Area.

Crested Butte

The beautiful Victorian mining village of CRESTED BUTTE, 150 miles northeast of Telluride and 230 miles southwest of Denver, almost died off in the late 1950s when its coal deposits were exhausted. However, the development of 11,875ft Mount Crested Butte into a world-class ski resort in the 1960s, and a mountain-bikers' paradise two decades later, means that today it can claim to be the best year-round resort in Colorado. The old town is resplendent with gaily painted clapboard homes and businesses, and zoning laws ensure that condos and chalets are confined to the resort area, behind the foothills three miles up the road. The outdoor opportunities have lured young people here from throughout the West.

In skiing and snowboarding circles the Butte is best known for its extreme terrain, with lifts serving out-of-the-way bowls and faces that would only be accessible by helicopter at other resorts. It's no surprise then that the resort hosts both the US extreme skiing and snowboarding championships. That said, there are plenty of long beginner runs mixed in over the mountain's thousand skiable acres, keeping the slopes accessible to all. Fifteen chair lifts (adult day lift passes $73) link 106 runs, which are usually uncrowded thanks to the resort's isolated location. Cross-country, especially telemark, skiing attracts thousands, and there's snowmobiling too.

In summer, mountain bikes all but outnumber cars around the town, especially during Fat Tire Week in July, one of the oldest festivals in the young sport and one that, according to local legend, evolved from a race over the rocky 21-mile Pearl Pass to Aspen on newspaper bicycles in the 1970s. You can still ride this route – 190 miles shorter than the road – but some of the most exciting trails are much nearer the town and include the gorgeous 401 trail with its wide-open vistas; the thickly wooded Dyke Trail; and the long, varied, and occasionally challenging Deadman's Gulch. The visitor center (see below) can help out with a basic map and route descriptions for the main trails, and local bike shops like The Alpineer, 419 6th St (☎970/349-5210, 🌐www.alpineer.com), offer a selection of rental bikes.

Practicalities

A five-hour drive southwest from Denver along mostly minor highways, Crested Butte is not an easy place to get to, though the roads are almost always open. Most skiers fly in on regular daily flights from Denver, or weekly services from Atlanta, Dallas, and Houston. These touch down at Gunnison Airport, 28 miles and a forty-minute trip to Crested Butte with the Alpine Express Shuttle ($53 roundtrip; ☎970/641-5074 or 1-800/822-4844, 🌐www.alpineexpressshuttle.com). A car is unnecessary once in town; free buses ply the three-mile route between the town and resort every fifteen minutes 7.15am to midnight, while the inexpensive town taxi (☎970/349-5543) does the same route after hours. The visitor center, at Elk Ave and 6th St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎970/349-6438 or 1-800/545-4505, 🌐www.visitcrestedbutte.com), produces a weekly events guide for the area.

The choice of accommodation is between the ski area or downtown; you're likely to flit between the two areas every day, so it's only worth staying at the generally more expensive mountainside lodgings if you're obsessed with getting first tracks. Crested Butte Mountain Resort (☎970/349-2333 or 1-800/544-8448, 🌐www.skicb.com) can book accommodation and advise on money-saving package deals. Be sure to reserve a room in advance during winter.

Among the B&B options, the historic log home of the 🏔️ Claim Jumper B&B, 704 Whiterock Ave (☎970/349-6471; ⑤), with its six themed rooms amid a jumble of Americana, make it one of the most enjoyable in Colorado. The Old Town Inn, Hwy-35 and Belleview Ave (☎970/349-6184; ⑤), offers standard motel rooms beside the main highway at the southern edge of town, and the large and friendly Crested Butte International Hostel, 615 Teocalli Ave (☎970/349-0588 or 1-888/389-0588 🌐www.crestedbuttehostel.com; ①–④), where dorm beds cost $22–35 depending on season (private rooms $55–87).

Crested Butte lays claim to a surprising number of gourmet restaurants, with far fairer prices than those at glitzier resorts. Among the more expensive, Bacchanale, 208 Elk Ave (☎970/349-5257), is an intimate place with a varied Northern Italian menu including good veal and cannelloni. For lower prices and a bit of a livelier atmosphere, try the Powerhouse, 130 Elk Ave (☎970/349-5494), which serves zesty Mexican cuisine in a fondly restored 1880s generating station. The huge wooden bar stocks 65 varieties of tequila.

The early apres-ski center is Rafters, right by the lifts. By early evening most visitors have found their way to downtown, for no-nonsense local bars such as Kochevars and The Talk of the Town. Lobar, 303 Elk Ave (☎970/349-0480), part lounge and part sushi bar, is a hip recent addition to Crested Butte's grungy bar scene. Sink back into a black microsuede sectional sofa to sip a high-end martini.

Mesa Verde National Park

The only national park in the US devoted exclusively to archeological remains, MESA VERDE NATIONAL PARK is set high on a densely wooded plateau off US-160, halfway between Cortez and Mancos. It's so far off the beaten track that its extensive Ancestral Puebloan ruins were not fully explored until 1888, when a local rancher discovered them on his land.

Between the time of Christ and 1300 AD, Ancestral Puebloan civilization expanded to cover much of the area known as the “Four Corners.” Their earliest dwellings were simple pits in the ground, but before they vanished from history they had developed the architectural sophistication needed to build the extraordinary complexes of Mesa Verde. Over centuries, Ancestral Puebloan housing had evolved from pithouses to these spectacular multistory apartments, nestling in rocky alcoves high above the sheer canyons that bisect the southern edge of the Mesa Verde plateau. Why they did so is not clear, though recent evidence suggests that Ancestral Puebloan culture was not quite as peaceful as previously imagined; in any case the soil at Mesa Verde ultimately appears to have been depleted, and they are thought to have migrated into what’s now New Mexico to establish the pueblos where their descendants still live.

Touring the park

The access road to Mesa Verde climbs south from US-160 ten miles east of Cortez. Once past the entrance station ($10 fee per vehicle), the road climbs and twists for fifteen miles to the Far View visitor center (late April to mid-Oct daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 970/529-5036). Exhibits inside cover Navajo, Hopi, and Pueblo crafts and jewelry. Immediately beyond, the road forks south to the two main constellations of remains: Chapin Mesa to the south, and Wetherill Mesa to the west. To tour any of the major ruins you must buy timed tickets at the visitor center ($2.25 for each attraction). On Chapin Mesa, Cliff Palace is usually open between 9am and 5pm daily from late April until early November, and Balcony House for the same hours between late April and mid-October; at busy times, you can’t tour both on the same day. On Wetherill Mesa, generally open late May to early September, tours of Long House operate between 9am and 4pm daily.

Six miles toward Chapin Mesa from the visitor center, the Archeological Museum (daily: April to mid-Oct 8am–6.30pm; mid-Oct to March 8am–5pm) holds the park’s best displays on the Ancestral Puebloans, and also sells tour tickets for the remainder of the season after the visitor center closes in late fall. It’s also the starting point for the short, steep hike down to Spruce Tree House, the only ruin that can be visited in winter – a neat little village of three-story structures, snugly molded into a rocky alcove and fronted by plazas.

Beyond the museum, Ruins Road (April to early Nov daily 8am–dusk) consists of two one-way, six-mile loops. If you’re pressed for time, follow only the eastern one, to reach Cliff Palace, the largest surviving Ancestral Puebloan cliff dwelling anywhere. Tucked a hundred feet below an overhanging ledge of pale rock, its 217 rooms once housed over two hundred people. Even without a tour ticket (see above), you can get a great view from the promontory where tour groups gather, beside the parking lot. Entering the ruin itself, especially on a quieter day, provides a haunting evocation of a lost and little-known world, as you walk through the empty plazas, peer down into the mysterious kivas (circular, stone-lined ceremonial pits) and glimpse fading murals inside some of the structures.

Balcony House, a little further on, is one of the few Mesa Verde complexes clearly geared towards defense; access is very difficult, and it’s not visible from above. Guided tours involve scrambling up three hair-raising ladders and crawling through a narrow tunnel, teetering all the while above a steep drop into Soda Canyon. If you don’t have a head for heights, you might probably give it a miss.

At the end of the twisting twelve-mile drive onto Wetherill Mesa (daily late May to early Sept 8am–4.30pm; excluding large vehicles like RVs), you can catch a free miniature train around the tip of the mesa to the Long House, the park’s second largest ruin, set in its largest cave. Hour-long tours descend sixty or so steps to reach its central plaza, then scramble around its 150 rooms and 21 kivas.

Park practicalities

Mesa Verde gets very crowded in high summer; the best months to visit are May, September, and October. The park is open all year, but most structures are inaccessible in winter, and services such as gas, food, and lodging only operate between late April and mid-October. Most visitors stay in nearby towns; the only rooms in the park itself are at the summer-only Far View Motor Lodge, near the visitor center (☎ 970/529-4421 or 1-800/449-2288, 🌐 www.visitmesaverde.com; 📶), where the balconies have superb views and the absence of phones and TVs makes for a tranquil stay. The lodge's Metate Room restaurant provides fabulous meals featuring buffalo and elk, with sides like beans, flat bread, and roasted corn. Food is also available year-round at Spruce Tree Terrace near the Chapin Mesa museum. You can camp at the pleasant and very large Morefield Campground, four miles up from the entrance (late April to mid-Oct; ☎ 970/529-4421 or 1-800/449-2288; $19–25), and there are also several commercial campgrounds nearby.

Wyoming

Pronghorn antelope all but outnumber people in wide-open WYOMING, the ninth largest but least populous state in the union, with just 509,000 residents. Above all, this is classic cowboy country – the inspiration behind Shane, The Virginian, and countless other Western novels – replete with open range, rodeos, and country-and-western dance halls. The state emblem, seen everywhere, is a hat-waving cowboy astride a bucking bronco.

Well over three million tourists per year head to the state's northwest corner for the simmering geothermal landscape of Yellowstone National Park, and the craggy mountain vistas of adjacent Grand Teton National Park. Between Yellowstone and South Dakota to the east are the helter-skelter Bighorn Mountains, likeable Old West towns such as Cody and Buffalo, and the otherworldly outcrop of Devils Tower.

The meager supply of buffalo in early Wyoming caused fierce intertribal wars and kept the Native American population down to around ten thousand. However, Sioux, Cheyenne, and Blackfoot combined to inflict notable defeats on the US Army before it could clear the way for pioneer settlement in the 1870s. The cattle ranchers and sheep-farming homesteaders who followed engaged in violent range wars over grazing rights to the wiry grasslands.

Unlikely as it may seem, this rowdy state was the first to grant women the vote in 1869 – a full half-century before the rest of the country, on the grounds that the enfranchisement of women would attract settlers and increase the population, thereby hastening statehood. A year later Wyoming appointed the country's first women jurors, and the "Equality State" elected the first female US governor in 1924.

The absence of rivers to irrigate farmland has put a lid on agricultural growth. Any weather-beaten, denim-clad stranger is more likely to be an oil roustabout than a genuine cowboy, mineral extraction having replaced livestock as the mainstay of the economy in the early twentieth century; today the state's coffers overflow with profits from the booming coal, oil, and natural gas industries.

Getting around Wyoming

Greyhound buses operate along I-80 through the south. The rest of the state is covered only patchily by regional bus companies, so having your own car is definitely the best option. Jackson has the state's busiest airport, though flights also go to Casper and Cheyenne. Cycling across northern Wyoming can be great fun, although if you're crossing the Bighorns you'll need to pick your routes carefully, as roads here have incredibly steep gradients.

South and central Wyoming

State capital Cheyenne is the only town of real note in the lower two-thirds of Wyoming. Set in the heart of rich prairie – a surprise after the scrubland, mountain, and desert of most of the region – it has closer economic ties with Omaha or Denver than with the rest of Wyoming. West of Cheyenne, smaller Laramie possesses an agreeable frontier feel, while the spectacular wilderness of the Wind River Range, accessible from Pinedale and Lander, accounts for most of the west-central portion of the state.

Cheyenne

The eastern approach into CHEYENNE, dropping into a wide dip in the plains, leaves enduring memories for most travelers. With the snow-crested Rockies looming in the distance and short, sun-bleached grass encircling the town, the sky appears gargantuan, dwarfing the city's leafy suburbs. A quick walk around reveals a diverse community, shaped by railroads, state politics, and even nuclear arms. When the Union Pacific Railroad reached this site in 1867, soldiers had to drive out the “Hell on Wheels” brigade of gamblers, moonshiners, and hard-drinking gunmen who stayed one step ahead of the railroads, claiming land and then selling it for huge profit before moving on to the next proposed terminal.

Union Pacific's sprawling yards and fine old terminus now mark the eastern edge of downtown, while to the west the city's longstanding military installation was expanded in 1957 to house the first US intercontinental ballistic missile base. Cowboy culture is big here, too, as the ranchwear stores and honky-tonks dotted around town attest. Along with hosting the world's largest outdoor rodeo, the ten-day Cheyenne Frontier Days festival (☎ 1-800/227-6336, 🌐 www.cfdrodeo.com) in late July attracts thousands of people to its concerts with top country stars, parades, chuckwagon races, air shows, and cook-outs. The rest of the year, things are pretty quiet. Sixteenth Street, or Lincolnway, is the retail and entertainment heart of Cheyenne. Five minutes' walk north up leafy Capitol Avenue, the Wyoming State Museum takes a sober look at Wild West history (May–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–4.30pm; Nov–April Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat 10am–2pm; free). The Cheyenne Frontier Days Old West Museum, five minutes' drive from downtown at 4610 N Carey Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $6), is more lighthearted, telling how the railroad came to town, with some great old engines and well-presented temporary exhibits. Much space is devoted to the Frontier Days celebrations, with photos, costumes, and videos evoking the annual frenzy.

Practicalities

Greyhound buses (☎ 307/635-1327) run east and west along I-80 and south to Denver, while Powder River buses (same number) travel through eastern Wyoming to Colorado, Montana, and South Dakota. The companies share the depot at 222 Deming Drive, beside Central Avenue several blocks south of downtown. The visitor center, 121 W 15th St, suite 202 (May–Sept Mon–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10am–4pm; Oct–April Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 307/778-3133 or 1-800/426-5009, @ www.cheyenne.org), has a free detailed map of the city, and operates a two-hour trolley tour of Cheyenne in summer ($10 for adults, $5 for children).

Although places to stay are normally inexpensive, prices double during the Frontier Days festival. Budget motels line West Lincolnway, like the Atlas Motel at no. 1524 (☎ 307/632-9214; $45). There are better rooms downtown in the Plains Hotel, 1600 Central Ave (☎ 307/638-3311; $90–125). Best of the upmarket options is the Nagle Warren Mansion, 222 E 17th St (☎ 307/637-3333 or 1-800/811-2610, @ www.naglewarrenmansion.com; $135), which offers superb bed-and-breakfast in opulent surroundings. Cheyenne has no shortage of diners serving cowboy-sized breakfasts, lunches, and Mexican food; try Los Amigos, 620 Central Ave (☎ 307/638-8591). Sanford's is a lively brewpub with fine food and a mixed crowd, and comedy and live music downstairs.

Laramie and around

LARAMIE lies fifty miles west of Cheyenne on I-80, or slightly further via spectacular Happy Jack Hwy-210, which slices through plains studded with bizarrely shaped boulders and outcrops. At first Laramie seems typical of rural Wyoming, but behind downtown's quaint Victorian facades lurk hard-rocking record stores, day spas, vegetarian cafés, and secondhand bookstores – unusual for rodeo land, and due to the University of Wyoming, whose campus spreads east from the town center. Free museums and sights of interest on campus include the Anthropology Museum, the Museum of Geology, and the Rocky Mountain Herbarium.

The centerpiece of the ambitious Wyoming Territorial Prison State Park, west of town at 975 Snowy Range Rd (May–Sept daily 9am–6pm, call for winter hours; $5; ☎ 307/745/6161, @ www.wyoprisonpark.org), is the old prison. A touch over-restored, it holds informative displays on the Old West and women in Wyoming, and huge mugshots of ex-convicts, among them Butch Cassidy, who was incarcerated here for eighteen months in 1896 for the common crime of cattle-rustling.

Practicalities

Greyhound (☎ 307/742-9663) pulls in at Tumbleweed Express gas station on Bluebird Lane, 2.5 miles east of downtown beside Grand Avenue. The visitor center is at 210 Custer St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/445-5303, @ www.laramie-tourism.org). Rooms are clean and rates are good at the downtown Travel Inn, 262 N 3rd St (☎ 307/745-4853 or 1-800/227-5430; $45). Corona Village, 421 Boswell Drive (☎ 307/721-0167), serves authentic and inexpensive Mexican food, while buzzing Lovejoy's Bar and Grill, at 101 Grand Ave (☎ 307/745-0141), is a friendly student hangout that serves good espresso, bagels, muffins, and lunch specials.

The Medicine Bow Mountains

Just west of Laramie, Hwy-130 dips into the huge wind-gouged bowl of Big Hollow, passes through rustic Centennial, and starts the steep climb up the MEDICINE BOW MOUNTAINS, one of Wyoming's most picturesque drives. Overlooks at the top of the 10,847ft Snowy Range Pass (closed in winter) reveal alpine lakes and meadows, tight against steep mountain faces. Forty-nine miles out from Centennial, sleepy Saratoga is hemmed in by the Snowy and Sierra Madre ranges. The Hobo Hot Springs on Walnut Avenue is a free outdoor pool fed by natural hot springs. Easily the best place to stay is the antique-furnished Wolf Hotel,

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid

Without doubt the two most engaging characters to roam the Rocky Mountains of northern Colorado and southern Wyoming, Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid remain legends not only of the Old West but of a romantic outlaw existence in which breaking the law became an expression of personal freedom. Thanks in large part to the 1969 Hollywood film Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (which starred Paul Newman and Robert Redford), these two former thieves and cattle rustlers continue to cast a long shadow across the Rockies.

Butch Cassidy was born George LeRoy Parker in Beaver, Utah, on 6 April, 1866. Taught the art of cattle-rustling by ranch-hand Mike Cassidy, Parker borrowed his mentor's last name, then picked up the handle "Butch" while working as a butcher in Rock Springs, Wyoming. He pulled his first bank job in Telluride, Colorado, in 1889, and soon found himself in the company of a like-minded group of outlaws known as the Wild Bunch. Among them was one Harry Longabaugh – the Sundance Kid – who picked up his nickname following a jail stint in Sundance, Wyoming. The Wild Bunch were eclectic in their criminal pursuits, and the gang's résumé would include horse-rustling as well as the robbing of trains, banks, and mine payrolls; between them they gave away a fortune in gold to friends and even strangers in need, hence their reputation as latter-day Robin Hoods.

The image of a dashing, philanthropic band of outlaws did not sit well with authorities, who mustered teams of lawmen to go after them. The gang took to laying low through the winter months in Brown's Hole, a broad river valley in remote northwest Colorado, and they were also known to visit the southern Wyoming towns of Baggs, Rock Springs, and Green River. Their saloon excesses were tolerated, though, because at the end of a spree they would meticulously account for every broken chair and bullet hole, making generous restitution in gold. The gang, however, was eventually undone by their own vanity and love of a good time. During a visit to Fort Worth, Texas, five of the men posed for a photo in smart suits and derby hats, looking so dapper that the photographer proudly placed the photo in his shop window where it was seen the following day by a detective from the famous Pinkerton's agency.

Wearied of life on the run, Butch and Sundance sailed for South America in 1902, and were soon trying their hand at gold-mining, while robbing the occasional bank or train. The Hollywood version was true enough to this point, but Butch Cassidy did not die in a hail of bullets at the hands of Bolivian soldiers in 1909 as depicted in the film – although it seems that Harry Longabaugh did. The last say belongs to Josie Morris, an old girlfriend from Butch's Brown's Hole days, who insisted that he came to see her on his return from South America, and claimed furthermore that he died an old man in Johnny, Nevada, some time during the 1940s.

101 E Bridge Ave (☎307/326-5525, 🌐www.wolfhotel.com; 3–5), which has a good restaurant and bar.

Southwest Wyoming

The long and monotonous drive across southern Wyoming on I-80 holds little to delight the eye, though geologists and fossil enthusiasts will be in their element, and it may provide some travelers with their first glimpse of the red-rock scenery of the West.

Rawlins

There would be little reason to stop at the tiny prairie town of RAWLINS, a hundred miles west of Laramie, but for the unmissable Wyoming Frontier Prison, at Fifth and Walnut streets (hourly tours April–Oct daily 8.30am–6.30pm, Nov–March Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; $4.25; ☎307/324-4422). In service until 1981, this huge jail with dark cells, peeling walls, and echoing corridors can make for a creepy experience – not least due to the fascinating anecdotes told with aplomb by the exceptional guides. The darkest moment comes as the gas chamber (in use from 1937 until 1965) is revealed.

Just to the west, the Continental Divide briefly splits into two in the Great Divide Basin. In theory, rain that falls here should remain here, unable to flow toward either ocean – unfortunately virtually all of it evaporates, and the brick-red hell of the Red Desert stretches implacably away to the horizon.

The Wind River range

Roads to Grand Teton and Yellowstone national parks from southern Wyoming skirt the Wind River Mountains, the state's longest and highest range, with some of the Rockies' most beautiful and challenging backpacking terrain. No roads cross the mountains; you can either see them from the east, by driving through the Wind River Indian Reservation on US-26/287, or from the less accessible west, by taking US-191 up from I-80 at Rock Springs.

Wind River Indian Reservation

The 1.7 million acres of WIND RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION occupies a largely forgotten swath of west central Wyoming, overshadowed by the high snowcapped peaks to the west and south. It is the only Indian reservation in Wyoming, and extends roughly seventy miles from the natural spa town of Thermopolis in the east, through arid grasslands and desiccated uranium-rich badlands, to Dubois (see below) in the west, with the rich fishing grounds of the cottonwood-lined Wind River at its heart. The reservation was created in 1863 as a permanent home for the Eastern Shoshone, but due to US government imposition, it soon came to accommodate the Northern Arapaho as well; these days the Arapaho account for more than double the Shoshone population. Near Fort Washakie – named for the centenarian Chief Washakie, who held the Shoshone together throughout the period of white expansion – is the likely grave of Sacagawea, the guide of Lewis and Clark's expedition. Powwows – gatherings that have both spiritual and social significance to Native Americans – are held mainly in summer, and are open to the public. Contact the Shoshone Tribal Cultural Center in Fort Washakie (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 307/332-9106) for details on how to join in.

The friendly one-horse town of LANDER on US-287 makes an appealing base, with a string of cheap motels along Main Street and an excellent B&B at the Art Nouveau-style Blue Spruce Inn, 677 S. Third St (☎ 307/332-8253 or 1-888/503-3311; 🍷). A good place to eat is the locals' favorite, Gannett Grill, 126 Main St (☎ 307/332-8228), serving burgers and pizza.

Dubois

The former logging town of DUBOIS (“dew-boys”), squeezed into the northern tip of the Wind River valley, and an oasis among the badlands, turned to tourism after its final sawmill closed in 1987 (it's got a leg up by being sixty miles southeast of Grand Teton National Park, via the dramatic Togwotee Pass). Dubois is home to the biggest herd of bighorn sheep in the lower 48 states, and celebrates that fact with its National Bighorn Sheep Center, a half-mile northwest of town on US-26/287 (daily: summer 8am–7pm; rest of year 9am–5pm; closed for part of winter; $2; ☎ 307/455-3429, 🌐 www.bighorn.org). Along with running exciting 4WD spotting tours ($25; reservations required), the center contains several dioramas and exhibits on the majestic mascot of the Rockies.

Dubois is a bargain thanks to clean and cheap motels such as the riverside Trail's End, 511 W. Ramshorn St (☎ 1-888/455-6660; ②), and the beautifully restored historic B&B Twin Pines Lodge and Cabins, 218 Ramshorn St (☎ 1-800/550-6332, @ www.twinpineslodge.com; ③). The evening pastime is listening to country crooners in classic Western bars like the Rustic Pine, 121 E Ramshorn St (☎ 307/455-2772), which also serves steaks.

Pinedale

On the western side of the Wind River range and a two-hour drive from Jackson to the north, tiny well-to-do PINEDALE on US-191 offers unrivaled access to the mountains. Once a major logging center, it now attracts second-homeowners and hikers. The excellent Museum of the Mountain Man, 700 E Hennick Rd (May–Sept daily 10am–5pm; rest of the year by appointment only; $5; ☎ 307/367-4101), commemorates the town's role as a rendezvous for fur trappers in the 1830s.

A sixteen-mile road winds east from Pinedale past Fremont Lake to Elkhart Park, from where trails lead past beautiful Seneca Lake and along rugged Indian Pass to the glaciers and 13,000ft peaks; the Pinedale Ranger Station office at 29 Fremont Lake Rd (June–Aug Mon–Sat 8am–5pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 307/367-4326) has information on good hiking routes.

Motels are easily found on the main drag, Pine Street, including the appealing and central Lodge at Pinedale, no. 1054 W (☎ 1-866/995-6343, @ www.pinedalelodge.com; ④), with continental breakfast, indoor pool, and hot tub.

THE ROCKIES

Northeast and north central Wyoming

Northeast and north central Wyoming

Northern Wyoming has more to offer than just a handy route between the Black Hills and Yellowstone. The surreal volcanic monument of Devils Tower, the massive Bighorn Mountains, and the desertscape of the Bighorn Basin are notable natural attractions in a land steeped in the history of Native American wars, outlaw activity, and pioneer hardships. The heavily wooded Bighorns soar abruptly from the plains to over 9000ft; the loftiest peaks, protruding above the timberline, seem bald beside their dark-coated neighbors. The small town of Cody fifty miles east of Yellowstone is one of the more commercialized settlements around here, and worth a stopover for its Western-theme museums.

Devils Tower National Monument

Though Congress designated DEVILS TOWER, in far northeastern Wyoming, as the country's first national monument in 1906, it took Steven Spielberg's inspired use of it as the alien landing spot in Close Encounters of the Third Kind to make this eerie 867ft volcanic outcrop a true national icon. Plonked on top of a thickly forested hill, itself a full six hundred feet above the peaceful Belle Fourche River, it resembles a giant wizened tree stump; but, painted ever-changing hues by the sun and moon, it can be hauntingly beautiful. Sioux legend says the tower was formed after three young girls jumped onto a boulder to escape a vicious bear. They were rescued when the great god, seeing their plight, made the rock rise higher and higher; the bear's desperate efforts to climb up scored the sides of the column.

Four short trails loop the tower, beginning from the visitor center (mid-June to mid-Nov daily 8am–7pm; ☎ 307/467-5283) at its base, three miles from the main gate. The entrance fee per car (good for seven days) is $10, and until October you can camp for $12 a night – arrive early or you'll end up paying more than twice that at one of the nearby commercial campgrounds.

Buffalo

Snuggled among the southeastern foothills of the Bighorn Mountains, quiet, attractive BUFFALO remains largely unaffected by the bustle of the nearby I-90/I-25 intersection. Although Main Street, now lined with frontier-style stores, used to be an old buffalo trail, the place was actually named after Buffalo, New York. The Jim Gatchell Museum, 100 Fort St (May to mid-Nov daily 9am–6pm; $4), stacked full of Old West curiosities pertaining to soldiers, ranchers, and Native Americans, is well worth a visit.

Pick up information from the visitor center, 55 N Main St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 307/684-5544, 🌐 www.buffalowyo.com). The historic Mansion House Inn, 313 N Main St (☎ 307/684-2218, 🌐 www.mansionhouseinn.com; 🍷), offers impressive B&B and motel rooms at bargain rates that include continental breakfast.

Through the Bighorn Mountains

Of the three scenic highways through the Bighorn Mountains, US-14A from Burgess Junction, fifty miles west of Victorian Sheridan, is the most spectacular. The road, typically closed Nov–May due to snow, edges its way up Medicine Mountain, on whose windswept western peak the mysterious Medicine Wheel – the largest such monument still intact – stands protected behind a wire fence. Local Native American legends offer no clues as to the original purpose of these flat stones, arranged in a circular “wheel” shape with 28 spokes and a circumference of 245ft – though the pattern suggests sun-worship or early astronomy. To get there, you'll have to drive along a precipitous dirt track (past an incongruous radar dome) to within a mile of the site and hike the rest of the way.

The route down the highway's west side, with gradients of ten to twenty percent, is said to have cost more to build per mile than any other road in America. Tight hairpin bends will keep drivers' eyes off the magnificent overlooks, but the best view comes near the bottom, when the road lets you out into the Bighorn Basin. This ultra-flat, sparsely vegetated valley, walled in by mighty mountains on three sides and ragged foothills to the north, can strike you as a land that time forgot.

Bighorn Canyon National Recreation Area

Before US-14A gets to Lovell, Hwy-37 turns north to the Bighorn Canyon National Recreation Area, an unexpected red-rock wilderness straddling the Wyoming-Montana border. No road runs the full length of the canyon which, since being flooded by the 525ft Yellowtail Dam, has become the preserve of watersports enthusiasts. In summer, boat tours leave from Horseshoe Bend, where the marina (☎ 307/548-7230) rents out assorted equipment, and a shadeless beach of red sand offers swimming in the most bizarre of settings. A visitor center just east of Lovell on US-14A (daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 307/548-2251) supplies information on local activities and has maps of the Medicine Wheel area.

Cody

Plenty of pick-up trucks cruise the streets of CODY, the “rodeo capital of the world,” 79 miles east of Yellowstone along US-14 and the North Fork of the Shoshone River. The town was the brainchild of investors who, in 1896, persuaded “Buffalo Bill” Cody to get involved in their development company,

Buffalo Bill

The much-mythologized exploits of William Frederick “Buffalo Bill” Cody, born in Iowa in 1846, began at the age of just eleven, when the murder of his father forced him to take a job on a wagon train. An early escape from ambush brought Cody fame as the “Youngest Indian Slayer of the Plains”; four years later, he became the youngest rider on the Pony Express, averaging a blazing 15mph on his leg of the legendary mail route. After a stint fighting for the Union, Cody found work – and a lifelong nickname – supplying buffalo meat to workers laying the transcontinental railroad. He claimed to have killed over 4200 animals in just eighteen months, before rejoining the army in 1868 as its chief scout.

By the 1870s, exaggerated accounts of Cody’s adventures were appearing back east in the “dime novels” of Ned Buntline, and with the Indian Wars all but over he took to guiding Yankee and European gentry on buffalo hunts. The theatrical productions he laid on for his rich guests developed into the world-famous Wild West Show. First staged in 1883, these spectacular outdoor carnivals usually consisted of a re-enactment of an Indian battle such as Custer’s Last Stand, featuring Sioux who had been present at Little Bighorn, trick riders, buffalo, clowns, and exhibition shooting and riding by the man himself. The show spent ten of its thirty years in Europe, and dressed in the finest silks and sporting a well-groomed goatee, Cody stayed in the grandest hotels and dined with heads of state; Queen Victoria was so enthusiastic in her admiration that rumors circulated of an affair between them.

In later life, a mellowing Cody played down his past activities, to the point of urging the government to respect all Native American treaties and put an end to the wanton slaughter of buffalo and game. Although the Wild West Show was reckoned to have brought in as much as one million dollars per year, his investments failed badly, and, in January 1915, a penniless 69-year-old Buffalo Bill died at his sister’s home in Denver. His grave can be found atop Lookout Mountain, outside Golden, Colorado (see p.842).

knowing his approval would attract homesteaders and visitors alike. During summer, tourism is big business, but underneath all the Buffalo Bill-linked attractions and paraphernalia, Cody manages to retain the feel of a rural Western settlement.

The wide, dusty main thoroughfare, Sheridan Avenue, holds souvenir and ranchwear shops and is the scene of parades and rodeos during the annual Cody Stampede (☎ 1-800/207-0744, 🌐 www.codystampederodeo.com), held on the weekend of July 4. Between June and August there’s a rodeo every night at the open-air stadium on the road to Yellowstone, at 421 W Yellowstone Ave (8pm; $16; ☎ 307/587-5155).

By the rodeo grounds is Historic Trail Town, 1831 DeMaris Drive (May–Sept 8am–8pm; $8), a collection of buildings dating from between 1879 and 1901 and salvaged from the surrounding region; among them are cabins and saloons frequented by Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, and Curly, the Crow scout of George Custer. The remains of famed mountain man Jeremiah Liver Eatin’ Johnston are also buried here.

Buffalo Bill Historical Center

The nation’s most comprehensive collection of Western Americana, Cody’s Buffalo Bill Historical Center at 720 Sheridan Ave comprises five distinct museums (June to mid-Sept daily 7am–8pm; mid-Sept to Oct daily 8am–5pm; Nov–March Tues–Sat 10am–3pm; April daily 10am–5pm; May daily 8am–8pm; ☎ 307/587-4771, 🌐 www.bbhc.org; $15).

At the Buffalo Bill Museum, artifacts from William Cody's various careers, such as guns, gifts from European heads of state, billboards, clothes, and dime novels, trace the years of the Pony Express, Civil War, Indian Wars, and Wild West shows. The lives of western Native Americans are celebrated in the Plains Indian Museum: many of the ceremonial garments are in stunning condition. A superb bear-claw necklace is a standout, and there's also a poignant display of Ghost Dance shirts, worn for the ritual song and dance that would hasten the day when all whites would be buried by a heaven-sent fall of soil. The US Army condemned Ghost Dances as unacceptable shows of resistance, and mobilized troops to disrupt ceremonies.

In the Whitney Gallery of Western Art, the contrasting styles of Frederic Remington and Charles M. Russell command the most attention. The propagandist Remington dwells on conflict, depicting the Indian as a savage in the path of progress, while Russell's work shows a consistent respect for the Native American way of life. The largest known collection of American-made firearms in the world is housed in the Cody Firearms Museum, while the Draper Museum of Natural History is lined with interactive exhibits and beautifully laid-out stuffed animal displays, all working to highlight the geology, wildlife and human presence in the Greater Yellowstone region.

For information and accommodation reservations, contact Cody's visitor center at 836 Sheridan Ave (June–Sept Mon–Fri 8am–6pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10am–3pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎307/587-2297, 🌐www.codychamber.org). Cody Trolley Tours (☎307/527-7043, 🌐www.codytrolleytours.com; $15) offer corny hour-long tours of town, and whitewater rafting trips on the Shoshone are run by Wyoming River Trips (☎307/587-6661; $25–50).

Cody's showpiece Western hotel, the Irma at 1192 Sheridan Ave (☎307/587-4221 or 1-800/745-4762, 🌐www.irmahotel.com; 📍4–6), was named for Buffalo Bill's daughter in 1902, and retains a superb original cherrywood bar, a gift to Buffalo Bill from Queen Victoria. Among good-value motels, the friendly Rainbow Park Motel, 1136 17th St (☎307/587-6251 or 1-800/710-6930, 🌐www.rainbowparkmotel.com; 📍3–4) stands out. Sheridan Avenue is the place for eating and entertainment: after a steak at the always-packed restaurant at the Irma hotel (see above), call in for a drink at the Proud Cut Saloon, at no. 1227. You may need a cowboy hat to feel comfortable at Cassie's, 214 Yellowstone Ave, where entertainment ranges from line-dancing classes to country-rock bands. Peter's Café Bakery, at 1219 Sheridan Ave, is the morning place for coffee or a full breakfast.

Wapiti Valley

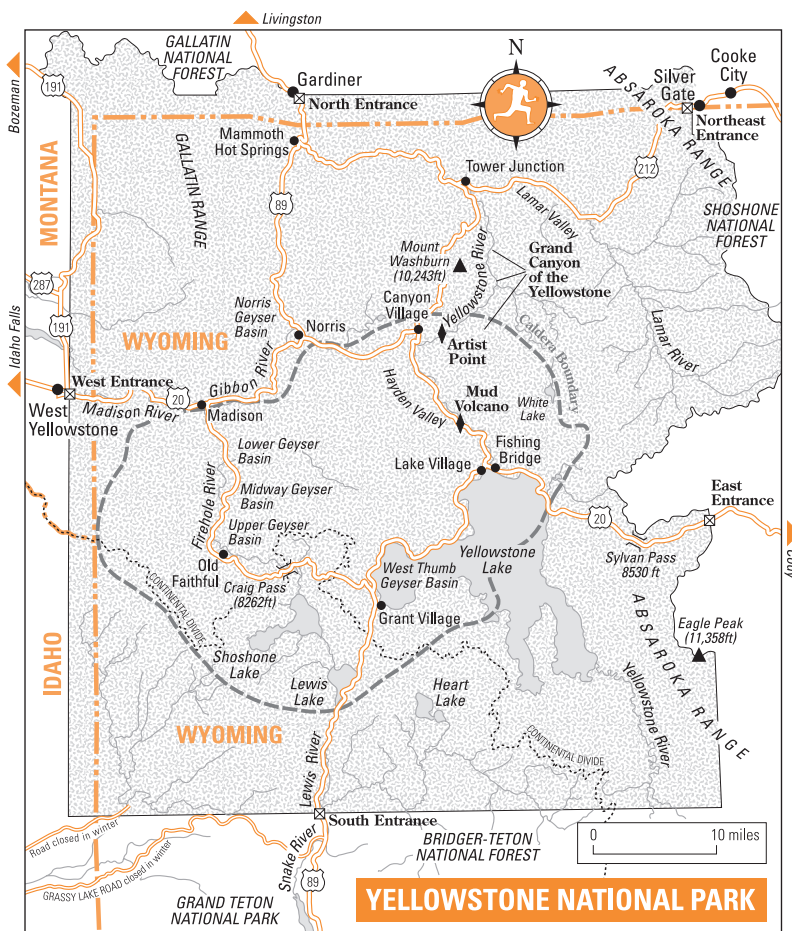

The hour-long drive west from Cody to Yellowstone is a superb preparation for the park itself, skirting the artificial lake created by the Buffalo Bill Dam before running alongside the Shoshone River through the open, high Wapiti Valley, the heart of Wyoming's "beef country." You'll pass fantastical rock formations that'll have you thinking you stumbled upon the set of a psychedelic Spaghetti Western. Lodges and campgrounds appear at intervals without spoiling the magnificent landscape of the surrounding Shoshone National Forest.

Yellowstone National Park

Millions of visitors arrive yearly at YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, America's oldest national park, to glory in its magnificent mountain scenery and abundant wildlife, and to witness hydrothermal phenomena on a grand scale. Measuring roughly sixty by fifty miles, and overlapping slightly from Wyoming's northwestern corner into Idaho and Montana, the park centers on a 7500ft-high plateau, the caldera of a vast volcanic eruption that occurred a mere 600,000 years ago. Into it are crammed more than half the world's geysers, plus thousands of fumaroles jetting plumes of steam, mud pots gurgling with acid-dissolved muds and clays, and hot springs.

For many visitors, Yellowstone amounts to an extraordinary experience, combining the colors of the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone, massive Yellowstone Lake, wild flower-filled meadows, and the rainbow-hued geyser pools; the sounds of subterranean rumblings, belching mud pools, and steam hissing from the mountainsides; and the constant smells of drifting sulfurous fumes, with the presence of shambling bears, heavy-bearded bison, herds of elk, and more than a dozen wolf packs on the prowl. If you let yourself get frustrated by the inevitable crowds and expense, you risk missing something very special. The key to appreciating the park is to take your time, and to plan carefully; above all, try to allow for a stay of at least three days.

Two of the five main entrances to Yellowstone are in Wyoming, via Cody in the east and Grand Teton National Park to the south. The others are in Montana: West Yellowstone (west), Gardiner (north), and Cooke City (northeast). Most roads are open from early May to October only (see box, below). Admission ($25 per car, $12 for pedestrians or cyclists) is good for seven days, and includes entry to Grand Teton (p.887).

Park headquarters are at Mammoth Hot Springs, near the north entrance (daily late May to early Sept 8am–7pm, rest of year approximately 9am–5pm; ☎307/344-2263). Consult the free newspaper Yellowstone Today for activities and current regulations. Other, summer-only visitor centers are located approximately every twenty-five miles along the main Loop Road. Most issue backcountry hiking permits, and host an exhibit on a different aspect of the park. Excellent National Park Service leaflets (50¢ each), which can be found at major sights as well as visitor centers, cover the important landmarks, marking trails and points of interest. The nonprofit Yellowstone Association (☎307/344-2294, 🌐www.yellowstoneassociation.org) is an invaluable resource, especially their long list of highly recommended tours and seminars ranging from wolf watching to essay writing.

A car is virtually essential to properly visit Yellowstone. To get to the park by bus, Karst Stage, Inc. (☎406/556-3540 or 1-800/287-4759, 🌐www.karststage.com; reservations essential) runs shuttle buses from the Bozeman airport to Gardiner and Mammoth. Several companies offer hurried tours of the park from the inside the park or the gateway towns; these include Xanterra (🌐www.travelyellowstone.com), West Yellowstone's Buffalo Bus Tours (☎1-800/426-7669, 🌐www.yellowstonevacations.com), and Jackson's Gray Line (☎1-800/443-6133, 🌐www.graylinejh.com).

Accommodation in the park

Accommodation within Yellowstone is run by Xanterra (☎307/344-7311, 🌐www.travelyellowstone.com). Reservations, strongly recommended from

Winter in Yellowstone

Blanketed in several feet of snow between November and April, Yellowstone takes on a new appearance in winter: a silent and bizarre world where waterfalls freeze in mid-plunge, geysers blast towering plumes of steam and water into the cold, crisp air, and buffalo, beards matted with ice, stand around in huddles. Only the fifty-mile road from Gardiner to Cooke City via Mammoth Hot Springs is kept open (the Beartooth Highway is closed), and you can only stay at the Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel or the Old Faithful Snow Lodge (accessible only by snowcoach and snowmobile).

It's undeniably cold, and transportation can require some hefty pre-planning, but crowds are non-existent and wildlife-spotting opportunities are superb. Xanterra (☎307/344-7311, 🌐www.travelyellowstone.com) runs snowcoach trips and tours of the park over the closed roads from West Yellowstone, Flagg Ranch at the southern entrance, Old Faithful and Mammoth Hot Springs ($50–135). Snowmobile rental, generally cheapest in West Yellowstone, costs around $120 a day (note that only a limited number of snowmobiles is allowed in the park at any one time, so reserve ahead). Much less expensive is cross-country skiing and snowshoeing, with groomed or blazed trails throughout the park; contact Xanterra for rental and tour information.

June through September, are essential over public-holiday weekends. Every location has a lodge building offering dining facilities (closing at 9.30pm) and sometimes a laundromat, grocery store, and gift shop.

Canyon Lodge and Cabins Plain hotel rooms ($150) along with simple frame cabins ($60–130), all en-suite, half a mile from the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone. ③–⑥

Grant Village Spartan en suite motel rooms on the southwest shore of Yellowstone Lake, and the southernmost indoor accommodation in the park. ⑤

Lake Yellowstone Hotel and Cabins Grand Colonial-style hotel rooms and dark, dingy en-suite cabins ($110). The “Sun Room,” looking over the lake, is a great place for an evening drink. ⑥–⑧

Lake Lodge Cabins Nearly 200 en-suite cabins, the cheapest with one double bed, while others have two doubles and can accommodate four people. ③–⑤

Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel & Cabins 1930s lodging right at the north end of the park offering very basic cabins (③), without shower or toilet, en-suite cabins, and hotel rooms and suites with or without bath. Especially popular in winter. ⑤–⑧

Old Faithful Inn and Lodge One of the most beautiful lodges in the US. Recently refurbished, the amazing 1903 inn – said to be the world’s largest log building – has assorted rooms, plus budget and en-suite cabins. You can watch Old Faithful erupt from the terrace bar. Rates range ④–⑨

Old Faithful Snow Lodge and Cabins Along with Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel, this is the only accommodation open in the winter. Built in 1998, the lodge rooms have a modern hotel feel about them (⑦), while the en-suite cabins (④–⑤) are attractive and well sealed against the cold. Open May to mid-Oct & mid-Dec to early March.

Roosevelt Lodge Cabins Over 80 rustic cabins a short drive from the Lamar Valley. The most basic cabins (③) are little more than wooden shelters with two beds and a wood-stove, sharing communal bathroom facilities; en-suite cabins feature motel-like accommodation (④).

Accommodation in gateway towns

In addition to Jackson (see p.889) and Cody (p.878) in Wyoming, the small towns just outside the park’s western and two northern gates offer somewhat cheaper lodging. West Yellowstone, the largest town, is disfigured by gift stores and fast-food joints, but the surrounding national forest lands are well worth exploring. Friendly Gardiner lies just five miles from Mammoth Hot Springs. Less developed, the one-street town of Cooke City is three miles from the isolated northeast entrance on US-212.

Elkhorn Lodge 103 Main St, Cooke City ☎ 406/838-2332, www.bearotooths.com/elkhorn. Two cabins and six motel rooms are rented at this centrally located lodge, all with full bath, TV, mini-fridges, microwaves and coffeemakers. ③

 Headwaters of the Yellowstone B&B Hwy-89, 3.5 miles north of Gardiner ☎ 1-888/848-7220, www.headwatersbandb.com. A fantastic B&B on the banks of the Yellowstone River. The five guest rooms each have their own private bathroom, and two cabins – one sleeping up to four, the other up to six – make a great deal. ⑤–⑦

Madison Hotel and Hostel 139 Yellowstone Ave, West Yellowstone ☎ 406/746-7745 or 1-800/838-7745, www.wyellowstone.com/madisonhotel. One of the few hostels in the region. The attractive log-hewn building dates back to 1912 and has bunk-rooms for up to four people ($26 each). Motel rooms are in a separate building. Open late May to early Oct. ③–⑤

lowlodge.com. A dozen attractive log cabins with kitchens and a basic continental breakfast, plus a fly-tying bench and guide service for anglers. Good value, no in-room phones (phone available in office). ④

Three Bears Lodge 217 Yellowstone Ave, West Yellowstone ☎ 406/646-7353 or 1-800/646-7353, www.three-bear-lodge.com. Large motel housing 75 good-sized rooms and two-bedroom family units (sleeping six) for $100 more. On site amenities include Internet, outdoor pool, indoor hot tub, The Bears Den cinema, and a friendly diner. Open year-round, with some of town’s best snowmobile packages. ⑤

Yellowstone Village Inn 1102 Scott St, Gardiner ☎ 406/848-7417, www.yellowstonevinn.com. On the edge of town, this high-end motel has 43 tidy rooms, most themed around wildlife or Western Americana, including a John Wayne room. High season runs from mid-June to mid-September, with rates halved from October through mid-May. ③–④

Camping

Xanterra operates five of the twelve campgrounds in Yellowstone, including one for RVs only. The other seven operate on a first-come, first-served basis; you have to arrive early in the day to get a site during June, July, and August, as most are full by 11am. It might be worth booking your first night at one of the reservation-only sites (☎ 307/344-7311, same-day reservations ☎ 307/344-7901, 🌐 www.travelyellowstone.com) – Bridge Bay, Canyon, Grant Village, Madison, and Fishing Bridge – just to make sure there's a place for you on the day you arrive. Fees range from $12–17 per night for tent camping, and upwards of $30 for RVs, and campgrounds operate from mid-May or early June through to September, October, or November (only Mammoth's campground is open in winter). Though all campgrounds have toilet facilities, not all have showers. RV owners should note that generators are not allowed at the following campgrounds: Indian Creek, Lewis Lake, Pebble Creek, Slough Creek, and Tower Fall.

To camp in the backcountry, you'll need a permit – free from visitor centers, information stations, and ranger stations; these can be collected no earlier than 48 hours in advance of your camping trip. You can also camp at commercial grounds in the gateway towns and in neighboring national forests such as Gallatin (☎ 406/848-7375) to the northwest and Shoshone (☎ 307/527-6291) to the east.

Eating in the park

Snack bars and restaurants inside the park aren't cheap, but given where you are they're not hideously expensive either. Buying food at the general stores can get pricey, though. There's not a lot of menu variation among the restaurants, which are located at Old Faithful Inn, Old Faithful Snow Lodge, Lake Yellowstone Hotel, Roosevelt Lodge, Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel, Canyon Lodge, and Grant Village; however, the first three are the clear standouts for location, mood, and ambiance. Entrees ($12–30) run from salmon to steak to roast dinners and lighter choices such as burgers or Caesar salads. Desserts and a basic range of beers and wines are available too. The restaurants are also open for breakfast and lunch; they usually offer a breakfast buffet that includes fresh fruit, cereals, pastries, and standard cooked items, all for around $7. More workaday cafeterias are dotted around the park as well, as are soda fountains inside several of the general stores where burgers and fries along with ice cream and shakes are served to rows of customers on stools.

Eating in the gateway towns

The gateway towns hold few culinary delights, but do offer cheaper prices and more variety. In West Yellowstone, Running Bear Pancake House, 538 Madison Ave (☎ 406/646-7703), is the first place to come for a filling, affordable breakfast, and Bullwinkles, 19 Madison Ave (☎ 406/646-7974), is tops for lunch and dinner, with huge salads and delicious pan-fried fish. The upbeat Sawtooth Deli (☎ 406/848-7600) on Park Street in Gardiner serves breakfasts and BBQ, while Helen's Corral Drive-Inn on Scott Street, a half-mile west of the 2nd Street bridge, serves the region's best burger. The impossible to miss Beartooth Café is Cooke City's finest eatery throughout the day.

Touring the park

The majority of Yellowstone's top sights are signposted within a few hundred yards of the 142-mile Loop Road, a figure-eight circuit fed by roads from the five entrances. Although the speed limit is a radar-enforced 45mph (important given the number of bison and other massive beasts likely to run in front of your car),

A brief human history of Yellowstone

Although Native Americans had long hunted in what is now Yellowstone National Park, they were here only in limited numbers by the time the first white man arrived in 1807 – John Colter, a veteran of the Lewis and Clark expedition (see also p.897). His account of the exploding geysers and seething cauldrons of “Colter’s Hell” (actually located due west of Cody) was widely ridiculed. However, as ever more trappers, scouts, and prospectors told similar tales, three increasingly larger expeditions set out to chart the region each year beginning in 1869. In 1872, Yellowstone was set aside as the first national park, in part to ensure that its assets were not entirely stripped by hunters and miners, and also to appease railroad interests looking for a new destination to shuttle visitors to.

At first, management of the park was beset by problems; Congress devoted enthusiasm but little funding toward its protection. Irresponsible tourists stuck soap down the geysers, ruining the intricate plumbing; bandits preyed on stagecoaches carrying rich excursionists; and the Nez Percé even killed two tourists as they were chased through the park (see p.915). Congress took the park out of civilian hands in 1886, and put the army in charge. By the time they handed it over to the newly created National Park Service in 1917, the ascendancy of the automobile in Yellowstone had begun.

The conflict between tourism and wilderness preservation has raged ever since. Ecologists now warn that the park cannot stand alone as some pristine paradise, and must be seen as part of a much larger “Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem”; this notional ecosystem encompasses Yellowstone, the Tetons, the Snake River Valley south of Jackson to just over the Idaho border, and the northern Wind River Mountains. In 1995, amid vociferous complaints from local ranchers fearing a subsequent loss of livestock, several packs of wolves were reintroduced to the park. They’ve since made an emphatic comeback, and from the original fourteen animals released, there are now around 150 wolves comprising some fifteen packs roaming the Greater Yellowstone area.

The fires that razed 36 percent of the park in 1988 also brought Yellowstone’s environmental policies into focus. Park authorities considered the burn a natural part of the forest’s eco-cycle, in which 200-year-old trees were cleared to make way for new growth. The scarred mountainsides are slowly but surely recovering, as evidenced by forests of young saplings. The summer of 2003 saw the most fires in the park since 1988, but they left nowhere near as much destruction in their wake.

the traffic makes journey times hard to predict. To get the most out of a visit, even if you’re short of time, choose one or two areas to explore thoroughly. Only in the early morning is cycling bearable or safe; there are only a few mountain-bike trails, all accessible to hikers and horses as well. No trip to the park is complete without at least one trailside hike, be it to a waterfall or backcountry geyser; all the visitor centers have free day-hiking handouts for their areas.

The following account runs clockwise around the Loop Road, from Old Faithful to the Yellowstone Lake area, both of which lie in the southern half of the park.

Geyser country: from Old Faithful to Mammoth Hot Springs

For well over a century, the dependable Old Faithful has been the most popular geyser in the park, erupting more frequently than any of its higher or larger rivals. As a result, a half-moon of concentric benches, backed by visitor facilities including the gigantic log-built Old Faithful Inn, now surround it at a respectful distance on the side away from the Firehole River. On average, it “performs” for the expectant crowds every 78 minutes; approximate schedules are displayed in the nearby visitor center and in the lobby of the inn. The first sign of activity is a soft hissing as water splashes repeatedly over the rim. After several minutes, a column of water shoots to a height of 100 to 180ft, the geyser spurting out a total of eleven thousand gallons.

Two miles of boardwalks lead from Old Faithful to dozens of other geysers in the Upper Basin. If possible, try to arrive when Grand Geyser is due to explode. This colossus blows its top on average just twice a day, for twelve to twenty minutes, in a series of four powerful bursts that climb to 200ft. Other highlights along the banks of the Firehole River, usually lined with browsing bison, include the fluorescent intensity of the Grand Prismatic Spring at Midway Geyser basin, especially breathtaking in the early evening when human figures and bison herds are silhouetted against plumes of mineral spray.

Thirty miles north of Old Faithful, in the less crowded Norris Geyser Basin, two separate trails explore a pallid landscape of whistling vents and fumaroles. Steamboat is the world's tallest geyser, capable of forcing near-boiling water over 300ft into the air; full eruptions are entirely unpredictable. The Echinus Geyser is the largest acid-water geyser known; every 35 to 75 minutes it spews crowd-pleasing, vinegary eruptions of forty to sixty feet.

At Mammoth Hot Springs, at the northern tip of the Loop Road, terraces of barnacle-like deposits cascade down a vapor-shrouded mountainside. Tinted a marvelous array of grays, greens, yellows, browns, and oranges by algae, they are composed of travertine, a form of limestone which, having been dissolved and carried to the surface by boiling water, is deposited as tier upon tier of steaming stone. Also worth visiting here is Fort Yellowstone, two rows of homes and administrative buildings started in 1891.

Tower and the Lamar Valley

The main landmark of Yellowstone's Tower and Roosevelt areas, east of Mammoth Hot Springs, is Mount Washburn, one of the park's highest peaks, whose lookout tower can be reached by an enjoyable five-mile hike or a grueling cycle ride. A more manageable trail leads down to the spray-drenched base of Tower Fall. From Tower Junction, the Northeast Entrance highway wanders east through the meadows of serene Lamar Valley and toward the ice-packed peaks of the Absaroka Mountains; often referred to as "North America's Serengeti" after its abundant wildlife, the Lamar Valley is the scene of daily life-and-death struggles between predators (grizzlies, wolves, mountain lions) and their prey (elk, bison, pronghorn, mule deer).

The Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone

The Yellowstone River roars and tumbles for twenty miles between the sheer golden-hued cliffs of the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone, its course punctuated by two powerful waterfalls: the 109ft Upper Falls and the thunderous Lower Falls, plummeting 308ft. On the south rim, Artist Point looks down 700ft to the river, which swirls between mineral-stained walls. Nearby, Uncle Tom's Trail descends steeply into the canyon, to a spray-covered platform gently vibrating in the face of the pounding Lower Falls. A few miles south, the river widens to meander over tranquil Hayden Valley, one of the finest spots in Yellowstone to watch wildlife from the road.

Yellowstone Lake

North America's largest alpine lake, the deep and (usually) deceptively calm Yellowstone Lake fills the eastern half of the Yellowstone caldera. At 7733ft above sea level it's high enough to be frozen for half the year, and the water remains perilously cold throughout the summer. Rowboats ($10 per hour) and slightly larger outboard motorboats ($45 per hour), along with 22ft ($140 for two hours) and 34ft ($180 for two hours) powerboats can be rented from the Bridge Bay Marina near Lake Village.

At the West Thumb Geyser Basin, north of Grant Village, hot pools empty into the tranquil waters and fizz away into nothing, and it's easy to see why early tourists would have made use of the so-called Fishing Cone by cooking fresh-caught fish in its boiling waters. To the south, the highway leading towards Grand Teton heads past Lewis Lake, the third largest lake in the park, with Shoshone Lake and Heart Lake hidden in the backcountry to the west and east respectively; both are well worth hiking out to.

Grand Teton National Park and Jackson Hole

The classic triangular peaks of GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARK, which stretches for fifty miles between Yellowstone and Jackson, are every bit as dramatic as the mountains of congested Yellowstone. Though not especially high or extensive by Rocky Mountain standards, these sheer-faced cliffs make a magnificent spectacle, rising abruptly to tower 7000ft above the valley floor. A string of gem-like lakes is set tight at the foot of the mountains; beyond them lies the broad, sagebrush-covered Jackson Hole river basin (a “hole” was the pioneers’ term for a flat, mountain-ringed valley), broken by the winding Snake River.

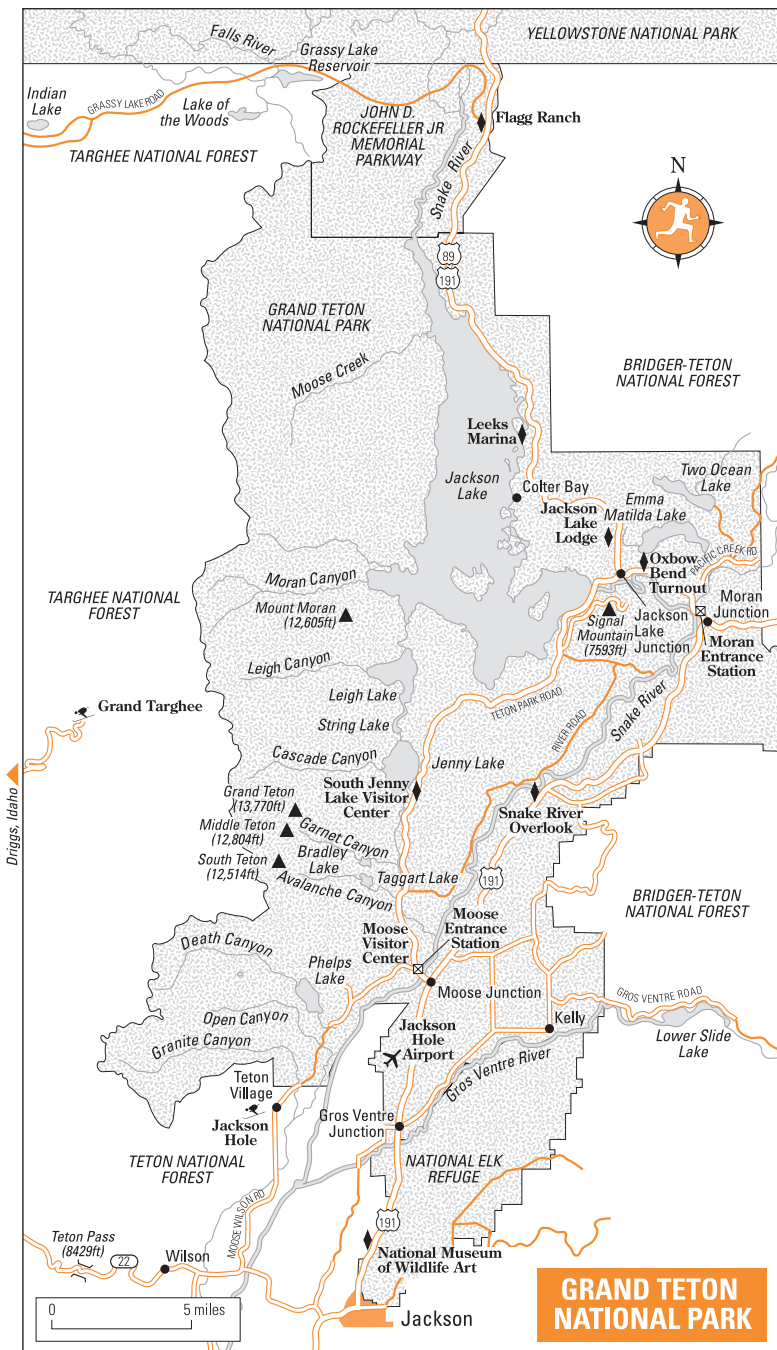

The Shoshone people knew the mountains as the Teewinot (“many pinnacles”), but their present name, meaning “large breast,” was bestowed by over-imaginative French-Canadian trappers in the 1830s. After Congress set the mountains aside as a national park in 1929, it took another 21 years of legal wrangling for Grand Teton to reach its current size – local ranchers protested that the economy of Jackson Hole would be ruined if further land was surrendered to tourism. Meanwhile, John D. Rockefeller Jr bought up large parts of Jackson Hole and presented them to the government for free to convert to parklands. Though canonized today for his preservation efforts – including the creation of the John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Memorial Parkway connecting Grand Teton to Yellowstone in 1972 – Rockefeller was cursed frequently by locals at the time.

Seeing the park

No road crosses the Tetons, but those that run along their eastern flank were designed with an eye to the mountains, affording stunning views at every turn. Two excellent side-trips are the Jenny Lake Scenic Loop, leading to a face-to-face encounter with towering, partly hunchbacked Grand Teton Mountain, and the narrow track up Signal Mountain, which gives a breathtaking panorama including the Tetons and Jackson Hole.

Hiking trails have been laid out so that no time is wasted in getting to the high-lights. One easy and popular walk is along the sandy beaches of Leigh Lake, where the imposing 12,605ft Mount Moran bursts out dramatically from the lake shores. Also accessible are the cascading Hidden Falls, reachable by a two-mile walk along the south shore of Jenny Lake; it's also fun to take the shuttle boat ($7.50 roundtrip) across the lake and walk the remaining eight hundred yards. More adventurous is the rocky nine-mile trail from Hidden Falls through U-shaped Cascade Canyon, which leads to aptly named Lake Solitude.

On the flat roads of the Hole, cycling is a joy; bikes ($25–30) can be rented at Adventure Sports within the Dornan's complex in Moose Junction (☎307/733-3307). To admire the Tetons from water, take a float trip along the Snake River (see p.891) or rent a rowboat from the marinas at Colter Bay or Signal Mountain Lodge. In winter, all hiking trails are open to cross-country skiers, and snow-mobiles can be rented in Jackson. Excellent rock climbing opportunities exist within the park as well; Exum Mountain Guides (☎307/733-2297, @www.exumguides.com) run classes and guided trips from a summer office located steps from Jenny Lake.

GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARK

Practicalities

Handed out at all entrance stations, the free Teewinot newspaper gives details of trails, facilities, and ranger-led activities. The entrance fee of $25 per car ($12 for pedestrians and cyclists) also covers Yellowstone. The visitor centers are just off the main road in Moose (daily 8am–5pm; until 7pm June to early Sept; ☎307/739-3399) to the south, and at Colter Bay (May & mid-Sept to mid-Oct daily 8am–5pm, June to mid-Sept daily 8am–7pm; ☎307/739-3594), halfway up, on the east shore of Jackson Lake. There are smaller centers at Jenny Lake (June–Aug daily 8am–7pm, Sept daily 8am–5pm; ☎307/739-3343) and Flagg Ranch (June to early Sept 9am–4pm; ☎307/543-2327). The free Indian Arts Museum within the Colter Bay Visitor Center has an extensive collection of native craftwork.

The majority of rooms and activities within the park are managed by the Grand Teton Lodge Co. (☎307/543-3100 or 1-800/628-9988, @www.gtlc.com) and reservations are essential in summer. Prices for the comfortable rooms and cottages at Jackson Lake Lodge (7–9) depend on whether or not you want a mountain view; Colter Bay Village Cabins (2–6) are more utilitarian, and in high summer they also have $40 “tent cabins” – canvas cabins each with four bunk beds (bed linen available for hire), a wood-burning stove, and an outdoor barbecue grill. Privately run Signal Mountain Lodge (☎307/543-2831, @www.signalmtnlodge.com; 5–8) has bland motel-style units with two double beds, bathroom, and fridge, or much nicer rustic log cabins with two doubles plus private bath. All of the five summer-only park campgrounds work on a first-come, first-served basis ($15 per site). Visitor centers or entrance stations can advise on availability, or you can call (☎307/739-3603) for recorded information. Individual campgrounds tend to fill in July and August in roughly the following order: Jenny Lake (8am; 51 sites, tents only), Signal Mountain (10am; 81 sites), Colter Bay (noon; 350 sites), Lizard Creek (2pm; 60 sites), and Gros Ventre (evening; 360 sites). For backcountry camping, you need a permit, available free from the Moose and Colter Bay visitor centers and the Jenny Lake Ranger Station, near the Jenny Lake Visitor Center.

The park restaurants and snack bars, especially at Jackson Lake Lodge, are good but a little pricey. Within the Dornan’s complex in Moose, the Pizza Pasta Company (☎307/733-2415) serves good pizzas and salads, best chased down with a bottle from the extensive wine shop next door. For the ultimate in relaxation, have an early-evening drink in Jackson Lake Lodge’s Blue Heron Lounge, where you can recline in comfortable chairs and watch the ever-changing blues, grays, purples, and warm pinks of a sunset over the Tetons through huge picture windows.

Jackson

More Mild West than Wild West thanks to an overflow of art galleries and high-end hotels, JACKSON is an enjoyable base, tucked in at the end of Jackson Hole, five miles from Grand Teton National Park’s southern entrance. Centered around a tree-shaded square that’s marked by an arch of tangled elk antlers at each corner, the Old West-style boardwalks of downtown front boutiques, galleries, and a wide range of restaurants and bars. Every summer evening, an amateurish shoot-out is staged in the town square (6.15pm). In winter, time is best spent visiting the 25,000 acre National Elk Refuge on the north edge of town, where you can take a horse-drawn sleigh ride among a 7,000-strong herd of elk (mid-Dec to early April daily 10am–4pm; $15 for adults, $10 for kids; ☎307/733-9212); rides leave from the National Museum of Wildlife Art across the road (daily 9am–5pm; ☎307/733-5771, 🌐www.wildlifeart.org; $8), an impressive global art collection that trails only Cody's Buffalo Bill Historical Center for best museum in the region.

While busiest in summer with road-tripping national park visitors, Jackson remains a year-round draw thanks to Jackson Hole Mountain Resort (☎307/733-2292 or 1-888/333-7766, 🌐www.jacksonhole.com; lift tickets $72), a twenty-minute drive from downtown to Teton Village at its base. Justifiably famous, the resort's 2500 acres of terrain are arguably the best in the country for confident intermediates and advanced skiers and boarders. Within town, Snow King (☎307/733-5200 or 1-800/522-5464, 🌐www.snowking.com; $35) is a family-friendly hill, also lit for night skiing, while Grand Targhee (☎307/353-2300 or 1-800/827-4433, 🌐www.grandtarghee.com; $57) on the Wyoming/Idaho border an hour's drive away is renowned for fresh powder and affordable prices. Come summer, all three ski resorts offer limited lift-accessed mountain biking, along with a host of other outdoor activities ranging from hiking to paragliding.

Jackson's charming airport is actually within Grand Teton National Park, eight miles to the north; it's linked to town by AllTrans shuttle service (☎307/733-3135 or 1-800/443-6133; $15 one-way to Jackson, $22 to Teton Village), while the regular taxi fare is around $26 into town, $46 to Teton Village, the latter taking 45 minutes to reach in winter due to closed roads. Jackson Hole Express (☎307/733-1719 or 1-800/652-9510) operates direct shuttle services daily between the international airport in Salt Lake City and Jackson (around 5hr; $71 one-way).

Jackson's excellent Wyoming Information Center, 532 N Cache St (daily: May–Sept 8am–7pm; rest of year 9am–5pm; ☎307/733-3316, 🌐www.jacksonholechamber.com), has detailed statewide information. Nearby, the Bridger-Teton National Forest Headquarters, 340 N Cache St (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎307/739-5500), hands out details on hiking and camping in the Gros Ventre mountains to the east.

Transport around Jackson Hole is provided by START buses (☎307/733-4521, 🌐www.startbus.com), operating from roughly 6.30am to 10pm daily; rides within town are free, while trips to Teton Village are $3 one-way. Companies such as Gray Line (☎307/733-4325 or 1-800/443-6133, 🌐www.graylinejh.com; $80–105) offer hurried day-tours of Grand Teton and Yellowstone, though you're best off renting a car and touring at your own pace. Guided bike tours in the area are run by Teton Mountain Bike Tours (☎1-800/733-0788, 🌐www.tetonmtbike.com) and start at $55 for a half-day tour, including equipment.

Dozens of companies in Jackson offer float trips in Grand Teton and white-water rafting on the Snake River to the south (half-day around $45, including transportation and outerwear). Try Dave Hansen Whitewater, 515 N Cache St (☎307/733-6295 or 1-800/732-6295, 🌐www.davehansenwhitewater.com), or Mad River, 1255 South Hwy-89 (☎307/733-6203 or 1-800/458-7238, 🌐www.mad-river.com).

Accommodation

Accommodation in Jackson is fairly expensive in summer; rates in winter drop by around 25 percent and are good value for a ski vacation. It's the opposite case in Teton Village, where the ski-in ski-out accommodation is at a premium come winter. If camping, you're best off staying at Grand Teton's Gros Ventre Campground to the north (see p.889).

49er Inn 330 W Pearl St ☎307/733-7550, 🌐www.townsquareinns.com. This downtown motel is nothing fancy, but the rooms are much larger than average. Two hot tubs and a skimpy continental breakfast also offered. ④

Anvil Motel 215 N Cache St ☎307/733-3668, or 1-800/234-4507, 🌐www.anvilmotel.com.

Situated at one of the busier intersections in town, it's not the quietest spot but the smallish rooms are in good shape and include a fridge and microwave. A bunker below the motel contains The Bunkhouse, a joyless dorm space that's only worth considering if traveling solo ($22). Winter

Best Western The Inn at Jackson Hole Teton Village ☎ 307/733-2311 or 1-800/842-7666, www.innatjh.com. Three-star chain hotel, offering 83 mid-size rooms, along with a few lofts. Amenities include heated outdoor pool and hot tubs, laundry, and on-site tuning shop and a popular sushi restaurant. Winter , summer .

Best Western The Lodge at Jackson Hole 80 Scott Lane ☎ 1-800-458-3866, www.lodgeatjh.com. A mile from Town Square, this pleasant hotel attracts an equal mix of business clients and vacationing families. Along with large chain-hotel rooms, extras include a buffet breakfast, laundry, workout room and pool. Winter , summer .

Four Seasons Teton Village ☎ 1-888/402-7888, www.fourseasons.com. The largest slopeside structure with 151 rooms, suites and rental units is worth a peek for the rough-hewn stones and native artifacts in the main lounge. Elegant suites come with marble bathroom counters and leather couches, while the heated outdoor pool, massive fitness center and spa, and full ski concierge services are all to be expected for nightly rates starting in the $500 range. .

 Hostel X Teton Village ☎ 307/733-3415, www.hostelx.com. Excellent slopeside hostel, with a lounge with fireplace, TV and game room, laundry, Ping-Pong, and pool table. Each private room, either with king-bed or four twin beds, is rented as a unit, and sometimes requires a five-night minimum stay. .

The Wort Hotel 50 N Glenwood St ☎ 307/733-2190 or 1-800/322-2727, www.worthotel.com. Built in 1941, The Wort is the most venerable high-end property in town, combining old-world style with modern facilities that include two large hot tubs, a grill-bistro, and an attractive bar, The Silver Dollar. .

The year-round tourist trade makes Jackson the best town in Wyoming for nightlife, with an ever-changing roster of restaurants and nightspots.

The Mangy Moose Teton Village ☎ 307/733-9779. Jackson Hole's legendary ski-bum hangout, famed for its après-ski sessions that segue into rowdy evenings of live rock or reggae. The bustling upstairs dining room does decent burgers, chicken, and pasta, best chased down with a locally brewed Moose Juice Stout. Cover charge for live bands $5–20.

Million Dollar Cowboy Bar 25 N Cache Drive ☎ 307/733-2207. Everyone at least ducks into this hugely touristy Western-themed watering hole once to sit on one of the saddles at the bar. There are also four pool tables and frequent live bands. Cover most nights $5.

Nora's Fish Creek Inn 5600 W Hwy-22, in the hamlet of Wilson ☎ 307/733-8288. Popular spot for a huge breakfast of pancakes or omelettes. Lunch and dinner includes prime rib, salmon, and trout along with homemade desserts, at moderate prices.

Old Yellowstone Garage 175 Center St ☎ 307/734-6161. One of Jackson's finest restaurants, offering flawless service and a small menu of northern Italian dishes that changes daily (entrees $20–38). Sundays feature all-you-care-to-eat pizza ($15).

Pearl Street Bagels 145 W Pearl Ave. Very popular for fresh and tasty bagels, plus the finest cappuccinos in town. Free wireless Internet. Daily 6am–6pm.

Rendezvous Bistro 380 S Broadway ☎ 307/739-1100. Well-priced bistro on the outskirts of town. Mains range from simple steak frites to lamb chops and ahi tuna, all of which are recommended. A good selection of bottled wine under $30 adds to the attraction.

Shades Café 82 S King St ☎ 307/733-2015. Unpretentious, affordable café. Breakfast selections include an egg scramble for $3, while later in the day the likes of veggie burritos ($6) are served inside or on a shady deck.

 Snake River Brewing Co 265 South Millward ☎ 307/739-2337. Great locals' brewpub several blocks southeast of Town Square. The pastas and wood-fired pizzas ($9–12) are well worth trying, but it's the award-winning beers that packs 'em in.

Montana

MONTANA is Big Sky country, literally: the entire state is blessed with a huge blue roof that both dwarfs the beautiful countryside and complements it perfectly. The US portion of the Rocky Mountains find their northernmost limits in the western part of the state, a region of snowcapped summits, turbulent rivers, spectacular glacial valleys, heavily wooded forests, and sparkling blue lakes. The scenery is at its most dramatic in Glacier National Park. By contrast, the eastern two-thirds of the state is high prairie: sun-parched in summer and wracked by blizzards each winter. Grizzly bears, elk, and bighorn sheep are found in greater numbers here than just about anywhere else on the continent.

Each of Montana's small cities has its own proud identity. The enjoyable town of Missoula is a laid-back college town; the historic copper-mining hamlet of Butte is a union stronghold; the elegant state capital Helena harkens back to its prosperous gold-mining years; and Bozeman, just to the south, is one of the hippest mountain towns in the US.

Wheat, lumber and (coal) mining form the contemporary base of Montana's economy. Tourism is the state's second biggest earner; however, apart from skiing, the harsh climate generally restricts tourist activities to the summer months.

Getting around Montana

Considering Montana's hulking size and sparse population, transportation connections are not bad. Delta, Alaska, America West and Northwest variously offer flights to Kalispell, Billings, Bozeman, Great Falls, and Missoula. Amtrak trains run across the north on the Empire Builder route, stopping east and west of Glacier National Park, and at Essex in the summer. Greyhound runs a number of bus lines on I-90 and I-15, while Rimrock Stages (☎1-800/255-7655, @www.rimrocktrailways.com) runs four routes through the major towns (except for Bozeman). Western Montana, in particular, is great cycling territory; the Adventure Cycling organization, whose national headquarters are in Missoula, can provide special maps. Clearly, the best way to get around is by car, with practically every interstate exit in the west leading to mountain retreats, striking landmarks, or small villages.

Eastern Montana

Before ranchers and farmers settled the flat prairie of eastern Montana, it was prime buffalo territory: one early traveler waited three nights while a massive herd crossed his path. Native Americans fought hard to hold onto their land; the crushing defeats they inflicted on the US Army include the legendary victory at Little Bighorn – a Pyrrhic victory, perhaps, considering the military nearly wiped out the buffalo by the 1870s, thus depleting the natives' major food source.

The plains are intermittently broken by mountains, of which the most impressive are the icy Beartooth Range, crammed between the town of Red Lodge and Yellowstone National Park. Most of the region's towns are sleepy agricultural centers. Even Billings, Montana's largest city with a population of over ninety thousand, doesn't have a great deal to offer.

Little Bighorn Battlefield National Monument

In June 1876, massive army detachments were sent to southeastern Montana to subjugate the Sioux and Cheyenne. A key unit in the campaign was the crack Seventh Cavalry; at its head was the flamboyant General George Custer – perhaps unrivaled in American history for fame or opprobrium – who led the military to one of its most enduring defeats at Little Bighorn (see box, below).

Today the battlefield, which lies within the Crow Indian Reservation in the Little Bighorn Valley, serves as a national monument; it's located 56 miles southeast of Billings, with the entrance one mile east of I-90 on US-212. You can trace the course of the battle on a five-mile, self-guided driving tour through the grasslands (daily 8am–dusk; $10 per car, $5 for pedestrians and motorcycles; @ www.nps.gov/libi), below the high ridge overlooking the valley, or on a narrated bus tour (spring–fall 10am–3pm; $8, kids $2). White-marble tablets mark where individual soldiers fell, and a sandstone obelisk stands above their mass grave on “Last Stand Hill” (Custer himself was buried at the West Point Military Academy in New York). Dioramas in the visitor center and museum (summer 8am–8pm; rest of year 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 406/638-2621) outline the battle, while the US military cemetery nearby holds soldiers from all of America's wars (admission to the cemetery is free; explain at the gate that you're only going there and not to the battlefield).

Tiny Hardin, thirteen miles northwest, makes its living from tourists seeking authentic native artifacts and Western mementos. Each year, on the weekend closest to the battle's anniversary, the Little Bighorn Days festival centers on re-enactments of the battle at a site eight miles west of the town (not the original battlefield; @ www.custerslaststand.org). Other activities include tribal dancing, downtown parades, dinner dances, and a rodeo.

Custer's Last Stand

During an erratic career, George Armstrong Custer had many notable experiences: he graduated last in his class at West Point in 1861; became the army's youngest-ever brigadier general, seeing action at Gettysburg; was suspended for ordering the execution of deserters from a forced march he led through Kansas, primarily to see his wife; and found notoriety for allowing the murder in 1868 of almost one hundred Cheyenne women and children. His most (in)famous moment, though, came on June 25, 1876, at the Battle of the Little Bighorn, known to native tribes as the Battle of the Greasy Grass.

Custer's was the first unit to arrive in the Little Bighorn Valley. Disdaining to await reinforcements, he set out to raze a tepee village along the Little Bighorn River – which turned out to be the largest-ever gathering of Plains Indians. As a party of his men pursued fleeing women and children, they were encircled by two thousand Sioux (Lakota) and Cheyenne warriors emerging from either side of a ravine. The soldiers dismounted to attempt to shoot their way out, but were soon overwhelmed; simultaneously, Custer's command post on a nearby hill was wiped out. Contrary to American myth, archeologists and historians have discounted the idea of Custer's Last Stand as a heroic act of defiance in which Custer was the last cavalryman left standing; the battle lasted less than an hour, with the white soldiers being systematically and effortlessly picked off. This most decisive Native American victory in the West – led by Sitting Bull – was also their final great show of resistance. An incensed President Grant piled maximum resources into a military campaign that brought about the effective defeat of all Plains Indians by the end of the decade.

The least expensive place to stay is the Western Motel, off Hwy-313 at 830 W Third St (☎406/665-2296, 🌐westernmotel.net; 📍). The Purple Cow, Hwy-47 N (☎406/665-3601), is a cheerful family diner serving home-cooked feasts.

Billings

By Montana standards, BILLINGS is a big city. It has a dramatic setting, bounded on its north and east sides by the 400ft crumpled sandstone cliffs of the Rimrock, and has made an attempt to spruce itself up with an attractive and lively row of galleries, bars, and restaurants along Montana Avenue. However, scarring the west side of downtown are the tracks and warehouses of the Northern Pacific Railroad, whose president, Frederick Billings, gave the city its name.

Just north of Montana Avenue, you can dress like a cowboy thanks to Lou Taubert Ranch Outfitters, 123 N Broadway (☎406/245-2248), which has an enormous selection of hats, boots, shirts, jeans, and jackets. A couple of blocks northeast, the Yellowstone Art Museum, 401 N 27th St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs closes 8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7; 🌐yellowstone.artmuseum.org), partly housed in the town's 1910 jail, specializes in Western exhibits, including absorbing book illustrations, paintings, and posters by cowboy illustrator Will James.

Billings' bus station, served by Greyhound along I-90 and I-15, and Powder River, heading north from Wyoming, is at 2502 First Ave N (☎406/245-5116). Accommodation includes The Dude Rancher, 415 N 29th St (☎406/259-5561 or 1-800/221-3302, 🌐www.duderancherlodge.com; 📍), a bright and cheerful motel, offering some rooms with fridges and microwaves. Cheaper alternatives line I-90, off exit 446, including the usual clean motels. For eating, the town is predictably strong on meat-and-potatoes fare, but the height of classic dining may be The Rex, 2401 Montana Ave (☎406/245-7477), which has top-flight steaks and good-enough seafood in a structure dating back nearly a hundred years.

Red Lodge and the Beartooth Scenic Highway

The atmospheric town of RED LODGE, sixty miles south of Billings at the foot of the awe-inspiring Beartooth Mountains, makes a pleasant stop. During winter, it acts as a base for skiers using the popular Red Lodge Mountain, six miles west on US-212 (lift tickets $42; ☎1-800/444-8977, 🌐www.redlodgemountain.com).

Originally founded to mine coal for the transcontinental railroads, Red Lodge's future was secured by the construction of the 65-mile Beartooth Scenic Highway, connecting to Cooke City at the northeastern entrance to Yellowstone National Park (see p.880), a striking series of tight switchbacks, steep grades, and exciting overlooks. Even in summer the springy tundra turf of the 10,940ft Beartooth Pass is covered with snow that (due to algae) turns pink when crushed. All around are gem-like corries, deeply gouged granite walls, and huge blocks of roadside ice.

Though Red Lodge has plenty of cheap motels south of town, the nicest place to stay is the lovely Pollard Hotel, 2 N Broadway (☎406/446-0001 or 1-800/POLLARD; 📍–📍), an 1893 brick building with a pool, sauna, comfortable old library, and superb restaurant (see over); Western icons Buffalo Bill, Calamity Jane, and others have stayed here. You can camp west of town in Custer National Forest ($9–15; ranger district ☎406/446-2103) at rustic parks such as Cascade, Woodbine and East Rosebud, taking in the stunning views of the Beartooth area, as well as of the abundant bighorn sheep, elk, and bear.

Some of the best food in town is served in Pollard's dining room, which offers fresh, local fare – leaning toward beef and fish – in a serene setting. Also on Broadway, Bridge Creek Backcountry Kitchen, no. 116 S (☎ 406/446-9900), serves fine clam chowder alongside steak and burgers, and Carbon County Steakhouse, no. 121 S (☎ 406/446-4025), has hearty meals of pasta, ribs, steak, and seafood, as well as Rocky Mountain Oysters – bull testicles, to the uninitiated.

Fort Peck Lake

Some two hundred miles north of Billings, lonely Hwy 2 is an isolated, alternately bleak and beautiful, stretch that runs from Glacier National Park to North Dakota. The road offers a true experience of the Great Plains, with remote villages, Indian battlefields, and striking vistas. The highlight is the irregular, massive expanse of 130-mile-long Fort Peck Lake, with fifteen hundred miles of erratic shoreline, which the New Deal created in the 1930s by damming the Missouri River. The main draw is fishing for trout, bass and pike (licenses $25, see wfw.mt.gov/fishing). In the adjacent million-acre Charles M. Russell Wildlife Refuge (☎ 406/438-8706, cmr.fws.gov) you can spot pronghorn antelope, elk, deer, and bighorn sheep. Fossils – among them T rex and triceratops bones discovered around the site – are on view in the dam's museum (only accessible on tours of the powerhouse; summer Mon–Fri 9am, 11am, 1pm & 3pm, Sat & Sun hourly 9am–4pm; free; ☎ 406/526-3411). On the lake's south side, about 25 miles north of Jordan, off Hwy 200, Hell Creek State Park is a popular, serviceable spot for camping ($12; ☎ 406/526-3224, www.reserveusa.com), as well as a terrific place to get in some of the best walleye fishing in the country, in fact. As with the other campgrounds in the area, this one is quite remote and only accessible by rugged country road. Use a four-wheel-drive vehicle to explore these parts.

Western Montana

Western Montana offers a beautifully expansive, almost unreal, setting. The big skies must be seen to be believed, and you'll encounter entirely different weather from one horizon to the next. The region is replete with outdoor adventures, especially in glorious Glacier National Park. The only old-time mining camps that have grown into substantial settlements are the genteel state capital Helena and craggy Butte, which made its money from copper. Between them, they conjure up more of a feel for the rambunctious times, the lust for profit, and the hardships of the industrial era than all the ghost towns in the Rockies combined.

Bozeman and around

Fetching BOZEMAN lies at the north end of the lush Gallatin Valley, 142 miles west of Billings and ninety miles north of Yellowstone. Founded by farmers in 1863, it's the only sizeable town in Montana not to owe its roots to mining, lumber, or the railroad. The stately Victorian storefronts along busy Main Street are some of the most historic in the West (with some seven hundred on the National Register of Historic Places), and it's here where you can find many solid choices for dining, drinking, and shopping.

South of downtown, the huge Museum of the Rockies 600 W Kagy Blvd at S Seventh Ave (summer daily 9am–8pm; rest of year Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 12.30–5pm; $9.50; www.montana.edu/wwwmor) features Native American weapons, biology exhibits, a planetarium, and a fine selection of Western landscape paintings. The collection is internationally known for its stunning dinosaur finds – among them the world’s largest-known skull of a T rex. Though smaller in scale, the Pioneer Museum, 317 W Main St (June–Aug Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, rest of year Tues–Sat 11am–4pm; $3; www.pioneermuseum.org), is also worth a look, housed in a crenellated old jail from 1911, with an intriguing selection of historic objects, including a replica log cabin, scale-model pioneer wagons and army forts, and a gallows for hanging town miscreants. From the museum you can take walking tours (all Mon–Wed 11am & 6pm; free; reserve at 406/522-8122) of Main Street’s elegant structures, its districts strewn with grand nineteenth-century mansions, and even the local cemetery where the town’s bigwigs are buried. Striking an unexpected note, the American Computer Museum, Bridger Park Mall, 2304 N 7th Ave, suite B (June–Aug daily 10am–4pm; Sept–May Tues–Sat noon–4pm, Thurs closes 8pm; $4; www.compustory.org), follows the evolution of computers, from their bulky, awkward beginnings to today’s tiny, speedy units.

Practicalities

Greyhound stops at 1205 E Main St, and the visitor center is at 224 E Main St (406/586-4008, www.historicbozeman.com), providing loads of maps and information plus limited free Internet access. Main Street also has a few worthy accommodation options. The Lewis and Clark Motel, no. 824 W (1-800/332-7666, www.lewisandclarkmotel.net; 4), is very good value and centrally located, with a pool, sauna, gym, and hot tub. The basic but friendly International Backpackers Hostel, 405 W Olive St (406/586-4659, www.bozemanbackpackershovel.com), has six bunk beds for $18 each and a pair of private rooms for $38. More upmarket is the lovely Voss Inn, 319 S Willson Ave (406/587-0982, www.bozeman-vossinn.com; 5), a lovely Victorian home with period furniture in each of the six rooms.

Bozeman boasts plenty of good places to eat. The Community Co-op, 908 W Main St (406/587-4039, www.bozo.coop), serves terrific vegetarian dishes, deli sandwiches, and mouth-watering desserts. Other favorites include the McKenzie River Pizza Co., 232 E Main St (406/587-0055) and eight other Montana locations, which has thirty different kinds of pizza – try the chili-laden Branding Iron for a kick – and John Bozeman’s Bistro, 125 W Main St (406/587-4100), with its fine duck, lamb, and elk dishes, plus a nice array of tapas. Places to drink include Montana Ale Works, 611 E Main St (406/587-7700), which has dozens of microbrews along with solid steaks and burgers, and the raucous Zebra Cocktail Lounge, 321 E Main St (406/585-8851), good also for its lively music selection of DJs, reggae, hip-hop, and indie rock.

Bozeman is well placed for those seeking outdoor activities, particularly in rugged Hyalite Canyon just south of town, which has top-notch hiking and mountain biking in summer and excellent ice climbing in winter, or at the challenging ski area, Bridger Bowl (lift tickets $41; 406/587-2111, www.bridgerbowl.com). An hour’s drive south down the beautiful Gallatin Valley is the much pricier Big Sky Resort (lift tickets $69; 1-800/548-4486, www.bigskyresort.com), popular for its top-quality powder and steep slopes on 11,166ft Lone Mountain.

Three miles north of I-90, thirty miles west of Bozeman, Missouri Headwaters State Park ($5 per vehicle; camping $12; 406/994-4042), marks the place where the Missouri River begins its circuitous journey to the Mississippi at the confluence of the Jefferson, Madison, and Gallatin rivers. These marshy grasslands beneath a shallow bluff were seen by Lewis and Clark in July 1805; fur trappers who followed in their wake included Kit Carson, and traces remain of the nineteenth-century town they created. These days the park has plenty of good fishing, hiking, and bird-watching. Another fifteen miles west, Lewis & Clark Caverns State Park (tours 9am–4.30pm, summer until 6.30pm; $10; ☎ 406/287-3541) offers a fascinating underworld of limestone spires and pillars, which you can see on rugged two-hour, two-mile walking tours; bring sturdy shoes and a jacket – the temperature is a consistent 50 degrees F. For details on more outdoor activities, check with the ranger office, 3710 Fallon St (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 406/522-2520, @ www.fs.fed.us/r1/gallatin), which also provides information on hiking trails.

Butte and around

Eighty miles west of Bozeman, the former copper-mining colossus of BUTTE (as in “root”) sits on a steep hillside where massive black headframes – “gallows frames” to miners – of long-abandoned pits soar up among dirty-yellow slag heaps, making it the largest Superfund site in the country (for its environmental damage). It’s an oddly compelling landscape, best appreciated at dusk, when the golden light casts a glow on the mine-pocked hillsides, and the old neon signs illuminate historic brick buildings. Among immigrants to leave their mark here were miners from Ireland – Butte still hosts the biggest St Patrick’s Day celebrations in the Rockies – and Cornwall; the traditional meat-and-potato pasty (“PASS-tee”) is still served in many cafés – legend has it they were tough enough to survive being dropped into a mine shaft.

From its early days, Butte stood out as a “Gibraltar of Unionism” in the anti-union West. Miners obtained a minimum wage and an eight-hour day, and it became impossible to get work without a union card. The eventual consolidation of mining operations under the huge Anaconda Company led to inter-union rivalries and rioting, and by the 1950s the focus had switched from traditional mining in shafts to ugly open pits. Today only the Continental Pit mine remains. To take a look at the ecological disaster that is the 1800-foot-deep, 5600-foot-wide, and 7000-foot-long Berkeley Pit, head for Continental Drive. Here, a viewing platform surveys the whole horrifying mess, the most toxic stretch of water in the United States (Mar–Nov daily 8am–9pm; free).

If Butte is rich with toxins, it’s also unexpectedly wealthy in Victorian architecture. The area’s six thousand preserved buildings make it the largest Historic Landmark District in the country. On West Park Street, the excellent World Museum of Mining (Apr–Oct daily 9am–4.30pm, Thurs–Sat closes 8pm; $7; @ www.miningmuseum.org) is packed with fascinating memorabilia from the local boom years. Outside, beyond the scattered collection of rusting machinery – from jackhammers to mine carts – the museum’s 50-building Hell Roarin’ Gulch recreates a cobbled-street mining camp, complete with saloon, bordello, church, schoolhouse, and Chinese laundry. Above it all looms the blackened, 100ft headframe of the 3200-foot-deep Orphan Girl mineshaft. To get a handle on the town’s colorful history, take a walking tour with Old Butte Historical Adventures, 117 N Main St (May–Oct daily; most tours $5–12; ☎ 406/498-3424, @ www.buttetours.info), which covers the area’s architecture, mines, railway lines, rediscovered haunts like the Rockwood Speakeasy, and even journeys to the region’s ghost towns ($50–85 per person).

Few of Butte’s mining baron residences are grander than the 34-room Copper King Mansion, 219 W Granite St (tours April–Sept daily 9am–4pm, April weekends only; $7; ☎ 406/782-7580, @ www.thecopperkingmansion.com), built by metal magnate, and later US senator, William Clark. Along with frescoed ceilings, handcrafted woodwork, and chandeliers and fireplaces, the mansion also has the draw of being a B&B, where you can stay amid tasteful old-time luxury for as little as $65 a night. Another curiosity is the 26-room mansion of Clark's son, Charles, now known as the Arts Chateau, 321 W Broadway (June–Sept Mon–Fri 7.30am–4pm, Sat 9am–4pm, Sun 10am–2pm, also Fri 7–11pm; $4; ☎ 406/723-7600), nothing less than a mock-French castle – splendid with its spiral staircase, exotic-wood-inlaid rooms, and wrought-iron décor. It now holds Victorian furniture and antiques, as well as a rotating selection of contemporary regional art. By contrast, in an old noodle parlor at 17 W Mercury St, the Mai Wah Museum (June–Sept Tues–Sat 11am–5pm; donation; 🌐 www.maiwah.org) focuses on the history of the Chinese community with an intriguing collection of photos, cooking implements, kites, fireworks, menus, and books. The community was six hundred strong at the end of the nineteenth century, but by the 1940s widespread racism had reduced it to just a few families.

At night the 90ft Our Lady of the Rockies statue, 3100 Harrison Ave (🌐 www.ourladyoftherockies.org), is illuminated by floodlights. Built entirely by voluntary labor – there had been a major layoff at one of the mines – it was set in place on top of the Continental Divide, some 3500ft above Butte, by helicopter.

Practicalities

Greyhound buses drop off downtown at 1324 Harrison Ave, and Rimrock lines also cruise through town, connecting to Helena and Great Falls. From June to August, ninety-minute trolley tours of town (9am, 11am, 1.30pm & 3.30pm; $7) leave from the Chamber of Commerce, 1000 George St (June–Aug daily 8am–6pm; Sept daily 8am–5pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 406/723-3177, 🌐 www.butteinfo.org). Chain motels line the interstate, but the most pleasant accommodation (along with the historic Copper King Mansion; see above) includes the 1924 Finlen Hotel, 100 E Broadway (☎ 406/723-5461, 🌐 www.finlen.com; 📍), which has basic but functional rooms in the original building and a more modern motel annex; and Toad Hall Manor, 1 Green Lane (☎ 1-866/443-TOAD, 🌐 www.toadhallmanor.com).

toadhallmanor.com; ⑤), a quite stylish B&B in a stately house, whose three units variously come with Jacuzzis, fridges, microwaves, and courtyards.

Butte has plenty of good places to eat and drink, most of them uptown. Joe's Pasty Shop, 1641 Grand Ave (☎406/723-9071), serves up the hearty, meat-filled Cornish dish with vigor, while the Pekin Noodle Parlor, at 117 S Main St (☎406/782-2217), is an old-fashioned Cantonese joint with a menu that stretches from chow mein and fried wontons to sandwiches and steaks. A bit more upscale, the Uptown Café, 47 E Broadway (☎406/723-4735), serves pizza, pasta, and sandwiches, but is best known for its steak-and-seafood dinner entrees and inexpensive, fixed ($11.50) five-course meals. The Copper King Saloon, 1000 S Montana St (☎406/723-9283), is a lively bar in which to drink away an evening.

The Grant-Kohrs Ranch

The National Historic Site of GRANT-KOHR'S RANCH, 266 Warren Lane in the town of Deer Lodge (June–Aug 8am–5.30pm, Sept–May 9am–4.30pm; free; ⑩ www.nps.gov/grko), lies forty miles west of Butte on I-90. In operation since 1860, this true West cattle ranch, under the guidance of “Montana Cattle King” Conrad Kohrs, was once the hub of ten million acres of range property and many thousands of Hereford and Shorthorn cows. Though its holdings are substantially reduced these days, the ranch still has its share of cows and draft horses on view. It also displays authentic buggies and wagons around its preserved old barns. In its blacksmith shop you can watch horseshoes and irons being worked over an anvil (summer only). Compare the pleasant Victorian environs of the house of the first owner, John Grant, with the much humbler conditions the ranch hands tolerated in Bunkhouse Row.

Helena and around

An hour north of Butte on I-15, HELENA is set neatly at the foot of two rounded mountains with a fine view over the golden-brown Prickly Pear Valley. In 1864 a party of disheartened prospectors decided to have one final dig here and managed to hit the jackpot at what is now Last Chance Gulch, the town's attractive main street, whose stately Romanesque and Neoclassical buildings are now home to gift shops, diners, and bars. Above it all looms the Old Fire Tower, off-limits to interlopers but still worth a short walk to see the latest in fire prevention, circa 1876. During the boom years, more than $20 million of gold was extracted from the gulch, and fifty successful prospectors remained here as millionaires. Their palatial residences grace the west side of town in what's known as the Mansion District. Contrast this with the far more modest digs southwest of town in Reeder's Alley, a collection of miners' cabins, wooden storehouses, and other humble working-class structures, now refurbished into smart shops and restaurants. Helena has an unexpected Hollywood connection, too: Gary Cooper was born and raised here, and Myrna Loy lived here as a child. Honoring the actress is the Myrna Loy Center for the Performing Arts, based out of a former jail at 15 N Ewing St (☎406/443-0287), which screens indie films and presents concerts, plays, comedy and more.

Another worthwhile stop is the Original Governor's Mansion, 304 N Ewing St (May–Sept Tues–Sat noon–4pm, rest of year Sat only; $4), which housed the state's chief executive during the first half of the twentieth century and still impresses with its Queen Anne style and broad decorative-arts collection. The legislative branch has worked since 1902 out of the massive Neoclassical state capitol, 1301 E Sixth Ave (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm; free; ⑩ www.montanacapitol.com), where a huge mural by “cowboy artist” Charles M. Russell depicts a dramatic encounter between tribal peoples and Lewis & Clark. You can see more of Russell's work at the excellent Montana Historical Society Museum, 225 N Roberts St (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm, summer also open Mon; $5; montanahistoricalsociety.org), as well as early photographs of Montana life, early pioneer and tribal artifacts, and an array of costumes and textiles. True Charles Russell enthusiasts should venture up to Great Falls to see his eponymously named museum at 400 13th St N (May–Sept daily 9am–6pm, rest of year Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; $8; www.cmrussell.org), which displays his many evocative landscape paintings and offers tours of the artist's elegant house.

The majestic red spires of the Cathedral of St Helena rise 230ft at 530 N Ewing St; the inside is adorned with elaborate Bavarian stained glass, white-marble altars, and gold leaf. Also interesting is the Holter Museum of Art, 12 E Lawrence St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11.30am–4.30pm; Sept–May closed Mon, June–Aug closes Mon–Fri 6pm; free; holtermuseum.org), which shows painting, photography, and ceramics, but is most notable for its solid contemporary sculpture and decorative works. West of downtown, the Archie Bray Foundation, 2915 Country Club Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; archiebray.org), hosts world-renowned ceramic artists who work while you watch, and also displays a broad variety of items in its Pottery Gallery and warehouse (summer only).

Greyhound offers connections throughout Montana from Helena's transit center, 316 N Park Ave, and Rimrock Stages operates from 3100 Hwy 12 E (☎406/442-5860), provided you want to go to Great Falls or Butte. In the summer the Historical Society runs hour-long tours in an imitation steam train (actually a tram) from the corner of Sixth and Roberts (June to early Sept 11am & 3pm, June also 1pm, July & Aug also 1pm & 5.30pm; $7; ☎1-888/423-1023, www.lctours.com). The visitor center is at 225 Cruse Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎406/447-1530), where you can pick up a free map. Information and maps on local hiking trails and camping are available from Helena National Forest Ranger Station, 2001 Poplar St (☎406/449-5490).

Helena has its share of dull chain motels, but its most stylish lodgings are in B&Bs, including Barrister Bed & Breakfast, 416 N Ewing St (☎406/443-7330 or 1-800/823-1148; 4), a lovely 1874 Victorian mansion near the cathedral and originally used as priest's quarters, now offering five graceful rooms; Sanders B&B, 328 N Ewing St (☎406/442-3309, www.sandersbb.com; 5), whose seven old-fashioned rooms come with Western décor and antiques, some of them with claw-footed tubs and fireplaces; and the log-frame colossus of the Elkhorn View Lodge, outside of town at 88 Howard Beer Rd (☎406/442-1224, www.elkviewbb.com; 5), with a hot tub, sauna, and gym, and five modern Western-themed rooms with fridges and microwaves. More rugged types head into the outlying Helena National Forest (www.fs.fed.us/r1/helena) for a nice array of campgrounds (summer only; free or $5–8) near the Continental Divide, as well as any of seven remote, primitive cabins ($25–30; reserve at ☎1-877/444-6777, reserveusa.com) that were built to house forest-service employees and come variously equipped with stoves, fireplaces, and basic tools – but no electricity.

Places to eat include The Bagel Company, 735 N Last Chance Gulch (☎406/449-6000) for its tasty bagels and sandwiches; Bert and Ernie's, 361 Last Chance Gulch (☎406/443-5680), for its deli sandwiches, seafood, and nice array of pizzas; and the Windbag Saloon, at no. 19 S (☎406/443-9669), a big old barn of a place that serves Guinness, and good burgers and steaks. A little more upscale, On Broadway, 106 E Broadway (☎406/443-1929), offers excellent Italian food and wine, and Miller's Crossing, 52 S Park Ave (☎406/442-3290), has microbrews and eclectic live music.

Gates of the Mountains

For a look at the local topography in all its rugged, unspoiled glory, you couldn't do much better than to take a two-hour boat tour through the stunning Gates of the Mountains, 25 miles north of Helena off Hwy 287 (June–Sept hours vary, generally hourly Mon–Fri 11am–2pm or 3pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; $10; ☎ 406/458-5241, 🌐 www.gatesofthemountains.com). This dramatic stretch of the Missouri River, which enters a gorge between sheer 1200ft limestone cliffs that rise abruptly from the northern shores of a tranquil lake, was named by Meriwether Lewis of the Lewis & Clark expedition. The area offers unmatched scenic splendor and plenty of excellent hiking and backpacking opportunities, not to mention an eye-opening array of wildlife, including black bears, eagles, bighorn sheep, beavers, and mountain lions.

Missoula

Framed by the striking Bitterroot and Sapphire mountains, MISSOULA is one of the most vibrant and friendly small towns in the country. It's full of contrasts – truck-sales yards and bookstores, continental cafés and gun shops – and where nearly everyone seems to be connected to either the city's huge sawmills or the local University of Montana. In James Crumley's Dancing Bear, it's depicted as “the town with the best bars in a state of great bars.”

One sign of Missoula's vibrancy is its willingness to take a chance on a new building of the Missoula Art Museum, 345 N Pattee St (call for hours; free; 🌐 www.missoulaartmuseum.org), which opened in late 2006 and promises to show challenging, risk-taking work: digital photography, modern sculpture, and a range of eye-opening pieces by contemporary Native American artists. For another interesting cultural experience, head out to the 1914 Fort Missoula off Highway 93 S, on whose grounds the Historical Museum, in building 322 (Tues–Sun noon–5pm; summer daily 10am–5pm, Sun opens at noon; $3; 🌐 www.fortmissoulamuseum.org), holds rather dry displays on military and agricultural history, but is best for its relocation of thirteen buildings from the Old West days, including a railroad depot, church, and schoolhouse. Unexpected are the World War II internment barracks for Italian nationals and Japanese-Americans. The grim confines recall the days when the fort was used for confining perceived “enemies,” some of whom were US citizens.

Missoula is particularly good for its outdoor activities. The visitor center, across the river from the campus, 825 E Front St (☎ 406/543-6623, 🌐 www.missoulachamber.com), can provide details on trails, such as the grueling one leading from its office up Mount Sentinel, embellished by the huge concrete letter “M.” The top gives a great view of the area, especially the rugged Hellgate River Canyon. Other worthwhile trails traverse the Rattlesnake Wilderness, which, despite the name, claims to be serpent-free. Missoula is excellent for cycling, too, and the best source of information and trail maps is the Adventure Cycling Association, 150 E Pine St (☎ 406/721-1776); the Bicycle Hangar, 1801 Brooks St (☎ 406/728-9537), rents out good-quality bikes. The most developed of the city's small ski areas is Montana Snowbowl, twelve miles northwest, which has a range of slopes for all abilities (lift tickets $34) and boasts a summer chair lift (late June to early Sept Fri–Sun noon–5pm; $6, kids free, $2 for bikes; ☎ 406/549-9777).

Tours of the Forest Service Smokejumper Center, ten miles out of town on US-93 at 5764 W Broadway, discuss methods used to train smokejumpers – highly skilled firefighters who parachute into forested areas to stop the spread of wildfires. Fires are legion in this part of the country during the dry season. A small visitor center further explains their work (summer 8.30am–5pm, tours on the hour 10am, 11am & 2–4pm; free; ☎ 406/329-4934).

Greyhound and Rimrock share the bus depot at 1660 W Broadway, though the latter bus line is only useful if you're headed to Kalispell and Whitefish. The more distinctive accommodation choices include Goldsmith's Inn, beside the river at 809 E Front St (☎ 406/721-6732; 🌐 www.goldsmithsinn.com; 📍), a quaint 1911 Victorian B&B whose seven units variously offer balconies and fireplaces, and sitting rooms in the four suites. The Doubletree Missoula Edgewater, 100 Madison St (☎ 406/728-3100, 🌐 www.doubletree.com; 📍), is right on the Clark Fork River near the university, with nice rooms and suites and onsite gym, pool and hot tub. If all else fails, try the regional motel C'mon Inn, 2775 Expo Pkwy (☎ 406/543-4600, 🌐 www.cmoninn.com; 📍), which has decent rooms with fridges and micro-waves, and two-room suites for an extra $20, or Jacuzzis for an extra $50. For state park camping you'll need to backtrack east, either 25 miles on I-90 to small Beavertail Hill (May–Sept; $15; ☎ 406/542-5500), which also has replica tepees to stay in ($25–39), or forty miles on Hwy 200 and a brief jog on Hwy 83 north to Salmon Lake (May–Nov; $15; ☎ 406/677-6804), which is great for its fishing and swimming in the Clearwater River.

You can eat good pastries with cappuccino at Break Espresso, 432 N Higgins St (☎ 406/728-7300), or lunchtime soup and sandwiches. Gourmet pizzas, pasta, and fancier fare is served at Higgins Alley, 424 N Higgins St (☎ 406/721-7757). The Mustard Seed, 2901 Brooks St (☎ 406/542-7333), is popular for its pan-Asian food, including a sushi – no mean feat in Montana. The Raven, 130 E Broadway (☎ 406/829-8188), has three pool tables and a great jukebox in addition to great omelettes, burgers, and sandwiches. Also worth checking out for nightlife are The Oxford Saloon, 337 N Higgins St (☎ 406/549-0117), a Montana institution and a friendly joint with as varied a clientele as any bar in the state, and the Rhinoceros, 158 Ryman St (☎ 406/721-6061), which has more than fifty microbrews from the region on tap.

Around Missoula: Garnet Ghost Town

To get a more in-depth look at the rugged days of the Old West, travel east from Missoula some forty miles on I-90, then another ten miles by single-lane gravel road, to Montana's best-preserved municipal relic, Garnet Ghost Town (road open May–Dec; summer daily 10am–5pm, rest of year Sat & Sun 11am–3pm; $3; 🌐 garnetghosttown.org), a slice of industrial history that rewards a long look (perhaps with a stay at nearby Beavertail Hill State Park; see above). A century ago, the site was home to hundreds of hard-rock gold miners, serious labor-union men doing a tough job. Since the buildings have been kept in their semi-decayed state, the atmosphere is quite arresting: the quiet and lonely specter of vacant, wood-framed saloons, cabins, stores, and a jail. Most intriguing is the evocative Wells Hotel, which is sturdy enough to let you tramp through its three creaky levels, contrasting the once-chic parlor and dining area on the ground floor with the bare, spartan floors of the unheated top level, where miners would lay out their bedrolls and bodies in lined, human-sized parking spaces.

Flathead Lake and around

The sheer splendor of the awe-inspiring, 28-mile-long Flathead Lake – the largest freshwater lake west of the Mississippi – provides a welcome diversion on the long route north toward Glacier National Park, reached by following US-93 north from I-90. Before getting to the lake, stop off and view the five hundred residents of the 18,500-acre National Bison Range, accessible near the town of Moiese, twenty miles west of St Ignatius off Hwy-212 (May–Oct daily 8am–6pm, opens 9am on weekends; $5; (www.fws.gov/bisonrange). Though you have to drive through, you can also get out and explore the striking mountainside scenery at several waysides – just don't let the great horned beasts catch you unawares. They travel in herds and are best appreciated from the safety of your slow-moving car.

Between Polson in the south and Somers in the north, US-93 follows the lake's curving western shore, while the smaller Hwy-36 runs up the east, scrunched beneath the Mission Mountains, and is the summer home to countless roadside cherry and berry vendors. Both routes offer superb views of the deep alpine waters, though US-93 is closest to conical Wild Horse Island (daily dawn–dusk; free), the lake's largest island, which you can reach by boat. Dozens of bighorn sheep here make regular appearances to hikers on the moderate-to-steep trails.

Flathead Lake is a major destination for water activities, the prime spot for launching fishing and pleasure boats being Bigfork in the northeast. A balancing act of summer resort town and tourist trap, Bigfork merits an hour-long stroll, and you can stay in town at the smart and cozy Grand Hotel Bigfork, 425 Grand Dr (406/837-7377, www.grandhotelbigfork.com; 3–6 by season), or across the street at one of the six plushly decorated rooms of the Swan River Inn (406/837-2328, www.swanriverinn.com; 4–6, by season). For dining, there's fine nouveau-French fare at La Provence, 408 Bridge St (406/837-2923). However, don't miss the delicious, chocolate-dripping delights of Brookie's Cookies, 191 Mill St (406/837-2447), or the sugary temptations at Eva Gates, 456 Electric Ave (406/837-4356), the town's prime draw for its fudges, jams, and sweets made with huckleberries. A quasi-official fruit in these parts, the berries show up in everything from ice cream to beer.

Boats can be rented at Flathead Lake Boat Co., on the south end of the lake at Polson, 4 8th Ave (406/883-0999), while summertime lake cruises are offered aboard the Port Polson Princess ($17–23; 406/883-2448) from Best Western KwaTaqNuk Resort, 303 Hwy-93 E in Polson (406/883-3636 or 1-800/882-6363, www.kwataqnuk.com; 5), which also has a marina with boat rentals. As alternate chain accommodation, the Port Polson Inn (part of the Best Value group), also overlooking the lake from 502 Hwy-93 E (406/883-5385 or 1-800/654-0682, www.portpolsoninn.com; 4), is a bit less expensive.

Fifteen miles north of the lake, drab Kalispell is out of sight of the water, but is a good jumping-off point for trips around the lake or up to Glacier National Park. You can find out more about the attractions of the Flathead Valley at the visitors center, 15 Depot Park (406/756-9091, www.fcvb.org), while accommodation options in Kalispell include the stylish 1912 Kalispell Grand Hotel, 100 Main St (406/755-8100, www.kalispellgrand.com; 4); and the Hilltop Inn, 801 E Idaho St (406/755-4455, www.kalispellhilltopinn.com; 3), which is the best low-frills bargain in the area with clean, comfortable rooms with queen beds and kitchenettes. For decent food, try the Chinese dishes (plus a few American dishes and microbrews) at the Alley Connection, 22 1st St W (406/752-7077), or the upscale bistro fare, including tasty game and seafood, of Café Max, 121 Main St (406/755-7687). Montana Coffee Traders, 328 W Center St (406/756-2326), also has tasty wraps, salads, pasta, and burritos.

Whitefish

The tasteful resort of WHITEFISH, seventeen miles north of Kalispell, has a lively vibe, summer or winter. It lies on the south shore of beautiful Whitefish Lake in the shade of the Big Mountain Ski Resort (lift tickets $52; 406/862-1900, www.bigmtn.com), one of the area's big-name winter-sports draws, which is also excellent for its summer hiking. You can hike four hard miles up to a restaurant on top of the mountain and take a free chair-lift ride for the descent (uphill, it's $10). The narrow roads around the lake and foothills deserve to be cycled – bikes can be rented from Glacier Cyclery, 326 2nd St E ($25–28 a day; ☎ 406/862-6446).

Amtrak drops off downtown, off Central Avenue at 500 Depot St, en route to and from Glacier National Park. There's a useful tourist information counter in the depot; the local Chamber of Commerce is at 520 E 2nd St (☎ 1-877/862-3548, @ www.whitefishchamber.com). Rimrock's one bus line connects to Kalispell, Polson, and Missoula, and is based at 2640 Hwy-2 E (☎ 406/755-4011).

Staying in Whitefish presents several options: the Bunkhouse Travelers Inn & Hostel, 527 2nd St (☎ 406/862-3377), has basic bunk accommodation ($16), but it may be worth staying at one of the nicer B&Bs, such as the friendly little Duck Inn, by the river at 1305 Columbia Ave (☎ 406/862-3825 or 1-800/344-2377, @ www.duckinn.com; 4), whose ten units have soaking tubs and fireplaces; or the timber chic Hidden Moose Lodge, 1735 E Lakeshore Dr (☎ 1-888/733-6667, @ www.hiddenmooselodge.com; 6), excellent for its outdoor hot tub, hearty breakfasts, and rooms that offer smart decor and Jacuzzis or private decks. To really splurge, head out to Big Mountain, where Kandahar (☎ 406/862-6098, @ www.kandaharlodge.com; most units 6–9), is a stylish affair with its own day spa, sauna, gym, and Jacuzzi, and a wide range of rooms, suites, lofts, and studios.

For dining, the Great Northern Bar and Grill, 27 Central Ave (☎ 406/862-2816), is a busy spot with pool tables, deli food, and live music, while Truby's, 115 Central Ave (☎ 406/862-4979) is a fine choice for wood-fired pizza and pasta. Great Northern Brewing, 2 Central Ave (☎ 406/863-1000), is a top-notch tasting room for Whitefish's finest craft brewer, offering one free, six-ounce "taste" per person. If you're looking for a lively night out, the Hellroaring Saloon & Eatery (☎ 406/862-6364) on Big Mountain is the place to be – especially during ski season.

Glacier National Park

Awe-inspiring peaks, two thousand lakes, and a thousand miles of rivers, threading between thick forests and breezy meadows, make up what is easily one of America's finest attractions, GLACIER NATIONAL PARK – a haven for bighorn sheep, mountain goats, black and grizzly bears, wolves, and mountain lions. Although the park still holds fifty small glaciers, it takes its name from the huge flows of ice that carved these immense valleys twenty thousand years ago. Outside of summer, crisp air, freezing-cold waterfalls, and copious snowfall give the impression of being close to the Arctic Circle; in fact, the latitude here is lower than that of London.

There are several visitor centers. One is at the park's main, western entrance at Apgar, on the shores of gorgeous McDonald Lake, twenty miles east of Whitefish and just 35 miles south of the Canadian border (May–Oct hours vary, but at least 9am–4.30pm daily and until 8pm in summer; Nov–April Sat & Sun only), and another at the east gate at St Mary, seventy miles west of Shelby (daily: late May to late June & early Sept to mid-Oct 8am–5pm; late June to early July 8am–9pm; early July to early Sept 7am–8pm). The Logan Pass (early June to mid-Oct; hours vary, but always open at least 10am–5pm daily) visitor center stands at the top of the Going-to-the-Sun Road – the one through-road between the two entrances, usually only passable between early June and mid-October. The park itself is open year-round, however, and it's well worth trekking as far as Lake McDonald or St Mary's Lake even when the road is blocked and the visitor centers are closed. The entrance fee of $25 per vehicle (or $12 per individual on foot, bike or motorcycle) is good for seven days, but for an extra $5 you can get a year-round vehicle pass. For park information call ☎ 406/888-7800 or go to 🌐 www.nps.gov/glac.

Glacier, together with the adjacent, much smaller Waterton Lakes National Park (☎ 403/859-2224) in Canada, is part of Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park, though Going-to-the-Sun Road does not enter Canada. Both parks operate their own fees and regulations, and to get to Waterton's separate entrance, north of St Mary, you have to pass customs and pay a $7 entrance fee (camping is $14–33 per night).

The southern border of Glacier is skirted by the low-lying US-2, which remains open all year and is an attractive alternative drive. Amtrak trains follow the same route, stopping at West Glacier, a short walk from the west gate; East Glacier, thirty miles south of St Mary; and Essex, in between (summer only).

Intermountain (☎ 406/563-5246) operates a fairly frequent summer bus service from Missoula, Kalispell, Whitefish, and, to the east, Great Falls. Travelers arriving by public transportation can travel around the park via the bright-red vintage “jammer” buses (so called because of the need to jam the gears into place) that provide narrated sightseeing tours from the main lodges (June–Sept; $30–75; ☎ 406/892-2525, 🌐 www.glacierparkinc.com). There's also a functional, white-van Hiker's Shuttle (July–Labor Day; $8–24) that covers the popular west side of the park and traverses the Going-to-the-Sun Road, while the East Side Shuttle (June to mid-Sept; $8–40) connects Glacier Park Lodge to Waterton; the transfer point between the two lines is at Many Glacier Hotel. Sun Tours (June–Sept; ☎ 406/226-9220 or 1-800/786-9220, 🌐 www.glaciersuntours.com) offers guided tours led by members of the Blackfoot tribe.

Accommodation within the park

Accommodation within the park is run by Glacier Park Inc. (all reservations at ☎ 406/892-2525, 🌐 www.glacierparkinc.com), which also manages the striking Glacier Park Lodge in East Glacier (late May to Sept; $140), known for the massive Douglas-fir pillars in its huge lobby. Near West Glacier, the lovely Lake McDonald Lodge has an ideal shoreline location and simple motel rooms (June–Sept; ⑤) in the lodge itself, or more spacious annex rooms for $34 more, or small rustic cottages outside the complex (⑤). More upscale are the Prince of Wales Hotel in Waterton (June to mid-Sept), which has mountain-view and lakeview units (⑦) and luxurious suites (⑨). The Many Glacier Hotel (mid-June to mid-Sept) has pricey suites, with rooms for half that price (⑥–⑨). The park's cheapest accommodation is the Swiftcurrent Motor Inn at Many Glacier (mid-June to mid-Sept; ④, cottages ②–④), good for its access to trails on the northeast side. A bit nicer is the lakeside Rising Sun Motor Inn (mid-June to mid-Sept; ④), seven miles in from the east gate at St Mary, as well as the Village Inn at Apgar (June–Sept; ⑤), fronting Lake McDonald with great views.

The park's thirteen campgrounds – all first-come, first-served, most ranging from $12 to $17 – often fill up by late morning during July and August; ask at any visitor center for locations and availability or call ☎ 406/888-7800. For advanced reservations, call ☎ 1-800/365-CAMP. Most are open from June to mid-September, though Quartz Creek and Cut Bank offer cheap primitive campsites ($6), which may not include water. For overnight backpacking, get a permit from any visitor center.

Accommodation outside the park

The places to stay outside Glacier are at some remove from the park. The quaint 1910 Belton Chalet, two miles outside the western entrance (June–Oct; ☎ 406/888-5000, 🌐 www.beltonchalet.com; Ⓜ-Ⓜ), offers tastefully appointed rooms with period furniture, or pricier three-bedroom cottages with fireplaces and balconies; no accommodation has a phone or TV. One- and two-bedroom cabins are rented by the Glacier Outdoor Center, off Hwy-2 a half-mile from the west entrance (late-June to late-Aug; ☎ 406/888-5454, 🌐 www.glacierraftco.com; Ⓜ-Ⓜ); they offer nice modern décor, decks, kitchens, and fireplaces, though at steeper prices than elsewhere.

Halfway between the east and west park gates is Essex, where the atmospheric 1939 Izaak Walton Inn (☎ 406/888-5700, 🌐 www.izaakwaltoninn.com; Ⓜ) is the site of the Amtrak stop. Beside cozy wood-paneled rooms, four remodeled cabooses offer three-night stays for $675. The inn has a good restaurant for fish and burgers. In the village of East Glacier Park, near another Amtrak station, the simple Backpacker Inn hostel (☎ 406/226-9392), behind Serrano's Mexican Restaurant at 29 Dawson Ave, has three cabins: two are private with bathrooms ($20–30) and a third offers shared dorm space ($12 per person). Up in Polebridge, 28 miles north of the park's west entrance, largely via gravel road, the Northfork Hostel (☎ 406/888-5241, 🌐 www.nfhostel.com) is extremely cozy, with no electricity. Dorm beds cost $15 dollars and small private cabins start at $35, while teepees are $30.

Information on other lodging in the park's vicinity is available from Glacier Country (☎ 1-800/338-5072, 🌐 www.glaciermt.com), while popular alternative bases to the west of the park include Whitefish and Kalispell (see p.904).

Simply put, the fifty-mile Going-to-the-Sun Road is one of the most awe-inspiring scenic drives in the country. Driving it from west to east can take several hours (even when summer restrictions on vehicle size effectively ban RVs), creating the illusion that you'll be climbing forever. After a stealthy ascent of the foothills, each successive hairpin brings a new colossus in view. At the east end of ten-mile Lake McDonald, the road starts to climb in earnest. Snowmelt from waterfalls gushes across the road, spilling over the sheer drops on the other side. The winding route nudges over the Continental Divide at Logan Pass (6680ft) – a good spot to step out and enjoy the views and relax on a mild walk near the visitor center. Four miles on, there's an overlook at Jackson Glacier, one of the few glaciers visible from the roadside. Once you get down to the east gate, continue about five miles southeast on US-89 for an expansive view of the Great Plains, which stretch 1600 miles east to Chicago.

Most tourists travel no farther than the road itself, seeing the glories of nature from their car windows. However, Glacier is a true hiker's paradise, with exceptionally beautiful views at every turn – though you will have to be in shape to get to the end of the best trails. Good short trails start from Avalanche Creek on the west flank of the Divide. The mile-long Trail of the Cedars loop leads through dark forest to a wall of contoured vivid red sandstone, from where a four-mile path continues gently uphill, past several waterfalls, to glacier-fed Avalanche Lake. The most popular trail in the park – it can be teeming on weekends and holidays – begins at Logan Pass, following a boardwalk for a mile and a half across wildflower-strewn alpine meadows framed by extraordinary craggy peaks, en route to serene Hidden Lake.

At Swiftcurrent Lake, north of the east entrance and reached by the Many Glacier entrance, an easy two-mile loop trail runs along the lakeshore, and an exciting five-mile, one-way trail heads to Iceberg Lake, so called for the blocks of ice that float on its surface even in midsummer – which is the time you'll no doubt see more than a few guys jumping in for a few seconds to prove their mettle.

From St Mary Lake, you can weave a mile and a half up through fir forest to the crashing, frothing St Mary Falls and on to the taller Virginia Falls; combined with an early-morning boat trip from the Rising Sun launch to the trailhead (see below), this can be an experience verging on the sublime.

Down in the quiet southeastern end of the park, the two-mile Aster Park trail gives access to some of Glacier's most astounding scenery. Starting at Two Medicine Lake, framed by the majestic massifs, it leads through spruce forest into flower-filled meadows, passing a couple of beaver ponds and a nice waterfall before ascending steeply for a half-mile through the forest to a small outcrop. From here there are fantastic views of the mighty Sinopah and Rising Wolf mountains, and the calm lakes below.

Tour boats explore all of the large lakes, charging $10 for one-hour trips, including sunset cruises on Lake McDonald and St Mary Lake. You can also rent canoes, rowboats, and outboards. The lakes, teeming with cutthroat trout, are excellent for fishing; regulations are outlined in a free pamphlet available from visitor centers. Both Glacier Raft Co. (☎ 406/888-5454 or 1-800/235-6781, 🌐 www.glacieraftco.com) and Wild River Adventures (☎ 1-800/700-7056), based outside the west gate, offer half-day (around $45) and full-day (around $75) float trips down the middle fork of the Flathead River, running along the park boundary.

Although you've presumably come to embrace nature and see all manner of woodland creatures, pay heed to the signs marking most of the trails – this is grizzly bear country, and there's no guarantee of your safety. A handful of hikers have been mauled or killed by the huge beasts in recent years. Avoid traveling alone, being overly quiet, wandering off trails, wearing perfume. The park provides excellent literature and maps that give details on safety issues, but if you avoid hiking at dusk or in the early morning (prime time for bear activity) and carry bear spray (available from gun dealers), you're less likely to be the victim of an unexpected ursine encounter.

Eating and drinking

Food in the park, served in hotel dining rooms, is nothing special. The west side of the park isn't great for inventive cooking, either. You have to hit the Izaak Walton Inn in Essex (see p.907) for something tastier, but the best place to head is East Glacier Park, where Serrano's, 29 Dawson Ave (mid-April to mid-Oct; ☎ 406/226-9392), serves delicious Mexican food and microbrews, and Glacier Village, 305 Hwy-2 (☎ 406/226-4464), is the place to come for all things huckleberry, in traditional jams and pancakes, or even ladled on pork chops. Plus, there are native treats like fry bread, buffalo ribs, steaks, and burgers, and a solid selection of regional beers. On the northeast side of Glacier, the Two Sisters Café on Hwy-89 in Babb (☎ 406/732-5535) is a funky roadhouse famous for its outlandish décor, as well as its top-notch burgers, chili, and desserts.

Idaho

IDAHO, squeezed between Washington, Oregon, and Montana, was the last of the states to be penetrated by white settlers, and still today has many square miles of barely explored wilderness areas. Though much of its scenery deserves national-park status, its citizens have long been suspicious of federal authorities and tourists alike, and so it remains one of the country's most environmentally compelling places, despite prevalent anti-environmental attitudes. Indeed, the name "Idaho" was promoted by a mining lobbyist, who claimed it was a Shoshone word meaning "gem of the mountains"; he later admitted to inventing the word himself.

Whatever its political stances, Idaho is very much a destination for the outdoors enthusiast. Natural wonders in its five-hundred-mile stretch include Hells Canyon, America's deepest river gorge, the dramatic Sawtooth National Recreation Area, and the black, barren Craters of the Moon – not to mention the skiing mecca of Sun Valley. Beyond these, hikers and backpackers have the choice of no fewer than 81 mountain ranges, interspersed with virgin forest and lava plateaus, while the mighty Snake and Salmon rivers offer endless fishing and whitewater rafting.

In 1805, Lewis and Clark declared central Idaho's bewildering labyrinth of razor-edged peaks and wild waterways the most difficult leg of their epic trek from St Louis to the Pacific. Only their Shoshone guides enabled them to get through; to this day, there is no east-west road across the heart of the state. The central wilderness divides the state into two distinct halves. The heavily forested north is interspersed with glacial lakes fronted by resorts like Sandpoint and Coeur d'Alene; in the south, irrigation begun in the 1880s – partly instigated by the still-dominant Mormons – has transformed the scrubland along the Snake River into the fertile fields responsible for the state's license-plate tag of "Famous Potatoes." Idaho's isolation and small (one million) population have kept it well out of the mainstream of US culture. Indeed, some of its more notorious residents have included neo-Nazi white supremacists, evangelicals awaiting the Second Coming, and outback survivalists preparing for nuclear holocaust.

Getting around Idaho

Bus services between northern and southern Idaho are very poor, and a car is essential for travel. Only one Amtrak route – the Empire Builder – crosses the state, linking Seattle with Chicago, and stopping only at Sandpoint in northern Idaho. Boise has an airport, though Spokane, WA and Salt Lake City, UT can be more convenient for northern and southern Idaho, respectively.

Southern Idaho

Dropping down into southern Idaho from the natural riches of western Montana can be dispiriting. Though the initial leg on I-15 is visually compelling, with the magnificent Mesa Falls as a worthwhile detour along Hwy-47 and Yellowstone only a short distance east, the scenery along the interstate soon consists of farming plots and a few deserted stretches of sand and rocks. Only state capital Boise provides any urban interest, as Idaho Falls and Pocatello are both drab. However, a trip into the interior along US-20 brings you to the spectacular ragged outcrops of the Sawtooth Mountains, and an hour away is the forbidding but fascinating landscape of Craters of the Moon. Also, during summer, the much-hyped Sun Valley ski resort is a good base for mountain bikers, rafters, and hikers, and has the best bars and restaurants in this remote zone, matching the glitz of any Rockies ski scene.

Craters of the Moon National Monument

At first sight, the eerie Craters of the Moon National Monument, ninety miles west of Idaho Falls, looks like a sooty-black wasteland. It spreads on for 83 square miles, and closer inspection reveals a surreal cornucopia of lava cones, tubes, buttes, craters, caves, and splatter cones. Here and there, sagebrush clings to the bleak soil, and trees have been battered by the fierce winds into bonsai-like contortions. All these features were formed without the aid of a volcano; instead, at several-thousand-year intervals over the last thirteen thousand years, successive waves of lava have poured from gaping wounds in the earth's crust, known collectively as the Great Rift; the most recent event occurred two thousand years ago.

The park visitor center is on US-20 (daily summer 8am–6pm, rest of year 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 208/527-3257, 🌐 www.nps.gov/crmo); entrance for seven days is $8 per car, or $4 per bicycle and pedestrian, and spaces at the 50-site Lava Flow campground cost $10 (May–Oct). A seven-mile loop road, open late April to mid-November, takes you around myriad lava fields, where trails of varying difficulty lead past assorted cones and monoliths – don't stray from the paths, as the rocks are razor-sharp and can reach temperatures of 200°F. Highlights include the one-mile trail past hollow tree molds where the ancient wood ignited, leaving a craggy hole; the steep half-mile trek to the top of the Inferno Cone, with commanding views of the region; and the eight-mile Wilderness Trail (for which you will need a free wilderness permit, from the visitor center), which leads deep into the backcountry past cinder cones, ropy lava flows, and the blown-out expanse of Echo Crater. There are also caves here and elsewhere in the monument, molten lava tubes that can be explored alone or on ranger-led tours. In winter, the road is open for groomed cross-country skiing; for a conditions report, call ☎ 208/527-3257.

Halfway between the park and Idaho Falls on US-20, the unassuming red-brick Experimental Breeder Reactor No. 1 (EBR-1) – the world's first nuclear-power station – stands just south of the 890-square-mile Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. This National Historic Landmark was the place where an early version of a reactor was set up and provided the first application of electricity-producing nuclear power in 1951. Even the first prototype nuclear submarine was built and tested here. Now decommissioned, the site is home to a free museum (summer daily 9am–5pm; 🌐 www.inl.gov).

Sun Valley

Although Sun Valley is the common label for the entire Wood River Valley area – in central southern Idaho, 150 miles west of Idaho Falls and east of Boise – technically it is just the name of a ski resort (🌐 www.sunvalley.com). This was the 1930s brainchild of Union Pacific Railroad chairman (and later politician and diplomat) Averell Harriman, who, on discovering his railroad was obliged to maintain a passenger service, decided an alpine ski center would be an ideal stimulus for tourism. His scout, Austrian ski champion Count Felix Schaffgotsch, decided on Dollar and Bald mountains, here in the relatively gentle foothills of the Sawtooths near the old sheep-ranching village of KETCHUM. The Sun Valley name was chosen because the snow withstood even the brightest winter sun; early brochures showed skiers stripped to the waist. The world's first chair lift was built here in 1936, and the resort was an instant success, attracting Tinseltown figures like Clark Gable and Gary Cooper, who came to hunt and fish. Ernest Hemingway completed For Whom the Bell Tolls as a guest of the resort in 1939, and lived in Ketchum for the last two years of his life before his suicide; his very plain grave can be found in the town cemetery. Today's celebrity notables include the likes of Bruce Willis and Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Sun Valley's season runs from late November to April; as well as downhill skiing (daily lift pass $74 at Bald Mountain, $32 at Dollar Mountain), you can also set off cross-country. Ketchum itself is a lively little town with plenty of accommodation, and an oasis of nightlife in an otherwise thinly populated zone. Up to a point, it resembles the Colorado ski hamlets, though summer trade is not quite as busy.

Among summer outdoor activities are cycling along thirty miles of excellent trails – including the former railroad tracks, long since paved over – as well as mountain biking on the superb lift-accessed trails on Bald Mountain (lift ticket $20 per day), and rafting on the rivers to the north. The Sports Complex (☎208/622-4111) on Sun Valley Road, south of Dollar Road, offers a Nordic ski center, tennis, ice skating, winter sleigh rides, and guided horseback rides.

Practicalities

There's free transportation on the KART bus system (☎208/726-7576, 🌐www.kart-sunvalley.com), throughout the area, and Ketchum's visitor center, 371

N Main St, runs a free reservation service for accommodation (Mon–Fri 8am–6pm, Sat 9am–4pm, Sun 9am–2pm; ☎ 1-866/305-0408 or 1-800/234-0599, 🌐 visitsunvalley.com). Room rates are highest in summer and winter, but you can save a bundle by staying in nearby Hailey, twelve miles south.

The luxurious 600-room Sun Valley Lodge resort is expensive in season, though worth every cent in spring and fall (☎ 208/622-4111 or 1-800/786-8259, 🌐 www.sunvalley.com; winter & summer ☀, spring & fall 🍂), with in-room flat-screen TVs, high-speed internet access, and DVD players; for similar prices, the resort's Sun Valley Inn (same contact) offers mock-Swiss Alps design. If you want to save money, options in Hailey include the Inn at Ellsworth Estate, 702 Third Ave S (☎ 208/788-6354, 🌐 www.ellsworthestate.com; ☀), with clean and tasteful B&B rooms, some with fireplaces and DVD players; and the Featherbed Inn, 416 First Ave N (☎ 208/578-5227, 🌐 www.featherbedinnidaho.com; 🍂), whose four rooms have private decks and DVD players, with an onsite hot tub.

The dining room at the Sun Valley Lodge (☎ 208/622-2150) serves some of the best upscale meals in Idaho, typically nouveau French using fresh local ingredients, while in Ketchum the more affordable Ketchum Grill, 520 East Ave (☎ 208/726-4460), has plenty of delicious pizza, pasta and steak options. Breakfast-and-lunch hangout Cristina's, 520 Second St E (☎ 208/726-4499), serves deli meats and Asian salads on its back patio, plus a nice Sunday brunch. Whiskey Jacques, 251 N Main St (☎ 208/726-5297), is a good local bar, with live music by mid-level national acts, and a solid range of pizzas and burgers.

North of Ketchum and Sun Valley, Hwy-75 climbs through rising tracts of forests and mountains to top out after twenty miles at Galena Summit, one of the most spectacular panoramic viewpoints in the Rockies. Spreading out far below, the meadows of the Sawtooth Valley stretch northward, bearing minimal traces of the long-abandoned gold-mining settlements. The simple road meanders beside the young Salmon River, whose headwaters rise in the forbidding icy peaks to the south, as the serrated ridge of the Sawtooth Mountains forms an impenetrable barrier along the western horizon. Backpackers are guaranteed solitude in these climes, dotted with some five hundred remote alpine lakes – pick up details of camping sites and hiking trails at the Sawtooth National Recreation Area headquarters, eight miles north of Ketchum (daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 208-727-5013, 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/r4/sawtooth). Fly-fishing for brown trout, steelhead, and salmon is a popular pastime here as well.

At tiny STANLEY, a few miles north, dirt roads radiating from the junction of Hwy-75 and Hwy-21 have assorted motels, the better of which include the Western-flavored Valley Creek Motel (☎ 208/774-3606, 🌐 www.stanleyidaho.com; ☀), whose nice rooms have kitchenettes; and the large, cozy Mountain Village Lodge (☎ 208/774-3661, 🌐 www.mountainvillage.com; 🍂), which has sixty comfortably furnished rooms with fridges and microwaves and a natural hot-springs spa. In summer, Stanley's main activity is organizing rafting trips (check in advance; weather conditions – such as heavy snowmelt – can make conditions too dangerous). Operators include The River Company (☎ 208/788-5775, 🌐 www.therivercompany.com), which charges $62–80.

Twelve miles east of Stanley at the town of Sunbeam, you begin the 45-mile scenic drive that leads into the historic settings preserved at the Land of the Yankee Fork State Park, whose interpretive center (daily 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 208/879-5244) is at the park's eastern junction, near Challis at the intersection of highways 75 and 93. Along the route you can explore the preserved ghost towns of Custer and Bonanza, the Yankee Fork Gold Dredge, a nearly thousand-ton barge that mined gold from stream gravel, and the Custer Motorway (also known as Forest Road 070), an old, rustic toll road curving northwest away from Hwy 75, with numerous historic attractions and rugged trails leading off from it. Camping, rafting, fishing, and cross-country skiing are good options in this remote wilderness.

Boise

One of the few highlights of otherwise bleak and arid southwestern Idaho is the verdant, likable community of BOISE (pronounced “Boy-zee”), straddling I-84 some 350 miles from Salt Lake City. Boise was established in 1862 for the benefit of pioneers using the Oregon Trail and, after adapting (or misspelling) the name originally given to the area by French trappers – les bois, the woods – the earliest residents boosted the town’s appearance by planting hundreds more trees.

The City

To explore Boise’s compact downtown, start at the central State Capitol, Jefferson St and Capitol Blvd (Mon–Fri 7am–6pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm), a stately Neoclassical structure that exhibits gemstones such as the star garnet, found only in southeast Asia and Idaho. Nearby, Old Boise Historic District (📍 www.oldboise.com) is an elegant area of stone-trimmed brick restaurants and shops. The unusual Idaho Basque Museum and Cultural Center, 611 Grove St (Tues–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 11am–3pm; $2; 📍 www.basquemuseum.com), is in a former boarding house that was for many years home to Basque immigrants from the western Pyrenees, who came to equally mountainous central Idaho to employ their herding skills. The museum traces the Basque cultural heritage through antiques, relics, photographs, and key manuscripts.

It’s impossible not to be impressed by the contrast between the urban greenery and the humpy desert hills all around. The city is rightly proud of the Greenbelt, some nineteen miles of paths that crisscross the tranquil Boise River to link nine separate parks. In Julia Davis Park, the Idaho Historical Museum (May–Sept Tues–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Oct–April Tues–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 11am–5pm; $2; 📍 www.idahohistory.net/museum.html) displays artifacts from Native American and Basque peoples, details the difficult experience of the Chinese miners of the 1870s and 1880s, and expounds on the agricultural and industrial history of the region. Also, the Pioneer Village preserves cabins and houses dating from as early as 1863, among them an adobe-styled home that belonged to the mayor in the 1870s.

The Old Idaho Penitentiary, at 2445 Old Penitentiary Rd, off Warm Springs Ave (daily summer 10am–5pm; rest of year noon–5pm; $5; 📍 www.idahohistory.net/oldpen.html), is an imposing, sandstone-walled citadel that feels like a desolate outpost, despite being just a mile from downtown. Constructed in 1870, it remained open until 1974. Self-guided tours take you through the cramped solitary-confinement unit, and the gallows chamber where the last hanging in Idaho was carried out in 1957. A small museum displays confiscated weapons and mugshots of former inmates, including one Harry Orchard, who in 1905 killed the state governor by attaching a bomb to his front gate and served out his sentence here, dying in 1954 at the age of 88. Oddly situated beside the prison, the Idaho Botanical Gardens (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun noon–4pm, May–Oct Sat & Sun closes 6pm; $4; 📍 www.idahobotanicalgarden.org) has twelve themed gardens adorned with irises, roses, herbs, and cacti, with one of them based around native plants that Meriwether Lewis reported in his 1805 explorer’s journal.

Finally, the Idaho Shakespeare Festival, 5657 Warm Springs Ave (May–Sept; tickets $26–35; ☎ 208/336-9221, 🌐 www.idahoshakespeare.org), may not have the national reputation of its Oregon counterpart (see p.1209), but performances can be inspired and tickets are usually cheaper and more readily available. Around five plays are presented per season, with two or three of them penned by the Bard.

Greyhound buses stop at 1212 W Bannock St, and Boise Urban Stages (BUS; tickets $1; ☎ 208/336-1010) run a fairly extensive local bus service. The visitor center is at 312 S 9th St, Suite 100 (April–Sept Mon–Fri 10am–6pm; Oct–March Mon–Fri 10am–3pm; ☎ 208/344-5338, 🌐 www.boise.org). Downtown's best hotels are The Grove, 245 S Capitol Blvd (☎ 208/333-8000 or 1-800/426-0670, 🌐 www.grovehotelboise.com; Ⓢ), which has luxury accommodation in large, well-appointed rooms, many with great views over the city and mountains beyond, and the Owyhee Plaza, 1109 Main St (☎ 208/343-4611 or 1-800/233-4611, 🌐 www.owyheeplaza.com; Ⓢ), a renovated 1910 hotel in the heart of downtown with an outdoor pool and in-room fridges and high-speed internet access. If you're on a tight budget, try the restaurant-hotel Leku Ona (☎ 208/345-6665, 🌐 www.lekuonaid.com; Ⓢ), whose five boutique rooms are basic but tasteful, and have the advantage of being above one of the city's finest Basque restaurants, serving up a range of seafood. The nicest B&B is the Idaho Heritage Inn B&B, 109 W Idaho St (☎ 208/342-8066, 🌐 www.idheritageinn.com; Ⓢ), a lovely Victorian building that was once the residence of Governor Chase Clark and later Senator Frank Church, with six agreeable rooms.

Good options for eating in Boise include Goldy's, 108 S Capitol Blvd (☎ 208/345-4100), where you can create your own breakfast combos for less than $10, and the Grape Escape, 800 W Idaho St (☎ 208/368-0200), a fine bistro offering good-value Latin dishes and Tuesday-night wine tastings. Bar Gernika Basque Pub and Eatery, 202 Capitol Blvd (☎ 208/344-2175), is excellent for its authentic specialties – particularly the range of tapas, stews, and lamb grinders. Appealing downtown bars include the bustling Bittercreek Alehouse, 246 N 8th St (☎ 208/345-1813), with its dozens of microbrews, and Bardenay Restaurant & Distillery, 610 Grove St (☎ 208/426-0538), which distills its own gin, rum, and vodka and features a nice range of affordable, tasty seafood. After dining, check out The Big Easy, 416 9th St (☎ 208/367-1212), one of Idaho's top rock venues, with regular national touring acts.

Northern Idaho

The stark wilderness of the Sawtooth, Salmon River, and Clearwater mountains make traveling through the heart of Idaho impossible. There are only two routes between south and north: up the eastern fringe from Idaho Falls, or, more enjoyably, along US-95 via Hwy-55 out of Boise. At first barren and infertile, not until just before Lewiston does the scenery unfold into pastoral farmland. The Nez Percé hunted buffalo, gathered berries, and fished here for hundreds of years, until gold was discovered and they were forced to beat a bloody retreat.

The heavily forested far north of the Idaho Panhandle is broken by hundreds of deep glacial lakes, the largest of which host resort towns such as Coeur d'Alene and Sandpoint. While not major destinations, they can make good day-stops.

Hells Canyon region

From the busy little water-sports and ski resort of McCALL, 110 miles north of Boise, Hwy-55 climbs steadily to merge with US-95 and follow the turbulent Little Salmon River. Just south of the hamlet of Riggins, thirty miles on, comes the only good opportunity to see Hells Canyon from Idaho. With an average depth of 5500ft this is the deepest river gorge in the US, though visually it lacks the impact of the steeper-walled Grand Canyon. Nevertheless, it is impressive, with Oregon's Wallowa and Eagle Cap ranges rising behind it and the river glimmering far down below. Hwy-241 leads toward the overlooks; the final few miles of dirt road require a four-wheel-drive vehicle and permission from the Riggins forest ranger office on Hwy-95 (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎208/628-3916, @www.fs.fed.us/hellscanyon). The canyon is also accessible by road from Oregon and by boat from Lewiston.

The Nez Percé

The first whites to encounter the Nez Percé people were the weak, hungry, and disease-ridden Lewis and Clark expedition in 1805. The natives gave them food and shelter, and cared for their animals until the party was ready to carry on westward.

Relations between the Nez Percé (so called by French-Canadian trappers because of their shell-pierced noses) and whites remained agreeable for over fifty years – until the discovery of gold, and white pressure for property ownership, led the government to persuade some renegade Nez Percé to sign a treaty in 1863 that took away three-quarters of tribal land. As settlers started to move into the hunting grounds of the Wallowa Valley in the early 1870s, the majority of the Nez Percé, under the leadership of Chief Joseph, refused to recognize the agreement. In 1877, after much vacillation, the government decided to enact its terms and gave the tribe thirty days to leave. The Nez Percé asked for more time to round up their livestock and avoid crossing the Snake River at a dangerous time; the general in charge refused.

Ensuing skirmishes resulted in the deaths of a handful of settlers – the first whites ever to be attacked by Nez Percé – and a large army force began to gather to round up the Nez Percé. Chief Joseph then embarked upon the famous Retreat of the Nez Percé. Around 250 warriors (protecting twice as many women, children, and old people) outmaneuvered army columns many times their size, launching frequent guerrilla attacks in a series of narrow escapes. After four months and 1700 miles, the Nez Percé were cornered just thirty miles from the safety of the Canadian border. Chief Joseph then (reportedly) made his famous speech of surrender, “Hear me my chiefs! I am tired. My heart is sick and sad. From where the sun now stands I will fight no more forever.”

The Nez Percé had been told that they would be put on a reservation in Idaho; instead, they were taken to Oklahoma, where the marshy land caused a malaria epidemic. Chief Joseph died in 1904 on the Colville reservation in Washington, but decades later the Nez Percé were allowed to return to the Northwest, where today some fifteen hundred live in a reservation between Lewiston and Grangeville – a minute fraction of their original territory.

The Nez Percé National Historic Park, containing 38 separate sites, is spread over a huge range of north-central Idaho, eastern Oregon, and western Montana. At the visitor center in Spalding, ten miles east of Lewiston (daily 8am–4.30pm, summer closes 5pm; free; ☎208/843-2261, www.nps.gov/nepe), the onsite Museum of Nez Percé Culture focuses on tribal arts and crafts. The heavily ravined White Bird Battlefield, seventy miles further south on US-95, was where the Native Americans inflicted 34 deaths on the US Army at no cost to themselves, in the first major battle of the Retreat. Further exhibits on Nez Percé history can be found in the Wallowa County Museum in Joseph, Oregon (see p.1219).

RIGGINS itself reclines in a steeply rising T-shaped canyon. This is prime white-water-rafting country, and outfitters, spread along a one-mile stretch of the one-street village, outnumber cafés and shops. The Chamber of Commerce (☎ 208/628-3778, 🌐 www.rigginsidaho.com) has details. From Riggins, US-95 heads north along the Salmon River Valley for thirty miles to the rumpled terrain around White Bird, the start of Nez Percé country.

Other than the Lewiston Round-up, a massive rodeo held on the second weekend of September (☎ 208/746-6324, 🌐 www.lewistonroundup.org), there are few compelling reasons to visit industrial LEWISTON, 110 miles north of Riggins. It is, however, a starting point for a fantastic journey through Hells Canyon on the Salmon River. Boats sail past abandoned mine shafts and tribal caves, with mountain goats, bobcats, snakes, and birds of prey adding further interest. Snake River Adventures, 227 Snake River Ave (☎ 1-800/262-8874, 🌐 www.snakeriveradventures.com), offers an all-day whitewater-rafting trip costing around $200 including lunch. Contact the Lewiston Chamber of Commerce, 111 Main St (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm, ☎ 208/743-3531, 🌐 www.lewistonchamber.org) for information on other outfitters.

Moscow

The thirty miles of US-95 between Lewiston and MOSCOW wind through the beautiful rolling hillsides of the fertile Palouse Valley – a vivid patchwork of green lentils, bright yellow rape, soft white wheat, thick black topsoil, and red barns and farmhouses. Moscow itself is a friendly, culturally rich town that makes a good overnight stop, with ten thousand year-round residents and a similar number of University of Idaho students. Although there aren't any major sights, bookstores, galleries, bars, and cafés line the tree-shaded and partly pedestrianized Main Street, the only shopping thoroughfare. Theater, music, and independent cinema are on offer throughout the year, while summer sees a sprinkling of arts festivals: the Moscow Artwalk (June–Sept; ☎ 208/883-7036) brings together nearly forty artists, galleries, and the public for free exhibits that are anything but provincial; and the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival (☎ 208/885-6231) runs for a week in February and showcases big names new and old.

Moscow's visitor center is at 411 S Main St (☎ 208/882-1800, 🌐 www.moscowchamber.com). Northwest Trailways runs between Spokane and Boise and stops at the basic Royal Motor Inn, 120 W Sixth St (☎ 208/882-2581; 📍), whose rooms have fridges and microwaves. The Mark IV Motor Inn, 414 N Main St (☎ 208/882-7557, 🌐 www.markIVmotorinn.com; 📍), has the same amenities, plus a nice pool and hot tub. There are also a half-dozen B&Bs in the area, the most distinctive of which is Mary Janes Farm, 1000 Wild Iris Lane (☎ 1-888/750-6004, 🌐 www.maryjanesfarm.org/bb; 📍), a pleasant spot with primitive facilities where you're expected to chip in with the farm duties while soaking in the bucolic atmosphere. Good places to eat include Wheatberries Bake Shop, 531 S Main St (☎ 208/882-4618), which has nice sandwiches, espresso drinks, soups, and meat-pie "pasties"; the Moscow Food Co-op, 121 E Fifth St (☎ 208/882-8537), with its vegetarian-leaning soups and fresh breads, and deli sandwiches; and the stylish Red Door, 215 S Main St (☎ 208/882-7830), excellent for its seafood, game, and steak.

Coeur d'Alene

No longer strictly identified with the neo-Nazis who made their home in nearby Hayden Lake, COEUR D'ALENE, fifty miles north of Moscow on US-95, is now best known for its phenomenally expensive Coeur d'Alene Resort, which completely dominates the unremarkable downtown and is worth the money if you want to spend most of your time golfing (☎ 208/765-4000, @ www.cdareort.com; 📍). West of the resort at Independence Point, 90-minute cruises depart for a closer view of the lake (summer 4.30–6pm, rest of year 12.30–2pm; $17.75; ☎ 208/765-2300) or a six-hour journey through the scenic St Joe River corridor (summer Sun 11.30am–5.30pm & Wed 10am–4pm; $32.75), where all kinds of wildlife are on view. You can also see the lake on a twenty-minute seaplane flight from here via Brooks Seaplane ($50; ☎ 208/664-2842, @ www.brooksseaplane.com).

Greyhound buses stop at 137 E Spruce Ave (☎ 208/664-3343), and free local transit is available on Idaho City Link (☎ 1-877/941-RIDE, @ www.idahocitylink.com). The visitor center is at 1621 N Third St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 1-877/782-9232, @ www.coeurdalene.org), which has a good range of free, helpful publications. Aside from the resort and the usual chain motels, your accommodation choices revolve around B&Bs, the best of which include Wolf Lodge Creek (☎ 1-800/919-9653, @ www.wolfodge.com; 📍), fifteen miles from Coeur d'Alene, five rustic units that offer fireplaces and suites with balconies and hot tubs; and the Roosevelt, 105 Wallace Ave (☎ 208/765-5200, @ www.therooseveltinn.com; 📍), which, aside from the usual Victorian chintz, has a gym, sauna, and hot tub – all in a renovated brick schoolhouse built in 1905. For eating out, Beverly's is a chic choice for seafood and meat in the Coeur d'Alene Resort (☎ 208/765-4000), serving up the likes of king crab and rack of elk; and Brix, 317 Sherman Ave (☎ 208/665-7407), is good for its tasty and affordable pizzas and more expensive steak and lamb chops. The largest selection of microbrews is poured at Capone's Sports Pub and Grill, 751 N 4th St (☎ 208/667-4843).

Silver Mountain and Wallace

About forty miles east of Coeur d'Alene on I-90, you'll come to Kellogg and the surprisingly good ski hill of SILVER MOUNTAIN (☎ 208/783-1111 or 1-800/204-6428, @ www.silvermt.com). It has the world's longest single-stage gondola (3.1 miles; rides $15), and is open year-round for fine skiing in winter ($40), and some good mountain biking (rental $30–50 per day) and hiking in summer.

A further ten miles east are the authentic Western streets of friendly WALLACE, where most of the town's buildings are listed on the National Register of Historic Buildings and evoke strong images of its silver-mining days. A fun, 75-minute trolley-car ride, the Sierra Silver Mine Tour, leaves from 420 N Fifth St (May–Sept daily tours on the half-hour 9am–4pm; $10; ☎ 208/752-5151, @ www.silverminetour.org) and travels the town's streets before taking you down to the mine, where you'll descend a thousand feet to appreciate the hard labor endured by miners a century ago. To find out more about how old-timers dug for shiny metal, drop by the Wallace District Mining Museum, 590 Bank St (summer daily 9am–6pm; $2; ☎ 208/556-1592), which has replicas, photos, and artifacts from the golden and silvery days. Wallace isn't a place to linger for long, but if you want to stay here, the Jameson Inn, 304 6th St (☎ 208/556-6000; 📍), has a half-dozen rooms with access to a pool, hot tub, and sauna, but shared bathrooms. It also has agreeable food in its dining room, where you can enjoy lunch or dinner surrounded by vintage furnishing and decor.

Sandpoint

Forty-four miles north of Coeur d'Alene, buzzing little SANDPOINT lies at the northwestern end of Lake Pend Oreille (pronounced "PON-duh-ray"). Smaller and less commercialized than Coeur d'Alene, Sandpoint's downtown overlooks placid Sandy Creek but its main attractions are somewhat further out. At the south end of the lake, Farragut State Park, 13400 Ranger Rd (☎ 208/683-2425), has four thousand acres for hiking, camping, and the like. To the northeast, the spiky Selkirk Mountains hold the Schweitzer Mountain Resort, northern Idaho's best ski resort (☎ 208/263-9555, 🌐 www.schweitzer.com). Lift tickets are $49 and night skiing is $15; in summer you can use one of the lifts for hiking and mountain biking, for $15. But if you're looking for more old-fashioned entertainment, venture 25 miles south on Hwy-95 to Silverwood Theme Park (May–Oct hours vary; $33, kids $20; ☎ 208/683-3400, 🌐 www.silverwoodthemepark.com), one of the rare theme parks in the northern Rockies, where you can indulge in roller coasters, water slides, and some sixty other rides and attractions.

Amtrak trains pass through early in the morning in Sandpoint – the only stop in Idaho – at 450 Railroad Ave. Accommodation includes the elegant Inn at Sand Creek, 105 S First Ave (☎ 208/255-2821, 🌐 www.innatsandcreek.com; 📍), whose suites come with internet access, VCRs, fireplaces, and smart modern decor; and the Coit House, 502 N Fourth Ave (☎ 208/265-4035, 🌐 www.coithouse.com; 📍), a tasteful 1907 Victorian B&B within walking distance of downtown and the lake. Good dining can be found at the Sand Creek Grill at the Inn at Sand Creek (see above), with upscale Northwest cuisine, and MickDuff's, 312 N First Ave (☎ 208/255-4351), for its solid sandwiches and burgers and half-dozen handcrafted microbrews. One of the best bars is Eichardts, 212 Cedar St (☎ 208/263-4005), which has a dozen microbrews and local rock bands on weekends.

The Southwest

The four sparsely populated Southwestern desert states of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Nevada are extraordinary and unforgettable. They stretch from Texas to California across an elemental landscape ranging from towering monoliths of red sandstone to snowcapped mountains, on a high desert plateau that repeatedly splits open to reveal yawning canyons. The raw power of the scenery is overwhelming, and is complemented by the emphatic presence of numerous Native American cultures, and the palpable legacy of America's Wild West frontier.

Among the region's earliest inhabitants were the Ancestral Puebloans. While their settlements and cliff palaces, abandoned seven centuries ago, are now evocative ruins, their direct descendants, the Pueblo peoples of New Mexico and the Hopi in Arizona, still lead similar lifestyles, in the same general vicinity. Less sedentary tribes, such as the Navajo and the Apache, migrated into the Southwest from the fourteenth century onwards. They adopted local agricultural and craft techniques and appropriated vast tracts of territory, which they in turn soon had to defend against bands of European immigrants. The first such, in 1540, was a party of Spanish explorers led by Coronado, who spent two years fruitlessly searching for cities of gold. Sixty years later, Hispanic colonists founded the province of New Mexico, an ill-defined region that covered not only all of the Southwest but much of modern California and Colorado; many of the Catholic missions they established remain intact. Not until 1848 – by which time New Mexico had spent thirty years as a neglected backwater of the newly independent nation of Mexico – was the region forcibly taken over by the United States. Almost immediately, large numbers of outsiders began to pass through on their way to Gold Rush California.

Thereafter, violent confrontations increased between the US government and the Native Americans. The entire Navajo population was rounded up and forcibly removed to the barren plains of eastern New Mexico in 1864 (though they were soon allowed to return to northeastern Arizona), and the Apache, under warrior chiefs Cochise and Geronimo, fought extended battles with the US cavalry. Though the nominal intention was to open up Indian lands to newly American settlers, few ever succeeded in extracting a living from this harsh terrain.

One exception were the Mormons (the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints), whose flight from religious persecution brought them by the late 1840s to the alkaline basin of Utah's Great Salt Lake. Through sheer hard work, and the cooperative management of limited water resources, they established what amounted to an independent country, with outlying communities all over the Southwest. They still constitute seventy percent of Utah's population, and maintain effective control of the state's government.

Despite their common heritage, each of the four Southwestern states remains distinct. New Mexico bears the most obvious traces of long-term settlement, the Native American pueblos of the north coexisting alongside towns that clearly retain their Spanish Colonial identity, like Santa Fe, Albuquerque, and Taos. In Arizona, the history of the Wild West is more conspicuous, in towns such as Tombstone, site of the OK Corral. Over a third of the state belongs to Native American tribes, including the Apache, Hopi, and Navajo, most of whom live in the red-rock lands of the northeast corner, notably amid the splendor typified by the Canyon de Chelly and Monument Valley.

The canyon country of northern Arizona – even the immense Grand Canyon – won't prepare you for the uninhabited but compelling landscape of southern Utah, where Zion and Bryce canyons are the best known of a string of national parks and monuments. Moab, poised in the east between majestic Canyonlands and the surreal Arches, has become a top destination for youthful outdoors enthusiasts. Nevada, on the other hand, is nothing short of desolate; gamblers are lured in the millions by the bright lights of Las Vegas, but away from the casinos there's little to see or do.

You can count on warm sunshine anywhere in the Southwest for nine months of the year, with incredible sunsets most evenings. Summer is the peak tourist season, for no good reason – air temperatures topping 100°F can make the outdoors unbearable, while in late summer awesome thunderstorms sweep in without warning, causing flash floods and forest fires. By October, perhaps the best time to come, the crowds are gone and in the mountains and canyons the leaves turn red and gold. Winter brings snow to higher elevations – there's excellent skiing in northern Utah and in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains of New Mexico – while spring sees wild flowers bloom in otherwise barren desert. Note that the climate varies sharply according to elevation, with mountains often 30°F cooler than the plains.

More than almost anywhere in the US, the backcountry wildernesses of the Southwest are ideal for camping and backpacking expeditions. It's vital to be prepared for the harshness of the desert: always carry water, and if you venture off the beaten track let someone know your plans.

Unless you have your own vehicle, many of the most fascinating corners of the region are utterly inaccessible. Scheduled public transportation runs almost exclusively between the big cities – which are not at all the point of visiting the region.

THE SOUTHWEST

New Mexico

New Mexico

Settled in turn by Native Americans, Spaniards, Mexicans, and Yankees, NEW MEXICO is among the most ethnically and culturally diverse states in the US. Each successive group has built upon the legacy of its predecessors; their histories and achievements are intertwined, and in some ways the late-coming white Americans have had comparatively little impact. Signs of the region's rich heritage are everywhere, from ancient pictographs and cliff dwellings to the design of the state's license plates, taken from a Zia symbol for the sun – the one near-constant fact of life in this arid land.

New Mexico's indigenous peoples – especially the Pueblo Indians, the heirs of the Ancestral Puebloans – provide a sense of cultural continuity. After the Pueblo Revolt of 1680 had forced a temporary Spanish withdrawal into Mexico, the missionary endeavor here became less brutal than elsewhere. The proselytizing padres co-opted the natives without destroying their traditional ways of life, as local deities and celebrations were incorporated into Catholic practice. Somewhat bizarrely to outsiders, grand churches still dominate many Pueblo settlements, often adjacent to the underground ceremonial chambers known as kivas.

The Americans who took over from the Mexicans in 1848 saw New Mexico as a useless wasteland. But for a few mining booms and range wars – such as the Lincoln County War, which brought Billy the Kid to fame (see p.947) – New Mexico was relatively undisturbed until it finally became a state in 1912. During World War II, it was the base of operations for the top-secret Manhattan Project, which built and detonated the first atomic bomb, and since then it has been home to America's premier weapons research outposts. By and large, people here work close to the land, mining, farming, and ranching.

Northern New Mexico holds the magnificent landscapes of the Rio Grande Valley, which cradles both Santa Fe, the adobe-fronted capital, and the artists' colony of Taos, with its nearby pueblo. The broad swath of central New Mexico along I-40 – the interstate that succeeded the old Route 66 – pivots around the state's biggest city, Albuquerque, with the extraordinary mesa-top Pueblo village of Acoma ("Sky City") an hour's drive west. In wild, wide-open southern New Mexico, deep Carlsbad Caverns are the main attraction, while you can still stumble upon mining and cattle-ranching towns that have hung on since the end of the Wild West.

For many visitors, the defining feature of New Mexico is its adobe architecture, as seen on homes, churches, and even shopping malls and motels. Adobe bricks are a sun-baked mixture of earth, sand, charcoal, and chopped grass or straw, set with a mortar of similar composition, and then plastered over with mud and straw. The color of the soil used dictates that of the final building, and thus subtle variations are seen all across the state. However, adobe is a far from convenient material: it needs replastering every few years and turns to mud when water seeps up from the ground, so many buildings have to be sporadically raised and bolstered by the insertion of rocks at their base. These days, most of what looks like adobe is actually painted cement or concrete, but even this looks attractive enough in its own semi-kitsch way, and hunting out such superb genuine adobes as the remote Santuario de Chimayó on the "High Road" between Taos and Santa Fe, the formidable church of San Francisco de Asis in Ranchos de Taos, or the multi-tiered dwellings of Taos Pueblo, can provide the focus of an enjoyable New Mexico tour.

Getting around New Mexico

Public transportation is rare in New Mexico; Santa Fe, for example, does not have a rail service. Amtrak trains do, however, pass through Albuquerque, pit stop for transcontinental Greyhound buses and site of the only major airport, from which scheduled buses run north to Santa Fe and Taos. A few companies offer guided coach tours in the Santa Fe and Taos area, but it's best to get around by car.

Northern New Mexico

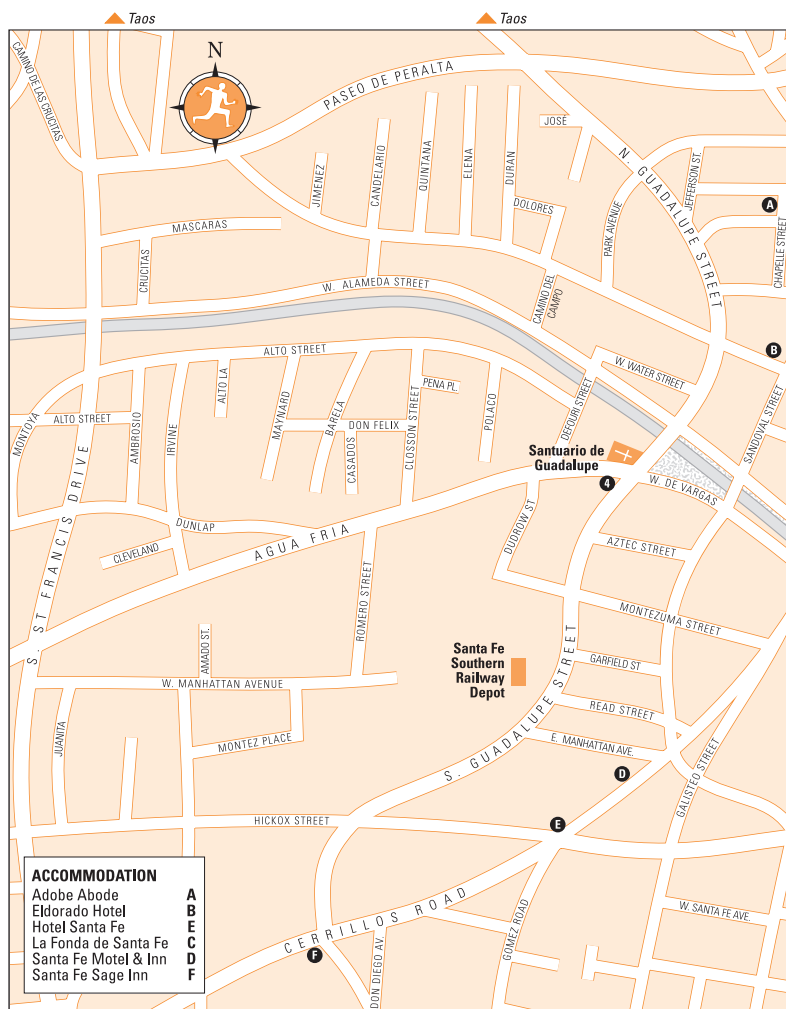

The mountainous north is the New Mexico of popular imagination, with its pastel colors, vivid desert landscape, and adobe architecture. Even Santa Fe, the one real city, is hardly metropolitan in scale, and the narrow streets of its small, historic center, though thronged with tourists, retain the feel of bygone days. Ranging along the headwaters of the Rio Grande 75 miles northeast, the amiable frontier town of Taos is remarkable chiefly for the stacked dwellings of neighboring Taos Pueblo.

An hour's drive west from Taos or Santa Fe brings you to Bandelier National Monument, where ancient cliff dwellings were carved out of the volcanic plateau that now holds the laboratories of Los Alamos. Alternatively, the hills east of the Rio Grande hold characterful Hispanic hamlets, threaded along a scenic mountain highway known as the High Road.

Santa Fe

Since the early 1980s, SANTA FE has repeatedly been voted the country's most popular city by upmarket travelers. Its romantic appeal rests on a very solid basis: it's one of America's oldest and most beautiful cities, founded by Spanish missionaries a decade before the Pilgrims reached Plymouth Rock. Spread across a high plateau at the foot of the stunning Sangre de Cristo Mountains, New Mexico's capital still glories in the adobe houses and Baroque churches of its original architects, while its newer museums and galleries attract art-lovers from all over the world.

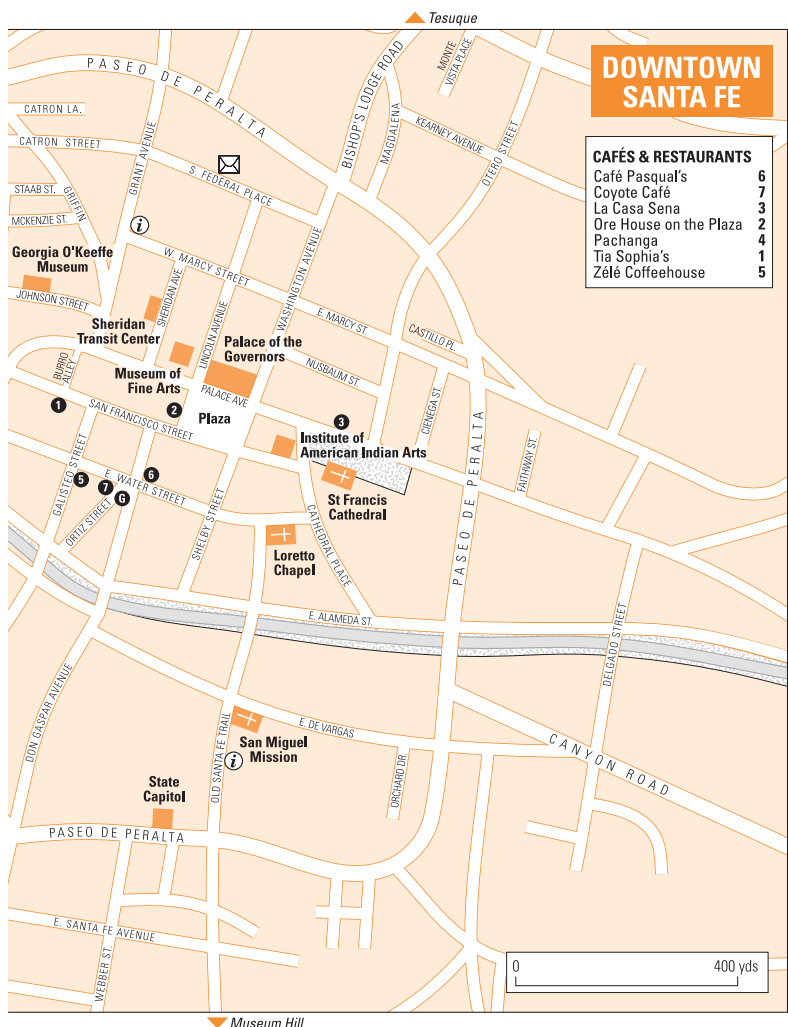

As upward of a million and a half tourists descend yearly upon a town of just sixty-eight thousand inhabitants, Santa Fe has inevitably grown somewhat overblown. Long-term residents bemoan what's been lost and first-time visitors may be surprised by the depressing urban sprawl on the edge of town.

There's still a lot to like about Santa Fe, however, with its compact, peaceful downtown and walkable streets. Though Santa Fe style may have become something of a cliché, that cliché is changing: the pastel-painted wooden coyotes that were once the obligatory souvenir, for example, have been replaced by cast-iron sculptures of Kokopelli, the hunch-backed Ancestral Puebloan flute-player. In a town where the Yellow Pages list over 250 art galleries, you'll get plenty of opportunities to buy either icon.

Santa Fe is well off the beaten track. Most out-of-state visitors fly into Albuquerque, and either rent a vehicle there for the hour's drive up I-25 to Santa Fe, or catch a shuttle van for around $25 with companies like Santa Fe Shuttle (☎ 505/243-2300 or 1-888/833-2300, 🌐 www.santafeshuttle.com). Buses arrive at the Greyhound terminal at 858 St Michael's Drive, a long way from the centre, and include four daily services from Albuquerque ($13; ☎ 505/471-0008). There's no direct rail link, but Lamy Shuttle vans ($16 one-way; ☎ 505/982-8829) meet Amtrak trains in Lamy, seventeen miles southeast.

By far the most useful visitor center is run by the New Mexico Department of Tourism, at 491 Old Santa Fe Trail (daily: June–Aug 8am–7pm; rest of year 8am–5pm; ☎ 505/827-4000 or 1-800/545-2040, www.newmexico.org).

Most of what there is to see lies within walking distance of the central plaza, but to get there from your hotel, or to see the farther-flung attractions, you may need to use the Santa Fe Trails bus service (☎ 505/955-2001). Route #2 runs up Cerrillos Road, while route #M loops between the plaza and the outlying museums, for the standard flat fare of $1. Santa Fe's only taxi company is Capital City Cabs (☎ 505/438-0000); bikes can be rented at Sun Mountain, 102 E Water St (☎ 505/982-8986, www.sunmountainbikeco.com). For a walking tour of town, contact Walk Through Time Tours, based at the Inn at Loretto, 211 Old Santa Fe Trail (daily 10am & 2pm; $10; ☎ 505/231-2770), which also operates Loretto Line bus tours at similar prices.

Accommodation

Even in winter, you won't find a room within walking distance of downtown for under $60, and in summer – when every bed is frequently taken – there's little under $100. The main road in from I-25, Cerrillos Road, holds most of the motels and the one hostel. If you get stuck, call All Santa Fe Reservations (☎ 505/474-5557 or 1-877/737-7366, www.all-santafe.com).

The most appealing campgrounds nearby are in the Santa Fe National Forest, starting seven miles up Hwy-475, northeast of town (summer only; ☎ 505/753-7331, www.fs.fed.us/r3/sfe).

Adobe Abode 202 Chapelle St ☎ 505/983-3133, www.adobeabode.com. Small, playfully themed, central B&B, offering folk-art-filled rooms both in a century-old house and in a separate newer building. ⑥

El Rey Inn 1862 Cerrillos Rd at St Michael's Drive ☎ 505/982-1931 or 1-800/521-1349, www.elreyinnsantafe.com. Most characterful of the Cerrillos Rd motels, with stylish Southwestern-style rooms, nice suites, and a pool. ⑤

Eldorado Hotel 309 W San Francisco St ☎ 505/988-4455 or 1-800/955-4455, www.eldoradohotel.com. Consummately stylish, tastefully tiled upmarket hotel, a short walk west of the plaza, offering spacious well-appointed rooms, plus a rooftop swimming pool, spa, and gym. ⑨

Hotel Santa Fe 1501 Paseo de Peralta at Cerrillos Rd ☎ 505/982-1200 or 1-800/825-9876, www.hotelsantafe.com. Attractive, very comfortable adobe hotel (just) within walking distance of the plaza, owned and run by Picuris Pueblo Indians and featuring its own good restaurant, Amaya. ⑤

 La Fonda de Santa Fe 100 E San Francisco St ☎ 505/982-5511 or 1-800/523-5002, www.lafondasantafe.com. Gorgeous old inn on the southeast corner of the plaza, which features hand-painted murals and stained glass throughout. Each opulently furnished room is different, and there's a good restaurant, plus a lounge with live entertainment and a rooftop bar. ⑨

Santa Fe Sage Inn 725 Cerrillos Rd at Don Diego; ☎ 505/982-5952 or 1-866/433-0355, www.santafesageinn.com. The most central of the chain motels; large, clean, functional if not inspiring, and a mile or so from the plaza. ④

Santa Fe International Hostel 1412 Cerrillos Rd at Alta Vista ☎ 505/988-1153, www.users.qwest.net/~epreston1/. Some travelers find this old-fashioned HI-AYH hostel, housed in a ramshackle former motel a couple of miles southwest of the plaza, unfriendly, poorly furnished and dirty, and damp and cold in winter; others are totally satisfied, and don't mind the compulsory chores. Dorms beds cost $15, or you can get a room to yourself for $33 single, $43 double. ①/2

 Santa Fe Motel & Inn 510 Cerrillos Rd ☎ 505/982-1039 or 1-800/930-5002, www.santafemotel.com. Delightfully stylish little adobe complex where even the most conventional rooms are appealingly furnished. Some have their own kitchens, while there are also several gorgeous little casitas. The staff are very friendly, and rates – great for such a quiet, central location – include a cooked breakfast. ⑤

Silver Saddle 2810 Cerrillos Rd at Siler ☎ 505/471-7663, www.motelsantafe.com. Busy, down-to-earth but surprisingly characterful motel, well out from downtown. ③

THE SOUTHWEST

Northern New Mexico

Downtown Santa Fe: around the plaza

Santa Fe's old central plaza is still the focus of town life, especially when filled with buyers and craftspeople during the annual Indian Market, on the weekend after the third Thursday in August, and during the first weekend in September for the Fiestas de Santa Fe. Apart from an influx of art galleries and stylish restaurants, the web of narrow streets around the plaza has changed little through the centuries. When the US took over in 1848, the new settlers neglected the adobes and chose instead to build in wood, but many of the finer adobe houses have survived. Ever since a preservation campaign in the 1930s, almost every non-adobe structure within sight of the plaza has been designed or redecorated to suit the city-mandated Pueblo Revival mode, with rounded, mud-colored plaster walls supporting roof beams made of thick pine logs. Santa Fe today, in fact – at least at its core – looks much more like its original Spanish self than it did a hundred years ago.

The Palace of the Governors fills the entire northern side of the plaza (Tues–Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–8pm; $7, free Fri 5–8pm; under-17 free; @ www.palaceofthegovernors.org). Part of the Museum of New Mexico (see box, overleaf), this low-slung and initially unprepossessing structure is actually the oldest public building in the US. Originally sod-roofed, it was constructed in 1610 as the headquarters of Spanish Colonial administration. Until 1913, it looked like a typical, formal, territorial building, with a square tower at each corner; its subsequent adobe “reconstruction” was based on pure conjecture. The well-preserved interior, organized around an open-air courtyard, holds excellent displays on the history of Hispanic New Mexico, as well as a sensational collection of art of Ancient America, and a well-stocked bookstore. The arcaded adobe veranda along its front, offering protection from both sun and wind, serves as a market for local Native American crafts-sellers.

Just west of the palace, the Museum of Fine Arts (same hours and prices) is housed in a particularly attractive adobe, with ornamental beams and a cool central courtyard, and focuses on changing exhibits of contemporary painting and sculpture by mostly local artists. Of greater appeal to most visitors is the showpiece

Georgia O'Keeffe Museum, a block northwest at 217 Johnson St (July–Oct Mon–Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–8pm; Nov–March closed Wed; $8, free Fri 5–8pm; under-16 free; ☎ 505/946-1000, 🌐 www.okeeffemuseum.org). This boasts the largest collection of O'Keeffes in the world, including many of the desert landscapes she painted near Abiquiú, forty miles northwest of Santa Fe, where she lived from 1946 until her death in 1986. In its permanent collection, some New York cityscapes make a surprising contrast to her trademark sun-bleached skulls and iconic flowers. Most of the museum is given over to touring exhibitions, so there's little guarantee as to which pieces may be displayed at any one time.

Across the tiny Santa Fe River to the southwest, three blocks along Guadalupe Street, you'll find an attractive little district centered around the small Santuario de Guadalupe (May–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–4pm; Nov–April Mon–Fri 9am–4pm; donation). Complete with a fine Baroque reredos (altarpiece), the shrine was built at the end of the eighteenth century to mark the end of the Camino Real highway from Mexico City. Former warehouses and factories nearby house boutiques, art galleries, and restaurants.

Follow the river upstream, or walk two blocks east from the plaza, and you approach St Francis Cathedral, at the top of San Francisco Street. The first church west of the Mississippi to be designated a cathedral, it was commissioned in 1869 in the formal – and, frankly, dreary – Romanesque style by Archbishop Lamy, the French-educated title figure in Willa Cather's novel Death Comes for the Archbishop. The nearby Loretto Chapel, a block away at the start of the Old Santa Fe Trail, is known for its so-called “Miraculous Staircase,” an elegant spiral built without nails or obvious means of support (winter Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10.30am–5pm; summer Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10.30am–5pm; $2.50).

Two blocks south, across the river along the Old Santa Fe Trail, is the ancient San Miguel Mission (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1.30–4pm; $1). Only a few of the massive adobe internal walls survive from the original 1610 building, most of which was destroyed in the 1680 Pueblo Revolt.

Not far to the east, gallery-lined Canyon Road – which stakes a claim to being the oldest street in the US, dating from Pueblo days – climbs a steady but shallow incline along the riverbed and is lined by fine adobes.

The outlying museums

On a slightly raised plateau two miles southeast of the town center, with extensive views of the surrounding hills and mountains, stands Santa Fe's other museum cluster, reachable by Santa Fe Trails bus #10. The delightful Museum of International Folk Art (daily except Mon 10am–5pm; $7, under-17 free; 🌐 www.moifa.org), part of the Museum of New Mexico, focuses on a huge collection of clay figurines and models from around the world, arranged in colorful dioramas that include a Pueblo Feast Day with dancing kachinas and camera-clicking tourists. Its Hispanic Heritage Wing is an engaging reminder of just how close New Mexico's ties have always been with Mexico itself, while the gift shop sells unusual ethnic

The Museum of New Mexico

A combination ticket, costing $15 and valid for four days, grants admission to the four leading Santa Fe museums that jointly constitute the Museum of New Mexico (🌐 www.museumofnewmexico.org) – the Palace of the Governors, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Museum of Indian Arts and Culture, and the Museum of International Folk Art.

souvenirs. The neighboring Museum of Indian Arts and Culture (same hours and prices; @www.miaclab.org) holds a superb array of Native American pottery, ranging from Ancestral Puebloan pieces up to the works of twentieth-century revivalists, and covers contemporary Southwestern cultures in fascinating detail.

In the same complex, the Museum of Spanish Colonial Art displays traditional Hispanic religious artworks, such as the santos (naïve painted images) and bultos (carved wooden statues of saints) that are so pervasive in the iconography of Santa Fe (daily except Mon 10am–5pm; $6, under-16 free; @www.spanishcolonial.org).

Eating

Santa Fe has been renowned as a culinary hot spot since the 1980s, when a stupendous feat of marketing managed to make dishes such as banana-crusted sea bass seem quintessentially Southwestern, and is now said to have more quality restaurants per head than any other US city.

Café Pasqual's 121 Don Gaspar Ave ☎505/983-9340. Lovely and lively Old/New Mexican restaurant, serving top-quality food (including breakfast) in an attractive tiled dining room a block south of the plaza. Entrees include vegetarian enchiladas ($19) and black mussels steamed with lemongrass ($24); as an appetizer, try the delicious Pigs and Figs salad, made with bacon, figs, and mozzarella ($14).

Coyote Café 132 W Water St ☎505/983-1615. Mark Miller's showcase restaurant, just off the plaza, is as popular as ever, despite a tendency to rest on its laurels. The à la carte prices can be ferocious, with entrees like fried red-banana-crusted sea bass or cumin-roasted duck breast at $26–40, but at times they also serve a prix-fixe set dinner for around $40. For a cheaper taste, try the rooftop café.

La Casa Sena 125 E Palace Ave ☎505/988-9232. Charming courtyard restaurant, a block from the plaza; zestful Southwestern lunches, with entrees around $11–15, are the best deal, though the $42 set dinners are consistently good. La Cantina, adjoining, is a little cheaper and its staff performs Broadway show songs as they work.

La Plazuela La Fonda de Santa Fe, 100 E San Francisco St ☎505/982-5511. Delightful, beautifully decorated Mexican restaurant in the heart of La Fonda, open daily for all meals, and with an open-air feel despite the glass ceiling. All the usual Mexican dishes are on offer at reasonable prices, as well as some more expensive dinner entrees, and the cooking is well above average.

Mu du noodles 1494 Cerrillos Rd ☎505/983-1411. Largely but not exclusively vegetarian place, near the hostel. Its pan-Asian menu may not always be authentic, but it's still tasty. Dinner only, closed Sun.

Ore House on the Plaza 50 Lincoln Ave ☎505/983-8687. "Nueva Latina" restaurant, where the menu ranges from $5 green-chile stews to elaborate $28 dinner entrees, and the location on the plaza, complete with ristra-garlanded balcony, is unbeatable.

 Pachanga 416 Agua Fria ☎505/988-5991. Stylish Mexican restaurant – far from an ordinary cantina – housed in a former convent. Delicious specialties include an appetizer of spiced corn truffles with cheese for $10, and pit roasted lamb, or barbacoa, as an entree for $12; more conventional Mexican dishes, like queso fundido or chimichangas, cost under $10. Closed Sun, lunch in summer only.

Tia Sophia's 210 W San Francisco St ☎505/983-9880. Spicy, very inexpensive Mexican diner west of the plaza that's a huge hit with lunching locals. Daily except Mon 7am–2pm.

Zelé Coffeehouse 201 Galisteo St ☎505/982-7835. Roomy downtown coffeehouse serving pastries, omelets, sandwiches, and killer granola, plus great juices and smoothies, with some sidewalk seating as well.

Nightlife and entertainment

Unlike its abundance of restaurants, Santa Fe has the limited range of nightlife you'd expect in a small city, though its cultural scene livens up in summer. For full listings, check the free weekly Reporter (@http://sfreporter.com) or the "Pasatiempo" section of Friday's New Mexican. Year-round, musical and theatrical performances take place downtown at the Lensic Performing Arts Center, a striking former movie theater at 211 W San Francisco St (☎505/988-7050, @www.lensic.

com). The much-anticipated Santa Fe Opera season runs from late June through August in a magnificent amphitheater seven miles north of town (☎ 505/986-5900 or 1-800/280-4654, 🌐 www.santafeopera.org).

Some of the most atmospheric places to drink in town are in the old hotels – such as the downstairs lounge and rooftop bar of La Fonda on the plaza (see p.928) – but otherwise conventional bars are few and far between.

Catamount Bar 125 E Water St ☎ 505/988-7222.

Downtown bar with plenty of microbrews on tap, and live rock or blues most nights.

Cowgirl Hall of Fame 319 S Guadalupe St

☎ 505/982-2565. Very busy country-themed restaurant and bar, with regular live music.

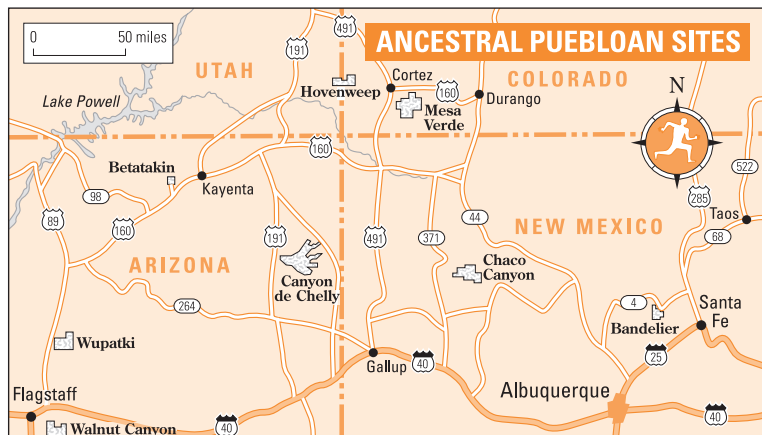

El Farol 808 Canyon Rd ☎ 505/983-9912. Historic bar-cum-restaurant that serves Spanish tapas to musical accompaniment from blues to flamenco.

Evangelo's 200 W San Francisco St ☎ 505/982-9014. The only good bare-bones bar in easy walking range of the plaza, with a pool table, a jukebox, and occasional live music.

Bandelier National Monument

Cut into the forested mesas of the Pajarito Plateau, 35 miles northwest of Santa Fe, the cliff dwellings and Ancestral Puebloan ruins of Bandelier National Monument ($10 per vehicle) spread across fifty square miles of pine woods and deep gorges. Named after archeologist Adolph Bandelier, who publicized the place in the 1880s, the ruins date from around 1300 AD, at the very end of the Ancestral Puebloan period (see box, opposite). Itinerant groups, seeking sanctuary from drought and invasion, gathered here to build a community that amalgamated their assorted cultures. At the end of the narrow switchbacking road down from Hwy-4, the visitor center provides an excellent overview of the site (daily: summer 8am–6pm; rest of year 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 505/672-3861, 🌐 www.nps.gov/band).

The first stop along the paved 1.5-mile trail beyond, looping through Frijoles Canyon, is Tyuonyi, a circular, multistory village of which only the ground floor and foundations survive. A side path leads up to dozens of cave dwellings, their rounded chambers scooped out of the soft volcanic rock; you can scramble up to, and even enter, some of them, to peer out across the valley. The main trail continues to the Long House, an 800-foot series of two- and three-story houses built side by side against the canyon wall. Though most of the upper stories have collapsed, you can still see the holes that held the roof beams, and the rows of petro-

The Ancestral Puebloans

Few visitors to the Southwest are prepared for the awesome scale and beauty of the desert cities and cliff palaces left by the Ancestral Puebloans, as seen all over the high plateaus of the “Four Corners” district, where Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah now meet.

The earliest humans reached the Southwest around 10,000 BC, but the Ancestral Puebloans first appeared as the Basketmakers, near the San Juan River, about two thousand years ago. Named for their woven sandals and bowls, they lived in pits in the earth, roofed with logs and mud. Over time, the Ancestral Puebloans adopted an increasingly settled lifestyle, becoming expert farmers and potters. Their first freestanding houses on the plains were followed by multistoried pueblos, in which hundreds of families lived in complexes of contiguous “apartments.” The astonishing cliff dwellings, perched on precarious ledges high above remote canyons, which they began to build around 1100 AD, were the first Ancestral Puebloan settlements to show signs of defensive fortifications. Competition for scarce resources became even fiercer toward the end of the thirteenth century, and recent research suggests that warfare and even cannibalism played a role in their ultimate dispersal. Moving eastward, they joined forces with other displaced groups in a coming-together that eventually produced the modern Pueblo Indians. Hence the recent change of name, away from “Anasazi,” a Navajo word meaning “ancient enemies,” in favor of “Ancestral Puebloan.”

Among the most significant Ancestral Puebloan sites are:

Mesa Verde Magnificent cliff palaces, high in the canyons of Colorado; see p.870.

Bandelier National Monument Large riverside pueblos, and cave-like homes hollowed from volcanic rock; see opposite.

Chaco Canyon The largest and most sophisticated freestanding pueblos, far out in the desert; see p.944.

Wupatki Several small pueblo communities, built by assorted tribal groups; see p.965.

Walnut Canyon Numerous canyon-wall houses above lush Walnut Creek; see p.966.

Betatakin Canyon-side community set in a vast rocky alcove in the Navajo National Monument; see p.979.

Canyon de Chelly Superbly dramatic cliff dwellings in glowing sandstone canyon; now owned and farmed by the Navajo; see p.981.

Hovenweep Enigmatic towers poised above a canyon; see p.1002.

glyphs carved above them. Half a mile beyond that, protected by a rock overhang 150ft above the canyon floor, a reconstructed kiva sits in Alcove House. To reach it you have to climb rickety ladders and steep stairs cut into the crumbly rock.

Los Alamos

If you approach Bandelier from the east, you'll pass Los Alamos National Laboratory, the main US center for the research and development of nuclear weapons (as well as neurobiology, computer science, and solar and geothermal energy). Virtually all the work at this, one of the foremost scientific research establishments in the world, is military-based, and consequently most of the complex is off-limits – the small and over-simplified Bradbury Science Museum (Tues–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat–Mon 1–5pm; free) is the only part you can visit. The local radio station is called KBOM, and museum guides glow with excitement as they describe their weapons' devastating power.

The Rio Grande Pueblos

The first Spaniards to explore what's now New Mexico were greeted by a settled population of around a hundred thousand people, living in perhaps a hundred villages and towns. However, the people the Spaniards named the Pueblo Indians (pueblo is Spanish for "village") soon grew to resent the imposition of Catholicism and the virtual enslavement of Pueblo laborers. In the Pueblo Revolt of 1680, the various tribes banded together and ousted the entire Colonial regime, killing scores of priests and soldiers and sending hundreds more south to Mexico. After the Spanish returned in 1693, the Pueblos showed little further resistance, and they have coexisted surprisingly amicably ever since, accepting aspects of Catholicism – most pueblos have a large adobe church at their core – without giving up their traditional beliefs and practices.

New Mexico is now home to around forty thousand Pueblo Indians, with each of its nineteen autonomous pueblos having its own laws and system of government. All have been modernized to some extent, and the recent explosion of Native American gaming has seen many open their own casinos, at sites usually located along the major highways well away from the residential areas. However, all also proudly retain the "Old Ways." Saints' days, major Catholic holidays such as Easter and the Epiphany, and even the Fourth of July are celebrated with a combination of Native American traditions and Catholic rituals, featuring elaborately costumed dances and massive communal feasts. The spectacle of hundreds of costumed, body-painted tribal members of all ages, drawn from other pueblos as well as the host village, performing elaborate dances in such timeless surroundings is hugely impressive.

However, few of the pueblos should be regarded as the tourist attractions they're touted to be. The best known, Taos and Ácoma, retain their ancient defensive architecture, but the rest tend to be dusty adobe hamlets scattered around a windblown plaza. Unless you arrive on a feast day, or are a knowledgeable shopper in search of Pueblo crafts (most pueblos have their own specialties), visits are liable to prove disappointing. In addition, you'll certainly be made to feel unwelcome if you fail to behave respectfully – don't go "exploring" places that are off-limits to outsiders, such as shrines, kivas, or private homes.

Fifteen of the pueblos are concentrated along the Rio Grande north of Albuquerque, with a longstanding division between the seven southern pueblos, south of Santa Fe, most of which speak Keresan, and the group to the north, which mostly speak Tewa (pronounced tay-wah). Visitors to each are required to register at a visitor center; some charge an admission fee of $3 to $10, and those that permit such activities at all charge additional fees of about $5 for still photography, $10–15 for video cameras, and up to $100 for sketching. There's no extra charge for feast days or dances, but photography is usually forbidden on special occasions.

From Santa Fe to Taos: the High Road

The quickest route between Santa Fe and Taos follows US-84 as far as the Rio Grande, then continues northeast along the river on Hwy-68. US-84 passes through the heartland of the northern pueblos, a cluster of tiny Tewa-speaking communities that have survived for over five centuries, but unless your visit coincides with a feast day (see box), there's little to see.

However, a satisfying if circuitous alternative route known as the "High Road" leaves US-68/84 a dozen miles north of Santa Fe, near Nambe Pueblo. Leading high into the pines and aspens of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, it passes a number of pueblos as well as several timeless Hispanic villages.

Chimayó

The quaint mountain village of CHIMAYÓ, 25 miles north of Santa Fe at the junction of Hwy-503 and Hwy-76, is the site of New Mexico's most famous Spanish Colonial church, the 1816 Santuario de Chimayó (daily: May–Sept 9am–6pm; Oct–April 9am–4pm). Known as the “Lourdes of America” for the devotion of its many pilgrims, this round-shouldered, twin-towered adobe beauty sits behind an enclosed courtyard; a pit in the floor of a small room to one side holds the “holy dirt” for which the site is venerated.

Half a mile further north on Hwy-503, the Rancho de Chimayó is the best traditional New Mexican restaurant in the state, serving superb flautas and a mouth-watering sopaipilla, stuffed with meat and chiles, on a lovely sun-drenched outdoor patio, and it also offers reasonable rooms in a separate building (closed Mon Nov–April; ☎ 505/351-4444; ④).

Taos

Still home to one of the longest-established Native American populations in the US, though transformed by becoming first a Spanish Colonial outpost, and more recently a hangout for bohemian artists and New Age dropouts, TAOS (which rhymes with “mouse”) has become famous out of all proportion to its size. Just six thousand people live in its three component parts: Taos itself, around the plaza; sprawling Ranchos de Taos, three miles to the south; and the Native American community of Taos Pueblo, two miles north.

Beyond the usual unsightly highway sprawl, Taos is a delight to visit. As well as museums, galleries, and stores to match Santa Fe, it still offers an unhurried pace and charm, and the sense of a meeting place between Pueblo, Hispanic, and American cultures. Its reputation as an arts colony began at the end of the nineteenth century, with the arrival of painter Joseph Henry Sharp, who with Bert Phillips and Ernest L. Blumenschein established the Taos Society of Artists in 1915. Soon afterward, society heiress Mabel Dodge arrived and married an Indian from the Pueblo to become Mabel Dodge Luhan. She in turn wrote a fan letter to English novelist D.H. Lawrence, who visited three times in the early 1920s; his widow Frieda made her home in Taos after his death. New generations of artists and writers have “discovered” Taos ever since, but the most famous of all was Georgia O’Keeffe, who stayed for a few years at the end of the 1920s.

Two daily Greyhound and TNM&O buses from Albuquerque ($28) and Santa Fe ($18) arrive at Taos Bus Center (☎ 505/758-1144), opposite the well-equipped local visitor center, two miles south of the plaza at the intersection of Hwy-68 and US-64 (daily 9am–5pm, closed Sun in winter; ☎ 505/758-3873 or 1-800/732-8267, @ www.taoschamber.com). Twin Hearts Express (☎ 505/751-1201 or 1-800/654-9456, @ www.twinheartsexpress.com) also connects Taos with Santa Fe ($30) and the Albuquerque airport ($45).

Walking is the best way to get around the compact center, while hourly Red Chile buses (50¢ one way, $1 for an all-day pass; ☎ 505/751-4459) cover a twelve-mile route along the highway.

Accommodation

Taos has accommodation to meet all needs, at prices well below those of Santa Fe (though thanks to the local ski resort midwinter rates are no lower than midsummer). Taos Central Reservations (☎ 505/758-9767 or 1-800/821-2437, @ www.taoscentralreservations.com) can reserve lodging in advance.

 Historic Taos Inn 125 Paseo del Pueblo Norte ☎ 505/758-2233 or 1-888/519-8267, www.taosinn.com. Rambling, ravishing – and very Southwestern – central hotel. Each of its 36 rooms plays a variation on the Pueblo theme, while both Doc Martin's restaurant (see p.939) and the Adobe Bar are packed nightly. 3-6

Indian Hills Inn 233 Paseo del Pueblo Sur ☎ 505/758-4293 or 1-800/444-2346, www.taosnet.com/indianhillsinn. The only cheapish highway motel within walking distance of the plaza; be sure to get a room away from the street. 3

 Mabel Dodge Luhan House 240 Morada Lane ☎ 505/751-9686 or 1-800/846-2235, www.mabeldodgeluhan.com. Gorgeous 200-year-old adobe B&B complex, not far northeast of the plaza off Kit Carson Lane, where the lovely guest rooms are named for creative former guests like Willa Cather and Ansel Adams. Two rooms, including the light-filled solarium, share a bathroom painted by D.H. Lawrence. A cheaper lodge annex has more modern fittings. 4

Taos plaza and the museums

The old Spanish plaza at the heart of Taos, is now ringed by jewelry stores, art galleries, and restaurants; all conform to the predominant Pueblo motif of rounded brown adobe. Specific sights are few – a small museum in the La Fonda de Taos hotel has a collection of sexy but amateurish paintings by D.H. Lawrence, and the tree-filled square itself is often animated by guitar-toting buskers – but the surrounding streets are perfect for an aimless stroll, and it's easy to spend half a day just wandering around. Some of the best places to eat or drink, as well as a number of top-notch art and crafts galleries, are on Bent Street, a block north of the plaza. The street takes its name from the first American governor of New Mexico, Charles Bent; his house here, in which he was murdered in 1847, has been preserved as a ramshackle little museum of frontier Taosño life (daily April–Oct 9.30am–5pm, Nov–March 10am–4pm; $2).

Just east of the plaza, along the highway at the end of Taos's sole surviving stretch of wooden boardwalk, is the dusty adobe dwelling that was home to mountain man, mason, and part-time US cavalry officer Kit Carson (see p.978) for 25 years in the mid-1800s. It too is now a small museum, commemorating Carson's many adventures (daily: April–Oct 9am–5pm; Nov–March 10am–4pm; $5).

Two blocks south of the plaza at 222 Ledoux St, the much-restored 1790 house of artist and collector Ernest L. Blumenschein, co-founder of the town's 1920s arts colony, displays paintings and furniture (daily: April–Oct 9am–5pm; Nov–March 11am–4pm; $6). A single $20 ticket, valid for a year, grants admission to both this and four other Taos museums, including the two described below.

Two miles north of the Taos Pueblo turn-off, reached by a dirt road that angles into a tricky five-way intersection, the Millicent Rogers Museum (April–Oct daily 10am–5pm; Nov–March Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; $7; www.millicentrogers.org) holds a superb collection of craft works. Objects range from Ancestral Puebloan and Mimbres pottery to the contemporary black-on-black ceramics of San Ildefonso Pueblo potter Maria Martinez, plus Hopi kachinas, and beautiful Navajo blankets. Affecting exhibits also trace the development of Spanish Colonial religious art in the New World.

Ranchos de Taos

South of the central plaza area, to either side of Hwy-68, Ranchos de Taos was originally a separate community, composed of farms that fed the town of Taos. Each ranch had its own main house, or hacienda; one has been restored as a museum of Colonial life. The Hacienda Martínez (daily April–Oct 9am–5pm, Nov–March 10am–4pm; $6), two miles southwest of the plaza on Ranchitos Road, was built in 1804. Within its thick, windowless, adobe walls – sealed like a fortress against what were then still-prevalent Indian raids – two-dozen rooms are wrapped around two patios, holding animal pens and a well. Trade goods of the kind its first owner, Taos mayor Don Antonio Martínez, once carried south along the Rio Grande are displayed alongside tools, looms, and simple furnishings.

In Ranchos' small unpaved plaza, the mission church of San Francisco de Asis squares its broad shoulders, or more accurately its massive adobe buttresses, to the passing traffic on Hwy-68. Built around 1776, it's one of colonial New Mexico's most splendid architectural achievements, with subtly rounded walls and corners disguising its underlying structural strength. Though the ever-changing interplay of light and shade across its golden exterior has fascinated painters from Georgia O'Keeffe onward, the interior is equally intriguing, with a magnificently ornate green-and-red reredos framing several naïve paintings.

Taos Pueblo

Continuously inhabited for nearly one thousand years, the two multistory adobes at Taos Pueblo, two miles north of Taos plaza and half a mile east of Hwy-68, jointly constitute the most impressive Native American dwelling place still in use. Hlauma, the north house, and Hlaukkwima, the south house, are separated by the Rio Pueblo de Taos, which flows down the hills from the sacred Blue Lake, inaccessible to outsiders. Residents of the pueblo have made few concessions to the modern world, living without toilets, running water, or electricity.

The pueblo is generally open to visitors from 8am until 5pm from Monday to Saturday, and between 8.30am and 5pm on Sunday, but it often closes for tribal events such as festivals or funerals, and remains closed between mid-February and early April; call ahead (☎ 505/758-1028, 🌐 www.taospueblo.com) before you visit. Assuming the pueblo is open, park your vehicle at the edge of the plaza, and pay an entrance fee ($10 per person, plus $5 per still or video camera), that entitles you to join one of the guided walking tours, led by Pueblo residents, which leave at regular intervals.

For most of the year, Pueblo life continues with scant regard for the intrusion of tourists, but feast days and dances, held throughout the summer, can be spectacular. The biggest parties are the Corn Dances in June and July, and the Feast of San Gerónimo at the end of September, when outsiders flock to join the general revelry.

Taos Ski Valley

Fifteen miles north of Taos lie the challenging slopes of Taos Ski Valley, reached via an attractive road that winds up through a narrow gap in the mountains from the village of Arroyo Seco. Located on the north flank of Wheeler Peak, the highest point in New Mexico at 13,161ft, the demanding runs are usually open to skiers – snowboarding is banned – between late November and early April (daily lift tickets late Nov to mid-Dec and late March to early April $28, mid-Dec to late March $57; information ☎ 505/776-2291 or 1-866/968-7386, reservations ☎ 1-800/776-1111, 🌐 www.skitaos.org).

Eating, drinking, and nightlife

Taos is too small to offer much nightlife, but it does have a fine selection of restaurants in all price ranges, and several coffeehouses. If your main priority is to drink, the Adobe Bar in the Taos Inn (see p.937) is the coziest spot in town.

Bent Street Deli & Café 120 Bent St ☎ 505/758-5787. Airy, partly outdoor place, just north of the plaza with good-value breakfasts, sandwich lunches, and tasty dinners for under $20. Closed Sun.

Byzantium 112 La Placita at Ledoux St ☎ 505/751-0805. Romantic, classy courtyard restaurant southwest of the plaza, serving conventional but flavorful salad-or-sandwich lunches. Dinners have a pan-Asian edge, with tempura eel ($15) or duck green curry ($27) alongside traditional herb-crusted pork tenderloin ($34). Closed Tues & Wed.

Caffè Tazza 122 Kit Carson Rd ☎ 505/758-8706. Trendy, central café with nice sunlit terrace, selling coffees and light veggie meals to students and assorted eccentrics.

Doc Martin's Taos Inn, 125 Paseo del Pueblo Norte ☎ 505/758-1977. Delicious, inventive New Mexican food in a romantic adobe inn, just east of the plaza. Most dinner entrees, such as piñon-crusted salmon or roast chicken, are $17–28, but a three-course prix-fixe menu, served Sun–Thurs only, costs around $20.

Island Coffees and Hawaiian Grill 1032 Paseo del Pueblo Sur ☎ 505/758-7777. Friendly, inexpensive Hawaiian-themed café near the visitor center, serving Kona coffee plus noodle dishes, curries, and sandwiches, and offering Internet access. Closed Sun.

Joseph's Table, La Fonda de Taos, 108 South Plaza; ☎ 505/751-4512. This delightful restaurant serves wonderful (if rich) food in a lovely setting, with very friendly service. A fabulous parma ham risotto appetizer is $11, while full entrees like a whole roasted duck or lamb shank cost around $30, but you can also order smaller portions from the separate Joe's Bar menu, like a buffalo burger for $12. Lunch served May–Aug only.

Taos Pizza Outback 712 Paseo del Pueblo Norte ☎ 505/748-3112. Hard-to-find pizzeria, a mile north of town, with a welcoming, youthful ambience and huge portions of great food – the $9 veggie calzones are amazing.

Albuquerque and central New Mexico

Although most travelers race through central New Mexico as quickly as possible, it does hold isolated pockets of interest, with the scenery, at least in the west, the main attraction. Dozens of small towns hang on to the last remnants of Route 66, the winding old “Chicago-to-LA” transcontinental highway long since superseded by I-40.

Albuquerque – New Mexico's largest city, and site of its only major airport – sits dead center, at the intersection of I-40 and I-25. The area to the east, stretching toward Texas, is among the most desolate parts of the Southwest, but the mountainous region west has more to see – above all Ácoma Pueblo, the mesa-top community known as “Sky City.”

East of Albuquerque: Tucumcari and Fort Sumner

The long line of truck stops, diners, and motels at TUCUMCARI, the biggest town between Albuquerque and Amarillo, Texas (see p.758), has made it a favorite I-40 pit stop. During the day you can while away an hour at the mind-boggling Tucumcari Historical Museum at 416 S Adams St (June–Aug Mon–Sat 8am–6pm; Sept–May Tues–Sat 8am–5pm; $2.11), which boasts one of the world's greatest collections of barbed wire. Literally hundreds of inexpensive rooms lie along this stretch of old Route 66, including the classic Blue Swallow motel, 815 E Route 66 (☎ 505/461-9849, 🌐 www.blueswallowmotel.com; 📍). For food, Del's Family Restaurant, 1202 E Route 66 (☎ 505/461-1740; closed Sun), is as good a diner as you're going to find.

FORT SUMNER, south of I-40 some way short of Tucumcari, means different things to different people. To the Navajo, it's where frontiersman and US Army colonel Kit Carson dragged them in 1864 after destroying their orchards and burning their villages in Arizona (see p.978). What little is left of the reservation is now the Fort Sumner State Monument, seven miles southeast of the modern town (daily 8.30am–5pm; $3; @ www.nmmonuments.org), where a large visitor center-cum-museum known as the Bosque Redondo Memorial honors the Navajo and Apache who died during their imprisonment. To Wild West fanatics, Fort Sumner is a pilgrimage spot because legendary outlaw Billy the Kid was gunned down here by Pat Garrett in 1881. His grave stands behind the jumbled Old Fort Sumner Museum (daily 9am–5pm; $3.50), his tombstone shielded from memento-seekers by a steel cage.

Albuquerque

Sprawling at the heart of New Mexico, where the main east–west road and rail routes cross both the Rio Grande and the old road south to Mexico, ALBUQUERQUE is, with half a million people, the state's only major metropolis. Though many tourists dash straight from the airport up to Santa Fe, without a thought for Albuquerque, the “Duke City” has a good deal going for it. Like Phoenix, it's grown a bit too fast for comfort, but the original Hispanic settlement is still discernible at its core, and its diverse, cosmopolitan population gives it a rare cultural vibrancy. Even if its architecture is often uninspired, the setting is magnificent, sandwiched between the Rio Grande and the dramatic, glowing Sandia Mountains. Specific highlights include the intact Spanish plaza, the neon-lit Route 66 frontage of Central Avenue, and the excellent Indian Pueblo Cultural Center, while every October Albuquerque hosts the nation's largest hot-air balloon rally.

Albuquerque's International Sunport is four miles southeast of downtown. All the major car rental chains have outlets here, while a taxi into town with Yellow Cab (☎ 505/247-4888) costs around $10, and Airport Shuttle (☎ 505/765-1234, @ www.airportshuttleabq.com) runs door-to-door shuttles at similar rates.

Both Amtrak and Greyhound are five easy minutes' walk south of downtown. The modern Greyhound bus terminal, 300 Second St SW (☎ 505/243-4435), is used by long-distance east–west services, as well as four daily buses up to Santa Fe ($16) and Taos ($28). Daily Amtrak trains between Los Angeles and Chicago arrive at 214 First St.

The main downtown visitor center is in the Albuquerque Convention Center, 401 Second St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 505/842-9918 or 1-800/284-2282, @ www.itsatrip.org). Further information kiosks can be found in Old Town, in the Plaza Don Luis on Romero NW (daily: April–Oct 9am–5pm; Nov–March 9.30am–4.30pm), and at the airport (daily 9.30am–8pm).

Accommodation

The twenty-mile length of Central Avenue, the old Route 66, is lined with the flashing neon signs of $40-per-night motels. You'll have to pay a little extra to stay in the heart of Old Town or downtown. Larger convention hotels are congregated along the interstates, and near the airport.

Ambassador Inn 7407 Central Ave NE ☎ 505/265-1161. There's nothing fancy or exciting about the Ambassador, and it's well to the east of the liveliest part of Central Avenue, but for a clean, presentable, ordinary motel room, the price is great. ②

Aztec Motel 3821 Central Ave NE ☎ 505/254-1742. Albuquerque's oldest Route 66 motel, featuring a great restored neon sign and festooned with folk art. Most of its guests are permanent residents, but it's still a safe and atmospheric (if plain) option for tourists. ②

Casas de Sueños 310 Rio Grande Blvd SW ☎ 505/247-4560, @ www.casasdesuenos.com. Beautifully furnished, exotic, and friendly B&B, very close to Old Town, with themed cottages and smaller rooms. ⑤–⑧

Comfort Inn – Airport 2300 Yale Blvd SE
☎ 505/243-2244 or 1-800/221-2222. Good-value motel, served by free shuttles from the airport across the road, and with complimentary breakfasts. ③

El Vado Motel 2500 Central Ave SW ☎ 505/243-4594. Vintage adobe Route 66 motel, within easy reach of Old Town. ②

La Posada de Albuquerque 125 Second St NW ☎ 505/242-9090 or 1-800/777-5732, ☞ www.laposada-abq.com. Historic hotel in convenient downtown location, built in Mexican style by Conrad Hilton in 1939. Large, very classy rooms with antique wooden furnishings, a beautiful wood-paneled lobby, and a spacious, atmospheric bar. ④

Monterey Nonsmokers Motel 2402 Central Ave SW ☎ 505/243-3554 or 1-877/666-8379, ☞ www.nonsmokersmotel.com. Clean, fifteen-room motel, two blocks west of Old Town, with pool, laundry, and a strict nonsmoking policy. ③

Route 66 Hostel 1012 Central Ave SW ☎ 505/247-1813, ☞ http://members.aol.com/route66hos/htmlRT66/. Albuquerque's only hostel, a friendly place on the outskirts of Old Town and a mile west of downtown, offers dorm beds for $17, kitchen facilities, and very plain but bargain-priced private doubles. Office hours daily 7.30–10.30am & 4–11pm.

Old Town

Once you've cruised up and down Central Avenue, looking at the flashing neon and 1940s architecture of this twenty-mile stretch of Route 66 (Sun Tran buses do it all day for $1), most of what's interesting about Albuquerque is concentrated in Old Town, the recently tidied-up old Spanish heart of the city. As the billboards on the interstate nearby rightly proclaim, "it's darned old and historic." The tree-filled main plaza is overlooked by the twin-towered adobe facade of San Felipe de Neri church; it's a very pleasant place to wander or have a meal, even if there's not a whole lot to do. One of the more bizarre of the many knick-knack shops is the Rattlesnake Museum southeast of the plaza at 202 San Felipe St NW (Mon–Fri noon–6pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 1–6pm; $3.50; ☞ www.rattlesnakes.com), which has live rattlers on display.

There's a cluster of museums about five minutes or so northeast of the plaza. The Albuquerque Museum of Art and History, 2000 Mountain Rd (daily except Mon 9am–5pm; $4, free Sun 9am–1pm; ☞ www.cabq.gov/museum), holds an impressive array of the weaponry carried by the Spanish conquistadors as well as delicate religious artifacts, and paintings and photos depicting Albuquerque through the centuries. Across the street, in the National Atomic Museum at 1905 Mountain Rd NW (daily 9am–5pm; $5; ☞ www.atomicmuseum.org), displays trace the history of nuclear science and weapons from the early discoveries of Madame Curie up to modern robotic devices such as the "truck-killing standoff weapon" Fireant.

Nearby, the New Mexico Museum of Natural History, 1801 Mountain Rd NW (daily 9am–5pm; closed Mon in Jan & Sept; $6; ☞ www.nmnmaturalhistory.org), has full-scale, animated models of dinosaurs, a simulated volcanic eruption, and a replica of an Ice Age snow cave, as well as an engaging, hands-on collection of fossils and dinosaur bones.

The riverfront

The Rio Grande has shifted its course in the last three hundred years, so there's an unexpectedly low-key gap west of Old Town, much of it left undeveloped in deference to the unruly river. Along the wooded eastern riverbank, the Bio Park holds two attractions. The Albuquerque Aquarium (June–Aug Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–6pm; Sept–May daily 9am–5pm; $7; ☞ www.cabq.gov/biopark) offers such diverse experiences as eating in a restaurant beside a glass-walled tank filled with live sharks and walking through a tunnel surrounded by fierce-eyed moray eels. Across the way, the Rio Grande Botanic Garden (same hours; same ticket) consists of two large conservatories – one holding rare plants from the Sonoran and Chihuahua deserts, the other more temperate Mediterranean species – plus a series of walled gardens.

Indian Pueblo Cultural Center

The Indian Pueblo Cultural Center, at 2401 12th St NW, one block north of I-40, is a stunning museum (daily 9am–4.30pm; $6; ☎ 505/843-7270, 🌐 www.indianpueblo.org) and crafts market (daily 9am–5.30pm; free), owned and run as a cooperative venture by the diverse Pueblo Indians of New Mexico. Its horseshoe-shaped design deliberately echoes the architecture of the Ancestral Puebloan city of Pueblo Bonito, in Chaco Canyon (see p.945), and the central courtyard is the venue for free Pueblo dances, every Saturday and Sunday at 11am and 2pm.

This is New Mexico's one major museum about Native Americans curated by Native Americans, and the displays downstairs have a clear and distinct point of view. The shared Ancestral Puebloan heritage at the root of Pueblo culture is explained in detail, as is the impact of the Spanish conquistadors. There's also as good an explanation as you're ever likely to get of a topic Pueblo Indians rarely discuss with outsiders: how indigenous Pueblo religion has managed to coexist with imported Catholicism. Videos illustrate modern Pueblo life, and the stores upstairs sell outstanding pottery and jewelry, while a good-quality café serves assorted Pueblo specialties.

Sandia Crest

The forested 10,500-foot peaks of the Sandia Crest tower over Albuquerque to the east, affording particularly beautiful views during and after sunset, when the city lights sparkle below. In summer it's a good 25°F cooler up here than in the valley, and in winter you can go downhill or cross-country skiing (mid-Dec to mid-March; lift tickets $35; ☎ 505/242-9052, 🌐 www.sandiapeak.com). If you don't want to drive the scenic but twisting twenty-mile route from Albuquerque, take the Sandia Peak Tramway (summer daily 9am–9pm; winter Mon & Wed–Sun 9am–8pm, Tues 5–8pm; $8), the world's longest single-span tramway at 2.7 miles; it leaves from the end of Tramway Road at the city's northeast edge.

Eating

Albuquerque is the place to get to grips with what real New Mexican food is all about. Family diners all over the city compete to create the spiciest chiles rellenos and enchiladas.

Artichoke Café 424 Central Ave SE ☎ 505/243-0200. Simple but classy restaurant in the heart of downtown, serving a good, varied menu of California-influenced modern American cuisine; most entrees well under $20. Dinner only on weekends.

Flying Star 3416 Central Ave SE ☎ 505/255-6633. Lively, crowded University District café serving eclectic international cuisine to a largely student clientele. The vast menu ranges through breakfast specialties, salads, and blue-plate specials such as Vietnamese noodles or pasta pomodoro for $10. Open daily from 6am until late.

Frontier 2400 Central Ave SE ☎ 505/266-0550. Legendary 24-hour diner across from the university, where an unceasing parade of characters chow down on burgers, burritos, and great vegetarian enchiladas.

Olympia Cafe 2210 Central Ave SE ☎ 505/242-4890. Good-value Greek and Mediterranean food, including gyros and falafel, that's also available for take-out. Across from the university on Route 66. Closed Sat & Sun.

Satellite Toys & Coffee 3513 Central Ave NE ☎ 505/256-0345. University District hangout, marked by the sign of the flying saucer and slogan, "serious coffee, silly toys." The toys in question are gifts and novelties rather than playthings; the coffee is all you could ask for. They also serve daily specials like split pea soup.

Scalo 3500 Central Ave SE ☎ 505/225-8781. Large but nonetheless romantic and stylish Northern Italian restaurant near the university. Appetizers like steamed mussels or beef carpaccio cost $10, entrees such as half an organic chicken are closer to $20, and there are plenty of pasta and vegetarian options. Closed Mon, dinner only on weekends.

Drinking and nightlife

Many of downtown Albuquerque's bars and nightclubs double as small theaters or music venues. The free weekly Alibi magazine (@www.alibi.com) carries full listings of what's coming up or going down.

The Anodyne 409 Central NW ☎505/244-1820.

Downtown's most popular bar offers pool tables, pinball, a good jukebox, and an eclectic mix of customers, from beer guzzlers to martini sippers.

Caravan East 7605 Central Ave NE ☎505/265-7877. Enormous honky-tonk, where tenderfeet can do the two-step with throngs of urban cowboys.

Club Rhythm and Blues 3523 Central Ave NE ☎505/256-0849, @www.clubrb.com. University District bar that plays hosts to Latin, swing, and jazz bands as well as blues acts. Showtime Wed–Sat 9pm.

KiMo Theater 423 Central Ave NW ☎505/848-

1370. Gorgeous, city-owned “Pueblo Deco” theater, dating from the late 1920s, which puts on an eclectic program of opera, dance, and theater performances, kids’ movies, and also regular live bands.

Puccini's Golden West Saloon 620 Central Ave SW ☎505/764-2624. Venue of choice for Albuquerque's metal maniacs and host to touring indie bands.

The Launchpad 618 Central Ave SW ☎505/764-8887, @www.launchpadrocks.com. Dance and live music space that showcases touring indie and world music bands; there's also a cluster of pool tables.

West of Albuquerque: I-40 to Arizona

Driving between Albuquerque and Arizona, you could easily be so put off by the parade of billboards and hoardings offering cut-price cigarettes and Indian jewelry that you'd miss out on some of central New Mexico's most interesting places, such as Ácoma Pueblo and Chaco Canyon, which lie south and north of I-40 respectively.

Ácoma Pueblo

The amazing Ácoma Pueblo, south of I-40 fifty miles west of Albuquerque, encapsulates a thousand years of Native American history. Its focus is the ancient village known as “Sky City,” perched atop a magnificent isolated mesa, 367ft high and 7000ft above sea level. Probably occupied by Chacoan migrants between 1100 and 1200 AD, when the great pueblos of Chaco Canyon were still in use, Ácoma has adapted to repeated waves of invaders ever since, while retaining its own strong identity. As the Ácomans have long been happy to take the tourist dollar, visitors seldom feel the awkwardness possible at other pueblo communities. Nonetheless, Ácoma is the real thing, and its sense of unbroken tradition can reduce even the least culturally sensitive traveler to awestruck silence.

To see Sky City, you have to join one of the hour-long guided bus tours (daily: May–Oct 8am–7pm; Nov–April 8am–4pm; last tour leaves one hour before closing; $10, plus $10 for photo permit, no camcorders or video; ☎505/470-0181 or 1-800/747-0181, @www.skycity.com), which leave regularly from the visitor center at the base of the mesa. The main stop is at the San Esteban del Rey mission, a thick-walled adobe church completed in 1640. Its earthen-floored nave is capped by a roof made of pine logs, carried here from the top of Mount Taylor, twenty miles away, without once touching the ground. The visual impact of the building is undeniable – due in part to its sheer incongruity – and it's striking that the Ácomans obviously never felt inclined to follow its architectural example. Instead they went on constructing the multistory stone and adobe houses around which the tour then proceeds. Only thirteen families live permanently on the mesa; most Ácomans reside down below, where they can get electricity, running water, and jobs. Villagers do, however, come up here during the day to sell pottery and fry-bread.

Grants

The old Route 66 town of GRANTS, fifteen miles west of Ácoma, holds half a dozen budget motels, including a good Super 8, 1604 E Santa Fe Ave (☎ 505/287-8811; 📍). In the heart of town, the Mission at Riverwalk, 422 W Santa Fe Ave (☎ 505/285-4632; 📍), is a former church that now doubles as a community theater and healthy café, serving sandwiches, smoothies, and coffee, and has a separate guest house for rent. The local visitor center is in the comprehensive and enjoyable New Mexico Museum of Mining at 100 N Iron Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–4pm; $3; ☎ 505/287-4802, 🌐 www.grants.org), offering a chance to make a virtual descent into a mock-up of one of the region's many uranium mines.

El Morro National Monument

Hidden away on Hwy-53 south of the Zuni Mountains, 42 miles west of Grants, El Morro National Monument feels as far off the beaten track as it's possible to be in the modern US. Incredibly, however, this pale-pink sandstone cliff was a regular rest stop for international travelers before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, thanks to a cool, perennial pool of water that collects at the base of a tumbling waterfall. This spot was first recorded by Spanish explorers in 1583 – el morro means “the headland” – and in 1605, Don Juan de Oñate, the founder of New Mexico, carved the first of many messages that earned it the American name of Inscription Rock.

Translations of El Morro's graffiti are displayed in the visitor center (daily: summer 9am–7pm; winter 9am–5pm; $3 per person; ☎ 505/783-4226, 🌐 www.nps.gov/elmo). You can see the real thing on a half-mile trail, which stays open until an hour before the visitor center closes. Not far beyond some Ancestral Puebloan petroglyphs, scraped into the desert varnish, Don Juan's chiseled signature celebrates “the discovery of the South Sea”; he was returning from an expedition that had taken him to the mouth of the Colorado River.

Chaco Canyon

For casual visitors, the long, bumpy ride to the Ancestral Puebloan ruins of Chaco Canyon, north of I-40 between Grant and Gallup, may seem more bother than it's worth. Although the site protected as the Chaco Culture National Historical Park is the largest pre-Columbian city in North America, for beauty and drama it can't compete with lesser settlements such as Canyon de Chelly (see p.981). The low-walled canyon is a mere scratch in the scrubby high-desert plains, and the Chaco Wash that runs through it is often completely dry.

Once you accept that you won't have amazing photos to show the folks back home, however, there's still plenty about Chaco to take your breath away. Over 3600 separate sites have been logged in the canyon, of which the thirteen principal ones are open to visitors. Six, arrayed along the canyon's north wall, are what are known as “Great Houses” – self-contained pueblos, three or four stories high, whose fortress-like walls concealed up to eight hundred rooms.

Both the routes to Chaco Canyon entail driving twenty miles over rough but passable dirt roads. Open all year, these should not be attempted during or within a day of a rainstorm. Whether you approach from the south, by following Hwy-57 up from Seven Lakes, eighteen miles northeast of Crownpoint, or from the north or east, by turning off US-550 at Nageezi, 36 miles south of Bloomfield, you enter the park at its southeast corner, close to the visitor center (daily: summer 8am–6pm; winter 8am–5pm; $8 per vehicle; ☎ 505/786-7014, 🌐 www.nps.gov/chcu). The basic first-come, first-served Gallo campground ($10), a short way east, is the only visitor facility in the park; from April to October it's usually full by 3pm.

The gates of the canyon's eight-mile one-way loop road are open the same hours. The major stop is at the far end, where Pueblo Bonito ("beautiful town") – said to have been the biggest building in America until structural steel was developed in 1898 – can be explored on an easy half-mile trail. Work on this four-story D-shaped structure started in 850 AD and continued for three hundred years. Entering the ruin via its lowest levels, the path reaches its central plaza, which held at least three Great Kivas – ceremonial chambers thought to have been used by entire communities rather than individual clans or families.

Gallup

Just half an hour from the Arizona border, 65 miles west of Grants, the famous Route 66 town of GALLUP is a handy but uninteresting I-40 pit stop. A five-mile line of the old Route 66 frontage contains some of the least expensive motels in the US, such as the Colonial, 1007 W Coal Ave (☎505/863-6821; 📍). Unless you're falling asleep at the wheel, the only place really worth stopping for in Gallup is the lovely 🏡 El Rancho Hotel, 1000 E 66 Ave (☎505/863-9311 or 1-800/543-6351, 🌐www.elranchohotel.com; 📍), built in 1937 as a home away from home for the many Hollywood stars filming nearby. Nowadays you can ogle their signed photos in the spacious Spanish Revival lobby, grab a bite in its decorative restaurant, or spend the night in the Ronald Reagan Room, the Marx Brothers Room, or the Mae West Room. The best guestrooms are in the original ranchhouse, the rest in a two-story motel building.

The Navajo and other Native Americans come together in Red Rock State Park, four miles east of Gallup, on the second weekend in August for the Inter-Tribal Indian Ceremonial, the largest such gathering anywhere (information and tickets ☎505/863-3896 or 1-888/685-2564; 🌐www.indianceremonial.com). Four days of dances and craft shows have as their highlight a Saturday morning parade through the town.

Southern New Mexico

Most of the travelers who come to southern New Mexico are here to visit Carlsbad Caverns National Park. Crassly commercialized it may be, but it's too amazing a geological spectacle to miss. Northwest of Carlsbad, the Sacramento and Jicarilla mountains are home to the Mescalero Apache reservation as well as some rough-and-ready resorts. The desolate dunes of the White Sands spread west of the mountains, with the rolling hills of the Rio Grande Valley beyond.

Carlsbad Caverns National Park

CARLSBAD CAVERNS NATIONAL PARK consists of a tract of the Guadalupe Mountains that's so riddled with underground caves and tunnels as to be virtually hollow. Tamed in classic park-service style with concrete trails and electric lighting, this subterranean wonderland is now a walk-in gallery, where tourists come in droves to marvel at its intricate limestone tracery. Though the summer crowds can get pretty intense, in a strange way that's part of the fun – coming to Carlsbad feels like a real throwback to the great 1950s boom in mass tourism. Before you decide to join in, however, be sure to grasp that the park is a long way from anywhere else – three hundred miles southeast of Albuquerque and 150 miles northeast of El Paso, Texas.

To reach the park, follow the narrow, twisting seven-mile road that leaves US-62/180 at White's City, twenty miles southwest of the town of CARLSBAD. This ends at the visitor center – part of a complex that includes a restaurant, a gift shop, a day-care center, and even a kennel – where you can pay entrance fees and pick up details of the day’s schedule of tours (daily: June to mid-Aug 8am–7pm; mid-Aug to May 8am–5pm; ☎ 505/785-2232, 🌐 www.nps.gov/cave).

Almost all park visitors confine their attention to the main cave, Carlsbad Cavern itself, and the standard park fee of $6 per person for three days covers access to this cave only. Direct elevators drop to the Cavern’s centerpiece, the Big Room, 750 vertical feet below the visitor center (summer first down 8.30am, last up 6.30pm; rest of year first down 8.30am, last up 4.55pm), but you can choose instead to walk down via the Natural Entrance Route (last entry summer 3.30pm; rest of year 2pm). This steep, paved footpath switchbacks into the guano-encrusted maw of the cave, taking fifteen minutes to reach the first of the formations and another fifteen to reach the Big Room. All visitors are obliged to ride the elevator back out.

Measuring up to 1800ft long and 250ft high, the Big Room is festooned with stalactites, stalagmites, and countless unnameable shapes of swirling liquid rock. All are a uniform stone gray; the rare touches of color are provided by slight red or brown mineral-rich tinges, improved here and there with gentle pastel lighting. Most visitors take an hour or so to complete the reasonably level trail around the Room’s perimeter. Whatever the weather up top – summer highs exceed 100°F – the temperature down here is always a cool 56°F, so dress warmly.

Adjoining the Big Room, the Underground Lunchroom is a vast formation-free side cave paved over in the 1950s to create a diner-cum-souvenir-shop that sells indigestible lunches in polystyrene containers, plus Eisenhower-era souvenirs like giant pencils and Viewmaster reels.

The main appeal of walking down used to be that the trail meandered through beautiful side caves such as the King’s Palace, filled with translucent “draperies” of limestone, but these are now open to guided tours only, which start from the Big Room (daily summer 10am, 11am, 2pm & 3pm; winter 10am & 2pm; $8). Additional tours, scheduled in the visitor center, can take you along the Left Hand Tunnel route down from the visitor center ($7), or on a much more demanding descent into either Spider Cave or the Hall of the White Giant (both $20).

Practicalities

No matter how you get to Carlsbad Caverns, you have to cross seemingly endless miles of the Llano Estacado, the deathly flat rangeland that covers southeast New Mexico and the Texas Panhandle. The route from El Paso, Texas, has the advantage of passing through Guadalupe Mountains National Park, a beautiful though little-visited complement to Carlsbad, which offers superb camping (see p.767).

WHITE’S CITY is not a town but a privately owned tourist complex, which as well as featuring a little water park provides the closest accommodation and camping to the national park, including the mock-adobe Best Western Cavern Inn (☎ 505/785-2291 or 1-800/228-3767, 🌐 www.whitescity.nm; 📍 3; the White’s City RV Park (same number), which has tent camping space; and the Velvet Garter Restaurant (same number). The town of CARLSBAD itself, 25 miles north of White’s City, holds little of interest outside its many motels, such as the large Best Western Stevens Inn, 1829 S Canal St (☎ 505/887-2851 or 1-800/730-2851, 🌐 www.stevensinn.com; 📍 4), where rates include a full breakfast at the Flume Room restaurant, which is pretty much the best in town.

Roswell

Seventy-five miles north of Carlsbad, the small ranching town of ROSWELL is renowned as the spot where an alien spaceship supposedly crash-landed on July 4, 1947. The commander of the local air force base announced that they had retrieved the wreckage of a flying saucer, and despite a follow-up denial within a day the story has kept running. In 1997, as 100,000 X-Files fanatics descended upon Roswell for a six-day festival to mark the “Incident’s” fiftieth anniversary, the US government revealed that an errant weather balloon had crashed while monitoring the atmosphere for evidence of Soviet nuclear tests. Nonetheless, their imaginations further stimulated by TV series like Roswell and Taken, UFO theorists remain unconvinced.

Despite the wishful thinking of the truly weird clientele who drift in, the International UFO Museum, 114 N Main St (daily 9am–5pm; $2; ☎ 505/625-9495, 🌐 www.iufomrc.org), inadvertently exposes the whole tawdry business as transparent nonsense. Its showpiece is a model of an “alien autopsy”, built for the movie Roswell; you can’t help suspecting it was also featured in the grainy “documentary” autopsy footage that created a brief sensation in 1995.

By way of contrast, the longstanding Roswell Museum, 100 W 11th St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free), boasts an excellent, multifaceted collection, with a section celebrating pioneer rocket scientist Robert Goddard (1882–1945). Historical artifacts elsewhere range from armor and pikes brought by Spanish conquistadors to astronaut Harrison Schmitt’s spacesuit. A huge gallery also displays Southwestern landscapes by Henriette Wyeth and Peter Hurd, and a solitary Georgia O’Keeffe, Ram’s Skull With Brown Leaves.

Roswell’s visitor center is at 426 N Main St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎ 505/624-0889, 🌐 www.roswellnm.org). The finest motel in town, the Best Western Sally Port Inn, 2000 N Main St (☎ 505/622-6430 or 1-800/548-5221, 🌐 www.bestwestern.com; 📍), also has a good restaurant; the Frontier Motel, 3010 N Main St (☎ 505/622-1400 or 1-800/678-1401, 🌐 www.frontiermotelroswell.com; 📍), is much cheaper, and has a good pool. The Cattle Baron, 1113 N Main St (☎ 505/622-2465), is a large, good-value steakhouse, while Farley’s, just up the hill at 1315 N Main St (☎ 505/627-1100), is a livelier sci-fi-themed pub and diner.

Lincoln

One of the most enduring of New Mexico’s many legendary Wild West figures is Brooklyn-born William Bonney, better known as Billy the Kid. Many towns lay claim to him, but he first came to fame as an 18-year-old in the Lincoln County War, which erupted in 1878 in the frontier town of LINCOLN, on Hwy-380 halfway between Carlsbad and Albuquerque. Rival groups of ranchers and merchants fought to gain control of the town and hundreds of square miles of grazing lands. Since those days, no new buildings have joined the venerable false-fronted structures that line Main Street, and the entire town is now the Lincoln State Monument. Visitors can stroll its length at any time, while the cheapest way to visit its various historical sites is via a joint admission ticket, sold at the sites ($6 for all Lincoln sites plus Ruidoso’s Hubbard Museum, or $3.50 for each individual site; not all sites remain open throughout the winter; ☎ 505/653-4372, 🌐 www.nmmonuments.org & 🌐 www.hubbardmuseum.org).

Displays in the Historic Lincoln Visitors Center, at the east end of town (daily 8.30am–5pm), cover Hispanics, cowboys, “Buffalo Soldiers” – the black cavalrymen stationed at nearby Fort Stanton – and Apaches, as well as the Lincoln County War. Billy the Kid’s most famous jailbreak is commemorated at the Lincoln County Courthouse (daily 8.30am–5pm), at the other end of the street; waiting here under sentence of death, he shot his way out and fled to Fort Sumner, where Sheriff Pat Garrett eventually caught up with him (see p.940). On the first weekend of August the streets echo with gunfire once again, during the three-day Old Lincoln Days festival.

Near the courthouse, the Wortley Hotel – once owned by Sheriff Pat Garrett – offers seven plain but appealing hotel rooms (☎ 505/653-4300 or 1-877/967-8539, 🌐 www.wortleyhotel.com; April 28 to mid-Oct only; Ⓜ), and its dining room serves simple stews and sandwiches at lunchtime only. If you like a bit more comfort, head to the nearby Casa de Patrón B&B (☎ 505/653-4676, 🌐 www.casapatron.com; Ⓜ).

Ruidoso

The Sacramento, Capitan, and Jicarilla mountains, which rise at the western edge of the Llano Estacado, 85 miles northwest of Carlsbad, form a rare respite from the scrubby flatness. Spread out along winding roads that cut through dense groves of pine, fir, and aspen, the main town here, RUIDOSO, is the fastest-growing resort in the Southwest.

The Ruidoso Downs racetrack, just east of town, plays host to a 77-day racing season that culminates on Labor Day with the All-American Futurity, one of the world's richest horse races. Alongside, the Hubbard Museum of the American West (daily 10am–5pm; $6; ☎ 505/378-4142, 🌐 www.hubbardmuseum.org) holds displays on the natural and human-related history of horses, with a selection of memorabilia from around the world such as horse-drawn Russian sleighs, English road coaches, and Wild West stagecoaches.

In winter, attention turns to the 12,000-foot slopes of Ski Apache (☎ 505/336-4356, 🌐 www.skiapache.com), a downhill ski area northwest of town on Hwy-532 where lift tickets cost around $54 per day. Though operated by the Mescalero Apache, it's not on tribal land – they bought it as a going concern.

Ruidoso's visitor center, 720 Sudderth Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–4pm; ☎ 505/257-7395 or 1-877/784-3676, 🌐 www.ruidoso.net), provides lists of dozens of motels, such as the inexpensive Apache, 344 Sudderth Ave (☎ 505/257-2986 or 1-800/426-0616, 🌐 www.ruidoso.net/apache; Ⓜ). The glitzy Inn of the Mountain Gods, three miles southwest on Carrizo Canyon Road (☎ 505/257-5141 or 1-800/545-9011, 🌐 www.innofthemountaingods.com; winter Ⓜ, summer Ⓜ) is, like the ski resort, owned by the Mescalero Apache, and holds a lucrative casino as well as fine dining and luxury accommodation. Other eating possibilities range from the classy French cuisine of Le Bistro, 2800 Sudderth Drive (closed Sun; ☎ 505/257-0132), to the sandwiches and coffee at the nearby Books and Beans, 2501 Sudderth Drive (lunch only, closed Sun; ☎ 505/630-2326).

White Sands National Monument

Filling a broad valley west of Ruidoso and the Sacramento Mountains, the White Sands are 250 square miles of glistening, three-story-high dunes, not of sand, but of finely ground gypsum eroded from the nearby peaks. Most of the desert valley is under the control of the military, who use it as a missile range and training ground, and as a landing site for the space shuttle; only the southern half of the dunes is protected within White Sands National Monument (and even that is often closed for an hour or two at a time while missile tests are under way). The best place to start is at the visitor center, just off US-70, which illuminates the unique plants and animals that dwell here (daily: late May to early Sept 9am–7pm; early Sept to late May 8am–5pm; ☎ 505/479-6124, 🌐 www.nps.gov/whsa). An eight-mile paved road ($3) stretches into the heart of the dunes, where you can scramble and slide in the sheer white landscape.

ALAMOGORDO, which sits at the base of the Sacramento Mountains, sixteen miles east of the Monument along US-54, holds the nearest food and lodging.

Las Cruces and Mesilla

From White Sands, US-70 heads southwest across the Tularosa Valley to LAS CRUCES – “the Crosses” – a large, modern farming community on the Rio Grande at the junction of I-10 and I-25. The town takes its name from the dozens of white crosses set up in the sands to mark the graves of early travelers killed by the Apache, but any real sense of its history is pretty well buried by motels and fast-food franchises. It’s a prosperous place, though, and likely to become more so if, as anticipated, the Southwest Regional Spaceport, currently being built in the empty desert roughly 45 miles northeast, becomes the base for the first-ever passenger spaceflights, due to be operated by Virgin Galactic (@www.virgingalactic.com) from 2008 onwards.

The little-changed Hispanic village of MESILLA, just south of I-10 two miles west, was until the 1870s one of the Southwest’s largest towns, with upward of eight thousand inhabitants. During the Civil War, it even served briefly as the Confederate capital of New Mexico and Arizona, but it went into swift decline when the railroad bypassed it in favor of Las Cruces in 1881. Mesilla’s delightful Old West plaza has a real frontier feel to it, even though most of the old adobes that surround it now house art galleries and souvenir shops. Such is the fate of the former courthouse where Billy the Kid was tried and sentenced to death in 1881. Restaurants include the steak-oriented Double Eagle (☎505/523-6700), while the Mesón de Mesilla, 1803 Av de Mesilla (☎505/525-2380 or 1-800/732-6025, @www.mesondemesilla.com; 🍷-🍷), a gorgeous “boutique resort” hotel five minutes’ walk east, has a top-class dining room, plus fifteen guest rooms offering widely varying facilities.

The southwest corner

I-10 heads west from Las Cruces across the wide-open rangeland that fills out the southwest corner of New Mexico, also known as the “Bootheel” for the way it steps down toward Mexico. It’s so sparsely inhabited that there are roughly three square miles per person. Towns are few and far between: both DEMING, sixty miles west of Las Cruces, and LORDSBURG, on I-10 twenty miles short of Arizona, hold Amtrak stations, plus a string of gas stations, cafés, and motels, but little else.

Silver City

Rarely visited and almost entirely wilderness, the semi-arid, forested, volcanic Mogollon and Mimbres mountains soar above the high desert plain of southwest New Mexico to over ten thousand feet, and remain little altered since Apache warrior Geronimo was born here at the headwaters of the Gila River.

Halfway up the mountains, the biggest settlement, SILVER CITY, lies 45 miles north of I-10 at the junction of US-180 from Deming and Hwy-90 from Lordsburg. The Spanish came here in 1804, sold the Mimbresño Indians into slavery, and opened the Santa Rita copper mine, just east of town below the Kneeling Nun monolith. The town was re-established in 1870 as a rough-and-tumble silver camp – Billy the Kid spent most of his childhood here. A fine selection of ornate old buildings is scattered along elm-lined avenues and across the hills. The excellent Silver City Museum at 312 W Broadway (Tues–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; free) tells the boom-and-bust tales, and holds fine specimens of Casas Grandes pottery, beautiful Navajo rugs, and basketry from all the major Southwest tribes.

In downtown Silver City, the Palace Hotel, 106 W Broadway (☎505/388-1811, @www.zianet.com/palacehotel; 🍷), is a small, nicely restored nineteenth-century hotel. Just outside town, Bear Mountain Guest Ranch (☎505/538-2538 or 1-877/620-2327, @www.bearmountainlodge.com; 📍) is a large 1920s ranch, now run as a B&B, that makes a great base for bird-watching, cycling, mountain biking, or cross-country skiing. Bullard Street in the heart of town holds saloons and cafés like the Jalisco Café at no. 100 (☎505/388-2060).

Arizona

The tourism industry in ARIZONA has, literally, one colossal advantage – the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River, which is the single most awe-inspiring spectacle in a land of unforgettable geology. However, the Grand Canyon is by no means the most interesting or memorable destination in the state. Indeed, in comparison to its inhuman scale, other parts of Arizona have a more abiding emotional impact, precisely because of the sheer drama of human involvement in this forbidding but deeply resonant desert landscape.

Over a third of the state still belongs to the Native Americans who have lived here for centuries, and who outside the cities form the majority of the population. In the so-called Indian Country of northeastern Arizona, the reservation lands of the Navajo Nation hold the stupendous Canyon de Chelly and dozens of other marvelously sited Ancestral Puebloan ruins, as well as the stark rocks of Monument Valley. The Navajo surround the homeland of one of the most stoutly traditional of all Native American peoples, the Hopi, who live in remote mesa-top villages. The third main tribal group is the Apache, in the harshly beautiful southeastern mountains – the last Native Americans to give in to the overwhelming power of the white American invaders.

Away from the reservations, Wild West towns like Tombstone, site of the famed gunfight at the OK Corral, give a clear sense of Arizona's rough-and-ready, pioneer mentality; this was the last of the lower 48 states to join the Union, in 1912. The cities, however, are not nearly so much fun. In Phoenix, the capital, well over a million souls are scattered over a 500-square-mile morass of shopping malls and tract-house suburbs; Tucson is rather more appealing, but is still liable to wear thin after a couple of days.

Though the open spaces of southern Arizona can be harsh, the bleakness is balanced somewhat by the many nature reserves that protect its amazing flora and fauna, such as Saguaro National Park, just outside Tucson, with its giant cactuses, real-life roadrunners, and rare Gila monsters.

Getting around Arizona

Arizona is better served by public transportation than much of the Southwest, but it's still hard to get around without a car. Greyhound buses stop at the major cities and most towns along the interstates, while Amtrak trains cross the state on two transcontinental routes (via Tucson in the south, or Flagstaff further north). Seeing the backcountry, however, is all but impossible without a car. The largest airport is at Phoenix.

Tucson, Phoenix, and southern Arizona

Most of Arizona's compelling natural attractions are in its northern reaches, but the southern half of the state holds ninety percent of its people, all its significant cities, and several important historic sites. The bulk of what there is to see is frontier Americana, especially in Tombstone, in the southeast corner. Phoenix, the state capital, is huge, sprawling, and dull; Tucson makes a better base.

Tucson and around

After serving as a Colonial outpost under the Spanish and Mexicans, and then as territorial capital for both the US and Confederate governments, TUCSON (pronounced TOO-sonn) – a mere sixty miles north of Mexico on the cross-country I-10 – has grown into a modern metropolis of around 900,000 people without entirely sacrificing its historic quarters. Now equal parts college town and retirement community, it's one of the more attractive big cities of the Southwest – which admittedly isn't saying much. Although it suffers from the same Sunbelt sprawl as Albuquerque and Phoenix, it does have a compact center, some enjoyable restaurants, and pretty good nightlife, energized by the 35,000 students at the University of Arizona. The city is also redeemed by having so much superb landscape within easy reach, from the forested flanks of Mount Lemmon to the rolling foothills of Saguaro National Park.

Arrival and information

Tucson International Airport, eight miles south of downtown (☎ 520/573-8100), receives far fewer long-distance flights than Phoenix. It's connected to central Tucson by the slow Sun Tran bus #11 or #6 ($1), and the $15 shuttle vans of Arizona Stagecoach (☎ 520/889-1000, 🌐 www.azstagecoach.com). For taxi service, call Allstate Cab (☎ 520/798-1111). The Amtrak station, downtown at 400 E Toole Ave, is served by three trains weekly in each direction between Los Angeles and points east, with connecting buses running north to Phoenix. Greyhound buses also stop very centrally, at 2 S Fourth Ave.

Tucson's visitor center is downtown at 100 S Church Ave (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–4pm; ☎ 520/624-1817 or 1-800/638-8350, 🌐 www.visittucson.org). Gray Line (☎ 520/622-8811 or 1-800/276-1528; 🌐 www.graylinearizona.com) offers $45 city tours by bus, and can also take you further afield, including to San Xavier Mission ($35), Nogales ($65–85), or Tombstone and Bisbee ($105).

Accommodation

Tucson has reasonably priced hotels and motels in the central area, as well as some atmospheric B&Bs both in the historic center and out in the desert. It also has its fair share of resorts and dude ranches. Rates drop when the mercury rises, and some places are open only in the peak winter and spring seasons.

Summer ⑤, winter ⑧

The Town

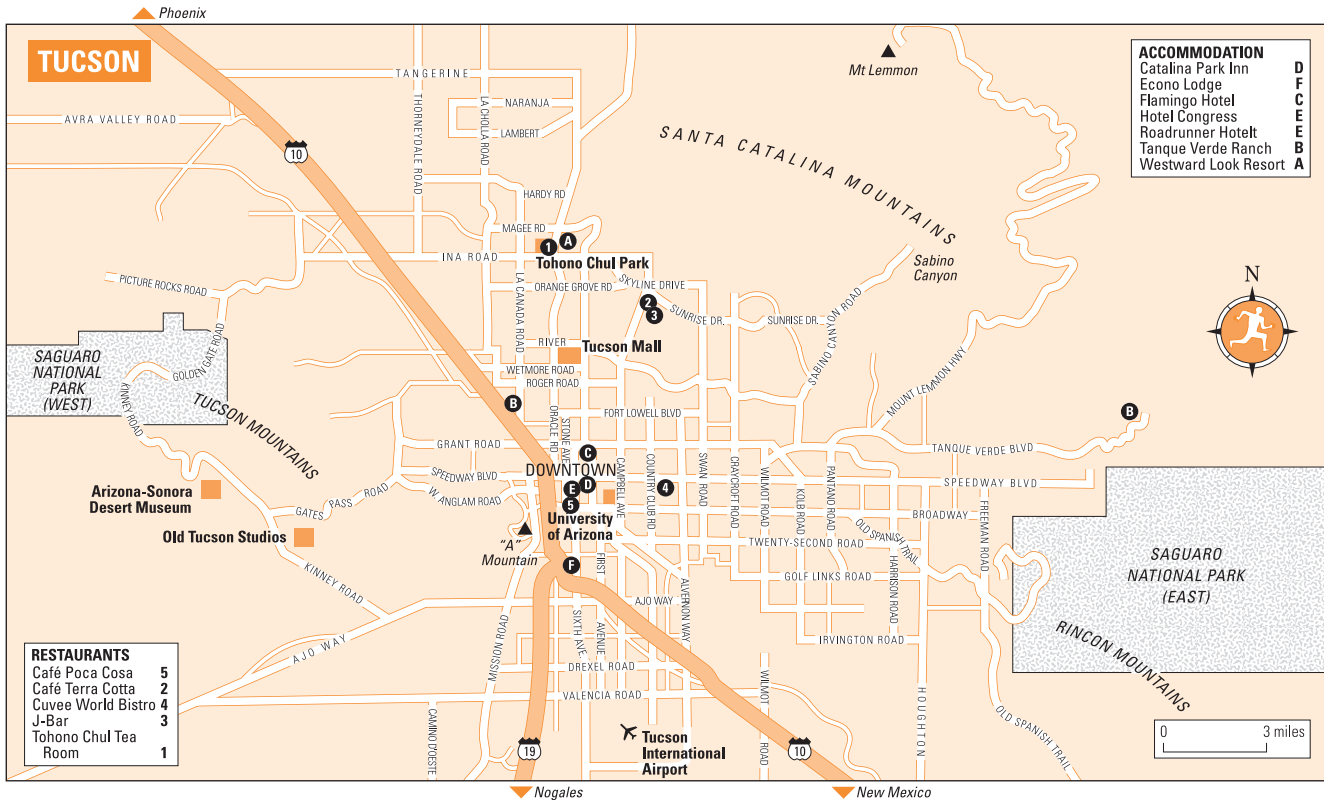

Tucson has two main historic centers: the downtown core along the (usually bone-dry) Santa Cruz River, bisected by Congress Street, and the quarter around the University of Arizona campus, a mile to the east. The city was founded in the late 1700s by Catholic missionaries who came from Mexico, then a Spanish colony, to convert the Pima Indians. Nothing very substantial remains from this era, but hundreds of artifacts are now displayed inside the many historic adobe homes in and around the El Presidio district of cafés, art galleries, and B&Bs, two blocks north of Broadway. Access to much of El Presidio is controlled by the Tucson Museum of Art, 140 N Main Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $8, under-13s free; free first Sun of month; © www.tucsonarts.com). The main building displays changing exhibitions of modern paintings and sculpture, while an adjoining adobe holds an excellent collection of folk art and pre-Columbian artifacts. The district's oldest house, La Casa Cordova, showcases the city's Mexican heritage.

Three blocks south, engulfed by the Tucson Convention Center complex, the adobe Sosa-Carrillo-Frémont House, 151 S Granada Ave (Wed–Sat 10am–4pm; free), is the sole survivor of a neighborhood torn down during the 1960s. Built for merchant Leopoldo Carrillo in 1858, it was briefly rented by former explorer John C. Frémont when he was Governor of Arizona in 1878. Though much restored, it offers a vivid sense of the more civilized side of frontier life.

Tucson's other main area of interest, around the University of Arizona, spreads between Sixth Street and Speedway Boulevard, a mile east of downtown. Its chief highlight is the on-campus Arizona State Museum (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; © www.statemuseum.arizona.edu), where an exceptionally comprehensive assembly of Native American artifacts traces the evolution of the various Southwest tribes.

Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum

Part zoo, part garden, the top notch Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum is fourteen miles west of the university along Speedway Boulevard, in Tucson Mountain Park (daily: June–Aug Sun–Fri 7.30am–5pm, Sat 7.30am–10pm; March–May & Sept 7.30am–5pm; Oct–Feb 8.30am–5pm; adults $9, ages 6–12 $2 May–Oct; adults $12, ages 6–12 $4 Nov–April; ☎ 520-883-1380; © www.desertmuseum.org). Indoor displays, including a walk-through cave and mine, highlight regional geology and history, and a series of glass-fronted cages are occupied by tarantulas, rattlesnakes, and other creepy-crawlies. Along the looped path beyond – a hot walk in high summer – bighorn sheep, mountain lions, jaguars, and other seldom-seen desert denizens prowl in credible enclosed simulations of their natural habitats, and a colony of impish prairie dogs goes about its impenetrable business. Hawks and bald eagles fly about their own large aviary, thankfully separated from a greenhouse full of hummingbirds. The museum also serves as an animal rescue center: almost all the animals you see were injured in some way before ending up here, and would be unable to survive on their own.

Saguaro National Park

Flanking Tucson to either side, the two sections of Saguaro National Park offer visitors a rare and enthralling opportunity to stroll through strange desert “forests” of monumental, multi-limbed saguaro (pronounced sa-wah-row) cactuses. Each saguaro can grow up to fifty feet tall and weigh up to eight tons, but it takes around 150 years to do so. Whatever you may have seen in the movies, you can drive a long way in Arizona without seeing one; saguaro are unique to the Sonora Desert, and the thrill when you finally encounter a thousand at once is deeply satisfying. Both segments of the park can be seen on short forays from the city: in summer, it’s far too hot to do more than pose for photographs, and there is no lodging, or even permanent campground.

The Tucson Mountain District stretches north from the Desert Museum around fifteen miles west of downtown Tucson, on the far side of the mountains. Beyond the visitor center (daily 8.30am–5pm; $10; ☎ 520/733-5158, 🌐 www.nps.gov/sagu), the nine-mile Bajada Loop Drive – not fully paved, but always passable to ordinary vehicles – loops through a wonderland of weird saguaro, offering plentiful short hiking trails and photo opportunities. Signal Hill is especially recommended, for its petroglyphs and superb sunset views.

To reach the eastern section of the park, the Rincon Mountain District (same ticket, or $10 per vehicle; ☎ 520/733-5153), drive seventeen miles east of town, first along Broadway Boulevard and then Old Spanish Trail. Here, too, short trails such as the quarter-mile Desert Ecology Trail lead off the eight-mile Cactus Forest Drive (daily: April–Oct 7am–7pm; Nov–March 7am–5pm), but many visitors come specifically to hike far from the road, up into the mountains. The saguaro cactuses thin out almost as soon as you start climbing the Tanque Verde Ridge Trail, which leads in due course to a hundred-mile network of remote footpaths through thickly forested canyons.

Eating and drinking

Tucson has a fine selection of restaurants, but be warned that downtown shuts down pretty early – it’s hard to find anything open after 9pm. Mexican joints and cowboy-style Wild West steakhouses abound in the central districts, while fancier restaurants congregate further north in the Foothills, and especially in the resort hotels.

Café Poca Cosa 120 E Pennington St
☎ 520/622-6400. Popular and stylish downtown café that serves tasty, inexpensive Mexican – or to be more precise, Sonoran – cuisine with a great deal of contemporary Southwestern flair. Typical highlights on the short blackboard menu include shredded beef and cod with clams. Entrees under $10 at lunch, around $19 at dinner. Closed Sun.

Café Terra Cotta 3500 Sunrise Drive ☎ 520/577-8100. Inventive Southwestern cuisine, way north of downtown in the Foothills. The menu ranges from gourmet pizzas cooked in a wood-burning oven to meats grilled with chiles, with typical entrees priced around $20.

Cup Café Hotel Congress, 311 E Congress St
☎ 520/798-1618. Jazzy downtown café, straight out of the 1930s but updated to include an espresso bar, and serving a bewilderingly broad menu from 7am until after midnight daily.

Cuvee World Bistro 3352 E Speedway Blvd
☎ 520/881-7577, 🌐 www.cuveebistro.com. The eclectic menu at this playfully opulent yet casual bistro samples pretty much any world cuisine. All entrees, from crispy sea bass to mahogany roasted duck, are priced at under $20, and there's live music on weekends. Closed Sun.

J-Bar Westin La Paloma Resort, 3770 E Sunrise Blvd ☎520/615-6000. Terrific Southwest-Mex cuisine by Tucson's nationally acclaimed chef Janos Wilder at half the price of his upscale restaurant, Janos, next door. That and the view make it work the trip north to the Foothills. Closed Sun.

Tohono Chul Tea Room Tohono Chul Park, 7366 N Paseo del Norte ☎520/797-1222. Attractive adobe café in a small desert park on the northern fringes of town. Open daily 8am–5pm; ideal for breakfast, a light lunch, or a scones-and-jam afternoon tea.

Nightlife

Most of the arty cafés and nightclubs on Congress Street downtown double as bars and restaurants, while several student-oriented places can be found in the university area. There are half a dozen country-and-western saloons on the outskirts of town as well. For a full rundown, check the listings in the free Tucson Weekly.

Choice options include Club Congress, inside Hotel Congress at 311 E Congress St (☎520/622-8848), a hectic, trendy, late-opening bar with live music a couple of nights each week. For microbrews and simple food, head for Gentle Ben's Brewing Co, 865 E University Blvd (☎520/624-4177), which is regularly packed with students. A 1920s vaudeville palace, the Rialto Theatre, 318 E Congress St (☎520/740-0126, www.rialtotheater.com), has reopened as Tucson's hottest venue for touring bands.

South to the border: the Mission Trail

South from Tucson, I-19 heads straight for the Mexican border, 65 miles away, passing some reminders of the region's Spanish and Mexican heritage. The Mission San Xavier del Bac – the best-preserved mission church in the United States – lies just west of the freeway, nine miles south of downtown Tucson on the fringe of the vast arid plain of San Xavier Indian Reservation (daily 9am–6pm; donation). It was built for the Franciscans between 1783 and 1797, and even today its white-plastered walls and towers seem like a dazzling desert mirage; how much more dramatic they must have been two centuries ago, when to Christian missionaries and Apache warriors alike they symbolized the Spanish quest to subdue and convert the native peoples of the Southwest. No one knows the name of the architect responsible for its Spanish Baroque, even Moorish lines – it consists almost entirely of domes and arches, making only minimal use of timber – let alone the identities of the O'odham craftsmen who embellished its every feature. The ideal time to come is on Sunday morning, when four Masses draw large congregations from the reservation.

Forty miles further south, barely twenty miles north of the border, stands the evocative ruin of another eighteenth-century mission church, preserved as Tumacácori National Historical Park (daily 8am–5pm; $3 per person). Topped by a restored whitewashed dome, the mission is home only to the birds that fly down from the Patagonia Mountains. Behind its red-tinged, weather-beaten facade, the plaster has crumbled from the interior walls to reveal bare adobe bricks. A few traces of a mural can still be discerned in the raised sanctuary, but little remains of the priests' living quarters alongside. An informative museum is housed in the small visitor center at the entrance.

Nogales, Arizona, and Nogales, Mexico

Twenty miles south of Tumacácori, an hour from Tucson, sits the largest of the Arizona–Mexico border towns, NOGALES – in effect two towns, one in the US and one across the border in Mexico, which are known jointly as Ambos Nogales (both Nogales). There's nothing in particular to see on either side of the border, though the contrast between the orderly streets of the American town and the jumbled white-washed houses clinging to the slopes in Mexico is striking. Nogales, Arizona is a dreary little community, while Nogales, Mexico, is basically a lively, large-scale street market.

Crossing the border is straightforward, as Mexican visas are only required by travelers heading more than 21km south of the border. US citizens should, however, carry their passports or birth certificates, while foreign visitors should check that their visa status entitles them to re-enter the US; if you're on or eligible for the Visa Waiver Scheme (see p.60), you're fine. If driving, leave your car on the US side; you'll see lots of cheap lots as you approach the border. There's no need to change money: US dollars are accepted by stores and businesses across the border.

None of the Arizona-side motels stands within a mile of the border; the closest is the Best Western Siesta Motel, 673 N Grand Ave (☎ 520/287-4671; 📍). Most visitors prefer to eat in Mexico, where abundant cafés and diners line the busy central streets. Classier dining is offered by La Roca, hollowed into the rocky hillside just east of the railroad, a couple of blocks from the border at calle Elias 91, where a full seafood meal costs under $20.

The southeast corner

Among thousands of acres of unspoiled and magnificent wilderness, southeast Arizona contains numerous well-preserved and highly atmospheric ghost towns. I-10 buzzes across the region toward the New Mexico border, but for a grand tour of the region you can detour south instead along the more scenic US-80.

Kartchner Caverns State Park

Arizona's newest state park – Kartchner Caverns, seven miles south of Benson – centers on caves in the Whetstone Mountains that were discovered in 1974. Unlike Carlsbad Caverns, they're unusual in being “live,” or still growing, but they're not really worth traveling across the country to see, and with a visit for a family of four costing at least $60 in admission fees alone, they're also wildly overpriced.

Admission to the park costs $5 per vehicle, but visitors can only see the caves on either of two guided tours. The shorter tour lasts over an hour, including a tram ride to the cave entrance and 45 minutes underground, threading through the caverns' two upper “rooms,” the Throne Room and the Rotunda Room (adults $19, $10 ages 7–13). The ninety-minute Big Room tour delves deeper into the cave system, and requires visitors to pass through no fewer than six separate airlock doors to keep humidity at the necessary level (mid-Oct to mid-April only; adults $23, $13 ages 7–13).

Most tours are fully booked, so reservations must be made as far in advance as possible (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 520/586-2283, 🌐 www.azstateparks.com). You have to pay the full fee by credit card when you book; the fees are not refundable, though you can change precise timings. If you turn up without a reservation and fail to get in, content yourself with the displays in the large Discovery Center instead (daily 7.30am–6pm).

Tombstone

Perhaps the most famous town in the Wild West, TOMBSTONE lies 22 miles south of I-10 on US-80, 67 miles southeast of Tucson. More than a century has passed since its mining days came to an end, but “The Town Too Tough to Die” clings to an afterlife as a tourist theme park. With its dusty streets, wooden sidewalks, and swinging saloon doors, it's surprisingly unchanged. Most adults, however, have seen too many inauthentic replicas and movie recreations for even the real thing to retain much appeal, and so Tombstone is reduced to trying to divert kids with tacky dioramas and daily shoot-outs. However, while it's much more commercialized than its counterpart in New Mexico, Lincoln (see p. 942), it has to be said that it's also more fun. The best time to visit is during Hellorado Days in late October, when the air is cooler and the sun less harsh, and the streets are full of gun-toting strangers acting out gun battles and stagecoach robberies.

Tombstone only began life as a silver-boomtown in 1877, and by the end of the 1880s it was all but deserted again. However, on the day that gave it the notoriety that's kept it alive, its population stood at more than ten thousand. It was 2pm on October 26, 1881, when Doc Holliday, along with Wyatt Earp and his brothers Virgil and Morgan (who all served as local sheriffs), confronted a band of suspected cattle rustlers, the Clantons, in the legendary Gunfight at the OK Corral. Within a few minutes, three of the suspects were dead. The Earps were accused of murder, but charges were eventually dropped.

Although the gunfight in fact took place on Fremont Street, the OK Corral itself remains the major attraction for visitors, hosting its only daily gunfight at 2pm (daily 8.30am–5pm; $5; 🌐 www.ok-corral.com). In a baking-hot adobe-walled courtyard, crude dummies show the supposed locations of the Earps and the Clantons, in complete contradiction to contemporary reports of the fight.

Just off the main drag at Toughnut and Third streets, the one-time seat of Cochise County now serves as Tombstone Courthouse State Historic Park (daily 8am–5pm; $2.50). Several well-known trials of the time took place in its little-changed courtroom. Excellent exhibits include two detailed alternative versions of what might have actually happened at the OK Corral.

Central motels include the Tombstone Motel, 502 E Fremont St (📞 520/457-3478 or 1-888/455-3478, 🌐 www.tombstonemotel.com; 📍), while the classier Holiday Inn Express is a mile north on US-80 W (📞 520/457-9507 or 1-800/465-4329; 🌐 www.holidayinntombstone.com; 📍). Among old-style saloons serving burgers and beer in a raucous atmosphere are the Crystal Palace at Fifth and Allen streets, and Big Nose Kate's at 417 E Allen St, where you can still join an ongoing card game.

Bisbee

Crammed into a narrow gorge 25 miles south of Tombstone, the town of BISBEE is rivaled only by Jerome, near Sedona, as Arizona's most atmospheric Victorian relic. Like Jerome, its fortunes were built on a century of mining mundane copper from the mountains, rather than a few ephemeral years of gold and silver. Its solid brick buildings stand as an enduring testament to the days when Bisbee's population of twenty thousand outstripped both Phoenix and Tucson to make it the largest city between New Orleans and San Francisco. Phelps Dodge finally closed down its Bisbee operations in 1975, having extracted more than six billion dollars' worth of metals. As the miners moved away, however, artists and retirees moved in, preserving Bisbee's original architecture while turning it into a thriving, friendly little community that caters to tourists without being overwhelmed by them.

Walking Bisbee's narrow central streets, lined with galleries and antiques stores, is a pleasure in itself, but if you'd like to know more of the background it's well worth calling in at the Bisbee Mining and Historical Museum, 5 Copper Queen Plaza (daily 10am–4pm; $4).

The fanciest place to stay is the venerable Copper Queen Hotel, 11 Howell Ave (📞 520/432-2216, 🌐 www.copperqueen.com; 📍), which has a plush bar and a good restaurant with terrace seating. On the southern outskirts of town, just beyond the Lavender Pit, is the unique opportunity to sleep in a beautifully restored, irresistibly kitsch 1950s trailers at the Shady Dell RV Park, 1 Douglas Rd (T 520/432-3567, W www.theshadydell.com; 2-5).

Southwest Arizona: Yuma

There's virtually nothing in the vast desert plain of southwest Arizona to tempt you off the twin freeways that sprint to California. The US Army stages tank battles in its Yuma Proving Grounds between I-10 and I-8, while the air force drops bombs and tests Stealth technology in the more mountainous region bordering Mexico. The largest town hereabouts, YUMA, is little more than an oversized pit stop for freight trains and cross-country truckers. Yuma Territorial Prison, now a state park (daily 8am–5pm; $4) beside the Colorado River, was known a century ago as the “Hell Hole of Arizona,” holding over a hundred of the Wild West's most violent criminals. Its first inmates were forced to build the adobe walls that later contained them; you can wander around the grounds and cell blocks at will, and visit the small museum.

Neon-lit budget motels along the main drag include the good-value Yuma Cabana, 2151 S Fourth Ave (T 928/783-8311 or 1-800/874-0811, W www.yumacabana.com; 2), while the River City Grill, downtown at 600 W Third St (T 928/782-7988), is a bright “international” restaurant that's Yuma's most fashionable hangout.

Phoenix

The state capital and largest city in Arizona, PHOENIX holds only minimal appeal for tourists. When it began life in the 1860s, the sweltering little farming town stood in the heart of the large Salt River Valley, with a ready-made irrigation system left by ancient Indians (the name Phoenix honors the fact that the city rose from the ashes of a long-vanished Hohokam community). Within a century, however, Phoenix had turned into what writer Edward Abbey called “the blob that is eating Arizona,” acquiring the money and political clout to defy the self-evident absurdity of building a huge city in a virtually waterless desert. Now the sixth largest city in the US, it has filled the entire valley, engulfing the neighboring towns of Scottsdale, Mesa, and Tempe, and encompassing over a million people within the city boundaries and more than two million in the metropolitan area. Arizona's financial and industrial epicenter may just be getting into its stride; boosters claim the megalopolis will one day stretch 150 miles, from Wickenburg to Tucson.

The city's phenomenal rise was originally fueled by its image as a healthy oasis, where the desert had been tamed and transformed into a suburban idyll. While retirees still flock to enclaves such as Sun City, Phoenix now has a deserved reputation as the most unpleasant city in the Southwest – Las Vegas with no casinos, or LA with no beach. Above all, it's hot; between June and August daytime highs average over 100°F, making it the hottest city outside the Middle East.

In winter, when temperatures rarely drop below 65°F, snowbirds from colder climes arrive in large numbers. They pay vast sums to warm their bones in the luxury resorts and spas, concentrated especially in Scottsdale, that are the modern equivalent of the 1930s dude ranches. Unlike golf, tennis, and shopping, sightseeing rarely ranks high on the agenda – which is just as well, since there's a good deal of truth in the charge laid by Phoenix's older arch-rival, Tucson, that the city is sorely lacking in culture and history. Apart from the Heard Museum's excellent Native American displays, the cactuses at the Desert Botanical Garden, and Frank Lloyd Wright's architecture studio at Taliesin West, Phoenix is short of must-see attractions. In fact, if you're on a touring vacation, you'd miss little if you bypassed it altogether.

Sky Harbor International Airport is three miles east of downtown (☎ 602/273-3300, 🌐 www.phxskyharbor.com). Red Line buses on the Valley Metro system (☎ 602/253-5000, 🌐 www.valleymetro.org/transit/) connect the airport with downtown daily, plus Tempe and Mesa on weekdays, but it's easier to take a door-to-door shuttle bus, at $10–12 for downtown destinations and $20 for Scottsdale, with SuperShuttle (☎ 602/244-9000 or 1-800/258-3826, 🌐 www.supershuttle.com). Arizona Shuttle Services (☎ 928/795-6671 or 1-800/888-2749, 🌐 www.arizonashuttle.com) runs an hourly service south to Tucson, costing $29. There's no Amtrak train service to Phoenix, but Greyhound buses arrive at 2115 E Buckeye Rd (☎ 602/389-4200), close to the airport.

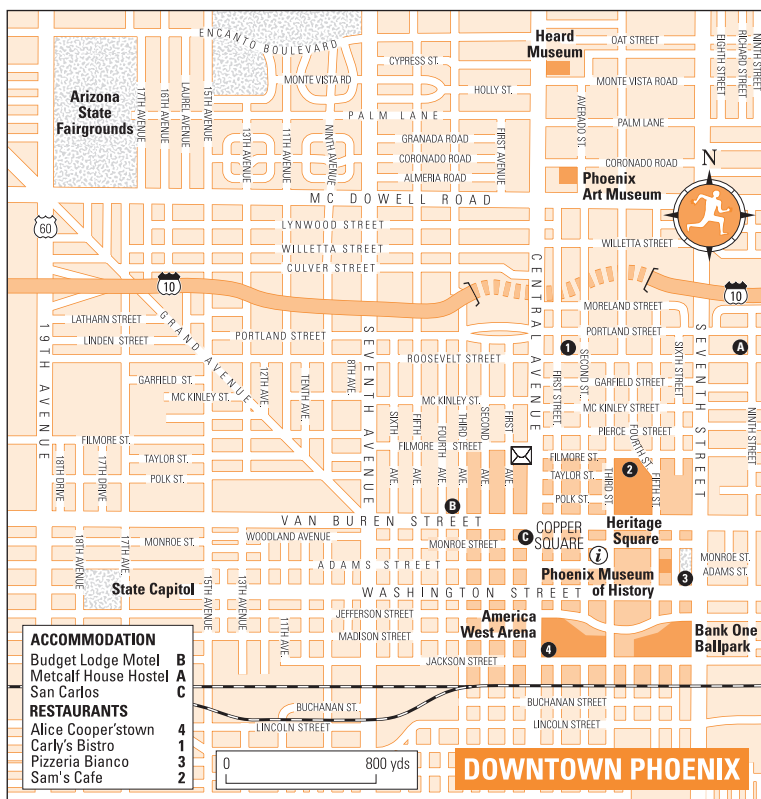

Phoenix is such a vast city, and one so utterly dependent on car travel, that it's much easier to drive than to use public transport – though you shouldn't underestimate the sheer length of time it takes to get from one side of the city to the other. That said, tourists may find the purple DASH buses useful, which run between the Arizona Center and the Capitol downtown (Mon–Fri 6.30am–5.30pm; shorter downtown loop continues until 11pm; free). For a cab, call Checker Cab (☎ 602/257-1818).

Phoenix's main visitor center is downtown at 50 N Second St, at Adams (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 602/254-6500 or 1-877/225-5749, 🌐 www.phoenixcvb.com).

Accommodation

Metropolitan Phoenix is so huge that it's worth paying a bit extra to ensure that your accommodation is near the places you want to visit. Oddly enough, downtown Phoenix is not one of the more expensive areas, with cheap motels lining the somewhat run-down W Van Buren Street a few blocks north of the center. The summer room rates, given below, rise significantly in winter.

Arizona Biltmore Resort & Spa 2400 E Missouri Ave ☎ 602/955-6600 or 1-800/950-0086, 🌐 www.arizonabiltmore.com. Extraordinarily lavish 500-room resort, a few miles northeast of downtown, built under the influence of Frank Lloyd Wright in the 1930s and still retaining its Art Deco trimmings. Two golf courses, three restaurants, plus tennis and spa. ③

Budget Lodge Motel 402 W Van Buren St ☎ 602/254-7247. Reasonably attractive rooms at very attractive rates, in an unexciting motel setting. Not far from downtown, but you'll feel safer if you drive rather than walk. ②

Days Inn Scottsdale Fashion Square Resort 4710 N Scottsdale Rd, Scottsdale ☎ 480/947-5411 or 1-800/325-2525, 🌐 www.scottsdaledaysinn.com. Though not all that prepossessing, this two-story motel, immediately north of Fashion Square Mall, has perfectly acceptable rooms plus an outdoor pool, and can be a real bargain. Summer ③, winter ④

Fiesta Inn 2100 S Priest Drive, Tempe ☎ 480/967-1441 or 1-800/528-6481, 🌐 www.fiestainnresort.com. Old-style resort, not as plush as its Scottsdale counterparts, but not as expensive either, offering large rooms plus restaurant, pool, tennis courts, and spa. Summer ④, winter ⑦

Metcalf House Hostel, 1026 N Ninth St above Roosevelt St ☎ 602/254-9803, http://home.earthlink.net/~phxhostel/. Budget hostel in a slightly run-down residential district, 15min walk north of the Arizona Center downtown. No phone reservations, but space is usually available. Check in 5–10pm, or, usually but not always, 7–10am. Dorm beds at $15 for HI/AYH members, $18 non-members.

Motel 6 On Camelback 6848 E Camelback Rd, Scottsdale ☎ 480/946-2280 or 1-800/466-8356, 🌐 www.motel6.com. Cut-price lodgings are few and far between in Scottsdale, so this budget motel, just off I-17 close to downtown, is well worth considering. ②

Hotel San Carlos 202 N Central Ave ☎ 602/253-4121 or 1-866/253-4121, 🌐 www.hotelsancarlos.com. Historic Twenties' hotel in the heart of downtown, with tasteful good-value rooms, a nice café, and a rooftop swimming pool. ⑥

Super 8 Mesa 6733 E Main St, Mesa ☎ 480/981-6181 or 1-800/800-8000, 🌐 www.super8.com. Budget chain motel to the east of central Mesa, en route toward the Superstition Mountains. Summer ②, winter ③

Tempe Mission Palms Hotel 60 E Fifth St, Tempe ☎ 480/894-1400 or 1-800/547-8705, 🌐 www.missionpalms.com. Very comfortable Southwestern-themed hotel in Tempe's revitalized Mill Avenue district, with a rooftop swimming pool. Summer ⑤, winter ⑩

Tempe Super 8 Motel 1020 E Apache Blvd, Tempe ☎ 480/967-8891 or 1-800/800-8000. Chain motel, within half a mile of the university and five miles of the airport. Summer ②, winter ③

Central Phoenix

Downtown Phoenix – defined as the few blocks east and west of Central Avenue, and north and south of Washington Street – is too spread out to walk around in any comfort. Nonetheless, determined efforts are being made to regenerate and revitalize it; three billion dollars have been pumped into new construction, and a ninety-block district has been rebranded with a new name – Copper Square. The major landmarks are two massive side-by-side sports stadiums, the America West Arena and the Bank One Ballpark, home respectively to basketball's Phoenix Suns and baseball's Arizona Diamondbacks. Adjoining those is the one significant downtown mall, the Arizona Center, on Van Buren Street between Third and Fifth.

What little remains of Phoenix's nineteenth-century architecture now constitutes Heritage Square, a couple of blocks southeast at 115 N Sixth St. Rather than original adobe ranch houses, however, it preserves a quaint assortment of Victorian homes, converted into tearooms and toy museums. You can get a better impression of the early days at the Phoenix Museum of History, across the street at 105 N Fifth St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; $6; ☎ www.pmoh.org), which features the city's first jail – a rock with a chain attached.

Two more significant attractions lie a mile or so north of downtown. Thanks to extensive remodeling, the Phoenix Art Museum, 1625 N Central Ave (Tues, Wed & Fri–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm; $9, free Thurs; ☎ www.phxart.org), has plenty of space to display its permanent collection, which includes paintings by Georgia O'Keeffe and Rufino Tamayo, as well as de rigueur Western art by Russell and Remington and some middleweight Old Masters, and features stimulating temporary exhibitions as well. Three blocks north and a block east, the Heard Museum, 22 E Monte Vista Rd (daily 9.30am–5pm; $10; ☎ 602/252-8848, ☎ www.heard.org), has also been greatly enlarged, while still showcasing the lovely old buildings in which it was founded. While the displays themselves have been somewhat “dumbed down,” it still offers a good introduction to the culture of the Native Americans of the Southwest. There's a special emphasis on the Hohokam, with artifacts from the large town, now known as “La Ciudad,” which occupied the site of modern Phoenix during the twelfth century. Elsewhere, the superb pottery collection ranges from stunning Mimbres bowls to modern Hopi ceramics, but best of all is a wonderful array of Hopi kachina dolls.

In Papago Park at the south end of Scottsdale, the fascinating Desert Botanical Garden (daily: Oct–April 8am–8pm; May–Sept 7am–8pm; $10; ☎ www.dbg.org) is filled with an amazing array of cactuses and desert flora from around the world. Prime specimens include spineless “totem pole” cactuses from the Galápagos Islands, and “living stone” plants from South Africa. Separate enclaves are devoted to butterflies – at their best in August and September – and hummingbirds, of which Arizona boasts fifteen indigenous species.

Taliesin West

Whatever its general appearance may suggest, Phoenix has managed to attract some visionary designers. Frank Lloyd Wright came to the city to work on the Biltmore Hotel, and stayed for most of the 25 years before his death in 1959. His winter studio, Taliesin West – at 114th Street and Frank Lloyd Wright Boulevard, at Scottsdale's northeastern edge – is now an architecture school and a working design studio, with multimedia exhibits of the man's life and work (Oct–May daily 10am–4pm; June & Sept daily 9am–4pm; July & Aug Mon & Thurs–Sun 9am–4pm; ☎ 480/860-2700, ☎ www.franklloydwright.org). It's still a splendidly isolated spot, and one where his trademark “organic architecture” makes perfect sense. The site can only be seen on guided tours; you can join either an hour-long “Panorama Tour” ($18) or a ninety-minute “Insight Tour” ($22), which are offered at regular intervals, increased to more than one every half-hour between February and mid-April. The expertise and enthusiasm of the guides makes the experience well worth the price.

Eating

Unless you're prepared to pay resort prices, it's hard to find a good restaurant in Phoenix with very much atmosphere. Apart from a block or two in central Scottsdale, and Tempe's lively Mill Avenue, no areas of the metropolis are small enough to walk around while you look for a place to eat, but if you're happy to drive, neighborhood diners – especially Mexican – can still be found.

Alice Cooper'stown 101 E Jackson St
☎ 602/253-7337. Barbecue restaurant-cum-sports bar, owned by the rock star and alongside downtown's America West Arena. The food's better than you'd expect, and the atmosphere is fun, with waiters in full Alice make-up. Lunch and dinner daily.

Bandera 3821 N Scottsdale Rd, Scottsdale
☎ 480/994-3524. Chicken cooked in the wood-burning oven is the specialty in this busy, inexpensive rotisserie in downtown Scottsdale, but other meats and fish are almost as good. Daily for dinner only.

Carly's Bistro 128 E Roosevelt St ☎ 602/262-2759. Pleasant, relaxing bistro in the artsy part of downtown, serving healthy Mediterranean sandwiches, salads and light meals, and offering regular live music. Closed Sun.

House of Tricks 114 E Seventh St, Tempe
☎ 480/968-1114. Tiny, romantic modern-American place in the university district, with lots of vegetarian options. Closed Sun.

Monti's La Casa Vieja 3 W First St, Tempe
☎ 480/967-7594. Tempe's oldest adobe house, built in 1873, is now a Western-themed diner serving a conventional steak-and-chicken menu at extraordinarily low prices. Lunch and dinner daily.

Pizzeria Bianco Heritage Square, 623 E Adams St ☎ 602/258-8300. High-quality pizzas in a very convenient downtown location; no wonder it's so popular. Tues–Sat 5–10pm.

Roaring Fork 4800 N Scottsdale Rd, Scottsdale
☎ 480/947-0795. Contemporary but unfussy Southwestern cuisine at reasonable prices from an award-winning chef, with fried chicken for $16.50, or duck breast with onion jam $24.50. Daily for dinner only.

Sam's Café Arizona Center, 455 N Third St
☎ 602/252-3545. Hectic downtown mall joint, with patio seating, that's nonetheless a great place to sample modern Southwestern cuisine (or as the menu calls it, Sam-Mex) or classic Mexican dishes (Mex-Mex).

Nightlife, entertainment, and sports

For a rundown of what's on musically in Phoenix, pick up the free weekly New Times in local record or book stores, or check out the bars and clubs listed below. Both the Phoenix Symphony Hall, 225 E Adams St (☎ 602/495-1999; 🌐 www.phoenixsymphony.org), and the Scottsdale Center for the Arts, 7380 E Second St (☎ 480/994-2787, 🌐 www.scottsdalearts.org), put on classical music, theater, and ballet. The Arizona Diamondbacks play major league baseball beneath the retractable roof of the Bank One Ballpark (☎ 602/514-8400, 🌐 www.azdiamondbacks.com), while the Phoenix Suns play NBA basketball at the America West Arena, 201 E Jefferson St (☎ 602/379-7900, 🌐 www.suns.com), and football's Arizona Cardinals are based at the university's Sun Devil Stadium (☎ 602/379-0102, 🌐 www.azcardinals.com).

Bash on Ash 230 W Fifth St, Tempe ☎ 480/966-5600, 🌐 www.bashonash.com. Live music venue in a sports bar in the heart of Tempe, featuring reggae, rock, soul, or salsa nightly except Mon.

e4 4282 N Drinkwater Blvd, Scottsdale ☎ 480/970-3325, 🌐 www.e4-az.com. Massive, eye-popping dance club, designed around air, earth, fire and water, and holding a Vegas-style "ultra-lounge" downstairs as well as the Liquid dance club with cascading waterfalls. Closed Sun & Mon.

Marquee Theatre 730 N Mill Ave, Tempe
☎ 480/829-0607, 🌐 www.luckymanonline.com.

The best venue to see big-name touring acts, with an open floor rather than seating, and good beer.

Rhythm Room 1019 E Indian School Rd, Phoenix
☎ 602/265-4842, 🌐 www.rhythmmroom.com. Top-notch blues and jazz acts perform in an intimate atmosphere, with good barbecue to help things along.

Last Exit Bar & Grill 1425 W Southern Ave, Tempe
☎ 480/557-6656, 🌐 www.lastexitlive.com. Rock-oriented live music venue in an unpromising mall, where acts range from country-rock to local punks.

Central Arizona

The I-40 interstate crosses the center of Arizona, skirting the Navajo Reservation that fills the northeastern corner of the state. Though the narrow strip of land to either side can be extraordinarily beautiful, with double rainbows reaching across the desert plain and fiery dawns blazing along the horizon, it holds few specific places worth stopping for until you come to the Flagstaff area. Itself a pleasant town, Flagstaff makes a base for several interesting excursions – to ancient Native American sites and the New Age center of Sedona, but above all to the Grand Canyon. Beyond Flagstaff to the west, there is once again little of interest.

East of Flagstaff: Holbrook and Winslow

East of Flagstaff, two old Route 66 towns, WINSLOW and HOLBROOK, are kept alive by transcontinental truckers. Each town consists of little more than a strip of motels, such as the concrete teepees of the Wigwam Motel at 811 W Hopi Drive in Holbrook (☎ 928/524-3048, 🌐 www.galerie-kokopelli.com/wigwam; 📍). However, Winslow is now graced once more by the restored splendor of La Posada Hotel, at 303 E Second St (📍 ☎ 928/289-4366, 🌐 www.laposada.org; 📍), which is such a totally magnificent place that it's worth going a very long way out of your way to spend a night here. A glorious fake, it was designed by Mary Jane Colter, of Grand Canyon fame, in the 1920s to emulate an 1860s hacienda. It also holds a great restaurant, the Turquoise Room (☎ 928/289-2888), open for all meals daily.

Petrified Forest National Park

At Petrified Forest National Park, which straddles I-40 a dozen miles east of Holbrook, a fossilized prehistoric forest of gigantic trees has been unearthed by erosion. The original cells of the wood have been replaced by multicolored crystals of quartz. Cross-sections, cut through with diamond saws and polished, look stunning, and can be seen in the two visitor centers, thirty miles apart at the north and south entrances. On the ground, however, along the various trails that set off from the park's 27-mile Scenic Drive, the trees themselves are not always all that exciting. Segmented, crumbling, and very dark, they can seem like a bunch of logs lying in the sand; the best viewing is when the setting sun brings out rich red and orange hues.

The northern section of the national park – site of the main visitor center and entrance station (daily: summer 7am–7pm; winter 8am–5pm; $10 per vehicle; ☎ 928/524-6228, 🌐 www.nps.gov/pefo) – is renowned for its views of the Painted Desert, an undulating expanse of solidified sand dunes, which at different times of day take on different colors (predominantly bluish shades of gray and reddish shades of brown).

Flagstaff

Northern Arizona's liveliest and most attractive town, FLAGSTAFF occupies a superbly dramatic location beneath the San Francisco Peaks, halfway between New Mexico and California. Straddling the I-40 and I-17 interstates, it's both a way station for tourists en route to the Grand Canyon, just eighty miles northwest, and a worthwhile destination in its own right.

Downtown, where barely a building rises more than three stories, oozes Wild West charm. Its main thoroughfare, Santa Fe Avenue, used to be Route 66, while before that it was the pioneer trail west. A stroll around its central few blocks is gloriously evocative of the past. The tracks of the Santa Fe Railroad still cut downtown in two, so life in Flagstaff remains punctuated both day and night by the mournful wail of passing trains.

Ever since it was founded, in 1876, Flagstaff has been a diverse place, with a strong black and Hispanic population, and Navajo and Hopi heading in from the nearby reservations to trade. Now home to a population of just over fifty thousand, it makes an ideal base for travelers. As well as the abundant hotels, restaurants, bars, and shops downtown, outlets of the national food and lodging chains line the interstates, while hostels and student diners cater for budget travelers.

Daily Amtrak trains stop in the center of town, where part of the station doubles as a helpful visitor center (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm, Sun 9am–4pm; ☎ 928/774-9541 or 1-800/842-7293, 🌐 www.flagstaffarizona.org).

Open Road Tours and Transportation (☎ 928/226-8060 or 1-800/766-7117, 🌐 www.openroadtours.com), based at the station, runs twice-daily bus services via Williams to the Grand Canyon (8.30am & 3pm; $27 one-way for adults, $10 for under 12s). Greyhound is a few blocks south of downtown at 399 S Malpais Lane (☎ 928/774-4573). Two local hostels – the DuBeau and the Grand Canyon, listed below – arrange inexpensive excursions for backpackers.

Accommodation

Flagstaff's dozens of motels and B&Bs provide reasonable value, while budget travelers can benefit from a couple of high-quality hostels. Most of the chain motels are congregated well to the east, but staying nearer downtown is much more fun.

DuBeau International Hostel 19 W Phoenix Ave ☎ 928/774-6731 or 1-800/398-7112, 🌐 www.dubeauhostel.com. Welcoming independent hostel just south of the tracks, whose converted en-suite motel rooms serve as four-person dorms at $18 per bed, or private doubles at around $40. Tours to the Grand Canyon (Mon, Wed, Fri & Sat, plus Tues in summer only; $55). Closed Nov–Feb.

Grand Canyon International Hostel 19 S San Francisco St ☎ 928/779-9421 or 1-888/442-2696, 🌐 www.grandcanyonhostel.com. Independent hostel, under the same friendly management as the similar DuBeau nearby, and offering the same tours, plus dorm beds at $18 in summer, $16 in winter, and private rooms for a little more.

Monte Vista 100 N San Francisco St ☎ 928/779-6971 or 1-800/545-3068, 🌐 www.hotelmontevista.com.

Atmospheric little 1920s hotel in the heart of downtown, where the assorted restored rooms, with and without attached bathrooms, are named for celebrity guests from Bob Hope to Michael Stipe. Rates rise by up to $20 at weekends. Ⓢ

Super 8 West 602 W Route 66 ☎ 928/774-4581 or 1-888/324-9131, 🌐 www.dknhotels.com. Smart, good-value chain motel, arranged around an enclosed swimming pool, alongside a Barnes & Noble bookstore less than a mile southwest of downtown. Ⓢ

Hotel Weatherford 23 N Leroux St ☎ 928/779-1919, 🌐 www.weatherfordhotel.com. Attractive old downtown hotel, with elegant wooden fittings, which is restoring its fading rooms to offer tasteful, basic accommodation, without phones or TVs. Can be noisy. Ⓢ

The Town

Flagstaff's appealing downtown stretches for a few redbrick blocks north of the railroad. Filled with cafés, bars, and stores selling Route 66 souvenirs and Indian crafts, as well as outfitters specializing in tents, clothing, and all sorts of contraptions for outdoor adventures, it's a fun place to stroll around, even if it holds no significant tourist attractions or historic buildings. Your most lasting impression is likely to be of the magnificent San Francisco Peaks, rising smoothly from the plains on the northern horizon, and topped by a jagged ridge.

The exceptional Museum of Northern Arizona, however, three miles northwest of downtown on US-180, rivals Phoenix's Heard Museum as the best museum in the state (daily 9am–5pm; $5, under-18s $2; ☎928/774-5213, 🌐www.musnaz.org). Its main emphasis is on documenting Native American life, with an excellent run-through of the Ancestral Puebloan past and contemporary Navajo, Havasupai, and Hopi cultures, but it also actively encourages the development of traditional and even new skills among Native American craftworkers. The exquisite inlaid silver jewelry now made by the Hopi, for example, is the result of a museum-backed program to find work for Hopi servicemen returning from World War II.

Eating and nightlife

Central Flagstaff compensates for its paucity of high-end restaurants with a lively assortment of both old-style Western diners and eclectic budget options. Thanks to all those students, the area around San Francisco Street, both north and south of the tracks, is filled with vegetarian cafés and espresso bars.

Beaver Street Brewery & Whistle Stop Café

11 S Beaver St ☎928/779-0079. Inventive sandwiches and salads, wood-fired pizza, and outdoor barbecue in the beer garden in summer.

Dara Thai 14 S San Francisco St ☎928/774-0047. Large Thai place just south of the tracks, where the service is great and a plate of delicious pad Thai noodles costs just $7 for lunch, $9 for dinner.

Downtown Diner 7 E Aspen Ave ☎928/774-3492. Classic Route 66 diner a block north of the main drag, featuring leatherette booths and hefty burgers and sandwiches.

Macy's European Coffee House & Bakery 14

S Beaver St ☎928/774-2243. Not merely superb coffee, but heavenly pastries to go with it, plus more substantial vegetarian dishes such as black bean pizza, and even couscous for breakfast. You'll also find free wireless Internet and an adjacent coin laundry.

The Museum Club 3404 E Route 66 ☎928/526-9434, 🌐www.museumclub.com. A real oddity; this log-cabin taxidermy museum somehow transmogrified into a classic Route 66 roadhouse, saloon, and country-music venue, now a second home to hordes of dancing cowboys.

Around Flagstaff

The area around Flagstaff is rich in natural and archeological wonders, with three national monuments – Sunset Crater, Wupatki, and Walnut Canyon – within 25 miles. Of these, only Sunset Crater has even a campground, and none has indoor lodgings. There's no scheduled public transportation.

Sunset Crater and Wupatki national monuments

North of Flagstaff, the San Francisco Volcanic Field of around four hundred volcanoes is prominent on the western horizon from the Hopi Mesas, and its peaks are said to be the home of their powerful kachina spirits.

Some of the volcanoes are still active, though the most recent eruption was that of Sunset Crater (twelve miles from Flagstaff on US-89) in 1066 AD. The crater was named by John Wesley Powell for the many colors of its cone, which swells from a black base through reds and oranges to a yellow-tinged crest. It's too unstable for walkers to be allowed onto the rim, but a trail passes through lava tubes around its base. The visitor center is nearby (daily 8am–5pm; ☎928/526-0502, 🌐www.nps.gov/sucr; $3 per person), opposite the Bonito campground (☎928/527-0866; $10; late May to mid-Oct).

A dozen miles further north, the ancient ruins at Wupatki National Monument appear to show different tribal groups living side by side in harmony (daily: summer 8am–7pm; winter 8am–5pm; admission $3 per person, including Sunset Crater; ☎928/679-2365, 🌐www.nps.gov/wupa). The Sinagua were joined here by many others, including the Ancestral Puebloans, when the Sunset Crater explosion deposited a rich new layer of topsoil. The specific site known as Wupatki (meaning “tall” or “big house”), standing proud on its natural foundations of red sandstone, is just the largest of numerous ruins.

Walnut Canyon National Monument

Between 1100 and 1250AD, Walnut Canyon, ten miles east of Flagstaff just south of I-40, was home to a thriving Sinagua community. Literally hundreds of their cliff dwellings can still be seen nestling beneath overhangs in the sides of the canyon. They simply walled off alcoves where the softer levels of the striated rock had eroded away, and then put up partitions to make separate rooms. No single dwelling is on the same scale as at Wupatki, and only a handful are accessible to visitors, but cumulatively they make for an impressive spectacle.

A large scenic window in the visitor center (daily: June–Aug 8am–6pm; March–May & Sept–Nov 8am–5pm; Dec–Feb 9am–5pm; $3 per person; ☎928/526-3367, 🌐www.nps.gov/waca) gives an excellent overall view. No accommodation, and only minimal snack food, is available.

Sedona and Red Rock Country

US-89A threads its way south from Flagstaff down the spectacular Oak Creek Canyon to emerge after 28 miles at Sedona, on the threshold of the extraordinary Red Rock Country. Up from the valley rise giant mesas and buttes of stark red sandstone, where Zane Grey set a number of his Wild West adventures. The boom-and-bust mining town of Jerome looks down from a mountainside to the south, while back beside I-17 toward Phoenix are further haunting Sinagua ruins.

Sedona

There’s no disputing the fact that the New Age resort of SEDONA enjoys a magnificent setting, amid definitive Southwestern canyon scenery. Sadly, however, the town itself adds nothing to the beauty of its surroundings. Several miles of ugly red-brick sprawl is occasionally interrupted by a mock-historical mall monstrosity. While Europeans tend to be turned off by it, many American travelers love it for its combination of luxurious accommodations and fancy restaurants, and its almost limitless opportunities for active outdoor vacationing. In particular, artists, healers, and wealthy retirees have flocked here in the last few decades, hailing it as “the next Santa Fe.” Whether you love it or hate it may depend on whether you share their wide-eyed awe for angels, crystals, and all matters mystical – and whether you’re prepared to pay over-the-odds prices for the privilege of joining them.

Vortex Tours of Red Rock Country

As few of the side roads around Sedona are paved, there’s a booming business in off-road tours, and especially those that visit so-called “vortexes.” These are run by companies such as the garish Pink Jeep Tours ($45–102; ☎928/282-5000 or 1-800/873-3662, 🌐www.pinkjeep.com) and Earth Wisdom Tours ($48 and up; ☎928/282-4714 or 1-800/482-4714, 🌐www.earthwisdomtours.com), who teach their clients “the ancestral secrets of the Medicine Wheel.” Many of the jeep roads are perfectly passable in ordinary vehicles. So long as you’re happy to remain in ignorance as to which rocks are really electromagnetic tuning forks vibrating in harmony with Alpha Centauri, there’s no great need to take a commercial tour. If you really want to get off-road, you can also head for Legends of Sedona Ranch (☎928/282-6826 or 1-800/848-7728), where “horses are free . . . but rides ain’t.” An hour on horseback costs around $54.

Established in 1902 by one Theodore Schnebly, and named after his wife, Sedona spent most of the twentieth century as a small farming settlement. German surrealist painter Max Ernst moved here in the 1940s, while Hollywood movie-makers filmed in the area from the 1950s onward. However, Sedona's big break came in 1981, when author Page Bryant "channeled" the information that Sedona is in fact "the heart chakra of the planet." Since she pinpointed her first vortex – supposedly a point at which psychic and electromagnetic energies can be channeled for personal and planetary harmony – the town has achieved its own personal growth, and blossomed as a focus for New Age practitioners of all kinds.

If you don't have much time to spend exploring, a cruise along US-89A enables you to see most of the sights, albeit from a distance; the best parts are south along Hwy-179 within Coconino National Forest. The closest vortex to town is on Airport Mesa; turn left up Airport Road from US-89A as you head south, about a mile past the downtown junction known as the "Y". The vortex is at the junction of the second and third peaks, just after the cattle grid. Further up, beyond the precariously sited airport, the Shrine of the Red Rocks looks out across the entire valley.

Sedona's visitor center, just north of the "Y," has full listings of lodgings and tour operators (Mon–Sat 8.30am–5pm, Sun 9am–3pm; ☎ 928/282-7722 or 1-800/288-7336, @ www.visitsedona.com). The town is an expensive place to stay; what pass for budget motels include the Sedona Motel, close to the "Y" at 218 Hwy-179 (☎ 928/282-7187; Ⓜ), and the renovated Los Abogados Lodge, a little further north at 270 N US-89A (☎ 928/282-7125 or 1-800/695-4161, @ www.ilxresorts.com; Ⓜ).

Fournos, 3000 W Hwy-89A (reservations required; ☎ 928/282-3331), is a lovely little Greek restaurant, open for dinner at 6pm and 8pm from Thursday to Saturday, and for brunch on Sunday at noon; the Coffee Pot Restaurant, 2050 W Hwy-89A (☎ 928/282-6626), is a large old-style diner, serving all the burgers, Mexican dishes, and fried specials you could hope for.

Jerome

The former mining town of JEROME, high above the Verde Valley on US-89A thirty miles south of Sedona, is conspicuous from quite a distance: an enormous letter "J" is etched deep into the hillside above it, while a large chunk of that hillside is missing altogether, having been blown apart for opencast copper mining. Serious exploitation of the mineral wealth here started with the opening of the United Verde mine in 1876. Until the current tortuous road was built, the only way up to Jerome was the precipitous rail line connecting the mine with the world's largest copper smelter at Clarkdale.

From the 1950s, when the mines closed down, until the 1970s, Jerome was a ghost town in which it was possible to turn up and move into an empty house. Many who did so are still here, making a living from arts and crafts, and the town itself has made a dramatic recovery. The hillside is so steep that the houses tend to have two stories at the front and four or five at the back. Under the repeated concussion of more than two hundred miles of tunnels being blasted into the mountainside, the whole town used to slip downhill at the rate of five inches per year, and the Sliding Jail on Hull Avenue came to rest 225ft from where it was built.

At the highest point in town, the Jerome Grand Hotel, 200 Hill St (☎ 928/634-8200 or 1-888/817-6788; @ www.jeromegrandhotel.com; Ⓜ), is a restored Spanish Mission hotel with fabulous views. The rooms are atmospheric rather than particularly luxurious, and there's a good on-site restaurant, The Asylum.

Montezuma Castle National Monument

In an idyllic setting just above Beaver Creek and just east of I-17, around 25 miles from Sedona, Montezuma Castle National Monument focuses on a superbly preserved Sinagua cliff dwelling (daily: summer 8am–7pm; winter 8am–5pm; $3; ☎ 928/567-3322, @ www.nps.gov/moca). Filling an alcove in the hillside with a wall of pink adobe, its five stories taper up to fit the contours of the rock. Apparently, the fingerprints of the masons are still visible on the bricks, and the sycamore beams remain firmly in place, but visitors are not permitted to climb up.

West of Flagstaff: I-40 to California

Everything along I-40 west of Flagstaff is dominated by the road's function as the main route between Las Vegas and the Grand Canyon. The first town you reach, WILLIAMS, seems to exist solely to capture the passing tourist trade, with a historic railroad running north to the Canyon (see p.970 for more details). Forty-five miles further west at the town of SELIGMAN, one of the longest surviving stretches of the old Route 66 heads off on a northern loop through the Hualapai Indian Reservation and a dozen fading towns, PEACH SPRINGS in particular, that look like they're straight out of The Grapes of Wrath. This makes a great detour on what is otherwise a very dull drive; it also provides the best access to the less visited western reaches of the Grand Canyon, around Havasu Canyon (see p.975).

Unless you need to fill your tank, there's little reason to stop at KINGMAN, the largest town in western Arizona, from where US-93 branches north to Las Vegas and I-40 continues to Los Angeles.

Lake Havasu City

Forty miles southwest of Kingman, ten miles from the California border, a detour south leads to one of the more bizarre sights of the American desert – the old gray stone of London Bridge, reaching out to an artificial island across the stagnant waters of the dammed Colorado River at LAKE HAVASU CITY. The resort's developer, Robert P. McCulloch, bought the bridge (under the impression it was Tower Bridge – or so the story goes) for $2.4 million in the late 1960s and shipped it across the Atlantic chunk by chunk before reassembling it over a channel dug to divert water from Lake Havasu. Lake Havasu City holds an undeniable attraction for the parched urbanites of Phoenix, who flock to fish on the lake or race on jet-skis, but minimal appeal for travelers from further afield. Moreover, between March and June, it's filled with students on spring break, drinking and partying around the clock.

Motels abound, ranging from the perfectly adequate Bridgeview Motel, 101 London Bridge Rd (☎ 928/855-5559; 📍), to the extravagant riverfront London Bridge Resort, 1477 Queen's Bay Rd (☎ 928/855-0888 or 1-866/330-9231, @ www.londonbridgeresort.com; winter 📍, summer 📍), where the lobby is all but filled by a gilt replica stagecoach. Shugrue's (☎ 928/453-1400), across the bridge in the Island Fashion Mall, serves good fresh fish – even sushi – as well as salads and pasta.

The Grand Canyon

Although almost five million people visit GRAND CANYON NATIONAL PARK every year, the canyon itself remains beyond the grasp of the human imagination. No photograph, no set of statistics, can prepare you for such vastness. At more than one mile deep, it's an inconceivable abyss; varying between four and eighteen miles wide, it's an endless expanse of bewildering shapes and colors, glaring desert brightness and impenetrable shadow, stark promontories and soaring, never-to-be-climbed sandstone pinnacles. Somehow it's so impassive, so remote – you could never call it a disappointment, but at the same time many visitors are left feeling peculiarly flat. In a sense, none of the available activities can quite live up to that first stunning sight of the chasm. The overlooks along the rim all offer views that shift and change unceasingly from dawn to sunset; you can hike down into the depths on foot or by mule, hover above in a helicopter, or raft through the whitewater rapids of the river itself; you can spend a night at Phantom Ranch on the canyon floor, or swim in the waterfalls of the idyllic Havasupai Reservation. And yet that distance always remains – the Grand Canyon stands apart.

Until the 1920s, the average visitor would stay for two or three weeks. These days it's more like two or three hours – of which forty minutes are spent actually looking at the canyon. The vast majority come to the South Rim – it's much easier to get to, there are far more facilities (mainly at Grand Canyon Village), and it's open all year round. There is another lodge and campground at the North Rim, which by virtue of its isolation can be a lot more evocative, but at one thousand feet higher it is usually closed by snow from mid-October until May. Few people visit both rims; to get from one to the other demands either a two-day hike down one side of the canyon and up the other, or a 215-mile drive by road.

Admission to the park, valid for seven days on either rim, is $25 per vehicle or $12 for pedestrians and cyclists.

The South Rim

When someone casually mentions visiting the “Grand Canyon”, it's almost certainly the South Rim that they're referring to. To be more precise, it's the thirty-mile stretch of the South Rim that's served by a paved road; and most specifically of all, it's Grand Canyon Village, the small canyon-edge community, sandwiched between the pine forest and the rim, that holds the park's lodges, restaurants, and visitor center. The reason nine out of every ten visitors come here is not, however, because this is a uniquely wonderful spot from which to see the canyon, but simply because the canyon's tourist facilities just happen to have been concentrated here ever since the arrival of the railroad a century ago.

However, it's as good a place to start as any. The canyon can be admired from countless vantage points, not only within the village but also along the eight-mile Hermit Road to the west and the 23-mile Desert View Drive to the east. The village is more attractive than you might imagine, and once the day-trippers have gone, does not feel overly crowded.

Getting to the South Rim

Nearly all visitors make their way to the South Rim by heading north of I-17 from either Williams (52 miles south) or Flagstaff (75 miles southeast). Most of the route is through ponderosa pine forests, so the route followed by the restored steam trains of the Grand Canyon Railway up from Williams is not especially scenic, even if it does make a fun ride (departs Williams daily 10am; from $60 roundtrip; ☎ 928/773-1976 or 1-800/843-8724, 🌐 www.thetrain.com). For details of buses from Flagstaff, see p.964.

The small airport at Tusayan – six miles from the South Rim, and used primarily by “flight-seeing” tour companies (see p.973) – also welcomes scheduled services, especially from Las Vegas, with operators such as Scenic Airlines (sometimes as low as $60 one-way; ☎ 702/638-3300 or 1-800/634-6801, 🌐 www.scenic.com).

Arrival and information

Long-proposed schemes to ban private vehicles from the canyon area are looking unlikely ever to be implemented. All that's happened is the construction of the Canyon View Information Plaza, well short of the village center near Mather

Geology and history of the canyon

Layer upon layer of different rocks, readily distinguished by color, and each with its own fossil record, recede down into the Grand Canyon and back through time, until the strata at the river bed are among the oldest exposed rocks on earth. And yet how the canyon was formed is a mystery. Satellite photos reveal that the Colorado runs through the heart of an enormous hill (known to Native Americans as the Kaibab, “the mountain with no peak”); experts cannot agree how that could happen. Studies show that the canyon still deepens, at the slow rate of 50ft per million years. Its fantastic sandstone and limestone formations were not literally carved by the river, however; they’re the result of erosion by wind and extreme cycles of heat and cold. These features were named – Brahma Temple, Vishnu Temple, and so on – by Clarence Dutton, a student of comparative religion who wrote the first Geological Survey report on the canyon in 1881.

While it may look forbidding, the Grand Canyon is not a dead place. All sorts of desert wildlife survive here – sheep and rabbits, eagles and vultures, mountain lions, and, of course, spiders, scorpions, and snakes. Humans have never been present on any great scale, but signs have been found of habitation as early as 2000 BC, and the Ancestral Puebloans were certainly here later on. A party of Spaniards passed through in 1540 searching for cities of gold, and a Father Garcés spent some time with the Havasupai in 1776, but John Wesley Powell’s expeditions along the fearsome and uncharted waters of the Colorado in 1869 and 1871–72 were what really brought the canyon to public attention. A few abortive attempts were made to mine different areas, but facilities for tourism were swiftly realized to be a far more lucrative investment. With the exception of the Indian reservations, the Grand Canyon is now run exclusively for the benefit of visitors, although even as recently as 1963 there were proposals to dam the Colorado and flood 150 miles of the Canyon, and the Glen Canyon dam has seriously affected the ecology downstream.

Point, which was supposed to be the hub of a new light rail system but serves instead as the main information point for visitors. Its open-air displays and trail guides are complemented by a good bookstore and a visitor center staffed by helpful rangers (daily: May to mid-Oct 8am–6pm; mid-Oct to April 8am–5pm; ☎ 928/638-7888, 🌐 www.nps.gov/grca).

Grand Canyon Village is still accessible to private vehicles, as is the road east from the village to Desert View. Both the road west from the village to Hermit’s Rest, however, and the short access road to Yaki Point – the first overlook east of Mather Point, and the trailhead for the popular South Kaibab Trail – are only open to private vehicles during December, January, and February. Free shuttle buses run on three routes: the ponderous Village Route, which loops laboriously between Grand Canyon Village and the information plaza; the Kaibab Trail Route between the plaza and Yaki Point; and the eight-mile Hermit’s Rest Route, which heads west to eight canyon overlooks.

South Rim accommodation

All the “lodges” in Grand Canyon Village are operated by the park concessionaire, Amfac, and charge similar prices. In terms of seeing the canyon, it makes little difference where in the village you stay. Even in the “rim-edge” places – the magnificent 1905 El Tovar Hotel (📍) and the Bright Angel (rooms 📍, rim-side cabins 📍), Thunderbird, and Kachina lodges (both 📍) – few rooms offer much of a view, and in any case it’s always dark by 8pm. Further back are Maswik Lodge (cabins 📍, rooms 📍), and the two-part Yavapai Lodge not far from the information plaza (📍). For details on making reservations at all of these options, see the box, below.

Tent and RV camping (without hookups) is available at the park service's year-round Mather Campground, south of the main road through Grand Canyon Village. Sites for up to two vehicles and six people cost $15 per night between April and November, when reservations, which are strongly recommended, can be made up to five months in advance through Spherix (same-day ☎928/638-2611; advance 1-800/365-2267 or, from outside the US, ☎301/722-1257), or online at 🌐www.reservations.nps.gov). No reservations are accepted between December and March, when sites are first-come, first-served, and the fee drops to $10 per night. The adjacent Trailer Village consists exclusively of RV sites with hookups, costing $22 per site per night for two people, plus $2 extra for each additional adult; reservations on ☎303/297-2757 or 🌐www.grandcanyonlodges.com.

The summer-only Desert View campground, 26 miles east, is first-come, first-served, costs $10, and has no hook-ups. It's also possible to camp inside the canyon itself, if you first obtain a permit from the Backcountry Reservations Office near Maswik Lodge (daily 8am–noon & 1–5pm; call ☎928/638-7875 Mon–Fri 1–5pm only; 🌐www.nps.gov/grca/backcountry); each permit costs $10, plus $5 per person per night.

If all the park accommodation is full, the nearest alternative is the underwhelming service village of Tusayan. Seven Mile Lodge (☎928/638-2291; no advance reservations; Ⓢ) offers the least expensive rooms, while the newer Grand Hotel (☎928/638-3333, 🌐www.gcanyon.com; Ⓢ) is more stylish. The most popular commercial campgrounds outside the park – with families, at least – is Flinstone's Bedrock City (mid-March to Oct; $13 tents, $17 RV hook-ups; ☎928/635-2600), 22 miles south at the junction of Hwy-64 and Hwy-180, which has its own little prehistoric theme park.

South Rim eating

There's a reasonably wide choice of places to eat in Grand Canyon Village, and the prices in the budget options are not bad considering the canyon's remoteness and lack of water. Both Yavapai and Maswik lodges have basic cafeterias, open until 9pm and 10pm respectively. Bright Angel Lodge has its own restaurant, as well as the Arizona Steakhouse; both are open until 10pm and offer entrees costing $15–25. At El Tovar, where the dining room looks right out over the canyon, the sumptuous menu is enormously expensive. Breakfast is the most affordable meal; lunch and dinner can easily cost upwards of $40. Most of the hotels in Tusayan have their own dining rooms.

Exploring the South Rim

The fact that these days most visits to the South Rim start at the Canyon View Information Plaza, at Mather Point, rather than in Grand Canyon Village, doesn't mean you're missing out. In fact the canyon panorama that spreads out below Mather Point is more comprehensive than any obtainable from the village. The views to the east in particular are consistently stupendous; it's hard to imagine a

In-park accommodation reservations

All in-park accommodation reservations – for the lodges on both the South and the North rims, as well as for Phantom Ranch and RV camping – are handled by Xanterra Parks & Resorts (same-day ☎928/638-2631, advance 303/297-2757 or 1-888/297-2757, 🌐www.grandcanyonlodges.com). The best rooms are often booked as much as a year in advance, and your chances of turning up without a reservation and finding a place in summer are minimal.

more perfect position from which to watch the sunrise over the canyon.

The Colorado River is visible from various vantage points along the rim-edge footpath near Mather Point. In addition, if you walk west for around ten minutes (turn left along the rim from the information plaza), you'll come to Yavapai Point. From here, you can see two tiny segments of the river, one of which happens to include both the suspension footbridge across the Colorado and Phantom Ranch (see p.974). Nearby, the Yavapai Observation Station (daily: hours vary from 8am–8pm in summer down to 8am–5pm in winter; free) has illuminating displays on how the canyon may have been formed.

The West and East Rim drives extend along the South Rim for several miles in either direction from the information plaza and Grand Canyon Village, paralleled to the west by the Rim Trail on the very lip of the canyon. No one overlook can be said to be the “best,” but there are far too many to stop at them all. Sunset is particularly magical at Hopi Point, to the west.

Driving or taking a shuttle bus along the East Rim Drive opens up further dramatic views. Desert View, 23 miles out from the village, is, at 7500ft, the highest point on the South Rim. Visible to the east are the vast flatlands of the Navajo Nation; to the northeast, Vermillion and Echo Cliffs, and the gray bulk of Navajo Mountain ninety miles away; to the west, the gigantic peaks of Vishnu and Buddha temples, while through the plains comes the narrow gorge of the Little Colorado. The odd-looking construction on the very lip of the canyon is Desert View Watchtower, built by Fred Harvey in 1932 in a conglomeration of Native American styles and decorated with Hopi pictographs.

Into the canyon

Hiking any of the trails that descend into the Grand Canyon allows you to pass through a sequence of utterly different landscapes, each with its own distinct climate, wildlife, and topography. However, while the canyon can offer a wonderful

South Rim tours

Xanterra (contact the “transportation desk” in any lodge, or call ☎928/638-2631) runs at least two short daily coach tours along the rim to the west ($16.75) and east ($29) of the village, sunrise and sunset trips to Yavapai Point ($12.75), and mule rides to Plateau Point ($136) and Phantom Ranch (from $366; see overleaf).

Multi-day whitewater rafting trips in the canyon proper – such as those run by Western River Expeditions (☎www.westernriver.com) or Canyoneers (☎www.canyoneers.com) – are booked up literally years in advance, while no one-day raft trips are available within Grand Canyon National Park. For a trip along the river at short notice, there are however two alternatives, at either end of the canyon. Wilderness River Adventures, based in Page, Arizona, offer one-day trips that start below Glen Canyon Dam and take out at Lees Ferry ($62; ☎928/645-3296 or 1-800/992-8022; ☎www.riveradventures.com), while further west, the tribal-run Hualapai River Runners arrange pricey one-day trips on the Hualapai Reservation, starting at Diamond Creek ($280; ☎928/769-2219 or 1-888/255-9550, ☎www.destination-grandcanyon.com).

Airplane tours cost from around $75 for 30min up to as long as you like for as much as you've got. Operators include Air Grand Canyon (☎928/638-2686 or 1-800/247-4726, ☎www.airgrandcanyon.com) and Grand Canyon Airlines (☎928/638-2359 or 1-866/235-9422, ☎www.grandcanyonairlines.com). Helicopter tours, from $100 for 30min, are offered by Maverick (☎928/638-2622 or 1-800/962-3869, ☎www.maverickhelicopter.com) and Papillon (☎928/638-2419 or 1-800/528-2418, ☎www.papillon.com), who also operate amazing $455 day-trips to the Havasupai Reservation. All the companies are in Tusayan, at or near the airport.

wilderness experience, it's essential to remember that it can be a hostile and very unforgiving environment, grueling even for expert hikers.

The South Rim is 7000ft above sea level, an altitude that for most people is fatiguing in itself. Furthermore, all hikes start with a long, steep descent – which can come as a shock to the knees – and unless you camp overnight you'll have to climb all the way back up again when you're hotter and wearier.

If you're day-hiking, the golden rule is to keep track of how much time you spend hiking down, and allow twice that much to get back up again. Average summer temperatures inside the canyon exceed 100°F; to hike for eight hours in that sort of heat, you have to drink an incredible thirty pints of water. Always carry at least a quart per person, and much more if there are no water sources along your chosen trail. You must have food as well, as drinking large quantities without also eating can cause deadly water intoxication.

There's only space here to detail the most popular trails, the Bright Angel and the Grandview. Many of the others are liable to be overgrown now, or partially blocked by landslides; check before setting out.

Bright Angel Trail

The Bright Angel Trail, followed on foot or mule by thousands of visitors each year, starts from the wooden shack in the village that was once the Kolb photographic studio. The trail switchbacks for 9.6 miles down to Phantom Ranch, but under no circumstances should you try to hike down and back in a single day. It might not look far on the map, but it's harder than running a marathon. Instead, the longest feasible day-hike is to go as far as Plateau Point on the edge of the arid Tonto Plateau, an overlook above the Inner Gorge from which it is not possible to descend any further – a twelve-mile roundtrip that will probably take you at least eight hours. In summer, water can be obtained along the way.

The first section of the trail was laid out by miners a century ago, along an old Havasupai route, and has two short tunnels in its first mile. After another mile, the wildlife starts to increase (deer, rodents, and the ubiquitous ravens), and there are a few pictographs that have been all but obscured by graffiti.

At the lush Indian Gardens almost five miles down, where you'll find a ranger station and campground with water, the trails split to Plateau Point or down to the river via the Devil's Corkscrew. The latter route leads through sand dunes scattered with cactuses and down beside Garden Creek to the Colorado, which you then follow for more than a mile to get to Phantom Ranch.

Phantom Ranch

It's a real thrill to spend a night at the very bottom of the canyon, at the 1922 Phantom Ranch. The cabins are reserved exclusively for the use of excursionists on two-day mule trips ($366 per person for one night, $514 for the winter-only two-night trips), booked through Xanterra (see p.972). Beds in the four ten-bunk dorms ($30) are usually reserved way in advance, also through Xanterra, but it's worth checking for cancellations at the Bright Angel transportation desk as soon as you reach the South Rim. Do not hike down without a reservation, and even if you do have one, reconfirm it the day before you set off. All supplies reach Phantom Ranch the same way you do (an all-day hike on foot or mule), so meals are expensive, a minimum of $17.50 for breakfast and up to $32 for dinner. Camping at the beautiful Bright Angel Campground, a little closer to the Colorado River, is by permit only, as detailed on p.971. Again, do not hike down without a reservation.

The Black Bridge nearby was set in place in 1928 (suspended from twin cables carried down on the shoulders of 42 Havasupai). The delta of Bright Angel

Creek, named by Powell to contrast with the muddy Dirty Devil upriver in Utah, is several hundred feet wide here, and strewn with boulders. All the water used on the South Rim now comes by pipeline from the North Rim, and crosses the river on the 1960s Silver Bridge a little further downstream.

Grandview Trail

The Grandview Trail, down from the parking lot at Grandview Point, was built during the 1890s to aid copper mining on Horseshoe Mesa, which remains littered with abandoned mine workings. Although it's possible (by connecting with other trails) to use the Grandview to find your way down to the Tonto Platform and thus, eventually, the Colorado River, it's not itself a rim-to-river route. Instead, the hike down to the mesa and back has become one of the most popular day-hikes in the park. But that doesn't mean it's easy: now officially "unmaintained," it's a very demanding trail. Several of its switchbacks were constructed by inserting metal rods deep into the canyon wall, then covering them with juniper logs, stones, and dirt. At times it can be a little hair-raising, but it has stayed surprisingly sturdy for over a century. Reckon on six hours for the whole roundtrip.

The Havasupai Reservation

The Havasupai Reservation really is another world. Things have changed a little since a 1930s anthropologist called it "the only spot in the United States where native culture has remained in anything like its pristine condition," but the sheer magic of its turquoise waterfalls and canyon scenery makes this a very special place.

Havasu Canyon is a side canyon of the Grand Canyon, about 35 miles as the raven flies from Grand Canyon Village, but almost two hundred miles by road. Turn off the interstate at Seligman or Kingman, onto AZ-66 (which curves north between the two), stock up with food, water, and gas, and then turn on to Arrowhead Hwy-18. That road ends at Hualapai Hilltop, from where an eight-mile trail zigzags down a bluff and leads through the stunning waterless Hualapai Canyon to the village of SUPAI. Riding down on horseback with a Havasupai guide costs $70 one-way, $120 roundtrip, while hiking is free; all visitors, however, pay a $30 entry fee on arrival at Supai.

△ Hiking in the Havasupai Reservation

Beyond Supai the trail becomes more difficult, but leads to a succession of spectacular waterfalls, including Havasu Falls, one of the best for swimming, and Mooney Falls, which was named after an unfortunate prospector who dangled here for three days in the 1890s, at the end of a snagged rope, before falling to his death.

A campground ($12; ☎928/448-2141) stretches between Havasu and Mooney Falls, and Supai itself holds the motel-like Havasupai Lodge (☎928/448-2111; 📍), along with a café, a general store, and the only post office in the US still to receive its mail by pack train. From time to time Supai is hit by freak floods, which can result in the temporary closure of the campground and lodge.

The Hualapai Reservation: the “West Rim”

Immediately west of the Havasupai reservation, and also inhabited by descendants of the Pai people, the Hualapai Indian reservation spreads across almost a million acres, bounded to the north by a 108-mile stretch of the Colorado River.

Fifty miles northwest of the reservation's only town, PEACH SPRINGS, itself 35 miles northwest of Seligman on Route 66 (see p.968), a cluster of overlooks above the Colorado river is cannily being promoted as Grand Canyon West, or the “West Rim” of the Grand. This is the closest spot to Las Vegas where it's possible to see the canyon, and most of its visitors are day-trippers who don't realize they're not seeing the canyon at its best. However, the Hualapai are currently engaged in a massive program to attract tourists, which should have culminated by the time you read this in the unveiling of the Skywalk, a horseshoe-shaped glass-bottomed walkway that has the potential to become one of the world's most famous tourist attractions. Visitors will be asked to pay approximately $25 for the thrill of walking out over the sheer 4000-foot drop at Eagle Point, which although not directly above the Colorado is still likely to be a stunning experience.

To reach it, leave US-93 thirty miles north of Kingman or forty miles south of the Hoover Dam, and follow Pierce Ferry Road for a further fifty miles east.

To the North Rim

The 215-mile route by road from Grand Canyon Village to the North Rim follows AZ-64 along the East Rim Drive to Desert View, then passes an overlook into the gorge of the Little Colorado, before joining US-89 fifty miles later at CAMERON. The Cameron Trading Post has the best selection of Native American crafts in the Grand Canyon area, and remains a trading center for the Navajo Nation. It also has a good-quality motel and restaurant (☎928/679-2231 or 1-877/221-6090, 🌐www.camerontradingpost.com; 📍).

Lees Ferry

The direct route to the North Rim, now US-89A, crosses the Colorado seventy barren miles north of Cameron over the single arch of Navajo Bridge, almost five hundred feet above the river. There are in fact two Navajo Bridges, the 1929 original, now reserved for pedestrians, having been supplanted by a wider facsimile in 1995. Until the first was built, a ferry service operated six miles north at LEES

FERRY. Established in 1872, at the instigation of the Mormon Church, by John D. Lee, it was the only spot within hundreds of miles to offer easy access to the banks of the river on both sides. Lee himself was on the run after the Mountain Meadows Massacre in Utah in 1857, in which he led an armed white band clumsily disguised as Indians in their slaughter of a wagon train of would-be settlers.

Lees Ferry is the sole launching point for whitewater rafting trips into the Grand Canyon – the first point where boats can get out again is at Diamond Creek, twelve days away by muscle power. The ferry site still holds the atmospheric remains of Lee's Lonely Dell ranch, as well as a basic campground (📞 928/355-2334; $10), while back on US-89A beneath the red of the Vermillion Cliffs you'll find a succession of motels – Marble Canyon Lodge (📞 928/355-2225 or 1-800/726-1789; 🍷), Lees Ferry Lodge (📞 928/355-2231 or 1-800/451-2231, 🌐 www.leesferrylodge.com; 🍷), and Cliff Dweller's Lodge (📞 928/355-2228; 🍷). All have restaurants.

The turning south to get to the North Rim, off US-89A onto AZ-67, comes at JACOB LAKE, home to the welcoming Jacob Lake Inn (📞 928/643-7232, 🌐 www.jacoblake.com; 🍷) and the lovely Jacob Lake Campground, open to tent campers only (mid-May to Oct; 📞 928/643-7395), but not much else. From here – along a road that's closed in winter – it's 41 miles to the canyon itself.

The North Rim

Higher, more exposed to the elements, and far less accessible than the South Rim, the NORTH RIM of the Grand Canyon receives less than a tenth as many visitors. A cluster of venerable Park Service buildings stand where the main highway reaches the canyon, and a handful of rim-edge roads allow drivers to take their pick from additional lookouts. Only one hiking trail sees much use, the North Kaibab Trail, which follows Bright Angel Creek down to Phantom Ranch.

Tourist facilities on the North Rim, concentrated at Bright Angel Point, open for the season in mid-May and close in mid-October. Accommodation at Grand Canyon Lodge (🍷) is in cabins that spread back along the ridge from the lodge entrance, very few of which have canyon views. Advance reservations are essential, and are handled, as for the South Rim, by Xanterra (same-day 📞 928/638-2611, advance 📞 303/297-2757 or 1-888/297-2757, 🌐 www.grandcanyonnorthrim.com). Just over a mile north is the North Rim Campground, where $15 spaces can be reserved – though backpackers won't need to book – through Spherix (same-day 📞 928/638-2611, advance 📞 1-800/365-2267 or from outside the US 📞 301/722-1257, 🌐 www.reservations.nps.gov). The Lodge also holds a good restaurant, plus a saloon, and an espresso bar; ask at the information desk for details of mule rides (1hr $30, half-day $55, full-day canyon expeditions $105; 📞 435/679-8665, 🌐 www.canyonrides.com).

The park itself remains open for day-use only after mid-October, but no food, lodging, or gas is available, and visitors must be prepared to leave at a moment's notice. It's shut down altogether by the first major snowfall of winter, which in recent years has come as late as December.

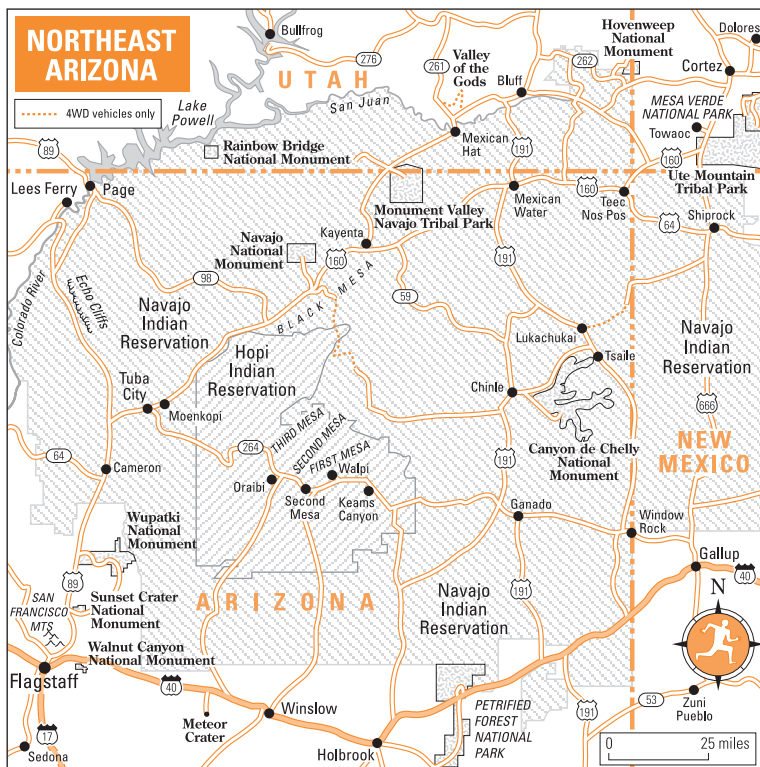

Northeastern Arizona: Indian Country

The deserts of northeastern Arizona, popularly known as INDIAN COUNTRY, hold some of the most fascinating pre-Columbian ruins in North America, in the most striking settings imaginable. The cliff palaces of Canyon de Chelly, and Betatakin and Keet Seel in the Navajo National Monument, are among the greatest architectural achievements of the Ancestral Puebloans, made that much more special by the fact that the lands on which they stand are still lived on and worked by their heirs, the Hopi and Navajo.

The NAVAJO NATION, the largest Native American reservation in the US, fills most of the region, extending into western New Mexico and stretching to include the majestic sandstone pillars of Monument Valley in southernmost Utah. The Navajo may drive pickup trucks and wear baseball caps, but you get a very real sense that you're traveling through a foreign country here. Everyone can speak English, but Navajo, a language so complex that it was used as a secret code during World War II, is still the lingua franca. Supermarkets mark their prices in Navajo, and the reservation follows its own rules over Daylight Savings; in frontier-style towns like Tuba City, the time on the clock can vary according to whether you're in an American or a Navajo district.

When white immigrants began to arrive in force during the early nineteenth century, the Navajo – who call themselves Dineh, “The People” – had lived in Arizona for hundreds of years; within a generation, they lost almost everything. When the Americans took over from the Mexicans, things just got worse, hitting bottom in 1864 when Kit Carson rounded up every Navajo he could find and forced them all to move to Fort Sumner in the desolate plain of eastern New Mexico (see p.939). A few years later, the Navajo were allowed to return. Most of the 300,000-plus Navajo today work the land as shepherds and farmers on widely scattered smallholdings, though many craftspeople also live by selling their wares from small stands set up along highways and in tourist stops.

Visiting this region, it's important to respect the people and places you encounter. The Ancestral Puebloans, the region's first occupants, have long since vanished, but many of the relics they left behind are on land that is still of spiritual significance to their modern counterparts. Similarly, it is offensive to photograph or otherwise intrude upon people's lives without permission; one reason why the Hopi, for example, banned photography was because it was such an interfering nuisance.

On a practical note, don't expect extensive tourist facilities. Most towns exist solely as bureaucratic outposts that only come alive during the annual tribal fairs and rodeos, and have little to offer visitors beyond a handful of places to eat and even fewer hotels and motels. For more information, check out the official Navajo website, @ www.discovernavajo.com.

Navajo National Monument

Navajo National Monument, in the northwest quarter of the reservation, protects two of Arizona's biggest and most beautifully sited cliff dwellings. You'll find the useful visitor center (daily 8am–5pm; free; ☎ 928/672-2700, @ www.nps.gov/navajo) at the end of paved Hwy-564, ten miles north of US-160. Behind it, a ten-minute trail crosses the plateau to a viewpoint overlooking Betatakin, an exceptionally well-preserved 135-room masonry structure tucked in a large natural alcove halfway up the 700-foot-high, brilliant-red sandstone on the far side of a canyon. It's only possible to hike down to Betatakin – which feels as though it was abandoned seven years, not seven centuries, ago – by joining one of the unforgettable six-hour ranger-guided hikes (schedule varies, typically summer daily 8.30am & 11am, winter daily 10am; no advance reservations), which rendezvous roughly a mile from the visitor center. Numbers are limited, and no advance bookings are taken, so get to the visitor center as early as possible on the day – or stay the previous night at the very attractive free campground in the forest alongside.

In summer, you can also visit the even larger Ancestral Puebloan site of Keet Seel. However, the seventeen-mile roundtrip hike from the visitor center is too grueling to attempt in a single day, so you'll have to stay overnight in the small campground near the site, having obtained a permit from the visitor center at least a day in advance.

Most people pass through this area on their way somewhere else, so there aren't many places to stay. However, TUBA CITY, west of the monument, has the large, modern Quality Inn Tuba Trading Post (☎ 928/283-4545 or 1-800/644-8383; @ www.qualityinnnavajonation.com; ☎), while the mining town of KAYENTA, 22 miles northeast of the monument at the junction of US-160 and US-163, holds the similarly anonymous but adequate Best Western Wetherill Inn (☎ 928/697-3231, @ www.gouldings.com; ☎) and the Holiday Inn (☎ 928/697-3221, @ www.ichotelsgroup.com; ☎), which has a good-value restaurant.

Monument Valley

The classic southwestern landscape of stark sandstone buttes and forbidding pinacles of rock, poking from an endless expanse of drifting red sands, has become an archetypal Wild West image. Only when you arrive at MONUMENT VALLEY – which straddles the Arizona–Utah state line, 24 miles north of Kayenta and 25 miles southwest of Mexican Hat – do you realize how much your perception of the West has in fact been shaped by this one spot. Such scenery does exist elsewhere, of course, but nowhere is it so perfectly distilled. While moviemakers have flocked here since the early days of Hollywood – this is where John Ford made John Wayne a star – the sheer majesty of the place still takes your breath away. Add the fact that it remains a stronghold of Navajo culture, little affected by tourism, and Monument Valley can be the absolute highlight of a trip to the Southwest.

The biggest and most impressive of the monoliths are a pair called The Mittens, one East and one West, each of which has a distinct thumb splintering off from its central bulk. Over a dozen other spires are spread around nearby, along with rock art panels and an assortment of minor but nicely sited Ancestral Puebloan ruins.

You can see the buttes for free, towering alongside US-163, but the four-mile detour to enter Monument Valley Tribal Park is rewarded with much closer views (daily: May–Sept 7am–7pm; Oct–April 8am–5pm; $5; ☎ 435/727-5870; 🌐 www.navajonationparks.org). A rough, unpaved road drops from behind the visitor center to run through Monument Valley itself. The 17-mile self-drive route makes a bumpy but bearable ride in an ordinary vehicle, and takes something over an hour (daily: summer 8am–6pm; rest of year 8am–4.30pm). However, the Navajo-led jeep or horseback tours into the backcountry are very much recommended; a two-hour jeep trip costs from around $25 per person if arranged at the visitor center, slightly more if organized through Goulding's Lodge (see below). As well as stopping at such movie locations as the Totem Pole, these tours pause so you can watch weavers at work in a Navajo hogan (traditional eight-sided dwelling).

The appropriately named View (☎ 928/727-3312) is a reasonable restaurant at the visitor center, not far from the exposed Mitten View campground (first-come, first-served; water available in summer only; summer $10, winter $5). The only accommodation in the immediate vicinity is six miles west, in Utah at Goulding's Lodge (☎ 435/727-3231, 🌐 www.gouldings.com; 📍), a 1920s trading post that now offers pricey motel rooms with magnificent views, an unexceptional restaurant, a general store and gas station, a small movie museum, and its own campground (summer $32, winter $18; same phone).

△ John Ford Point, Monument Valley

Canyon de Chelly National Monument

A short distance east of CHINLE, sixty miles southwest of Kayenta and seventy miles north of I-40, twin sandstone walls emerge abruptly from the desert floor, climbing at a phenomenal rate to become the awesome thousand-foot cliffs of CANYON DE CHELLY NATIONAL MONUMENT. Between these sheer sides, the meandering course of the Chinle Wash can be discerned by its fringe of cottonwoods as it winds through grasslands and planted fields. Here and there a Navajo hogan stands in a grove of fruit trees, a straggle of sheep is penned in by a crude wooden fence, or ponies drink at the water's edge. And everywhere, perched above the valley on ledges in the canyon walls and dwarfed by the towering cliffs, are the long-abandoned adobe and stone dwellings of the Ancestral Puebloans.

There are two main canyons, which branch apart a few miles upstream: Canyon de Chelly (pronounced de shay) to the south and Canyon del Muerto to the north. Each twists and turns in all directions, scattered with vast rock monoliths, while several smaller canyons break away. The whole labyrinth threads its way northward for thirty miles into the Chuska Mountains.

Canyon de Chelly is a magnificent place, easily on a par with the best of the Southwest's national parks. Its relative lack of fame owes much to the continuing presence of the Navajo, for whom the canyon retains enormous symbolic significance (although they did not build its cliff dwellings). Casual visitors are restricted to peering into the canyon from above, from overlooks along the two "rim drives." There's no road in, and, apart from one short trail, you can only enter the canyons with a Navajo guide.

The first known inhabitants of the canyon were Ancestral Puebloan Basketmakers, who dwelled here from around 300 AD. During the next thousand years, they advanced from living in pit houses dug into the soil to building elegant cliff dwellings, and developed fine pottery and weaving. For some centuries after the Ancestral Puebloans left the area (see p.933), the Hopi came here to farm each summer, returning for the winter to the mesas to the east, but as time went by, Navajo migrants from the north and west eventually displaced the Hopi altogether.

From 1583 onward, the Navajo were locked with the Spanish in a bloody cycle of armed clashes and slave raids. The US Army in turn failed repeatedly to dislodge the Navajo, but none of the various truces and treaties they agreed to could restrain the rapacious hunger for land by New Mexican settlers. The end appeared to have come with the brutal round-up and deportation (the "Long Walk") of the entire Navajo people, completed by Kit Carson in 1864 when he starved the last of them down from Navajo Rock and destroyed their homes and livestock. So barbaric was the Navajo's imprisonment at Fort Sumner, however, that Congress soon allowed them to return. To this day, 25 Navajo families still farm the Canyon de Chelly in summer, the matrilineal descendants of the women among whom it was reapportioned in the 1870s.

The view from above: the rim drives

Each of the two "rim drives" from the visitor center offers a succession of spectacular overlooks; allow two to three hours for each of the forty-mile roundtrips. Thefts from cars have been a major problem, so it's wise to heed the prominent warnings.

The first significant stopping point along the South Rim Drive is Junction Overlook, after four miles, far above the point where the two main canyons branch their separate ways; as you scramble across the bare rocks you can see Canyon de Chelly narrowing away, with a hogan immediately below. Two miles further along, by which time the canyon is 550ft deep, White House Overlook looks down on the highly photogenic White House Ruins. This is the only point from which unguided hikers can descend to the canyon floor, taking perhaps 30 to 45 minutes to get down and a good hour to get back up. The beautiful if precarious trail, at times running along ledges chiseled into the slick rock, culminates with a close-up view of the ruins; the most dramatic dwellings, squeezed into a tiny alcove sixty feet up a majestic cliff, were once reached via the rooftops of now-vanished structures. Visitors are forbidden to walk for more than a hundred yards in either direction beyond the site. Back up on the South Rim Drive, twelve miles along, the view from Sliding House Overlook reveals more Ancestral Puebloan ruins seemingly slipping down the canyon walls toward the ploughed Navajo fields below, while eight miles further on the road ends above the astonishing Spider Rock, where twin 800-foot pinnacles of rock come to within 200ft of the canyon rim.

The North Rim Drive runs twenty miles up Canyon del Muerto to Massacre Cave, where the Spanish expedition of 1805, led by Lieutenant Narbona, killed around one hundred Navajo women, children, and old men. The “cave” is just a pitifully exposed ledge, upon which the huddled group were easily picked off by the Spanish, using ricochets off the overhang above. Visible from the nearby Mummy Cave Overlook is the House Under The Rock, with its central tower in the Mesa Verde style – the single most striking ruin in the monument. Of the two viewpoints at Antelope House Overlook, one is opposite Navajo Fortress, an isolated eminence atop which the Navajo were besieged for three months in 1863, while the other looks down on the twin ruined square towers of Antelope House. The Tomb of the Weaver across the wash is where the embalmed body of an old man was found wrapped in golden eagle feathers.

Practicalities

The Canyon de Chelly visitor center, on the road from Chinle (daily May–Sept 8am–6pm; Oct–April 8am–5pm; no entrance fee; ☎ 928/674-5500, 🌐 www.nps.gov/cach), has informative displays, and provides guides for unorthodox hiking or motorized expeditions. Facilities nearby are overstretched, so it’s essential to book your accommodation well in advance. The most appealing options are the Thunderbird Lodge (☎ 928/674-5841 or 1-800/679-2473, 🌐 www.tbirdlodge.com; 📍), very near the canyon entrance, which arranges the standard sightseeing tours and

Into the canyons

Tours of the canyon floor, organized by Thunderbird Lodge (see above), zigzag along the washes, which vary from two- or three-feet deep during the spring thaw to completely dry in summer. For most of the year, the bone-shaking tours are in open-top flatbed trucks that lurch over the rutted earth, and the heat can be incredible; in winter they carry on in glass-roofed army vehicles with caterpillar tracks. To reach as far as Spider Rock, you have to take the full-day tour ($65; no reductions for children), but the half-day trip at $40 (under 13s $30.50) still enables you to see a wide variety of sites and terrain, including the White House Ruins.

The visitor center also arranges highly recommended 4.5-mile, four-hour group hikes, which cost $15 per person. The precise schedule varies, but usually includes a morning trip via the White House Trail and an afternoon hike in the Canyon del Muerto; separate night hikes last just two hours but cost slightly more. Tsotsoni Ranch (☎ 928/755-6209, 🌐 www.tsotsoniranch.com) organize horseback trips for $15 per person per hour, plus $15 an hour for a guide.

has an adequate cafeteria, and the Chinle Holiday Inn (☎928/674-5000, 🌐www.holiday-inn.com/chinle-garcia; 📍), slightly further back toward Chinle, where the food is a lot better. The free, minimally equipped Cottonwood campground has pleasant sites among the trees alongside Thunderbird Lodge.

Window Rock

The reservation's governing body, the Navajo Tribal Council, has its seat on the property's eastern edge, along the New Mexico border. It was based for fifty years at Fort Defiance, a US cavalry outpost, until in the 1930s WINDOW ROCK was established as a new capital. Named for the natural stone arch on its northern side, it's not a great place to get a grasp of Navajo culture, but it does at least have gas stations, shops, and a motel, the showpiece Quality Inn Navajo Nation Capital, at 48 W Hwy-264 (☎928/871-4108 or 1-800/662-6189; 🌐www.navajonationinn.com; 📍). The nearby Navajo Nation Museum and Visitor Center (☎928/871-7941; summer Mon & Sat 8am–5pm, Tues–Fri 8am–8pm; winter Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; donation) gives the background on tribal history and displays high-quality crafts.

The Hopi Mesas

Almost uniquely in the United States, the Hopi people have lived continuously in the same place for over eight hundred years. Some invaders have come and gone in that time, others have stayed; but the villages on First, Second, and Third mesas have endured, if not exactly undisturbed then at least unmoved.

To outsiders, it's not obvious why, with the whole Southwest to pick from, the Hopi should have chosen to live on three barren and unprepossessing fingers of rock poking from the southern flanks of Black Mesa in the depths of northeast Arizona. There are two simple answers. The first lies within the mesa itself: although it has no perennial streams, its subterranean rocks are tilted at just the correct angle to deliver a tiny but dependable trickle of water, while the “black” in its name comes from the coal that gives the Hopi limitless reserves of fuel. The second is that the Hopi used to farm and hunt across a much wider area, and have only been restricted to their mesa-top villages by the encroachment of their Navajo neighbors. While the Hopi are celebrated for their skill at “dry farming,” managing to preserve enough precious liquid to grow corn, beans, and squash on hand-tilled terraces, this precarious and difficult way of life has nonetheless been forced upon them.

By their very survival, and the persistence of their ancient beliefs and ceremonies, the Hopi have long fascinated outsiders. While visitors are welcome, the Hopi have no desire – or need, as the tribe has finally begun to earn considerable amounts from mineral leases – to turn themselves into a tourist attraction. Although stores and galleries on the reservation provide plenty of opportunity to buy crafts such as pottery, basketwork, silver overlay jewelry, and hand-carved kachina dolls, tourists who arrive in the hope of extensive sight-seeing – let alone spiritual revelations – are likely to leave disappointed, and quite possibly dismayed by what they perceive as conspicuous poverty.

Visiting the Hopi Mesas

The essential first stop is the modern, mock-Pueblo Hopi Cultural Center below Second Mesa, which holds a museum (summer Mon–Sat 8am–5pm, Sun 9am–4pm; winter Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; $3; ☎928/734-6650), as well as a cafeteria and motel (☎928/734-2401, 🌐www.hopiculturalcenter.com; 📍). In summer, its plain but adequate rooms are usually booked solid a week or more in advance.

Unless your visit coincides with one of the very few social events that's open to tourists (ask at the cultural center), the only way to see the mesa-top villages is to take a guided tour of the most impressive one, WALPI (daily: winter 10am–4pm, summer 9.30am–6pm; $8; ☎ 928/737-2262). By Hopi standards, Walpi is not in fact that old; it was hastily thrown together in the immediate aftermath of the Pueblo Revolt of 1680, when the people of First Mesa moved to a more secure site in the face of possible Spanish or Navajo attack. The spot they chose is absolutely stunning, standing alone at the narrow southernmost tip of the mesa, and connected to the other First Mesa villages by the merest slender neck of stone, with a drop of three hundred feet to either side. It's now home to around 35 people, who do without electricity or running water.

To see Walpi, take Hwy-264 to modern POLACCA, at the foot of First Mesa, then drive a mile up the twisting paved road until it ends in SICHOMOVI. The tours assemble in Sichomovi's small community center, setting off at regular intervals for a half-hour walk to and around Walpi. Depending on the time of year, you'll either be in a group of twenty or so, or on your own, but either way there's plenty of opportunity to ask questions, and to buy pottery, kachina dolls, and fresh-baked piiki, a flatbread made with blue cornflour.

THE SOUTHWEST | Utah

Utah

With the biggest, most beautiful, and most pristine landscapes in North America, UTAH has something for everyone: from brilliantly colored canyons, across endless desert plains, to thickly wooded and snow-covered mountains. This unmatched range of terrain, almost all of which is public land, makes Utah the place to come for outdoor pursuits, whether your tastes run to hiking, off-track mountain biking, whitewater rafting, or skiing.

Southern Utah has more national parks than anywhere else in the US; it has often been suggested that the entire area should become one vast national park. The most accessible parts – such as Zion and Bryce Canyon – are by far the most visited, but lesser-known parks like Arches and Canyonlands are every bit as dramatic. Huge tracts of this empty desert, in which fascinating pre-Columbian pictographs and Ancestral Puebloan ruins lie hidden, are all but unexplored; seeing them in safety requires a good degree of advance planning and self-sufficiency.

In the northeast of the state, the Uinta Mountains remain uncrossed by road and form one of the most extensive US wilderness areas outside Alaska, while Flaming Gorge and Dinosaur preserve more desert splendor. Though the north-west is predominantly flat and dry, the granite mountains of the Wasatch Front tower over state capital Salt Lake City – a surprisingly attractive and enjoyable stopover – while Alta, Snowbird, and the resorts around Park City offer some of the best skiing in North America.

Led by Brigham Young, Utah's earliest Anglo settlers – the Mormons – arrived in the Salt Lake area in 1847, and set about the massive irrigation projects that made their agrarian way of life possible. At first they provoked great suspicion and hostility back East. The Republican Convention of 1856 railed against slavery and polygamy in equal measure; had the Civil War not intervened, a war against the Mormons was a real possibility. Relations eased when the Mormon Church realized in 1890 that it had better drop polygamy on its own terms before being forced to do so. Statehood followed in 1896, and a century on, seventy percent of Utah's two-million-strong population are Mormons. The Mormon influence is responsible for the layout of Utah's towns, where residential streets are as wide as interstates, and all are numbered block-by-block according to the same logical if ponderous system.

Despite Brigham Young's early opposition to the search for mineral wealth, Mormon businessmen became renowned as fiercely pro-mining and anti-conservation. Only since the 1980s has tourism been appreciated as a major industry, and former mining towns such as Moab developed facilities for wide-eyed travelers smitten by the allure of the desert. Increased tourism has also led to a relaxation of Utah's notoriously arcane drinking laws. In most towns, at least one restaurant will be licensed to sell beer, wine, and mixed drinks to diners, and it may also be licensed to sell beer in its bar or lounge. Beer is also sold in a few other locations, but to drink stronger liquor you'll have to become a member of a "private club"; most sell temporary membership for a token fee.

Getting around Utah

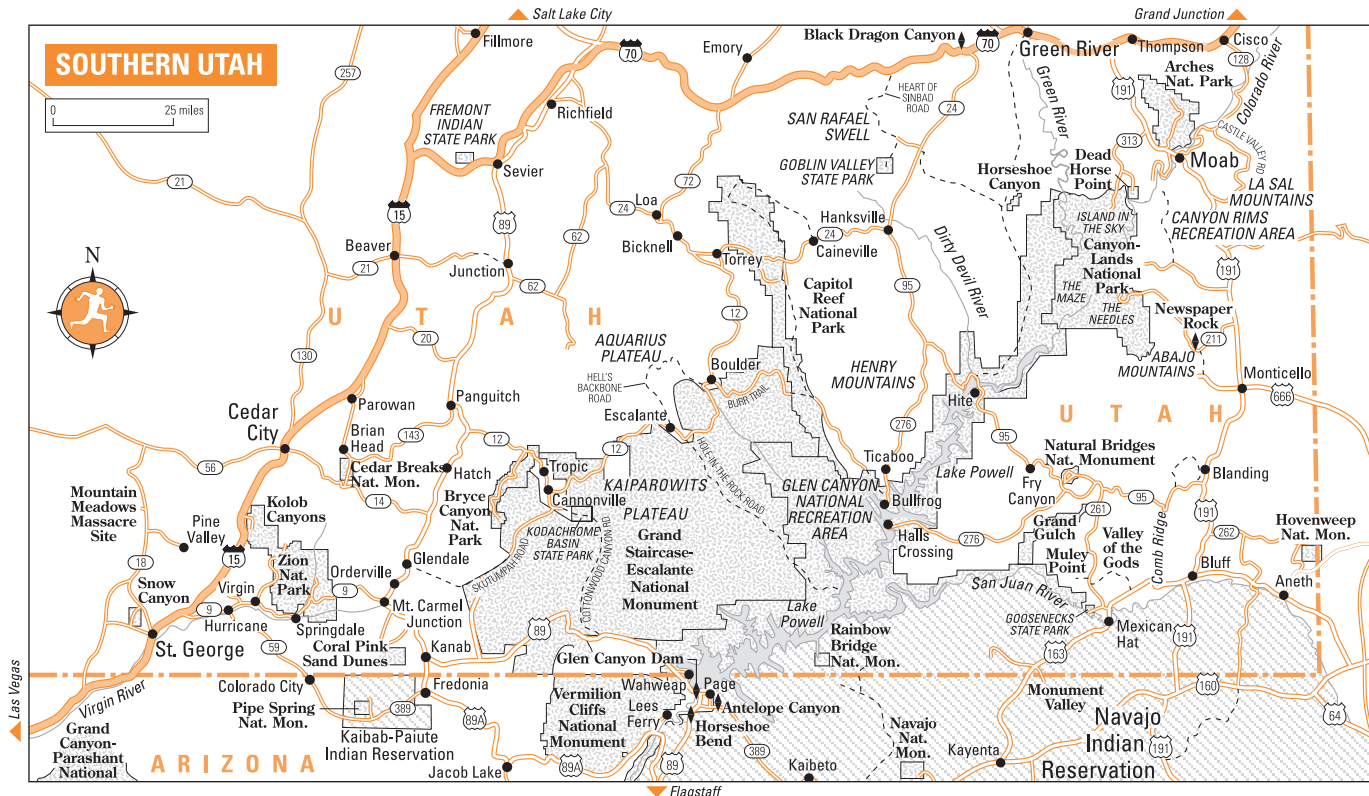

It's nearly impossible to get anywhere in Utah without your own car. Amtrak and Greyhound serve Salt Lake City and a few provincial towns, but practically nowhere else. However, a couple of firms offer bus tours of the national parks, and if you're feeling adventurous, southern Utah also has an unbeatable range of mountain biking and river rafting: see p.999 for a list of companies.

Southern Utah: the national parks

Southern Utah is a peculiar combination of the mind-boggling and the mundane. Its scenery is stupendous, a stunning geological freakshow where the earth is ripped bare to expose cliffs and canyons of every imaginable color, unseen rivers gouge mighty furrows into endless desert plateaus, and strange sandstone towers thrust from the sagebrush. By contrast, however, the tiny Mormon towns scattered across this epic landscape are, almost without exception, boring in the extreme, so most visitors spend as much time as possible outdoors.

While Southern Utah's five national parks are complemented by many lesser-known but equally dramatic wildernesses, they make the most obvious targets for travelers. In the southwest, Zion National Park centers on an awe-inspiring canyon, backed by barren highlands of white sandstone, while Bryce Canyon is a blaze of orange pinnacles. To the east, Arches holds an eroded desertscape of graceful red-rock fins and spurs, all on a more manageable scale than the astonishing hundred-mile vistas of neighboring Canyonlands. Both lie within easy reach of Moab, a disheveled former mining town turned Utah's hippest destination. The fifth park, Capitol Reef, stretches through the middle of the state, pierced by slender, ravishing canyons.

The defining topographical feature of southwest Utah is the Grand Staircase. Named by pioneer river-runner John Wesley Powell, it consists of a series of plateaus, stacked tier upon tier, that climb from the North Rim of the Grand Canyon. The Chocolate Cliffs, near the border with Arizona, are followed by the dazzling Vermilion Cliffs, then the White Cliffs – a 2000-foot wall of Navajo sandstone, best seen at Zion – the Grey Cliffs, and finally the Pink Cliffs of Bryce. Although it took a billion years of sedimentation for these rocks to form, the staircase itself has only been created in the last dozen million years by the general upthrust of the Colorado Plateau, which stretches away to the east.

St George and Cedar City

Southern Utah's two biggest towns, St George and Cedar City, lie fifty miles apart on I-15 en route between Las Vegas and Salt Lake City. Both make reasonably pleasant and serviceable bases, if not ones that are likely to detain you for very long.

St George

ST GEORGE was the winter home of Brigham Young and other early Mormon leaders, who basked in the comparatively mild climate of "Utah's Dixie." Set at the foot of a broad, reddish-brown sandstone cliff, it's a pretty enough town. At the center is the fine 1877 LDS Temple at 440 South 300 East, the oldest still in use anywhere. The rest of the town holds quaint pioneer homes, including Brigham Young's much-restored adobe house on 200 North First West (daily 9am–7pm; free).

Travelers driving up I-15 can call in at the Utah Visitor Center, just inside the state line (daily: summer 8am–9pm; winter 8am–5pm; ☎ 435/673-4542, 🌐 www.utah.com). Virtually all St George's commercial life takes place along the main drag, St George Boulevard, where the twenty or so motels include the popular Dixie Palm at no.185 E (☎ 435/673-3531; 📍). Among various good restaurants in the Ancestor Square development is the Pizza Factory, 1 W St George Blvd (☎ 435/628-1234; closed Sun).

Cedar City

CEDAR CITY, 53 miles north of St George and approximately half its size, is no more worthy of a stop. Founded as an iron-mining town in the late 1850s, it's now kept alive by the Southern Utah State College on its western fringe, and by the flood of theatergoers who come to watch the enthusiastic productions of the Utah Shakespeare Festival, held on campus every summer (☎ 435/586-7878, 🌐 www.bard.org).

The large local visitor center stands at 581 N Main St (summer Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat 9am–1pm; winter Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 435/586-5124 or 1-800/354-4849, 🌐 www.cedarcity.org). Main Street is handy for food and lodging; motels with pools include two Best Westerns, the El Rey Inn at no. 80 S (☎ 435/586-6518, 🌐 www.bwelrey.com; 📍), and the smart Town and Country Inn at no. 200 N (☎ 435/586-9900, 🌐 www.bwtowncountry.com; 📍). Godfathers Pizza at no. 241 N (☎ 435/586-1111; closed Sun) offers Italian specialties in a lively atmosphere, while Sullivan's at no. 301 S (☎ 435/586-6761) is part steakhouse, part coffee-shop.

Zion National Park

With its soaring cliffs, riverine forests, and cascading waterfalls, ZION NATIONAL PARK is the most conventionally beautiful of Utah's parks. At first glance, it's also the least "Southwestern"; its centerpiece, Zion Canyon, is a lush oasis that feels far removed from the otherworldly desolation of Canyonlands or the downright weirdness of Bryce. Like California's Yosemite Canyon, it's a spectacular gorge, squeezed between mighty walls of rock and echoing with the sound of running water; also like Yosemite, it can get claustrophobic in summer, with its approach roads clogged with traffic and its limited facilities crammed with sweltering tourists.

Too many visitors see Zion Canyon as a quick half-day detour off the interstate, as they race between Las Vegas (158 miles southwest) and Salt Lake City (320 miles northeast). Beautiful though the Scenic Drive through the canyon may be, Zion deserves much more of your time than that. Even the shortest hiking trail within the canyon can escape the crowds, while a day-hike will take you away from the deceptive verdure of the valley and up onto the high-desert tablelands beyond.

Summer is by far the busiest season. That's despite temperatures in excess of 100°F, and violent thunderstorms concentrated in August and a week or so to either side. If you can, come in April or May, to see the spring flowers bloom, or in September and October, to enjoy the fall colors along the river. The admission charge for Zion, valid in all sections of the park for seven days, is $20 per vehicle, or $10 for motorcyclists, cyclists, and pedestrians.

Visiting Zion Canyon

In Zion Canyon, mighty walls of Navajo sandstone rise nearly half a mile above the groves of box elders and cottonwoods that line the loping North Fork of the Virgin River. The awe of the early Mormon settlers who called this "Zion" is reflected in the names of the stupendous slabs of rock along the paved six-mile Scenic Drive from the park entrance – the Court of the Patriarchs, the Great White Throne, and Angel's Landing.

Although Hwy-9 remains open to through traffic all year, the Scenic Drive is accessible to private vehicles during the winter only. Between late March and October, all visitors, other than guests staying at Zion Lodge (see p.990), are obliged to leave their vehicles either in Springdale (see p.990) or at the large visitor center just inside the park (daily: late May to early Sept 8am–7pm, late April to late May & early Sept to mid-Oct 8am–6pm; mid-Oct to late April 8am–5pm; ☎435/772-3256, 🌐www.nps.gov/zion). Free shuttle buses run on two separate loops in summer – one between Springdale and the visitor center, with nine stops en route, and the other between the visitor center and the end of the Scenic Drive, also with nine stops including Zion Lodge.

The Scenic Drive ends at the foot of the Temple of Sinawava, beyond which the easy but delightful Riverside Walk trail continues on another half a mile up the canyon, to end at a sandy little beach. For eight miles upstream from here, in the stretch known as the Zion Narrows, the Virgin River fills the entire gorge, often less than twenty feet wide and channeled between vertical cliffs almost a thousand feet high. Hiking this ravishing "slot canyon" is much more suitable for devotees of extreme sports than for casual hikers. Specialist equipment is essential, in the form of waterproof, super-grip footwear, neoprene socks, and a walking stick or two, complemented in the cooler months by a drysuit, plus zip-lock plastic bags for everything you carry, and all the water you need to drink. You can only hike its full length downstream, a total distance of sixteen miles from remote Chamberlain's Ranch, roughly twenty miles north of the park's East Entrance. Commercial companies based in Springfield, such as Zion Adventure Company (☎435/772-1001, 🌐www.zionadventures.com), rent out equipment and offer early-morning shuttle rides to the trailhead; you also have to get a permit from the visitor center.

A much less demanding hike leads up to Weeping Rock, an easy half-hour roundtrip from the road to a gorgeous spring-fed garden that dangles from a rocky alcove. From the same trailhead, a mile beyond Zion Lodge, a more strenuous and exciting route cuts through narrow Hidden Canyon, whose mouth turns into a waterfall after a good rain. Directly across from the lodge a short (two-mile roundtrip) and fairly flat trail winds up at the Emerald Pools, a series of three clearwater pools, the best (and furthest) of which has a small sandy beach at the foot of a gigantic cliff; at certain times of the year a broad waterfall sprinkles down over the trail.

The single best half-day hike climbs up to Angel's Landing, a narrow ledge of whitish sandstone protruding some 1750ft above the canyon floor. Starting on the same route as for the Emerald Pools, the Angel's Landing trail switchbacks sharply up through the delightful coolness of Refrigerator Canyon before emerging on the canyon's west rim; near the end you have to cross a heart-stopping five-foot neck of rock with sheer drops to either side (there's a steel cable to grab hold of). That roundtrip takes a good four hours, but backpackers can continue another twenty miles to the gorgeous Kolob Canyons district (see p.990).

The high dry plateau above and to the east of Zion Canyon, reached by continuing on Hwy-9 at the Scenic Drive turnoff, stands in a complete contrast to the lush Virgin River gorge. Its most dramatic sight is the Great Arch, best seen from the turnouts before the mile-long tunnel, beyond which the Canyon Overlook nature trail gives a good introduction to the flora and fauna of the park, such as the speedy lizards that race from rock to rock.

Practicalities

The only food and lodging within Zion itself is at Zion Lodge (open all year; ☎ 435/772-3213, reserve through Xanterra at ☎ 303/297-2757 or 1-888/297-2757, 🌐 www.xanterra.com or 🌐 www.zionlodge.com; 📍), set amid rolling and well-shaded lawns near the Great White Throne. Even if you can't get a room, it's well worth stopping for lunch on the terrace of the fine old wooden dining room. The Lodge is also the base for horseback excursions, with regular one-hour rides costing $30 per person (☎ 435/679-8665, 🌐 www.canyonrides.com). Two good campgrounds, both charging $16 per night, are located alongside the visitor center; the Watchman accepts reservations in summer (☎ 1-800/365-2267, 🌐 reservations.nps.gov), while the summer-only South is first-come, first-served.

The best alternatives to the in-park lodge are in the appealing small town of SPRINGDALE, set among the riverbank cottonwoods half a mile south of the park entrance. Budget motels along Hwy-9, known here as Zion Park Boulevard, include the friendly 🐾 El Rio Lodge, no. 995 ☎ 435/772-3205 or 1-888/772-3205, 🌐 www.elriolodge.com; 📍), while two pricier modern alternatives, the Best Western Zion Park Inn at no. 1215 (☎ 435/772-3200 or 1-800/934-7275, 🌐 www.zionparkinn.com; 📍), and the extremely stylish 🐾 Desert Pearl Inn, no. 707 (☎ 435/772-8888 or 1-888/828-0898, 🌐 www.desertpearl.com; 📍), offer good views and pools. The 🐾 Spotted Dog Café, 428 Zion Park Blvd (☎ 435/772-3244), is the finest local restaurant, while apart from being the liveliest bar for miles, the dinner-only Bit and Spur Saloon, opposite the Zion Park Inn (☎ 435/772-3498), serves very good Mexican food.

The Kolob Canyons

Although the immaculate Kolob Canyons are just three miles off I-15, twenty miles south of Cedar City, this section of Zion receives far fewer visitors than Zion Canyon itself. Here, too, the focus is on red-rock canyons, which in the Kolob seem somehow redder, and the trees greener, than those down below.

The view from the five-mile paved road that heads up from the small but worthwhile visitor center (daily: late April to mid-Oct 8am–5pm, mid-Oct to late April 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 435/586-9548) is amazing, but hiking along either of two main trails will give you a sense of what makes this place so special. The first and shorter of the two starts two miles from the visitor center and follows Taylor Creek on a five-mile roundtrip to Double Arch Alcove, a spectacular natural amphitheater roofed by twin sandstone arches; there's also a small waterfall a quarter of a mile further along. The other trail starts from the north side of the parking area at Lee Pass, four miles beyond the visitor center, and follows a well-marked route for seven miles past LaVerkin Falls to Kolob Arch, which at over 300ft across rivals Landscape Arch in Arches (see p.996) as the world's longest natural rock span.

Bryce Canyon National Park

The surface of the earth can hold few weirder-looking spots than BRYCE CANYON, a two-hour drive (86 miles) northeast of Zion. Named for Mormon settler Ebenezer Bryce, who memorably declared that it was “a helluva place to lose a cow,” it is not in fact a canyon at all. Along a twenty-mile shelf on the eastern edge of the thickly forested Paunsaugunt Plateau, 8000ft above sea level, successive strata of dazzlingly colored rock have slipped and slid and washed away to leave a menagerie of multihued and contorted stone pinnacles.

In houses of yellow, red, and flaming oranges, the formations here have been eroded out of the muddy sandstone by a combination of icy winters (the temperature drops below freezing two hundred nights out of the year) and summer rainstorms. The racks of top-heavy pinnacles known as “hoodoos” were formed when the harder upper layers of rock stayed firm as the lower levels were worn away beneath them. Thor’s Hammer, visible from Sunset Point, is the most alarmingly precarious. These hoodoos look down into technicolor ravines, all far more vivid than the Grand Canyon and much more human in scale. The whole place is at its most inspiring in winter, when the figures stand out from a blanket of snow.

The park approach road runs south from Hwy-12 about twenty miles east of the small town of Panguitch; the entrance fee is $20 per vehicle, per week. Despite the existence of a free (limited and summer-only) shuttle bus system, visitors can drive to all the scenic overlooks year round.

The two most popular viewpoints into Bryce Amphitheater, at the heart of the park, are on either side of Bryce Canyon Lodge (see below): the more northerly, Sunrise Point, is 350 yards from the parking lot and so is slightly less crowded than Sunset Point, where most of the bus tours stop. A network of hiking trails drops abruptly from the rim down into the amphitheater. One good three-mile trek switchbacks steeply from Sunset Point through the cool 200-foot canyons of Wall Street, where a pair of 800-year-old fir trees stretch to reach daylight. It then cuts across the surreal landscape into the basin known as the Queen’s Garden, where the stout and remarkable likeness of Queen Victoria sits in majestic condescension – pointed out by a brass plaque – before climbing back up to the rim at Sunrise Point. A dozen trails crisscross the amphitheater, but it’s surprisingly easy to get lost, so don’t stray from the marked routes.

Sunrise and Sunset points notwithstanding, the best view at both sunset and dawn (which is the best time for taking pictures) is from Bryce Point, at the southern end of the amphitheater. From here, you can look down not only at the Bryce Canyon formations but also take in the grand sweep of the whole region, east to the Henry Mountains and north to the Escalante range. The park road then climbs another twenty miles south, by way of the intensely colored Natural Bridge, an 85-foot rock arch spanning a steep gully, en route to its dead end at Rainbow Point.

Practicalities

The park’s visitor center, just past the entrance, is a valuable source of information on current weather and hiking conditions (daily: mid-June to mid-Sept 8am–8pm; May to mid-June and mid-Sept to Oct 8am–6pm; Nov–April 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 435/834-5322, 🌐 www.nps.gov/brca). Much the best place to stay is the venerable Bryce Canyon Lodge, one hundred yards from the rim between Sunrise and Sunset points (April–Oct only; reserve through Xanterra ☎ 303/297-2757 or 1-888/297-2757, 🌐 www.brycecanyonlodge.com; 🍽), where rustic cabins cost a few dollars more than basic doubles. It also has a dining room, a grocery store, a laundry, and public showers.

The northern approaches to the park, just off Hwy-12, are guarded (not to say disfigured) by two motels, both owned by the same company and open year-round; the large Ruby’s Inn (☎ 435/834-5341 or 1-866/866-6616, 🌐 www.rubysin.com; 🍽), which has a dreadful restaurant, and the cheaper, newer (and misleadingly named) Bryce View Lodge (☎ 435/834-5180 or 1-888/279-2304, ⑩ www.bryceviewlodge.com; ③). Ruby's Inn has its own campground ($17.50), and there are also two first-come, first-served campgrounds within the park, which charge $10 per night: Sunset Campground, close to Sunset Point, and North Campground, near the visitor center. Backpackers can choose from dozens of sites below the rim, all south of Bryce Point; pick up the required permit at the visitor center, and take lots of water.

Bryce Canyon to Capitol Reef: Highway 12

Turning its back on the grand amphitheater of Bryce Canyon, the tiny hamlet of TROPIC, which straggles along Hwy-12 eight miles east of the park entrance, seems almost embarrassed about the flamboyant geological phenomena ranged along the ridge above it. The practical-minded people of this Mormon farming community (population 380) don't especially concern themselves with tourists, but they have restored Ebenezer Bryce's log cabin, which stands next to the Bryce Pioneer Village motel-cum-restaurant (☎ 435/679-8546 or 1-800/222-0381, ⑩ www.bpvillage.com; ③). An unmarked road heads west from the cabin two miles to the park boundary, from where it's a two-mile hike up to the main formations.

Back on Hwy-12, the road curves along the edge of the Table Cliff Plateau before dropping down into the remote canyons of the Escalante River, the last river system to be discovered within the continental US and site of some of the finest backpacking routes in the Southwest. As soon as you walk even a hundred yards off the main highway, you're in a wilderness that few travelers ever see.

ESCALANTE, 33 miles east of Cannonville, was just another roadside town until it was given a new lease on life in 1996 by the surprise Presidential proclamation that created the vast Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument (free). The interagency visitor center at the west end of town (mid-March to Oct daily 7.30am–5.30pm; Nov to mid-March Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 435/826-5499, ⑩ www.ut.blm.gov/monument), is a mine of up-to-date information on all the public lands in the vicinity, and can suggest hiking or mountain-biking trips into the backcountry. The most accessible local highlight is Calf Creek, sixteen miles east of Escalante, where a well-marked trail leads just under three miles upstream to a gorgeous shaded dell replete with a 125-foot waterfall, and a nice undeveloped campground ($7) as well. More ambitious trips start from trailheads along the dusty but usually passable Hole-in-the-Rock Road, which turns south from Hwy-12 five miles east of town. A trio of slender, storm-gouged slot canyons, including the delicate, graceful Peek-a-Boo Canyon and the downright intimidating Spooky Canyon, can be reached by a mile-long hike from the end of Dry Fork Road, 26 miles along. From Hurricane Wash, 34 miles along, you can hike five miles to reach Coyote Gulch, and then a further five miles, passing sandstone bridges and arches, to the Escalante River. Under normal conditions, two-wheel-drive vehicles should go no further than Dance Hall Rock, 36 miles down the road, a superb natural amphitheater sculpted out of the slickrock hills. The pick of Escalante's motels is unquestionably the Prospector Inn, 380 W Main St (☎ 435/826-4653, ⑩ www.prospectorinn.com; ③).

Until the mid-1980s, when it was paved through to Capitol Reef, Hwy-12 ended at BOULDER, thirty miles beyond Escalante. Due east from there, all except twenty miles of the old dirt Burr Trail has (controversially) been paved, providing easy access to the southern reaches of Capitol Reef National Park and down to Lake Powell. At the junction of Hwy-12 and the Burr Trail, the modern Boulder Mountain Lodge (☎ 435/335-7460 or 1-800/556-3446, ⑩ www.boulder-utah.com; ④) has twenty comfortable rooms and a reasonable restaurant. The best place to eat lies a few yards further east, in the spotless form of the Boulder Mesa Restaurant, 155 E Burr Trail Rd (☎ 435/335-7447), which is open daily for all meals.

North of Boulder, Hwy-12 makes a gorgeous drive up onto the Aquarius Plateau, with marvelous vistas to the east across waves of gold and red sandstone outcrops; there's a lovely campground (📞 435/425-3702; $9) at Oak Creek, fifteen miles along.

Capitol Reef National Park

CAPITOL REEF might sound like something you'd find off the coast of Australia, but its towering ochre, white, and red-rock walls and deep river canyons are of a piece with the rest of the Utah desert. The outstanding feature is a multilayered, 1000-foot-high reef-like wall of uplifted sedimentary rock, a section of which reminded an early traveler of the grand dome of the US Capitol. Stretching for over a hundred miles north to south, but only a few miles across, the seemingly impenetrable barrier of the Waterpocket Fold was warped upward by the same process that lifted the Colorado Plateau, and the sharply defined sedimentary layers on display here trace over two hundred million years of geological activity. The Waterpocket Fold is sliced through in a number of places by deeply incised river canyons – some only twenty feet wide, but hundreds of feet deep – often accessible only by foot.

The one paved road through the park, Hwy-24, cuts across the northern half of the Fold, following the deep canyon of the Fremont River; motorists who stick to this road do not incur an entrance fee. Beneath the enormous and very prominent rock outcrop known as the Castle, the visitor center (daily: June–Sept 8am–7pm; Oct–May 8am–4.30pm; 📞 435/425-3791, 🌐 www.nps.gov/care) has explanatory exhibits and an irresistible campground ($10), set amid the cherry, apple, and peach orchards of the abandoned Mormon community of FRUITA; in season, you can pick all the fruit you can gobble down. To the west, the Goose-necks Overlook gazes down 500ft into the entrenched canyons cut by Sulphur Creek. Further east, beyond Fruita's former schoolhouse, are some extraordinary Fremont petroglyphs, figures of bighorn sheep and stylized space-people chipped into the varnished red rock a thousand years ago. Another four and a half miles along, one of Capitol Reef's best day-hikes heads up along the gravelly riverbed through Grand Wash – a beautiful (and usually quite cool) canyon where, it's said, Butch Cassidy and his gang used to hide out.

Alternatively, the paved, popular Scenic Drive ($5 per vehicle) heads twelve miles south from the visitor center, past the top of Grand Wash to Capitol Gorge and back. A more adventurous sixty-mile loop trip explores Cathedral Valley in the north, while a 125-mile southern route starts at the foot of the volcanic Henry Mountains, then follows the Burr Trail through Muley Twist Canyon, and continues west to Boulder (see opposite).

The nearest food and lodging to Capitol Reef is eleven miles west, in and near the rapidly growing town of TORREY. The Sand Creek Hostel & Bunkhouse, 540 W Main St (closed mid-Oct to March; 📞 435/425-3577 or 1-877/425-3578, 🌐 www.sandcreekrv.com; 📍), is a thriving little complex that offers camping for $11, dorm beds for $10, and a couple of inexpensive private cabins for $28, while the Rim Rock Inn, three miles east at 2523 E Hwy-24 (📞 435/425-3398 or 1-888/447-4676, 🌐 www.therimrock.net; 📍) is a new, wood-built hotel, with a good dining room. Back in town, Café Diablo, 599 W Main St (📞 435/425-3070) is a surprisingly inventive dinner-only restaurant.

Goblin Valley

Fifty fairly desolate miles east of Capitol Reef along Hwy-24, you reach the tiny crossroads of Hanksville. Twenty miles north on Hwy-24, a right turn takes you onto a 32-mile dirt road to a real anthropological and artistic wonder – the rock paintings of Horseshoe Canyon, a remote subsection of Canyonlands National Park (see below).

Half a mile further north on Hwy-24, a side road to the west veers off to Goblin Valley State Park (open 24hr; $5), where thousands of gnome-like figures loom out of the soft Entrada sandstone. The Carmel Canyon trail loops for over a mile through a throng of misshapen rock pillars, many of which seem to have eyes and other human features; in the 2000 sci-fi movie spoof Galaxy Quest, the entire valley comes to life. Stay at the well-equipped campground (☎ 1-800/322-3770; $10) if you want to see the place by moonlight, when it looks especially spooky.

Green River

The uneventful riverside town of GREEN RIVER, just east of the Hwy-24 junction on I-70, is the largest community on a 200-mile stretch of interstate. One good reason to visit is the John Wesley Powell River History Museum, 885 E Main St (April–Oct daily 8am–8pm, Nov–March Tues–Sat 9am–4pm; $2; ☎ www.jwprhm.com), which features the anything-but-dry personal accounts of the men who first successfully navigated the Colorado River from near its source all the way through the Grand Canyon. The museum also doubles as the local visitor center.

Green River holds a number of bargain-rate motels, and a few slightly classier options, including the Best Western River Terrace, 880 E Main St (☎ 435/564-3401 or 1-800/528-1234, ☎ www.bestwestern.com; 🍷), which has a pool, river views, and a decent restaurant.

Canyonlands National Park

CANYONLANDS NATIONAL PARK, at 527 square miles the largest and most magnificent of Utah's national parks, is as hard to define as it is to map. Its closest equivalent, the Grand Canyon, is by comparison simply an almighty crack in an otherwise relatively flat plain; the Canyonlands area is a bewildering tangle of canyons, plateaus, fissures, and faults, scattered with buttes and monoliths, pierced by arches and caverns, and penetrated only by a paltry handful of dead-end roads.

Canyonlands focuses on the Y-shaped confluence of the Green and Colorado rivers, buried deep in the desert forty miles southwest of Moab. There's only one spot from which you can see the rivers meet, however, and that's a five-mile hike from the nearest road. With no road down to the rivers, let alone across them, the park therefore splits into three major sections. The Needles, east of the Colorado, is a red-rock wonderland of sandstone pinnacles and hidden meadows that's a favorite with hardy hikers and four-wheel-drive enthusiasts, while the Maze, west of both the Colorado and the Green, is a virtually inaccessible labyrinth of tortuous, waterless canyons. In the wedge of the "Y" between the two, the high, dry mesa of the Island In The Sky commands astonishing views across the whole park and beyond, with several overlooks that can easily be toured by car. Getting from any one of these sections to the others involves a drive of at least a hundred miles.

Canyonlands is not a place that lends itself to a short visit. With no lodging, and little camping, inside the park, and no loop road to whisk you through it, it takes a full day to have even a cursory look at a single segment. Considering that summer temperatures regularly exceed 100°F and most trails have no water and little shade, the Island In The Sky is the most immediately rewarding option. On the other hand, if you fancy a long day-hike you'd do better to set off into the Needles (see opposite).

Canyonlands fees and permits

Canyonlands National Park charges an entry fee of $10 per vehicle, $5 for cyclists or hikers, valid for seven days in all sections of the park. Only limited numbers of visitors are allowed to spend a night or more in the backcountry. Backpacking permits, covering a maximum party of seven persons in the Needles and Island In The Sky districts, or five persons in the Maze, cost $15. Permits for four-wheel-drive or mountain-biking expeditions that involve backcountry camping, issued for groups of up to three vehicles with a total of fifteen people in the Island In The Sky, ten in the Needles, or nine in the Maze, are $30. Reservations are essential for the most popular areas, especially in the peak seasons of spring and fall. Permits must be purchased at least two weeks in advance, and must be picked up in person, as well – with every member of the group present – from the appropriate park visitor center, at least one hour before it closes. For full details, see the official website at www.nps.gov/cany.

Island In The Sky and Dead Horse Point State Park

Reached by a good road that climbs steadily up from US-191, 21 miles south of I-70, the Island In The Sky district looks out over hundreds of miles of flat-topped mesas that drop in 2000-foot steps to the river. Four miles along from its visitor center (daily: summer 8am–6pm; winter 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 435/259-4712), the Mesa Arch Trail is the area's best short hike, looping for a mile around the mesa-top hillocks to the edge of the abyss, where long, shallow Mesa Arch frames an extraordinary view of the La Sal Mountains, 35 miles northeast. The definitive vantage point, however, is Grand View Point Overlook, another five miles on at the southern end of the road. An agoraphobic's nightmare, it commands a hundred-mile prospect of layer upon layer of bare sandstone, here stacked thousands of feet high, there fractured into bottomless canyons. The Island In The Sky's only developed campground, the first-come, first-served and waterless Willow Flat ($5), is just back from the Green River Overlook, reached by taking the right fork shortly after the Mesa Arch trailhead.

On the way in to Island In The Sky, a turnoff long before the visitor center cuts across south to the smaller but equally breathtaking Dead Horse Point, located at the tip of a narrow mesa, which looks straight down 2000ft to the twisting Colorado River. Cowboys used the mesa as a natural corral, herding up wild horses then blocking them in behind a piñon pine fence that still marks its 90-foot neck. One band of horses was left here too long and died – hence the name. As a Utah state park, Dead Horse Point charges its own $7 admission fee, and national-park passes cannot be used. The visitor center (daily: summer 8am–6pm; winter 8am–5pm; ☎ 435/259-2614) stands two miles short of the point itself, and there's also a campground ($14; reservations mid-March to mid-Oct only, $5 extra, ☎ 1-800/322-3770).

The Needles and Newspaper Rock

Taking its name from the thousands of colorful sandstone pillars, knobs, and hoodoos that punctuate its many lush canyons and basins, the Needles district allows a more intimate look at the Canyonlands environment than does Island In The Sky. Here you're not always gazing thousands of feet downward or scanning the distant horizon; instead you can wander through seemingly endless acres of stone figures.

The road ends with a great collection of mushroom-shaped hoodoos at the Big Spring Canyon Overlook. A memorable and demanding eleven-mile roundtrip hike from here remains the only way to get to the Confluence Overlook, 1000ft above the point where the Green River joins the muddy waters of the Colorado, to flow together, parallel but separate, toward fearsome Cataract Canyon. Various short walks head off the road at selected viewpoints; one of the best is Pothole Point, a mile before Big Spring Canyon. A longer day-trip, or a good overnight hike, leaves from near the Squaw Flat campground ($10) to the green meadow of Chesler Park, cutting through the narrow cleft of the Joint Trail. Check in at the visitor center (daily: summer 8am–6pm; winter 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 435/259-4711) near the park boundary to get up-to-date information, as well as backcountry permits if you plan to camp out.

The 35-mile drive in to the Needles from US-191 is among the prettiest in the state, winding along Indian Creek through deep red-rock canyons lined by pines and cottonwoods. Newspaper Rock, twelve miles in, is the best of many similarly named sites; here hundreds of tiny petroglyphs, many of which show deer, antelope, bear claws, and helmeted human figures, have been etched in the jet-black desert varnish of a red-sandstone boulder by centuries of passing hunters and travelers. There's a lovely (free) streamside campground just across the road.

The Maze and Horseshoe Canyon

Of the half-million yearly visitors to Canyonlands, only about one in a hundred makes it into the harsh and remote Maze district. Filling up the western third of the park, on the far side of the Colorado and Green rivers, the Maze is noted for its ancient rock-art panels and for its many-fingered box canyons, accessible only by jeep or by long, dry hiking trails. If you're tempted, call into the Hans Flat ranger station, 46 miles east of Hwy-24 (daily 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 435/259-2652).

Pretty, tree-lined Horseshoe Canyon, reached halfway down a long, long dirt road that loops south from Green River itself to join Hwy-24 just south of Goblin Valley (see p.993), contains the greatest concentration of ancient rock art in the Southwest. Allowing at least an hour's driving from the highway both before and after, plus five hours for the six-mile roundtrip hike down into the canyon itself, you'll need to set aside a full day, but it's well worth the effort, both for the joy of the walk and for the sight of the "Great Gallery" at the far end. Hundreds of mysterious, haunting pictographs – mostly life-sized human figures, albeit weirdly elongated, or draped in robes and adorned with strange, staring eyes – were painted onto these red-sandstone walls, probably between 500 BC and 500 AD. Rangers from Hans Flat (see above) lead guided hikes into Horseshoe Canyon on summer weekends (April–Oct Sat & Sun 9am).

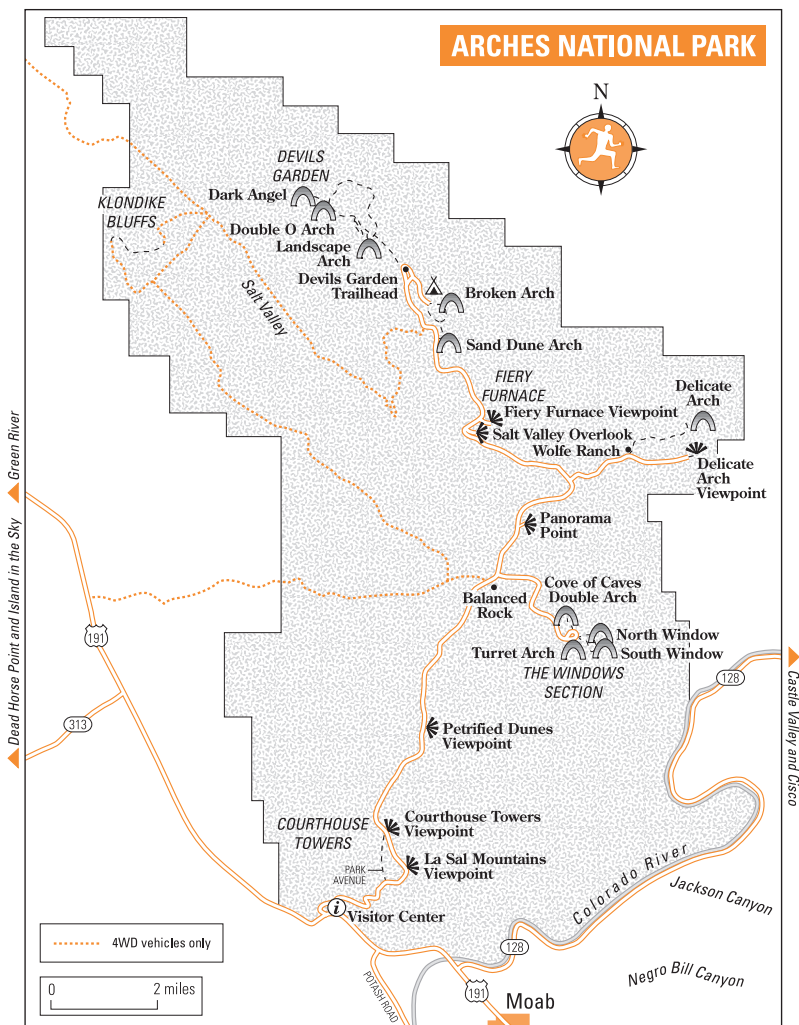

Arches National Park

The writer Edward Abbey, who spent a year as a ranger at ARCHES NATIONAL PARK in the 1950s, wrote in Desert Solitaire that its arid landscape was as "naked, monolithic, austere, and unadorned as the sculpture of the moon." It certainly is one of the least terrestrial places on this planet. Massive fins of red and golden sandstone stand to attention out of the bare desert plain, and over eighteen hundred natural arches of various shapes and sizes have been cut into the rock by eons of erosion. Apart from the single ribbon of black asphalt that snakes through the park, there's nothing even vaguely human about it. The narrow, hunching ridges are more like dinosaurs' backbones than solid rock, and under a full moon, at twilight, or during the lightning strikes of a distant thunderstorm, you can't help but imagine that the landscape has a life of its own.

While you could race through in a couple of hours, to do Arches justice you should plan to spend a whole day here at the very least. A twenty-mile road cuts uphill sharply from US-191 and the ultra-modern park visitor center (daily:

mid-April to early Oct 7.30am–6.30pm; mid-March to mid-April and middle two weeks in Oct 7.30am–5.30pm; late Oct to mid-March 8am–4.30pm; $10 per vehicle or $5 for motorcyclists, cyclists, and pedestrians; ☎ 435/719-2299, 🌐 www.nps.gov/arch). Exhibits here explain how the arches are formed and point out some of the more photogenic examples. The first possible stop is the south trailhead for Park Avenue, an easy trail leading one mile down a scoured, rock-bottomed wash. If you stay on the road, the La Sal Mountains Viewpoint provides a grandstand look at the distant peaks rising over 12,000ft above the desert, as well as the huge red chunk of Courthouse Towers closer at hand.

From Balanced Rock beyond – a 50-foot boulder atop a slender 75-foot pedestal – a turning to the right winds for two miles through the Windows section, where a half-mile trail loops through a dense concentration of massive arches, some over 100ft high and 150ft across. A second trail, fifty yards beyond, leads to Double Arch, a staunch pair of arches that together support another arch overhead.

Further on, the main road drops downhill for two miles past Panorama Point and the turnoff to Wolfe Ranch, where a century-old log cabin now serves as the trailhead for the wonderful three-mile roundtrip hike up to Delicate Arch, which, as a freestanding crescent of rock perched at the brink of a deep canyon, is by far the most impressive arch in the park. Crowds congregate here each evening for the superb sunset views; coming back down in the dark can be a little hair-raising, though. Three miles beyond the Wolfe Ranch turnoff, the deep, sharp-sided mini-canyons of the Fiery Furnace section form a (usually quite cool) labyrinth through which rangers lead regular hikes in spring, summer, and fall ($8; reserve in advance at the visitor center).

The road continues on to the Devil's Garden trailhead, from which an easy one-mile walk leads to a view of the astonishing 306-foot span of Landscape Arch, now too perilously slender to approach more closely. Several other arches lie along short spur trails off the route; seeing them all, and returning from Double O Arch via the longer primitive trail, requires a total hike of just over seven miles. Arches' only campground ($10; water only available mid-March to Oct) is across from the trailhead. ; 24 of its 52 sites are always first-come first-served, and are usually taken by early morning. The remaining 28 can be reserved between March and October only, between four and 240 days in advance (☎518/885-3639 or 1-877/444-6777, 🌐www.reserveusa.com). Permits for backcountry camping, allowed anywhere that's a mile from the road and half a mile from any trail, are issued at the visitor center.

Moab

Founded in the late 1800s, MOAB was hardly a speck until the 1950s, when prospector Charlie Steen discovered uranium in the nearby hills. When the ensuing mining boom finally waned, the conservative hold of Moab's mine-owners and businessmen over the land waned with it, and the town threw in its lot with tourism. Over the last twenty years, it has transformed itself into the Southwest's number one adventure-vacation destination.

Moab still isn't a large town, though – the population has yet to reach ten thousand – and neither is it an attractive one. The setting is what matters. With two national parks on its doorstep, plus millions more acres of public land, Moab is an ideal base for outdoors enthusiasts. At first, it was a haven for mountain bikers lured by the legendary Slickrock Bike Trail (see box, opposite). Then the jeep drivers began to turn up, and the whitewater-rafting companies moved in, too. These days it's almost literally bursting, all year, with legions of Lycra-clad vacationers from all over the world.

Perhaps the main reason Moab has grown so fast is that out-of-state visitors tend to find Utah's other rural communities so irredeemably boring. As soon as Moab emerged from the pack, it became a beacon in the desert, attracting tourists ecstatic to find a town that stayed up after dark. Moab amounts to little more than a few miles of motels, restaurants, and bars, but that's enough to make it the only southern-Utah town where you can stay for a week and still feel that you haven't seen everything, and everyone, a dozen times.

Moab's superb visitor center is right in the heart of town at Center and Main streets (daily: summer 8am–9pm; winter 9am–noon & 1–5pm; ☎435/259-8825

Adventure travel in southeast Utah

River trips

Among Moab's dozen licensed operators offering motorized one-day trips along the Colorado River for around $45 and up are Worldwide River Expeditions (☎ 435/259-7515, 1-800/231-2769, 🌐 www.worldwideriver.com), Adrift Adventures (☎ 435/259-8594 or 1-800/874-4483, 🌐 www.adrift.net), and Tag-a-Long Expeditions (☎ 435/259-8946 or 1-800/453-3292, 🌐 www.tagalong.com). The trips start northwest of Moab, near the butte known as Fisher Towers, and arrive near town in the afternoon; many companies give passengers the chance to float quieter stretches in two-person kayaks. The same operators run oar-powered trips that are slower but much quieter, and less expensive than motorboat trips. Longer (2- to 7-day) trips head through Cataract Canyon and other wild Canyonlands spots.

Mountain biking

While the Moab area is ideally suited to mountain-bike touring, only experienced riders should attempt its most challenging route, the Slickrock Bike Trail. This ten-mile, half-day loop starts atop the mesa about three miles east of Moab, threading its way among the sandstone knobs with views of the La Sal Mountains and the Colorado River. A more relaxing alternative is to explore the dirt roads leading through the red-rock country of Kane Creek, west of town.

Among bike shops offering daily rental and guided tours, including trips into Canyonland National Park, are Rim Tours (☎ 435/259-5223 or 1-800/626-7335, 🌐 www.rimtours.com), and Poison Spider (☎ 435/259-7882 or 1-800/635-1792, 🌐 www.poisonspiderbicycles.com).

Jeep tours

Most of the thousands of miles of jeep trails around Moab were built years ago by miners and haven't been maintained since. The visitor center has a free map and guide to some of the more popular ones, and you can rent a four-wheel-drive jeep or pickup truck for around $100 per day from Slickrock 4x4 Rentals at 284 N Main St (☎ 435/259-5678, www.moab-utah.com/jeep/jeep.html). Guided jeep tours (around $100 per person per day) are offered by Tag-a-Long Expeditions (see above).

Scenic flights

From a small airfield twenty miles north of Moab on US-91, Redtail Aviation (☎ 435/259-7421 or 1-800/842-9251, 🌐 www.redtailaviation.com) and Slickrock Air Guides (☎ 435/259-6216, 🌐 www.slickrockairguides.com) run unforgettable flights over the Canyonlands area and beyond, starting at $100–125 per person for a one-hour reconnaissance.

or 1-800/635-6622, 🌐 www.discovermoab.com). Bighorn Express (☎ 801/746-2417 or 1-888/655-7433, 🌐 www.bighornexpress.com) runs daily shuttle buses between Salt Lake City and Moab, via Green River (site of the nearest Amtrak station) and continuing on to Monticello.

Accommodation

If you've already been in Utah for a while when you reach Moab, its glittering neon motel signs will come as a big surprise. At last count, there were thirty motels and a dozen B&Bs in town, but every one of the 1500-plus rooms is taken on many nights between mid-March and October – when you'd be lucky to find anything below $75 – so reservations are strongly recommended.

Commercial campgrounds nearby include the well-shaded Slickrock Campground, 1301 N Hwy-191 (☎ 435/259-7660 or 1-800/448-8873, 🌐 www.slickrockcampground.com).

.slickrockcampground.com; $18), a mile north of town; if you're happy to put up with far more primitive facilities to escape the crowds, head instead for the Bureau of Land Management's Sand Flats Recreation Area, along the top of the mesa to the east of town, near the Slickrock Bike Trail, at 1924 S Roadrunner Hill (☎435/259-6111; $8).

Aarchway Inn 1551 N Hwy-191 ☎435/259-2599 or 1-800/341-9359, www.aarchwayinn.com.

Well-equipped motel with a nice pool, not far from the Colorado at the north end of town. ④

Adobe Abode 778 W Kane Creek Blvd ☎435/259-7716, www.adobeabodemoab.com. Attractive, Pueblo-style home a few hundred yards from downtown Moab, offering six comfortable and tastefully furnished B&B rooms. ⑤

Best Western Greenwell Inn 105 S Main St ☎435/259-6151 or 1-800/780-7234, www.bestwesternmoab.com. Central, modern hotel that offers spacious good-value rooms with tasteful furnishings and fittings. ⑥

Gonzo Inn 100 W 200 South ☎435/259-2515 or 1-800/791-4044, www.gonzoinn.com. Luxurious if rather self-consciously hip inn, complete with kitsch-retro furnishings, quirky artworks, and an espresso bar. ⑥

Inca Inn Motel 570 N Main St ☎435/259-7261, www.moab-utah.com/inca/inn.html. Clean, minimally equipped but adequate budget motel. ②

Lazy Lizard International Hostel 1213 S Hwy-191 ☎435/259-6057, www.lazylizardhostel.com. Amiable, very laid-back independent hostel, a mile south of the center, with $9 beds in six-person dorms, $6 camping, and private cabins for $24, plus hot tub, kitchen, and Internet access. ①

THE SOUTHWEST

Southern Utah: the national parks

Eating and drinking

Moab offers by far the greatest range of restaurants in southern Utah, most of which cater to vegetarians. With two pubs and a winery, there's also no problem getting a drink, while coffee bars are springing up everywhere.

Buck's Grill House 1393 N Hwy-191 ☎435/259-5201. Belying its stockade-like exterior, this "American Western Food" joint is actually a sophisticated affair, serving rich, classy Southwestern food, such as game hen or pork ribs, at very reasonable prices. Open for dinner nightly.

Desert Bistro 1266 N Main St ☎435/259-0756. Expensive but top-notch dinner-only restaurant, set in a ranch home with a patio that's perfect for summer nights. On the modern bistro menu, entrees like venison medallions or smoked rabbit agnolotti cost up to $35.

Eddie McStiff's 57 S Main St ☎435/259-2337. Central pub, next to the visitor center, which serves some interesting beers, including raspberry and blueberry varieties, and also a diverse and inexpensive menu of salads, pizzas, and pasta.

Jailhouse Café 101 N Main St ☎435/259-3900. Very popular central café, open for breakfast only, until noon on weekdays and 1pm at weekends. There's indoor and outdoor seating year-round, and great specials like ginger pancakes and eggs Benedict.

Mondo Café 59 S Main St ☎435/259-5551. Groovy all-day hangout next to Eddie McStiff's (see above), serving espresso coffees and the odd pastry or sandwich.

The Peace Tree 20 S Main St ☎435/259-8503. Very central juice bar and café that serves good sandwiches, wraps, and smoothies to take out or eat on the small outdoor patio, until 6.30pm daily.

Natural Bridges National Monument

One of the prettiest and least traveled highways in southern Utah, Hwy-95 runs for over a hundred miles southeast from Capitol Reef, through dozens of red-rock canyons, and across the Dirty Devil and Colorado rivers before topping out on the sagebrush plains of San Juan County. En route it gives access to the marvelous collection of sandstone spans at Natural Bridges National Monument, forty miles west of US-191. Three canyons come together here, and at each junction the streams that carved them have also formed sandstone bridges. The largest, Sipapu Bridge, is 268ft across at its base and over 200ft high, and can be seen from the nine-mile paved road that loops through the monument; hike less than a mile down into the canyon for a closer look. Kachina Bridge, the next along the road, is nearly as high but twice as thick, and has Ancestral Puebloan pictographs at its base. The oldest, slimmest, and most fragile bridge – Owachomo, a mile and a half up Armstrong Canyon – spans 180ft but is only nine feet thick at its thinnest point. A strenuous eight-mile trail along the canyon bottom leads past all three bridges.

Admission to the monument is $6 per vehicle. The visitor center (daily: March–Oct 8am–5.30pm; Nov–Feb 9am–4.30pm; ☎435/692-1234, 🌐www.nps.gov/nabr), four miles off Hwy-95, holds displays explaining how the bridges were formed. Camping is allowed only in the small campground ($10) near the visitor center, which also has the only drinkable water in the monument.

Monticello

The small town of MONTICELLO stands 56 miles south of Moab on US-191, sixteen miles beyond the turnoff for the Needles section of Canyonlands (see p.994). Its strip of motels includes a smart Days Inn, 549 N Main St (☎435/587-2458 or 1-800/325-2525, 🌐www.daysinn.com; 📍) and the cheaper Go West Inn, 649 N Main St (☎435/587-2489; 📍). Good, large, standard meals can be had at the MD Ranch Cookhouse, 380 S Main St (☎435/587-3299). Information on the town, and on the parks and public lands in the vicinity, can be picked up from the visitor center, in the courthouse at 117 S Main St (April–Oct Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎435/587-3235 or 1-800/574-4386, 🌐www.southeastutah.org).

The San Juan River, Mexican Hat, and Bluff

From Natural Bridges, Hwy-261 runs south for some 25 miles before coming to what looks like a dead end at the edge of Cedar Mesa. From here, high above the eerie sandstone towers of the Valley of the Gods (where much of Thelma and Louise was filmed), the road turns to gravel before dropping over a thousand feet in little over two twisting, hairpin-turning miles down the “Moki Dugway.” Six miles from the foot of the switchbacks, the barely marked Hwy-316 shoots across what seems like a flat valley floor to yet another overlook, this time high above the San Juan River at the extraordinary and aptly named Goosenecks State Reserve (open 24hr; free). In a textbook example of what geologists call an entrenched meander, the river, a thousand feet below, snakes around in such convoluted twists and turns that it flows six miles in total for every one mile west.

Back on Hwy-261 and just south, sleepy MEXICAN HAT, briefly a frenzied gold-mining camp, takes its name from a riverside sandstone hoodoo, just north of town, that looks like a south-of-the-border sombrero. More of a cluster of buildings on the banks of the river than a town, it's good fun and makes a convenient base for visiting Monument Valley, twenty miles south (see p.979). The best place to stay is the San Juan Inn (☎435/683-2220 or 1-800/447-2022; 📍), right on the river, which has its own grocery store and trading post, as well as the amiable Olde Bridge Bar and Grill, which offers cold beers and Navajo tacos.

The rafts you may see emerging from the water at Mexican Hat went in at BLUFF, twenty miles upstream. The road between the towns, US-163, doesn't follow the river very closely but is still an enthralling drive, and when you get there the town itself has a number of Mormon pioneer houses along its backstreets. Places to eat in Bluff include the Twin Rocks Café (☎435/672-2341) and the Cottonwood Steakhouse (☎435/672-2282), while an excellent motel at the south end of town, the Desert Rose Inn, 701 W Hwy-191 (📍☎435/672-2303 or 1-888/475-7673, 🌐www.desertroseinn.com; 📍), holds thirty attractively decorated rooms.

Hovenweep National Monument

Hidden in the no-man's-land that straddles the Utah–Colorado border, the remote Ancestral Puebloan ruins at Hovenweep National Monument offer a haunting sense of timeless isolation. Located 25 miles east of US-191 along Hwy-262, which branches off halfway between Bluff and Blanding, and 35 miles west of Cortez, Colorado, Hovenweep preserves six distinct conglomerations of ruins sprouting from the rims of shallow desert canyons and dwarfed by the distant mountains, but easy access is restricted to Little Ruin Canyon, behind the smart new visitor center (daily: March–Oct 8am–6pm; Nov–Feb 8am–5pm; $6; ☎970/562-4282, 🌐www.nps.gov/hove). A mile-long loop trail offers good views of the largest ruins, including the grandly named Hovenweep Castle, constructed around 1200 AD.

No accommodation, gasoline, or food is available at or anywhere near Hovenweep, but a 31-site campground beside the ranger station remains open all year ($10; no reservations).

Lake Powell and Glen Canyon Dam

The mighty rivers and canyons of southern Utah come to an abrupt and ignoble end at the Arizona border, where the Glen Canyon Dam stops them dead in the stagnant waters of Lake Powell. Ironically, the lake is named for John Wesley Powell, the first person to run the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon. The roaring torrents with which he battled, along with magnificent Glen Canyon itself, are now lost beneath these placid blue waters, and the blocked-up Colorado, Green, Dirty Devil, San Juan, and Escalante rivers are now a playground for houseboaters and water-skiers. The construction of the dam in the early 1960s outraged environmentalists and archeologists, and the dam has created one of the most peculiar – and utterly unnatural – landscapes imaginable, the deep and tranquil lake a surreal contrast with the surrounding dry slickrock and sandstone buttes.

Lake Powell has 1960 miles of shoreline, which is more than the entire Pacific coast of the US, and 96 water-filled side canyons. The water level fluctuates considerably, so for much of the time the rocks to all sides are bleached for many feet above the current waterline, with a dirty-bath tidemark sullyng the golden sandstone. Most of the many summer visitors bring their own boats, or rent a vessel from one of the four marinas that fringe the lake.

If you're passing through, by far the most accessible stop is Wahweap Marina, just off US-89 on the way between Zion and the Grand Canyon, where the plush Lake Powell Resort (☎928/645-2433 or 1-800/528-6154, 🌐www.visitlakepowell.com; Ⓜ) has comfortable lakeside rooms and some of the best food within a day's drive. The same company arranges houseboat rental from Wahweap or other Lake Powell marinas; boats sleep four or more people and cost from $1360 for three days in summer. There's camping on the lakeshore at each of the marinas. Otherwise, the nearest accommodation is across the Arizona border in PAGE, home of the usual assortment of chain motels and diners, including the good-value Best Western at Lake Powell, 208 N Lake Powell Blvd (☎928/645-5988 or 1-888/794-2888, 🌐www.bestwestern.com; Ⓜ).

GLEN CANYON DAM itself, in between Page and Wahweap, can be seen from the Carl Hayden Visitor Center (daily: Oct–April 8am–5pm; May–Sept

Rainbow Bridge National Monument

The spectacular and extremely remote Rainbow Bridge National Monument, the world's largest natural bridge, can be visited on eight-hour guided boat tours from Wahweap marina (April–Oct daily 8am & 10am, Nov–March Sat 9am; adults $115, under 13s $80; ☎928/645-2433 or 1-800/528-6154, 🌐www.visitlakepowell.com). It lies roughly fifty miles by water from the marina, including a final mile or two down the narrow, winding side channel of Forbidding Canyon. From the unappealing jetty where the boats moor, bobbing in a morass of pond scum, a ten-minute walk leads to the astonishing giant sandstone gateway, springing up nearly 300ft from just above the waterline, with Navajo Mountain visible through its magnificent smooth curve. Its upper section is composed of Navajo sandstone, while the base belongs to the harder Kayenta formation, which is not as easily cut by flowing water. Despite the increase in tourism since the lake's creation, the monument remains an inspiring sight, and a place of special importance to the Navajo.

7am–7pm; ☎ 928/608-6404, 🌐 www.nps.gov/glca) on the west bank, but tours of the dam have been suspended since September 11, 2001.

The cheapest way to get out on the waters of Lake Powell is to take the ferry ($16 per car) between Halls Crossing and Bullfrog marinas, two-thirds of the way up the lake; from here the Burr Trail heads west toward Capitol Reef (see p.993), while Hwy-276 runs northeast to Natural Bridges (see p.1000).

Northern Utah

Compared to the scenic splendor of the southern half of the state, northern Utah holds little to interest the tourist, although Salt Lake City, the capital, is by far the state's largest and most cosmopolitan urban center. The dramatic Wasatch Mountains that line Salt Lake's eastern horizon do however come into their own in winter, as they constitute one of the nation's premier ski destinations. The northeast corner has coal mines, old railroad towns and, along the Wyoming border, the Uinta Mountains, uncrossed by road and showing hardly a sign of civilization. From the northwest, the harshly alkaline Great Basin plain stretches uneventfully west across Nevada to California.

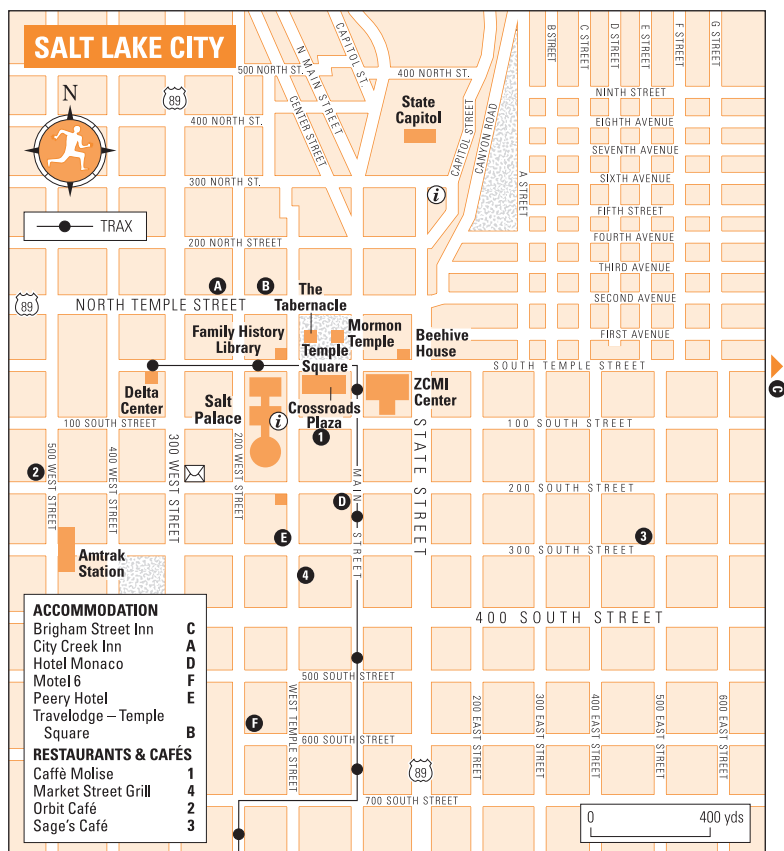

Salt Lake City

Disarmingly pleasant and easygoing, SALT LAKE CITY is well worth a stop-over of a couple of days. It's not a particularly thrilling destination in itself, but its setting is superb, towered over by the Wasatch Front, which marks the dividing line between the comparatively lush eastern and the bone-dry western halves of northern Utah. The area offers great hiking and cycling in summer and fall and, in winter, some of the world's best skiing, as reflected in the city's hosting of the 2002 Winter Olympics. People elsewhere in the US still tend to imagine Salt Lake City as decidedly short on fun, but so long as you're willing to switch gears and slow down, its unhurried pace, and the positive energy and lack of pretence of its people, can make for a surprisingly enjoyable experience.

Salt Lake City International Airport (☎ 801/575-2400) is a mere four miles west of downtown. A taxi into town costs around $15; cheaper shuttle vans to downtown destinations are run by Xpress Shuttles (☎ 801/596-1600 or 1-800/397-0773, 🌐 www.xpressshuttle.com), while Canyon Transportation (☎ 801/255-1841, 🌐 www.canyontransport.com) serves the ski areas. Long-distance Greyhound-Trailways buses arrive downtown, at 160 W South Temple Blvd (☎ 801/355-9579), as do Amtrak trains, at 320 S Rio Grande Ave. Local buses, and also TRAX trams, are operated by the Utah Transit Authority (☎ 801/743-3882, 🌐 www.rideuta.com); journeys within the immediate downtown area are free.

The main visitor center for the city itself is downtown at 90 S West Temple Blvd in the Salt Palace Convention Center (summer Mon–Fri 8am–6pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; winter Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; ☎ 801/521-2822 or 1-800/541-4955, 🌐 www.visitsaltlake.com). For details on the rest of Utah, stop by the Utah Travel Council, which occupies the imposing Council Hall across from the capitol at 300 N State St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 801/538-1030, 🌐 www.utah.com).

Accommodation

Salt Lake City is well equipped with accommodation, with downtown options that range from budget motels and B&B inns to rather more luxurious hotels, and the usual mid-range places near the airport and along the interstates. Weekend rates can be real bargains.

Brigham Street Inn 1135 E South Temple Blvd
☎ 801/364-4461 or 1-800/417-4461. Luxurious, peaceful – and inconspicuous – B&B a few blocks east of downtown toward the mountains. 5

City Creek Inn 230 W North Temple Blvd
☎ 801/533-9100 or 1-866/533-4898, www.citycreekinn.com. Family-owned budget motor court, old-fashioned but nicely spruced up, offering great-value rooms very close to downtown. 3

Hotel Monaco 15 W 200 South ☎ 801/595-0000 or 1-800/805-1801, www.monaco-saltlakecity.com. Extremely hip, very upscale downtown hotel, housed in a former bank. 9

International Ute Hostel 21 E Kelsey Ave
☎ 801/595-1645, www.infobytes.com/utehostel. Much the better of Salt Lake City's two hostels, this small private establishment, a few miles south of downtown, offers $17 dorm beds and a couple of private rooms ($37), plus bike rental, a hot tub, and free airport pickup. 1–2

Motel 6 176 W 600 South St ☎ 801/531-1252. Reliable budget motel in downtown, handy for Amtrak. 2

Peery Hotel 110 W 300 South St ☎ 801/521-4300 or 1-800/331-0073, www.peeryhotel.com. Renovated 1910 downtown landmark, offering very tasteful, comfortable rooms. ④

Travelodge – Temple Square 144 W North Temple Blvd ☎ 801/533-8200. The most central and least expensive of three local Travelodges makes a convenient stopover, but it's no place for a long stay. ⑤

Temple Square

The geographical – and spiritual – heart of Salt Lake City is Temple Square, the world headquarters of the Mormon Church (or the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints – LDS). Its focus, the monumental Temple itself, was completed in 1893 after forty years of intensive labor. The multi-spired granite edifice rises to 210ft above the city – while not the tallest building on the mainly flat skyline, it's just about the only interesting one, thanks to its crisply angular silhouette. Only confirmed Mormons may enter the Temple, and even they do so only for the most sacred LDS rituals – marriage, baptisms, and “sealing,” the joining of a family unit for eternity.

Wander through the gates of Temple Square, however, and you'll swiftly be shepherded to join a free 45-minute tour of the various sites within. As well as past monuments to Mormon pioneers, you'll be ushered into the odd oblong shell of the Mormon Tabernacle. No images of any kind adorn its interior, which is home to the world-renowned Mormon Tabernacle Choir; a helper at the lectern laconically displays its remarkable acoustic properties by tearing up a newspaper and dropping a nail. There's free admission to the choir's 9.30am Sunday broadcast, and its rehearsals on Thursday evenings at 8pm.

The primary aim of the tours is to awaken your interest in the Mormon faith; differences from Christianity are played down in favor of a soft-focus video of Old Testament scenes. In the northern of the square's two visitor centers, touch-screen computers provide woolly answers to questions like “What is the purpose of life?” and “Who was Joseph Smith?” In its southern counterpart, a surprisingly good free movie tells the story of the arrival of Salt Lake City's first Mormon settlers.

Downtown Salt Lake City

A block east of Temple Square along South Temple Boulevard, the Beehive House (summer Mon–Sat 9.30am–6.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm; winter Mon–Sat 9.30am–4.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm; free) is a plain white New England-style house, with wraparound verandas and green shutters. Erected in 1854 by church leader Brigham Young, it's now a small museum of Young's life, restored to the style of the period. Free twenty-minute tours, which you have to join to see much of the house, are given at least every half-hour.

The Family History Library, across West Temple Boulevard from Temple Square (Mon 8am–5pm, Tues–Sat 8am–9pm; free; ☎ 801/240-2584 or 1-866/406-1830, @www.familysearch.org), is intended to enable Mormons to trace their ancestors and then baptize them into the faith by proxy, but it's open to everyone. The world's most exhaustive genealogical library is surprisingly user-friendly, giving immediate access, through banks of computers, to birth and death records from over sixty countries, some dating back as much as five hundred years. All you need is a person's place of birth, a few approximate dates, and you're on your way; volunteers provide help if you need it, but leave you alone until you ask. Next door to the library, the Museum of Church History and Art (Mon–Fri 9am–9pm, Sat & Sun 10am–7pm; free) charts the rise of the Mormon faith in art and artifact.

The area southwest of Temple Square centers on the massive Salt Palace convention center and sports arena (home of the Utah Jazz basketball team). The surrounding district of brick warehouses around the Union Pacific railroad tracks is filled with designer shops and art galleries, signs that even Mormons can be yuppies.

Capitol Hill

Quite why the Mormons chose not to put their Temple on the gentle hill that stands above today's Temple Square is anyone's guess. As a result, when Utah was granted statehood in 1896, it was free to become the site of the imposing, domed Utah State Capitol (summer Mon–Sat 8am–8pm; rest of year Mon–Sat 8am–6pm; free). Along with the plaques and monuments you might expect, the corridors of power are packed full of earnest and rather diverting exhibits of great Utah moments.

Now called Capitol Hill, the neighborhood around the capitol holds some of Salt Lake City's grandest c.1900 homes, with dozens of ornate Victorian houses lining Main Street and Quince Street to the northwest; walking tour maps of the district are available from the Utah Heritage Foundation, 355 Quince St.

Eating

Though Salt Lake City has a perfectly good selection of restaurants, it lacks an atmospheric – let alone hip – dining district. If you like to compare menus, the only downtown area with much potential is the block or two to either side of West Temple Street, south and east of the Salt Palace.

Bambara Hotel Monaco 202 S Main St ☎801/363-5454. Chic, post-Deco, and pricey downtown restaurant, with a fabulous menu ranging from buffalo carpaccio to crab cakes and lamb sirloin on Puy lentils; the $26 set menu offers an affordable sampler.

Caffè Molise 55 W 100 South ☎801/364-8833. Authentic, high-quality, great-value Italian food downtown, with tables in a nice little courtyard in summer, and jazz on Fridays.

Lamb's Restaurant 169 S Main St ☎801/364-7166. Great breakfasts, best eaten at the long shiny counter, and excellent-value set meals throughout the day. Closed Sun.

Market Street Grill 48 W Market St ☎801/322-4668. As close as Salt Lake City comes to a New York City bar and grill, with fresh seafood, especially oysters, plus steaks in all shapes and sizes. $12 lunch specials, full dinners $18–35.

Orbit Café 540 W 200 South ☎801/322-2808.

Large, postmodern diner, which serves tasty sandwiches and ethnic specials for lunch, and then fancier late-night meals, with frequent live music. Lunch and dinner weekdays, breakfast and lunch only weekends.

Ruth's Diner 2100 Emigration Canyon Rd ☎801/582-5807. Good-value indoor and patio dining, often accompanied by live music, set in and around old railroad carriages in a narrow canyon just three miles east of town. There's a wide selection of fresh dishes, great salads, and Utah's best breakfasts.

Sage's Café 473 E 300 South ☎801/322-3790. Salt Lake's finest vegetarian restaurant, with a menu that ranges from pizza to raw salads, and great Sunday brunches.

Drinking and nightlife

Salt Lake City doesn't roll up the sidewalks when the sun goes down. Many drinking venues are technically private clubs, in which a nominal membership fee entitles the cardholder and up to five guests to two weeks' use of the facilities, but there are also a handful of brewpubs for which membership is not required. Good options for an evening out include the Dead Goat Saloon, 165 S West Temple Blvd (☎801/328-4628), a raucous, semi-subterranean saloon, with live loud music most nights. The casual, friendly Squatters Pub, 147 West Broadway (☎801/363-2739), offers a range of beers available until 1am every day, plus a simple menu. The best place to hear live music, surprisingly enough, has to be The Depot, in the Union Pacific Station at 400 W South Temple Blvd (☎801/456-2888), though Zanzibar, 677 S 200 West (☎801/746-0590), also programs good jazz and blues.

To find out about the broad range of fringe art, music, and clubland happenings, pick up free papers such as City Weekly (📧 www.slweekly.com) or tune to radio station KRCL 91FM.

Park City

Despite Brigham Young's strictures against prospecting for precious metals – he feared a Gentile “Gold Rush” – the first mining camp at PARK CITY, just thirty miles east of downtown Salt Lake City along I-80 through the mountains, was established in the late 1860s. In 1872 George Hearst laid the foundations of the Hearst media empire by paying $27,000 for a claim that became the Ontario Silver Mine, worth $50 million. These days, the Park City Mountain Resort (📞 435/649-8111, 📧 www.parkcitymountain.com), and the nearby The Canyons (📞 435/649-5400, 📧 www.thecanyons.com) and (skiers-only) Deer Valley (📞 435/649-1000 or 1-800/424-3337, 📧 www.deervalley.com) resorts constitute Utah's largest ski area, with the season usually running from mid-November to mid-April. Daily lift passes for each resort cost around $75; equipment rental outlets include Park City Sport (📞 1-800/523-3922) and Gart Brothers (📞 1-800/284-4754). In addition, Park City hosts the prestigious Sundance Film Festival, held during the second half of January each year (📞 801/328-3456, 📧 www.sundance.org).

There's an ever-growing sprawl of new condos, factory outlets, and other developments, while an overhaul for the 2002 Winter Olympics restored Main Street with only token gestures mimicking the mountain mining community it used to be. Its shops and restaurants strive instead to emulate the chic resorts of Colorado.

Practicalities

Park City's visitor center, 528 Main St (May & Oct daily 11am–5pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 10am–7pm, Sat & Sun noon–6pm; 📞 435/649-6100 or 1-800/453-1360, 📧 www.parkcityinfo.com), doubles as an enjoyable museum of town history, and stands above the town's original jailhouse. Lewis Bros Stages (📞 435/901-2724 or 1-877/491-8911, 📧 www.lewisstages.com) runs scheduled shuttles from downtown Salt Lake City ($30) and the airport (up to $60).

Accommodation rates double in the ski season; the visitor center can provide full listings of resorts and other lodgings. The down-to-earth Chateau Apres, 1299 Norfolk Ave (📞 435/649-9372 or 1-800/357-3556, 📧 www.chateaupres.com; ①/④), is a cozy lodge motel with some $30 dorm beds. Wahso, 577 Main St (📞 435/615-0300), is an extremely fancy pan-Asian restaurant with a sky-high reputation, while Windy Ridge, 1250 Iron Horse Drive (📞 435/647-2906), serves good, cheap deli snacks and sandwiches. The Wasatch Brew Pub, 250 Main St (📞 435/649-0900), is open until midnight daily and serves good food as well as microbrewed beer.

Nevada

NEVADA is without doubt the most desolate state in the US, consisting largely of endless tracts of bleak, empty desert. Its flat sagebrush plains are cut intermittently by angular mountain ranges and lack rainfall or fertile soil. Apart from the huge acreages given over to mining and grazing, much of Nevada is under the control of the military, which uses it to test aircraft and weapons systems. While dozens of intriguing small communities are scattered around the state, many more are decrepit roadside ghost towns, often little more than a gas-station-cum-general-store, flanked by a saloon and perhaps a brothel (Nevada is the only US state not to have outlawed prostitution, though it is illegal in Las Vegas.)

Though millions of people pass through on their way to and from California, there's only one real reason why anyone ever visits Nevada, and that is to gamble: as soon as you cross the state border, you're attacked by a 24-hour onslaught of neon signs and gimmicky architecture, each advertising the best odds and biggest jackpots, nowhere more than in the surreal oasis of Las Vegas. Even the smaller and more down-to-earth settlements of Reno and state capital Carson City revolve around the casino trade. At least the casinos' energetic pursuit of gamblers keeps rooms and especially food inexpensive, so the towns make good places to break a long journey – and, with Nevada's relaxed marriage and divorce laws, make or break a relationship.

Getting around Nevada

Traveling the state's vast empty spaces is nearly impossible without a car. Las Vegas is no longer served by Amtrak, but Reno still welcomes daily trains between San Francisco and Salt Lake City. Both Las Vegas and Reno have airports, and bus service exists between the two cities – though they're well over 400 miles apart.

Las Vegas

Shimmering from the desert haze of Nevada like a latter-day El Dorado, LAS VEGAS is the most dynamic, spectacular city on earth. At the start of the twentieth century, it didn't even exist; now it's home to over one million people, and boasts fourteen of the world's twenty largest hotels, whose flamboyant, no-expense-spared casinos lure in thirty-seven million tourists each year.

Las Vegas has been stockpiling superlatives since the 1950s, but never rests on its laurels for a moment. First-time visitors tend to expect the city to be a repository of kitsch, but the casino owners are far too canny to be sentimental about the old days. Yes, there are a few Elvis impersonators around, but what characterizes the city far more is its endless quest for novelty. Long before they lose their sparkle, yesterday's showpieces are blasted into rubble, to make way for ever more extravagant replacements. A few years ago, when the fashion was for fantasy, Arthurian castles and Egyptian pyramids mushroomed along the legendary Strip; now Vegas demands nothing less than entire cities, and boasts pocket versions of New York, Paris, Monte Carlo, and Venice.

While the city has certainly cleaned up its act since the early days of Mob domination, there's little truth in the notion that it's become a family destination. Neither is Vegas as consistently cheap as it used to be. It's still possible to find good, inexpensive rooms, and the all-you-care-to-eat buffets offer unbeatable value, but the casino owners have finally discovered that high-rollers happy to lose hundreds of dollars per night don't mind paying premium prices to eat at top-quality restaurants, while the latest developments are charging room rates of more like $300 than $30 per night.

Although Las Vegas is an unmissable destination, it's one that palls for most visitors after a couple of (hectic) days. If you've come solely to gamble, there's not much to say beyond the fact that all the casinos are free, and open 24 hours per day, with acres of floor space packed with ways to lose money: million-dollar slots, video poker, blackjack, craps, roulette wheels, and much, much more.

A history of Las Vegas

The name Las Vegas – Spanish for “the meadows” – was originally applied to a group of natural springs that from 1829 onward served as a way-station for travelers on the Old Spanish Trail. In 1900, the valley had a population of just thirty people. Things changed in 1905, with the completion of the now-defunct rail link between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles.

Though Nevada was the first state to outlaw gambling, in 1909, it was made legal once more in 1931, and the workers who built the nearby Hoover Dam flocked to Vegas to bet away their pay packets. Providing abundant cheap electricity and water, the dam amounted to a massive federal subsidy for the infant city. Hotel-casinos such as the daring 65-room El Rancho began to appear in the early 1940s, and mobster Bugsy Siegel raised $7 million to open the Flamingo on the Strip in 1946.

By the 1950s, Las Vegas was booming. The military had arrived – mushroom clouds from A-bomb tests in the deserts were visible from the city, and visitors would drive out with picnics to get a better view – and so too had big guns like Frank Sinatra, who debuted at the Desert Inn in 1951, and Liberace, who received $50,000 to open the Riviera in 1955. As the stars gravitated toward the Vegas honeypot, nightclubs across America went out of business, and the city became the nation's undisputed live-entertainment capital.

The beginning of the end for Mob rule in Vegas came in 1966, after reclusive airline tycoon Howard Hughes sold TWA for $500 million and moved into the Desert Inn. When the owners tired of his non-gambling ways, he simply bought the hotel, and his clean-cut image encouraged other entrepreneurs to follow suit. Elvis arrived a little later; the young rock 'n' roller had bombed at the New Frontier in 1956, but started a triumphant five-year stint as a karate-kicking lounge lizard at the International (now the Las Vegas Hilton) in 1969.

Endless federal swoops and stings drove the Mob out of sight by the 1980s, in time for Vegas to reinvent itself on a surge of junk-bond megadollars. The success of Steve Wynn's Mirage in enticing a new generation of visitors, from 1989 onward, spawned a host of imitators. A spate of casino building saw Excalibur and the MGM Grand followed first by Luxor and New York–New York and then, as the millennium approached, by the opulent quartet of Bellagio, Mandalay Bay, the Venetian, and Paris. The 21st century, however, started with shockwaves. Unsuccessful investments elsewhere forced Steve Wynn to sell Bellagio and the Mirage to the MGM group; the new Aladdin swiftly went bankrupt; and the tragedy of September 11, 2001, hit the Las Vegas economy hard.

And yet, once again, Las Vegas has bounced back, with the Venetian now going from strength to strength as the flagship for all that the city does best, and Wynn himself opening his biggest casino yet, Wynn Las Vegas, on the site of the old Desert Inn.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Las Vegas's busy McCarran International Airport is a mile east of the southern end of the Strip, and four miles from downtown (☎ 702/261-5211). Some hotels run free shuttle buses for guests, while Bell Trans (☎ 702/739-7990, @ www.bell-trans.com) runs minibuses to the Strip ($5) and downtown ($6). From the airport, a taxi to the Strip costs from $15 for the southern end up to $25 for casinos further north, though fares can vary enormously depending on the time taken.

Amtrak trains no longer serve Las Vegas, but Greyhound's long-distance buses use a terminal at 200 S Main St downtown.

If you plan to see more of Vegas than the Strip and even there, it's too hot in summer to walk more than a couple of the long blocks in the daytime – a car is invaluable. Public transport does exist, however. The Las Vegas Monorail runs along the eastern side of the Strip from the MGM Grand to the Sahara (daily 6am–2am; single trip $3, 1-day pass $10, 10-ride pass $20; ☎ 702/699-8299, 🌐 www.lvmonorail.com), but doesn't go as far as either the airport or downtown. Separate, free monorail systems also link Mandalay Bay with Excalibur via Luxor, and the Mirage with TI. In addition, the oak-veneered streetcars of the Las Vegas Strip Trolley (☎ 702/382-1404) ply the Strip between Mandalay Bay and the Stratosphere, for a flat fare of $1.65. CAT buses (☎ 702/228-7433, 🌐 www.catride.com) serve the whole city; #301 and #302 connect the Strip to downtown ($2).

Although there is a visitor center at the vast Convention Center, 3150 Paradise Rd (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 702/892-0711 or 877/VISIT-LV, 🌐 www.vegasfreedom.com), at half a mile east of the Strip it's too far from the Strip to reach on foot. Better sources of information include the website 🌐 www.lasvegas24hours.com, and the daily Las Vegas Review-Journal, which always incorporates a four-page guide to the city.

Getting married in Las Vegas

Second only to making your fortune as a reason to visit Las Vegas is the prospect of getting married. Over a hundred thousand weddings are performed here each year, many so informal that bride and groom just wind down the window of their car during the ceremony, and a Vegas wedding has become a byword for tongue-in-cheek chic.

You don't have to be a local resident or take a blood test to get wed here. Assuming you're both at least eighteen years old and carrying picture ID, simply turn up at the Clark County Marriage License Bureau, downtown at 200 S Third St (daily 8am–midnight; ☎ 702/455-4415, 🌐 www.accessclarkcounty.com/clerk/Marriage_Information.htm), and buy a marriage license for $55 cash. You can then walk over to the Clark County Court House at 309 S Third St (daily 8am–10pm), and be married by the Commissioner for Civil Marriages.

Wedding chapels claim to charge as little as $55 for basic ceremonies, but at that sort of rate even the minister is an "extra" costing an additional $45. Reckon on paying at least $150 for the bare minimum, which is liable to be as romantic a process as checking in at a hotel, and to take about as long. The full deluxe service ranges up to whatever you can afford. Novelty options include pledging your eternal loyalty on the deck of the USS Enterprise at the Hilton (☎ 702/697-8750); floating on a gondola in the Venetian's Grand Canal (☎ 702/414-4253); or beside your helicopter at the bottom of the Grand Canyon (Papillon; ☎ 702/736-7243).

Accommodation

Although Las Vegas has well over 135,000 motel and hotel rooms, it's best to book accommodation ahead if you're on a tight budget, or arriving on Friday or Saturday; upwards of two hundred thousand people descend upon the city every weekend. Las Vegas hotels no longer offer incredibly cheap deals at the drop of a hat. It is true that serious gamblers can get their accommodation free, but to count as "serious" you'd have to commit yourself to gambling several thousand dollars.

Even if you stay in the same room for several days, you'll be charged a different rate for each day, depending on the day of the week, and what's going on in town. The only sure-fire way to get a cut-price room is to visit during the week rather than on the weekend. Rates rise enormously on Friday or Saturday, by perhaps $30 to $50 extra in a lower-end property, $100 in the big-name casinos. On top of that, many hotels won't accept Saturday arrivals. The Las Vegas Convention & Visitors Authority offers an availability and reservations service at ☎ 1-877/847-4858.

The City

Though the Las Vegas sprawl measures fifteen miles wide by fifteen miles long, most tourists stick to the six-mile stretch of Las Vegas Boulevard that includes both the downtown area, slightly southeast of the intersection of I-15 and US-95, and the Strip, home to the major casinos. In between lie two seedy miles of gas stations, fast-food drive-ins, and wedding chapels, while the rest of town is largely residential.

The Strip

For its razor-edge finesse in harnessing sheer, magnificent excess to the deadly serious business of making money, there's no place like the Las Vegas Strip. It's hard to imagine that Las Vegas was once an ordinary city, and Las Vegas Boulevard a dusty thoroughfare scattered with the usual edge-of-town motels. After six decades of capitalism run riot, with every new casino-hotel setting out to surpass anything its neighbors ever dreamed of, the Strip seems to be locked into a hyper-active craving for thrills and glamour, forever discarding its latest toy in its frenzied pursuit of the next jackpot.

Each casino is a self-contained fantasyland of high camp and genuine excitement. Huge moving walkways sweep you in from the sidewalk, almost against your will; once inside, it can be almost impossible to find your way out. The action keeps going day and night, and in this sealed and windowless environment you rapidly lose track of time. Even if you do manage to get back onto the streets during the day, the scorching heat is liable to drive you straight back in; night is the best time to venture out, when the neon's blazing at its brightest.

Mandalay Bay

The Strip's procession kicks off at its southern end with the glowing gilded tower of Mandalay Bay, which boasts a vaguely Burmese theme. Financed through the profits from its neighbors, Luxor and Excalibur, Mandalay Bay is more upmarket than either, and its excellent restaurants, as well as the House of Blues music venue, keep it lively at night. During the day, all it has to offer the casual sightseer is the Shark Reef aquarium, right at the back of the property (daily 10am–11pm; $16), a mock-up of a steamy, half-submerged temple complex, inhabited by codicils, jellyfish, and, of course, sharks. It's expensive considering how short a time it takes to see it, plus all the so-called "coral" in the tanks is actually a multicolored mix 'n' match plastic kit.

Luxor

A block north of Mandalay Bay stands the 36-story pyramid of Luxor. From the palm-fringed avenue of sphinxes guarding the entrance, to the reconstruction of

△ The Bellagio, on the Strip

Tutankhamun's tomb inside, the whole building plays endless variations upon the theme of ancient Egypt, and ranks as a real must-see. In Las Vegas's closest approximation to Disneyland, three separate simulator rides and 3D movies combine to relate a confusing saga of derring-do that's overpriced at $25. Meanwhile, the most powerful artificial light-beam ever created shines up from the pyramid's apex.

Excalibur and the MGM Grand

Luxor's architect, Veldon Simpson, had previously designed the less sophisticated Excalibur, immediately north. A mock-up of a medieval castle, complete with drawbridge, crenellated towers, and a basement stuffed with fairground-style side-shows for the kids, it's usually packed out with low-budget tour groups. Its brief reign as the world's largest hotel, from 1990 to 1993, ended when the five-thousand-room MGM Grand – another Simpson creation – opened across the street. There, the main attraction, the Lion Habitat, is a walk-through wooded zoo near the front entrance, where real lions lounge around a ruined temple beneath a naturally lit dome. Admission is free (daily 11am–11pm), and for $20 you can have your photo taken with a cute little lion cub (daily except Tues 11am–5pm).

New York–New York

Excalibur and the MGM Grand are not the only giants facing off across the intersection of Las Vegas Boulevard and Tropicana Avenue, said to be the busiest traffic junction in the US. The northwest corner, diagonally opposite the veteran Tropicana, is occupied by an exuberantly meticulous recreation of the Big Apple, New York–New York. This miniature Manhattan boasts a skyline featuring twelve separate skyscrapers and is fronted, naturally, by the Statue of Liberty. Unusually, the interior is every bit as carefully realized, with a lovely rendition of Central Park at dusk (not perhaps somewhere you'd choose to be in real life). In one respect, it even surpasses New York itself: for $12.50 you can swoop around the whole thing at 65mph on the hair-raising Manhattan Express roller coaster.

Aladdin

North of the MGM Grand, the $1.4-billion Aladdin opened in 2000 as Las Vegas's first megacasingo of the new millennium, but it really represented the last gasp of the Strip's 1990s construction boom. The resort was tipped into bankruptcy by the 2001 terrorist attacks of September. The Middle Eastern theme didn't exactly help, and the Aladdin is expected to be revamped and renamed Planet Hollywood in the very near future. Its gigantic Desert Passage shopping mall, and 7000-seat auditorium, will survive the transformation intact.

Paris

Paris was the 1999 handiwork of the same designers as New York–New York. With a half-size Eiffel Tower straddling the Arc de Triomphe and the Opera, it all feels a little compressed, but once again the attention to detail is a joy. There's also a fine assortment of top-notch French restaurants. Elevators soar through the roof of the casino and up to the summit of the Eiffel Tower, for stunning views of the city, at their best after dark (daily 10am–midnight; $9).

Bellagio

The Eiffel Tower was cheekily positioned to enjoy a perfect prospect of Bellagio, opposite. In 1998, Steve Wynn unveiled the Bellagio as his attempt to build the best hotel in world history. Bellagio is undeniably a breathtaking achievement, striving to be somehow more authentic than the original town on Lake Como. The trouble is that Bellagio is not in Italy; it's in Las Vegas, stuffed full of slot machines (inlaid with jewel-like precision into marble counters, perhaps, but still slot machines). The main hotel block, a stately curve of blue and cream pastels, stands aloof from the Strip behind an eight-acre artificial lake in which hundreds of submerged fountains erupt every half-hour in Busby-Berkeley water-ballets, choreographed with booming music and colored lights.

Otherwise, Bellagio's proudest boasts are the Via Bellagio, a covered mall of impossibly glamorous designer boutiques, and its opulent Conservatory, where a network of flowerbeds beneath a Belle Epoque canopy of copper-framed glass is replanted every few weeks with ornate seasonal displays.

Caesars Palace

Across Flamingo Road from Bellagio – this is the intersection where rapper Tupac Shakur was gunned down in 1996 – the long-established Caesars Palace still encapsulates Las Vegas at its best. Here, the walkway delivers you past grand marble staircases that lead nowhere, and full-size replicas of Michelangelo's David, into a vast labyrinth of slots and green baize, peopled by strutting half-naked Roman centurions and Cleopatra-cropped waitresses. Above the stores and restaurants of the extraordinary Forum, the blue-domed ceiling dims and glows as it endlessly cycles from dawn to dusk and back again, while the animatronic statues that top its ornate fountains come to life at regular intervals.

The Mirage and TI

Nighttime crowds jostle for space on the sidewalk outside the glittering Mirage, beyond Caesars, to watch the somewhat half-hearted volcano that erupts every fifteen minutes, spewing water and fire into the lagoon below. Although veteran magicians Siegfried and Roy were finally driven into retirement by Roy's near-fatal accident in 2003, their trademark white tigers can still be seen in the Mirage's spacious Secret Garden & Dolphin Habitat (daily 10am–7pm; $15, under 13s $10).

Next door, a pirate galleon and a British frigate, crewed by actors, continue to do noisy battle outside TI, the former Treasure Island, though ludicrously enough the sailors these days are no longer gnarled buccaneers but the scantily-clad Sirens of TI (every 90min after dark; free). Treasure Island used to be pirate-themed throughout, but when MGM took over the Mirage empire in 2000, they hastily abandoned all thoughts of appealing to children. All Treasure Island's lovingly crafted fripperies have therefore been stripped away, from its huge video arcade and bizarre $400,000 bone chandeliers, to the skull motifs that adorned everything from its main sign to the doorhandles.

The Venetian

Across the Strip from TI, the facade of the Venetian includes loving facsimiles of six major Venice buildings, as well as the Rialto Bridge and the Bridge of Sighs. The main emphasis in the casino itself is on the Grand Canal Shoppes, reached via a stairwell topped by vivid frescoes copied from yet more Venice originals. The ludicrous recreation of the Grand Canal at the top, complete with gondolas and singing gondoliers ($12.50 a ride), is quintessential Las Vegas, and as such utterly irresistible – it's upstairs, for God's sake.

In a thematic non sequitur, the Venetian hired Dutch architect Rem Koolhaas to design the on-site Guggenheim Hermitage (daily 9.30am–8.30pm; $20, under 13s $14.50) in ultramodern style. The museum aims to provide much-needed funds for St Petersburg's legendary State Hermitage Museum in return for displaying its finest treasures on a six-monthly changing rotation. Exhibitions so far have concentrated on Impressionism and Cubism, with Monet and Picasso well represented.

The Venetian also holds an outpost of Madame Tussaud's renowned waxwork museum (daily 10am–10pm, some seasonal variation; $23, under 13s $13), which styles itself “Interactive Wax” because visitors can sing karaoke for Simon Cowell or sink a putt with Tiger Woods. The whole experience is ridiculously expensive, its token animatronic showpieces not a patch on the free shows at Caesars.

Elvis-A-Rama

At the corner of TI, take Spring Mountain one block west of the Strip to reach the Fashion Show Mall at 3401 Industrial Road. Behind the mall, you can admire (if not step on) the King's very own blue suede shoes at Elvis-A-Rama (daily 10am–6pm; $10). As well as boasting a fine array of Elvis memorabilia, the museum puts on hourly impersonator shows.

Wynn Las Vegas

Next door to the Venetian stands the project into which Steve Wynn sank all the fortune he accrued by building and selling the Mirage and Bellagio. Wynn Las Vegas, which opened in 2005 on the site of the vanished Desert Inn, has lived up to its creator's promise that it would be designed to be seen from the inside out. From the Strip, it's largely obscured by an artificial tree-covered mountain; once you find your way inside, you discover that the mountain makes a backdrop for the bizarre, enormous Lake of Dreams, an "environmental theater" in which ethereal sculpted figures emerge from a large expanse of water, in front of a massive waterfall that continually changes color, as indeed do the trees and the entire mountain.

Circus Circus

The family-oriented Circus Circus, nearly a mile north of Wynn Las Vegas, uses live circus acts to pull in the punters – a trapeze artist here, a fire-eater there – and also has an indoor theme park, the Adventuredome (Mon–Thurs 10am–6pm, Fri & Sat 10am–midnight, Sun 10am–8pm), where you pay separately for each roller coaster or river-ride, or can buy an all-day pass at $22 for anyone over 4ft, $14 for those under.

The Star Trek Experience

Half a mile east of Circus Circus at 3000 Paradise Rd, the Las Vegas Hilton is home to the Star Trek Experience (daily 11am–11pm; $35, under-13s $32), which is roughly equivalent to a high-echelon ride in an LA or Orlando theme park; it's pretty good, but absurdly expensive. Visits start from the Space Quest Casino, a sort of Enterprise with slots. The ramp beyond the ticket booths doubles as a queuing area – you can wait as long as two hours on summer weekends – and a "museum," which recounts an episode-by-episode chronology of every Star Trek series. It all culminates in two separate twenty-minute shows: Klingon Encounter and Borg Invasion 4-D, both of which involve you being caught up in alien plots and sent on stomach-churning motion-simulator rides through deep space.

The Stratosphere

Sahara Avenue traditionally marked the northern limit of the Strip, but the 1996 opening of the Stratosphere, a few blocks north, tried to change that. At 1149ft, the Stratosphere is the tallest building west of the Mississippi, and the outdoor deck and indoor viewing chamber in the sphere near the summit offer amazing panoramas across the city ($9). Three utterly demented thrill rides can take you even closer to heaven; the world's highest roller coaster ($4) swirls around the outside of the sphere, X-Scream ($8) dangles passengers over the edge in a precarious gondola, and the ludicrous Big Shot ($8) shunts you to the very top of an additional 160ft spire, from which you free-fall back down again.

Downtown and the Liberace Museum

As the Strip has evolved from strength to strength, downtown Las Vegas, the city's original core, has by comparison been neglected. Actually it has never really been a "downtown" in the conventional sense, having never developed a significant infrastructure of stores and other businesses apart from its few compact blocks of lower-key casinos. Long known as "Glitter Gulch," it has however repeatedly attempted to revive itself. The principal sign of that is the Fremont Street Experience, in which five entire blocks of the central Fremont Street were roofed over with an open-air mesh. This "Celestial Vault" is studded with over twelve million

LED nodules to create a movie screen, choreographed by computer in dazzling nightly displays (hourly, 8pm–midnight; free).

Almost all Las Vegas's handful of off-Strip museums are eminently missable, with one unarguable exception: the Liberace Museum, two miles east of the Strip at 1775 E Tropicana Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–4pm; ☎ 702/798-5595, @ www.liberace.org; $12). Popularly remembered more for his pompadour and love of rhinestones than his torpid toe-tapper songs, Liberace, who died in 1987, started out as a classically trained pianist playing the rough bars of Milwaukee during the 1940s. A decade later, he was being mobbed by screaming adolescents and ruthlessly hounded by the scandal-hungry press. All this is recalled by a yellowing collection of cuttings and family photos, along with an electric candelabra, bejeweled quail eggs with inlaid pianos, rhinestone-covered fur coats, glittering cars, and more.

Eating

As recently as the early 1990s, the restaurant scene in Las Vegas was governed by the notion that visitors were not prepared to pay for gourmet food, and the only quality restaurants were upscale Italian places well away from the Strip. Now, however, the situation has reversed, as the major casinos compete to attract culinary superstars from all over the country to open Vegas outlets. Many tourists now come to the city in order to eat at the best restaurants in the United States, without having to reserve a table months in advance or pay sky-high prices. The choice on the Strip in particular is overwhelming, and you'll almost certainly find a good restaurant in your own hotel. The places reviewed here form only a tiny proportion of the total and tend toward the higher-end restaurants that are worth making a special effort to reach.

Buffets

Almost every casino features an all-you-can-eat buffet. At its best, the traditional buffet experience is like being granted unrestricted access to the food court in an upmarket mall: you'll get good fast food, but not great cooking. The best such buffets tend to be in casinos away from both the Strip and downtown that depend on locals as well as tourists. By contrast, those at the largest Strip casinos, like Excalibur and the MGM Grand, are often poor. A new development, however, has been for high-end casinos like Bellagio and Paris to raise buffet prices to a level that makes it possible to provide true gourmet feasts.

The Buffet Bellagio, 3600 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/791-7111. Far and away Las Vegas's best buffet. With other buffets, you may rave about what good value they are; with this one, you'll rave about what good food it is. Breakfast is $14; lunch is $18, and can include sushi, sashimi, and dim sum; and dinner, with choices like lobster claws, fresh oysters, and venison, is $26, or $34 on Fri & Sat.

Carnival World Buffet Rio, 3700 W Flamingo Rd ☎ 702/252-7777. The Rio uses its buffet to lure bargain-hunters west from the Strip; its prices are not what they were, at $13 for breakfast, $15 for lunch, and $23 for dinner, but the value is excellent. The variety is immense, with Thai, Chinese, Mexican, and Japanese stations, as well as the usual pasta and barbecue.

Fantasy Market Buffet The Palms, 4321 W Flamingo Rd ☎ 702/942-7777. Easy to find and afford, the Palms' buffet is a local favorite. Food and decor alike are bright and appealing, with a broad spectrum that takes in salads, a little sushi, Mexican and Italian specialties, teriyaki chicken, barbecue beef, and a lot of lovely cakes and pies. Breakfast is $6, lunch $7, and dinner $12, rising to $16 on Fri.

Garden Court Buffet Main Street Station, 200 N Main St ☎ 702/387-1896. Downtown's best-value buffet, ranging from fried chicken and corn at the "South to Southwest" station, to tortillas at "Ole," and pork chow mein and oyster tofu at "Pacific Rim." Breakfast is $6, lunch $8, and dinner varies $11–16.

Le Village Buffet Paris, 3655 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/967-7000. Superb French cuisine, with great seafood, succulent roast chicken, and super-fresh vegetables. The setting is a little cramped, squeezed into a very Disney-esque French village, but the food is magnifique. Breakfast is $13, lunch $18, and dinner $25.

Todai Seafood Buffet Desert Passage, Aladdin, 3663 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/892-0021. Not to be confused with the Aladdin's own (adequate but not exceptional) buffet, Todai specializes in magnificent all-you-can-eat Japanese spreads. It's seafood heaven, with unlimited sushi and sashimi plus hot entrées, noodles, and barbecued and teriyaki meats. Lunch Mon–Fri $15, Sat & Sun $17; dinner Sun–Thurs $26, Fri & Sat $28.

Restaurants

America New York–New York, 3790 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/740-6451. cavernous 24-hour diner, with a vast 3D “map” of the United States curling from the ceiling, and a staggeringly eclectic menu. At any hour of the day or night, there really is something for everyone, and it's all surprisingly good.

The Coffee Shop Binion's Horseshoe, 128 E Fremont St ☎702/382-1600. The Las Vegas coffee shop of your dreams, in the basement of a veteran downtown casino. Between 10pm and 5am, a steak dinner costs just $5. Breakfast is better value than most buffets: the $4.99 “Benny Binion's Natural,” served 2am–2pm, consists of two eggs, bacon, sausage, or ham, toast, tea or coffee, and magnificent home fries. Daily 24 hours.

Bouchon Venezia Tower, The Venetian, 3355 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/414-6200.

Despite its sky-high reputation and exclusive setting, Thomas Keller's spacious recreation of a classic French bistro is both friendly and affordable, and sitting outside on the huge piazza is a real joy. A delicious French onion soup costs $8.50 and a roast chicken flavored with onions and garlic costs $22.50. There's also plenty of seafood. Breakfast is a Francophile's dream of croissants, pastries, yogurt and coffee. Open daily for all meals.

Commander's Palace Desert Passage, 3667 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/892-8272.

The first-ever outpost of New Orleans' finest (and most expensive) restaurant abuts the Strip at the front of the Desert Passage mall. The decor is formal but redolent of Louisiana atmosphere, and the food is sumptuous. Lunch and dinner daily.

Il Fornaio New York–New York, 3790 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/650-6500. The nicest place to enjoy the atmosphere of the casino, this rural-Italian restaurant is a real joy. Choose from pizzas for around $12, or full meals like mixed antipasto ($9.50), followed by seafood linguini ($19) or rotisserie chicken ($16). The delicious olive breads, pastries, and espresso coffees are also sold in a separate deli nearby. Open daily for all meals.

Mon Ami Gabi Paris, 3655 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/944-4224.

The first and the finest major casino restaurant to offer open-air seating right on the Strip has the feel of a proper French pavement bistro. At lunch, try the gloriously authentic onion soup ($7), the mussels ($11), or the thin-cut steak frites ($21). Dinner features more expensive steak cuts and fish entrées. Lunch and dinner daily.

Mr Lucky's 24/7 Hard Rock Hotel, 4455 Paradise Rd ☎702/693-5000. Stylish 24-hour coffee shop, with an open kitchen, faux-fur-clad booths, and a subdued tan-and-cream paint job, where the food is well above average.

Paymon's Mediterranean Cafe and Market 4147 S Maryland Pkwy at Flamingo ☎702/731-6030. This highly recommended Middle Eastern restaurant, with attractive Cretan murals, is simple but also Vegas's best vegetarian option. Salads and pita sandwiches cost $7–9, and spinach pie $10, while dips such as hummus or the eggplant-based baba ganoush are $5. A mountainous best-of-everything combination plate is just $11. Closed Sun.

Vialé Roman Plaza, Caesars Palace, 3500 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/731-7110. Inexpensive sidewalk Italian trattoria, outdoors on the Strip, that's almost too good to be true. Lunch is an absolute treat, with a burger or warm panini sandwich costing under $10, and a Caesar salad for $7, or $10 with chicken. The dinner menu offers many of the same salads, plus pasta as both appetizer ($7–9) and entree ($12–17), and more substantial entrees like grilled quail with mascarpone stuffing ($19). Lunch and dinner daily.

Zefferino Grand Canal Shoppes, The Venetian, 3355 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/414-3500. Very romantic, and yet utterly playful Italian restaurant, with its ornate balconies overlooking the Grand Canal. Dinner entrees can be pricey, with basic ravioli at $26 and fish soup at $45, but the $20 three-course set lunch, served daily except Sun, is exceptional value. Lunch and dinner daily.

Bars and clubs

All the casinos have plenty of bars, but if you want a drink, there's no need to look for one; instead, a tray-toting waitress will come and find you. The old-fashioned Las Vegas lounge has returned in force, whether knowingly retro-styled for twenty-something rockers, glammed up as an "ultra-lounge," or lovingly recreated for older visitors looking to recapture the quieter but still decadent flavor of the Rat-Pack era. In addition, Las Vegas has finally come of age as an international clubbing capital. The success of nightclubs at hipper casinos like the Hard Rock and Mandalay Bay has prompted all their major rivals to follow suit, often with spectacular results.

Gaudi Bar Sunset Station, 1301 W Sunset Rd, Henderson ☎702/547-7777. Las

Vegas's most weird and wonderful casino lounge; a billowing mosaic-encrusted toadstool of a tribute to Spanish architect Gaudi, complete with faux-sky underbelly and best appreciated with the aid of a $4 specialty martini. Daily 24 hrs.

Ghostbar The Palms, 4321 W Flamingo Rd ☎702/940-7777. Self-proclaimed "ultra-lounge," whose lack of a dance floor, and low music volume, stops it being categorized as a nightclub. Thirty-something hipsters wait to pay the cover charge, then venture out on its cantilevered open-air deck, which has a terrifying Plexiglass floor. Daily 8pm–dawn. Cover Sun–Thurs $10, Fri & Sat $20.

Gipsy 4605 Paradise Rd ☎702/731-1919. High-profile gay dance club, where apart from the free cruise nights on Wednesdays, there's normally some form of live entertainment to justify the $5 post-midnight cover charge, with go-go boys performing Friday, and beer busts most nights. The elaborate lost-city decor attracts young ingenues and local celebs. Daily 10pm–6am.

House of Blues Mandalay Bay, 3950 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/632-7600, @www.hob.com. The Strip's premier live-music venue, the voodoo-tinged, folk-art-decorated House of Blues has a definite, but not exclusive, emphasis toward blues, R&B, and the like. Typical prices range from around $30 up to $85 for stars like Aretha Franklin.

Nine Fine Irishmen New York–New York, 3790 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/740-6463. The affinity between New York and all things Irish finds expression in this two-story wood-paneled pub, shipped over from Ireland and featuring live Irish musicians, singers, and dancers nightly.

Ra Luxor, 3900 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/262-4400. Despite the splendidly camp Egyptian motifs, Ra feels like a real city nightclub, booking big-name DJs to cater to a ferociously hip and very glamorous crowd. Cage dancers watch over a changing schedule of special nights. Wed–Sat 10pm–5am. Cover $10 women, $20 men.

Rain The Palms, 4321 W Flamingo Rd ☎702/940-7246. Vast, glitzy, no-expense-spared water-themed 1200-capacity club, featuring spectacular fountains of water and fire. When it's warm enough, the action extends outside into the pool area. Thurs 11pm–5am, $10, Fri & Sat 10pm–5am, $20.

rumjungle Mandalay Bay, 3950 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎702/632-7408. You have to run a gauntlet of go-go dancers and volcanic gas jets just to get into this bar-restaurant-nightclub. Inside, the leopardskin-clad staff serve well-priced cocktails, plus a vast menu of rums. It's too loud to do anything more than watch, or join, the dance floor action. Closed Sun.

Entertainment

There was a time when Las Vegas represented the pinnacle of any show-business career. In the early 1960s, when Frank Sinatra's Rat Pack were shooting the original Ocean's 11 during the day then singing the night away at the Sands, the city could claim to be the capital of the international entertainment industry. Then the world moved on. In the last few years, however, Las Vegas has started to come back into its own. One by one, the cheesy, feathers-and-tassels revues have closed down, to be replaced by surprisingly stimulating, postmodern shows by the likes of the now-ubiquitous Cirque du Soleil and the Blue Man Group. A new generation of big-name stars are taking up the kind of long-term residencies we all thought had vanished with Elvis. Celine Dion and Elton John at Caesars' huge Colosseum are the most conspicuous, but more are expected to follow.

The Amazing Johnathan The Sahara, 2535 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/737-2111, @www.amazingj.com. Far from the unbridled craziness his advertising might lead you to expect, Johnathan is a lovable magician whose emphasis on comedy means he barely completes a trick all evening. That's probably for the best, as carefully honed patter and hilarious skits like "Bad Karate Theater" make this one of Las Vegas's funniest shows. Daily except Thurs 10pm. $50 & $60.

Blue Man Group The Venetian, 3265 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 1-866/641-7469. Enter a strange and unfamiliar world, in which three bald, blue performance artists sell out a 1750-seat theater every night of the week. Don't expect stars, or a plot, or even words; instead, you get synchronized eating of breakfast cereal and live endoscopies on audience members, plus deafening, exhilarating drumming from the Men themselves, and some stunning special effects. It's not for everyone, but breathtaking novelty is at least part of what Las Vegas is all about. Sun–Fri 7pm, Sat 7pm & 10pm. $79–90.

Celine Dion in A New Day Caesars Palace, 3570 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/731-7865. Celine Dion serves up Las Vegas entertainment on an epic scale in Caesars' vast Colosseum. Unless you're a big fan, however – in which case you'll love the amazing sound – what's been dubbed the "Cirque de Celine" may well leave you cold. Celine herself is all but dwarfed on the gigantic stage, while the abundant trimmings seem at odds with the essentially lightweight songs. Seasonal, Wed–Sun 8.30pm, $87.50–225.

Folies Bergere Tropicana, 3801 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/739-2411. A fixture since 1959, the Folies Bergere is the longest-running show in the US. The basic formula remains the same: a mildly "naughty" Parisian revue designed to blow the minds of stout, bearded farmers from Iowa. Showgirls with fixed grins and feathered headdresses – and topless during certain performances – high-kick and waltz through big production numbers, with a break while quick-fire Mexican juggler Wally Eastwood plays the piano with his balls. Mon, Wed, Thurs & Sat 7.30pm & 10pm (topless), Tues & Fri 8.30pm (topless); all shows except 7.30pm over 16s only. $45–55.

Kà MGM Grand, 3799 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/891-7777, @www.ka.com. With a budget of $165 million, and nightly cast of 75 performers and 158 technicians, Las Vegas' fourth Cirque du Soleil production, Kà, is the most expensive theatrical production ever staged anywhere. Though more plot-driven than other Cirque shows, telling a complex saga about two Asian twins separated by kidnappers, at heart it's a succession of truly breathtaking vignettes. The maneuverability of the stage allows for some staggering aerial battles, and there's an astonishing "Wheel of Death" routine. Add in some extraordinary puppetry and sumptuous costumes, plus the artful use of fire and fog, and Kà is certain to expand your horizons. Fri–Tues 7pm & 10.30pm. $99, $125, $150.

Lance Burton Monte Carlo, 3770 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/730-7160. The best family show in Las Vegas, featuring master magician Lance Burton. Most of it consists of traditional but very impressive stunts with playing cards, handkerchiefs, and doves, but large-scale illusions include the disappearance of an entire airplane and a narrow escape from hanging. Tues & Sat 7pm & 10pm, Wed–Fri 7pm. $66 & $73.

Legends in Concert Imperial Palace, 3535 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/794-3261. Enjoyable celebrity-tribute show, with a changing roster of impersonators posing as stars from Tina Turner to Rod Stewart. Daily except Sun 7.30pm & 10.30pm. $40–60, including one drink; ages 12 and under $25–45.

 Mystère Ti, 3300 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 1-800/392-1999. Fabulous Cirque du Soleil showcase, with tumblers, acrobats, trapeze artists, pole climbers, clowns, and strongmen, but no animals apart from fantastic costumed apparitions. Wed–Sat 7.30pm & 10.30pm, Sun 4.30pm & 7.30pm. $95.

 O Bellagio, 3600 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/693-7722. From the synchronized swimmers onward, the Cirque du Soleil display their magnificent skills to maximum advantage. Any part of the stage at any time may be submerged in water of varying depths – one moment a performer can walk across a particular spot, the next someone may dive headfirst into it from the high wire. Wed–Sun 7.30pm & 10.30pm. $99–150.

V – the Ultimate Variety Show V Theatre, The Aladdin, 3667 Las Vegas Blvd S ☎ 702/932-1818. Old-fashioned but enjoyable revue show that gives assorted singers, comedians, jugglers, and the like a few minutes each to prove their worth. If the hilarious Russ Merlin is on the bill, be sure not to miss it. Daily 7.30pm & 9pm, $69–69.

Lake Mead and the Hoover Dam

The vast reservoir thirty miles southeast of the city, LAKE MEAD, was created by the construction of the Hoover Dam. As with the similarly incongruous Lake

Powell (see p.1003), it makes a bizarre spectacle, the blue waters a vivid counterpoint to the surrounding desert, but it gets excruciatingly crowded all year round.

Though the Lake Mead National Recreation Area straddles the border between Nevada and Arizona, the best views come from the Nevada side. Even if you don't need details on how to sail, scuba-dive, water-ski, or fish from the marinas along the five-hundred-mile shoreline, call in at the Alan Bible visitor center (daily 8.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 702/293-8990, 🌐 www.nps.gov/lame), four miles northeast of Boulder City on US-93, to enjoy a sweeping prospect of the whole thing.

Eight miles on, beyond the rocky ridges of the Black Mountains, US-93 reaches the Hoover Dam itself. Designed to block the Colorado River and provide low-cost electricity for the cities of the Southwest, it's among the tallest dams ever built (760ft high), and used enough concrete to build a two-lane highway from the West Coast to New York. It was completed in 1935, as the first step of the Bureau of Reclamation program that culminated with the Glen Canyon Dam (see p.1003). For security reasons, the dam no longer offers extensive behind-the-scenes tours, but you can still ride an elevator to the turbine room at the bottom. Regular half-hour guided tours leave from the Hoover Dam Visitor Center on the Nevada side of the river (daily April–Sept 8.30am–5.45pm, Oct–March 9.15am–4.15pm; $10, plus $5 parking; ☎ 702/293-1824).

Crossing Nevada

The bulk of Nevada is made up of dry, flat plains sliced by knife-edge volcanic mountain ranges. Called the Great Basin because its rivers and streams have no outlet to the ocean, the land has a certain eerie, even hypnotic, beauty. Here you'll find the indefinable, very American sense of the endless frontier.

The main route across Nevada, I-80, shoots from Salt Lake City to Reno, skirting dozens of bizarrely named small towns – Winnemucca, Elko, Battle Mountain – packed with casinos, bars, brothels, motels, and little else. The other main route, US-50, has a reputation as the loneliest highway in America, with the least traffic and roadside life. Older and slower than I-80, it follows much the same route as did the Pony Express in the 1860s, but many of the towns have faded away, and some have been entirely abandoned.

Great Basin National Park

Just across the border from Utah, Great Basin National Park was created in 1986 by the amalgamation of the Lehman Caves National Monument and the Wheeler Peak Scenic Area. It's a distillation of the range of scenery the Nevada desert offers, from angular peaks to high mountain meadows cut by fast-flowing streams. The Lehman Caves are some of the most extensive and fascinating limestone caves in the country, not as big as Carlsbad Caverns, but if anything more densely packed with intriguing formations. Guided tours leave regularly throughout the day, costing $4 for 30min, $8 for 1hr, or $10 for 90min, from the visitor center near the mouth of the caves (daily: summer 8am–5pm; winter 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 775/234-7331, 🌐 www.nps.gov/grba), five miles west of the hamlet of Baker.

From the Lehman Caves, a twelve-mile road climbs the east flank of the bald and usually snowcapped Wheeler Peak, and trails lead past alpine lakes and through a grove of gnarled, ancient bristlecone pines to the 13,063ft summit. Few people ever come here, but in winter the mountains and meadows make for excellent off-track cross-country skiing. The nearest real town, ELY, an hour's drive away, has two worthwhile museums – the entertaining Nevada Northern Railway Museum (daily except Mon 11am–1pm; $5; ☎ 1-866/407-8326, 🌐 nevadanorthernrailway.net), which offers $20 rides on a restored steam train, and the County Museum (daily 9am–4pm; free) – as well as a dozen motels (like Motel 6, 770 Avenue O; ☎ 775/289-6671; 📍) and a handful of casinos and restaurants.

Elko

One of the few Nevada towns worth aiming for, if you're here at the right time of year, is ELKO, a straggling highway town along I-80, a hundred miles from the Utah border. The self-proclaimed last real cowtown in the West is the center of one of the largest open-range cattle-ranching regions in the US, and the fitting home of the annual Cowboy Poetry Gathering, held here every January. People get together in a sort of celebration of folk culture, telling stories around campfires, singing about the lonesome life on the range, and keeping alive the dying traditions and tales of the Wild West.

During the 72-hour party of the National Basque Festival, each Fourth of July weekend, hulking men throw huge logs at each other amid a whole lot of carousing and downing of platefuls of Basque food. The food is available year-round in restaurants like the Star Hotel, two blocks south of the main drag at 246 Silver St (☎ 775/738-9925). Greyhound and Amtrak both stop in Elko, and there are dozens of budget motels, such as the Centre Motel, 475 Third St (☎ 775/738-7226; 📍). Elko's visitor center is at 700 Moren Way (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 775/738-4091 or 1-800/248-ELKO, 🌐 www.elkocva.com).

Reno and around

If you don't make it to Las Vegas, you can get a feel for the nonstop, neon-lit gambler's lifestyle by stopping in RENO, on I-80, very near the California border. "The biggest little city in the world," as it likes to call itself, is a somewhat downmarket version of Vegas, with miles of gleaming slot machines and poker tables, along with tacky wedding chapels and quickie divorce courts. While the town itself may not be much to look at, its setting – at the foot of the snowcapped Sierra Nevada, with the Truckee River winding through the center – is superb.

There are three things to do in Reno: gamble, get married, and get divorced. The casinos are concentrated in the downtown area, along Virginia Street on either side of the railroad tracks. To get married, the requirements are the same as in Las Vegas (see p.1024), though here you obtain your marriage license at the Washoe County Court, Virginia and Court streets (daily 8am–midnight; $55; ☎ 775/328-3260). Wedding chapels all around the city will help you tie the knot, including Heart of Reno Wedding Chapel, 243 S Sierra St (☎ 775/786-6882).

Practicalities

Reno's Cannon International Airport is a couple of miles southeast of downtown, a twenty-minute ride on local bus #24. Greyhound buses use the terminal at 155 Stevenson St; daily Amtrak trains call at 135 E Commercial Row downtown, six hours out of San Francisco en route for Salt Lake City.

The downtown visitor center, in the National Bowling Stadium at 300 N Center St (daily 8am–6pm; ☎ 1-800/FOR-RENO, 🌐 www.renolaketahoe.com), should be able to help you find an inexpensive place to stay, though rates tend to double at weekends. All the big casinos offer accommodation – the pick of them are the Atlantis, 3800 S Virginia St (☎ 775/825-4700 or 1-800/723-6500, 🌐 www.atlanticcasino.com; 📍); Silver Legacy, 407 N Virginia St (☎ 775/325-7401 or 1-800/687-8733, 🌐 www.silverlegacyreno.com; 📍); and Circus Circus, 500 N Sierra St (☎ 775/329-0711 or 1-877/213-7709, 🌐 www.circusreno.com; 📍). Reno's best buffet is at the Eldorado, 345 N Virginia St (☎ 775/786-5700 or 1-800/648-5966, 🌐 www.eldoradoreno.com; 📍).

Carson City

US-395 heads south from Reno along the jagged spires of the High Sierra, en route to Death Valley. Just thirty miles south of Reno, CARSON CITY, state capital of Nevada, is small by comparison but has a number of elegant buildings, some excellent historical museums, and a handful of world-weary casinos.

Carson City was named after frontier explorer Kit Carson in 1858, and is still redolent with Wild West history. A good introduction to the region is the Nevada State Museum at 600 N Carson St (daily 8.30am–4.30pm; $4). Housed in the former Carson Mint, it covers the geology and natural history of the Great Basin, up to the heyday of the 1860s, when the silver mines of the nearby Comstock Lode were at their peak. From its reconstructed Ghost Town, a tunnel allows entry down into a full-scale model of an underground mine.

Greyhound buses between Reno and Los Angeles stop once a day in each direction, at 111 E Telegraph Ave. Bliss Mansion is a luxurious B&B in a restored Victorian house, downtown at 608 Elizabeth St (☎ 775/887-8988 or 1-800/887-3501, 🌐 www.blissmansion.com; 📍), while Hardman House at 917 N Carson St (☎ 775/882-7744; 📍) is an inexpensive motel. The visitor center, on the south side of town at 1900 S Carson St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–3pm; ☎ 775/687-7410, 🌐 www.carson-city.org), can help with practical details and provide maps for self-guided architectural walking and driving tours of the town.

Virginia City

Much of the wealth on which Carson City – and indeed San Francisco – was built came from the silver mines of the Comstock Lode, a solid seam of pure silver discovered underneath Mount Hamilton, fourteen miles northeast of Carson City off US-50, in 1859. Raucous VIRGINIA CITY grew up on the steep slopes above the mines, and a young writer named Samuel Clemens made his way here from the east with his older brother, the acting Secretary to the Governor of the Nevada Territory, to see what all the fuss was about. His descriptions of the wild life of the mining camp were published years later under his pseudonym, Mark Twain. Collected in Roughing It, they form a hilarious eyewitness account of the hard-drinking existence of the frontier miners. There's not much to Virginia City nowadays, since all the old storefronts have been taken over by hot-dog vendors and tacky souvenir stands, but the surrounding landscape of arid mountains still feels remote and undisturbed.

California

Publicized and idealized all over the world, CALIFORNIA has a formidable reputation as a terrestrial paradise of sun, sand, and surf, with high mountain ranges, fast-paced glitzy cities, primeval old-growth forests, and vast stretches of deserts. All this, however, lies under the constant threat of the Big One – a massive earthquake of unimaginable destruction – along with the floods, fires, and other assorted disasters. Its politics have also undergone a seismic shift. Although formerly the power base for such right-wing stalwarts as Ronald Reagan and Richard Nixon, California has also been the source of some of the country's most progressive political movements. The fierce protests of the Sixties may have died down, but California remains the heart of liberal America, at the forefront of environmental awareness, gay pride, and social experimentation, and a firm bulwark of the Democratic Party. Economically, too, the region is crucial, whether in the film and music industries, the financial markets, or the all-consuming sector of real estate.

California is much too large to be fully explored in a single trip – so decide what kind of vacation you're looking for. Los Angeles is far and away the biggest and most stimulating city: a maddening collection of freeways, beaches, suburbs, elite enclaves, and extreme lifestyles. To the south, the more conservative metropolis of San Diego has broad, welcoming beaches and easy access to Mexico, while further inland, the deserts, most notably Death Valley, comprise a barren and inhospitable landscape of volcanic craters and salt pans that in summer becomes the hottest place on Earth.

Most people follow the shoreline north up the central coast: a gorgeous run that takes in vibrant small towns such as Santa Barbara and Santa Cruz. California's second city, San Francisco, is about as different from LA as it's possible to get: a European-styled jewel whose wooden Victorian houses and steep hills make it one of the world's most distinctive and appealing cities. It is also well placed for the national parks to the east, such as Yosemite, where waterfalls cascade into a sheer glacial valley, and Sequoia/Kings Canyon with its gigantic trees, as well as the ghost towns of the Gold Country. North of San Francisco the countryside becomes wilder, wetter, and greener, passing vineyards, stunning lakes, spectacular Mt Shasta and almost deserted volcanic tablelands en route to Oregon.

The climate in southern California features seemingly endless days of sunshine and warm, dry nights, with occasional bouts of torrential flooding in the winter. All along the coast mornings can be hazily overcast, especially in May and June; in the Bay Area around San Francisco it can be chilly all year, and fog rolls in to spoil many a sunny day. Much more so than in the south, winter in northern California can bring rain for weeks on end, causing massive mudslides that wipe out roads and hillside homes. Most hiking trails in the mountains are blocked between October and June by the snow that keeps California's ski slopes among the busiest in the nation.

Some history

Around half a million people were living in tribal villages along the West Coast when the Spaniard Juan Cabrillo first sighted San Diego harbor in 1542, naming it California after an imaginary island (inhabited by Amazons) from a Spanish novel. Sir Francis Drake landed near Point Reyes, north of San Francisco, in 1579, where the "white banks and cliffs" reminded him of Dover. In 1602 Sebastián Vizcáino bestowed most of the place-names that still survive; his exaggerated description of Monterey as a perfect harbor led later colonizers to make it the region's military and administrative center. The Spanish occupation began in earnest in 1769, combining military rule with missionary zeal. Father Junípero Serra first established a small mission and presidio (fort) at San Diego, before arriving in June 1770 at Monterey. By 1804 a chain of 21 missions, each a long day's walk from the next along the dirt path of El Camino Real (The Royal Road), ran from San Diego to San Francisco. Native Americans were either forcibly converted into Catholicism or killed; though not all gave up without a fight, disease ensured that they were soon wiped out.

When Mexico gained its independence in 1821, in theory it also acquired control of California. However, Americans were already starting to arrive, despite the immense difficulty of getting to California – three months by sea or four months overland in a covered wagon. Though the non-native population was a mere ten thousand in 1846, the growing belief that it was the Manifest Destiny of the United States to cover the continent from coast to coast, evident in the imperialist policies of President James K. Polk, soon led to the Mexican–American War. Virtually all the fighting took place in Texas; Monterey was captured by the US Navy without a shot fired, and by January 1847 the Americans controlled the entire West Coast.

A mere nine days before the signing of the treaty that ended the war, flakes of gold were discovered in the Sierra Nevada. Prospectors flooded in from all parts of the world in a madcap migration that led to California joining the US as the 31st state in 1850. It took just fifteen years to pick the land clean of visible gold, but industrialists like Charles Crocker, Leland Stanford, and Collis Huntington achieved jaw-dropping fortunes. The transcontinental railroad was completed in 1869, linking the gold fields to the rest of the US. Built mostly by Chinese laborers, the railway was an engineering feat and a social and cultural turning point. The crossing from New York now took just five days, and a railroad rate war brought fares down to as little as $1 for a one-way ticket, which attracted hordes of newcomers from the Great Plains to Southern California and helped make Los Angeles the state's biggest city.

Thanks to this migration, along with periodic real-estate booms and the rise of the film industry, California became the nation's fastest-growing state. Heavy industry followed during World War II, in the form of shipyards and airplane factories, and many workers – both white and black – and military personnel stayed on afterwards.

As home to the beats in the Fifties and the hippies in the Sixties, California was at the cutting edge of cultural change. But when the Vietnam-era protests ended with the abolition of the draft, much of the state's creative ferment did, too – giving rise to the indulgent, cocaine-fueled “Me Generation” of the 1970s. The economic counterpart of this shift also developed when Proposition 13, in 1978, augured a national trend to dramatically cut taxes at the cost of government solvency. The 1980s saw further right-wing gains, with a string of laissez-faire Republican governors, the associated decline of public financing for health care and education, and a prison-building boom and “tough on crime” attitude, epitomized by police chiefs like LA's Daryl Gates who used military tanks and SWAT teams. These policies had a predictable outcome in the Nineties, which crash-landed in economic scandal, a depressed real-estate market, rising unemployment, gang violence, and race riots in LA – compounded by earthquakes, drought, and flooding.

After a carnivalesque recall election in 2003 that cut short the term of charisma-challenged Gray Davis, action-movie star Arnold Schwarzenegger became the Republican governor of the largely Democratic state. California continues to attract countless new migrants from the rest of the US and the world. With much of the influx coming from Latin America, Spanish is now the lingua franca in many communities, and Hispanics increasingly provide much of the economic growth and cultural vitality of this dynamic, ever-changing place.

Getting around California

To explore California to the fullest, you'll need a car. A city such as Los Angeles couldn't exist without the automobile, and in any case driving down the coastal freeways in a sleek convertible is too fun and iconic to resist.

Amtrak trains running north-south include the Pacific Surfliner that connects San Diego and LA (and up to San Luis Obispo), with a stop at Fullerton for buses to Disneyland. The daily Coast Starlight runs up the coast from LA, stopping at Oakland and Emeryville, the nearest stations to San Francisco, and continues on via Sacramento to Seattle. The San Joaquin from Oakland runs along the Central Valley, connecting with LA by bus. Greyhound buses link all the main cities.

For quick hops between the major cities, you can't beat flying, though the airline industry has forced cutbacks in many services, and rising gas prices mean hiked costs. If your plans are flexible enough, you can take advantage of off-peak deals.

If you plan to do any long-distance cycling, traveling from north to south can make all the difference – the wind blows this direction in the summer, and the ocean side of the road offers the best views. Be careful if you cycle along the coast on Hwy-1: despite the stunning views, the highway has heavy traffic, tight curves, and is prone to fog.

San Diego: Arrival, information, and getting around

San Diego

Relatively free from smog and byzantine freeways, SAN DIEGO, sits on a gracefully curving bay and represents the conservative side of southern California. The second most-populous city in California may be affluent and libertarian, but it's also easygoing and far from smug. Although it was the site of the first mission in California, the city only really took off with the arrival of the Santa Fe Railroad in the 1880s, and in terms of trade and significance it has long been in the shadow of Los Angeles. However, during World War II the US Navy made San Diego its Pacific Command Center, and the military continues to dominate the local economy, alongside tourism. It's also known for having some of the worst municipal corruption in the country, though travelers will hardly notice this darker side while enjoying the long white beaches, sunny weather, and bronzed bodies – giving rise to the city's nickname, "Sandy Ego."

Arrival, information, and getting around

Both trains and buses stop in the heart of downtown San Diego: Greyhound at Broadway and First Avenue is more central than Amtrak's Santa Fe Depot, at the west end of Broadway. Lindbergh Field Airport is only two miles out, on bus #992 from downtown (daily 5am–midnight; $2.25).

The International Visitor Information Center is downtown at 1040 W Broadway (June–Aug daily 9am–5pm, Sept–May Thurs–Tues 9am–4pm; ☎619/236-1212, 🌐www.sandiego.org). The main downtown post office is at 815 E St, between 8th and 9th avenues (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎619/232-8612; zip code 92101).

Getting around without a car is comparatively easy. Several major companies operate buses in the area (📞 www.sdcommute.com), with most one-way fares $1–2.50, though long-distance, express and rural routes can reach $4. The main operators are San Diego Transit, or SDTC (📞 619/238-0100), and North County Transit District (📞 760/966-6500). The Transit Store, at 1st and Broadway (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; 📞 619/234-1060), has detailed timetables and sells a Day Tripper Transit Pass for one- to four-day visits ($5, $9, $12, and $15, respectively). The passes apply also to the tram-like San Diego Trolley, which runs throughout the area (one-way tickets $1–3) and covers the sixteen miles from the Santa Fe Depot to the Mexican border-crossing at San Ysidro. It's a 45-minute journey ($5 round-trip; every 15min from 5am to midnight), and the last trolley back leaves at 1am (or Sat 2am). Bicycle rental shops include Bicycle Barn, 746 Emerald St, Pacific Beach (📞 858/581-3665), and Cheap Rentals, 3685 Mission Blvd, Mission Beach (📞 858/488-9070, 📞 www.cheap-rentals.com).

Accommodation

Accommodation is plentiful throughout San Diego. The best-placed, though mall-like, campground is Camland on the Bay, 2211 Pacific Beach Drive (📞 1-800/4BAY-FUN, 📞 www.camland.com), linked to downtown by bus #30, where a basic site starts at $39, with more elaborate sites running $56–200. For a more serene camping option, there's San Elijo Beach State Park, Rte-21 south of Cardiff-by-the-Sea (📞 1-800/444-7275; $9–25).

Hotels, motels, and B&Bs

Bahia Resort 998 West Mission Bay Drive, Mission Bay (📞 1-800/576-4229, 📞 www.bahiahotel.com). Prime beachside accommodation with expansive ocean views, watersports rentals, pool, and Jacuzzi. There are snug but pleasant rooms in a palm-garden setting and pricier bayside suites. ⑦

Beach Haven Inn 4740 Mission Blvd, Pacific Beach (📞 858/272-3812 or 1-800/831-6323, 📞 www.beachhaveninn.com). Nice rooms around a pool and spa; continental breakfast included. With a/c, kitchenettes, and cable TV, it's one of the better values at the beach. ④

Bristol 1055 1st Ave, downtown (📞 619/232-6141, 📞 www.thebristolsandiego.com). Boutique hotel with stylish modern decor and tasteful amenities, plus in-room CD players and Internet access. ⑦

Crystal Pier Hotel and Cottages 4500 Ocean Blvd, Pacific Beach (📞 858/483-6983 or 1-800/748-5894, 📞 www.crystalpier.com). Beautiful, deluxe cottages built in the 1920s, right on the Pacific Beach pier. All units are suites with private deck, and most have kitchenettes. ⑧

El Cordova 1351 Orange Ave, Coronado (📞 619/435-4131 or 1-800/229-2032, 📞 www.elcordovahotel.com). The best deal in Coronado, these Spanish Colonial buildings from 1902 are set among lovely gardens. There's a pool, and some rooms have kitchenettes. A huge price spread covers basic units without a/c (④) and elegant suites (⑤).

Heritage Park B&B 2470 Heritage Park Row, Old Town (📞 619/299-6832 or 1-800/995-2470, 📞 www.heritageparkinn.com). Restored Queen Anne mansion in Heritage Park, chock-full of Victorian trappings. Breakfast and afternoon tea are included. Rooms and suites are in the usual lace-and-chintz style. One small unit (⑤) undercuts the rest of the rooms. ⑤

Horton Grand 311 Island Ave at 3rd Ave, downtown (📞 619/544-1886 or 1-800/542-1886, 📞 www.hortongrand.com). Classy, modernized amalgam of two century-old hotels, with fireplaces in most of the renovated, antique-accented rooms, plus an on-site restaurant and piano bar. The staff dresses in Victorian-era costumes. ⑦

 Hotel del Coronado 1500 Orange Ave, Coronado (📞 619/522-8000 or 1-800/468-3533, 📞 www.hoteldel.com). This spectacular Victorian confection put Coronado on the map and is still the area's major tourist sight (see p.1036). The striking rooms and suites, expansive bay views, and old-fashioned charm from 1888 give the place much appeal. Modern accommodations in separate buildings. ③–④

La Pensione 606 W Date St at India St
 ☎619/236-8000, 🌐www.lapensionehotel.com.

The City

With its mix of laid-back libertarians and rock-ribbed conservatives, San Diego embodies a work-hard, play-hard ethic, although it leans more toward the latter. Featuring an easily navigable downtown, scenic bay, 42 miles of beaches, and plentiful parks and museums, the city is hard not to like from the moment you arrive.

Downtown San Diego

The vibrant core of downtown San Diego is the most convenient place to start exploring, if not the best place to hang out for more than a few hours. Since the late 1970s, several blocks of 1920s architecture have been stylishly renovated, with the sleek modern buildings symbolizing the city's growing economic importance on the Pacific Rim. Downtown is safe by day, but can be unwelcoming at night when the financial zone shuts down – you're better off heading to the restaurants and clubs of the well-lit Gaslamp District.

The tall Moorish archways of the Santa Fe Railroad Depot, at the western end of Broadway, built in 1915 for the Panama-California Exposition, still evoke a sense of grandeur. Nearby, the downtown branch of the Museum of Contemporary Art, or MCA San Diego, 1001 Kettner Blvd (Thurs–Tues 11am–5pm; free; www.mcasd.org), is a fine first-stop for anyone interested in contemporary art with a California twist. Although its permanent collection focuses on American minimalism, Pop Art, and the indigenous art of Mexico, its temporary shows are the real appeal, often involving irreverent imagery drawn from the intersection of pop-culture surrealism and socioeconomic concerns. Further west, Broadway slices through the middle of downtown, at its most hectic between 4th and 5th avenues. Many visitors linger around the fountains on the square outside Horton Plaza, between 1st and 4th avenues south of Broadway (Mon–Fri 10am–9pm, Sat 10am–8pm, Sun 11am–7pm; www.westfield.com/hortonplaza), a giant mall of some 140 stores and San Diego's de facto city center. For better or worse, the complex's whimsical, colorful postmodern style, loaded with quasi-Art Deco and southwestern motifs, is inevitably a colossal tourist draw. Its lack of a roof flaunts the region's sunny climate.

Gaslamp District

South of Broadway, a few blocks from Horton Plaza, lies the sixteen-block Gaslamp District, once the seedy heart of frontier San Diego but now filled with smart streets lined with cafés, antique stores, art galleries, and, of course, “gas lamps” – powered by electricity. A tad artificial it may be, but its late nineteenth-century buildings are intriguing to explore, especially on the two-hour walking tour (Sat 11am; $10; ☎ 619/233-4692, 🌐 www.gaslampquarter.org/tours) that begins from the small cobbled square at 4th and Island avenues. The square is within the grounds of the William Heath Davis House, 410 Island Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 9am–3pm; $5), whose owner founded modern San Diego and built his saltbox-styled home here in 1850. Each room of the house commemorates a different period with its decor and copious photographs, and should be fascinating to anyone with an interest in Southern California history.

The district is the focus of San Diego nightlife, especially on the weekend. A flow of visitors has been ensured by the construction of Petco Park, 7th Ave at Harbor Drive (🌐 sandiego.padres.mlb.com), which draws plenty of Padres baseball fans but has limited parking options. If you’ve come to play spectator, make an early trip on the Blue Line trolley (which passes alongside) – mass transit around game time resembles a rail-bound journey into deepest tourist hell.

The Bayfront

Along San Diego’s curving, scenic bayfront, the pathway of the Embarcadero runs a mile or so along the bay, curling around to the western end of downtown. The whole length is used by strollers, joggers, and kite-flyers, but some tourists get no farther than Seaport Village, a predictable array of trinket shops and diners. Permanently docked here since 2004, the USS Midway, 910 N Harbor Drive (daily 10am–5pm, last admission 4pm; $15; 🌐 www.midway.org), shows off its formidable collection of naval hardware and weapons to the public. For those with a taste for nautical combat from World War II to the first Gulf War (the life cycle of the ship), the experience is a memorable one, enhanced by the presence of flight simulators and seven old-time planes parked at the site. Seven, more vintage ships can be visited further north at the Maritime Museum, 1492 Harbor Drive (daily 9am–8pm; $12; 🌐 www.sdmaritime.com), highlighted by the 1863 Star of India, the world’s oldest iron sailing ship still afloat, and the Californian, a modern replica of an 1847 cutter, which served as a federal lawboat patrolling the Pacific during the heady Gold Rush days. Keep in mind that since most of these craft are sea-worthy, some may be cruising when you come to visit; call ahead to make sure your favorite boat is on view.

Coronado

Across San Diego Bay from downtown, the isthmus of Coronado is a well-scrubbed resort community with a major naval station occupying its western end. It’s reached by the majestically modern Coronado Bay Bridge, a curving 11,000-foot span that’s one of the area’s signature images. The town of Coronado grew up around the Hotel del Coronado (see “Accommodation,” p.1033), a Victorian whirl of turrets and towers erected as a health resort in 1888. The “Del” is where Edward VIII (then Prince of Wales) first met Coronado housewife Wallis Warfield Simpson in 1920, and where Some Like It Hot was filmed in 1958, with the Del posing as a Miami Beach hotel. The grandiose place welcomes non-guests to look around. The Coronado Museum of History and Art, 1100 Orange Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–4pm; $4; 🌐 www.coronado history.org) chronicles the town's early pioneers and first naval aviators, as well as its history of yachting and architecture. The simplest and most scenic way to get to Coronado is on the San Diego Bay ferry ($3 each way; ☎ 619/234-4111), which leaves Broadway Pier daily on the hour between 9am and 9pm (Fri & Sat 10pm). Tickets are available at San Diego Harbor Excursion, 1050 N Harbor Drive (☎ 619/234-4111, @ www.sdhe.com).

Balboa Park and San Diego Zoo

Northeast of downtown, sumptuous Balboa Park contains one of the largest groups of museums in the US, as well as charming landscaping, traffic-free promenades, and stately Spanish Colonial-style buildings. The park is large but easy to get around on foot – if you get tired, there's always the free tram. The Balboa Park Passport, a week-long pass that allows one-time admission to all thirteen of the park's museums and its Japanese garden (plus the San Diego Zoo, for an extra $25), is available for $30 from the visitor information center (daily 9.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 619/239-0512, @ www.balboapark.org), inside the on-site House of Hospitality. Near the center, the Spreckels Organ Pavilion (concerts June–Aug Sun 2pm, Mon 7.30pm; @ www.serve.com/sosorgan), is worth a look as the home of one of the world's largest organs, with no less than 4500 pipes.

Most of the major museums flank El Prado, the pedestrian-oriented road that bisects the park. Minor works by Rembrandt and El Greco and a stirring collection of Russian icons make the stifling formality of the Timkin Museum of Art (Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; closed Sept; free; @ www.timkenmuseum.org) worth enduring. The San Diego Museum of Art (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm, Thurs closes 9pm; $10; @ www.sdmart.org) is the main venue for any big traveling shows – collections from Egypt, China, and the Vatican (to name a few) usually charge a $5–10 premium beyond museum admission. In the permanent collection, there's a solid stock of European paintings from the Renaissance to the nineteenth century, highlighted by Hals and Rembrandt, matched by curious modern works by California artists. Straddling El Prado, the Museum of Man (daily 10am–4.30pm; $6; @ www.museumofman.org) veers from the banal to the engaging to the bizarre, including demonstrations of Mexican loom-weaving, replicas of huge Mayan stones, interesting Native American artifacts, and various Egyptian relics.

Close to the Park Boulevard end of El Prado, the Reuben H. Fleet Science Center (Mon–Thurs 9.30am–5pm, Fri 9.30am–9pm, Sat 9.30am–8pm, Sun 9.30am–6pm; Science Center $6.75, Science Center and theater or simulator $11.75, all three $15; @ www.rhfleet.org) presents an assortment of child-oriented exhibits, focusing on the snazzier aspects of contemporary science, as well as the expected IMAX theater and virtual-reality simulator. Across Plaza de Balboa, the Natural History Museum (daily 10am–5pm; $11; @ www.sdnhm.org) has a great collection of fossils, hands-on displays of minerals, and entertaining exhibits on dinosaurs and crocodiles. South of El Prado, the Casa de Balboa houses four museums, three of which are worth a look: the Museum of Photographic Arts (daily 10am–5pm, Thurs closes 9pm; $6; @ www.mopa.org) offers a fine permanent collection that includes the work of Matthew Brady, Alfred Stieglitz, Paul Strand, and other big names; the San Diego Historical Society Museum (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; $5; @ www.sandiegohistory.org) charts the booms that have elevated San Diego from scrubland into metropolis within 150 years; and the Model Railroad Museum (Tues–Fri 11am–4pm, Sat & Sun 11am–5pm; $5; @ www.sdmodelrailroadm.com) displays tiny, elaborate replicas of cityscapes, deserts, and mountains, as well as the industrious little trains that chug through them.

At the southern end of Pan American Plaza, the Aerospace Museum (daily 10am–4.30pm, summer closes 5.30pm; $10; @ www.aerospacemuseum.org) recounts the history of aviation, loaded with close to seventy planes including the Spitfire, Hellcat, and the mysterious spy plane Blackbird. Next door at the Automotive Museum (daily 10am–5.30pm; $7; @ www.sdautomuseum.org) car enthusiasts linger over motorcycles and classic cars of all kinds, such as a 1948 Tucker Torpedo – one of only fifty left.

Immediately north of the main museums, the enormous San Diego Zoo (daily mid-June to early Sept 7am–10pm; early Sept to mid-June 9am–4pm; @ www.sandiegozoo.org) is one of the world's most renowned, with more than four thousand animals from eight hundred different species, among them very rare Chinese pheasants, Mhor gazelles, and a freakish two-headed corn snake. It's an enormous place, and you can easily spend a full day here, soaking in the major sections devoted to the likes of chimps and gorillas, sun and polar bears, lizards and lions, and habitats such as the rain forest. Take a bus tour early on to get a general idea of the layout, or survey the scene on the vertiginous Skyfari overhead tramway. Basic admission, including the children's zoo, is $32 (children 3–11 $19.75). A Two-Park Ticket ($54.45, children $33.55) includes a bus tour, ride on the Skyfari, and admission to the Wild Animal Park, near Escondido (daily 9am–4pm, summer closes 8pm; $28.50 adults, $17.50 kids), a two-thousand-acre preserve for big cats, rhinos, giraffes, and the like, conveniently roaming about outside your car's windows.

On the border of Balboa Park, Hillcrest is a lively and artsy area at the center of the city's gay community – about as close as San Diego gets to having a bohemian air. Come here for the interesting cafés and restaurants around University and 5th streets, or simply to stroll around the fine gathering of Victorian homes.

Old Town San Diego and Presidio Hill

In 1769, Spanish settlers chose Presidio Hill as the site of the first of California's missions. They soon began to build homes at the foot of the hill, which was dominated in turn by Mexican officials and then by early arrivals from the eastern US. Old Town San Diego, reachable from downtown via the Trolley (Blue Line; $2.25), is now a state historical park and the site of several original adobe dwellings – and the inevitable souvenir shops. Most of the stores and restaurants stay open from 10am until at least 10pm. Highlights include the Casa de Estudillo on Mason Street, built by the commander of the presidio, José Mariá de Estudillo, in 1827, one of the poshest of the original adobes. Next door, the Casa de Bandini was the home of the politician and writer Juan Bandini and acted as the social center of San Diego during the mid-nineteenth century. Details on the many structures here are available from the visitor center, inside the Robinson-Rose House, near Taylor and Congress streets (daily 10am–5pm; @ www.oldtownsandiego.org).

The Spanish-style building now atop Presidio Hill is only a rough approximation of the original mission – moved in 1774 – but its Junipero Serra Museum, 10818 San Diego Mission Rd (Fri–Sun 10am–4.30pm; $5), offers an intriguing examination of Junipero Serra, the padre who led the Spanish colonization and Catholic conversion of California. The Mission San Diego de Alcalá itself was relocated six miles north to 10818 San Diego Mission Rd (daily 8am–4pm; $3; @ www.missionsandiego.com), to be near a water source and fertile soils – and to be safer from attack. The present building is a working parish church, with a small museum; among the craft objects and artifacts from the mission is the crucifix held by Serra at his death in 1834. Despite controversy over his legacy and allegations of mission-led violence against native peoples, Serra was beatified in 1998 in a Vatican ceremony.

Ocean Beach and Point Loma

Ruled by the Hell's Angels in the 1960s, OCEAN BEACH, six miles northwest of downtown via bus #35 or #923, is a fun and relaxed beach town whose quaint, old-time streets and shops have preserved some of their ramshackle appeal and funky character. The two big hangouts include Newport Street, where backpackers slack around at snack bars, surf and skate rental shops, and some of the best secondhand music stores around; and Voltaire Street, which true to its name has a good range of independent-minded local businesses. There is often good surf, and the beach itself can be quite fun – especially on weekends, when the local party scene gets cranking. Where Voltaire Street meets the waves, you can visit Ocean Beach's one major attraction, Dog Beach, the only sand-strip in the area where pooches are allowed to frolic without leashes. South from the pier rise the dramatic Sunset Cliffs, a prime spot for twilight vistas.

South of Ocean Beach, at the southern end of the hilly green peninsula of Point Loma, the Cabrillo National Monument (daily 9am–5.15pm; 7-day pass $5 per car, pedestrians and cyclists $3; 🌐 www.nps.gov/cabr) marks the spot where Juan Cabrillo and crew became the first Europeans to land in California, albeit briefly, in 1542. The startling views from this high spot, across San Diego Bay to downtown and down the coast to Mexico, easily repay a trip here. A platform atop the western cliffs of the park makes it easy to view the November-to-March whale migration, when scores of gray whales pass by en route to their breeding grounds off Baja California, Mexico. The nearby visitor center (same as park hours) contains information on the history and wildlife of the point, and lies near the Old Point Loma Lighthouse (daily 9am–5pm; free), which offers tours that lead past replica Victorian furnishings and equipment from the 1880s.

SeaWorld, Mission Beach, and Pacific Beach

North of Ocean Beach, Mission Bay is the site of San Diego's most popular tourist attraction: SeaWorld (daily June–Aug 9am–10pm, rest of the year 10am–dusk; $54, children $44, parking $7; 🌐 www.seaworld.com), reachable by bus #9 from downtown. It's undeniably kid-friendly, with rides, attractions, and shows, but make sure young ones are prepared for a full day out to make the park's steep entry prices worthwhile. Amazingly enough, the Skytower and Skyride attractions charge an extra $5 – so don't assume $54 is all you're going to spend, especially after costs for the pricey junk food are figured in.

The biggest-name public beaches in San Diego are Mission Beach, the peninsula that separates Mission Bay from the ocean, and its northern extension, Pacific Beach. If you aren't up for bronzing on the sands, you can always nurse a beer at one of the many beachfront bars, or you could rollerblade or bike down Ocean Front Walk, the concrete boardwalk running the length of both beaches, and observe the toasty sands overrun with scantily clad babes and surfboard-clutching dudes. A mile north of Pacific Beach's Crystal Pier, Tourmaline Surfing Park, La Jolla Blvd at Tourmaline St, is reserved exclusively for the sport, as well as windsurfing – but no swimmers are allowed. If you don't have a board, a good alternative is a few miles north, Windansea Beach, a favorite surfing hot spot that's also fine for swimming and hiking alongside the oceanside rocks and reefs.

Near the southern end of Ocean Front Walk at 3146 Mission Blvd once-derelict Belmont Park (June–Aug Sun–Thurs 11am–11pm, Sat & Sun 11am–midnight; rides $2–5; 🌐 www.belmontpark.com) has been renovated with eleven official rides, though the two main attractions are both from 1925: the Giant Dipper rollercoaster, one of the few of its era still around, and the Vertical Plunge, once the largest saltwater plunge in the world, and the setting for famous Hollywood swimmers Johnny Weissmuller and Esther Williams.

La Jolla

A more pretentious air prevails in La Jolla (pronounced “La Hoya”), an elegant beach community just to the north. Stroll its immaculate, gallery-filled streets, fuel up on California cuisine at one of the many sidewalk cafés, or visit the La Jolla site of the Museum of Contemporary Art, 700 Prospect St (Fri–Tues 11am–5pm, Thurs 11am–7pm; $6, students $2; www.mcasd.org), which has a huge, regularly changing stock of paintings and sculptures from 1955 onwards, highlighted by California pop and minimalism. On the seaward side of the museum lies the small and tasteful Ellen Scripps Browning Park, named for the philanthropist whose Irving Gill-designed home now houses the museum. Where the park meets the coast is the popular La Jolla Cove, much of it an ecological reserve whose clear waters make it perfect for snorkeling (if you can find a parking space).

Just up the road, architecture fans won't want to miss a chance to tour one of the premier sites for high modernism in the US, the Salk Institute for Biological Studies, 10010 N Torrey Pines Rd (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; tours Mon, Wed & Fri noon; reserve at 858/453-4100 ext 1200, www.salk.edu), not only a respected institution for molecular biology and physics, but also a considerably influential design by architect Louis I. Kahn. This collection of rigid geometric concrete blocks and walls features stark vistas that look out over the Pacific Ocean, possessing a strange, austere serenity. Further north, the Stephen Birch Aquarium and Museum, 2300 Expedition Way (daily 9am–5pm; $11, www.aquarium.ucsd.edu), provides entertaining up-close views of captive marine life, informative displays on the earth's ecology, and exhibits detailing the marine exploration work carried out by the Institute. The highlights include the Hall of Fishes, a huge kelp forest home to countless sea creatures, and the Shark Reef, displaying a nice range of the fearsome creatures, including a few pint-sized versions. Altogether, the museum is a much more edifying experience than anything at SeaWorld, and a lot cheaper, too.

Eating

Wherever you are in San Diego, you'll have few problems finding some place good to eat at reasonable prices. Everything from crusty coffee shops to stylish ethnic restaurants is in copious supply here, with seafood at its best around Mission Beach and the Gaslamp District, and the latter also home to the greatest concentration of restaurants, aimed at both tourists and locals.

Anthony's Fish Grotto 1360 Harbor Drive, Downtown 619/232-5103. Fish-and-chips and other affordable seafood dishes are the draw at this longstanding bayside favorite. Lunch or dinner; one of several area locations.

Bella Luna 748 5th Ave, downtown 619/239-3222. A romantic, moon-themed bistro with an artsy feel, serving up wonderful, mid-priced dishes from different regions of Italy, with hefty servings of pasta and succulent calamari.

Berta's 3928 Twigg's St, Old Town 619/295-2343. One of the best-kept secrets in town, offering low-priced, authentic cooking from all over Latin America, with a range of hot and spicy concoctions to make you pound the table for more.

Café 222 222 Island Ave, downtown 619/236-9902. Hip café serving some of the city's best breakfasts and lunches, with excellent pancakes and waffles and inventive twists on traditional sandwiches and burgers (including vegetarian), at reasonable prices.

Candelas 416 3rd Ave, downtown 619/702-4455. Gaslamp District restaurant offering swank, pricey Mexican fare with inventive combinations of seafood and meat dishes – the California cuisine influence is apparent in items like sea bass with grape sauce and wild mushrooms.

Chez Loma 1132 Loma Ave, Coronado ☎619/435-0661. Intensely aromatic and delicious upscale French cuisine, offering the likes of roasted duck in peppercorn and burnt-orange sauce, and a nice cassoulet with black mussels and salmon sausage.

Chilango's Mexican Grill 142 University Ave, Hillcrest ☎619/294-8646. Regional Mexican food for under $10 is served in this tiny storefront locale, which is packed to the rafters in the evenings. Especially tasty shrimp, served with garlic sauce or in mango and vanilla, among other choices.

Crest Café 425 Robinson Ave, Hillcrest ☎619/295-2510. Don't let the dumpy exterior fool you – this place offers solid, tasty American fare on the cheap. The salads, burgers, and pancakes will make your stomach happy, along with more curious items like jalapeno fettuccine.

Groce's Restaurant and Jazz Bar 802 5th Ave, Gaslamp District ☎619/233-4355. Pricey but excellent range of pasta, desserts, and salads; the Sunday jazz brunch is a popular event.

de' Medici 815 5th Ave, downtown ☎619/702-7228. Upscale Italian fare that draws plenty of suits for its scrumptious menu, including some tasty gnocchi, beef filets, and cioppino.

Dobson's 956 Broadway Circle, downtown ☎619/231-6771. An upscale restaurant whose cuisine leans toward Continental, with puff pastries adding some zing to the fare, which includes everything from veal sweetbreads to rock shrimp risotto.

Filippi's Pizza Grotto 1747 India St at Date St, downtown ☎619/232-5094. Great pizzas and a handful of scrumptious pasta dishes served in a small room at the back of an Italian grocery.

Ichiban 1449 University Ave, Hillcrest ☎619/299-7203. Fine Japanese cuisine, featuring good rolls, bentos, soups, and sushi, in an unpretentious and popular setting. The combo platters are extremely well-priced. Also in Pacific Beach at 1441 Garnet Ave ☎858/270-5755).

Karinya 825 Garnet Ave, Pacific Beach ☎858/270-5050. Hot and spicy soups, firecracker shrimp and coconut curry to set your mouth ablaze, with a good range of Thai staples such as noodle dishes and rolls. A solid, affordable bet.

Kono's 704 Garnet Ave, Pacific Beach ☎858/483-1669. Crowded, touristy place for breakfast or lunch on the boardwalk, with hefty and inexpensive portions of eggs, sandwiches, hamburgers, and other American favorites.

Living Room Coffeehouse 1010 Prospect St, La Jolla ☎858/459-1187. One in a chain of four local coffeeshops, with great sandwiches, soups, quiches, and pastries in a cozy setting.

Mission Café and Coffeehouse 3795 Mission Blvd, Mission Beach ☎858/488-9060. A wide range of eclectic choices, from French toast and tamales with eggs to tortillas with spicy seasonings to “roll-ups” stuffed with meat and pasta.

Old Town Mexican Café 2489 San Diego Ave ☎619/297-4330. Expect to queue up at this lively and informal Mexican diner before dining on Mexican ribs and steak Azteca; only at breakfast are you unlikely to have to wait for a table.

Point Loma Seafoods 2805 Emerson St, Ocean Beach ☎619/223-1109. Fast, inexpensive counter serving up San Diego's freshest fish in a basket, along with mean crabcake and squid sandwiches that make the locals cheer. The justly popular joint is packed on weekends.

Sportsmen's Seafood 1617 Quivira Rd, Mission Beach ☎619/224-3551. For the serious fish-lover, the combo diner/market offers cheap and delicious fare – shrimp cocktails, squid steak, tuna burgers, fish and chips, crab or lobster platters, and fish tacos.

Taste of Thai 527 University Ave, Hillcrest ☎619/291-7525. Terrific Thai staples – spicy noodles, marinated shrimp, pad Thai – for reasonable prices; expect a wait on weekends.

Nightlife

Although San Diego's money is lavished on classical music, opera, and theater (half-priced tickets and information at the Arts Tix booth at 28 Horton Plaza, Tues–Thurs 11am–6pm, Fri & Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎619/497-5000), the crowds flock to beachside discos and boozy Gaslamp District music venues. For full listings, pick up the free San Diego Reader (☎www.sreader.com), the Thursday edition of the San Diego Union-Tribune (☎www.signonsandiego.com), or the youth-oriented San Diego CityBeat (☎www.sdcitybeat.com).

Bars, coffeshops, and clubs

Bitter End 770 5th Ave, Gaslamp District ☎619/338-9300. Two-story venue complete with frenetic dancefloor, martini bar, and private lounge, for the sophisticated poseur who doesn't mind paying $10 for an apple-tini.

Café Crema 1001 Garnet Ave, Pacific Beach ☎858/273-3558. Wake yourself up before going to the bars, or sober up afterwards, with one of their large coffees. Sidewalk seating, late hours, Internet access, and eclectic entertainment from oddball poets to avant-garde tunes.

Claire de Lune 2906 University Ave, Hillcrest ☎619/688-9845. The prototypical coffeehouse, with steaming java, teas, and sandwiches, comfy seating and entertainment that runs from smooth jazz to spoken-word to avant-garde.

Dublin Square 554 4th Ave, Gaslamp District ☎619/239-5818. Get your fill of chicken pot pie and lamb-shank stew as you quaff Irish beer and spirits at this Emerald Isle pub. Even the seafood comes in a broth made from Guinness, and the chocolate cake contains whiskey.

Karl Strauss Brewery & Grill 1157 Columbia St, downtown ☎619/234-2739. Discerning beer hunters enjoy ales and lagers brewed on the premises – consider the sampler tray – while the menu offers a solid array of hefty favorites like ribs and sausages. Five other locations.

Live Wire 2103 El Cajon Blvd, just east of Hillcrest ☎619/291-7450. With a wide selection of imported beers, pinball, pool, and quasi-bohemian decor, this is a fine choice for boozing.

On Broadway 615 Broadway, downtown ☎619/231-0111. The apotheosis of posing in San Diego, a velvet-robe scene that attracts the local celebrity elite (such as they are) and sends you into booty-shaking overdrive as you groove to world-league DJs and thunderous house beats.

Onyx Room 852 5th Ave, Gaslamp District ☎619/235-6699. Groovy underground bar with lush decor, where you can knock back a few cock-tails, then hit the back room for live acid-jazz and dance tunes. The swanky lounge upstairs, Thin, has pricier drinks and bigger attitudes.

Thrusters Lounge 4633 Mission Blvd, Pacific Beach ☎858/483-6334. Sleek bar and club where the dance beats come hard and heavy, typically leaning toward hip-hop and 80s favorites.

Live-music venues

4th and B 345 B St, downtown ☎619/231-4343. Hard-thumping live rock and dance club with two rooms and a hormone-fueled crowd of bump 'n' grinders. A funky place to shake your ass.

Blind Melons 710 Garnet Ave, Pacific Beach ☎858/483-7844. College-oriented spot with live rock, blues, and reggae bands nightly, plus the occasional DJ.

Brick by Brick 1130 Buenos Ave, Mission Bay ☎619/675-5483. Cool lounge that's one of the better indie spots around town, attracting up-and-coming alternative, blues, and hard-rock acts.

Buffalo Joe's 600 5th Ave, Gaslamp District ☎619/236-1616. Very popular, almost unavoidable nightclub loaded with tourists and some locals, with a broad selection of live tunes, from aggressive rockers to snappy funk and blues to tribal dance-beats.

Casbah 2501 Kettner Blvd, downtown ☎619/232-4355. Grungy joint that hosts a solid, varying roster of blues, funk, reggae, rock, and indie bands.

Humphrey's by the Bay 2241 Shelter Island Drive, Point Loma ☎619/523-1010. Live soul, pop, and R&B from mid-level acts and old timers, make this restaurant a solid choice for mainstream music, as well as seafood.

SOMA 3350 Sports Arena Blvd, west of Old Town ☎619/226-7662. Favorite all-ages spot for thrashing to punk acts or head-banging to rockers, set in a former moviehouse complex with two stages. No booze, but the frenetic atmosphere is more than enough to get you high.

Winston's 1921 Bacon St, Ocean Beach ☎619/222-6822. A former bowling alley, this local club has rock bands most nights, with occasional reggae and 1960s-style acts as well.

Out from San Diego: the Anza-Borrego Desert

Most of eastern San Diego County, which otherwise consists largely of sleepy suburban towns, is taken up by the 937-square-mile Anza-Borrego Desert ($5 per vehicle; ⑩ www.anzaborrego.statepark.org), much of it comprising the largest desert state park in the US. Some of it can be covered by car, although four-wheel-drive vehicles are necessary for the more obscure – and most interesting – routes. The best time to come is winter, when daytime temperatures stay around 85°F. In the fiercely hot summer, it's best left to the lizards, but when the desert blooms, between March and May, scarlet ocotillo, orange poppies, white lilies, purple verbena, and other wildflowers paint a memorable, and fragrant, picture. To find out more information, stop by the park visitor center, near park headquarters at 200 Palm Canyon Drive (daily 9am–5pm, weekends only in summer; ⑦ 760/767-4205).

Approaching from the west, Hwy-78 descends to Scissors Crossing, the junction with Hwy-S2, which follows the Butterfield Stage Route, which began service in 1857 as the first regular line of communication between the East and the newly settled West. Further on, the old adobe rest stop of Vallecito (pronounced “vie-ay-SEE-toe”) Stage Station (Sept–May only 9am–sunset; $2, camping $12) gives a good indication of the privations of early desert travel. To the south, Agua Caliente Regional Park (Sept–May daily 9.30am–5pm; $5, camping $14–18) features a few naturally fed pools, while around Imperial Valley in the least-visited portion of Anza–Borrego, there's a vivid and spectacular clash as gray rock rises from the edges of the red desert floor.

The only substantial settlement in the desert is BORREGO SPRINGS, at the northern end of Hwy-S3 along Hwy-S22, which is a good base for the area's canyon walks, some with free but waterless campgrounds (campsites $7–19). Camping is also available at the Borrego Palm Canyon campground ($13–19), near the Anza–Borrego park visitor center. From here, a 1.5-mile trail takes you to a small oasis with palms and a waterfall. Hotels in town are fairly pricey; the most affordable are the Starland Resort, 2771 Borrego Springs Rd (⑦ 760/767-5501; ③), and Hacienda del Sol, 610 Palm Drive (⑦ 760/767-5442; ④), and both are clean but basic. Decent restaurants include Carlee's Place (⑦ 760/767-3262), for its serviceable burgers and pizza; and the Krazy Koyote, 2220 Hoberg Rd (⑦ 760/767-7788), for upscale steak and seafood inside an appealing retro-chic 1950s motel, The Palms (same phone; ④–⑥, depending on season).

Los Angeles

The rambling metropolis of LOS ANGELES sprawls across the thousand square miles of a great desert basin, knit together by an intricate network of freeways between the Pacific Ocean and the snowcapped mountains. Its colorful melange of shopping malls, palm trees, and swimming pools is both surreal and familiar, thanks to the potent celluloid self-image it has spread all over the world.

LA is a young city. Although founded by the Spanish in the eighteenth century, only after the completion of the transcontinental railroad, starting in the 1870s, did it really begin to grow. By the mid-twentieth century, the enduring symbol of the city had become the family-sized suburban house, with requisite swimming pool and two-car garage. Although the movie industry, beginning locally in the 1910s, attracted its share of new arrivals, the biggest boom came after World War II with the mushrooming of the aerospace industry. Since then, the city's been driven by finance, media, and real estate.

The first-time visitor may find Los Angeles thrilling and threatening in equal proportions; it's a place that picks you up and sweeps you along whether you like it or not. While it has its fine-art museums, unexpected swaths of parkland, and a few old-fashioned urban plazas, what people really come here for is to experience the fantasy worlds of Disneyland and Hollywood, as well as the gilded opulence of Beverly Hills and Malibu.

Arrival, information, and city transportation

All European and many domestic flights use LA International Airport – known as LAX – sixteen miles southwest of downtown along Santa Monica Bay. Shuttle buses “B” and “C” serve their respective parking lots round the clock, and near lot C you can connect with local buses. Minibuses such as SuperShuttle (☎ 1-800/BLUE-VAN, 🌐 www.supershuttle.com) run all over town, delivering you to your door. Fares depend on your destination but are generally around $25–40 (plus tip), with a journey time of between 30 and 60 minutes. Taxis charge at least $35 to West LA or Hollywood, $90 to Disneyland, and a flat $38 to downtown; a $2.50 surcharge applies for all trips starting from LAX.

If you're arriving from elsewhere in the US, or from Mexico, you might just land at one of the other airports in the LA area – at Burbank, Long Beach, Ontario, or Orange County's John Wayne Airport in Costa Mesa. MTA buses (☎ 1-800/COMMUTE, outside LA ☎ 1-800/2-LARIDE, 🌐 www.mta.net) serve them all – phone on arrival and tell them where you are and want to go.

The main Greyhound bus terminal, at 1716 E Seventh St (24hr; ☎ 213/629-8401), is in a seedy section of downtown, but access is restricted to ticket-holders, so it's safe enough inside. To find other local bus stations and stops, check out 🌐 www.greyhound.com. If arriving in LA by train you'll be greeted with the Mission Revival architecture of Union Station, 800 N Alameda St (☎ 213/624-0171), on the north side of downtown, from which you can easily access the city's MTA bus lines.

Information

LA has a number of visitor centers. The downtown one is at 685 S Figueroa St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 213/689-8822, 🌐 www.lacvb.com); others, all open normal weekday working hours, are in Hollywood, in the Hollywood & Highland mall, 6801 Hollywood Blvd (☎ 323/467-6412); Santa Monica, 1920 Main St (☎ 310/393-7593, 🌐 www.santamonica.com); near Disneyland, 800 W Katella Ave (☎ 714/239-1340, 🌐 www.anaheimoc.org); Beverly Hills, 239 S Beverly Drive (☎ 310/248-1000, 🌐 www.beverlyhillscvb.com); Pasadena, 171 S Los Robles Ave (☎ 626/795-9311, 🌐 www.pasadenacal.com); and Long Beach, 1 World Trade Center, suite 300 (☎ 1-800/452-7829, 🌐 www.visitlongbeach.com).

City transportation

The sheer scale of LA – its detractors call it “nineteen suburbs in search of a city” – means that it really is difficult to get around without a car, unless you're confining your visit to more centralized spots like Santa Monica, Pasadena, or

Guided tours

Some of your best bets for touring downtown and other spots are the walking tours offered by the LA Conservancy (Sat 10am; $10; ☎213/623-CITY, 🌐www.laconservancy.org), which concentrate on various aspects of the city's architecture, history, and culture. Innumerable bus tours introduce the city as well, though they won't show you anything you couldn't see more cheaply yourself. Costs are $20–30 minimum. The mainstream bus tours whiz you past the main sights and the homes of the stars – though you often won't see much more than the ivy-covered gates of the rich and famous. Operators include Red Line Tours, 6773 Hollywood Blvd (☎323/402-1072, 🌐www.redlinetours.com), and Hollywood Fantasy Tours, 6671 Hollywood Blvd (☎323/469-8184, 🌐www.hollywoodfantasytours.com). Alternatively, and much more interestingly, Neon Cruises, 501 W Olympic Blvd, downtown (June–Oct; $45; ☎213/489-9918, 🌐www.neonmona.org), offer three-hour-long, eye-popping evening tours of LA's best remaining neon art, once a month on Saturdays, sponsored by the Museum of Neon Art.

downtown LA. Even though the traffic is often bumper-to-bumper, the free-ways are the only way to cover long distances quickly. Otherwise, try to relax on the fastest alternative, express buses.

Public transportation

LA's Metrorail train system comprises five limited lines, distinguished by color: the Red Line stretches from Union Station through Hollywood to North Hollywood in the San Fernando Valley; North Hollywood to the western Valley is served by the Orange Line; the Green Line goes from Hawthorne to Norwalk along the Century Freeway (but stops short of LAX); the Blue Line connects downtown through Watts to downtown Long Beach; and the Gold Line links downtown to the San Gabriel Valley through Old Pasadena. Tickets cost $1.25 one way, or 75¢ at night 9pm–5am, and trains run every five to fifteen minutes (more infrequently at night). By contrast, Metrolink commuter trains ($4.50–12 one way; ☎1-800/371-LINK, 🌐www.metrolinktrains.com) operate primarily inter-suburban routes on weekdays, though they can be useful if you find yourself in far-flung cities at the fringes of the metropolis.

Car-less Angelenos are still most well served, however, by buses, most of which are run by the LA County Metropolitan Transit Authority (MTA or “Metro; ☎213/626-4455 or 1-800/COMMUTE, 🌐www.mta.net). Information can also be obtained in person at the East Portal of downtown's Union Station, 800 N Alameda St (Mon–Fri 6am–6.30pm), and 5301 Wilshire Blvd, Mid-Wilshire (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm). Buses on the major streets between downtown and the coast run roughly every fifteen minutes between 5am and 2am; other routes, and the all-night services along the major streets, are less frequent. At night, be careful not to get stranded alone downtown waiting for a connection.

The standard one-way fare is $1.25; transfers cost 25¢ more, but must be made within an hour; express buses, and any others using the freeway, are $1.75 up to $3.25. If you're staying a while, you can save some money with a daily, weekly or monthly pass, which cost $3, $14 and $52, respectively. There are also the mini DASH buses (☎808-2273 for area codes 213, 310, 323, and 818, 🌐www.ladottransit.com), with a flat fare of 25¢, and broad coverage throughout downtown and limited routes elsewhere in the city. You'll be hard pressed to find an available taxi cruising the streets, so call ahead; among the more reliable companies are the Independent Cab Co. (☎1-800/521-8294), Yellow Cab (☎ 1-800/200-1085), and United Independent Taxi (☎ 1-800/411-0303). Fares include a base charge of $2; add $2 per mile, and tack on another $2.50 if you're getting picked up from LAX.

Cycling

Cycling in LA may sound perverse, but in some areas it can be one of the better ways of getting around. There are beachside bike paths between Santa Monica and Redondo Beach, and from Long Beach to Newport Beach, and many equally enjoyable inland routes, notably around Griffith Park and Pasadena. Contact AAA, 2601 S Figueroa St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 213/741-3686), or the LA Department of Transportation, known as CalTrans, 100 S Main St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 213/897-3656, 🌐 www.dot.ca.gov), for maps and information. The best place to rent a bike for the beaches is around the Venice Boardwalk, where numerous outlets include Spokes 'n' Stuff, 4175 Admiralty Way (☎ 310/306-3332) and 1700 Ocean Front Walk (☎ 310/395-4748); in summer, bike rental stands line the beach. Prices range from $10 a day for a clunker to $20 a day or more for a mountain bike. Many beachside stores also rent roller skates and rollerblades.

Accommodation

There's a wide range of places to stay in LA. Downtown has both upscale and budget hotels, Hollywood has a wide range of cheap motels, and the Westside and Malibu are mid- to upper-range territory. If you're not driving, choose your base carefully to avoid lengthy cross-town journeys between these areas, or divide your stay between them. The best campgrounds in the LA area are along the Orange County coast, such as Bolsa Chica in Huntington Beach and the state parks at San Clemente and Crystal Cove (all ☎ 1-800/444-7275), and in the mountains and beaches around Malibu, notably Malibu Creek State Park (☎ 1-800/706-8809) and Leo Carrillo State Beach (☎ 1-818/706-1310). Campsites run $17–25.

Hotels, motels, and B&Bs

Hotels and motels are listed by neighborhood. If you're arriving on a late flight, or leaving on an early one, note that hotels near LAX are blandly similar and generally cost around $50–75 a night, but do offer complimentary shuttle service to and from the terminals. Prices increase at many tourist-oriented establishments during peak travel periods, typically over the summer and on weekends, especially those near major attractions like Disneyland and Universal Studios. However, weekday rates at business-oriented hotels, especially during conventions, can be just as expensive, or even more so, than weekend prices.

Downtown and around

Cecil 640 S Main St ☎ 213/624-4545. Grand old 1920s hotel that's been refurbished as a clean, low-budget property; rooms are basic, but have more style than you'd expect, and there's also Internet access. It's in a dicey area, so be cautious after dark. ③

Hilton Checkers 535 S Grand ☎ 213/624-0000 or 1-800/HILTONS, 🌐 www.hiltoncheckers.com. One of the great LA hotels, with sleek modern appointments in historic 1920s architecture, and nicely furnished rooms, rooftop pool, and spa. Terrific downtown views, too. ③ weekdays, ⑦ weekends.

Millennium Biltmore 506 S Grand Ave ☎ 213/624-1011 or 1-800/222-8888, 🌐 www.thebiltmore.com. Neoclassical 1923 architecture meets modern luxury, including a health club modeled on a Roman bathhouse. Elegant rooms, and a view overlooking the city. ⑦

Miyako Inn 328 E 1st St ☎ 213/617-2000, 🌐 www.miyakoinn.com. Despite the grim concrete exterior, this is a pleasant hotel featuring clean rooms with fridges, spa, and karaoke bar. 5

Ritz Milner 813 S Flower St ☎213/627-6981, www.milner-hotels.com. Somewhat bare-bones rooms at this restored old building south of Bunker Hill, but still cheap and clean and in a prime location. Larger suites also available. 4

The Standard 550 S Flower St ☎213/892-8080, www.standardhotel.com. The downtown branch of LA's uber-trendy chain features sleek, modern furnishings and quirky decor, but is best known for its rooftop bar. Although billed as a "business hotel," the party scene is pretty much constant. The cheapest rooms are small and basic. 4-5

 Westin Bonaventure 404 S Figueroa St ☎213/624-1000 or 1-800/228-3000, www.starwoodhotels.com. Modernist luxury hotel with five glass towers that resemble cocktail shakers, a six-story atrium with a "lake," and elegantly remodeled rooms. A breathtaking exterior elevator ride ascends to a rotating cocktail lounge. Suites are upwards of $2000. 6-9

Wilshire Grand 930 Wilshire Blvd ☎213/688-7777 or 1-800/695-8284, www.wilshiregrand.com. Large Bunker Hill hotel with health club and pool. Mainly geared toward business travelers, with clean and comfy rooms; pricey during the week ($199), but weekends bring the cost down ($129). 5-7

Hollywood

Chateau Marmont 8221 Sunset Blvd ☎323/656-1010, www.chateaumarmont.com. Exclusive Norman Revival hotel resembling a dark fortress that's hosted all manner of celebrities. Largely suites and bungalows, up to $3000. Cheapest rooms are $335. 5

Grafton 8462 Sunset Blvd ☎323/654-6470, www.graftononsunset.com. Nice boutique hotel with attractive furnishings, in-room stereos and VCRs, plus a pool, fitness center, and complimentary shuttle to nearby malls and businesses. An extra $40 will get you a king bed. 6-7

Hollywood Metropolitan 5825 Sunset Blvd ☎323/962-5800 or 1-800/962-5800, www.metropolitanhotel.com. Sleek high-rise in central Hollywood, with flashy exterior elevator, good views, and spacious rooms. Good value for the area, a bit south of major attractions. 4

Hollywood Roosevelt 7000 Hollywood Blvd ☎323/466-7000, www.hollywoodroosevelt.com. The first hotel built for the movie greats in 1927, now remodeled with a boutique flair. The rooms are still on the smallish side, but the Corinthian-columned lobby reeks of Hollywood atmosphere and the hotel features a hot tub, gym, swimming pool, and plenty of Tinseltown kitsch. 8

Orchid Suites 1753 Orchid Ave ☎323/874-9678 or 1-800/537-3052, www.orchidsuites.com. Roomy, if spartan, suites with cable TV, kitchenettes, and heated pool. Very close to the most popular parts of Hollywood – adjacent to the massive Hollywood & Highland mall. 4

Renaissance Hollywood 1755 N Highland Blvd ☎323/856-1200, www.renaissancehollywood.com. The hotel centerpiece of the Hollywood & Highland mall complex, with arty flair in the overall design, upscale rooms and suites, and a prime location in the heart of tourist central. 9

West LA and Beverly Hills

 Bel Air 701 Stone Canyon Rd ☎310/472-1211 or 1-800/648-1097, www.hotel-belair.com. The nicest hotel in LA bar none – and the only business in Bel Air – in a lushly overgrown canyon above Beverly Hills. If you can't afford the rooms, which can reach $1000 a night, go for a beautiful brunch by Swan Lake. 6

Beverly Hills Hotel 9641 Sunset Blvd ☎310/276-2251, www.beverlyhillshotel.com. The classic Hollywood resort, with a bold pink-and-green color scheme and Mission-style design, surrounded by its own exotic gardens. Rooms feature marbled bathrooms, VCRs, and hot tubs, and the famed Polo Lounge restaurant is also on-site. 9

Claremont 1044 Tiverton Ave ☎310/208-5957. An amazingly good deal for the area, this cheerful and inexpensive little hotel sits very close to UCLA and Westwood Village. Rooms are fairly basic, but the main difficulty is the lack of parking. 3

Culver Hotel 9400 Culver Blvd ☎310/838-7963, www.culverhotel.com. A lovely, restored historic landmark featuring red-and-black decor, old-fashioned iron railings in the lobby, and cozy rooms with good views of Culver City, just south of West LA. 5

Elan Hotel Modern 8435 Beverly Blvd ☎323/658-6663, www.elanhotel.com. Semi-upscale boutique hotel, located in a busy shopping zone just north of the Beverly Center mall. Rooms are nicely appointed, and there's also a fitness center and spa. 6

Hotel del Flores 409 N Crescent Drive, Beverly Hills ☎310/274-5115, www.hoteldelflores.com. Three blocks from Rodeo Drive, one of the better deals around. Modest, pleasant and very good value for the area, with simple, quaint rooms. Shared baths bring down the cost to $65. 5-4

Hostels

Hostels dot the city, though some limit stays to a few nights. Many hostels also offer cut-rate single and double rooms. You can expect little more from your stay than a clean, safe bed, somewhere to lock your valuables, and a typically colorful crowd of visitors – sometimes making for quite the party scene. Some hostels also offer tours of theme parks, shopping malls, and stars' homes, while others organize social activities such as volleyball and pizza parties.

Banana Bungalow 2775 Cahuenga Blvd W, in Cahuenga Pass ☎ 323/851-1129 or 1-800/446-7835, www.bananabungalow.com. The City

If LA has a heart, it's downtown, in the center of the basin, which offers a taste of almost everything you'll find elsewhere in the city, from upscale art along Bunker Hill to commercial zones like the Garment District, compressed into an area of small, easily walkable blocks. West from downtown, Hollywood has streets imbued with movie myths and legends – even if the genuine glamor is long gone. Adjoining West LA is home to the city's newest money, shown off in Beverly Hills and along the Sunset Strip. Santa Monica and Venice further to the west are the quintessential oceanfront LA of palm trees, white sands, and laid-back living, while the coastline itself stretches another twenty miles northwest to glamorous Malibu, home to the film industry elite.

Suburban Orange County, to the southeast, holds little of interest apart from Disneyland, a few museums, and a handful of libertine beach towns. On the far side of the northern hills lie the San Gabriel and San Fernando valleys, or simply “the Valley,” seen by mainstream Los Angeles as nothing more than endless tract homes and strip malls, but in reality a bit more interesting.

Downtown LA

Downtown LA embraces the city's every social, economic, and ethnic group, and the whole area can easily be seen in a day on foot. LA's original settlement at The Plaza is the obvious first stop, before crossing into the municipal plazas of the Civic Center and the corporate zone of Bunker Hill, and continuing through the free-spirited chaos along Broadway.

The Plaza

Within the El Pueblo de Los Angeles Historic Park, 845 N Alameda St (daily 9am–5pm; free; ☎213/628-2381, 🌐www.ci.la.ca.us/ELP), the square known as the Plaza was roughly the site of the city's original 1781 townsite, and a few evocative early buildings remain in situ. The plaza church La Placita, 535 N Main St (daily 8am–8pm; 🌐www.laplacita.org), the city's oldest, is a small adobe structure with a gabled roof. From 1861 to 1923 the building was remodeled or reconstructed four times, but it still evokes a sense of the local heritage. Mass (occasionally with Mariachi bands) takes place three or four times daily. Olvera Street, which runs north from the plaza, contrived in part as a pseudo-Mexican village market, offers a cheery collection of food and craft stalls and the historic Avila Adobe (daily 9am–5pm; free), technically the city's oldest building, though it's been completely rebuilt in the last thirty years. Other worthwhile sights include the Sepulveda House (Mon–Sat 10am–3pm; free), an 1887 Eastlake Victorian structure that has rooms highlighting different periods in Mexican-American history, and the Garnier Building, recently reopened as the Chinese American Museum, 425 N Los Angeles St (Tues–Sun 10am–3pm; $3; 🌐www.camla.org). Inside, local Chinese history, society, and culture is detailed, including revealing letters, photos, and documents, as well as a smattering of contemporary art and the re-creation of a Chinese herb shop c.1900.

Across Alameda Street from the Plaza, the magnificent Mission Revival Union Station is chiefly used as a Metrorail and Amtrak terminal, although it was once the site of Chinatown, which now sits a few blocks to the north and is mainly of interest for a host of fine restaurants.

Civic Center

South from the Plaza, across the Santa Ana Freeway, the municipal-government core of the Civic Center offers three of the city's most notable buildings. City Hall, 200 N Spring St, appeared on TV as Dragnet's imposing symbol of civic virtue and as the Daily Planet office in the original Superman show. You can get a good look at the inside of the building on free tours, which include its 28th-story 360-degree observation deck (daily 10am–1pm; reserve at ☎213/485-4423, 🌐www.lacityhall.org). To the west, Disney Hall, 1st Street at Grand Avenue, is Frank Gehry's grand spectacle of modern architecture, a 2300-seat acoustic showpiece with a curvaceous, stainless-steel exterior and an interior with rich, warm acoustics and a mammoth, intricate pipe organ. It also may be one of the best places to hear music in the country, which you can do courtesy of the LA Philharmonic (🌐wdch.laphil.com; see p.1073) during the season. A long block north, the Our Lady of the Angels Catholic church (Mon–Fri 6.30am–6pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 7am–6pm; tours Mon–Fri 1pm; free; 🌐www.olacathedral.org) resembles a concrete fortress on the outside – but features exquisite decor inside, such as a grand marble altar and ultra-thin alabaster screens for diffusing light. Finally, though its massive complex isn't particularly distinguished, the Los Angeles Times, near Spring and 1st streets (by reservation at ☎213/237-5757), offers free tours that show how the West Coast's biggest newspaper is put together.

Bunker Hill and Little Tokyo

Until a century ago the area south of the Civic Center, Bunker Hill, was LA's most elegant neighborhood, its elaborate Victorian mansions and houses connected by funicular railroad to the growing business district down below. But after a half-century of decay, a wrecking-ball approach to 1960s urban renewal transformed it into the imperious Financial District, sprouting colossal new towers. Amid the fancy offices and luxury condos of the California Plaza at 250 S Grand Avenue, the Museum of Contemporary Art (MOCA; Mon & Fri 11am–5pm, Thurs 11am–8pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm; $8, free Thurs 5–8pm; @ www.moca.org) was designed by showman architect Arata Isozaki as a vivid array of reddish geometric blocks. In addition to work by Franz Kline, Mark Rothko, Robert Rauschenberg, and Claes Oldenburg, and some eye-opening temporary exhibits, it features an impressive selection of Southern California artists, ranging from Lari Pittman's spooky, sexualized silhouettes to Robert Williams's feverishly violent and satiric comic-book-styled paintings. A ticket also entitles you to same-day entry into The Geffen Contemporary (same hours as above), further east at 152 N Central Ave, a former police garage now used for MOCA's edgier temporary shows. Across from the Geffen, Little Tokyo is an appealing collection of historic sites, restaurants, and galleries, highlighted by the comprehensive Japanese American National Museum, 369 E 1st St (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm, Thurs closes at 8pm; $8; @ www.janm.org), housed in a former Buddhist temple constructed in 1925. The museum offers everything from origami to traditional furniture and folk craftwork to the story of the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II.

Back atop Bunker Hill, catercorner to MOCA, the superficial but amusing Wells Fargo Museum, 333 S Grand Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free; @ www.wellsfargohistory.com), displays old mining equipment, antiques, photographs, a two-pound chunk of gold, a re-created assay office from the nineteenth century, and a simulated stagecoach journey from St Louis to San Francisco. A few blocks southwest rise the sparkling glass tubes of the Westin Bonaventure Hotel, 404 S Figueroa St (see “Accommodation,” p.1048), whose lobby is an Escher-style labyrinth of spiraling ramps and balconies, worth negotiating for a ride in the glass elevators that run up and down the outside of the building, giving splendid views over much of the downtown and beyond. Finally, a short distance away, the Richard J. Riordan Central Library, 630 W 5th St (Mon–Thurs 10am–8pm, Fri & Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 1–5pm; tours Mon–Fri 12.30pm, Sat 11am & 2pm, Sun 2pm; @ www.lapl.org/central), is named for LA's billionaire mayor of the 1990s, but it dates back to 1926, the last work of pioneering architect Bertram Goodhue, and its striking, angular lines set the tone for many LA buildings, most obviously City Hall.

Broadway and the Old Bank District

Although it's hard to picture now, Broadway was once LA's most fashionable shopping and entertainment district. Today it's largely taken over by the hustle and bustle of Hispanic clothing and trinket stores, all to a soundtrack of blaring salsa music. You can sample a vivid taste of the area at the broadly ethnic Grand Central Market, between 3rd and 4th streets (daily 9am–6pm; @ www.grandcentralsquare.com), where you'll find everything from pickled pigs' feet to sheeps' brains. Right alongside, the whimsical terracotta facade of the 1918 Million Dollar Theater mixes buffalo heads with bald eagles, and was seen in the film Blade Runner, as was the neighboring 1893 Bradbury Building, no. 304 (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; free), highlighted by a magnificent sunlit atrium surrounded by stylish wrought-iron balconies and open-cage elevators. While the moviehouse has since closed, the extravagant arches and marble columns of the Los Angeles Theater, 615 S Broadway, and the Orpheum's neo-French Renaissance grand staircases and chandeliers, at no. 630, are still on view during the annual “Last Remaining Seats” film festival in June (details at @ www.laconservancy.org).

If you venture a few blocks west of Broadway, you'll come to the most recent focus of LA's urban-revival efforts, the Old Bank District, as developers now have named it, based around Spring Street from 7th to 3rd streets. Although there are no official sights, these stately, hundred-year-old Beaux Arts buildings are now being converted into upscale housing, fancy shops, chic eateries, and the like.

South Park and the Garment District

A few blocks south of Broadway's main sights is South Park, named by developers apparently lacking irony or access to cable TV. The highlight is the Museum of Neon Art, 501 W Olympic Blvd (Wed–Sat 11am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5; www.neonmona.org), recognizable by the visage of Mona Lisa smiling through blue-and-yellow neon squiggles. The museum's small exhibition space showcases contemporary neon designs and a range of strange kinetic art, plus some great old neon theater signs. Just north across Grand Hope Park, the Fashion Institute of Design and Merchandising, 919 S Grand Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; free; www.fashionmuseum.org), features items drawn from its collection of ten thousand pieces of costume and apparel – French gowns, Russian jewels, quirky shoes, and so on. The main draw is the Art of Motion Picture Costume Design show that runs from February to April, displaying colorful outfits that may include anything from Liz Taylor's Cleopatra garb to Austin Powers's retro-60s gear.

Apart from these museums, the other major attraction in the area is the welter of commercial activity in the Garment District, bounded by Los Angeles and San Pedro streets and 7th and 9th avenues, where you can pick up decent fabric for as little as $2 per yard.

Around downtown

The LA sprawl begins as soon as you leave downtown. Freeways and boulevards cut through diverse environs, with large distances separating the points of interest. As such, it makes little sense to see them consecutively.

Wilshire Boulevard

Heading west from downtown, Wilshire Boulevard was once a grand commercial corridor, but has fallen on harder times in recent decades. There are a few isolated points of interest before you reach West LA, however, notably the seminal Bullocks Wilshire department store, 3050 Wilshire Blvd. This is nothing less than the epitome of 1920s Art Deco on the West Coast, crowned with a colossal copper tower and original “Zigzag” design, now beautifully restored as the law library of adjacent Southwestern University. You can reserve space for one of the school's periodic “Tea and Tour” events (T213/738-6814, Eevents@swlaw.edu, Wwww.swlaw.edu/library), though more regular monthly tours are planned for the future. Also in the neighborhood and worth a look is the First Congregational Church, 540 S Commonwealth Ave, a 1930s English Gothic-styled cathedral known for its huge and glorious set of pipe organs (free recitals Thurs 12.10pm) and, appropriately, the annual Bach Festival in October ($7–30; information at T213/385-1345, Wwww.fccla.org).

Just south of Wilshire as you continue west, along Olympic Boulevard between Vermont and Western avenues, Koreatown is five times larger than the more touristy areas of Chinatown and Little Tokyo, and is home to the largest concentration of Koreans outside Korea. Beyond good authentic restaurants, there's not much for visitors to see here.

Exposition Park

South of downtown, across Exposition Boulevard from the fortress-like USC campus, Exposition Park is one of the most appreciated parks in LA. The California Science Center, off Figueroa Street at 700 State Drive (daily 10am–5pm; free; 🌐 www.californiasciencecenter.org), contains enough enjoyable working models and thousands of gadgets to keep kids absorbed. Just outside, an IMAX Theater ($8, children $4.75) attracts youthful patrons of nature documentaries, while closer to Exposition Boulevard, the Center's Air and Space Gallery (Mon–Fri 10am–1pm, Sat & Sun 11am–4pm; free) is marked by a sleek jet stuck to its facade and offers a series of satellites, telescopes, airplanes, and rockets. To the south, the California African American Museum, 600 State Drive (Wed–Sat 10am–4pm; free; 🌐 www.caamuseum.org), has stimulating exhibits on the history and culture of America's black communities.

The Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County, 900 Exposition Blvd (Mon–Fri 9.30am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $9; 🌐 www.nhm.org), with its echoey domes and travertine columns, has a tremendous stock of dinosaur skeletons that includes the skull of a Tyrannosaurus rex, and the frame of a Diatryma – a huge flightless bird. Other fascinating displays include Mayan pyramid murals and the reconstructed contents of a Mexican tomb. The last major sights in the park are the LA Coliseum, familiar as the site of the 1932 and 1984 Olympics and for its towering headless statues, and the Rose Garden (daily 10am–5pm; free), whose 16,000 bushes are at their most fragrant in April and May.

A brief history of Hollywood

Once the home of the country's largest Presbyterian church, Hollywood started life as a temperance colony in 1887, intended to provide a sober, God-fearing alternative to raunchy downtown LA, eight miles away by rough country road. The film industry, of course, was drawn here from the East Coast not by puritanical morality, but by the predictable sunshine, low taxes, cheap labor, and diverse shooting locations – and as a way of dodging Thomas Edison's restrictive motion-picture patents. Nearby Silver Lake was the first (temporary) site of the movie business, but the first permanent studio opened in Hollywood in 1911, and within three years the place was packed with filmmakers such as Cecil B. DeMille, who shared his barn-converted office space with a horse and other budding magnates like Samuel Goldwyn, Adolph Zukor, and Jesse Lasky. The space is now home to the Hollywood Heritage Museum, 2100 N Highland Ave (Sat & Sun 11am–4pm; $5; 🌐 www.hollywoodheritage.org), exhibiting antiques and treasures from the silent era.

The industry expanded fast, and eager new arrivals soon swamped the original small-scaled community. Once movie-making had proved itself to be a financially secure business, film production became a conglomerated, mechanical, and specialized system. Small companies either went bust or were incorporated into the big studios, which had by the 1930s almost all relocated to more distant digs in Culver City, Burbank, and West LA – of the big names, only Paramount remained.

The demise of the studio system came in the 1950s, through government anti-trust actions, the postwar revival of the international film industry, and, of course, television. A few lean decades followed. In the 1970s and 1980s, though, directors like Steven Spielberg and George Lucas re-engineered American movies around the concept of the blockbuster – high-priced, special-effects-laden epics that would appeal to as wide a range of audiences as possible. Thanks to this trend, and the worldwide financial consolidation of media enterprises, Hollywood continues to be a symbol for the enduring success of American movies – slick, entertaining fare with gorgeous actors, predictable plots, and happy endings – and a mechanized dream factory of international proportions.

The Watts Towers

Several miles south of downtown, South Central LA hardly ranks on the tourist circuit, and is well worth avoiding, with the notable exception of the stunning, Gaudiesque Watts Towers, 1765 E 107th St. Created by Italian immigrant Simon Rodia from 1921 to 1954, these striking pieces of folk art were constructed from iron, stainless steel, old bedframes, and cement, and decorated with fragments of bottles and around 70,000 crushed seashells. Although routinely threatened with demolition, the towers have survived the decades and open for tours on sunny days (Fri & Sat 11am–2.30pm, Sun 12.30–3pm; free; @www.trywatts.com). Call the adjacent Watts Towers Arts Center, 1727 E 107th St (T 323/860-9964 or 213/847-4646), for more details. A good time to come is during the Day of the Drum/Simon Rodia Watts Towers Jazz Festival, which takes place in late September at an adjoining amphitheater.

Hollywood

If a single place-name encapsulates the LA dream of glamor, money, and overnight success, it's Hollywood. Millions of tourists arrive on pilgrimages, yet the big film companies moved out long ago and you're more likely to spot a porno theater than a movie star. Despite the spate of new malls and hotels and renovated movie palaces, the district can't match the mythical status it holds in the minds of its many star-struck visitors.

Central Hollywood

The lore, magic, and mystery of Central Hollywood create a pervasive sense of nostalgia that recent urban-renewal projects and redevelopment plans have tried to capitalize on. The biggest symbol of this newfound investment is the Hollywood & Highland mall (@www.hollywoodandhighland.com) at the eponymous intersection. However, despite hosting a major hotel, boutiques, and chic restaurants, adding grand silent-film-set architecture, and relocating the Oscars to the Kodak Theater on-site, this towering beacon of commerce is still no better than your average suburban shopping mall.

In the shadow of the iconic "record stack" of the Capitol Records Tower, the obvious place to begin exploring Hollywood Boulevard is the junction of Hollywood and Vine – the legendary location where budding stars could be "spotted" by big-shot directors and whisked off to fame and fortune. Nowadays, few aspiring stars loiter in this gritty environment, but many visitors do come to trace the Walk of Fame, which officially begins here with a series of gold-inset stars that honor famous and forgotten names of radio, TV, and film. Further west, at 6608 Hollywood Blvd, the purple and pink Frederick's of Hollywood has been (under-) dressing Hollywood's sex goddesses since 1947, as well as mortal bodies via mail order. Inside, the Celebrity Lingerie Hall of Fame (Mon–Fri 10am–9pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; free) displays some of the company's most famous corsets, bras, and panties, donated by glitterati from Lana Turner to Cher. If you're sufficiently fired up by this, wander down to the Erotic Museum, 6741 Hollywood Blvd (Sun–Thurs 11am–8pm, Fri–Sat 11am–11pm; $13; @www.theeroticmuseum.com), an intellectual attempt to probe the mysteries of libido, as well as Hollywood's latest attempt to contextualize (and profit from) the sleaze that's available for free on the streets outside.

Nearby, the Egyptian Theater, at no. 6712, was built in a modest attempt to re-create the Temple of Thebes, and the very first Hollywood premiere (Robin Hood) took place here in 1922. Now restored in glorious fashion, movie-lovers should make a special trip here to view an art, foreign, and indie film, or at least the documentary chronicling the rise of Hollywood (hour-long shows Sat & Sun 2pm & 3.30pm; $7; @www.americancinematheque.com). Also worth a look are the famous handprints and footprints in the concrete forecourt of the Chinese Theatre, west across Highland Avenue at 6925 Hollywood Blvd. For many decades, this has been the spot for movie premieres, an odd version of a classical Chinese temple, replete with quasi-Chinese motifs and upturned dragon tails.

Just west, the Hollywood Entertainment Museum, 7021 Hollywood Blvd (Thurs–Tues 11am–6pm; $12; @www.hollywoodmuseum.com), houses a collection of movie- and TV-related knickknacks highlighted by the full set of the TV show Cheers and the bridge of the Enterprise from Star Trek. Also chiefly of interest for fans of pop-culture ephemera, the Hollywood History Museum, just southeast at 1660 N Highland Ave (Thurs–Sun 10am–5pm; $15; @www.thehollywoodmuseum.com), has four levels of exhibits on the fashion, sets, make-up, special effects, and art design of mainstream American movies.

Further south, near Santa Monica Boulevard and Gower Street, Hollywood Forever Cemetery (daily dawn–dusk; free; @www.hollywoodforever.com) is the district's most famous graveyard, and features all manner of buried stars such as Rudolph Valentino and Douglas Fairbanks Sr, as well as more unexpected grave markers, such as Johnny Ramone playing one last guitar riff. South of the cemetery, Paramount Studios, 5555 Melrose Ave (2hr tour, Mon–Fri 10am & 2pm; $35; by reservation at ☎323/956-1777, @www.paramount.com/studio), is famous for its grand gate, though the original studio entrance – which Gloria Swanson rode through in Sunset Boulevard – is now inaccessible. The tour isn't quite up to the standard of other studio tours, but if you want to poke around empty soundstages and a mildly interesting backlot, it may be worth it.

Griffith Park

The greenery and mountain slopes that make up vast Griffith Park northeast of Hollywood (daily 6am–10pm, mountain roads close at dusk) offer lush fern and azalea gardens, a bird sanctuary, and many miles of fine trails – though the LA Zoo, 5333 Zoo Drive (daily 10am–5pm; $10; @www.lazoo.org), pales in comparison to its San Diego counterpart (see p.1038). The landmark Griffith Observatory, 2800 E Observatory Rd (closed for renovation until late 2006), has been used as a backdrop in innumerable Hollywood films, most famously Rebel Without a Cause, and the surrounding acres are marked by paths that lead into desolate but unspoiled terrain with great views over the LA basin and out to sea (provided the smog isn't too thick). One way to explore is on a rented bike from Spokes 'n' Stuff, near the park ranger station, at 4400 Crystal Springs Rd (weekends during daylight hours; $6–10 per hour; ☎323/662-6573). Definitely meriting a stop is the Museum of the American West, near the junction of the Ventura and Golden State freeways at 4700 Western Heritage Way (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs closes 8pm; $7.50; @www.museumoftheamericanwest.org), whose comprehensive collection of artifacts includes sections on native peoples, European exploration, nineteenth-century pioneers, the Wild West, Asian immigrants and, of course, Hollywood's versions of all of the above.

The Hollywood Hills

Around the canyons and slopes of the Hollywood Hills, which run from Hollywood itself into Benedict Canyon above Beverly Hills, mansions are so commonplace that only the half-dozen fully blown castles really stand out. Guided tours (see p.1046) can point out which is which, but for the most part you can't get close to them anyway, and none is open to the public. For a more up-close look at landmark architecture, take in a concert at the Hollywood Bowl, 2301

N Highland Ave (☎323/850-2000, 🌐www.hollywoodbowl.org), the massive concrete bandshell whose summer music offerings are rarely highbrow, but it's as good a spot as any to hear the roar of the 1812 Overture.

Throughout Hollywood, you can see the Hollywood Sign, erected as a property advertisement in 1923 (when it spelled "Hollywoodland," until 1949) and illuminated with four thousand light bulbs. Nowadays, infrared cameras and radar-activated zoom lenses have been installed to catch graffiti writers. Curious tourists who can't resist a close look are liable for a steep fine.

West LA

LA's Westside begins immediately beyond Hollywood in West LA, roughly bordered by the foothills of the Hollywood Hills to the north and the Santa Monica Freeway (I-10) to the south. West LA is the place where the city's nouveau riche flaunt their fortunes most conspicuously, from the trendy confines of West Hollywood and shadowy wealth of Bel Air to the high-priced shopping strips of Beverly Hills.

The Museum Mile

On the commercial axis of Wilshire Boulevard, the Miracle Mile, between La Brea and Fairfax avenues, was the premier property development of the 1930s. The area's department stores have since moved out, but recent development has created a "Museum Mile" in their place, also known as Museum Row. The first is sited at the La Brea Tar Pits, where for thousands of years, animals who tried to drink from the thin layer of water covering this rank pool of tar became stuck fast and preserved for posterity. It's now surrounded by life-sized replicas of such victims as mastodons and saber-toothed tigers, some of them reconstructed next door at the impressive George C. Page Museum, 5801 Wilshire Blvd (Mon–Fri 9.30am–5pm, weekends opens at 10am; $7; 🌐www.tarpits.org). Across the street, the Craft and Folk Art Museum (Tues, Wed & Fri 11am–5pm, Thurs 11am–7pm, Sat & Sun noon–6pm; $5; 🌐www.cafam.org) is best for fans of international folk art – Middle Eastern textiles, Ukrainian easter eggs, and so on – displayed in mildly interesting temporary exhibits.

On the west side of the La Brea Tar Pits, the enormous LA County Museum of Art (LACMA), 5905 Wilshire Blvd (Thurs–Tues noon–8pm, Fri closes 9pm; $9, students $5; 🌐www.lacma.org), comprises a set of drab blocks (now being remodeled into a more coherent Renzo Piano design), but its collections are among the best in the world. The Fearing Collection of funereal masks and sculpted guardian figures from pre-Columbian Mexico is highly impressive, but where the museum really excels is in its specializations: German Expressionist prints and drawings, scrolls and ceramics in the Pavilion for Japanese Art, and entire rooms devoted to Auguste Rodin, 17th-century Dutch masters, rare jewelry and porcelain, and Hollywood fashion designers. LACMA continues on to the western end of the Museum Mile to Fairfax Avenue, where blockbuster shows and children's art are the highlights of LACMA West (same hours and ticket), occupying a former department store building that has been compared to an oversized perfume bottle. Since various museum buildings will be closed until late 2007, if there's a collection you really want to see, call first to make sure it's on view.

Across from LACMA West, the Petersen Automotive Museum, 6060 Wilshire Blvd (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; $10; 🌐www.petersen.org), pays homage to motorized vehicles of all kinds on three floors, with rotating exhibits such as the Golden Age of customizing, Hollywood prop cars, and "million-dollar" vehicles.

West Hollywood

North along Fairfax Avenue from the Museum Mile, West Hollywood is home to Los Angeles's prominent – and affluent – gay community, as well as elderly pensioners and Russian immigrants. Melrose Avenue, LA's trendiest shopping street and one of the unmistakable symbols of Southern California, runs parallel to the less eventful main drag of Santa Monica Boulevard, where neon and Art Deco abound among a fluorescent rash of designer and secondhand boutiques, exotic antique shops, and avant-garde galleries. La Brea Avenue runs perpendicular to the east side of the Melrose district, offering more space, fewer tourists, and chic clothiers, upscale restaurants, and even trendier galleries.

North of West Hollywood, on either side of La Cienega Boulevard, is the two-mile-odd mix of restaurants hotels, billboards, and nightclubs on Sunset Boulevard known as the Sunset Strip, one of LA's best areas for nightlife. The scene hit its stride in the 1960s around the landmark Whisky-a-Go-Go club, no. 8901, which featured seminal psychedelic rock bands such as The Doors, Love, and Buffalo Springfield. In the 1970s the Sunset Hyatt hotel, no. 8401, became the infamous "Riot House" where Led Zeppelin raced motorcycles in the hallways and drugged-out rock stars committed unspeakable acts of debauchery. The hotel's pretty dull and corporate these days, but the music venues are well worth a visit, whether you want to rock, headbang, or just dance.

Beverly Hills and around

Beverly Hills is one of the world's wealthiest residential areas, patrolled by more cops per capita than anywhere else in the US. Glorified by the elite shops of Rodeo Drive, squeaky-clean streets, and ostentatious displays of wealth, the city is undoubtedly the height of LA pretension. Still, there are a number of decent and unassuming spots for visitors interested in things other than commodities. The Museum of Television and Radio (Wed–Sun noon–5pm; $10 donation; ☎ www.mtr.org) is one such place, vividly chronicling eighty years of our media-saturated age, while the Beverly Hills Trolley (July & Aug & Nov & Dec Tues–Sat 11am–4pm; $5) offers tourists a forty-minute glimpse of the city's highlights, departing hourly from the corner of Dayton Way and Rodeo Drive.

In the northern hills and canyons, a number of well-concealed gardens and parks offer a respite from the shopping frenzy below. The wooded Virginia Robinson Gardens, 1008 Elden Way (tours Tues–Fri 10am & 1pm; $10; by appointment only at ☎ 310/276-5367), spreads across six acres, with more than a thousand varieties of flora, including some impressive Australian King Palm trees. To the east, the grounds of the biggest house in Beverly Hills, Greystone Mansion, 905 Loma Vista Drive, are now maintained as a public park by the city (daily 10am–5pm; free). The fifty-thousand-square-foot manor was once the property of oil titan Edward Doheny, but is rarely open to the public. However, you can admire the mansion's limestone facade and intricately designed chimneys, then stroll through the sixteen-acre park, with its koi-filled ponds and expansive views of the LA sprawl.

Just outside Beverly Hills, Century City is a charmless expanse of concrete and steel that was once the studio lot for 20th Century Fox, which now stands off-limits at 10201 Pico Blvd. A bit further east, the Museum of Tolerance, 9786 W Pico Blvd (April–Oct Mon–Thurs 11am–6.30pm, Fri 11am–5pm, Sun 11am–7.30pm; Nov–March Fri closes 3pm; $10; ☎ www.museumoftolerance.com), looks at international hate and intolerance in general, tracing the rise of Nazism to a harrowing conclusion in a replica gas chamber.

Westwood

West of Beverly Hills and north of Wilshire Boulevard, Westwood is the home of the University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA), and is known to many as “Westwood Village.” Once LA’s prime movie-going district, Westwood has lost some of its cinematic eminence due to a lack of parking, but remains the most densely packed movie-theater district in town, and its 1931 Westwood Village Theater, 961 Buxton Ave, is still used for Hollywood premieres or “sneak previews” to gauge audience reactions.

The university itself has a number of good gardens and museums worth exploring. The highlights include the Fowler Museum of Cultural History, Bruin Walk at Westwood Plaza (Wed–Sun noon–5pm, Thurs closes 8pm; free; 📍 www.fowler.ucla.edu), offering an intriguing selection of native masks from around the world, more than ten thousand textile pieces, and an extensive collection of African and Polynesian art. The Franklin Murphy Sculpture Garden, in the northeast corner of campus, is LA’s best outdoor display of modern sculpture, featuring pieces by Henry Moore, Barbara Hepworth, Henri Matisse, Jacques Lipchitz, and Isamu Noguchi. The Hannah Carter Japanese Garden, 10619 Bellagio Rd (Tues, Wed & Fri 10am–3pm; free; by appointment only at ☎ 310/794-0320 or 📧 www.japanesegarden.ucla.edu), is an idyllic spot featuring magnolias and Japanese maples, and traditional structures and river rocks brought directly from Japan. Finally, art lovers shouldn’t miss a trip to the UCLA Hammer Museum, 10899 Wilshire Blvd (Tues–Sat 11am–7pm, Thurs 11am–9pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $5, kids free, Thurs free to all; 📍 www.hammer.ucla.edu), where the minor Rembrandts and Rubenses may be less than stunning, but there are some impressive early-American works from Gilbert Stuart, Thomas Eakins, and John Singer Sargent, as well as a range of insightful, sometimes risk-taking, modern and avant-garde temporary exhibits.

The Getty Center

Towering over the surrounding area, the Getty Center, near the Sepulveda Pass north of Wilshire Blvd (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm, weekends closes 9pm; free, parking

△ The Getty Center

$7; ⑩ www.getty.edu), is Richard Meier's towering modernist temple to high art, clad in acres of travertine, its various buildings devoted to art exhibition, conservation, and acquisition, as well as other philanthropic tasks. Its surrounding gardens are arranged with rigid geometric precision. You can get here by MTA bus #561, which stops on Sepulveda Boulevard, near the lower parking lot.

Obligated by law to spend part of its multi-billion-dollar endowment every year, the Getty can outbid anyone to get what it wants, which is usually anything except contemporary art – a real deficiency in the museum's collections. Still, the quality of the exhibits is extraordinary, especially in the rooms devoted to decorative arts, where you can see a formidable array of ornate French furniture from the reign of Louis XIV, with clocks, chandeliers, tapestries, and gilt-edged commodes filling several overwhelmingly opulent chambers. The painting collection features all the major names from the thirteenth century on, including Van Gogh's Irises and several Rembrandt portraits. Elsewhere in the museum, photography is well represented by Man Ray, Moholy-Nagy and other notables, and there's also a rich assortment of classical, Renaissance, and Baroque sculpture – highlighted by Bernini's Boy with a Dragon, depicting a plump, possibly angelic toddler bending back the jaw of a dragon with surprising ease.

Venice, Santa Monica, and Malibu

Set along an unbroken twenty-mile stretch of white-sand beaches, the cozy, sometime quirky communities that line Santa Monica Bay feature some of the best vistas LA has to offer, with none of the smog or searing heat that can make the rest of the metropolis unpleasant. The entire area is well served by public transportation, near enough to the airport, and a wide choice of accommodation makes it a good base for seeing the rest of the city.

Venice

Venice was laid out in 1905 by developer Abbot Kinney as a romantic replica of the northern Italian city, complete with a twenty-mile network of canals. Over the decades it then became an amusement-park zone, grungy oil-drilling site, funky zone for hippies, drugs, and crime, and finally – the current version – a swank, arty district drawing a mix of hipsters, yuppies, and real-estate speculators. The town's main artery, Windward Avenue, runs from the sands into what was the Grand Circle of the canal system. An original Neoclassical arcade, around the intersection with Pacific Avenue, is alive with health-food shops, secondhand record stores, and roller-skate rental stands. Nearby, the few remaining canals display renovated white bridges and pedestrian-friendly footpaths (best accessed northbound on Dell Avenue from Washington Boulevard), along with a bevy of eye-popping housing designs.

Nowhere else does LA parade itself quite so openly as along the wide pathway of Venice Boardwalk, packed year-round at weekends and every day in summer with jugglers, fire-eaters, roller-skating guitar players, and people-watchers. South of Windward is Muscle Beach, a legendary outdoor weightlifting center where serious-looking dudes pump serious iron, and budding basketballers hold court on the concrete. Around the pier, outlets such as Spokes 'n' Stuff (☎ 310/395-4748), rent out bikes and rollerblades. If you've time, other sights worth a peek are Jonathan Borofsky's grotesque and looming sculpture Ballerina Clown, at Main Street and Rose Avenue; the chic restaurants and boutiques lining Abbot Kinney Boulevard; and, south of the Boardwalk, the latest in sleek modern architecture along Ocean Front Walk.

Santa Monica

Immediately north of Venice, Santa Monica is the oldest and biggest of LA's resorts, perched on palm-tree-shaded bluffs above the blue Pacific. Once a wild beachfront playground, it's now a self-consciously healthy and very liberal community with a large expatriate British and Irish contingent.

Santa Monica reaches nearly three miles inland, but most spots of interest are within a few blocks of the beach, notably Palisades Park, the pleasant, cypress-tree-lined strip along the top of the bluffs which makes for striking views of the surf below. Two blocks east of Ocean Avenue, the Third Street Promenade, a pedestrianized stretch with street vendors, buskers, and itinerant evangelists, is the closest LA comes to having a dynamic urban energy, and is by far the best place to come for alfresco dining, beer-drinking, and people-watching.

The real focus of Santa Monica is down below, on the beach, which is better for sunbathing than swimming, and on the refurbished Santa Monica pier, boasting a well-restored 1922 wooden carousel (mid-March to Sept Mon–Thurs 11am–5pm, Fri–Sun 11am–7pm; Oct to mid-March Thurs–Mon only; 50¢ per ride; ☎ 310/394.8042) that was featured in the 1973 movie The Sting. Although the familiar thrill rides of Pacific Park (summer daily 11am–11pm, Sat & Sun closes 12.30am; $17, kids $9; ☎ www.pacpark.com) may catch your eye, save your money for the Santa Monica Pier Aquarium (summer Mon–Fri 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 12.30–6.30pm; $5; ☎ www.healthebay.org/smpa), below the pier at 1600 Ocean Front Walk, where you can get your fingers wet touching sea anemones and starfish.

Another popular spot in town is the half-mile-long assortment of chic restaurants, boutiques, bookstores, and drinking joints along Main Street. Beyond consuming, there's little else to do but visit the California Heritage Museum, no. 2612 (Wed–Sun 11am–4pm; $5; ☎ www.californiaheritagemuseum.org), which hosts temporary displays on regional topics like old-time amusement parks, and has permanent exhibits on pottery, furniture, and decorative arts.

Finally, fans of the arts are advised to poke around inland Santa Monica for a trip to Bergamot Station, 2525 Michigan Ave, which houses many small art galleries (most open Tues–Fri 10am–6pm; free), as well as the Santa Monica Museum of Art, in Building G-1 (Tues–Sat 11am–6pm, $3; ☎ www.smmao.org), a good space to see some of the most engaging work of the local scene. For some serious art from antiquity, head five miles north along the beautiful, curving Pacific Coast Highway (PCH), to the opulent Getty Villa, 17985 PCH (Thurs–Mon 10am–5pm; free; by reservation only at ☎ 310/440-7300, ☎ www.getty.edu), which re-opened in 2006 after a long renovation and showcases an astounding collection of Greek and Roman antiquities – vases, statues, bowls, and so on – in a replica Roman villa poised high above the sea on a dramatic perch between Santa Monica and Malibu.

Malibu and the Santa Monica Mountains

Twenty miles north of Santa Monica at the top of the bay, Malibu is synonymous with luxurious celebrity isolation, but it's not all that impressive on arrival, with ramshackle surf shops and fast-food stands scattered along PCH around the graceful Malibu Pier. Surfrider Beach here was the surfing capital of the world in the 1950s and early 1960s, and is still a big attraction (the surf is best in late summer; check the surfing report at ☎ www.surfrider.org). Just beyond is Malibu Lagoon State Park (daily 8am–dusk), a nature reserve and bird refuge, and nearby is the Adamson House, 23200 PCH (grounds 8am–sunset, house Wed–Sat 11am–3pm; $3; ☎ www.adamsonhouse.org), a stunning, historic Spanish Colonial-style home featuring opulent decor and colorful tilework.

Most Malibu homes are tucked away in the narrow canyons on the fringes of town. There's very little to see, despite tourists' futile attempts to peek into the exclusive Malibu Colony Hollywood retreat, located along an unmarked stretch near PCH. You'd do better to explore the huge Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area (📍 www.lamountains.org), north of town, which is wilderness in many places, and you can still spot a variety of deer, coyotes, and even the odd mountain lion. If you'd like to find out more about this marvelous protected area, the Santa Monica Mountains visitor center, in neighboring Thousand Oaks, 401 W Hillcrest Drive (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 805/370-2301, 🌐 www.nps.gov/samo), has maps and information. Other good spots here include the 4000-acre Malibu Creek State Park, on Las Virgenes Road near Mulholland Drive, where 20th Century Fox filmed many Tarzan pictures, as well as the TV show *M*A*S*H*. The park includes a large lake, waterfalls, and nearly fifteen miles of hiking trails. Further west, the Paramount Ranch, 2813 Cornell Rd, is another studio backlot with a phony rail crossing and cemetery, and Western movie set used in countless productions.

Five miles along the coast from Malibu Pier, Zuma Beach is the largest and most crowded of the Los Angeles County beaches. Adjacent Point Dume State Beach, below the imposing promontory of Point Dume, is a lot more relaxed, and the rocks at its southern tip, Pirate's Cove, are a good place to view seals and migrating gray whales in winter. At the northwestern edge of LA County, Leo Carrillo ("ca-REE-oh") State Beach Park, 35000 PCH, sits at the end of MTA bus route #434. The mile-long sandy beach is divided by Sequit Point, a bluff with underwater caves and a tunnel you can pass through at low tide, and is also one of LA's best campgrounds (see p.1047).

The South Bay and LA Harbor

South from LA along PCH is an eight-mile coastal strip of quiet and unpretentious South Bay beach towns: Manhattan Beach, Hermosa Beach, and Redondo Beach. Each has a beckoning strip of white sand – much more open to the public than those around Malibu – and Manhattan and Hermosa are especially well equipped for surfing and beach sports. They're also well connected by the regular bus lines to downtown LA. To the south are Long Beach – site of the LA Harbor – and Catalina Island.

Long Beach

Although downtown Long Beach offers a pleasant stretch of restored architecture and antique stores around Pine Avenue (linked by the Blue Line light rail to downtown LA; see p.1046), the main reason most tourists come is to see the Queen Mary (daily 10am–6pm; $23 self-guided tours; 🌐 www.queenmary.com). The Cunard flagship from the 1930s until the 1960s, the boat is now a luxury hotel, and the guided tours ($3–9 extra) present a sentimentalized version of its days of elegance and refinement. Across the bay along Shoreline Drive, the Aquarium of the Pacific (daily 9am–6pm; $20, children $12; 🌐 www.aquariumofpacific.org) is a terrific exploration of aquatic flora and fauna from geographic and climatic zones around the world, while further west, the Long Beach Museum of Art, 2300 E Ocean Blvd (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm; $7; 🌐 www.lbma.org), is the home of regional LA artworks and tasteful displays of early-20th-century modernist furniture and sculpture.

Catalina Island

The enticing island of Catalina, twenty miles offshore from Long Beach, is mostly preserved wilderness, but does have substantial charm and offers a nice break from the metropolis. Indeed, with cars largely forbidden, the two thousand islanders walk, ride bikes, or drive golf carts. Ferry trips run several times daily from Long Beach, and cost $52–61 roundtrip (look for discounts for Internet booking). Operators include Catalina Explorer (☎ 1-877/432-6276, 🌐 www.catalinaferry.com), Catalina Express (☎ 1-800/315-3967, 🌐 www.catalinaexpress.com), and, from Newport Beach, Catalina Flyer (☎ 949/673-5245, 🌐 www.catalina-flyer.com).

The island's one town, AVALON, can be fully explored on foot in an hour, with maps issued by the Chamber of Commerce at the foot of the ferry pier (☎ 310/510-1520, 🌐 www.visitcatalina.org). Begin at the sumptuous Art Deco Avalon Casino, 1 Casino Way, a 1920s structure that still shows movies featuring mermaid murals, gold-leaf ceiling motifs, an Art Deco ballroom, and a small museum (daily 10am–4pm, Jan–March closed Thurs; $4) displaying Native American artifacts from Catalina's past. Several miles southwest of Avalon, the Wrigley Memorial and Botanical Garden, 1400 Avalon Canyon Rd (daily 8am–5pm; $5), displays all manner of endemic flora and fauna on forty acres. Santa Catalina Island Company (☎ 1-800/446-0266, 🌐 www.scico.com), offers tours of the Casino or downtown area (each $15), bus trips through the outback ($32–98), and harbor cruises and glass-bottom-boat rides ($20–35), while Catalina Adventure Tours provides cheaper versions of the same ($13–36; ☎ 310/510-2888, 🌐 www.catalinaadventuretours.com).

The most interesting hotel is the Zane Grey Pueblo, 199 Chimes Tower Rd (☎ 310/510-0966, 🌐 www.zanegreypueblohotel.com; 6), which has sixteen rooms overlooking the bay or mountains, with an enticing off-season (Oct–May) weekday rate of $59. If you really have a bundle to spend, the Inn on Mt Ada, 398 Wrigley Rd (☎ 310/510-2030, 🌐 www.innonmtada.com; 9), is the final word in Catalina luxury. The only true budget option is camping: Hermit Gulch is the closest site to Avalon and the busiest. Four other sites – Blackjack, Little Harbor, Parsons Landing, and Two Harbors – in Catalina's interior (all $12 per person, kids $6; bookable at ☎ 310/510-8368, 🌐 www.scico.com/camping) are much more distant, but also roomier.

Orange County

Throughout the US, Orange County is synonymous with anodyne, white suburbia – most famously as the site of fun and squeaky-clean Disneyland – but in recent years it's begun to change, with many new Hispanic arrivals and much more cultural (and culinary) diversity. Still, most tourists come for the theme parks and for the easy-going, upscale beach towns of the Orange County Coast.

Disneyland

The pop-culture colossus of Disneyland, in Anaheim at 1313 Harbor Blvd (summer daily 8am–midnight; rest of year Mon–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat 9am–midnight, Sun 9am–10pm; $59, kids $49, parking $10; 🌐 www.disneyland.com), is one of America's most iconic sights, as well as one of its most expensive – most of the park's hotels are ridiculously overpriced (see p.1049) and there's little quality cuisine in the area. The park is 45 minutes by car from downtown LA on the Santa Ana Freeway. Arrive early, as traffic and ride lines quickly become nightmarish, especially in the summer.

Among Disneyland's best rides are three in Adventureland: the Indiana Jones Adventure, an interactive archeological dig and 1930s-style newsreel show leading up to a giddy journey along 2500ft of skull-encrusted corridors; the Pirates of the Caribbean, a boat trip through underground caverns full of singing rogues; and the Haunted Mansion, a riotous “doom buggy” tour in the company of the house spooks. By contrast, Frontierland has mainly lower-end Wild West-themed carnival attractions, Fantasyland low-tech fairy-tale rides, “highlighted” by the treacly It’s a Small World; and Toontown, a cartoonish zone aimed at the kindergarten set. It’s more worthwhile to zip right through to Tomorrowland, Disney’s vision of the future, where the Space Mountain roller coaster plunges through the pitch-blackness of outer space, the Star Tours ride simulates a journey into the world of George Lucas, and Innoventions offers a fun opportunity to look at, and play with, the latest special effects.

The latest adjunct to Disneyland is the California Adventure, technically a separate park, and a lot less fun. Aside from its slightly more exciting roller coasters and better food, the Adventure is really just another “land” to visit on your Disney trek, albeit a much bigger and more expensive one: you’ll have to shell out another $20 for a one-day pass that covers both this and the main park.

Knott’s Berry Farm

More down-to-earth than Disneyland, Knott’s Berry Farm, four miles northwest, off the Santa Ana Freeway at 8039 Beach Blvd (summer Sun–Thurs 9am–11pm, Fri & Sat 9am–midnight; rest of year Mon–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat 10am–10pm, Sun 10am–7pm; $40, kids $15; ☎ www.knotts.com), still has roller coasters far more exciting than anything at its rival. Although there are ostensibly six themed lands here, you should spend most or all of your time in just half of them: Fiesta Village, home to the Jaguar, a high-flying coaster that spins you around the park concourse; Ghost Town, with fun wooden coasters and log flumes; and the Boardwalk, which is all about heart-thumping thrill rides. Knott’s also has its own adjacent water park, Soak City USA (June–Sept only, hours vary but generally daily 10am–5pm or 6pm; $27, $15 for children or adult entry after 3pm), offering twenty-one drenching rides of various heights and speeds.

Orange County Coast

Stretching from the edge of the LA Harbor to the border of San Diego County 35 miles south, the Orange County Coast is chic suburbia with a shoreline: swanky houses line the sands, and the ambiance is easygoing, libertarian, and affluent. As the names of the main towns suggest – Huntington Beach, Newport Beach, and Laguna Beach – most of the good reasons to come here involve sea and sand, though a handful of museums and festivals can also make for an interesting trip. Check out the International Surfing Museum, 411 Olive Ave, Huntington Beach (Oct–May Thurs–Mon noon–5pm; June–Sept open daily; $3; ☎ www.surfingmuseum.org), loaded with famous legends of the waves, and Laguna Beach’s Pageant of the Masters (July–Aug daily shows begin at 8.30pm; $20–75; ☎ 1-800/487-3378, ☎ www.foapom.com), a strangely compelling spectacle in which participants dress up as characters from famous paintings. To the far south, San Juan Capistrano merits a stop as the site of the best-kept of all the Californian missions, Ortega Highway and Camino Capistrano (daily 8.30am–5pm; $6; ☎ www.missionsjc.com).

The San Gabriel and San Fernando valleys

The northern limit of LA is defined by two long stretches – the San Gabriel and San Fernando valleys – lying over the hills from the central basin, starting close to one another a few miles north of downtown, spanning outwardly in opposite directions – east to the deserts, west to the Central Coast – and featuring a few worthwhile points of interest.

The San Gabriel Valley

Ten miles northeast of downtown LA, the San Gabriel Valley's main appeal is the genteel community of Pasadena, best known for its Rose Parade in January and Rose Bowl stadium west of town. Also distinctive is the historic shopping precinct of Old Pasadena along Colorado Boulevard, now fashionable for its restaurants and boutiques (and accessible on the Gold Line light rail).

Pasadena's other best offerings are the splendid collection of the Norton Simon Museum, 411 W Colorado Blvd (Wed–Mon noon–6pm, Fri closes 9pm; $8, students free; www.nortonsimon.org), one of LA's greatest art institutions, with a prime selection of Old Masters like Rubens and Rembrandt and modern works by Klee and Picasso, and the Gamble House, 4 Westmoreland Place (hour-long tours Thurs–Sun noon–3pm; $10; gamblehouse.usc.edu), a famed Craftsman mansion with Arts and Crafts decor and Japanese-inspired design elements. Maps and booklets on Pasadena, available at the visitors bureau (see p.1045), detail worthwhile self-guided tours of the city's excellent architecture, historical sites, and museums.

South of Pasadena, in dull, upper-crust San Marino, the Huntington Museum and Library, off Huntington Drive at 1151 Oxford Rd (Tues–Fri noon–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 10.30am–4.30pm; $15; www.huntington.org), contains many historic documents and rare books, such as a Gutenberg Bible and the Ellesmere Chaucer – the latter an illuminated manuscript of The Canterbury Tales dating from around 1410. Paintings include Gainsborough's Blue Boy and Reynolds's Mrs Siddons as the Tragic Muse, and the whole complex is set off by acres of beautiful themed gardens.

The San Fernando Valley and Magic Mountain

The San Fernando Valley, spreading west, is a vast sprawl of tract homes, mini-malls, and fast-food diners, but merits a trip to see Forest Lawn Cemetery, in Glendale at 1712 S Glendale Ave (daily 9am–5pm; free; www.forestlawn.org), a fascinating, often kitschy, display of death, Hollywood style. Those buried here include Errol Flynn, Walt Disney, Clara Bow, Nat King Cole, Chico Marx, Clark Gable, and Jean Harlow, among many other notables.

North of the San Fernando Valley, the three-hundred-acre theme park of Magic Mountain, Magic Mountain Parkway at I-5 (summer daily 10am–10pm; rest of year Sat & Sun only 10am–8pm; $60, kids $30, $8 parking; www.sixflags.com), holds the region's wildest roller coasters, with a new fright-ride unleashed nearly every summer.

Burbank and the studios

Miles from Hollywood proper, the nitty-gritty business of actually making films goes on over the hills in otherwise boring BURBANK. The studio tours include a peek inside NBC, 3000 W Alameda Blvd (box office open Mon–Fri 9am–4pm; $7; reserve at 818/840-3537), and a fun trek into Warner Bros Studios, 3400 Warner Blvd (Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.30pm; $42; www.wbstudiotour.com), but Disney's fortress-like compound, at 500 S Buena Vista St, is strictly off-limits.

The largest of the backlots belongs to Universal Studios, whose lengthy tours (daily: summer 9am–8pm or 9pm; rest of year 10am–6pm; $59; www.universalstudioshollywood.com) include high-tech rides and “evening spectaculars” based on current movies. The shows are without exception cheesy, but for fans of explosions and pratfalls, they're an absolute must.

Eating

LA eating covers every extreme: whatever you want to eat and however much you want to spend, you're spoiled for choice. Try to take at least a few meals in the higher-end restaurants, many of which serve superb food in consciously cultivated surroundings. At the cheaper end of the scale, the options are almost endless, and include terrific burger stands where you can scarf down mountains of fries, and free food available for the price of a drink at happy hours.

Downtown and around

Angelique Café 840 S Spring St ☎213/623-8698.

A marvelous and affordable Continental eatery in the middle of the Garment District, where you can dine on well-crafted pastries for breakfast or savory sandwiches, rich casseroles, and fine salads for lunch.

Ciudad 445 S Figueroa St ☎213/486-5171. Roast chicken and quinoa fritters are some of the highlights at this colorful, if pricey, Mexican-influenced spot, where the live Latin music competes with the delicious food for your attention.

Dong Il Jang 3455 W 8th St ☎213/383-5757.

Cozy little Korean restaurant where the meat is cooked at your table and the food is consistently good, especially the grilled chicken and beef.

La Luz del Dia 107 Paseo de la Plaza ☎213/628-7495. Authentic Mexican eatery on Olvera Street, worth seeking out for the fiery burritos, enchiladas, and stews, all served in sizeable portions.

Langer's Deli 704 S Alvarado ☎213/483-8050.

One of LA's finest delis, with an excellent selection of take-out meats and baked goods. Offers twenty ways of eating what is LA's best pastrami sandwich. Open daylight hours only; curbside pick-up available in a grim area.

Ocean Seafood 750 N Hill ☎213/687-3088. Carnivorous and often crowded Chinese restaurant serving low-priced, excellent food – try the abalone, crab, shrimp, or duck.

Original Pantry 877 S Figueroa St ☎213/972-9279. Former mayor Richard Riordan owns this classic old diner, which serves huge pork chops and American breakfasts 24hrs a day.

Pacific Dining Car 1310 W 6th St ☎213/483-6000. Starched linen and very expensive steaks in a former railroad carriage styled after an English supper club. Open until 2am.

Patina 141 S Grand Ave ☎213/972-3331. One of LA's signature eateries, a fancy, ultra-swank spot in Disney Hall. Here you can devour pheasant in apple-champagne sauce, pork loin medallions, and other rotating items on the menu if you're prepared to drop a wad of cash.

Philippe the Original French Dip 1001 N Alameda St ☎213/628-3781. Renowned sawdust café with long communal tables, a decor unchanged since 1908, and juicy, artery-clogging French dips – first invented here – loaded with turkey, pork, beef, or lamb.

Hollywood

Casa Carnitas 4067 Beverly Blvd ☎323/667-9953. On the southeast edge of Hollywood, tasty, cheap Mexican food from the Yucatan, with dishes inspired by Cuban and Caribbean cooking. Lots of seafood, too.

Fred 62 1854 N Vermont Ave ☎323/667-0062.

Classic 24hr retro-diner offering stylish twists on staples like salads, burgers, and fries, and a tempting array of pancakes and omelets.

Mario's Peruvian Seafood 5786 Melrose Ave ☎323/466-4181. Good and authentic Peruvian fare: supremely tender squid, rich and flavorful mussels, with a hint of soy sauce in some dishes. Inexpensive, too.

Mexico City 2121 Hillhurst Ave ☎323/661-7227. Spinach enchiladas and other Californian versions of Mexican standards, including a mean pollo verde chicken dish, with prices that are easy to stomach.

Palermo 1858 N Vermont Ave ☎323/663-1178. Chi-chi Northern Italian cuisine be damned – this joint is as old as Hollywood itself, and with as many devoted fans, who flock here for the rich pizzas, cheesy decor and gallons of affordable red wine.

Pink's Hot Dogs 709 N La Brea Ave ☎323/931-4223. The quintessence of chili dogs, featuring items like a cheese-chili-hot dog combo wrapped up in a gooey tortilla package. Open until 2am, or 3am weekends.

Roscoe's Chicken and Waffles 1514 N Gower St ☎323/466-7453. An unlikely spot for Hollywood's elite, this LA dining institution attracts all sorts for its fried chicken, greens, goopy gravy, and thick waffles.

Shibucho 3114 Beverly Blvd ☎323/387-8498. Seriously tasty, affordable sushi bar where the squid and eel are quite fine, along with the famed toro, an expensive but delicious tuna delicacy.

vermont 1714 N Vermont Ave ☎323/661-6163. Pretentious lower-case letters aside, this is one of the best upper-end Cal-cuisine spots around, with primo roasted chicken, crab cakes, and ravioli.

West LA

Apple Pan 10801 W Pico Blvd ☎310/475-3585. Grab a spot at the counter and enjoy freshly baked apple pie and greasy hamburgers at an old-time joint that opened just after World War II.

Ca' Brea 346 S La Brea Ave ☎323/938-2863. One of LA's best choices for upscale California and Italian cuisine, and especially good for osso buco and risotto.

Campanile 624 S La Brea Ave ☎323/938-1447. Pricey but tremendous Northern Italian dishes – the likes of rosemary-infused lamb and butternut squash ravioli. If you can't afford a dinner, just try the dessert or pick up some of the city's best bread at La Brea Bakery next door.

Canter's Deli 419 N Fairfax Ave ☎323/651-2030. Waitresses in pink uniforms and running shoes serve kosher soup and sandwiches in a kitsch, white-vinyl setting, with its own bizarre cabaret.

Cobras and Matadors 7615 Beverly Blvd ☎323/932-6178. A fine, mid-priced tapas spot where you can sample Castilian delights, like spiced pork loin and game hen, in an intimate setting.

Gumbo Pot 6333 W 3rd St, in the Farmers Market ☎323/933-0358. Delicious and dirt-cheap Cajun cooking in a bustling setting; try the gumbo yaya of chicken, shrimp, and sausage or the fruit-and-potato salad.

Jar 8225 Beverly Blvd ☎323/655-6566. An upper-end steakhouse featuring all the usual red-meat fare – prime rib, T-bone, even a pot roast – with an inspired Cal-cuisine flair, throwing in different spices and exotic flavors.

Jerry's Famous Deli 8701 Beverly Blvd, Beverly Hills ☎310/289-1811. The most engaging of the many Jerry's locations in LA, featuring a sizable deli menu and open 24hrs. Occasionally, celebrities stop in to nosh.

L'Orangerie 903 N La Cienega Blvd ☎310/652-9770. The closest Francophiles can get to Escoffier in LA, though the stylish French food has more than a dash of California cuisine as well. Bring wads of cash and a fancy suit, or be prepared to leave quietly.

Michelia 8738 3rd St ☎310/276-8288. Nouveau, somewhat pricey Southeast Asian eatery with Cal-cuisine versions of traditional spicy salads and fish dishes.

Mishima 8474 W 3rd St ☎323/782-0181. Chic, popular eatery serving bowls of delicious udon and soba noodles at low prices.

Nate 'n' Al's 414 N Beverly Drive ☎310/274-0101. The best-known deli in Beverly Hills, popular with movie people and one of the few reasonable places for dining in the vicinity. Get there early (opens 7am) to grab a booth.

Santa Monica, Venice, and Malibu

Benito's Taco Shop 11614 Santa Monica Blvd ☎310/442-9924. Tacos with beef, pork, or fish, for just a few bucks. Most combos are under $5, making this a good spot to gulp and go.

Border Grill 1445 4th St, Santa Monica ☎310/451-1655. Good place to sup on delicious shrimp, pork, plantains, and other nuevo Latin American-flavored fixings, with excellent desserts, too. Prices are on the expensive side, but the ambience is always swinging.

Chaya Venice 110 Navy St ☎310/396-1179. Coolly elegant culinary crossroads serving Japanese and Mediterranean foods to a smart clientele.

Chinois on Main 2709 Main St, Santa Monica ☎310/392-9025. One of LA's most renowned, and most expensive, restaurants, run by chef Wolfgang Puck, and serving nouvelle Chinese dishes.

Hal's 1349 Abbot Kinney Blvd, Venice ☎310/396-3105. Offers a nice range of well-done, somewhat expensive American standards, including marinated steaks and salmon dishes.

Marix Tex-Mex Playa 118 Entrada Drive, Pacific Palisades ☎310/459-8596. Flavorful fajitas and big margaritas in this rowdy beachfront cantina. Another free-spirited branch at 1108 N Flores St, West Hollywood ☎323/656-8800.

Michael's 1147 3rd St, Santa Monica ☎310/451-0843. Longstanding favorite for California preparations of steak, pasta, and fowl, served here amid modern art. Reservations are essential, prices steep.

Neptune's Net 42505 PCH, Malibu ☎310/457-3095. It's worth a trip to the far reaches of LA County's northwestern border to gorge on clams, shrimp, oysters and lobsters at basic picnic tables for low-end prices.

Valentino 3115 Pico Blvd, Santa Monica ☎310/829-4313. Some call it the finest Italian restaurant in the US – traditional Northern Italian dishes, with an infusion of California cuisine dash and experiment. Expect to max out your credit card.

South Bay and LA Harbor

Bluewater Grill 665 N Harbor Dr, Redondo Beach ☎310/318-3474. Solid seafood spot featuring a slew of mid-priced fresh fish – salmon and catfish to crabs and oysters.

El Pollo Inka 1100 PCH, Hermosa Beach ☎310/372-1433. Cheap Peruvian-style chicken, catfish, and hot and spicy soups to make your mouth water.

Hof's Hut 6257 E 2nd St, Long Beach ☎562/598-

4070. One bite of the Hut's juicy Hofburger and you know you've found the real deal. Four other South Bay locations, and four in Orange County.

New Orleans 140 Pier Ave, Hermosa Beach ☎310/372-8970. Authentic deep-South Cajun cuisine: jambalaya, gumbo, po' boy sandwiches, and fried oysters, all of them plenty tasty and cheap.

Rock 'n Fish 120 Manhattan Beach Blvd, Manhattan Beach ☎310/379-9900. Whether you're in the mood for halibut, sea bass, blackened shrimp, or just a good old prime rib, this cozy surf 'n' turf eatery is a good, affordable spot to indulge. Just make sure to reserve ahead.

Orange County

Angelo's 511 S State College Blvd, Anaheim ☎714/533-1401. Straight out of TV's Happy Days, a drive-in complete with roller-skating car-hops and juicy burgers. Open until 2am on weekends.

Claes Seafood in the Hotel Laguna, 425 S Coast Hwy, Laguna Beach ☎949/376-9283. Sample pricey and delicious ahi tuna and halibut, plus Cal-cuisine spins on the same fare, with fine views of the Pacific.

Favori 3502 W First St, Santa Ana ☎714/531-6838. Worth the long drive out for what may be LA's best Vietnamese food, including delicious garlic shrimp, curried chicken with lemon grass, and savory noodles, all for decent prices.

Ruby's 1 Balboa Pier, Newport Beach ☎949/675-RUBY. A solid spot for burgers and fries – the only eatery on this popular pier and one of the few cheap spots in this upscale burg.

The San Gabriel and San Fernando valleys

Art's Deli 12224 Ventura Blvd, Studio City ☎818/762-1221. Long-time film-industry favorite with a good range of hefty sandwiches and soups.

Dr Hogly-Wogly's Tyler Texas Bar-B-Q 8136 Sepulveda Blvd, Van Nuys ☎818/780-6701. Line up for the chicken, sausages, ribs, and beans – some of the best in LA.

Portos Bakery 315 N Brand Blvd, Glendale ☎818/956-5996. Popular and cheap café serving flaky Cuban pastries, scrumptious sandwiches, cheesecakes soaked in rum, croissants, tarts and tortes, and cappuccino.

Sea Star 740 E Valley Blvd, Alhambra ☎626/282-1883. The one reason to come to this San Gabriel Valley town, for affordable dim sum at its best: pork, baos, potstickers and dumplings.

Wolfe Burger 46 N Lake St, Pasadena ☎626/792-7292. A great place for chili, tamales, burgers, and huevos rancheros, not to mention south- and north-of-the-border burritos.

CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles: Nightlife and entertainment

Nightlife and entertainment

Exploring the jungle of LA nightlife can be great fun. Even the quietest venue offers a chance to eavesdrop on a bit of vapid dialogue; the most raucous ones will take your breath away. In all the bars, clubs, and discos, you'll need to be 21 and will be asked for ID. The best sources of listings are LA Weekly and the "Calendar" section in Friday's LA Times.

Bars and coffeehouses

LA's bars provide a wide range of choices, from the funky dives of Hollywood to the chic enclaves of West LA and Santa Monica. As elsewhere along the West Coast, coffeehouses are established all over the city as popular meeting places.

Barney's Beanery 8447 Santa Monica Blvd, West Hollywood ☎310/654-2287. Well-worn poolroom/bar, with 200 beers and a rock'n'roll-hedonist history. Also serves all-American food.

Beauty Bar 1638 N Cahuenga Blvd, Hollywood ☎323/464-7676. Drinking spot devoted to nails, hair, and cosmetics, with a welter of 1950s-style salon gadgets and a similarly themed cocktail list – the Prell, Blue Rinse, Platinum Blonde, etc.

Boardner's 1652 N Cherokee Ave, Hollywood

☎323/462-9621. A likeably unkempt neighborhood bar with a mix of salty old-timers and hip newbies.

Bourgeois Pig 5931 Franklin Ave, Hollywood ☎323/962-6366. Hip environment and overpriced cappuccinos – you really pay for the groovy atmosphere of mirrors, chandeliers, and loveseats – but the tasty java and colorful clientele make it worth your while.

El Carmen 8138 W 3rd St ☎323/852-1552.

Groovy faux dive-bar with a south-of-the-border theme pushed to the extreme, with black-velvet pictures of Mexican wrestlers, steer horns, stuffed snakes, and much tongue-in-cheek grunge, as well as signature margaritas.

Formosa Café 7156 Santa Monica Blvd
 ☎ 323/850-9050. Started during Prohibition, this tiny bar is said to be alive with the ghosts of Bogie and Marilyn. Indulge in the potent spirits (not the insipid food) and soak in a true Hollywood institution.

Insomnia 7286 Beverly Blvd, West LA ☎ 323/931-4943. A chic spot for chugging cappuccinos while sitting in comfortable sofas and admiring the vivid amateur art on the walls.

Lava Lounge 1533 N La Brea, Hollywood
 ☎ 323/876-6612. Wallow in the cheesy retro decor and slurp down a glowing cocktail to the sounds of pounding rockabilly and freewheeling surf music.

Library Alehouse 2911 Main St, Santa Monica
 ☎ 310/314-4855. Presenting the choicest brews from West Coast microbreweries and beyond, this is a good spot to select from a nice range of well-known and obscure labels.

Molly Malone's Irish Pub 575 S Fairfax Ave ☎ 323/935-1577. One of LA's drinking staples: an authentic Irish bar, with a crowd of regulars who look like they've been there for ages, plus nightly music, shamrock decor, and the requisite pints of thick Guinness.

Musso and Frank Grill 6667 Hollywood Blvd
 ☎ 323/467-7788. Simply put, if you haven't had a drink in this landmark 1919 bar, you haven't been to Hollywood. You can also have a pricey bite to eat.

Nova Express 426 N Fairfax Ave, south of West Hollywood ☎ 323/658-7533. One of the grooviest coffee joints around, designed with retro-futuristic sci-fi decor, with weird colors and lighting, and dance music most nights. Open until 4am.

Novel Café 212 Pier Ave, Santa Monica ☎ 310/396-8566. Stacks of used books and high-backed wooden chairs set the tone; good coffees, teas, and pastries, with funky old sofas on the mezzanine to curl up in.

Tiki-Ti 4427 W Sunset Blvd, Hollywood
 ☎ 323/669-9381. Tiny grass-skirted cocktail bar straight out of Hawaii Five-O, packed with kitschy pseudo-Polynesian decor, on the edge of Hollywood.

Ye Olde Kings Head 116 Santa Monica Blvd, Santa Monica ☎ 310/451-1402. Prime LA spot for quaffing British ales and munching on steak-and-kidney pie.

Clubs and discos

LA's clubs are among the wildest in the country, ranging from posy hangouts to industrial noise cellars. The trendier side of the club scene is, as always, elusive, with some venues changing names and clientele every six months (those below are among the more established). Check the LA Weekly before setting out.

Avalon 1735 N Vine St, Hollywood ☎ 323/462-3000. Weekend dance club spinning old-school faves, along with a dash of rock and retro, with the occasional big-name DJ dropping in.

Bar Sinister 1652 N Cherokee, Hollywood
 ☎ 323/769-7070. A collection of sprightly dance beats most nights of the week, then memorably spooky goth music and anemic-looking vampire types on Sat. Connected to Boardner's bar (see p. 1070).

Dragonfly 6510 Santa Monica Blvd, Hollywood
 ☎ 323/466-6111. Unusual decor, two large dance rooms, and house and disco club nights that are continually buzzing on Thurs–Sun nights; live music at other times.

The Echo 1822 Sunset Blvd ☎ 213/413-8200. East Hollywood scene with scrappy dance DJs spinning a range of old- and new-school favorites nightly, and rock and retro DJs on Sun.

Mor 2941 Main St, Santa Monica ☎ 310/455-6720. Techno, trance, house, and soul, mixed up for groovy club nights most evenings in this hip lounge setting, plus new wave and retro-pop.

The Ruby 7070 Hollywood Blvd ☎ 323/467-7070. A wide range of feverish dance nights take turns Thurs–Sun, covering everything from gothic and grinding industrial to perky house and garage.

The Space 2020 Wilshire Blvd, Santa Monica
 ☎ 310/829-1933. Ground zero for weekend retro vibes, with backward-looking DJs massaging everything from 1980s electro, pop and New Wave to spacey 1970s disco and funk to more current breakbeats.

Tempest 7323 Santa Monica Blvd ☎ 323/850-5115. After 10pm on weekends, the eclectic grooves start to spin here, from retro-funk and disco to the latest hip-hop to 1960s Austin Powers-style sing-a-longs.

Gay and lesbian bars and clubs

7969 7969 Santa Monica Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 323/654-0280. A landmark for its frenetic assortment of gay-themed (but straight-friendly) shows, from go-go girls to male strippers to drag queens. Always one of LA's most colorful spots for dancing and grinding.

Arena 6655 Santa Monica Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/462-0714. Work up a sweat to funk, hip-hop and house on a massive dance floor inside a former ice factory. The fervent crowd is diverse, but leans toward a mix of Hispanics and gays. Plays host to many different club nights.

The Factory 652 N La Peer Drive ☎ 310/659-4551. DJs spin house music most nights of the week at what is one of West Hollywood's more popular clubs.

Jewel's Catch One 4067 W Pico Blvd, Mid-Wilshire ☎ 323/734-8849. Sweaty barn catering to a mixed crowd of gays and straights and covering two wild dance floors. A longtime LA favorite, located in the middle of nowhere.

Rage 8911 Santa Monica Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 310/652-7055. Very flashy gay men's club playing the latest house hits. Also with drag comedy.

Ultra Suede 661 N Robertson Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 310/659-4551. Featuring various theme nights where a mixed gay and straight crowd gyrates to new wave, rock, house, and retro-pop music.

Live music

LA has an overwhelming choice of venues for live music: ever since the 1960s, the local rock scene has been excellent, with up-and-comers getting their first break in clubs on the Sunset Strip; jazz is played in a few authentic downbeat dives; and salsa is immensely popular, and not just among LA's Hispanics. Cover charges can vary widely, depending on the prominence of the headliner and the night of the week, so call ahead.

Babe and Ricky's Inn 4339 Leimert Blvd, South Central LA ☎ 323/295-9112. One of LA's top spots for blues, attracting plenty of quality, nationally known acts.

Baked Potato 3787 Cahuenga Blvd West, North Hollywood ☎ 818/980-1615. A small, near-legendary contemporary jazz spot, where many reputations have been forged. Expect to be surprised.

Doug Weston's Troubadour 9081 Santa Monica Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 310/276-6168. An old 1960s mainstay that's been through a lot of incarnations. Used to be known for folk and country rock, then metal, now for alternative and acoustic line-ups.

El Floridita 1253 N Vine St, Hollywood ☎ 323/871-8612. Decent Mexican and Cuban food plus a fine line-up of Cuban and salsa artists, who play on weekends and jam on other nights.

El Rey Theater 5515 Wilshire Blvd, Mid-Wilshire ☎ 323/936-4790. Although not as famous as its Sunset Strip counterparts, this rock and alternative venue is possibly the best spot to see explosive new bands and still-engaging oldsters. Also offers a variety of dance club nights.

Gabah 4658 Melrose Ave, Mid-Wilshire ☎ 323/664-8913. Eclectic spot serving up a mix of reggae, funk, dub and rock – even flamenco. The dicey neighborhood leaves much to be desired, though.

Harvelle's 1432 4th St, Santa Monica ☎ 310/395-1676. Near the Promenade, a stellar blues joint for more than six decades, offering a range of performers nightly.

Jazz Bakery 3233 Helms Ave, Culver City ☎ 310/271-9039. More performance space than club, where the best local musicians play alongside big-name visitors in a former bakery building.

Knitting Factory 7021 Hollywood Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/463-0204. West Coast branch of landmark New York club (see p.123), with a wide range of interpretation, much of it avant-garde.

Largo 432 N Fairfax Ave, Mid-Wilshire ☎ 323/852-1073. Intimate cabaret venue with interesting jazz, rock, and pop acts.

McCabe's 3101 Pico Blvd, Santa Monica ☎ 310/828-4497. The back room of LA's premier acoustic guitar shop; long the scene of excellent and unusual folk and country shows.

The Roxy 9009 Sunset Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 310/276-2222. The showcase of the rock industry's new signings, intimate and with a great sound system.

Rusty's Surf Ranch 256 Santa Monica Pier ☎ 310/393-7437. Offers not only surf music but live folk and country as well, along with karaoke. A popular spot for tourists, near the end of the pier.

Spaceland 1717 Silver Lake Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 213/833-2843. Excellent spot to catch up-and-coming local and national rockers and other acts, including punk and alternative musicians.

Viper Room 8852 Sunset Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 310/358-1881 Great live rockers and a head-line-grabbing past have helped boost this club's hip aura.

Whisky-a-Go-Go 8901 Sunset Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 310/652-4202. For many years LA's most famous rock 'n' roll club, nowadays featuring mainly hard rock.

Classical music, opera, and dance

LA has an increasing number of outlets for classical music. The Los Angeles Philharmonic (☎ 213/850-2000, 🌐 www.laphil.org), the city's big name, performs regularly during the year; the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra (☎ 213/622-7001, 🌐 www.laco.org) performs at assorted venues; and the Da Camera Society (☎ 213/477-2929, 🌐 www.dacamera.org) offers chamber works in stunning settings, from grand churches to legendary modernist homes.

As for opera, LA Opera (☎ 213/972-8001, 🌐 www.losangelesopera.com) stages productions between September and June, at downtown's Music Center, while Orange County's Opera Pacific in Costa Mesa (☎ 1-800/34-OPERA, 🌐 www.operapacific.org) is a similar, classics-oriented alternative. The city's most exciting company is Long Beach Opera (☎ 562/439-2580, 🌐 www.longbeachopera.org), which puts on challenging but well-regarded performances of modern and lesser-known operas. Dance in Los Angeles has its annual big event with UCLA's Dance Kaleidoscope (☎ 323/343-5120, 🌐 www.performingarts.ucla.edu), held over two weeks in July.

Disney Hall 1st St at Grand Ave, downtown ☎ 213/850-2000, 🌐 wdch.laphil.com. Home of the LA Philharmonic, a striking Frank Gehry design (see p.1052) hosting many kinds of arts groups.

Dorothy Chandler Pavilion in the Music Center, 135 N Grand Ave, downtown ☎ 213/972-7211, 🌐 www.musiccenter.org. Warhorse of the arts world, used by LA Opera and other top names.

Greek Theatre 2700 N Vermont Ave, Griffith Park ☎ 323/665-1927, 🌐 www.greektheatre.com. A broad range of mainstream music acts at this outdoor, summer-only venue.

Hollywood Bowl 2301 N Highland Ave, Hollywood ☎ 323/850-2000, 🌐 www.hollywoodbowl.org. The LA Philharmonic gives open-air summer concerts (July–Sept Tues–Sat evenings) at this huge bandshell (see p.1058), leaning toward familiar pops offerings.

John Anson Ford Theater 2850 Cahuenga Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/461-3673, 🌐 www.fordamphi.theatre.org. As well as UCLA's summer "Dance Kaleidoscope," this open-air venue also has eclectic productions by local groups.

Orange County Performing Arts Center 600 Town Center Drive, Costa Mesa ☎ 714/556-ARTS, 🌐 www.pacificsymphony.org. Home of the Pacific Symphony Orchestra and Opera Pacific, as well as touring big names in pop and jazz.

Pasadena Dance Theater 1985 Locust Ave, Pasadena ☎ 626/683-3459, 🌐 www.pasadenadance.org. Prominent San Gabriel Valley dance venue, hosting many diverse groups during the year.

Shrine Auditorium 665 W Jefferson Blvd ☎ 213/749-5123, box office at 655 S Hill St. A striking white Islamic-domed complex hosting shows by choral gospel groups and touring pop acts.

UCLA Center for the Performing Arts ☎ 310/825-4401, 🌐 www.performingarts.ucla.edu. Coordinates a wide range of touring companies, and also runs the experimentally inclined "Art of Dance" series between Sept and June.

Comedy

The comedy scene in LA has long been a national proving ground for aspiring jokesters, and it's also a good place to catch live performances by established names as well as up-and-comers. The better-known places are open nightly, but are often solidly booked on weekends. Cover is usually $10–25.

Comedy & Magic Club 1018 Hermosa Ave, Hermosa Beach ☎ 310/372-1193. Strange couplings of magic acts and comedians, highlighted by Jay Leno occasionally testing material here.

Comedy Store 8433 W Sunset Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 323/650-6268. LA's premier comedy showcase and popular enough to be spread over three rooms – which means there's usually space, even at weekends.

Groundlings Theater 7307 Melrose Ave, Hollywood ☎ 323/934-4747. Only the gifted survive at this pioneering improvisation venue, where Pee Wee Herman got his start.

Improv Olympic West 6366 Santa Monica Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/962-7560. A spot for those who like their improv drawn out and elaborate, with comedy routines more like short theater pieces than wacky one-liners.

The Improvisation 8162 Melrose Ave, West Hollywood ☎ 323/651-2583. Prime destination for comedy-lovers and known for hosting some of the best acts in the area. Part of a national chain.

Laugh Factory 8001 Sunset Blvd, West Hollywood ☎ 323/656-1336. Nightly stand-ups of varying standards and reputations, with the occasional big name. Features a variable open-mike night.

Theater

Not surprisingly, LA has a very active theater scene, with countless venues large and small spread all over town; ticket services like LA Stage Alliance (☎ 213/614-0556, www.theatrela.org) provide full-price and half-price tickets and take reservations. The LA Weekly and the LA Times Friday “Calendar” section both have full listings and reviews.

Ahmanson Theatre/Mark Taper Forum at the Music Center, 135 N Grand Ave, downtown ☎ 213/972-0700, www.taperahmanson.com. Institutional, mainstream theater, with agreeable classics and, less frequently, new plays.

Alex Theater 216 N Brand Blvd, Glendale ☎ 818/243-ALEX, www.alextheatre.org. A gloriously restored movie palace – with a great neon spike and quasi-Egyptian forecourt – hosting a fine range of musical theater, dance, comedy, and film.

The Complex 6476 Santa Monica Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/465-0383. An association of five small theaters and studios putting on innovative works you might not see anywhere else.

Odyssey Theatre Ensemble 2055 S Sepulveda Blvd, West LA ☎ 310/477-2055, www.odyssey theatre.com. Well-respected Westside theater company with a modernist bent, offering a range of quality productions on three stages for decent prices.

Pantages Theater 6233 Hollywood Blvd ☎ 323/468-1770. An exquisite Art Deco theater, in the heart of historic Hollywood, hosting major touring Broadway productions.

Stages Theatre Center 1540 N McCadden Place, Hollywood ☎ 323/465-1010, www.stagescentre.com. With three stages offering twenty to one hundred seats, this is an excellent place to catch a wide range of comedies and dramas.

Theatre West 3333 Cahuenga Blvd W, Hollywood ☎ 323/851-7977, www.theatrewest.org. A fine spot to see inventive, sometimes odd, productions, with a troupe of solid up-and-comers.

Pro sports in LA

Baseball: the LA Dodgers (☎ 323/2241-HIT, www.dodgers.com) play at Dodger Stadium near downtown, seats $8–30 or more; the renamed LA Angels of Anaheim (☎ 1-888/796-4256, www.angelsbaseball.com) at Anaheim Stadium in Orange County, seats $7–35.

Basketball: the Lakers (tickets $25–250; ☎ 213/480-3232, www.lakers.com), Clippers ($12–220; ☎ 213/742-7430, www.clippers.com), and women's Sparks ($5–50; ☎ 1-877/44-SPARKS, www.wnba.com/sparks) all play at the Staples Center, south of downtown.

Football: the 102,000-seat Rose Bowl (☎ 626/577-3100, www.rosebowlstadium.com) is the site of Pasadena's New Years Day college football game, but LA hasn't had a pro franchise in more than a decade.

Hockey: the Kings are based at Staples Center ($25–120; ☎ 1-888/KINGS-LA, www.lakings.com), and Orange County's Anaheim Ducks play at Arrowhead Pond ($20–175; ☎ 714/704-2500, www.anaheimducks.com).

Soccer: the Galaxy ($20–55; ☎ 1-877/3-GALAXY, www.lagalaxy.com) plays at the Home Depot Center in the South Bay city of Carson.

Film

Many films are often released in LA months (or years) before they play anywhere else. You can catch mainstream releases in any mall-based multiplex, but if you're after golden-age-of-film atmosphere, head for one of the historic movie palaces or evocative second-run houses listed below – or check out the Last Remaining Seats festival in June (@www.laconservancy.org).

Aero 1328 Montana Ave, Santa Monica
☎ 310/395-4990, @ www.aertheatre.com. Thanks to a nice restoration, you can watch classic and art-house movies in this fine old venue from 1940.

Bing at the LA County Art Museum, 5905 Wilshire Blvd, Mid-Wilshire ☎ 323/857-6010. Offers afternoon screenings of Warner Brothers classics for just $3, as well as full-priced evening programs of classic, independent, foreign, art-house, and revival cinema.

Chinese 6925 Hollywood Blvd, Hollywood
☎ 323/464-8111. Landmark cinema showing mainstream fare with a large main screen, six-track stereo sound, and wild chinoiserie interior.

Egyptian 612 Hollywood Blvd, Hollywood
☎ 323/466-FILM. Renovated showcase for classic and foreign films, in the middle of historic Hollywood (see p.1056).

El Capitan 6834 Hollywood Blvd, Hollywood
☎ 323/467-7674. Legendary Hollywood venue restored to full glory and renovated a second time.

Expect to see plenty of animated and live-action Disney fare.

Nuart 11272 Santa Monica Blvd, West LA
☎ 310/478-6379. Rarely seen classics, foreign films, documentaries, and sometimes Oscar contenders in Dec.

Silent Movie 611 N Fairfax Ave, West LA
☎ 323/655-2510. Fine showings of silent Chaplin, Laurel and Hardy, Ramon Navarro thrillers, and so on. Every show is accompanied by an organist.

Village 961 Buxton Ave, Westwood ☎ 310/208-5576. One of the best places to watch a movie in LA, equipped with a giant screen, fine seats, and modern sound system, and a frequent spot for Hollywood premieres.

Warner Grand 478 W 6th St, San Pedro
☎ 310/548-7672, @ www.warnergrand.org. Well worth a trip to the LA harbor to see the glory of this 1931 Art Deco masterpiece. Having been restored twice, the theater is now a repertory cinema and performing arts hall.

Shopping

Not surprisingly for a city identified with mass consumerism, you can buy virtually anything in LA. The big department stores and exclusive Rodeo Drive are the first options for many tourists, along with the city's massive malls: CityWalk at Universal Studios (☎ 818/508-9600) is a bland but popular choice, while West Hollywood's Beverly Center, at Beverly and La Cienega boulevards (☎ 310/854-0070), has designer stores and cinemas. The Century City Mall, 10250 Santa Monica Blvd (☎ 310/553-5300), West LA's Grove, 6301 W 3rd St (☎ 323/571-8830), and Hollywood & Highland, at that Hollywood intersection (☎ 323/960-2331), are the other prominent names. Many chic boutiques line Melrose Avenue between La Brea and Fairfax avenues.

Books

Acres of Books 240 Long Beach Blvd, Long Beach ☎ 562/437-6980. LA's largest, and most disorganized, secondhand collection. You may not be able to find the exact title you're looking for, but chances are you'll stumble across something good.

Book Soup 8818 Sunset Blvd, West Hollywood
☎ 323/659-3110. Right on the Sunset Strip and packed to the gills with an eclectic selection, this shop is as good for celebrity sightings as it is for browsing.

Dutton's 11975 San Vicente Blvd, Brentwood
☎ 310/476-6263. One of LA's best general bookstores, and very popular with locals. A second branch in Beverly Hills, at 447 N Canon Drive (☎ 310/281-0997).

Hennessey and Ingalls 214 Wilshire Blvd, Santa Monica ☎ 310/458-9074. An impressive range of coffee-table art and architecture books makes this among the best of its kind in LA. While there are many cut-rate remainders, the books you'll likely want are priced at premium.

Larry Edmunds Book Shop 6644 Hollywood Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/463-3273. Stacks of books on every aspect of film and theater, plus movie stills and posters.

Samuel French Theatre & Film Bookshop 7623 Sunset Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/876-0570. Famed for its drama and performing-arts selections, the best in town, with a prime selection of cinema books and media-oriented volumes as well.

Taschen 354 N Beverly Drive, Beverly Hills ☎ 310/274-4300. Fun, weird, and edifying titles that focus on everything from Renaissance art to kitsch Americana to fetish photography.

Vroman's 695 E Colorado Blvd, Pasadena ☎ 626/449-5320. One of the San Gabriel Valley's largest retailers for new books, and a good place to browse.

Music

Amoeba Music 6400 W Sunset Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/245-6400. Popular record store whose vast selection of titles supposedly numbers around half a million – on CD, tape, and vinyl. Also presents occasional in-store live music.

Backside Records 139 N San Fernando Rd, Burbank ☎ 818/559-7573. With a bent toward the vinyl-minded, this two-level, DJ-oriented store stocks both LPs and CDs with a broad range of electronica, plus some jazz, rap, and soul.

Counterpoint 5911 Franklin Ave, Hollywood ☎ 323/957-7965. Provides a terrific smorgasbord of used vinyl, CDs, movies on cassette and DVD, books, and even antique 78 records. Also connected to its own underground art gallery.

Record Surplus 11609 W Pico Blvd, West LA ☎ 310/478-4217. The best spot for used music in LA (or anywhere for that matter), loaded with ancient LPs, out-of-print CDs, new releases, and all manner of assorted junk you have to see to believe.

Vinyl Fetish 1614 N Cahuenga Blvd, Hollywood ☎ 323/957-2290. Loaded with punk, alternative, and indie sounds – plus plenty of vinyl for budding DJs – this is also a good place to discover what's new on the ever-changing LA music scene.

The Deserts

California's deserts occupy a quarter of the state. Largely untouched but for the three million acres used for military bases, this hot and forbidding wilderness exerts a powerful fascination for venturesome travelers. The two distinct regions are the Low Desert in the south, the most easily reached from LA, containing the opulent oasis of Palm Springs and the primeval expanse of Joshua Tree National Park; and the Mojave or High Desert, dominated by Death Valley and stretching along Hwy-395 to the sparsely populated Owens Valley, infamous as the place from which LA stole its water.

It is impossible to do justice to this area without a car. Palm Springs can be reached on public transit from LA, but only the periphery of Joshua Tree is accessible, and it's a long hot walk to anywhere worth seeing. You can get as far as dreary Barstow on Greyhound and Amtrak, but no transportation traverses Death Valley, leaving only the Owens Valley with daily Greyhound service between LA and Reno.

The Low Desert

Most visitors to the Low Desert head straight for its capital, that bastion of libertarian politics and sun-scorched refuge of the Hollywood elite, Palm Springs.

It's the first major town east from LA on I-10, at the center of the Coachella Valley, an agricultural empire that grows dates and citrus fruits in vast quantities and the toasty location of one of the country's best outdoor music festivals (🌐 www.coachella.com). An hour's drive east of Palm Springs is the eerily sublime landscape of Joshua Tree National Park.

Palm Springs

Amid lush farmland replete with golf courses, condos, and millionaires, PALM SPRINGS embodies a strange mix of Spanish Colonial and mid-twentieth-century modernism. Massive Mount San Jacinto looms over its low-slung buildings, casting a welcome shadow over the town in the late-afternoon heat. Ever since Hollywood stars first came here in the 1930s, laying claim to ranch estates and holing up in elite hotels, the clean dry air and sunshine have made Palm Springs irresistible to the masses. In recent years, the city has also become a major gay resort.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Palm Springs is 120 miles east of LA. Arriving by car, you drive into town on N Palm Canyon Drive, passing the visitor center at no. 2901 (daily 9am–5pm, Sun closes 4pm; ☎ 1-800/347-7746, 🌐 www.palm-springs.org), a classic piece of pop architecture with an upswept roof and boomerang design. Greyhound buses (6 daily from LA; 3–4hr) pull in at 311 N Indian Canyon Drive, while Amtrak trains from LA (3 weekly) stop just south of I-10 at N Indian Avenue, about ten minutes from downtown. The local operator SunBus (6am–8pm; tickets $1, day passes $1.50; ☎ 760/347-8628, 🌐 www.sunline.org) circulates in all the local resort towns. One enjoyable option outside the blistering summer months is to rent a bike from Bighorn Bicycles, 302 N Palm Canyon Drive (☎ 760/325-3367), who charge $25–35 for a half- to a full-day, depending on the model.

Companies such as Celebrity Tours, 4751 E Palm Canyon Drive (☎ 760/770-2700, 🌐 www.celebrity-tours.com), offer tours past celebrity homes and enclaves from $25 for a basic, 90-minute trip to $40 for more involved, 3–4 hour treks. (You can also do it yourself, with a map of the stars' homes ($7) from the visitor center.) Guided tours of Palm Springs' stash of notable modernist architecture, among them designs by R.M. Schindler, Albert Frye and Richard Neutra, are organized by PS Modern Tours (2hr 30min; $55; ☎ 760/318-6118, 📧 psmodern.tours@aol.com).

Accommodation

Luxury hotels predominate in Palm Springs, but prices drop by as much as seventy percent as temperatures soar in the summer. The north end of town, along Hwy-111, holds many of the lower-priced places, including countless motels, virtually all of which have pools and air-conditioning. The prices below are spring and autumn rates; expect to pay about $20–50 more or less for winter and summer, respectively.

Ballantines 1420 N Indian Canyon Drive
☎ 760/320-1178, 🌐 www.ballantineshotels.com. Remodeled motel with modern luxuries and sporting vintage 1950s kitsch in its themed rooms (bachelor pads, Hollywood glamor, etc). Ⓜ

Casa Cody 175 S Cahuilla Rd ☎ 760/320-9346
or 1-800/231-2639, 🌐 www.casacody.com. Built in the 1920s, this historic, but updated, Southwestern-style B&B offers attractive rooms and a shady garden. A bit more comfortable than higher-priced retro-motels. Ⓜ

Ingleside Inn 200 W Ramon Rd ☎ 760/325-0046 or 1-800/772-6655, 🌐 www.inglesideinn.com. Historic downtown option, where the guest list has included Dalí, Garbo, and Brando. For double the price of a standard unit, you can get a room with antiques, fireplace, whirlpool tub, or patio. ④–⑥ Orbit Inn 562 W Arenas Rd ☎ 760/323-3585

www.orbitinn.com. About the best that can be expected when recasting a 1957 motel into a suave, yuppie-friendly hotel. Drink cutely named cocktails by the pool and lounge in stylish rooms filled with arch-modern decor. ⑦
Palm Court Inn 1983 N Palm Canyon Drive ☎ 760/416-2333, www.palmcourt-inn.com. Nice motel with two pools, a Jacuzzi, and gym, plus free continental breakfast and comfortable rooms. ③

Villa Royale 1620 S Indian Trail ☎ 760/327-2314, www.villaroyale.com. Elegant inn with nicely furnished rooms and suites, as well as in-room Jacuzzis and a good restaurant. ⑦

The Willows 412 W Tahquitz Canyon ☎ 760/320-0771, www.thewillowspalm-springs.com. The very reason celebrities were first attracted to Palm Springs in the 1930s: a stunning hangout for the Hollywood elite that provides great views and opulent rooms. ④

Downtown Palm Springs

Downtown Palm Springs stretches for half a mile along Palm Canyon Drive, a wide, bright, and modern strip of chain stores that has engulfed the town's quaint Spanish Colonial-style buildings. Shops run the gamut from upscale boutiques and middlebrow art galleries to tacky T-shirt emporia and bookstores devoted exclusively to dead celebrities.

The luxuriously housed Palm Springs Desert Museum, 101 Museum Drive (Tues, Wed & Fri–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs noon–8pm; summer Fri–Sun only, 10am–5pm; $12.50, children $5; www.psmuseum.org), is strong on Native American and Southwestern art, as well as grand American landscaping painting from the nineteenth century. Some interesting natural-science exhibits focus on the animal and plant life of the desert, demonstrating that it's not all sandstorms and rattlesnakes. There is a modern art gallery and some lovely sculpture courts on the grounds, and the museum hosts performances of music, theater, comedy, and dance in the 450-seat Annenberg Theater (tickets ☎ 760/325-4490).

There's an anarchic piece of landscape gardening at Moorten Botanical Gardens, 1701 S Palm Canyon Drive (Mon, Tues, Thurs–Sat 9am–4.30pm, Sun 10am–4pm; $3; www.palmsprings.com/moorten), an odd cornucopia of desert plants and cacti, in settings designed to simulate their natural environments, but lumped together in no particular order. Finally, near the airport, the Palm Springs Air Museum, 745 N Gene Autry Trail (daily 10am–5pm; $10; www.palmspringsairmuseum.org), has an impressive collection of World War II fighters and bombers, including Spitfires, Tomcats, and a B-17 Flying Fortress.

Around Palm Springs

Most visitors to Palm Springs never leave the poolside, but desert enthusiasts still visit to hike and ride in the Indian Canyons (daily 8am–5pm, summer schedule varies; $8; www.indian-canyons.com), three miles southeast of downtown along S Palm Canyon Drive, where centuries ago, ancestors of the Cahuilla developed extensive agricultural communities. The canyons are about fifteen miles long, and can be toured by car, although it's worth walking at least a few miles; the easiest trails lead past the waterfalls, rocky gorges, and copious palm trees of Palm Canyon (3 miles) and Andreas Canyon (1 mile). Some areas are set aside for trailblazing in jeeps and four-wheel-drive vehicles: you can rent one from Off-Road Rentals, four miles north of town at 59511 Hwy-111 (Sept–June only; $35 per hour; ☎ 760/325-0376, www.offroadrentals.com), or take a guided jeep adventure around the Santa Rosa Mountains with Desert Adventures, 67555 E Palm Canyon Drive, Cathedral City (2–4hr; $75–125; ☎ 760/324-JEEP, www.red-jeep.com).

If the desert heat becomes too much to bear, large cable cars grind and sway over eight thousand feet up the Palm Springs Aerial Tramway, Tramway Road, just off Hwy-111 north of Palm Springs (daily 10am–9pm, weekends opens 8am; $21.50, children $14.50; @www.pstramway.com), heading to the striking 10,815-foot summit of Mount San Jacinto, where you can hike, camp, and dine amid spectacular views. In the opposite direction from Palm Springs, a few miles east of town, PALM DESERT is, like the sun-baked towns further east, riddled with golf courses and elite resorts. Its other claim to fame is the mile-long El Paseo, a boutique-rich strip that some claim as the “Rodeo Drive of the Desert,” though it’s doubtful that fabled Beverly Hills route ever hosted anything quite so kitschy as an annual golf-cart parade (@www.golfcartparade.com). Beyond retirees on the green, Palm Desert is also home to the Living Desert, a combination garden and zoo at 47900 Portola Ave, Palm Desert (daily: summer 8.30am–1pm; rest of year 9am–5pm; $12, summer $8.75; @www.livingdesert.org), which is rich with cactus and palm gardens, and throws in an incongruous section devoted to African desert animals, such as giraffes, zebras, cheetahs, and warthogs.

Eating and drinking

Although most of the better restaurants in Palm Springs are ultra-expensive, more reasonable options can be found with a little effort; alternatively, head to gay-friendly Cathedral City (“Cat City”), five miles east along Hwy-111. All listings are in Palm Springs unless otherwise stated.

Daily Grill 73061 El Paseo, Palm Desert

☎760/779-9911. Busy but stylish diner, with affordable prices for large helpings of steak, fish, and chicken pot pie. Part of a national chain.

El Gallito 68820 Grove St, Cathedral City

☎760/328-7794. Just east of downtown Palm Springs, a busy Mexican cantina that has the best food for miles and often a long wait – get there around 6pm to avoid the masses.

El Mirasol 140 E Palm Canyon Drive ☎760/323-

0721. Fine, affordable Mexican dining that offers a mix of familiar, affordable staples and more authentic fare from Zacatecas and other regions.

Las Casuelas 368 N Palm Canyon Drive

☎760/325-3213. Local Mexican favorite that’s been around since 1958, and remains popular for its hefty portions and laid-back atmosphere. The best bet in a local chain.

Le Vallauris 385 W Tahquitz Canyon Way, next to the Desert Museum ☎760/325-

5059. Excellent contemporary California-Mediterranean cuisine in a gorgeous setting, with sky-high prices and the occasional B-list celebrity dropping in. Reservations only.

Native Foods 1775 E Palm Canyon Drive

☎760/416-0070. One of the town’s better choices for cheap vegetarian cuisine – with veggie pizzas, burgers, and tacos – located in a shopping mall. Also in Palm Desert at 73-890 El Paseo (☎760/836-9396).

Shame on the Moon 69950 Frank Sinatra Drive, Rancho Mirage ☎760/324-5515. Upscale California cuisine and excellent service are the draw here, attracting a loyal gay clientele. Located five miles east of downtown Palm Springs.

Thai Smile 651 N Palm Canyon Drive ☎760/320-5503. Uninspiring decor but great, authentic Thai curry and noodle dishes, all at very reasonable prices.

Joshua Tree National Park

Where the low Colorado Desert meets the high Mojave northeast of Palm Springs, JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL PARK (@www.nps.gov/jotr) protects 1250 square miles of grotesquely gnarled plants, which aren’t trees at all, but a type of yucca, an agave. Joshua trees, named by Mormons in the 1850s who saw in their craggy branches the arms of Joshua pointing to the promised land, can rise up to forty feet tall, but have to contend with extreme aridity and rocky soil. All around lie great heaps of boulders, pushed up by the Pinto Mountain fault, their edges rounded and smoothed by flash floods and harsh winds.

This unearthly landscape is ethereal at sunrise or sunset, when the desert floor is bathed in red light; at noon it can be a threatening furnace, with temperatures sometimes topping 125°F in summer, and rising even higher in the Low Desert section of the park below 3000ft. Still, the park attracts campers, day-trippers, and rock-climbers for its unspoiled beauty, gold-mine ruins, ancient petroglyphs, and incredible rock formations. As with any desert, never venture anywhere without a map and always use four-wheel-drive on unmarked roads. When hiking, stick to the trails: Joshua Tree is full of abandoned gold mines, so watch for loose gravel, never trust the safety of ladders or timber, and bear in mind that the rangers rarely check mines for casualties. Even on the simpler trails, allow around an hour per mile.

One of the easiest hikes (3 miles long, foot-travel only) starts one-and-a-half miles from Canyon Road, six miles from the visitor center at Twentynine Palms, at Fortynine Palms Oasis. West of the oasis, quartz boulders tower around the Indian Cove campground; a trail from the eastern branch of the campground road heads to Rattlesnake Canyon, where, after rainfall, the streams and waterfalls break an otherwise eerie silence among the monoliths.

Joshua Tree National Park

Moving south into the main body of the park, the Wonderland of Rocks features rounded granite boulders that draw rock-climbers from around the world. Well-signposted nature trails lead one mile to Hidden Valley, where cattle-rustlers used to hide out, and to the rain-fed Barker Dam, one mile to the east. The latter is Joshua Tree's crucial water supply, built by cattlemen around the turn of the twentieth century. One negotiable trail climbs four miles past abandoned mines, where some buildings and equipment are still intact, to Lost Horse Mine, 450ft up – which once produced around $20,000 in gold a week, and now consists of antiquated foundations and equipment.

You can find a brilliant desert panorama of badlands and mountains at the 5185-foot Keys View nearby, from where Geology Tour Road leads down to the east through the best of Joshua Tree's rock formations and, further on, to the Cholla Cactus Garden.

Practicalities

Less than an hour's drive northeast from Palm Springs, Joshua Tree National Park (always open; $15 per vehicle for 7 days, $5 per cyclist or hiker) is best approached along Hwy-62, which branches off I-10. You can enter the park via the west entrance, on Park Blvd in the town of Joshua Tree (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 760/366-1855), or the north entrance at Twentynine Palms, where you'll also find the Oasis Visitor Center, 74485 National Park Drive (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 760/367-5500). Alternatively, if you're coming from the south, there's another entry at the Cottonwood Visitor Center (daily 9am–3pm; ☎ 760/367-5500), seven miles north of I-10.

The park has nine established campgrounds, all in the northwest except for one at Cottonwood. Only two have water – Black Rock Canyon and Cottonwood (both $10) – and except for Indian Cove ($10), all the others are $5. You can reserve sites at Black Rock, Sheep Pass and Indian Cove by contacting the park reservation center (☎ 1-800/365-CAMP, 📧 reservations.nps.gov). The rest are operated on a first-come, first-served basis. Come prepared – gathering firewood is not allowed, and you should stock up on water. There are good motels and decent restaurants in TWENTYNINE PALMS, a small desert town two minutes' drive from the park. The cheapest decent place to stay is the El Rancho Dolores, 73352 Inn Ave (☎ 760/367-3528, 📧 www.virtual29.com/elrancho; 📍), although more pleasant is the historic Twentynine Palms Inn, nearby at no. 73950 (☎ 760/367-3505, 📧 www.29palmsinn.com; 📍), with its nice wooden cabins and adobe bungalows, and fine restaurant where the bread is homemade and the vegetables are fresh from an onsite garden. Otherwise, you can try the tasty, authentic Mexican fare at Ramona's, at no. 72115 (☎ 760/367-1929). Morongo Basin Transit Authority buses (☎ 760/367-7433 or 1-800/794-6282, 📧 www.mbtabus.com) run between Palm Springs and Twentynine Palms (1 hr 15min; $10 one way, $15 roundtrip), but not into the park itself.

The High Desert

The stretches of the Mojave Desert that most people see from the road are predictably desolate. Consequently few visitors are inspired to explore further, but this High Desert – sited above 2000ft – offers some of the most dramatic scenery in Southern California, rolling with lush grasses, startling volcanic formations, large stands of Joshua trees, and even, in spots, piñon pines.

Death Valley National Park

DEATH VALLEY is the hottest place on earth. It's also almost entirely devoid of shade, much less water – carry plenty for both car and body. Its sculpted rock layers form deeply shadowed, eroded crevices at the foot of silhouetted hills, their exotic minerals turning ancient mudflats into rainbows of sunlit iridescence. The valley was named by a party of white settlers who stumbled through in 1849, looking for a short cut to the Gold Rush towns; they survived despite running out of food and water. Throughout the summer, the temperature in Death Valley averages 112°F, and the ground can reach near boiling point. Better to come during the spring, when wildflowers are in bloom and it's generally mild and dry.

The central north–south valley contains two main outposts, Stovepipe Wells and Furnace Creek, where the visitor center (daily 8am–5pm; seven-day park pass $20 per vehicle, $10 per pedestrian or cyclist; ☎760/786-3200, 🌐www.nps.gov/deva) is located.

Many of the most unusual sights are located south of Furnace Creek. A good first stop, seven miles along Hwy-178/Badwater Road, is the Artist's Palette, an eroded hillside covered in an intensely colored mosaic of red, gold, black, and green. A few miles further south, a dirt road heading west leads to Devil's Golf Course, a field of salt pinnacles and hummocks protruding a couple of feet from the desert floor. Another four miles on, Badwater is an unpalatable but nonpoisonous 30-foot-wide pool of water, loaded with chloride and sulphates. From the pool, a pair of four-mile hikes crossing the hot valley floor drop two feet down to the lowest point in the western hemisphere, 282ft below sea level.

The badlands around Zabriskie Point, overlooking Badwater and the Artist's Palette off Hwy-190, four miles south of Furnace Creek, were the inspiration for Antonioni's eponymous 1970 movie. More visually appealing is Dante's View, twenty-one miles south on 190 and ten miles along a very steep access road; its best vista of the wide, parched desert floor is during the early morning, when the pink-and-gold Panamint Mountains are highlighted by the rising sun. Near Stovepipe Wells, some thirty miles northwest of Furnace Creek, spread fifteen rippled and contoured square miles of ever-changing sand dunes.

Hordes of overheated tourists wait patiently to wander through the surreal luxury of Scotty's Castle (50min tours daily 9.30am–4pm; $11; reservations ☎760/786-2392), forty miles north of Stovepipe Wells. Built in the 1920s as the $2-million desert retreat of Chicago insurance broker Albert Johnson, it was named after "Death Valley" Scotty, a cowboy and prospector who managed the construction and claimed the house was his own and financed by a hidden gold mine. Tours of the opulently furnished house take in the decorative wooden ceilings, indoor waterfalls, and a remote-controlled player piano. The house remains as it was when Johnson died in 1948. Scotty himself lived here until 1954, and is buried just behind the house.

Eight miles west gapes the half-mile-wide Ubehebe Crater, the rust-tinged result of a massive volcanic explosion some three thousand years ago; half a mile south sits its thousand-year-old younger brother, Little Hebe. Beyond the craters the road continues south for another twenty dusty miles to Racetrack Valley, a two-and-a-half-mile mudflat across which giant boulders seem slowly to be racing, leaving faint trails in their wake.

Practicalities

If you plan to stay, you must reserve ahead. Furnace Creek Resort (☎ 760/786-2345 or 1-800/236-7916, 🌐 www.furnacecreekresort.com) operates two hotels on natural oases – the gorgeous 1920s adobe Furnace Creek Inn (📍), and the ordinary Furnace Creek Ranch (📍), which has two restaurants and a nice bar. More reasonable is Stovepipe Wells Village (☎ 760/786-2387, 🌐 www.stovepipewells.com; 📍) on Hwy-190 about thirty miles northwest of Furnace Creek, offering its own mineral-water pool and restaurant. Camping in one of the many park-service campgrounds costs $12–14, depending on facilities and location, or is free if you don't mind being up in the Panamint Range, far from the valley's sights: the only campground that takes reservations is Furnace Creek ($12–18; ☎ 1-800/365-CAMP), just north of town.

The High Sierra and the Owens Valley

The towering eastern peaks of the HIGH SIERRA drop abruptly to the empty landscape of the OWENS VALLEY, sixty miles west of Death Valley. Almost the entire range is wilderness: well-maintained roads lead to trailheads at over ten thousand feet, providing access to the stark terrain of spires, glaciers, and clear mountain lakes. US-395 is the lifeline of the area connecting several small towns, all with plenty of budget motels. As there is virtually no public transportation in this area (except for CREST; see p.1085), you'll really need a car to get around.

Mount Whitney and Lone Pine

Rising out of the northern Mojave Desert, the mountainous backbone of the Sierra Nevada announces itself with a bang two hundred miles north of Los Angeles at 14,497-foot Mount Whitney, the highest point in the lower 48 states. A silver-gray ridge of pinnacles forms a nearly sheer wall of granite, dominating the small roadside town of LONE PINE eleven thousand feet below. Motels here include the Dow Villa Motel/Historic Dow Hotel at 310 S Main St (☎ 760/876-5521 or 1-800/824-9317, 🌐 www.dowvillamotel.com; 📍), where John Wayne always stayed when filming in the area, and the Best Western Frontier Motel, 1008 S Main St (☎ 760/876-5571 or 1-800/780-7234; 📍). Those headed north might want to push on sixteen miles to Independence, where the slightly run-down but atmospheric Winnedumah Hotel, 211 N Edwards St (☎ 760/878-2040, 🌐 www.winnedumah.com; B&B 📍). You can camp at Tuttle Creek campground ($5; no water) on Horseshoe Meadow Road some four miles west of Lone Pine beyond the Alabama Hills (see below). The Pizza Factory, 301 S Main St (☎ 760/876-4707), and the diner-style Mt Whitney Restaurant, 227 S Main St (☎ 760/876-5751), are decent places to eat. The Eastern Sierra Interagency Visitor Center, a mile south of town on US-395 at the junction of Hwy-136 (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 760/876-6222), is a great source of information about the Owens Valley.

Many early Westerns, and the epic Gunga Din, were filmed in the Alabama Hills to the west, a rugged expanse of bizarrely eroded sedimentary rock. Some of the oddest formations are linked by the Picture Rocks Circle, a paved road that loops around from Whitney Portal Road, passing rocks shaped like bullfrogs, walruses, and baboons.

Two thousand eager souls make the strenuous 22-mile roundtrip hike (12–16hr; 6100ft ascent) to the summit of Mount Whitney each summer (generally snow free June–Oct), some doing it in a day, others camping along the way. Permits are awarded by lottery: applications (🌐 www.fs.fed.us/r5/inyo) are only accepted in February. Any permits left after the lottery are available from the Wilderness Permit Office, Inyo National Forest, 351 Pacu Lane, Suite 200, Bishop, CA 93514 (☎ 760/873-2400). All hikers pay a $15 fee.

One-day ascents start at dawn from either the Whitney Portal campground (late May to mid-Oct; ☎ 1-877/444-6777; $16), or the one-night-only first-come, first-served Whitney Trailhead site ($8) at the end of twisting Whitney Portal Road, reachable via shuttle bus with Lonesome Polecat (☎ 760/876-8232). The trail cuts up to boulder-strewn Trail Crest Pass, the southern end of the 211-mile John Muir Trail to Yosemite, then climbs along the top of vertical cliffs to the rounded summit.

Big Pine and the White Mountains

Nearly fifty miles north, hikes lead from the end of Glacier Lodge Road, ten miles west of nondescript BIG PINE, up to the Palisades Glacier, the southernmost glacier in the northern hemisphere. Along the opposite wall of the five-mile-wide Owens Valley, the ancient, bald, and dry White Mountains are home to the gnarled bristlecone pines, the oldest living things on earth, some first sprouting over four thousand years ago. Battered and beaten by the harsh environment into contorted but beautiful shapes, even when dead the wood can withstand the wind-driven ice and sand for another thousand years.

The most accessible trees are in Schulman Grove, 24 miles east of Big Pine, (late May–Oct; $3 per person, or $5 per vehicle; recorded info on ☎ 760/873-2500), where two trails radiate out from the visitor center. The mile-long Discovery Trail, which passes some photogenic examples; while a longer loop passes but intentionally fails to identify the oldest tree, the 4700-year-old Methuselah.

In the White Mountains there's the free, waterless Grandview campground, or you can stay back in Big Pine at the Big Pine Motel, 370 S Main St (☎ 760/938-2282; 📍).

Bishop

BISHOP, to a Californian, means outdoor pursuits. The largest town (population 3500) in the Owens Valley, it's an excellent base for cross-country skiing, fly-fishing, and especially rock-climbing. Motels, such as the El Rancho, 274 W Lagoon St (☎ 760/872-9251 or 1-888/872-9251; 📍), the Thunderbird, 190 W Pine St (☎ 760/873-4215; 📍), and bargain restaurants can be found within a block of US-395. The visitor center at 690 N Main St (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 760/873-8405, 🌐 www.bishopvisitor.com) can provide details of the many adventure travel specialists based in town. For hiking and camping information, the White Mountain Ranger Station, 798 N Main St (May–Oct daily; rest of year Mon–Fri; call for hours; ☎ 760/873-2500), will be of more use.

Mammoth Lakes

Forty miles north along US-395 from Bishop, then three miles west on Hwy-203, the resort town of MAMMOTH LAKES offers the state's premier ski slopes outside the Lake Tahoe basin, and in summer hosts on- and off-road bike races. The setting is stunning, but the town is pricey and prone to testosterone overload. To ski Mammoth Mountain (☎ 1-800/MAMMOTH, 🌐 www.mammothmountain.com), which looms up behind the resort, pick up lift tickets ($78 a day) from the Main Lodge on Minaret Road, where you can also rent equipment ($32 for basic skis, boots, and poles), and book three-hour lessons ($67). In summer, fifty miles of snow-free slopes transform themselves into the 3500-acre Mammoth Moun- tain Bike Park (one-day pass with unlimited rides on the bike shuttle and gondola $35; add $40 for bike rental).

One appealing summer-only destination is the Devil's Postpile National Monument, seven miles southwest of Mammoth Mountain ($7, includes shuttle bus; 📍 www.nps.gov/depo). A collection of slender, blue-gray basaltic columns, some as tall as sixty feet, the Postpile was formed as lava from a volcanic eruption cooled and fractured into multi-sided forms. From here, a two-mile hike along the San Joaquin River leads to the 101-foot Rainbow Falls, which refract the midday sun perfectly.

Practicalities

Year-round Carson Ridgecrest Eastern Sierra Transit (CREST) buses (📞 760/872-1901 or 📞 1-800/922-1930) stop in the McDonald's parking lot on Hwy-203. During the ski season, get around on the five-line Mammoth Shuttle (📞 760/934-3030). For information, go to the combined US Forest Service ranger station and Mammoth Lakes visitor center, on the main highway half a mile east of the town center (daily 8am–5pm; 📞 760/924-5500, 📍 www.visitmammoth.com).

Mammoth's plentiful accommodation is cheapest in summer (and is what we've quoted here); expect one price range higher during the ski season. For reasonably priced B&B close to downtown visit the rambling Cinnamon Bear Inn, 113 Center St (📞 1-800/845-2873, 📍 www.cinnamonbearinn.com; 5). The Swiss Chalet Lodge, 3776 Viewpoint Rd (📞 1-800/937-9477, 📍 www.mammoth-swisschalet.com; 4) offers motel accommodation with mountain views; while the hostel-style Daivson St. Guesthouse, 19 Davison St (📞 760/924-2188; 📍 www.mammoth-guest.com; 3), offers comfortable rooms, four-bed dorms and a kitchen. Central camping is at the fairly busy New Shady Rest ($15) just as you enter Mammoth from US-395. There are also campgrounds ($15) close to Devil's Postpile National Monument, and free waterless sites in the Inyo National Forest off US-395 around eleven miles north.

Mammoth has the widest selection of restaurants in the Owens Valley. The Looney Bean, Mammoth Mall, is the most vibrant café; Schat's Bakery 3305 Main St, serves sumptuous baked goods; and The Stove, 644 Old Mammoth Road, dishes up country cooking in gargantuan portions. Whiskey Creek, at Main and Minaret (📞 760/934-2555), is a lively bar and restaurant, with its own good microbrews; and for something fancy try The Lakefront Restaurant, at Tamarack Lodge (📞 760/934-2442), which offers superb lake views and good French-Californian cuisine – for a price.

Mono Lake, Lee Vining, and Bodie Ghost Town

The blue expanse of Mono Lake sits in the midst of a volcanic desert tableland at the north end of the valley. It looks like a science-fiction landscape, with two large islands, one light-colored, the other black, surrounded by salty, alkaline water. Strange sandcastle-like formations of tufa (calcium deposited from springs) were exposed after the City of Los Angeles extended an aqueduct into the Mono Basin through an eleven-mile tunnel. From 1941 until the 1990s the water level gradually dropped by over forty feet creating the biggest environmental controversy in California. Mono Lake is the primary nesting ground for the state's California gull population – twenty percent of the world total – and a prime stopover point for hundreds of thousands of grebes and phalaropes. Though the California Supreme Court ruled in 1983 that Mono Lake must be saved, it wasn't until 1991 that emergency action was taken.

CALIFORNIA

The San Joaquin Valley

For more details about Mono Lake and the fight for its survival, stop by the Mono Lake Committee Information Center, in the small town of LEE VINING on US-395 (daily: July & Aug 9am–10pm; rest of year 9am–5pm; ☎ 760/647-6595, 🌐 www.leevinning.com), or a mile north at the excellent Mono Basin Scenic Area Visitor Center (May–Oct daily 9am–5.30pm; ☎ 760/647-3044). Motels along US-395 include El Mono Motel (☎ 760/647-6310; 📍) and Murphey's (☎ 1-800/334-6316, 🌐 www.murpheysyosemite.com; 📍). Excellent budget food is served at the 🍷 Whoa Nellie Deli, in the Mobil gas station at the junction of US-395 and Hwy-120 just south of town. For fine dining, head five miles north to the Mono Inn (☎ 760/647-6581, 🌐 www.monoinn.com; closed Tues & Nov–April) owned by Ansel Adams's granddaughter and with lovely lake views.

Northeast of Lee Vining, in a remote, high desert valley, stands a well-preserved and evocative relic of the gold-mining 1870s. Bodie State Park (open all year but often inaccessible by car in winter; $3 per person; 🌐 www.parks.ca.gov) is perhaps the best ghost town in the US, with many of its structures still intact but not gussied up for tourists. With thirty saloons and dance halls and a population of ten thousand, it was once the raunchiest and most lawless mining camp in the west; over 150 wooden buildings survive in a state of arrested decay around the intact town center, littered with old bottles, bits of machinery, and old stagecoaches. The ruins of the mines themselves, in the hills east of town, are off limits to visitors except on the frequent tours.

The San Joaquin Valley

The vast interior of California is split down the middle by the Sierra Nevada (Spanish for “snowy range”), or High Sierra, a sawtooth range of snow-capped peaks that stands high above the semi-desert of the Owens Valley. The wide San Joaquin Valley in the west was made super-fertile by irrigation projects during the 1940s, and is now almost totally agricultural. Even if the nightlife begins and ends with the local ice-cream parlor, after the big cities of the coast the downshift can be quite refreshing. However, the real reason to come here is to reach the national parks of Sequoia and Kings Canyon – whose huge trees form the centerpiece of a rich natural landscape – and Yosemite, where waterfalls cascade down towering walls of silvery granite. Few roads penetrate the hundred miles of wilderness to the east, but the entire region is crisscrossed by hiking trails leading up into the pristine alpine backcountry.

The arrow-straight I-5 barrels straight up from LA to San Francisco. Six daily trains and frequent Greyhound buses run through the valley, calling at the towns along Hwy-99, in particular Merced, which has bus connections to Yosemite but otherwise doesn't merit a look-in.

Bakersfield

The first town you come to across the rocky peaks north of Los Angeles is the flat and featureless oil town of BAKERSFIELD. This is the unlikely home of one of the liveliest country music scenes in the nation, stemming from the arrival during the Depression of Midwestern farmers, with their hillbilly instruments and campfire songs. In the mid-1960s, the gutsy honky-tonk style of Bakersfield artists such as Merle Haggard and Buck Owens challenged the slick commercial output of Nashville, but hopes of luring the major country-music record labels to “Nashville West” foundered with the emergence of rivals like Austin, Texas.

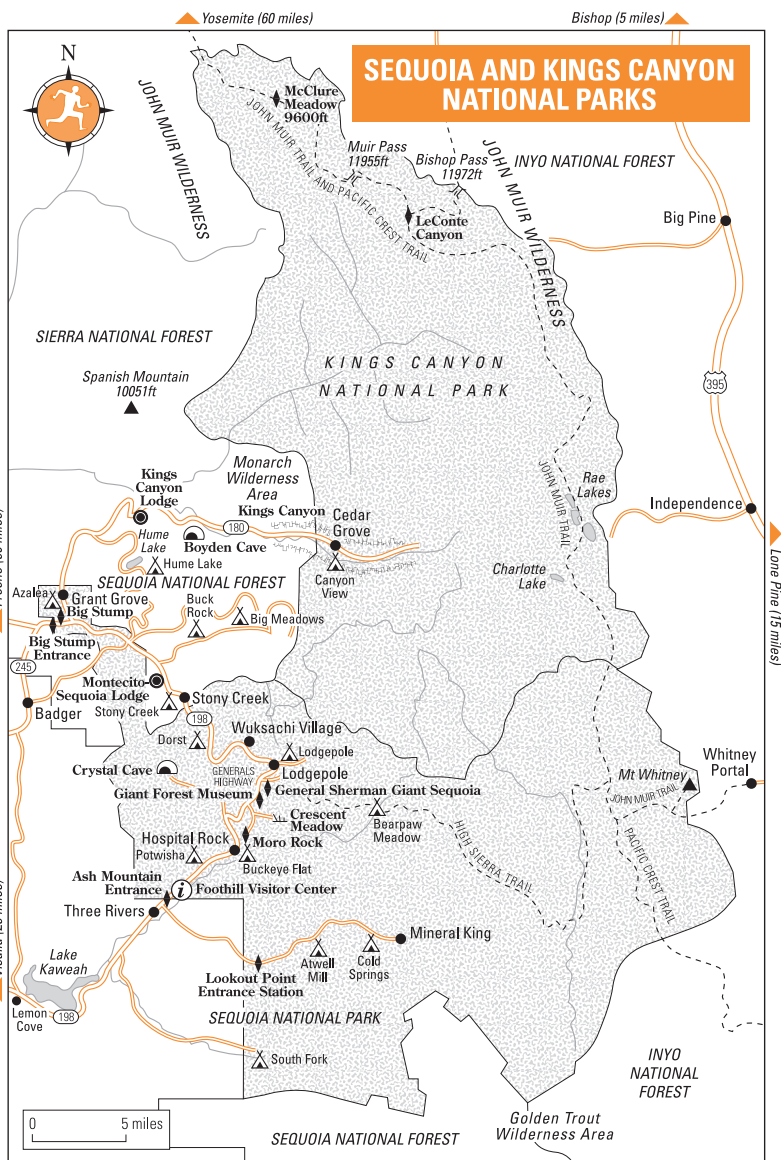

Nevertheless, the numerous honky-tonks of Bakersfield are still jumping every Friday and Saturday night. Stetson hats and rhinestone shirts are the sartorial order of the day, and audiences span generations. Most venues are hotel lounges or restaurant backrooms; don't miss the country bar Trouts, 805 N Chester Ave (☎661/399-6700), for a down-to-earth honky-tonk experience. Closer to town, you might also try the Buck Owens Crystal Palace, 2800 Buck Owens Blvd (☎661/328-7560, www.buckowens.com; closed Mon), where for under $10 you get a live show, dancing and access to a museum of Buck Owens memorabilia. Buck died in 2006, but his band, The Buckaroos, continue to play on Friday and Saturday nights.

Practicalities

From LA, the Amtrak Thruway bus goes to Bakersfield, where you can catch the train through the valley toward San Francisco and northern California. Several Greyhound bus routes require changes here too, calling at 1820 18th St. The handiest visitor center is at 1725 Eye St (Mon 9am–5pm, Tues–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎661/327-4421; www.visitkern.com), and there's good information on the county website. Bargain overnight stays include the EZ-8, 2604 Buck Owen Blvd (☎661/322-1901; 📍), and the adjacent La Quinta, 3232 Riverside Drive (☎661/325-7400 or 1-800/642-4271; 📍), both pool-equipped and a short stagger from Buck Owens Crystal Palace (see opposite). For food, Zingo's at 3201 Buck Owen Blvd (☎661/321-0627) is a 24-hour truckstop where frilly-aproned waitresses deliver plates of diner staples; 24th Street Café, 1415 24th St (☎661/323-8801), does top-rate breakfasts; Joseph's, hidden back off the road at 3013 F St (☎661/322-7710), serves huge calzone and other Italian dishes; and the 🍷 Noriega Hotel, 525 Sumner St (☎661/322-8419; closed Mon), offers excellent all-you-can-eat Basque meals at long communal tables.

Sequoia and Kings Canyon

The southernmost of the Sierra Nevada national parks, preserving ancient forests of giant sequoia trees, are Sequoia and Kings Canyon. As you might expect, Sequoia National Park contains the thickest concentration – and the biggest specimens – of sequoias to be found anywhere, tending (literally) to overshadow its assortment of meadows, peaks, canyons, and caves. Kings Canyon National Park has few big trees but compensates with a gaping canyon gored out of the rock by the Kings River as it cascades down from the High Sierra. The few established sights of both parks are near the main roads, leaving the vast majority of the landscape untrammelled and unspoiled, but well within reach for willing hikers.

Arrival and information

No public transportation of any kind serves the parks, but they're easily reached by car: the closest large town is Visalia, just under fifty miles away on Hwy-198, or a slightly longer, but faster, drive uses Hwy-180 from Fresno: note that there is no gas available in the parks. The entrance fee ($20 per car, $10 per pedestrian or cyclist: valid seven days) entitles you to a detailed map of the paired parks, and a copy of The Guide, a free seasonal newspaper which details accommodation, guided hikes, and other activities. The two parks are separate but jointly run; for information call ☎559/565-3341 or visit 🌐www.nps.gov/seki.

Accommodation and eating

The least expensive rooms are in the motels near the park entrances: Sierra Inn Motel (☎559/338-0678, 📍338-0789; ❸), fourteen miles west of the southern entrance on Hwy-180 and, near the southern entrance on Hwy-198, Gateway Lodge (☎559/561-4133, 🌐www.gateway-sequoia.com; ❹). Inside the parks, all facilities are managed by Kings Canyon Park Services (KCPS; ☎559/335-5500 or 1-866/522-6966, 🌐www.sequoia-kingscanyon.com; ❹-❷) who operate cabins and hotel units at Stony Creek, Grant Grove, and Cedar Grove; and Delaware North Companies Parks and Resorts (DNCPR; ☎559/565-3341 or 1-888/252-5757, 🌐www.visitsequoia.com; ❷) who run the upmarket Wuksachi Lodge in Sequoia. Space is at a premium during the high season (May to mid-Oct), but you can usually pick up cancellations on the day. In winter you can still camp, but the cheapest roofed accommodation is in cabins at Grant Grove for $120.

Campgrounds are dotted all over both parks, most charging $18 a pitch. In Sequoia, the busiest campground is Lodgepole, which you can reserve up to five months in advance through the National Park Reservation System (☎1-800/444-6777, 🌐www.recreation.gov). In Kings Canyon, the bulk of the sites are around Grant Grove, with another at Cedar Grove – all cost $18. For backcountry camping, pick up a free permit from a visitor center or ranger station. And remember this is bear country: in established campgrounds use the bearproof food boxes, in the backcountry rent bear canisters from the stores in Cedar Grove, Grant Grove, and Lodgepole.

There are pricey food markets and cafeterias in the various villages, and a couple of restaurants, notably bargain buffets at the Montecito-Sequoia Lodge in the national forest between the two parks. Three Rivers, on the southern approach to Sequoia, has the best range of places to eat nearby.

Sequoia National Park

While trees are seldom scarce in SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK – patches where the giant sequoias can't grow are thickly swathed with pine and fir – the scenery is quite varied. Paths lead through forests and meadows; longer treks rise above the tree line to the barren peaks of the High Sierra. Soon after entering the park from the south, Hwy-198 becomes the Generals Highway and climbs swiftly into the dense woods of the aptly labeled Giant Forest, where displays in the modern Giant Forest Museum explain the lifecycle of the sequoias and what's being done to protect the remaining groves. From here you can explore along Crescent Meadow Road where a loop road leads to the granite monolith of Moro Rock (a three-mile marked trail leads from Giant Forest), which streaks wildly upward from the green hillside. Views from its remarkably level top can stretch 150 miles. A hewn staircase makes it easy to climb the rock in fifteen minutes, although the altitude can be a strain.

Continuing east, Crescent Meadow Road leads to Crescent Meadow which, like other grassy fields in the area, is more accurately a marsh, too wet for the sequoias that form an impressive boundary around. A perimeter trail leads to Tharp's Log, a cabin hollowed out of a fallen sequoia by Hale Tharp who, while searching for a summer grazing ground for his sheep, was led here by Native Americans in 1856. He was not only the first white man to see the giant sequoias but the first to live in one. Just north of Giant Forest, back on the Generals Highway, is the biggest sequoia of them all, the 2200-year-old, 275-foot General Sherman Tree. While it's certainly a thrill to see what is held to be the largest living thing on the planet, its extraordinary dimensions are hard to grasp alongside the almost equally monstrous sequoias all around.

Whatever your plans, you should stop at Lodgepole Village, three miles north of the Sherman Tree, for the geological displays and film shows at the visitor center (June to Aug daily 7am–6pm; May & Sept daily 7am–5pm). You can explore the glacial canyon on the Tokopah Valley Trail (2hr), which leads to the base of Tokopah Falls, beneath the 1600ft Watchtower cliff. The top of the Watchtower is accessible by the fatiguing but straightforward six-mile Lakes Trail.

Kings Canyon National Park

Kings Canyon National Park is wilder and less visited than Sequoia, with a maze-like collection of canyons and a sprinkling of isolated lakes – the perfect environment for careful self-guided exploration. To reach the canyon proper, you have to pass through the hamlet of Grant Grove, where there's a useful visitor center (daily: mid-May to Aug 8am–6pm; rest of year 9am–4.30pm) and the 2.5-mile Big Stump Trail shows off the remains of the logging that took place in the 1880s. Several massive trees from these parts were sliced up and sent to the Atlantic seaboard to convince cynical easterners that such enormous trees really existed. A mile west of Grant Grove, a large stand of sequoias contains the General Grant and Robert E. Lee trees, which rival the General Sherman in size.

Kings Canyon Highway (Hwy-180; May–Oct only) descends from Grant Grove into the steep-sided Kings Canyon, cut by the furious gushings of various forks of the Kings River. Whether or not this is the deepest canyon in the US, as some would have it, its wall sections of granite and gleaming blue marble, and the yellow pockmarks of blooming yucca plants (May and early June, in particular), are magnificent. A word of warning: don't be tempted by the clear waters of the river; people have been swept away even when paddling close to the bank in a seemingly placid section.

Once into the national park proper, the canyon sheds its V-shape and gains a floor. Cedar Grove Village here is named for its proliferation of incense cedars. There's a ranger station across the river (June–Aug daily 9am–5pm; May & Sept hours reduced). Apart from the scenery, you should look out for the flowers – leopard lilies, shooting stars, violets, lupins, and others – and birdlife, too. The longer hikes beside the creeks are up to eight miles long and fairly strenuous. An easy alternative is to wander around the green Zumwalt Meadow, four miles from Cedar Grove Village and a short walk from the road, which spreads beneath the forbidding gray walls of Grand Sentinel and North Dome.

Just a mile further on, Kings Canyon Road comes to an end at Copper Creek. Thirty years ago vehicles were prohibited from penetrating further, and instead the multitude of canyons and peaks that constitute the Kings River Sierra are networked by hiking paths, almost all best enjoyed armed with a tent, provisions, and a wilderness permit from the trailhead ranger station.

The Sierra National Forest

The entire gaping tract of land between Kings Canyon and Yosemite is taken up by the less-visited Sierra National Forest. If you want to hike and camp in complete solitude, this is the place to do it. Buck Rock and Big Meadows campgrounds, not far from either Kings Canyon or Sequoia national parks, are free, waterless sites. Don't try lone exploration without thorough planning – public transportation is nonexistent here, and roads and trails are often closed due to bad weather. The best-placed source for free backcountry permits, and camping and wilderness information is the Pineridge Ranger Station (daily 8am–4.30pm; ☎559/855-5360), on Hwy-168 at Prather, five miles west of the forest entrance.

Of the forest's two main regions, the Pineridge district, forty miles east from Fresno using Hwy-168, is the best to explore. The popular Shaver Lake and Huntington Lake, rich in campgrounds (reserve in summer on ☎1-877/444-6777), soon give way to the isolated alpine landscapes beyond the 9200-foot Kaiser Pass. The sheer challenge posed by the rugged, unspoiled terrain of the adjoining John Muir Wilderness can make the national parks look like holiday camps. You can bathe outdoors at the nearby Mono Hot Springs, or for the full hot springs experience, head for the Mono Hot Springs Resort here (mid-May to Oct; ☎559/325-1710, 🌐www.monohotsprings.com; ③–⑤), which has indoor mineral baths along with self-catering cabins. The road narrows and twists on to Edison Lake and the Vermillion Valley Resort (☎559/259-4000, 🌐www.edisonlake.com; ③–④), from where you can catch a small ferry across the lake to the trailheads.

Yosemite National Park

More gushing adjectives have been thrown at YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK than at any other part of California. However excessive the hyperbole may seem, the instant you turn the corner that reveals Yosemite Valley, you realize it's actually an understatement – this is one of the world's most dramatic geological spectacles. Just seven miles long and never more than one mile across, it is walled by near-vertical three-thousand-foot cliffs, streaked by tumbling waterfalls and topped by domes and pinnacles that form a jagged silhouette against the sky. At ground level, grassy meadows are framed by oak, cedar, and fir trees; deer, coyotes, and even black bears are often seen. Tourists are even commoner, but the park is big enough to absorb the crowds: you can visit at any time of year, even in winter when the waterfalls ice up and the trails are blocked by snow, and excepting summer, the valley itself is rarely overcrowded.

Yosemite Valley was made by glaciers gouging through the canyon of the Merced River: the ice scraped away the softer granite but only scarred the harder sections, which became the existing cliffs. The lake that formed when the glaciers melted eventually silted up to create the present valley floor. Native Americans lived here in comparative peace until the mid-nineteenth century, when the threatening approach of Gold Rush settlers led them to launch raiding parties. In 1851 Major James Savage's

Mariposa Battalion trailed the Native Americans into the foothills and beyond, becoming the first whites to set foot in Yosemite Valley, and the native community were soon forced out to make way for farmers, foresters, and tourists. Thanks in great part to the campaigning work of naturalist John Muir, in 1864 Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Grove were set aside as protected wilderness, setting the template for the world's first national park, Yellowstone, formed eight years later. A Scottish immigrant who traveled the entire area on foot, Muir spearheaded the conservation movement that led to the founding of the Sierra Club, with the express aim of preserving Yosemite. In 1913, the construction of a dam in the Hetch Hetchy Valley just north, to provide water for San Francisco, was a setback; but the publicity actually aided the formation of the present National Park Service in 1916, which promised – and has since provided – greater protection. Park entry costs $20 per vehicle, $10 per pedestrian or cyclist, and is valid for seven days.

Getting there

Getting to Yosemite by car is straightforward, though the only road in from the east, Hwy-120 from Lee Vining, is closed from early November to around the beginning of June. Gas is pricey in the park and unavailable in Yosemite Valley. Public transportation into the park centers on the Amtrak-accessible Central Valley town of Merced, from where YARTS buses (☎ 209/388-9589 or 1-877/989-2787, @www.yarts.com) make the two-hour run to Yosemite Valley four or five times a day, charging $13 each way. All services call at Merced Transpo, 710 W 16th St, for Greyhound connections, and at the Amtrak station, 324 W 24th St at K Street, where two of the services connect with trains from San Francisco. YARTS also runs a once-daily summer-only service over the Tioga Pass road from Mammoth Lakes and Lee Vining ($20 roundtrip).

There's also the Yosemite Bug Bus (@www.yosemitebugbus.com), which picks up from San Francisco hostels and hotels (Mon, Wed, Fri) for two-day-two-night tours to Yosemite with nights at the Yosemite Bug (see below) in a dorm ($140 total) or private room ($165 total). Bus fares are inclusive of park entry.

If you need somewhere to stay overnight before heading to Yosemite, consider the HI-Merced Home Hostel (☎ 209/725-0407; members $15, others $18), where the staff pick you up from the train or bus and drop you off at the appropriate station the following morning. If you'd rather be closer to the park, try the lively 🐾 Yosemite Bug, 6979 Hwy-140 (☎ 209/966-6666 or 966-6667, @www.YosemiteBug.com; rooms 2–4, bunks HI $15, nonmembers $18), at Midpines, on the YARTS bus route, where there's a wide range of accommodation and an excellent bar and café.

For recorded information on the park, roads, and weather, call ☎ 209/372-0200. The park also has a website: @www.nps.gov/yose.

Yosemite Valley

The three roads from the Central Valley end up at Yosemite Valley, roughly in the center of the park's 1200 square miles, and home to its most dramatic scenery. This is the busiest part of Yosemite, with Yosemite Village holding the main shops and the useful visitor center (daily: June–Sept 8am–6pm or later; Oct to May 9am–5pm; ☎ 209/372-0299).

There's little in the village of any great interest; the reason to come here is to explore the major cliffs that dominate Yosemite Valley. The 3600-foot El Capitan is one of the world's biggest pieces of exposed granite, so large that rock-climbers on its face are virtually invisible to the naked eye. The truncated face of Half Dome is the sheerest cliff in North America, just seven percent off the vertical.

You can hike to rounded summit of Half Dome by initially following the popular Mist Trail to Vernal Fall (3 miles roundtrip; 2–3hr; 1100ft ascent), which winds up so close to the sensual waterfall that during the spring snowmelt period (mid-April to mid-June) hikers are drenched by the spray, but rewarded by vivid rainbows. Vernal Fall never completely dries up, but like all those in the valley, it is best seen in spring; by August, falls can be reduced to a trickle, and others disappear altogether. Continuing on the Mist Trail past Vernal Fall, it's a strenuous ascent, the final section aided by a steel staircase hooked on to Half Dome's curving back (late May to mid-Oct only); if you plan a one-day assault, you'll need to start at the crack of dawn.

An early start is also recommended for the trail to Upper Yosemite Fall (7 miles roundtrip; 4–7hr; 2700ft ascent) leads up along a steep switchback path from behind the Camp 4 campground, near Yosemite Lodge. This almost continuous ascent strains the leg muscles, but you get fine views over the valley on the way up, and after about two miles, a chance to appreciate the power (and volume) of the water as it crashes almost 1500ft in a single cascade. A mile and a half further on the same trail, you reach the top of the fall, more spectacular views, and riverside spots for a much deserved picnic.

The most spectacular views of Yosemite Valley are from Glacier Point, the top of a 3200ft almost-sheer cliff, 32 miles by road from the valley. It's possible to get there on foot using the vertiginous Four-Mile Trail (4.8 miles one way; 3–4hr; 3200ft ascent) though the lazy prefer to take the bus up (details below) and the trail down. The valley floor lies directly beneath the viewing point, and there are tremendous views across to Half Dome and the distant snowcapped summits of the High Sierra.

Practicalities

Prices within Yosemite are uniformly higher than outside the park, but not unaffordable. Of the hotels in the valley, try Yosemite Lodge (5) or Curry Village, a mile from Yosemite Village, which has similarly priced rooms, plus fixed tent cabins (4) and cabins (4–5); it also offers showers for nonguests ($2). For hotel information and reservations, call ☎ 559/253-5635 or visit @ www.yosemitepark.com.

Camping in the valley is only permitted in campgrounds, such as Camp 4 Walk-in ($5 per person), just west of Yosemite Lodge, which is popular with rock-climbers and has a bohemian reputation; it lacks showers and can only be reserved on the day at the kiosk on-site. Other valley campgrounds cost $20 per site, and you can reserve up to five months ahead in summer (☎ 1-800/444-6777; @ www.recreation.gov): reserve as far in advance as you can, though there are occasionally cancellations.

Food in Yosemite is expensive for what you get, though there is reasonable choice. Yosemite Village has a small supermarket and snack bars, the best of which is Degnan's Deli, where massive sandwiches cost around $7. The Food Court at Yosemite Lodge offers filling and inexpensive meals, and the Pavilion Buffet at Curry Village has an all-you-care-to-eat feast for $13. There's also a great deck at Curry Village where you can order pizza and margaritas. The baronial-style Ahwahnee Dining Room (☎ 209/372-1489) has the best (and most expensive) food in Yosemite and a great $34 Sunday brunch; a jacket is required for dinner.

Once in Yosemite Valley, getting around is easy, but cars spoil everybody's fun. If you drive in for the day, park at Yosemite Village and ride the frequent, free shuttle buses that loop around the valley in summer (daily 7am–10pm), calling at all points of interest. A number of bicycle paths cross the valley floor but bike rental is limited to outlets at Yosemite Lodge and Curry Village ($25 a day). There are also guided tours (☎ 209/372-1240), hikes, and horseback trips. Pick up a copy of Yosemite Today or browse @ www.yosemitepark.com for details.

Outside the valley

Mariposa Grove, close to the park's southern entrance, is the biggest and best of Yosemite's groves of giant sequoia trees. To get to the towering growths, walk the 2.5-mile loop trail from the parking lot at the end of the road, which is also served by a free bus from the park entrance. The most renowned of the grouping, well marked along the route, is the Grizzly Giant, thought to be over 2700 years old.

On the eastern edge of the park, Tuolumne Meadows (June–Oct only) has an atmosphere quite different from the valley; here, at 8600 feet, you almost seem to be level with the tops of the surrounding snow-covered mountains. The air always has a crisp bite and early summer reveals a plethora of colorful wildflowers. It's a better starting point than the valley for backcountry hiking into the High Sierra, with eight hundred miles of trails, both long and short, crisscrossing their way along the Sierra Nevada ridges. To spend a night in the backcountry, you must get a wilderness permit. You can obtain one up to 24hr in advance (free) at the nearest visitor center, but places are limited so it is best to reserve up to 24 weeks in advance ($5) from the Wilderness Center, Box 545, Yosemite, CA 95389 (T 209/372-0740, W www.nps.gov/yose/wilderness). There are tent cabins at Tuolumne Meadows Lodge (T 559/253-5635, W www.yosemitepark.com; 4) and camping at the Tuolumne Meadows campground for $20 per site if you have a vehicle, $5 per person if you're hiking and have a wilderness permit.

The Central Coast

Between the busy sprawl of LA and San Francisco, the four hundred miles of the Central Coast come as a welcome respite, home to just a few modest cities and lined by clean sandy beaches. The topography is at its most dramatic along Big Sur, one of the most rugged and beautiful stretches of coastline in the world, where the brooding Santa Lucia Mountains rise steeply out of the thundering Pacific surf. To the south, Santa Barbara is a wealthy resort full of old and new money, while Santa Cruz in the north is a coastal town redolent of the Sixties. In between, languorous San Luis Obispo makes a good base for visiting Hearst Castle, the hilltop palace of publishing magnate William Randolph Hearst, and the inspiration for the Xanadu pleasure palace in the film Citizen Kane.

Almost all of the towns grew up around the original Spanish Catholic missions, each a long day's walk from the next, and once enclosed within thick walls to prevent native attacks. Still featuring attractive nineteenth-century architecture, Monterey, a hundred miles south of San Francisco, was California's capital under Spain and Mexico, and briefly the state capital in 1850.

Amtrak's Coast Starlight and Pacific Surfliner trains run along the coast up to San Luis Obispo, with the former continuing on to the Bay Area and up to Seattle. Greyhound buses stop at most coastal towns, especially along the main highway, US-101.

Santa Barbara

Beautifully sited on gently sloping hills above the Pacific, SANTA BARBARA's low-slung Spanish Revival buildings feature red-tiled roofs and white stucco walls, while its golden beaches are wide and clean, lined by palm trees along a curving bay. The mission-era feel of Santa Barbara is no accident. After a devastating earthquake in 1925, the entire town was rebuilt in the image of an apocryphal Spanish Colonial village, with arcades linking shops, cafés, and restaurants – even the central El Paseo Nuevo mall is built in the style.

State Street, the main drag, is home to an appealing assortment of diners, bookshops, coffeehouses, and nightclubs. The few remaining genuine mission structures are preserved as El Presidio de Santa Barbara (daily 10.30am–4.30pm; $3; 📍 www.sbthp.org/presidio.htm), at the center of which are the barracks of the old fortress El Cuartel, standing two blocks east of State Street at 123 Canon Perdido. The second-oldest building in California, it now houses historical exhibits and a scale model of the small Spanish colony. Nearby, the Santa Barbara Historical Museum, 136 E De la Guerra St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; donation; 📍 www.santabarbaramuseum.com), is built around an 1817 adobe, presenting aspects of the city's past from Ice Age geology to artifacts, from native settlements to modern photo studies. Three blocks north of El Presidio, the still-functional County Courthouse, 1100 Anacapa St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4.30pm; free), is a Spanish Revival gem, an idiosyncratic 1929 variation on the Mission theme with striking murals, tilework, and fountain. Take a break in the sunken gardens, explore the quirky staircases, or climb the seventy-foot-high “El Mirador” clock tower for a nice view out over the town. Afterwards, drop by the nearby Santa Barbara Museum of Art, 1130 State St (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm; $9; 📍 www.sbmuseart.org), a fine, if small, museum with classical Greek and Egyptian statuary, a decent array of American paintings, a smattering of French Impressionists, and an Asian collection of some note.

State Street leads half a mile down from the town center to Stearns Wharf, the oldest wooden pier in the state, built in 1872. Restoration efforts have now made it home to shopping stalls, food vendors, and the Sea Center (daily 10am–5pm; $7), which showcases whale bones and tot-friendly tide pools.

In the hills above the town is the engaging Museum of Natural History, 2559 Puesta del Sol Rd (daily 10am–5pm; $8; 📍 www.sbnature.org), which has informative displays on the plants and animals of Southern California – and the museum entrance itself is constructed out of the skeleton of a blue whale. Nearby, Mission Santa Barbara (daily 9am–5pm; donation; 📍 www.sbmission.org) is the so-called “Queen of the Missions,” dating from 1820. Its colorful twin-towered facade – facing out over a perfectly manicured garden toward the sea – combines Romanesque and Spanish Mission styles, giving it a formidable character lacking in some of the prettier missions in the chain. If you continue on into the hills from the mission, you come to the splendid Santa Barbara Botanic Garden, 1212 Mission Canyon Rd (daily 9am–6pm, summer closes 5pm; $7; 📍 www.sbbg.org), whose 65 acres are laced with pleasant hiking trails amid cacti, manzanita, trees, and wildflowers – a relaxing respite through hillside meadows and glades.

Arrival, information, and accommodation

Greyhound buses stop every few hours downtown at 34 W Carrillo St; Amtrak trains arrive at the old Southern Pacific station at 209 State St, right by US-101. A few blocks away is the visitor center, at 1 Garden St, (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 805/965-3021, 📍 www.santabarbara.com). You can walk to most places, although a frequent shuttle bus (25¢) loops around Santa Barbara during the day, with regional buses ($1.25; ☎ 805/683-3702, 📍 www.sbmtd.gov) covering the outlying areas into the evening.

While there are no campgrounds in Santa Barbara proper, there are several spots along the coast to the north, including El Capitan and Refugio state beaches (both at ☎ 805/968-1033 or 1-800/444-7275; $20–25), and to the south, Carpinteria State Beach (☎ 805/684-2811 or 1-800/444-7275; $20-35); all are accessible through 🌐 www.reserveamerica.com.

Cheshire Cat 36 W Valerio St ☎ 805/569-1610, 🌐 www.cheshirecat.com. B&B that features a hot tub, bikes for guests' use, and Alice in Wonderland theme. Complimentary wine on arrival and breakfast under a palm tree, and loaded with precious Victorian décor. 7

Hotel Santa Barbara 533 State St ☎ 805/957-9300 or 1-888/259-7700, 🌐 www.hotelsantabarbara.com. Solid, tasteful choice that provides comfortable, well-decorated rooms, web access, complimentary breakfast, and a prime downtown location. 7

Montecito Inn 1295 Coast Village Rd ☎ 1-800/843-2017, 🌐 www.montecitoinn.com. Spanish

Revival inn with a wide range of rooms and rates, from quaint, basic units to elaborate suites, plus pool, sauna, and Jacuzzi. 6

Sandpiper Lodge 3525 State St ☎ 805/687-5326, 🌐 www.sandpiperlodge.com. Comfortable motel lodging in uptown part of the city, with basic and clean rooms, pool, spa, and complimentary breakfast. Suites cost $30 more than rooms. 4

Santa Barbara Tourist Hostel 134 Chapala St ☎ 805/963-0154, 🌐 www.sbhostel.com. Dorm beds here are cheap and comfortable ($21), with private rooms also available ($55-85), some with private bath (extra $5-15). Also provides free breakfast and Internet access. 1-4

State Street 121 State St ☎ 805/966-6586. Near the wharf and beach in a colorful old Mission-style building, though subject to some noise from the nearby railway and only offers communal bathrooms. Cheap rates include breakfast. 4

Although Santa Barbara has plenty of places for munching on comfort food and swilling beer, the unquestioned center for local and tourist activity is State Street, which is lined with a number of good restaurants, bars, and clubs.

Chad's 625 Chapala St ☎ 805/568-1876. Stylish nouveau American cuisine – with the Montana pork chops and caramelized halibut as some of the highlights – in the intimate atmosphere of a historic Victorian home.

Edomasa 2710 De la Vina ☎ 805/687-0210. Fine sushi joint with a solid menu and nice presentation – the salmon and marina rolls are top-notch. Open until midnight, or 1am weekends.

El Paseo 10 El Paseo ☎ 805/962-6050. Worthwhile Mexican restaurant serving the familiar staples, but within a historic home with a colorful courtyard and fountain.

Galanga Thai 507 State St ☎ 805/963-6799. Lacking in atmosphere, but still a good spot to drop in for well-prepared and tasty dishes of coconut soup, eggplant curry, and pad Thai.

Natural Café 508 State St ☎ 805/962-9494. Scrumptious, cheap veggie meals – with pasta, sandwiches, salads, falafel, and desserts – in a prime spot for people-watching.

Santa Barbara Brewing Company 501 State St ☎ 805/730-1040. Serviceable American fare – burgers, seafood, and sandwiches – with solid microbrewed beers and live music on weekends.

sOhO 1221 State St ☎ 805/962-7776. Favorite local place to catch a jazz show and dine on steak, pasta, and seafood. You'll also find rock, acoustic, and world-beat artists and bands here.

Waterfront Grill 113 Harbor Way ☎ 805/564-1200. Specializing in seafood and views. Downstairs is casual fine dining; head upstairs to the Endless Summer Bar and Café (☎ 805/564-4666) for cheap and delicious fare of burgers, mussels, oysters, and fish and chips.

Zelo 630 State St ☎ 805/966-5792. Fashionable bar and restaurant that evolves into a dance club as the night wears on, offering dance, Latin, hip-hop, and other eclectic music during the week.

San Luis Obispo

SAN LUIS OBISPO, 160 miles north of Santa Barbara and halfway between LA and San Francisco, is a few miles inland, but makes the best base for exploring the coast. Still mainly an agricultural center, it holds an attractive lot of nineteenth-century architecture, especially around Buchon Street, as well as good restaurants, pubs, and – outside summer weekends – plenty of accommodation.

The compact core of San Luis is easily walkable, centered on the late-eighteenth-century Mission San Luis Obispo de Tolosa, 751 Palm St (daily 9–4pm, summer closes 5pm; donation; 📍 www.missionsanluisobispo.org), which was the prototype for the now-ubiquitous red-tile roof church, developed to replace the original, flammable thatch in response to Native American arson attacks. Between the mission and the visitor center, Mission Plaza's terraces step down along San Luis creek, along which footpaths meander. Bridges cross the creek every hundred feet, and the south bank has shops and outdoor restaurants. Higuera Street, a block south of Mission Plaza, is the main drag, and springs to life on Thursday afternoons and evenings for the Farmers' Market, when the street is closed to cars and filled with vegetable stalls, barbecues, and street musicians. The highlight of the area, though, is the historic Fremont Theater, 1035 Monterey St, an Art Deco marvel that becomes a riot of splashy neon at night and still plays movies. A few blocks southeast of the theater, the Dallidet Adobe and Gardens, 1185 Pacific St (gardens Thurs 2.30–5.30pm, house tours summer Sun 1–4pm; donation; 📍 805/543-6762), is a handsome 1860s residence and one of the area's oldest buildings, with a pleasant garden sitting in the shadow of a pair of huge redwood trees.

Arrival, information, and accommodation

The Greyhound bus depot is at 150 South St, half a mile from the center of town, while Amtrak trains stop at the end of Santa Rosa Street, half a mile south of the business district. The Chamber of Commerce, 1039 Chorro St (📍 805/781-2777, 📍 www.slochamber.org), provides brochures for self-guided walking tours of town. The local transit company, San Luis Obispo Regional Rideshare (📍 805/541-2277, 📍 www.rideshare.org), has information on transit options in the region, including shuttles and taxis; area bus rides cost $1–2.75.

Rates for accommodation are generally low, though if you want a nice view of the ocean, you're better off taking a short drive south to Pismo Beach, a beach town that makes a pleasant stopover.

Apple Farm 2015 Monterey St 📍 805/544-2040, 📍 www.applefarm.com. Charming

Victorian inn with canopy beds, complimentary breakfast, and attractive surroundings. The basic units are cheap ($79–99), but more elegant suites may be worth the splurge ($279). ④–⑤

Edgewater 280 Wadsworth Ave, Pismo Beach 📍 805/773-4811, 📍 www.edgewater-inn.com. Right on the beach, offering hot tubs, a heated pool, and kitchenettes in some rooms. ⑤

Garden Street Inn B&B 1212 Garden St 📍 805/545-9802, 📍 www.gardenstreetinn.com. Restored 1880s structure with quaint, pleasant rooms, complimentary wine on arrival, and solid, home-cooked breakfasts. ⑦

Hostel Obispo 1617 Santa Rosa St 📍 805/544-4678, 📍 www.hostelobispo.com. At $20 a night, this hostel is the best value around, offering a convenient central location, cheap bike rentals, and complimentary breakfasts. Private rooms $55–60. ①–③

San Luis Inn 404 Santa Rosa St 📍 805/544-0881, 📍 www.sanluisinn.com. Clean rooms, complimentary breakfast, and a heated pool. A good, cheap deal. ③

Eating and drinking

Higuera Street is the prime place to eat, with a nice range of unassuming restaurants and bars. Other good dining choices can also be found throughout town, along with a few microbreweries.

Buona Tavola 1037 Monterey St ☎805/545-8000. Serviceable bistro featuring a good selection of Northern Italian food and wine.

Mondeo 893 Higuera St ☎805/544-2956. A popular Asian-styled fast-food joint with inventive wraps and bowls, some of the better ones served with swordfish and shrimp.

Oasis 675 Higuera St ☎805/543-1155. Delicious Middle Eastern cuisine – the set lunches are especially good value.

Splash Café 1491 Monterey St ☎805/544-7567. A bit touristy, but this wide-ranging, seafood joint does feature a mean clam chowder. Also in Pismo Beach, 197 Pomeroy Ave, ☎805/773-4653.

Taj Palace 795 E Foothill Blvd ☎805/543-0722. The city's top choice for Indian cuisine, though a bit pricier than other ethnic diners. The $6 buffet lunch is a bargain.

Hearst Castle

Forty-five miles northwest of San Luis Obispo, the hilltop Hearst Castle is one of the most extravagant estates in the world. The former holiday home where publisher William Randolph Hearst held court for such guests as Winston Churchill, Charlie Chaplin, George Bernard Shaw, and Charles Lindbergh brings in more than a million visitors a year. Its interior is a garish hodgepodge of walls, floors, and ceilings ripped from European churches and castles and mixed with Gothic fireplaces and Moorish tiles, while nearly every room bursts with Greek vases and medieval tapestries.

Work on Hearst's nearly four-hundred-square-mile ranch began in 1919, managed by architect Julia Morgan, but the castle was never truly completed: rooms were torn out as soon as they were finished to accommodate yet more booty. The main facade, a twin-towered copy of a Mudejar cathedral, stands atop steps curving up from the world's most photographed swimming pool, which is filled with spring water and lined by a Greek colonnade and marble statues – the height of aesthetic glory, or irredeemably vulgar, depending on your taste.

CALIFORNIA

Hearst Castle

The real Citizen Kane

Often portrayed as a power-hungry monster – most memorably by Orson Welles in his thinly veiled Citizen Kane – William Randolph Hearst was born in 1863 as the only son of a multimillionaire mining engineer, and learned the newspaper trade in New York under Joseph Pulitzer, the inventor of “Yellow Journalism,” of which Hearst became the greatest practitioner. When he published his own Morning Journal, Hearst fanned the flames of American imperialism to ignite the Spanish–American War of 1898. As he told his correspondents in Cuba: “You provide the pictures, and I’ll provide the war.” Hearst eventually controlled an empire that during the 1930s sold twenty-five percent of the nation’s newspapers – and sixty percent of those sold in California.

Hearst was a lifelong Democrat who served two terms in the House of Representatives but failed to be elected mayor of New York, let alone president. Besides his many newspapers, Hearst owned eleven radio stations and two movie studios, which he used to make his longtime mistress, Marion Davies, a star. Both were aboard Hearst’s yacht when in 1924 the famed silent-movie producer Thomas Ince – a party guest – died amid suspicious circumstances. Hearst was never prosecuted, but the charge of murder, combined with the more familiar ones of jingoism and corporate monopoly, only helped reinforce the man’s dark legend. When the Depression hit, he was forced to sell off most of his holdings, but he continued to exert power and influence – including an attempt to suppress Welles’s film and burn the original negative – until his death in 1951, aged 88.

△ Hearst Castle

The most dramatic time to visit is in the morning, when coastal fog often enshrouds the slopes below the castle, making it resemble Citizen Kane's eerily evocative Xanadu, which was modeled on the estate. Five different, two-hour guided tours – which are essential, as are reservations – leave from the visitor center just off Hwy-1 (summer daily 8am–4pm; rest of year 8.20am–3.20pm; ☎ 1-800/444-4445, 🌐 www.hearst-castle.org). New visitors are directed to the Experience Tour ($24), a basic overview of the castle, while the Garden Tour ($24) offers a peek at the castle's blooms, as well as the guest house and wine cellar. From April to October, docents in period dress take visitors on an Evening Tour of the castle ($30), speaking of Hearst in the present tense.

The Big Sur Coast

Starting just north of Hearst Castle, the ninety wild and undeveloped miles of rocky cliffs along the Big Sur Coast form a sublime landscape where redwood groves line river canyons and the Santa Lucia Mountains rise out of the blue-green Pacific. Running through this striking terrain is the serpentine, exhilarating route of Hwy-1, carved out of bedrock cliffs 500ft above the ocean, though public transit is limited to the Monterey-Salinas Transit (MST) bus (☎831/899-2555, 🌐www.mst.org), which runs south from Monterey to Nepenthe four times daily during the summer (Rte-22; $4 each way). The roads and campgrounds get packed on sunny weekends, and hardly anyone braves the turbulent winters, when violent storms can erode cliffsides. The southern coastline of Big Sur is comparatively gentle, with sandy beaches hiding below crumbling ochre cliffs. To find out more, contact the regional Chamber of Commerce (☎831/667-2100, 🌐www.bigsurcalifornia.org).

Roughly midway along the Big Sur Coast, ESALEN is named for the long-gone native tribes who once enjoyed its natural hot spring, situated on a cliff top high above the raging Pacific. Since the 1960s, when people came to Big Sur to get high and get back to nature, Esalen has been at the forefront of the New Age movement, and the spring is now owned and operated by the Esalen Institute (by reservation only at ☎831/667-3005, 🌐www.esalen.org), which aims to train neophytes for the “Olympics of the mind, body, and spirit,” although most yuppies simply come for the yoga and massage treatments.

Three miles north on Hwy-1, Julia Pfeiffer Burns State Park (daily dawn–dusk; ☎831/667-2315) offers some of the best day-hikes in the Big Sur area, including a short walk along the cliffs to an overlook of McWay Falls, which crash onto a beach below. A less-traveled path leads down from Hwy-1 two miles north of the waterfall through a 200-foot-long tunnel to the remains of a small wharf at Partington Cove, one of the few places in Big Sur where you can get to the sea. As with other Big Sur parks, Pfeiffer Burns provides camping sites for $20–25 per night (reserve at ☎831/667-2315, 🌐www.reserveamerica.com), while private operations like nearby Ventana Campground (☎831/667-2712; $30–35) offer campsites with bath houses equipped with hot water and electricity. Seven miles north of Pfeiffer Burns, lovely old 🐾 Deetjen's Big Sur Inn (☎831/667-2377; 🌐www.deetjens.com; 🚗🚚) has log cabins with rooms hand-crafted from thick redwood planks and in-room fireplaces, plus fine breakfasts and dinners on site.

Further north at NEPENTHE, the rooftop Nepenthe restaurant, just off Hwy-1 (☎831/667-2345), offers pricey steaks and seafood, though you can find similarly striking views at Café Kevah (☎831/667-2344), which serves organic breakfasts and lunches on its terrace. Across the highway, the Henry Miller Library (Wed–Mon 11am–6pm; donation; 🌐www.henrymiller.org), displays and sells books by the author, who lived elsewhere in the area intermittently until the 1960s. Two miles north along Hwy-1, unmarked Sycamore Canyon Road leads a mile west to Big Sur's best strip of coast, Pfeiffer Beach (daily dawn–dusk; $5 per car; ☎831/667-2315), a white sandy stretch dominated by a large rock whose color varies from brown to red to orange in the changing light.

Big Sur River Valley

Immediately north of the Pfeiffer Beach turnoff, Hwy-1 drops into the valley of the Big Sur River, where many of the accommodation and restaurants are dotted sporadically along six miles of highway. The ranger station here (daily 8am–6pm, winter closes 4.30pm; ☎ 831/667-2315) issues the camping permits required for the Ventana Wilderness in the mountains above, and can provide information on staying at other parks in the area. One of these, sheltered Pfeiffer Big Sur State Park, features deep, clear swimming holes that form in the steepwalled river gorge during late spring and summer, and a hiking trail that leads half a mile up a canyon shaded by redwoods to the sixty-foot Pfeiffer Falls. The campgrounds here charge $20–25 and are often full on summer weekends (☎ 831/667-2315 or 1-800/444-7275, 🌐 www.reserveamerica.com).

Just north of Pfeiffer Big Sur, the cluster of shops, lodgings, and restaurants known as The Village is the most feasible base for seeing the area. Accommodation fills up in summer, but if you can afford it, it's worth spending a night in one of the rustic riverside rooms at the Big Sur River Inn Resort (☎ 831/667-2700 or 1-800/548-3610, 🌐 www.bigsurriverinn.com; 5), which has an upscale restaurant with decent seafood and American cuisine, which you can enjoy in a garden setting or on a terrace. There are also spacious cabins in the Big Sur Lodge (☎ 831/667-3100 or 1-800/424-4787, 🌐 www.bigsurlodge.com; 4, or 7 summer), where the plush rooms have porches and large showers, but no phones or TVs. Alternatively try the basic cabins at Big Sur Campgrounds and Cabins, a mile north of Pfeiffer Big Sur State Park (☎ 831/667-2322; 🌐 www.bigsurcamp.com; 5–5).

The Monterey Peninsula

At the northern edge of the Big Sur coast, a hundred miles south of San Francisco, are the rocky headlands of the Monterey Peninsula, where gnarled cypress trees mark the collision between the cliffs and the sea. The lively harbor town of Monterey was the capital of California under the Spanish and briefly under the Mexicans and Americans, and retains many old adobes and historic structures alongside the usual tourist traps. Carmel, on the other hand, three miles to the south, is a self-consciously quaint village of million-dollar holiday homes and art galleries, famous for once having Clint Eastwood as its mayor.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Inconveniently, Greyhound buses and Amtrak trains avoid the peninsula entirely, so to get there you'll have to first arrive at the sprawling agricultural town of Salinas inland, then take a further 55-minute trip on the hourly local bus #20 or 21 into Monterey (see p.1104). Pick up information on Monterey at the visitor center, 401 Camino El Estero at Franklin St (☎ 831/649-1770, 🌐 www.montereyinfo.org), or the Chamber of Commerce, 380 Alvarado St (☎ 831/648-5360, 🌐 www.mppcc.com); or on the entire peninsula from the Monterey County Visitor Center, 150 Olivier St (☎ 831/657-6400), which can also help with hotel reservations.

Getting around the area is surprisingly easy on Monterey Salinas Transit buses (☎ 831/899-2555, 🌐 www.mst.org). The base charge is $2, though this can double or triple the further you go (eg to Nepenthe or Salinas). There's also a free shuttle bus, the WAVE, from downtown to the Aquarium on Cannery Row.

Another option is to rent a bike: try Adventures by the Sea, 201 Alvarado Mall and five other locations ($6 per hour, $24 per day; www.adventuresbythesea.com), or Bay Bikes, 585 Cannery Row or 99 Pacific St ($10 per 2hr, $22 per day; www.montereybaybikes.com).

Accommodation

Hotels and B&Bs can get pricey, but cheap motels are clustered along Fremont Street and Munras Avenue, two miles north of the center. The nearest camping is in Veterans Memorial Park ($3 per pedestrian, $15 per vehicle; 831/646-3865), site of Steinbeck's fictional Tortilla Flat, in the hills above town.

Bide-a-Wee Inn and Cottages 221 Asilomar Ave., Pacific Grove 831/372-2330, www.bideaweainn.com. Excellent value for the area, with spruced-up rooms, some with kitchenettes and microwaves. Short walk to the ocean. Prices double at weekends. 3-6

Monterey

Named by the Spanish merchant and explorer Sebastian Vizcaíno in 1602, MONTEREY was not colonized until 1770, when it was founded as the military and administrative center of a territory that extended east to the Rockies and north to Canada. By the time the US took over in the mid-nineteenth century, Monterey had become a backwater, though in 1849 it was the site of the negotiating and writing of the state constitution, and soon became the first capital of California, before being superseded by Sacramento (see p.1146).

The compact center features some of the best vernacular buildings of California's Spanish and Mexican past, most sitting within a few blocks of the tourist-choked waterfront. A loosely organized Path of History connects the 37 sites of the Monterey State Historic Park, though most can't be entered unless you're part of a free 45-minute guided walking tour (① 831/649-7118, ② www.parks.ca.gov/) that leaves from the Pacific House (see p.1105).

The best place to get a feel for life in old Monterey is the Larkin House, Pacific and Jefferson streets (45min tour; Wed & Sat 2pm; free), home of the first and only American consul to Mexican California, Thomas Larkin, who developed the now-common Monterey style of architecture, mixing adobe walls, balconies of Greek Revival Southern plantations, and a dollop of ornament. The house, the first two-story adobe in California, is filled with antiques and memorabilia, and is surrounded by gorgeous gardens. Larkin also helped organize the would-be state's constitutional convention, which took place just around the corner at Colton Hall (daily 10am-4pm; free; ② www.monterey.org/museum), furnished as it was during the event, with quill pens on the tables and an early map of the West Coast on view – used by delegates to form the boundaries of the 31st state. For a break from history, drop by the Monterey Art Museum, across the street at 559 Pacific St (Wed-Sat 11am-5pm, Sun 1-4pm; $5; www.montereyart.org), which along with good regional artworks has some excellent rose gardens.

The Stevenson House, three blocks east at 530 Houston St (45min tours; Mon & Fri 2pm, Sat 10.30am; free), is filled with memorabilia belonging to Robert Louis Stevenson, who passed through in 1879 and foresaw that Monterey's easy-going lifestyle was no match for the “Yankee craft” of the “millionaire vulgarians of the Big Bonanza.” Six blocks north, tacky Fisherman's Wharf is a tourist trap loaded with disused wharves and canneries, some of them converted into boutiques and diners. At the foot of the wharf, the Customs House (Thurs-Mon 10am-4pm; free) is the oldest governmental building on the West Coast, with portions built by Spain in 1814, Mexico in 1827, and the US in 1846. Now restored, the site displays ancient crates of seized coffee and liquor in a small museum. Two blocks south, the Pacific House on Custom House Plaza (Fri–Mon & Wed 10am–3pm; free) has been a courthouse, boarding house and dance hall since its construction in 1847, and is now has agreeable displays on Monterey history and a decent collection of native artifacts.

Heading north from the wharf, a bike path runs two miles to Pacific Grove along Cannery Row – named after John Steinbeck’s literary portrait of the rough-and-ready workers of its seafood plants. During World War II some 200,000 tons of sardines were processed here each year, but with overfishing the stocks were exhausted by 1945. The abandoned canneries reopened in the 1970s as malls and restaurants, and now team with tourists instead of fish. Along the route, the engaging Monterey Bay Aquarium, 886 Cannery Row (daily 10am–6pm, summer opens 9.30am; $22, kids $13; www.montereybayaquarium.org), has one of the world’s largest, most spectacular displays of sealife in the world. Reserve tickets well in advance and allow a day to see everything, including the huge Kelp Forest tank, a touch pool (where you can pet bat rays), the two-story sea otter exhibit, and the dark and evocative rooms with glowing, multicolored jellyfish dipping and swirling before your eyes.

Pacific Grove

Just north of Monterey, counterclockwise on the peninsula, PACIFIC GROVE – or “Butterfly Town USA,” as it likes to call itself – began as a campground and Methodist retreat in 1875, where Christian revivalists prohibited booze, bare skin, and reading the Sunday newspapers, and which still holds ornate wooden cottages from those long-forgotten days, along 16th and 17th streets. One other reminder of that pious period is the deep-red wooden Gothic church St Mary’s by the Sea, Central Ave at 12th St (Mon & Wed–Fri 9am–4pm; www.stmarysbythesea.org), with a simple interior of polished redwood beams and an authentic signed Tiffany stained-glass window, nearest the altar on the left.

Ocean View Boulevard circles the coast around the town, passing the headland of Lovers Point – originally called Lovers of Jesus Point – where preachers used to hold sunrise services. Surrounded in early summer by the red-and-purple blooming ice plant, it’s one of the peninsula’s best beaches. Every year, from November through early March, hundreds of thousands of golden Monarch butterflies come here to escape the winter chill, forming orange and black blankets on the Butterfly Trees, on Ridge Road, a quarter of a mile inland on Lighthouse Avenue. At the end of the avenue, near the tip of Monterey Peninsula, stands the 150-year-old Point Piños lighthouse (Thurs–Sun 1–4pm; $2), the oldest continuously operating lighthouse on the California coast, though basically a quaint farmhouse with a revolving light poking out of its roof. To find out more about the stunning topography and biology of the area, head to the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History, downtown at Forest St and Central Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; free; www.pgmuseum.org), where you can learn all about the native birds and butterflies, among other wildlife.

If you have time, consider taking the Seventeen Mile Drive (daily dawn–dusk; $9 per car), a privately owned, scenic toll road that loops along the coast south to Carmel and provides beautiful vistas of rugged headlands and the glistening shoreline. One particular highlight along the way is the Lone Cypress Tree, whose solitary silhouette has been the subject of many a postcard in these parts.

Carmel

Set on gently rising bluffs above a sculpted rocky shore, CARMEL is well known for its highly inflated real-estate prices, neat rows of quaint shops and miniature homes along Ocean Avenue, and a largely untouched coastline. Unfortunately, the town also has a thick air of pretension, peppered with tacky middlebrow galleries and mock-Tudor tearooms, and lacking any authentic sense of small-town culture. Don't expect to see street addresses, mail delivery, or franchise businesses in town either: they're all officially banned. Despite the cramped atmosphere, Carmel Mission Basilica, 3080 Rio Rd (Mon–Sat 9.30–5.30pm, Sun 10.30am–5pm; $5; @ www.carmelmission.org), provides a rare point of genuine interest as the second of the California Spanish missions, built in 1771. Three small museums in the mission compound trace its history with antiques and memorabilia, while the darker side of the dainty building becomes apparent via the graves of more than three thousand local Native Americans in the adjacent cemetery.

The town's best feature, however, is the nearby coastline. Carmel River State Beach, west of town, is a tranquil cove of blue water bordered by soft white sand and cypress-covered cliffs, though the tides are deceptively strong and dangerous, so be careful if you chance a swim. Point Lobos State Reserve, two miles south of the Carmel Mission on Hwy-1 (daily summer 9am–7pm, winter 9am–5pm; $8 per vehicle; ☎ 831/624-4909), claims, perhaps correctly, to be “the greatest meeting of land and water in the world.” Spread over two square miles, the park has more than 250 bird and animal species along its hiking trails, and the sea here is one of the richest underwater habitats in California. Gray whales are often seen offshore – from as little as a hundred yards away – migrating south in January and returning with young calves in April and early May.

Eating

There are many excellent places to eat on the peninsula. However, if you're on a tight budget, the best cheap eats are on the north side of Monterey, along Fremont Street and just south of Cannery Row on and around Lighthouse Avenue.

Bookworks 667 Lighthouse Ave, Pacific Grove ☎ 831/372-2242. A book dealer and decent café where you can pick up information about the area while snacking on pastries and drinking coffee.

 Fishwife 1996 Sunset Drive at Asilomar Blvd, Pacific Grove ☎ 831/375-7107.

Longstanding local favorite, serving great seafood dishes at reasonable prices (around $15 a plate); try the lip-smacking Prawns Belize sautéed in red peppers and lime juice.

India's Clay Oven 150 Del Monte Ave, 2nd floor, Monterey ☎ 831/373-2529. Unexpectedly good Indian food, featuring cheap ($9) buffets for lunch, plus enticing, eight-course combo dinners ($19) with a good range of tandoori, curry, and seafood choices.

La Bohème Dolores and 7th sts, Carmel ☎ 831/624-7500. Cozy French-inspired bistro offering fixed-price, multi-course dinners for $31 per person. Charming, if chintzy.

Old Monterey Café 489 Alvarado St, Monterey ☎ 831/646-1021. Hearty more-than-you-can-eat breakfasts with solid pancakes and omelets, plus tasty sandwiches. Breakfast and lunch only.

Paolina's San Carlos St between Ocean and 7th sts, Carmel ☎ 831/624-5599. Fresh homemade pasta in a casual courtyard setting, at half the price of other Carmel restaurants.

Papa Chano's 462 Alvarado St, Monterey ☎ 831/646-9587. Affordable Mexican fare with juicy, authentic south-of-the-border specialties, highlighted by a mean chorizo.

Robata Grill & Sake Bar 3658 The Barnyard, Carmel ☎ 831/624-2643. One of the few good local choices for sushi and tempura, though it can be pricey.

Sardine Factory 701 Wave St, Monterey ☎ 831/373-3775. Despite the dreadful name, this is where prime California seafood is served in French château splendor, with entrees starting at $25, or fixed-price meals for $30.

Schooner's Grille & Brewery in the Monterey Plaza Hotel, 400 Cannery Row, Monterey ☎ 831/372-2628. Colorful California bistro in a historic hotel with views over the bay, offering a good range of steak, seafood, pasta, and microbrews.

Drinking and nightlife

Since Pacific Grove and Carmel offer few decent nightlife options, all listings below are for Monterey, though it's hardly regarded as an entertainment hub. Still, mid-September's Monterey Jazz Festival (☎ 1-800/307-3378, 🌐 www.montereyjazzfestival.org) is the oldest of its kind in the world. Check out the widely available Monterey County Weekly for current listings.

Brittania Arms 444 Alvarado St ☎ 831/656-9543. British pub with a range of meals – shepherd's pie to sandwiches and burgers – along with karaoke on Wed and Sun and all-you-care-to-eat fish and chips on Sunday.

Crown and Anchor 150 W Franklin St ☎ 831/649-6496. All your English favorites, from fish and chips to bangers 'n' mash, at this unpretentious local pub, best known for its wide array of brews.

Lallapalooza 474 Alvarado St ☎ 831/645-9036. Swank martini bar for relaxed social-climbing, with well-mixed, trendy drinks with names like “Grateful Dead” and “Three Mile Island.”

Club Octane 321 Alvarado St, ste D ☎ 831/646-9244. See-and-be-seen downtown nightclub with three throbbing floors playing pop, retro, and hip-hop, plus male and female burlesque spectacles.

Planet Gemini 625 Cannery Row ☎ 831/373-1449. Upbeat club offering comedy and music (rock, rap, and dance) on weekends with salsa beats on Sun nights.

Santa Cruz

In many ways the quintessential California beach town, SANTA CRUZ, 75 miles south of San Francisco, sits at the foot of thickly wooded mountains beside a clean sandy beach. In the 1960s, Ken Kesey's band of Merry Pranksters turned the local youth on to LSD long before it defined a generation, and the area is still among the most liberal in California. It's also surprisingly untouristy: no hotels spoil the miles of coastline, most of the land is agricultural, and roadside stands are more likely to sell apples or sprouts than postcards and trinkets. Still, the recent boom in property prices – endemic to all of coastal California – has driven some of the old-timers out, though the more famous (notably Neil Young) can still be spotted loping around town.

The Santa Cruz Boardwalk, 400 Beach St (June–Aug open daily, rest of year Sat & Sun only; hours vary, often 11am–7pm; $1.95–3.60 per ride, unlimited rides $26.95; 🌐 www.beachboardwalk.com), is one of the last surviving beach-front amusement parks on the West Coast. Although it can get packed on weekends, most of the time it's a laid-back fair, where barefoot hippies mix with farmers and tourists. The highlight is the 1924 Giant Dipper, a wild wooden roller coaster that often doubles in the movies as a ride in Coney Island, New York.

The beach next to the boardwalk is popular, but can get rowdy and dirty. For more peace and quiet, follow the coast out of town to one of the smaller beaches such as Capitola or New Brighton. From West Cliff Drive, you'll see some of the biggest waves in California, not least at Steamer Lane, beyond the Municipal Pier. Cowell Beach, just north of the Municipal Pier, is the best place to give surfing a try; Club Ed (☎ 831/459-9283, 🌐 www.club-ed.com), in the parking lot, rents boards ($7–15 per hour, $20–45 per day) and assists with lessons. The ghosts of surfers past are animated at the Surfing Museum, in the old Abbott Memorial lighthouse on the point (Thurs–Mon noon–4pm; $1; 🌐 www.santacruzsurfing-museum.org), where the boards on display range from early 12-foot redwood planks to modern high-tech multifinned cutters. A cliff-top cycle path runs two miles out from here to Natural Bridges State Beach (daily 8am–dusk; $6 per car; 🌐 www.santacruzstateparks.org), where waves once cut holes through the cliffs and formed delicate stone arches – though only one remains.

In the hills above Santa Cruz, the local branch of the University of California (reachable on Metro bus #1) famously has as its mascot the banana slug, and is renowned as a progressive bastion. One of its few highlights for visitors is the Arboretum (daily 9am–5pm; free; www2.ucsc.edu/arboretum), world famous for its experimental techniques of cultivation and stocked with plants from around the world.

Arrival, information, and accommodation

Greyhound buses stop five times a day at 425 Front St, in the center of town, and Santa Cruz has an excellent public transit system known as the Metro (tickets $1.50; day pass $4.50; 831/425-8600, www.scmtd.com). Electric Sierra Cycles, 302 Pacific Ave (831/425-1593), rents bikes for $25–35 per day. The visitor center is at 1211 Ocean St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm; 831/425-1234 or 1-800/833-3494, www.santacruz.org).

Santa Cruz has plenty of places to stay, though rates can be much higher on weekends. Of the many campgrounds in the area, the best is at New Brighton State Beach (831/464-6330 or 1-800/444-7275, www.reserveamerica.com; $25–35), three miles south at 1500 Park Ave, near the town of Capitola.

Capitola Venetian 1500 Wharf Rd, Capitola
831/476-6471, www.capitolavenetian.com. Aging beach hotel with one- to three-bed rooms, some with stoves, fridges, fireplaces, and ocean views. Rates vary wildly, from $59 on a winter weekday to $259 on a summer weekend. 3–4

Carousel Motel 110 Riverside Ave, Santa Cruz
831/425-7090. Clean and centrally located units, all with microwaves and balconies, near the boardwalk. Rates are cheap, but double in the summer. 3–6

Cliff Crest B&B Inn 407 Cliff St, Santa Cruz
831/427-2609, www.cliffcrestinn.com. An

1887 refurbished Queen Anne with five elegant guest rooms, set in lovely gardens at the top of Beach Hill, with breakfast served in a conservatory. Prices can increase by $20–50 in summer. 7

Hi-Santa Cruz 321 Main St, Santa Cruz
831/423-8304, www.hi-santacruz.org. Well-situated hostel set in 1870s cottages, offering dorm beds from $21. Often booked up in advance. 1

Pleasure Point Inn 2-3665 E Cliff Drive, Santa Cruz
831/408-291-0299, www.pleasurepointinn.com. Stylishly modern B&B boasting cliff-top views, a roof sundeck, and hot tub; rooms have stereos and Jacuzzis. Rates go up $25 on weekends. 8

Eating, drinking, and nightlife

The main drag of Pacific Avenue is peppered with many relaxed restaurants and bars, while the town itself has the Central Coast's rowdiest nightlife, ranging from coffeehouses to nightclubs where the music varies from surf-punk and reggae to Sixties-styled rock. Consult the free Good Times magazine for listings.

The Catalyst 1011 Pacific Ave 831/423-1336. Happening club with nightly entertainment and one of the best bets for catching mid-level touring artists and up-and-coming locals.

Clouds Downtown 110 Church St 831/429-2000. A mix of affordable seafood and California cuisine, with hearty but enjoyable items like pretzel chicken and tilapia-and-scallop ceviche.

The Crepe Place 1134 Soquel Ave 831/429-6994. Serves up mid-priced crepes with a tasty assortment of both savory and sweet fillings, as well as a few surprises, like jambalaya crepes.

Kuumbwa Jazz Center 320 Cedar St 831/427-2227. Friendly and intimate spot showcasing both traditional and modern jazz. Mon draws the big names. Cover anywhere from $1–15.

Rio Theatre 1205 Soquel Ave 831/423-8209, www.riotheatre.com. Historic theater that presents a mix of cult films, oddball performances, and eclectic music concerts.

Saturn Café 145 Laurel St 831/429-8505. A good place to enjoy the (self-consciously) eccentric flair of Santa Cruz, this vegetarian diner serves tasty items like burgers and nachos. Open until 3am, or 4am weekends.

Tacqueria Vallarta 1101 Pacific Ave #A
831/471-2655. Authentic, gut-busting Mexican fare with a self-serve salsa bar. Mighty good, and pretty cheap. Two other local branches.

Zoccoli's Deli 1534 Pacific Ave 831/423-1711. Italian deli with rich and hearty staples, including a delicious minestrone soup.

CALIFORNIA

The coast north to San Francisco

Twenty-five miles north along the coast from Santa Cruz, the beginning of the San Francisco Peninsula is marked by Pigeon Point Lighthouse, 210 Pigeon Point Rd, an 1872 structure that took its name from the clipper ship Carrier Pigeon, which broke up on the rocks off the point, one of many shipwrecks that led to the construction of the lighthouse in the late nineteenth century. The lighthouse is now closed, but you can still spend the night in the old keeper's quarters (☎650/879-0633, 🌐www.norcalhostels.org; 🚗🚶🚶🚶) and soak your bones in a hot tub ($7 per 30min), cantilevered out over the rocks. Dorm beds cost $21 each and there are also four private doubles for $46–59.

Just before Pigeon Point, beautiful Big Basin Redwoods State Park ($6 parking; ☎831/338-8860) offers 25 square miles of wilderness with 300-foot-tall redwoods and a compelling ten-mile trail leading from the fog-shrouded hills to the sparkling ocean. Closer down toward the shore, giant blubbery northern elephant seals can be found mating every December and January in the Año Nuevo State Reserve, off New Year's Creek Rd (daily 8am–dusk; $6 parking; ☎650/879-0227), a winter ritual in which the males of the species – fifteen-foot-long, three-ton brutes – collide on the rocks and sand dunes to fight for a mate. It's a bizarre spectacle, and one you shouldn't miss.

San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO proper occupies just 48 hilly square miles at the tip of a slender peninsula, almost perfectly centered along the California coast. Arguably the most beautiful, certainly the most liberal city in the US, it remains true to itself: a funky, individualistic, surprisingly small city whose people pride themselves on being the cultured counterparts to their cousins in LA – the last bastion of civilization on the lunatic fringe of America. It's a compact and approachable place, where downtown streets rise on impossible gradients to reveal stunning views of the city, the bay, and beyond, and blanket fogs roll in unexpectedly to envelop the city in mist. This is not the California of monotonous blue skies and slothful warmth – the temperatures rarely exceed 70°F, and even during summer can drop much lower.

The original inhabitants of this area, the Ohlone Indians, were all but wiped out within a few years of the establishment in 1776 of the Mission Dolores, the sixth in the chain of Spanish Catholic missions that ran the length of California. Two years after the Americans replaced the Mexicans in 1846, the discovery of gold in the Sierra foothills precipitated the rip-roaring Gold Rush. Within a year fifty thousand pioneers had traveled west, and east from China, turning San Francisco from a muddy village and wasteland of sand dunes into a thriving supply center and transit town. By the time the transcontinental railroad was completed in 1869, San Francisco was a lawless, rowdy boomtown of bordellos and drinking dens, something the moneyed elite – who hit it big on the much more dependable silver Comstock Lode – worked hard to mend, constructing wide boulevards, parks, a cable car system, and elaborate Victorian redwood mansions.

In the midst of the city's golden age, however, a massive earthquake, followed by three days of fire, wiped out most of the town in 1906. Rebuilding began immediately, resulting in a city more magnificent than before; in the decades that followed, writers like Dashiell Hammett and Jack London lived and worked here. Many of the city's landmarks, including Coit Tower and both the Golden Gate and Bay bridges, were built in the 1920s and 1930s. By World War II San Francisco had been eclipsed by Los Angeles as the main West Coast city, but it achieved a new cultural eminence with the emergence of the Beats in the 1950s and the hippies in the 1960s, when the fusion of music, protest, rebellion, and of course, drugs that characterized 1967's "Summer of Love" took over the Haight-Ashbury district.

It's estimated that over half of San Francisco's population originates from somewhere else. It is a city in a constant state of evolution, fast gentrifying itself into one of the most high-end towns on earth – thanks, in part, to the disposable incomes pumped into its coffers from its sizeable singles and gay contingents. Gay capital of the world, San Francisco has also been the scene of the dot.com revolution's meteoric rise, fall and steadier recovery. The resultant wealth has pushed housing prices sky high. Despite the city's economic ebbs and flows, your impression of the city will be that of a proudly distinct place.

Arrival and information

All international and most domestic flights arrive at San Francisco International Airport (SFO), inconveniently located about fifteen miles south of the city. Regular BART (Bay Area Rapid Transit; ☎ 415/817-1717, 🌐 www.bart.gov; $5.15) trains get you downtown in thirty minutes. San Mateo County Transit (SamTrans) buses (☎ 1-800/660-4287, 🌐 www.samtrans.org) leave every half-hour from the lower level of the airport; the #KX express ($4) takes around thirty minutes to reach the Transbay Terminal in downtown, while the slower #292 ($1.50) stops everywhere and takes nearly an hour. The SFO Airporter (☎ 1-877/877-8819) and other minibuses depart every five to ten minutes from the lower level of the circular road and take passengers to any city-center destination for $15 a head. Taxis from the airport cost $30–40 (plus tip) for any downtown location, more for the East Bay and Marin County – only worth considering if there are more than one of you. If you're planning to drive, the usual car rental agencies operate free shuttle buses to their depots, leaving every fifteen minutes from the upper level.

Several domestic airlines (Jet Blue and Southwest are two) and United fly into Oakland International Airport (OAK; see p.1137), across the bay. This is actually closer to downtown San Francisco than SFO, and is efficiently connected with the city by the $2 (exact change only) AirBART shuttle bus, which drops you at the Coliseum BART station. From there, hop onto a Daly City BART train and you'll be in downtown San Francisco in around fifteen minutes ($3.35).

By bus and train

All of San Francisco's Greyhound services use the Transbay Terminal at 425 Mission St, south of Market Street, near the Embarcadero BART station (☎ 1-800/231-2222, 🌐 www.greyhound.com). Green Tortoise (☎ 1-800/867-8647, 🌐 www.greentortoise.com) buses pull in behind the Transbay Terminal at First and Natoma streets. Amtrak trains stop across the bay in Richmond (the most efficient BART transfer point) and continue to Oakland, from where free shuttle buses run across the Bay Bridge to the Transbay Terminal, or you can also take BART. Although Emeryville, the stop before Oakland, is technically closer to San Francisco, don't get off there as public transportation to the city is very patchy.

Information

The San Francisco Visitor Information Center, on the lower level of Hallidie Plaza at the end of the cable car line at 900 Market St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–3pm, Nov–April closed Sun; ☎ 415/391-2000, 🌐 www.onlyinsanfrancisco.com), has free maps of the city and the Bay Area, and can help with lodging and travel plans. Its free San Francisco Book provides detailed, if a little selective, information about accommodation, entertainment, exhibitions, and stores. The good value City Pass (🌐 www.citypass.com; $49), which allows entry into various attractions, free MUNI rides, and other discounts for seven days, is available here.

San Francisco's two main post offices, with telephone and general delivery facilities, are at Sutter Street Station, 150 Sutter St at Montgomery Street, in the Financial District (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm), and Rincon Finance Station, 180 Steuart St at Mission Street, SoMa (Mon–Fri 7am–6pm, Sat 9am–2pm).

City transportation

San Francisco is the rare American city where you don't need a car to see everything. In fact, given the chronic shortage of parking downtown, horrible traffic, and zealous meter maids, going carless makes sense. The public transportation system, MUNI, though much maligned by locals for its unpredictable schedule, covers every neighborhood inexpensively. Marked bike routes direct riders to all major points of interest. Walking the compact metropolis is the best bet, with each turn revealing surprises like stunning homes and bustling marketplaces. Wear comfortable shoes for the killer hills, some of them angled at a steep 30 degrees.

San Francisco public transportation

Useful bus routes

#5 From the Transbay Terminal, west alongside Haight-Ashbury and Golden Gate Park to the ocean.

#7 From the Ferry Terminal (Market St) to the end of Haight Street and to Golden Gate Park.

#15 From 3rd Street (SoMa) to Pier 39, Fisherman's Wharf, via the Financial District and North Beach.

#20 (Golden Gate Transit) From corner of Mission and 1st streets to the Golden Gate Bridge ($1.75).

#22 From the Marina up Pacific Heights and north on Fillmore.

#28 and #29 From the Marina through the Presidio, north through Golden Gate Park, the Richmond, and the Sunset.

#30 From the Caltrain depot on 3rd Street, north to Ghirardelli Square, via Chinatown and North Beach, and out to Chestnut Street in the Marina district.

#38 From Geary Street via Civic Center, west to the ocean along Geary Boulevard through Japantown and the Richmond, ending at Cliff House.

MUNI train lines

MUNI F-Market line Restored vintage trolleys from other cities run downtown from the Transbay Terminal and Fisherman's Wharf, up Market Street, and into the heart of the Castro.

MUNI J-Church line From downtown to the edge of the Castro and on to the Mission and Noe Valley.

MUNI K-Ingleside line From downtown through the Castro to Balboa Park.

MUNI L-Taraval line From downtown west through the Sunset to the zoo and Ocean Beach.

MUNI M-Ocean View From downtown west by the Stonestown Galleria shopping center and San Francisco State University.

MUNI N-Judah line From downtown west through the Inner Sunset and to Ocean Beach, via the outer Haight.

From the MUNI N-Judah line or #5 and #38 bus routes, you can connect to bus #44, which goes by the De Young Museum, Japanese Tea Garden, California Academy of Sciences, and Steinhart Aquarium in Golden Gate Park. A MUNI transfer will get you discounts at these places.

MUNI

The city's public transportation is run by the San Francisco Municipal Railway, or MUNI (☎415/673-6864, 🌐www.sfmuni.com). A comprehensive network of buses, trolleybuses, and cable cars runs up and over the city's hills, while the underground trains become streetcars when they emerge from downtown to split off and serve the suburbs. On buses and trains the flat fare is $1.50 (exact change only); with each ticket you buy, ask for a free transfer – good for another two rides on a train or bus, and a fifty-percent reduction on cable cars if used within ninety minutes. Cable cars cost a steep $5 one way (no transfers).

If you're staying a few days, the MUNI Passport is available in one-day, three-day, and seven-day denominations ($11, $18, $24) and is valid for unlimited travel on MUNI and also the Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART) system (see p.438) within the city limits. A Fast Pass costs $45 for a full calendar month. MUNI trains run throughout the night on a limited service, except those on the M-Ocean View line,

Architecture in America

Architecture has played an important role in the development of America's cultural and political life since the country's inception. Today, the desire to craft an identity through architecture is still in evidence, whether it's the over-the-top, larger-than-life designs on the Las Vegas Strip or the soaring, ambitious skyscrapers of New York City. But since the US is nothing if not diverse, there are countless structures that honor both the country's native and immigrant populations as well – from the starkly beautiful adobe homes of Taos Pueblo in New Mexico to the stunning Spanish missions along the California coast.

Early American style

It was no coincidence that the stately, imperial forms of Greek and Roman architecture were applied to the buildings of the young republic, given that the founding fathers sought to emulate the classical world's prestige, along with its ideals. Today you can get a good idea of the founders' vision for the country by visiting the National Mall in Washington DC. Though the capital city took 150 years to be fully realized, its imperial design – with grand diagonal boulevards and looming Neoclassical structures, none more recognizable than the Pantheon-inspired US Capitol building – was prescient. On a much humbler scale, architect (and third US president) Thomas Jefferson's detailed plans for the University of Virginia, in Charlottesville, and his nearby estate, Monticello, established a more personal interpretation of classical architecture, re-imagined to fit the rolling green hills and valleys of the country.

Far removed from the budding capital, however, the early American landscape was lined with frontier log cabins (like the simple one Abraham Lincoln was born in; a replica stands at his Kentucky birthplace), wooden forts, and clapboard farmhouses, while Spanish settlers established their own Mission and Colonial styles in isolated southwestern outposts. Soon all these distinct building styles would be incorporated within one, growing country.

European influences

The nineteenth century saw the US awash in imported designs. The stately Georgian manors of the northeast gave the impression of British gentry, though their occupants might have been rum-runners and real-estate speculators; the neo-Gothic cathedrals suggested an old Anglican or Catholic order, but were just as likely to be homegrown Baptist or, later, Mormon; and revivals of Egyptian temples, Swiss chalets, and Tudor mansions were conspicuous sights on a Midwest prairie or New England lakefront.

The greatest influence of all, however, was the colorful Victorian style, which defined the cityscape of places from San Francisco to Boston to numerous mining towns in the Rocky Mountains (visit places like Crested Butte and Leadville, in Colorado, for a particularly good look). By 1900, though, even these designs weren't monumental enough for the growing ambitions of the US, and only ancient Rome, yet again, seemed to suffice as an equal: over the next couple of decades, stunning banks and libraries were modeled as temples, robber-baron mansions replicated emperors' palaces, and train stations, like the old Penn Station, evoked the Baths of Caracalla.

America's architect: Frank Lloyd Wright

Considered by many to be the greatest American architect, Frank Lloyd Wright (1867–1959) enjoyed a career that spanned more than seven decades, beginning when America was just getting its architectural sea legs in the late-Victorian era and ending in the mid-twentieth century. Wright's influence was huge: with his use of linear, horizontal volumes, he underlined the importance of the native landscape; his inventive engineering and clever use of materials like glass brick, Pyrex tubes, and pre-cast concrete "knit-blocks," helped give rise to architecture as sculpture; and through his pre-designed model "Usonian" homes, he hoped to devise affordable but creative middle-class housing. Some of Wright's greatest masterpieces include the following:

- Fallingwater (see p.184). Innovative environmental architecture built around an enchanting site of forested beauty and cascading water in Mill Run, Pennsylvania.
- Johnson Wax Building. A streamlined office complex in Racine, Wisconsin, with a sleek tower and concrete "lily pads" holding up the roof.
- The Robie House (see p.365). The single most important signpost for the coming suburban ranch home, as well as a lovely piece of design. It sits on the University of Chicago campus, in Hyde Park, Illinois.
- Taliesin (see p.384). Wright's marvelous Wisconsin home and studio lends its name to his Scottsdale, Arizona, architecture and design school.
- Guggenheim Museum (see p.105). This Manhattan art gallery is an abstract design in the form of a circular beehive with a famous sloping interior ramp.

One of the most memorable ways to experience Wright's genius is to visit Oak Park, Illinois (p.363), which offers the most concentrated collection of his early-modern gems, including the stunning Unity Temple and his own house and studio.

Field trips

The Painted Ladies, CA Although many of San Francisco's Victorian homes were destroyed in the 1906 fire and earthquake, what remains – in areas from Haight-Ashbury to Pacific Heights to Alamo Square – is a resplendent reminder of the good old days of the Italianate, Queen Anne, and Eastlake styles.

Anasazi Country, in the Southwest The USA's indigenous peoples were also some of its most inventive architects, none more so than the Anasazi, or Ancient Pueblo, peoples, whose cliff dwellings, kivas, and Great Houses are easily accessible in the Four Corners region of the Southwest. Chaco Canyon, Mesa Verde, and Canyon de Chelly are among the most spectacular ruins, and the striking pueblos at Acoma and Taos are fascinating as well.

South Beach, FL In Miami's fabulous Art Deco District, oceanfront buildings are alive with zigzag lines, neon-rimmed curves, and dynamic letters – all bathed in a warm, moderne glow.

The Serra Missions, CA Although his role as spiritual colonizer of native tribes is still unsettling, Father Junipero Serra and his Catholic missionaries did leave behind a chain of 21 striking, late-eighteenth-century Spanish missions along the coast of California, from San Francisco to San Diego.

Boston, MA The cauldron of the American Revolution has many key sights that span four centuries, but its most eye-catching attractions are the gilded-dome-topped Massachusetts State House, one of Charles Bulfinch's many local designs, and H.H. Richardson's rusticated-stone Romanesque Trinity Church.

Bodie, CA The best place to see the ruins of frontier America. Located in California's Sierra Nevada range, it's nothing less than the nation's best ghost town, its eerie, windswept townscape preserving some 150 homes and businesses in arrested decay.

Charleston, SC and Savannah, GA These small towns offer an ideal place to see both the comfort and gentility of the Old South as well as its darker aspects – from fetching town squares and grand plantations, to grim slave quarters and auction blocks.

Las Vegas, NV Sin City has long been an icon of pop architecture: in the 1960s for its hypnotic neon and glitzy signs, and today for its ersatz castles, pyramids, tropical islands, and pint-sized versions of Paris, Venice, and New York.

Art Deco architecture, South Beach, FL

Native invention

The 1920s and 30s represented a peak for American architectural creativity – best exemplified by the Art Deco towers of the Empire State and Chrysler buildings in New York, descendants of earlier work done in Chicago by Louis Sullivan, who is credited with inventing the skyscraper. Elsewhere in the country, Frank Lloyd Wright was in the middle of a long, exceptional career (see box on previous page), and Europeans like Mies van der Rohe did some of their best work here. Although architectural trends can change like haute couture – modern glass-and-steel boxes giving way to tongue-in-cheek Postmodernism, and so on – the greatest builders have created styles and structures that are here to last. The concrete austerity of Louis Kahn (more famous internationally than at home perhaps; the Salk Institute in La Jolla, CA, is his most acclaimed building) and the sharp white angles of Richard Meier, designer of Los Angeles's Getty Center, are just a couple of the homegrown creations that have had a distinct and lingering impact on the wide American landscape.

which stop around 1am. Buses run all night, but services are greatly reduced after midnight. For more information, pick up the handy MUNI map from the Visitor Information Center or bookstores. Bikes are allowed on MUNI buses equipped with bicycle racks (on the front of the bus) and on BART, except during peak hours.

Other transportation services

Along Market Street in downtown, MUNI shares the station concourses with BART (see p.1138), which runs to the East Bay – including downtown Oakland and Berkeley – and the outer suburbs. The Caltrain commuter railway (depot at 4th and King streets, in the SoMa, district; ☎ 1-800/660-4287, 🌐 www.caltrain.com) links San Francisco along the peninsula south to San Jose. Golden Gate Ferry boats (☎ 415/923-2000, 🌐 www.goldengate.org) leave from the Ferry Building at the Embarcadero, crossing the bay past Alcatraz to Sausalito and Larkspur in Marin County. Blue & Gold Fleet (☎ 415/705-5555, 🌐 www.blueandgoldfleet.com) runs to Sausalito and Tiburon from Pier 41 at Fisherman's Wharf, with some services from the Ferry Building. The Alameda–Oakland ferry (☎ 510/522-3300, 🌐 www.transitinfo.org/AlaOakFerry) operates between Oakland's Jack London Square, the Ferry Building, Fisherman's Wharf (Pier 39), and Pac Bell Park ($5 one way) and, in summer, to Angel Island ($12 roundtrip; daily late May–Oct).

Taxis ply the streets, and you can flag one down (especially downtown), but finding one can be a pain. If you're phoning ahead, try Veterans (☎ 415/552-1300) or Yellow Cab (☎ 415/626-2345). Fares within the city are roughly $1.70 for the first mile and $1.80 per mile thereafter, plus a customary fifteen-percent tip.

If you fancy cycling, the handiest option is Blazing Saddles (☎ 415/202-8888, 🌐 www.blazingsaddles.com), which has several locations – two of the most convenient are at 1095 Columbus Ave at Francisco Street, in North Beach, and Pier 41 at Fisherman's Wharf. Rates for a standard bike are $7 per hour, $28 per day (tandem $11 per hour and $48 per day). Another option is Bay City Bikes, 2661 Taylor St at Beach Street, at Fisherman's Wharf, with rates beginning at $27 per day (☎ 415/346-2453, 🌐 www.baycitybike.com).

Organized tours

One way to orient yourself is with an organized tour. Gray Line Tours (from $44; ☎ 415/434-8687 or 1-888/428-6937, 🌐 www.graylinesanfrancisco.com) trundle round the city in four fairly tedious hours and offer various combo tours. Considerably more thrilling are the one-hour bay cruises operated by the Blue & Gold Fleet ($18 before noon, $21 after; ☎ 415/773-1128, 🌐 www.blueandgoldfleet.com) from piers 39 and 41 – though be warned that everything may be shrouded in fog. If you're feeling flush, the expensive aerial tours of the city and Bay Area in light aircraft or helicopters are unbeatable – try San Francisco Helicopter Tours (☎ 1-800/400-2404, 🌐 www.sfhelicoptertours.com), which offers spectacular flights starting at $130 per passenger.

The best of the walking tours include City Guides, sponsored daily by the San Francisco Public Library (free; ☎ 415/557-4266, 🌐 www.sfcityguides.org); Cruisin' the Castro ($35; ☎ 415/255-1821, 🌐 www.webcastro.com/castrotour), an absorbing and witty tour of the gay community; the Victorian Home Walk, which swings past the pick of the city's posh old homes ($20; ☎ 415/252-9485, 🌐 www.victorianwalk.com); and the Barbary Coast Trail, marked by bronze medallions set in the sidewalk, which highlights the oldest parts of the city (audio tours $14; guided tours $20; ☎ 415/454-2355, 🌐 www.sfhistory.org). Three Babes and a Bus ($39, which includes all cover charges; ☎ 1-800/414-0158, 🌐 www.threebabes.com) takes a luxury coachload of people looking for a good time to different nightclubs around the city – and is less cringe-inducing than it might sound. There are also special mural tours of the Mission by Precita Eyes that take in the district's distinctive street art (see p.1125 for details).

Accommodation

Annual visitors far outnumber San Francisco's 800,000 people, and the city isn't short on lodging, but to get the pick, be sure to reserve well in advance, especially in summer and fall. Expect to pay at least $100 per room in any decent hotel or motel in season; if you want to snag one of the smart bargains or hostel beds we've listed below, make sure to reserve in advance in high season. You'll also normally find significantly better rates for rooms that share baths.

For plentiful B&Bs, consult the list below or contact a specialist agency such as California Bed & Breakfast Inns (☎ 1-800/284-4667, 🌐 www.cabbi.com) or Bed and Breakfast San Francisco (Mon–Fri 9.30am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/452-8249, 🌐 www.bbsf.com). British visitors can reserve rooms through Colby International (🌐 www.colbyintl.com), while once you're in the city, San Francisco Reservations (☎ 1-800/677-1500, 🌐 www.hotelres.com) will find you a room starting from around $75 a double off season. If all else fails and you've got a car, motels are legion along the highways and bigger roads throughout the Bay Area, at a standard rate of $45–60 a night. In all cases, bear in mind that all quoted room rates are subject to a fourteen-percent room tax.

Hotels, motels, and B&Bs

Adagio Hotel 550 Geary St at Jones, Union Square
☎ 415/775-5000, 🌐 www.jdvhospitality.com.

The decor at this hotel echoes its ornate Spanish Revival facade with deep reds and ochres. Rooms are large and, even better, there's free Internet access and printing on-site. ②

Archbishop's Mansion 1000 Fulton St at Steiner, Fillmore
☎ 415/563-7872 or 1-800/543-5820,
🌐 www.thearchbishopsmansion.com. The last word in camp elegance, this B&B is crammed with $1 million worth of antiques, including the very chandelier that featured in the ballroom of Gone With the Wind. ⑥

Bohème 444 Columbus Ave at Vallejo, North Beach
☎ 415/433-9111, 🌐 www.hotelbohème.com.

Smack in the middle of Beat heartland, this small, 15-room hotel has tiny but dramatic rooms, with canopied beds. Columbus Ave can be noisy, so ask for a room at the back. ⑥

The Carl 198 Carl St at Stanyan, Haight-Ashbury
☎ 415/661-5679 or 1-888/661-5679, 🌐 carlhotel.citysearch.com. A bargain for its Golden Gate Park location. The small but florally pretty rooms come with microwaves and fridges; the cheaper ones have shared baths. ③

Clift 495 Geary St at Taylor, Theater District
☎ 415/775-4700 or 1-800/658-5492, 🌐 www

.morganshotelgroup.com. The rooms are vaguely oriental with quirky touches like the Louis XIV-style chairs with mirrors on the seat and back, and sleigh beds – pity the bathrooms are so small. ⑤

Cow Hollow Motor Inn 2190 Lombard St at Steiner, Cow Hollow
☎ 415/921-5800, 🌐 www.cowhollowmotorinn.com. Pleasant Swiss-chalet style exterior and large modern rooms in an airy location. Plenty of parking. ④

☎ 415/921-5520 or 1-877/433-5765, 🌐 www.jdvhospitality.com. Funky updated motor lodge with a tropical theme, plus a swimming pool: the best place for budget cool in the city. ⑤

 Golden Gate Hotel 775 Bush St at Mason, Theater District
☎ 415/392-3702 or 1-800/835-1118, 🌐 www.goldengatehotel.com. Friendly European-style B&B with cozy, warmly-furnished rooms, some with shared baths. Beautiful original iron elevator. Great value. ④

Hotel Astoria 510 Bush St at Grant, Chinatown
☎ 415/434-8889 or 1-800/666-6696, 🌐 www.hotelastoria-sf.com. The decor here is friskier than that of many other budget hotels, with TV and full in-room amenities; continental breakfast is included and there's discounted parking nearby ($20/24hr). ③

Hotel Diva 440 Geary St at Mason, Union Square

☎ 415/885-0200 or 1-800/553-1900, 🌐 www.hoteldiva.com. Trendy modern art hotel with spacious rooms and sleek metal and leather furniture. Touts itself as the sexiest downtown hotel. 5

Monaco 501 Geary St at Taylor, Union Square ☎ 415/292-0100 or 1-800/214-4220, 🌐 www.monaco-sf.com. Quirky boutique hotel in a historic Beaux Arts building. Canopied beds and goldfish in each room; the Grace Slick suite features her art for wealthy Airplane fans. 8

The Mosser 54 Fourth St at Market, SoMa ☎ 415/986-4400 or 1-800/227-3804, 🌐 www.themosser.com. A recent funky conversion fusing Victorian touches like ornamental molding with mod leather sofas. The chocolate and olive rooms may be tiny, but each is artfully crammed with amenities including multi-disc CD players. 5

Ocean Park Motel 2690 46th Ave at Wawona, Ocean Beach ☎ 415/566-7020, 🌐 oceanparkmotel.citysearch.com. A fair way from downtown (25min by MUNI), this is nonetheless a great Art Deco motel that's convenient for the beach and the zoo, and has an on-site kids' play area. 4

The Phoenix 601 Eddy St at Larkin, Tenderloin ☎ 415/776-1380 or 1-800/248-9466, 🌐 www.thephoenixhotel.com. This raucous retro motel is a favorite with up-and-coming bands when they're in town; there's a small pool, and the rooms are eclectically decorated in tropical colors and have changing local artwork. 5

Queen Anne 1590 Sutter St at Octavia, Fillmore ☎ 415/441-2828 or 1-800/227-3970, 🌐 www.queenanne.com. Gloriously excessive restored Victorian with some bargain rates. Each room is stuffed with gold-accented Rococo furniture and bunches of silk flowers: the parlor (where afternoon sherry is served) is over-filled with museum-quality period furniture. 4

The Red Victorian Bed, Breakfast and Art 1665 Haight St at Cole, Haight-Ashbury ☎ 415/864-1978, 🌐 www.redvic.com. Homey B&B, decorated with the owner's ethnic arts and exuding her desire for world peace. Rooms vary from simple to opulent: the best feature is the shared bathrooms, including a goldfish-filled toilet cistern. 4

San Remo Hotel 2237 Mason St at Chestnut, North Beach ☎ 415/776-8688 or 1-800/352-7366, 🌐 www.sanremohotel.com. Quirky option close to Fisherman's Wharf. Rooms in this warren-like converted house are cozy and chintzy: all share spotless bathrooms and a few have sinks. 3

Sir Francis Drake 450 Powell St at Sutter, Union Square ☎ 415/392-7755 or 1-800/227-5480, 🌐 www.sirfrancisdrake.com. The lobby is a riot of marble grandeur and red or purple furnishings – the rooms are calmer, with a gentle apple-green color scheme and full facilities. 6

Stanyan Park Hotel 750 Stanyan St at Waller, Haight-Ashbury ☎ 415/751-1000, 🌐 www.stanyan-park.com. Overlooking Golden Gate Park, this small hotel has 35 sumptuous rooms busily decorated in country florals, heavy drapes, and junior four-poster beds. 6

Surf Motel 2265 Lombard St at Pierce, Cow Hollow ☎ 415/922-1950, 🌐 www.surfmotorinn.com. This old-school motel has two tiers of bright, simple rooms that are sparkingly clean. Unbeatable prices. 3

Hostels

Elements Hostel 2524 Mission St at 21st ☎ 415/647-4100 or 1-866/327-8407. One of the few places to stay in this area. Most dorms have only four beds and there are some doubles. Good amenities and no curfew. From $25. 2

The Globe Hostel 10 Hallam Place, SoMa ☎ 415/431-0540, 🌐 www.hostelz.com. Lively South of Market hostel with a young clientele and 33 rooms, split between dorms and private rooms. There's free coffee and, best of all, no curfew. Dorm beds from $20.

Green Tortoise 494 Broadway at Montgomery, North Beach ☎ 415/834-1000 or 1-800/867-8647, 🌐 www.greentortoise.com. The City

San Francisco is a city of hills and distinct neighborhoods. As a general rule, elevation means wealth – the higher up you are, the better off you are. Commercial square-footage is surprisingly small and mostly confined to the downtown area, and the rest of the city is made up of primarily residential neighborhoods with street-level shopping districts, easily explored on foot. Armed with a good map and strong legs, you could plough through much of the city in a day, but the best way to get to know San Francisco is to dawdle.

Union Square

The city's heart can be found around Union Square, located north of Market Street and bordered by Powell and Stockton streets, which was recently spruced up with the addition of shady trees and benches. Cable cars clank past shoppers and theater-goers who gravitate to the district's many upscale hotels, department stores, and boutiques. The statue in the center commemorates Admiral Dewey's success in the Spanish–American War, though the square takes its name from its role as gathering place for stumping speechmakers during the US Civil War. The square witnessed the attempted assassination of President Gerald Ford outside the St Francis Hotel (now Westin) in 1975, and was also the location of Francis Ford Coppola's film The Conversation, where Gene Hackman spied on strolling lovers. Many of Dashiell Hammett's detective stories, such as The Maltese Falcon, are set partly in the St Francis; in fact, during the 1920s, he worked there as a Pinkerton detective.

On Geary Street, on the south side of the square, the Theater District is a pint-sized Broadway of restaurants, tourist hotels, and serious and “adult” theaters. On the eastern side of the square, Maiden Lane is a chic urban walkway that before the 1906 earthquake and fire was one of the city's roughest areas, where homicides averaged around ten a month. Nowadays, aside from some prohibitively expensive boutiques, its main feature is San Francisco's only Frank Lloyd Wright building, an intriguing circular space at no. 140 that was a prototype for the Guggenheim Museum in New York. Now occupied by the Xanadu Tribal Art Gallery, feel free to wander inside, but just don't expect a warm welcome from the tourist-weary staff.

Cable cars

It was the invention of the cable car that put the high in San Francisco's high society as it made life on the hills both possible and practical. Since 1873, these little trolleys have been an integral part of life in the city, supposedly thanks to Scots-born Andrew Hallidie's concern for horses. Having watched a team struggle and fall, breaking their legs on a steep San Franciscan street, Hallidie designed a pulley system around the thick wire rope his father had patented for use in the California mines (the Gold Rush was slowing, and so the Hallidies needed a new market for their product). Despite locals' initial doubts, a transportation revolution followed. At their peak, just before the 1906 earthquake, over six hundred cable cars traveled 110 miles of track throughout the city at a maximum 9.5mph; over the years, usage dwindled and, in 1964, nostalgic citizens voted to preserve the last seventeen miles (now just ten) as a moving historic landmark.

Today there are three lines. Two of them, the Powell & Mason and the Powell & Hyde lines run from Hallidie Plaza off Union Square at Powell and Market streets to Fisherman's Wharf. The Powell & Hyde is the steepest, reaching a hair-raising 21-degree grade between Lombard and Chestnut streets. The oldest route, the California line, climbs Nob Hill along California Street from the Embarcadero, rattling past the fanciest hotels in the city. The cars fasten onto a moving two-inch cable, which runs beneath the streets, gripping on the ascent then releasing at the top and gliding down the other side. You can see the huge motors that still power these cables in the Cable Car Museum and Powerhouse, 1201 Mason St at Washington Street (daily: April–Sept 10am–6pm; Oct–March 10am–5pm; free; ☎415/474-1887, 🌐www.cablecarmuseum.org).

CALIFORNIA

San Francisco: The City

The Financial District

North of the city's main artery, Market Street, the glass-and-steel skyscrapers of the Financial District have sprung up in the last twenty years to form the only real highrise area. Sharp-suited workers clog the streets and coffee kiosks during business hours, but after 6pm, the area pretty much shuts down. Stop at the corner of Kearny and Market streets to admire Lotta's Fountain, one of San Francisco's most treasured artifacts, named after Lotta Crabtree, one of the first children brought to the city by pioneering families. It was around here that people gathered to hear news following the 1906 earthquake and fire, and also where famed soprano Luisa Tetrazzini gave a free concert on Christmas Eve, 1910.

Once cut off from the rest of San Francisco by the double-decker Embarcadero Freeway – damaged in the 1989 earthquake and finally torn down two years later – the Ferry Building, at the foot of Market Street, was modeled on the cathedral tower in Seville, Spain. Before the bridges were built in the 1930s it was the arrival point for fifty thousand cross-bay commuters daily. A few ferries still dock here (see p.1113), but after years of playing home to colorless offices, it has finally undergone a massive renovation that's seen shops and cafés line its halls. The first new tenant was the Ferry Plaza Farmers Market, which moved indoors from its old site in front of the building – it's an excellent place to sample the sumptuous local produce (Tues 10am–2pm & Sat 8am–2pm; ☎415/353-5650, 🌐www.ferryplazafarmersmarket.com).

Since the freeway was pulled down, the area around it, known as The Embarcadero, has experienced a dramatic renaissance – from an area of charmless office blocks into a swanky waterfront district with some of the city's finest restaurants and hotels making the most of the bay views.

From the vast and unimaginative Embarcadero Center shopping mall and the square concrete tubing of the fountains in Justin Herman Plaza at the foot of Market Street, it's a few blocks down to Montgomery Street, where the grand pillared entrances and banking halls of the post-1906 earthquake buildings era jostle for attention with a mixed bag of modern towers. The best known is undoubtedly the Bank of America monolith, 555 California St, at Kearney, where the state's largest financial institution has its headquarters; this enormous building was initially unpopular when finished in 1971, though affection has grown over the years for the broad-shouldered hulk. The Wells Fargo History Museum, 420 Montgomery St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 415/396-2619, @ www.wellsfargo.com), traces the far-from-slick origins of San Francisco's big money, right from the days of the Gold Rush, with mining equipment, gold nuggets, photographs, and a genuine retired stagecoach.

Jackson Square and the Barbary Coast

A century or so ago, the eastern flank of the Financial District formed part of the Barbary Coast. This area of landfill appeared thanks to the hundreds of ships that lay abandoned by sailors heading for the Gold Rush; enterprising San Franciscans used the dry ships as hotels, bars, and stores. At the time, the district was a rough-and-tumble place that gave San Francisco an unsavory reputation as Baghdad by the Bay, packed as it was with saloons and brothels where hapless young males were given Mickey Finns and forcibly taken aboard merchant ships and pressed into involuntary servitude. William Randolph Hearst's Examiner newspaper lobbied frantically to shut down the quarter, resulting in a 1917 California law prohibiting prostitution. Remains of the cradle of San Francisco can be seen in the Jackson Square Historic District, not an actual square but an area bordered by Washington, Columbus, Sansome, and Pacific streets; these were the only buildings downtown to escape the catastrophic 1906 fire unharmed, and Jackson Street in particular provides a hint of what early San Francisco looked like. A detour down the redbrick-lined Hotaling Place, with its hitching posts and antique lamps, is similarly revealing.

The landmark Transamerica Pyramid, at the foot of diagonal Columbus Avenue and Washington Street, is San Francisco's tallest building. The 48-story structure, capped by a colossal 212-foot hollow spire, arose in 1972 amid a city-planning furor that earned it the name of "Pereira's Prick," after its LA-based architect William Pereira, and since then it's been indisputably the signature of San Francisco's skyline. Though it survived the 1989 earthquake undamaged, for security reasons there's no longer access to the 27th-floor viewing deck. The block on which the Transamerica Pyramid stands is a historic one: Rudyard Kipling, Robert Louis Stevenson, Mark Twain, and William Randolph Hearst all rented office space in the building that originally stood on this site, and regularly hung around the notorious Bank Exchange bar within. Legend has it that Dr Sun Yat-sen – whose statue is in Chinatown, three blocks away – wrote the Chinese constitution and orchestrated the successful overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty from his second-floor office here. Next door is the pleasant Transamerica Redwood Park with fountains perfect for an outdoor lunch. Heading west on Jackson or Pacific streets from the area leads you back to Columbus and the green-copper siding of the Columbus Tower, 906 Kearny St, the de facto beginning of North Beach. Director and San Francisco native Francis Ford Coppola owns the building, and his Niebaum-Coppola Café on the ground floor serves sandwiches, pasta, and wine from his Napa Valley winery.

Chinatown

Chinatown's 24 square blocks smack in the middle of San Francisco make up the second-largest Chinese community outside Asia (after New York City). It has its roots in the migration of Chinese laborers to the city after the completion of the transcontinental railroad, and the arrival of Chinese sailors keen to benefit from the Gold Rush. The city didn't extend much of a welcome: they were met by a tide of vicious racial attacks and the 1882 Chinese Exclusion Act, the only law in American history aimed at a single racial group that prevented Chinese immigration and naturalization. Nowadays, the Chinese population has been joined by Vietnamese, Koreans, Thais, and Laotians: by day the area seethes with activity, while by night it's a blaze of neon. Overcrowding is compounded by a brisk tourist trade – sadly, however, Chinatown boasts some of the tackiest stores and facades in the city, making it more akin to shopping in a bad part of Hong Kong than in Beijing. Indeed, Chinese tourists are often disappointed in the neighborhood's disorder – for a truer sense of everyday Chinese life in San Francisco, you're better off heading to the Richmond district in the city's northwestern corner.

Gold-ornamented portals and brightly painted balconies sit above the souvenir shops and restaurants of narrow Grant Avenue, the tourist thoroughfare; pass under the entrance arch at Bush Street and you'll be met by an assault of plastic Buddhas, cloisonné "health balls," noisemakers, and chirping mechanical crickets in every doorway. Old St Mary's Cathedral, 660 California St at Grant Street, was one of the few San Francisco buildings to survive the 1906 earthquake and fire, and there's a good photo display of the damage to the city in the entranceway.

Parallel to Grant Avenue, Stockton Street is crammed with exotic fish and produce markets, bakeries, and herbalists, and is the local main drag. Inside the Ellison Herb Shop, 805 Stockton St at Sacramento Street, Chinatown's best-stocked herbal pharmacy, you'll find clerks filling orders the ancient Chinese way – using hand-held scales and abacuses – from cabinets filled with dried bark, roots, sharks' fins, cicadas, ginseng, and other staples. Here, between Grant and Stockton, jumbled alleys hold the most worthwhile stops. The best of these is Waverly Place, a two-block corridor of brightly painted balconies that was lined with brothels before the 1906 catastrophe and is now home to three opulent but skillfully hidden temples: Norras at no. 109, Jen Sen on the second floor of no. 146, and Tien Hou on the fourth floor of no. 125. The latter is the most impressive, with its ornate interior splashed with gold and vermilion. All three temples are still in use and open to visitors (daily 10am–5pm). Although the temples don't charge admission, it's respectful to leave a donation and not use cameras or camcorders inside.

Some of the hundred-plus restaurants in Chinatown (see p.1129) are historical landmarks in themselves. Sam Wo, 813 Washington St at Grant Avenue, is a cheap and churlish ex-haunt of the Beats, where Gary Snyder taught Jack Kerouac to eat with chopsticks and had them both thrown out with his loud and passionate interpretation of Zen poetry.

North Beach

Resting in the hollow between Russian and Telegraph hills, and bisected by throbbing Columbus Avenue, North Beach has always been a gateway for immigrants, especially the Italians who flocked here during the Gold Rush. It became the center of an alternative scene in 1953, after the opening of the City Lights Bookstore, 261 Columbus Ave at Broadway (☎415/362-8193, 🌐www.citylights.com); the first paperback bookstore in the US stands amid the flashing neon and sleazy clubs at this intersection, open until midnight seven days a week, and still owned by poet and novelist Lawrence Ferlinghetti. The Beat Generation briefly made the store (and the city) the literary capital of America, achieving overnight notoriety when charges of obscenity were leveled at Allen Ginsberg's poem Howl in 1957, which he first performed in a gallery in Cow Hollow. It was the hedonistic antics of the Beats as much as their literary merits that struck a chord, and North Beach came to symbolize a wild and subversive lifestyle. The roadtrips and riotous partying, the drug-taking, and the embrace of Eastern religions were emulated nationwide, while tourists poured into North Beach for “Beatnik Tours.” Then, when the Beat movement imploded, the younger hipsters – whom Kerouac & Co. had derided as juniors, or “hippies,” for their dovish views – gathered in Haight-Ashbury, thus beginning the psychedelic Sixties (see p.1126).

Next to the bookstore, Vesuvio’s, an old North Beach bar where the likes of Dylan Thomas and Kerouac would get loaded, remains a haven for the lesser-knowns to pontificate on the state of the arts. At the crossroads of Columbus and Broadway, poetry meets porn in a raucous assembly of strip joints, coffeehouses, and drag clubs. The most famous of these is the Condor Club, 300 Columbus Ave (now reincarnated as the Condor Sports Bar), where Carol “44 inches” Doda slipped out of her top one night and kickstarted the concept of topless waitresses in 1964. The landmark site still preserves photos and clippings from the original club’s heyday.

As you continue north on Columbus Avenue, you enter the heart of the old Italian neighborhood, an enclave of narrow streets and leafy enclosures. Explorations lead to small landmarks like the Café Trieste, (see p.1129), where the jukebox blasts out opera classics to a heavy-duty art crowd sipping cappuccinos and browsing slim volumes; legend has it that Francis Ford Coppola wrote the screenplay for The Godfather here. Dawdle in the grassy plaza known as Washington Square Park that plays host to dozens of local Chinese each morning practising t’ai chi, then head up the very steep steps on Filbert Street to reach Telegraph Hill and the Coit Tower, which affords grand views of the city and beyond (daily 10am–6pm; $4.50; ☎415/362-0808).

Alcatraz

Before the rocky islet of Alcatraz became America’s most dreaded high-security prison, in 1934, it had already served as a fortress and military jail. Surrounded by the freezing, impassable water of San Francisco Bay, it made an ideal place to hold the nation’s most wanted criminals – men such as Al Capone and Machine Gun Kelly. The conditions were inhumane: inmates were kept in solitary confinement, in cells no larger than nine by five feet, most without light. They were not allowed to eat together, read newspapers, play cards, or even talk; relatives could visit for only two hours each month. Escape really was impossible. Nine men managed to get off the rock but none gained his freedom – the only two to make it to land (who had used a jacket stuffed with inflated surgical rings as a raft) were soon apprehended.

Due to its massive running costs, the prison finally closed in 1963. The island remained abandoned until 1969, when a group of Native Americans staged an occupation as part of a peaceful attempt to claim the island for their people, citing treaties that designated all federal land not in use as automatically reverting to their ownership. Using all the bureaucratic trickery it could muster, the government finally ousted them in 1971, claiming the operative lighthouse qualified it as active.

At least 750,000 tourists each year take the excellent hour-long, self-guided audio tours of the abandoned prison, which include some sharp anecdotal commentary as well as campy re-enactments of prison life featuring improvised voices of the likes of Capone and Kelly. Note that the island’s name is a corruption of the Spanish for pelicans (alcatrazes), although the only reason the current islet is known as Alcatraz is thanks to a muddle-headed English mapmaker and captain. He confused the names of several outcrops in the bay in 1826 – what we know as Yerba Buena Island was in fact the original Alcatraz.

Boats to Alcatraz leave from Pier 33 ($18.75 including audio tour; 9.30am, then every 30min 10.15am–2.15pm; last tour winter 4.10pm, summer 5.10pm); allow around two hours for a visit. Advance reservations are essential – in peak season, it’s impossible to snag a ticket for same-day travel and ideally you should allow two weeks (☎415/981-7625, @www.alcatrazcruises.com).

To the west of Columbus, Russian Hill was named for six unknown Russian sailors who died here on an expedition in the early 1800s. In the summer, there's always a long line of cars waiting to drive down the tight curves of Lombard Street. Surrounded by palatial dwellings and herbaceous borders, Lombard is an especially thrilling drive at night, when the tourists leave and the city lights twinkle below. Even if you're without a car, the journey up here is worth it for a visit to the San Francisco Art Institute, 800 Chestnut St (daily 8am–9pm; free; ☎415/771-7020, 🌐www.sanfranciscoart.edu), where the Diego Rivera Gallery has an outstanding mural created by the painter in 1931. Walking south from the Institute for four blocks on Jones Street, you'll find Macondray Lane, a pedestrian-only "street" thought to be one of the inspirations for Armistead Maupin's rollicking saga, Tales of the City (see p.1322).

Fisherman's Wharf

San Francisco rarely tries to pass off pure, unabashed commercialism as a worthy tourist attraction, but with Fisherman's Wharf and the nearby waterfront district, it makes an exception. It's the one place in town guaranteed to produce shudders of embarrassment from most locals.

An inventive use of statistics allows the area to proclaim itself the most-visited tourist attraction in the entire country; in fact, this crowded and hideous ensemble of waterfront kitsch and fast-food stands makes a sad and rather misleading introduction to the city. It may be hard to believe, but this was once a genuine fishing port; the few fishing vessels that can still afford the exorbitant mooring charges are usually finished by early morning and get out before the tourists arrive. The shops and bars here are among the most overpriced in the city, and crowd-weary families do little to add to the ambiance.

If you do brave it, the best diversion is the Aquarium of the Bay at Pier 39 (Mon–Thurs 10am–7pm, Fri–Sun 10am–8pm; $13.95; ☎415/623-5000, 🌐www.aquariumofthebay.com), which has a transparent tunnel so you can walk among gliding sharks and rays and a hands-on exhibition where you can stroke them. One-hour bay cruises depart several times a day from piers 39 and 41 (see p.1113). If you head west to the museums of Fort Mason and on to the expanse of green parkland along the Marina district, you'll get an excellent view of the Golden Gate Bridge.

Nob Hill

The posh hotels and Masonic institutions of Nob Hill exemplify San Francisco's old wealth, which arrived in the late 1800s with the robber-baron industrialists who moved here to build the Central Pacific Railroad. These financiers – who gave Nob Hill its name, after either "nabob," a Moghul prince, or "snob" – all built opulent mansions on the hill, only to see every one of them burn down in the fire caused by the earthquake of 1906. Aside from astounding views over the city and beyond, there are very few real sights to reward the stiff climb (or cable car ride) up the hill.

Begun soon after the fire, lumbering Grace Cathedral, perched on top of the hill, is one of the biggest hunks of sham-Gothic architecture in the US. It took more than sixty years to finish and it suffers from a hodgepodge of styles as a result: the ugly reinforced concrete from the 1960s is particularly off-putting. For no reason other than the fact they were available, the entrance is adorned with faithful replicas of the fifteenth-century Ghiberti doors of the Florence Baptistery; the one place worth detouring inside here is the AIDS Interfaith Chapel, adorned with Keith Haring's vibrant cast bronze altar. A block east, be sure to go inside the Fairmont Hotel, 950 Mason St at Sacramento, to get a sense of the opulence that once ruled the hill: take its elevators up for a great view of the city. Across from the Fairmont, the brownstone of the Pacific Union Club was the only original Nob Hill structure left standing after the fire.

The Tenderloin, Civic Center, and SoMa

While parts of San Francisco can almost seem to be an urban utopia, the adjoining districts of the Tenderloin and Civic Center are a gritty reminder that not everybody has it so easy. SoMa, the urban district South of Market Street, meanwhile, was transformed by the dot-com boom – from an industrial wasteland to a hive of loft offices and granite-walled eateries, centered on the lovely Yerba Buena Gardens; of course, the Internet crash ended much of its economic upswing, though the area's slowly reviving again.

The majestic federal and municipal buildings of Civic Center, squashed between the Tenderloin and SoMa, can't help but look strangely out of sync, both with their immediate neighbors and with San Francisco as a whole. Their grand Beaux Arts style is at odds with the quirky wooden architecture of the rest of the city: little wonder, as they're the sole remnant of a grand architectural plan to transform the city's downtown into a boulevard-dotted, Parisian-inspired place after the buildings there were levelled in the 1906 earthquake. It was at the huge, green-domed City Hall, on the northern edge of the dismal United Nations Plaza, that Mayor George Moscone and gay Supervisor Harvey Milk were assassinated in 1978 (see p.1125). The recently restored gold plate dome is an impressive relic of Gold Rush-era largesse. If you want to take one of the free, fascinating tours round its interior, sign up at the Docent Tour kiosk on the Van Ness Avenue side of the building (tours Mon–Fri 10am, noon & 2pm, Sat & Sun 12.30pm; ☎ 415/554-4799, 🌐 www.ci.sf.ca.us/cityhall).

Formerly one of San Francisco's least desirable neighborhoods, SoMa enjoyed a rebirth during the 1990s that converted many of its warehouses to offices for the fledgling Internet industry, but the district has taken a tumble since the dot-com crash and most of those office spaces now stand empty. The area's anchor attraction, though, is the SF Museum of Modern Art, 151 3rd St at Mission (Fri–Tues 11am–5.45pm, Thurs 11am–8.45pm; summer opens at 10am; $12.50, free first Tues; ☎ 415/357-4000, 🌐 www.sfmoma.org), which opened here in January 1995. Major works include paintings by Jackson Pollock, Frida Kahlo, and Diego Rivera, though the temporary exhibitions are the museum's strongest suit. The building, designed by Swiss architect Mario Botta, is flooded with natural light from a striking cylindrical skylight while the upper galleries are connected by a vertigo-inducing metal catwalk.

Opposite the museum is the other totem of civic pride, the Yerba Buena Center for the Arts, 701 Mission St at 3rd St (Tues, Wed, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm, Thurs & Fri 11am–8pm; $6, free first Tues of month; ☎ 415/978-2787, 🌐 www.yerbabuenaarts.org). This spectacular $44-million project features performance and gallery spaces used by both national and international touring exhibitions. Frankly, however, the big draw here is the stunning five and a half acres of gardens in which it sits. The 50-foot Sierra granite waterfall memorial to Martin Luther King Jr is especially moving, inscribed with excerpts from his speeches. Next to the gardens stands the SONY Metreon mall (☎ 415/369-6000, 🌐 www.metreon.com), an enormous 3D advertisement for the electronics giant that is only worth stopping by for its cinema, the most convenient multiscreen to downtown.

An interesting new addition is the Museum of African Diaspora, around the corner at 685 Mission St (Mon, Wed & Thurs–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10; ☎ 415/358-7200, 🌐 www.moadsf.org). Several floors of light, airy space celebrate humanity through four themes – origins, movement, adaptation, and transformation – with subtle modern art, photography, and video displays. A few blocks southwest at 875 Howard St, some of the best exhibits from the California Academy of Sciences and Steinhart Aquarium (daily 10am–5pm; $10; ☎415/321-8000, 🌐www.calacademy.org), including a dinosaur display, coral reef tank, and penguin feeding, are temporarily housed here pending their return to the usual locations in Golden Gate Park (see p.1127).

Sights in this massive area thin out considerably as you head south into a warehouse-lined former wasteland – though at night, this is the nexus of San Francisco's club culture. There are dozens of dance clubs here (see p.1134) as well as the legendary Folsom Street, once synonymous with S&M. Though Folsom has calmed down from its chaps-and-whips heyday in the 1970s, it's still home to bars which cater to the city's leather community and can be quite a scene, especially on weekends.

In the far southern reaches of SoMa stands AT&T Park, overlooking the waters at 3rd and King streets. Home to baseball's San Francisco Giants, the stadium is a remarkable addition to the city's waterfront. The faux old-brick building offers superb views of the bay beyond the outfield fences, some of the finest food to ever grace a ballpark, as well as the chance to see the odd home run splash into the bay. If the team's not playing while you're in town, check out the park on one of the twice-hourly tours (non-game days only, 10.30am & 12.30pm; $10; ☎415/972-2000, 🌐www.sfgiants.com).

The Mission

Vibrant, hip, and ethnically mixed, the Mission is easily San Francisco's most interesting neighborhood. A mile or so south of downtown, nestled in a basin, it's also the warmest and the summer fogs that dog the rest of the city leave this area alone. The traditional first stop for immigrants, the Mission was initially predominantly Scandinavian, then Irish before becoming a sizeable Latin American settlement. Though hipster Anglos have in recent years swarmed to its old buildings and cheap rents, it's still a joyously Hispanic place and one of the unmissable sights of the city.

The area takes its name from the old Mission Dolores, 3321 16th St at Dolores (daily 9am–4pm; $1 suggested donation; ☎415/621-8203, 🌐missiondolores.citysearch.com), the oldest building to survive the 1906 earthquake and fire. Founded in 1776, it was the sixth in a series of missions built along the Pacific coast as Spain staked its claim to California; the graves of the Native Americans it tried to “civilize” can be seen in the cemetery next door, along with those of white pioneers. Go early in the morning to avoid the tour buses.

The Hispanic heart of the Mission lies east of Mission Street between 16th and 24th streets. Here you'll absorb the district's original Latin flavor among the Nicaraguan, Salvadoran, Costa Rican, and Mexican stores and restaurants, as well as markets selling tropical fruits and panaderias baking traditional pastries. Meanwhile, to catch the Anglo pulse of the area, head along to the same stretch along Valencia Street, one block west: the profusion of independent bookstores and thrift stores around here makes for heavenly browsing, and the vicinity of 22nd Street has become a new gourmet-dining scene. It's worth stopping by to take a snap of the huge yellow Levi Strauss & Co. factory, 250 Valencia St at 14th Street, constructed after the original factories were destroyed in 1906.

What really sets the Mission apart from the city's other neighborhoods are its murals – there are over two hundred in all, though many are more heartfelt than skilled or beautiful. The densest concentration is along Balmy Alley, between

△ Mission Dolores

Folsom and Harrison off 24th Street, which is especially known for its politically charged paintings depicting the agonies of many Central American countries. For a more detailed recap of the murals' history and meaning, join one of the tours run by the mural organization, Precita Eyes, 2981 24th St at Harrison (tours Sat & Sun 1.30pm; $12; ☎ 415/285-2287, 🌐 www.precitaeyes.org).

The Castro

Progressive and celebratory, but also increasingly comfortable and wealthy, the Castro is the city's gay capital, providing a barometer for the state of the grown-up and sobered gay scene. Some people insist that this is still the wildest place in town, while others reckon it's a shadow of its former self; all agree that things are not the same as a decade or so ago, when a walk down the Castro would have had you gawping at the revelry. Most of the same bars and hangouts still stand, but these days they're host to an altogether different and more conservative breed. Cute shops and restaurants lend a young professional feel to the place. A visit to the district is a must if you're to get any idea of just what San Francisco is all about, though in terms of visible street life, the few blocks around Castro and Market streets contain about all there is to see – the liveliest time to stroll around is on Sunday afternoons, when the streetside cafés are packed with well-groomed Castro residents.

Harvey Milk Plaza, by the Castro MUNI station, is dedicated to the assassinated gay supervisor, who owned a camera store in the Castro. The man who shot Milk and Mayor George Moscone, Dan White, was a disgruntled ex-colleague who resigned in protest at their liberal policies; at the trial, his plea of temporary insanity caused by harmful additives in his fast food – the so-called “Twinkie defense” – won him a sentence of five years' imprisonment for manslaughter and the derision of the local gay community. Reactions were angry enough to spark the violent “White Night” riots, as protesters marched into City Hall, burning police cars as they went. As for White, he was released from prison in 1985 and, unable to find a job, committed suicide soon afterwards.

Gay and lesbian San Francisco

San Francisco is still the indisputable gay capital of the world – but today the local gay community is much less outrageous and activist than it was in the past. For most of the year, though, the scene still has its raucous and raunchy moments – notably in June, with the Gay and Lesbian Film Festival, Gay Pride Week, and the Gay Freedom Day Parade. October is also good, when the street fairs are in full swing and Halloween transforms the Castro into a costumed wonderland. Recently, though, city officials have tried to move the celebration to Civic Center, where there's better crowd control and safety; this has somewhat dampened the holiday's anything-goes atmosphere.

It's worth noting that San Francisco is definitely gay male-centric. Though the 1980s saw the flowering of a lesbian culture to rival the male 1970s upsurge, now those bars for women have all but closed down (the exception being the Mission's Lexington Club, see p.1133), and the nightlife revolves around a handful of women's club nights. Frankly, the place to seek out lesbian culture is in the bookstores.

Good listings periodicals include Gloss, Frontiers, The Bay Area Reporter, and Bay Times; these can be found in many Castro bars and cafés. Other useful publications include Betty and Pansy's Severe Queer Review of San Francisco ($10.95), available in gay bookstores, and The Lavender Pages, a free telephone-cum-resource book. The new LGBT Community Center, 1800 Market St at Octavia (☎415/865-5555, 🌐www.sfcenter.org), has a walk-in information desk on its first floor, and also regularly hosts performances by comedy and theater groups on-site – check the website or call for details. You'll find gay accommodation and bars listed on pp.1116 and 1132, respectively.

Before heading down Castro Street into the heart of the neighborhood, take a short walk to the former location of the Names Project at 2363A Market St, which sponsored the creation of “The Quilt” – a gargantuan blanket in which each panel measures six feet by three feet (the size of a grave site) and bears the name of a person lost to AIDS. Made by lovers, friends, and families, the panels are stitched together and regularly tour the country and the world; it has been spread on the Mall in Washington, DC, several times to dramatize the epidemic. The 54-ton Quilt and Names Project Foundation moved to a permanent home in Atlanta in 2001.

The junction of Castro and 18th Street, known as the “gayest four corners of the earth,” marks the Castro's center, cluttered with bookstores, clothing stores, cafés, and bars. The side streets offer a slightly more exclusive fare of exotic delicatessens, fine wines, and fancy florists amid manicured and leafy residential roads.

Haight-Ashbury

The fame of Haight-Ashbury, two miles west of downtown San Francisco, far outstrips its size and its appeal. No more than eight blocks in length, centered on the junction of Haight and Ashbury streets, “The Haight” was a run-down Victorian neighborhood until it was transformed into the hub of counterculture cool during the 1960s. Since then the area has become gentrified, but it retains a collection of radical bookstores, laid-back cafés, record stores, and secondhand clothing emporia, not to mention a ragged collection of hangers-on.

All there is to do in the Haight today is to stroll around the shops, and pick your way past the dozens of beggars. Meanwhile down at the eastern end of Haight Street, around Fillmore Street, is the area known as the Lower Haight.

The hippies

The first hippies were an offshoot of the Beats, many of whom had moved out of their increasingly expensive North Beach homes to take advantage of the low rents and large spaces in the Victorian houses of the Haight. The post-Beat bohemia that subsequently began to develop here in the early 1960s was initially a small affair, involving drug use and the embrace of Eastern religion and philosophy, together with a marked anti-American political stance and a desire for world peace. Where Beat philosophy had emphasized self-indulgence, the hippies, on the face of it at least, stressed such concepts as “universal truth” and “cosmic awareness.” Characters like Ken Kesey and his Merry Pranksters set a precedent of wild living and challenging authority. The use of drugs was seen as an integral – and positive – part of the movement. LSD, especially, which was not then illegal, was claimed as an avant-garde art form, pumped out in private laboratories and distributed by Timothy Leary and his supporters with a prescription – “Turn on, tune in, drop out” – that galvanized a generation into inactivity. Life in the Haight took on a theatrical quality: Pop Art found mass appeal, light shows became legion, and dress flamboyant. The psychedelic music scene, spearheaded by the Grateful Dead, Jefferson Airplane, and Janis Joplin, became a genuine force nationwide, and it wasn’t long before kids from all over America started turning up in Haight-Ashbury for the free food, free drugs, and free love. Money became a dirty word, the hip became “heads,” and the rest of the world were “straights.”

During the heady days of the massive “be-in” in Golden Gate Park in 1966 and the revolutionary, peace-promoting “Summer of Love” the following year, no fewer than 75,000 pilgrims turned the busy little intersection of Haight-Ashbury into the center of alternative culture.

For decades a primarily African-American neighborhood, it has been transformed over the past decade or so by youthful immigrants from Britain and elsewhere into a stomping ground for the city’s rave culture.

Golden Gate Park

In a city with an abundance of green space, Golden Gate Park stands out as not just the largest, but also the most beautiful, and safest, of its parks. Spreading three miles or so west from the Haight as far as the Pacific, it was constructed on what was then an area of wild sand dunes buffeted by the spray from the ocean. Despite the throngs of joggers, polo players, roller-skaters, cyclists, and strollers, it never seems to get overcrowded and you can always find a spot to be alone.

Of the park’s several museums, the best is the completely rebuilt M.H. de Young Museum (Tues–Sun 9.30am–5.15pm; $10; ☎ 415/863-3330, 🌐 www.thinker.org). Don’t be put off by the ugly square black-box exterior because the gems inside, which augment the extensive American art from colonial times up to the present day with superb Native American, Latin American, African and Oceanic pieces, are well worth devoting a couple of hours to. Opposite the museum, the California Academy of Sciences and Steinhart Aquarium buildings are now being renovated but some of their exhibits are on display in the SoMa district (see p.1123). Slightly to the west, the Japanese Tea Garden (daily Mar–Oct 8.30am–6pm, Nov–Feb 9am–5pm; $3.50; ☎ 415/752-1171) is dominated by a massive bronze Buddha, while carp-filled ponds and bonsai and cherry trees lend a tranquil feel, as long as you can ignore the busloads of tourists that pour in regularly throughout the day. The best way to enjoy the garden is to get there around 9am and have a $3 breakfast of tea and fortune cookies in the tea house.

The Golden Gate Bridge and beyond

The orange towers of the Golden Gate Bridge, perhaps the best-loved symbol of San Francisco, are visible from almost every high point in the city. The bridge, which spans 4200ft, had taken only 52 months to design and build when it was opened in 1937: note that the ruddy color was originally intended as a temporary undercoat before the gray topcoat was applied, but locals liked it so much, the bridge has stayed orange ever since. Driving on it is a real thrill, while the half-hour walk across allows you to take in its enormous size and absorb the views of the Marin headlands, as well as the city itself. The view is especially beautiful at sunset, when the glow of the waning day paints the white city a delicate pink.

The Fort Point National Historic Site beneath the bridge gives a good sense of the place as the westernmost outpost of the nation. This brick fortress, built in the 1850s, has a dramatic site, reachable via Marine Drive in the Presidio, where the surf pounds away beneath the great span of the bridge high above – a view made famous by Kim Novak's suicide attempt in Alfred Hitchcock's Vértigo. The other attraction in the shadow of the bridge is the beaches at the tip of the peninsula, though dangerous riptides and excruciatingly cold water make it impossible to swim with any confidence. The Presidio itself is another fine expanse of green in which you can escape from the city noise.

Make sure to head inland and west to Lincoln Park, at 34th Avenue and Clement Street, which offers striking views of the Marin headlands and is home to the stately California Palace of the Legion of Honor (Tues–Sun 9.30am–5pm; $8, free every Tues, surcharge for special exhibitions; ☎ 415/863-3330, @ www.thinker.org), one of the best museums in the city. Its isolated, windswept location, high on a bluff overlooking the ocean, is unsurpassably romantic, and deters the hordes that swarm the MoMA and the museums in Golden Gate Park. The bronze cast of Rodin's The Thinker on a pedestal in the center of the front courtyard offers a foretaste of the museum's expansive holdings by the French sculptor. Sadly, the magnificent museum is somewhat let down by its lackluster collection of Old Masters – many of the artworks, including those by Giambologna, Cellini, and Cranach, are “attributed to” or “the workshop of,” rather than bona fide masterpieces. The Impressionist and Post-Impressionist galleries are stronger, though, and contain works by Courbet, Manet, and Monet among others – look for the lively oil sketches by Degas and Seurat's characteristically trippy view of the Eiffel Tower.

Eating

With well over three thousand restaurants crammed onto the small peninsula, and scores of bars and cafés open all day, eating in San Francisco is never difficult, and while the hype around the city is relentless, it's in its restaurants where that hype is unquestionably deserved. Be warned: San Francisco closes early, and you'll be struggling to find places that will serve you after 10 or 11pm. Mexican food is big in the Mission, Italian places abound in North Beach, and, of course, Chinatown naturally has plenty of Chinese restaurants, while the Japan Center – the heart of Japantown, located at Post Street, a mile west of Union Square – boasts a few fine Japanese places. In health-conscious San Francisco you'll find vegetarian entrees on every menu and quite a few entirely vegetarian restaurants. With the vineyards of Napa and Sonoma Valley on the city's doorstep, quality wines have a high profile in most San Francisco restaurants. State law prohibits smoking in all restaurants, cafés, and bars, as evidenced by the crowds of people puffing on the pavements.

Downtown and Chinatown

Asia de Cuba Cliff Hotel, 495 Geary St at Taylor, Theater District ☎415/923-2300. Cuban food served family-style in huge portions in an extremely trendy setting. It's a delicious experience, enhanced by the opium-den-like ambiance.

Borobudur 700 Post St at Jones, Theater District ☎415/775-1512. Small but excellent Indonesian place, serving rich curries. Try the Rijsttafel, a selection of small dishes with rice.

Cosmopolitan Café 121 Spear St Unit B-8, in the Rincon Center, Financial District ☎415/543-4001. In an otherwise deserted area, this modern American bistro is an appealing choice for dinner. The standard modern American food (entrees around $20) is spruced up with great condiments like sweet, chunky house-made ketchup, not to mention friendly, efficient service.

Farallon 450 Post St at Powell, Union Square ☎415/956-6969. Sumptuously styled as an undersea grotto, serving highly creative seafood dishes in small portions. Definitely worth a splurge if you're into elegant dining experiences.

House of Nanking 919 Kearny at Jackson, Chinatown ☎415/421-1429. One of the most popular Chinese restaurants, despite the lack of decor and elbow room. You can wait ages for a table, but the inexpensive food doesn't disappoint.

Kokkari Estiatorio 200 Jackson St at Front, Financial District ☎415/981-0983. By far, the best Greek restaurant in town, offering staples such as lamb and eggplant that are served both separately or combined as moussaka.

Plouf 40 Belden Lane at Bush, Chinatown ☎415/986-6491. Convivial South-of-France seafood bistro, with sidewalk seating in good weather. The garlicky mussels – the house specialty – are the best in the city. Very reasonable prices.

Sears Fine Food 439 Powell St at Post, Union Square ☎415/986-1160. A classic breakfast joint with a hearty old-fashioned ambiance: try the plate of eighteen tiny Swedish pancakes, or for groups of six or more, the Ranch Breakfast of pancakes, eggs, bacon, and the works.

Tadich Grill 240 California St at Battery, Financial District ☎415/391-1849. Half diner, half gentleman's club, staffed by white-jacketed waiters and serving hearty steaks and salads.

Yank Sing 427 Battery St at Clay, Financial District ☎415/781-1111. A cavernous spot that regularly tops locals' lists for the best dim sum in the city. Despite being routinely packed during lunch hours, the waitstaff can almost always find a spot for you in the seemingly endless warren of dining rooms.

North Beach, the Embarcadero, Fisherman's Wharf, and the Marina

Baker Street Bistro 2953 Baker St at Lombard, Cow Hollow ☎415/931-1475. Cramped but charming café with a few outdoor tables. The slightly older, neighborhood crowd enjoys simple food served by French staff. Wines are well priced and the $14.50 prix fixe dinner is a bargain.

Bistro Boudin 160 Jefferson St at Taylor, Fisherman's Wharf ☎415/351-5561. Quality Gallo-American cuisine with great views across the Bay from the dining room above the famous Boudin Bakery. Fairly pricey, so look out for coupons in the City Pass (see p.1111).

Bistro Yoffi 2231 Chestnut St at Pierce, Marina ☎415/885-5133. Eclectic modern American cuisine served in an attractive bistro that's refreshingly quirky given its location, packed with potted ferns and mismatched chairs. There's a great garden out back.

Café Francisco 2161 Powell St at North Point, Fisherman's Wharf ☎415/397-2602. Cheap neighborhood café only blocks from the wharf. Great for a lazy breakfast while reading the newspapers or a quiet lunchtime sandwich.

Caffè Trieste 601 Vallejo St at Grant, North Beach ☎415/392-6739. Small, crowded, and authentic Italian coffeehouse – features free music: folk and classical on Sat afternoons and mostly jazz on Thurs evenings.

 Greens Fort Mason Center, Building A, Marina ☎415/771-6222. The queen of San Francisco's vegetarian restaurants, using the best organic produce, with a gorgeous view of the bay. Book ahead.

Helmand 430 Broadway at Kearny, North Beach ☎415/362-0641. The decor here is simple and unassuming – unlike the food, which is unforgettable. The menu features tangy and spicy Afghani staples like kaddo borwani (caramelized pumpkin).

Mama's 1701 Stockton St at Washington Square, North Beach ☎415/362-6421. Cheery, bright yellow tablecloths and sunny staff give this homey diner a lift: try the crab Benedict or one of the gooey, cake-like French toast specials. Expect lines at the weekend, whatever the time.

Trattoria Contadina 1800 Mason St at Union, North Beach ☎415/982-5728. This tiny, family-owned trattoria still caters primarily to the local Italian community, serving outstanding renditions of traditional dishes, like rigatoni with eggplant and smoked mozzarella.

Civic Center, Tenderloin, SoMa, and The Mission

Asia SF 201 9th St at Howard, SoMa ☎415/255-2742. More of an experience than a restaurant, this only-in-San Francisco spot features “gender illusionist” staff who put on a campy nightly revue. Though the show’s the real draw, the sushi and cocktails are good.

Betty’s Café 167 11th St at Howard, SoMa ☎415/431-2525. Known for its hearty breakfast specials under $3, including choice of meat, eggs, hash browns, and toast. No frills, but who’d expect them at prices like these.

El Perol 2590 Mission St at 22nd ☎415/550-8582. Wonderful cheap Peruvian place serving traditional soups and more substantial Andean fare.

Fringale 570 4th St at Brannan, SoMa ☎415/543-0573. Delightful, low-key charmer on a quiet SoMa block offering service that’s as exceptional as the food, which is predominantly French, but with Basque touches like serrano ham.

Lulu 816 Folsom St at 4th, SoMa ☎415/495-5775. Famed Californian restaurant with a rustic, rather cramped dining room serving family-style, Italian-inspired dishes. The wine list is spectacular.

Luna Park 694 Valencia St at 18th, Mission ☎415/553-8584. Groovy local favorite, decked out like a lush bordello with deep red walls and ornamental chandeliers. Most of the entrees, like a tuna salad niçoise or moules frites, hover around $15.

Saigon Sandwich Shop 560 Larkin St at Ellis, Tenderloin ☎415/474-5698. Hole-in-the-wall store selling superb, made-to-order Vietnamese sandwiches for around $2 each: choose from barbecued chicken or pork, and meatballs.

Shalimar 532 Jones St at Geary, Tenderloin ☎415/928-0333. A happy find in the downtrodden Tenderloin, this divey spot serves delicious, cheap Pakistani food, all of it made to order before your eyes.

Swan Oyster Depot 1517 Polk at California, Polk Gulch ☎415/673-1101. No frills – and officially, no full meals – at this cheap seafood counter. Grab a stool and hang onto it (it gets crowded and competitive in here) and suck down some cheap shellfish and seafood.

Ti Couz 3108 16th St at Valencia, Mission ☎415/252-7373. This friendly but hip crêperie was one of the pioneers of the newly groovy Mission scene on Valencia Street. It still holds its place as one of the best cheaper restaurants around, serving buckwheat savory pancakes for $6 or so.

Truly Mediterranean 3109 16th St at Valencia, Mission ☎415/252-7482. Fast threatening to overtake the beloved burrito as the locals’ favorite portable dinner item, this hole-in-the-wall’s version of the falafel comes wrapped in thin, crispy bread.

Tu Lan 8 6th St at Market, SoMa ☎415/626-0927. A legend ever since Julia Child first sampled the Vietnamese cooking in this cramped, dingy space on one of the seediest blocks in town. The food’s consistently fresh, flavorful, and cheap.

The Castro, Haight-Ashbury, and Japantown

Café Flore 2298 Noe St at Market, Castro ☎415/621-8579. Wedged into the triangle at the corner of Market and Noe streets, this café has a sunny, plant-filled courtyard that’s a great place to grab a coffee and a gooey cake; be aware that it can be very cruisey, especially during the early evening.

Chow 215 Church St at Market, Castro ☎415/552-2469. Unfussy comfort food, like pasta and wood-fired pizza, some with an Asian twist. Spaghetti and meatballs is great value for $6 and most dishes cost no more than $10.

Late-night eating

For that midnight snack or early-morning binge, check out the following 24-hour dependables:

Bagdad Café 2295 Market St at 16th St, Castro ☎415/621-4434. The best-price 24-hour option in the neighborhood.

Caffè Greco 423 Columbus Ave at Vallejo, North Beach ☎415/397-6261. The best place to come for a dark, pungent, pick-me-up espresso – you can also graze on pastries.

El Farolito 2779 Mission St at 24th, Mission ☎415/824-7877. Twenty-four-hour taqueria.

Mario’s Bohemian Cigar Store 566 Columbus Ave at Union, North Beach ☎415/362-0536. The cigars are long gone, but it’s definitely still a boho hangout – they’re likely here for the huge, doorstopping panini.

Yuet Lee 1300 Stockton St at Broadway, Chinatown ☎415/982-6020. Terrific Chinese seafood – try the braised catfish; until 3am daily except Tues.

EOS 901 Cole St at Carl, Cole Valley ☎415/566-3063. The best place to sip a glass of wine and enjoy Euro-Asian inspired cuisine. The restaurant is very pricey, so stick to the wine bar next door for a similar experience at a lower price.

Frijt 579 Hayes St at Laguna, Hayes Valley ☎415/864-7654. Trendy little friterie, serving cones of crunchy Belgian-style fries with dips like tabasco-chive ketchup and spicy yogurt peanut.

Home 2100 Market St at Church, Castro ☎415/503-0333. The menu at this mixed-gay diner is designed to offer the things that a chef cooks at home for his friends – primarily comfort food like moules frites (around $10–12 per entree). There's an enjoyable patio bar with DJs on the weekend.

Maki Japan Center, 1825 Post St at Webster, Japantown ☎415/921-5125. One of the many tasty, tiny places in the Japan Center, this restaurant specializes in wappan meshi, a wood steamer filled with vegetables, meat, and rice.

Rosamunde Sausage Grille 545 Haight St at Fillmore, Lower Haight ☎415/437-6851. Small storefront grill with a few stools at the bar, serving just-grilled sausages on a sesame roll. Choose from a cherry-laced chicken sausage to the light flavors of a shrimp, scallop, and snapper sausage.

Stelline 330 Gough St at Hayes, Hayes Valley ☎415/626-4292. Red-checked tablecloths, a handwritten and photocopied menu, plus affable, chatty staff make this a cheap, relaxed place to grab home-style Italian food.

Suppenküche 601 Hayes St at Laguna, Hayes Valley ☎415/252-9289. Satisfying and delicious German cooking near Civic Center in a loud, lively bar/restaurant decked out like a traditional Bavarian pub. Don't miss the potato pancakes appetizer – it's enough alone for a light supper.

 Taqueria El Balazo 1654 Haight St at Belvedere, Haight-Ashbury ☎415/864-2140.

Jazzily coloured Mexican canteen serving some of the best inexpensive food in the area. The deluxe burritos are tremendous.

Thep Phanom 400 Waller St at Fillmore, Lower Haight ☎415/431-2526. Delicate decor and beautifully prepared Thai dishes in the Lower Haight. Main course around $9–12 and expect to wait for a table.

The Sunset and the Richmond

Chapeau! 1408 Clement St at 15th, Richmond ☎415/750-9787. Delicious French food served in a small space crowded with locals enjoying a relaxed provincial atmosphere.

Fountain Court 354 Clement St at 5th Ave, Richmond ☎415/668-1100. Unusual Chinese restaurant serving authentic Shanghai food – less familiar than Cantonese staples, perhaps, but just as delicious. Try the Shanghai dumplings or lion's-head soup.

Pizzetta 211 23rd Ave at California, Richmond ☎415/379-9880. Inventive and unusual pizzas are featured on a different menu each week, offering whatever's fresh and seasonal as a topping.

PJ's Oyster Bed 737 Irving St at 9th, Sunset ☎415/566-7775. This rowdy, unpretentious restaurant offers spicy, tangy Cajun dishes like blackened catfish and alligator eggs. Watch out for the free Jello vodka shots the owner periodically passes around.

Wing Lee Bakery 503 Clement St at 6th Ave, Richmond ☎415/668-9481. No-nonsense Chinese dim sum store, one of several on this strip. There's little English spoken, so it's something of a lucky dip snack, but the fillings are more authentic than what you'll find downtown.

CALIFORNIA

San Francisco: Nightlife and entertainment

Nightlife and entertainment

Compared to many US cities, where you need money and attitude in equal measure, San Francisco's nightlife scene demands little of either. It is not unusual for restaurants to provide live music, and you can often eat and be entertained for no extra cost. This is no 24-hour city, however, and the approach to socializing is often surprisingly low-key, with little of the pandering to fads and fashions that goes on elsewhere. The club scene is far from the cutting edge of hip, and is inexpensive compared to those in other cities. A decent night out might run you $30–40, including cover charge and a few drinks. As with restaurants, smoking is illegal in bars and clubs, though locals routinely flout the law at the risk of incurring a ticket.

The Sunday Chronicle's "Pink Pages" supplement, along with the free weekly Bay Guardian and the SF Weekly, are the best sources of listings. Ticketmaster (☎ 415/421-8497, 🌐 www.ticketmaster.com) is the major ticket agency, with outlets in Rite Aid stores. Tickets.com (☎ 415/776-1999, 🌐 www.tickets.com) is also worth a try.

Bars

San Francisco, while famous for its restaurants, has a huge number of drinking establishments, ranging from comfortably scruffy jukebox joints to chic watering holes.

Bambuddha The Phoenix Hotel, 601 Eddy St at Larkin, Tenderloin ☎ 415/885-5088. Sleek, South Pacific-inspired cocktail lounge with terrific DJs and strong drinks.

Blondie's Bar & No Grill 540 Valencia St at 16th, Mission ☎ 415/864-2419. Always packed, this fun bar with a good-sized patio serves huge cocktails and often hosts live music. As a bonus, the newly opened Wetspot back room is also smoker-friendly.

Edinburgh Castle 950 Geary St at Polk, Tenderloin ☎ 415/885-4074. Just your average Scottish bar run by Koreans; it's filled with heraldic Highland memorabilia and offers a mean version of fish and chips.

Gordon Biersch Brewery 2 Harrison St at Embarcadero, SoMa ☎ 415/243-8246. Bayfront micro-brewery in a converted coffee warehouse, with a great selection of beers that pulls in a downtown twenty-something crowd.

Kezar 770 Stanyan St at Waller ☎ 415/386-9292. Large Brit-run pub opposite the park. No great range of beers but the most reliable place to see soccer on TV, even the early games.

Li Po's Bar 916 Grant Ave at Jackson, Chinatown ☎ 415/982-0072. Named after the Chinese poet, Li Po's is a little grody, although that's part of its charm: it's one of the few places to drink in Chinatown.

Mad Dog in the Fog 530 Haight St at Fillmore, Lower Haight ☎ 415/626-7279. Aptly named by the two lads from Birmingham, England who own the joint, this is one of the Lower Haight's most loyally patronized bars, with darts, English beer, and soccer on TV.

Persian Aub Zam Zam 1663 Haight St at Clayton, Haight-Ashbury ☎ 415/861-2545. A Casbah-style cocktail lounge featuring a retro jazz jukebox; the famed and ornery owner may be dead, but his regulars clubbed together and bought the bar to preserve its vibe. Try a signature gin martini.

Red Room Commodore International Hotel, 827 Sutter St at Jones, Theater District ☎ 415/346-7666. This trendy, sexy bar is – as its name implies – completely red: walls, furniture, glasses, and even many of the drinks.

The Redwood Room Clift Hotel, 495 Geary St at Taylor, Theater District ☎ 415/775-4700. This club-by, landmark bar was recently given a hip makeover, with lightboxes on the wall displaying paintings that phase and fade between portraits. It's great fun – just don't choke on the drinks prices.

Tonga Room Fairmont Hotel, 950 Mason St at California, Nob Hill ☎ 415/772-5278. This basement bar is styled like a Polynesian village, complete with a pond and simulated rainstorms, and a grass-skirted band playing terrible jazz and pop covers from a floating raft. The cocktails are outrageously overpriced, but a $7 happy hour buffet makes up for it. Cover $3 after 8pm.

Tunnel Top 601 Bush St at Stockton, Union Square ☎ 415/986-8900 This funky, industrial bar is hidden behind a seedy storefront on top of the Stockton Street tunnel. One of the few tobacco-friendly places downtown.

Gay and lesbian bars

San Francisco's gay and lesbian bars are many and varied, ranging from cozy cocktail lounges to no-holds-barred leather-and-chain hangouts. The scene may no longer be quite as wild as its reputation would have you believe, but at its best it can still be hard to beat.

Badlands 4131 18th St at Castro, Castro ☎ 415/626-9320, 🌐 www.sfbadlands.com. Recently renovated, this video bar attracts a pretty, thirty-something crowd and is usually packed at weekends.

Cat Club 1190 Folsom St at 8th, SoMa ☎ 415/431-3332. This dark, loud club is one of the city's lesbian hotspots, mixing dancing and live performances. It's livelier the later you arrive. Cover $5–10.

Cherry Bar 917 Folsom St at 5th, SoMa ☎ 415/974-1585. Newer lesbian bar with a rock vibe and regular live music. On Sun there is a strip club with butch and trans erotic dancers.

The Eagle Tavern 398 12th St at Harrison, SoMa ☎ 415/626-0880. A good old-fashioned leather bar, particularly popular on Sun when it holds a late-afternoon “beer bust” for charity.

Esta Noche 3079 16th St at Valencia, Mission ☎ 415/861-5757. This gay Latin drag bar hosts nightly shows that are great fun and attract a young, racially mixed clientele.

Lexington Club 3464 19th St at Lexington, Mission ☎ 415/863-2052. The only place in the city where the girls outnumber the boys (men must be accompanied by a woman to enter), this bustling lesbian bar attracts all sorts with its no-nonsense decor, friendly atmosphere, and excellent jukebox.

Midnight Sun 4067 18th St at Castro, Castro ☎ 415/861-4186, 🌐 www.midnightsunsf.com. Long, narrow video bar, always busy with well-dressed white boys checking out the movies shown on the monitors, as well as each other.

Pilsner Inn 225 Church St at Market, Castro ☎ 415/621-7058. The best neighborhood gay bar in the Castro, filled with a diverse, slightly older crowd playing pool and darts. There’s a large, smoker-friendly patio out back.

Powerhouse 1347 Folsom St at Doré Alley, SoMa ☎ 415/861-1790. One of the prime pick-up joints in the city, this very cruisy old-school leather bar has plenty of convenient dark corners. Leather/uniform dress code enforced.

The Stud 399 Folsom St at 9th, SoMa ☎ 415/252-7883. Legendary gay club that’s still as popular as ever, attracting a diverse, energetic, and uninhibited crowd. Now hosts Planet Big SF for large men on Sun. Cover $5–8.

Live music: rock, jazz, and folk

San Francisco’s music scene reflects the character of the city: laid-back, eclectic, and not a little nostalgic. The options for live music are wide and the scene is definitely on the up and up, with the city regularly spawning good young bands. In recent years the city has helped launch acid jazz (beat-heavy jazz that’s become de rigueur dinner-party music across the country), a classic swing revival, and the East Bay pop-punk sound. Check the San Francisco Bay Guardian and SF Weekly free weeklies, and the San Francisco Chronicle, for listings.

Biscuits and Blues 401 Mason St at Geary, Union Square ☎ 415/292-2583, 🌐 www.biscuitsandblues.com. Lively blues supper club with inexpensive Southern cuisine and hot blues acts nightly. Reservations recommended for dinner shows. Cover $5–15.

Boom Boom Room 1601 Fillmore St at Geary, Japantown ☎ 415/673-8000, 🌐 www.boombooboom.com. Once owned by the late blues legend John Lee Hooker, this small, intimate bar delivers straight-ahead jazz or classic blues acts nightly. Cover $5–12.

Bottom of the Hill 1233 17th St at Missouri, Potrero Hill ☎ 415/621-4455, 🌐 www.bottomofthehill.com. Hangout for rock and country music, live seven nights a week, drawing a late-twenty- to thirty-something crowd. There’s an outdoor all-you-care-to-eat barbecue on the patio Sun. Cover $5–10.

Bruno’s 2389 Mission St at 20th, Mission ☎ 415/648-7701, 🌐 www.brunoslive.com. Like something from a Scorsese movie, this retro-1960s restaurant has an intimate live venue attached where there’s usually jazz or nu-school R&B. Cover $5–8 (no cover for diners).

Café du Nord 2170 Market St at Sanchez, Castro ☎ 415/861-5016, 🌐 www.cafedunord.com. Primarily a jazz club, this popular bar is also a great place to enjoy live swing, Latin, and world music over good food, or just have a beer and shoot some pool. Cover $3–8.

Elbo Room 647 Valencia St at 17th, Mission ☎ 415/552-7788, 🌐 www.elbo.com. The birthplace of acid jazz, often home to world music performers. Cover $5–12.

The Fillmore Auditorium 1805 Geary St at Fillmore, Japantown ☎ 415/346-6000, 🌐 www.thefillmore.com. A local landmark, The Fillmore was at the heart of the 1960s counter-culture, masterminded by the legendary Bill Graham. It reopened in 1994 after several years’ hiatus and is home now to rock and alt-rock touring acts. Ticket prices vary.

The Great American Music Hall 859 O’Farrell St at Polk, Tenderloin ☎ 415/885-0750, 🌐 www.musicallssf.com. Historic former bordello and saloon that has been converted into a popular venue for rock, blues, and world music acts. Cover $10–20.

The Independent 628 Divisadero St at Hayes, Alamo Square ☎ 415/771-1421, 🌐 www.theindependentsf.com. As the name suggests, this mid-sized club specializes in showcasing local and international indie outfits. Cover $5–15.

The Make Out Room 3225 22nd St at Mission, Mission ☎ 415/647-2888, 🌐 www.makeoutroom.com. Cozy and laid-back bar featuring worthy but obscure acts and the odd famous maverick like Jonathan Richman. Cover $6–12.

Tongue & Groove 2513 Van Ness Ave at Union, Cow Hollow ☎415/928-0404, @www.tongueandgroovesf.com. Local bands dancing from rock and funk to Seventies retro and alternative — one of the most inventive and reliable options in the city. Cover $8–10.

Clubbing

Still trading on a reputation for hedonism earned decades ago, San Francisco's nightclubs in fact trail light years behind those of other large American cities. That said, the compensations are manifold — it is rare to encounter high cover charges, ridiculously priced drinks, feverish posing, or long lines, though a few of the cavernous dance clubs in SoMa do have lines on weekends. The greatest concentration of clubs is in SoMa and, recently, the Mission. You must bring your ID to get in to all clubs; most require you to be at least twenty-one. Unlike most other cities, where the action never gets going until after midnight, many San Francisco clubs have to close at 2am during the week, so you can usually be sure of finding things well under way by 11.30pm.

1015 Folsom 1015 Folsom St at 6th, SoMa ☎415/431-1200, @www.1015.com. Multi-level superclub, popular across-the-board for late-night dancing: the music's largely house and garage, and expect marquee names like Sasha and Digweed on the main floor. $15–20.

DNA Lounge 375 11th St at Harrison, SoMa ☎415/626-1409, @www.dnalounge.com. Changes its music style nightly, but draws the same young hipsters, a mixed gay-straight crowd. $15–20.

The EndUp 401 6th St at Harrison, SoMa ☎415/357-0827, @www.theendup.com. Open all night (though you can only drink until 2am), and attracting hardcore gay and straight clubbers for after-hours dancing on its cramped dance floor. If you want a break from the beats, there's an outdoor patio with plenty of seating.

Hush Hush 496 14th St at Guerrero, Mission ☎415/241-9944, @www.hushhushlounge.com. A great place to hang out or dance, this hidden bar has no sign outside; inside, there's a slightly older crowd, playing pool or dancing to housey disco and classic 1970s funk, Wed to Sat.

Pink 2925 16th St at Capp, Mission ☎415/431-8889 This tiny, fun club is one of the city's best places to dance to acid jazz and deep house with a friendly crowd of all sexual orientations. $2–10.

Skylark 3089 16th St at Valencia, Mission ☎415/621-9294, @www.skylarkbar.com. Popular for its intimacy, low lights, strong drinks and varied DJs, this spot makes for an inexpensive night out. No cover.

Sno-Drift 1830 3rd St at 16th, China Basin ☎415/431-4766. Alpine ski lodge-themed club where almost everything is igloo-white, including an enormous padded vinyl bar. Music varies, but is mainly house. $15.

Space 550 550 Barneveld Ave at Oakdale, Hunter's Point ☎415/289-2001, @www.space550.com. This enormous warehouse club is known for its trancey, industrial dance programming. Although it's a long way out, in an iffy part of town, serious clubbers think it's worth the trek. $5–15.

Classical music, opera, and dance

Though the San Francisco arts scene has a reputation for provincialism, this is the only city on the West Coast to boast its own professional symphony, ballet, and opera companies. These companies rely entirely on private contributions for their survival and low-priced tickets are rare, if not non-existent. Last-minute standing-room tickets are an option for those on a budget. Look out in summer for the free concerts in Stern Grove (at 19th Avenue and Sloat Boulevard), where the symphony, opera, and ballet give open-air performances for ten successive Sundays (starting in June).

The San Francisco Opera Association (tickets and info ☎415/864-3330, @www.sfopera.com) has been performing in the opulent War Memorial Opera House, 301 Van Ness Ave at Grove, in the Civic Center since the building opened in 1932, pulling in big names like Plácido Domingo and Kiri Te Kanawa on a regular basis. Its main season runs from the end of September for thirteen weeks, and its opening night is one of the principal social events on the West Coast. Also housed here is the San Francisco Ballet (☎ 415/864-3330, 🌐 www.sfballet.org), whose regular season starts in February, while performances of The Nutcracker occur during the Christmas season.

Next door, the Louise M. Davies Symphony Hall, at 201 Van Ness Ave at Hayes (☎ 415/864-6000, 🌐 www.sfsymphony.org), is the permanent home of the San Francisco Symphony, hosting a year-round season of classical music and sometimes performances by other, often offbeat musical and touring groups.

Theater

The majority of the theaters in downtown's Theater District are not especially innovative, but tickets are reasonably inexpensive – rarely exceeding $25 a seat – and there's usually good availability. For last-minute bargains try the Tix Bay Area booth inside the Union Square garage, between Stockton and Powell streets (Tues–Thurs 11am–6pm, Fri & Sat 11am–7pm; recorded info ☎ 415/433-7827). It's also an outlet for Ticketmaster.

American Conservatory Theater (ACT) Geary Theater, 415 Geary St at Taylor, Theater District ☎ 415/742-2228, 🌐 www.act-sfbay.org. San Francisco's flagship theater company, the Tony Award-winning ACT puts on eight major plays each season.

Beach Blanket Babylon Club Fugazi, 678 Green St at Powell, North Beach ☎ 415/421-4222. This legendary musical revue, filled with celebrity impersonations and towering hats, has been running since 1974. Highly recommended, but remember to reserve in advance. Tickets from $25.

Golden Gate Theater 1 Taylor St at Golden Gate Ave and Market, Tenderloin ☎ 415/551-2000, 🌐 www.bestofbroadway-sf.com. San Francisco's most elegant theater (in its least elegant neighborhood), with marble flooring, Rococo ceilings, and gilt trimmings. It's a pity the program – generally a mainstream diet of touring musicals – doesn't live up to the decor.

Lorraine Hansberry Theatre 620 Sutter St at Mason, Theater District ☎ 415/474-8800, 🌐 www.lorrainehansberrytheatre.com. The mainstay of African-American theater in San Francisco. Traditional theater as well as contemporary political pieces and jazz/blues musical revues.

Magic Theatre Fort Mason Center, Building D, Fort Mason ☎ 415/441-8822, 🌐 www.magictheatre.org. Specializes in contemporary American playwrights and emerging new talent; Sam Shepard traditionally premieres his work here.

New Conservatory Theater Center 25 Van Ness Ave at Market, Civic Center ☎ 415/861-8972, 🌐 www.nctcsf.org. This mid-sized theater is known for its performances of musicals in concert, youth shows, and pantomime.

Theater Artaud 450 Florida St at Mariposa, Mission ☎ 415/621-7797, 🌐 www.artaud.org. Modern theater in a converted warehouse offering dance and theater performances, many less obscure than the theater's arty name might imply.

Shelton Theater 533 Sutter St at Powell, Union Square ☎ 415/433-1226, 🌐 www.sheltontheater.com. Small stage featuring mostly highbrow drama, with an even smaller space hosting comedy sketches and the like.

Theater Rhinoceros 2926 16th St at S Van Ness, Mission ☎ 415/861-5079, 🌐 www.therhino.org. San Francisco's leading gay theater space, performing everything from light, humorous productions to those that confront gay issues.

Shopping

While boasting the large-scale facilities and international names you'd expect in a major city, San Francisco's shopping scene is low-key and unpretentious. If you want to run the gauntlet of designer labels, or just watch the style brigade consume, Union Square is the place to be. The heart of the city's shopping territory, it has a good selection of big-name and chic stores worth a few hours if you're into serious dollar-dropping.

Books

Abandoned Planet Bookstore 518 Valencia at 16th, Mission ☎ 415/861-4695. Encouraging its customers to “Break the TV habit!” this eccentric and utterly San Francisco bookstore crams its shelves with left-wing and anarchist volumes.

Borders Books and Music 400 Post St at Powell, Union Square ☎ 415/399-1633. Gargantuan chain bookstore with some 160,000 books to choose from, as well as CDs, videos, and software on four floors. Another massive branch is at 200 King St, opposite AT&T Park.

City Lights Bookstore 261 Columbus Ave at Broadway, North Beach ☎ 415/362-8193. America's first paperback bookstore, and still San Francisco's best. The range of titles includes house publications.

A Different Light 489 Castro St at 18th, Castro ☎ 415/431-0891. Well-stocked and diverse gay bookstore.

Forever After Books 1475 Haight St at Ashbury, Haight-Ashbury ☎ 415/431-8299. The windows of this store are blocked by the piles of accumulated paperbacks – it's worth rifling your way through the mountains given the cheap prices.

Get Lost 1825 Market St at Valencia, Hayes Valley/Mission ☎ 415/437-0529. Tiny travel bookstore, crammed with unusual titles alongside the standard guidebooks.

The Great Overland Bookstore Company 2848 Webster St at Union, Cow Hollow ☎ 415/351-1538. Cluttered with piles of books, this is a first-rate, old-fashioned store with mint-condition first editions as well as cheap paperbacks.

Green Apple 506 Clement St at 6th Ave, Richmond ☎ 415/387-2272. In the heart of the Richmond district, this relaxed and welcoming store features new and used books (rare out-of-print volumes as well as standards), plus a well-priced selection of CDs and vinyl recordings.

Modern Times 888 Valencia St at 20th, Mission ☎ 415/282-9246. Progressive community bookstore with a good selection of Latin American literature and publications on women's issues and contemporary cultural studies.

Music

Amoeba Records 1855 Haight St at Stanyan, Haight-Ashbury ☎ 415/831-1200. A massive, independent record and CD store with one of the largest and best used collections you'll ever find (over one million new and used). They also host frequent live in-store performances.

Sports in San Francisco and the Bay Area

San Francisco's dedication to its professional sports teams can verge on the obsessive. Tickets for the big events can sell out, but it's usually possible to show up on the day, and it needn't cost all that much: an outfield seat to watch baseball from the “bleachers” goes for around $8, while promotional specials like Wednesday Dollar Days, run by the Oakland team, can reduce prices of seats and hotdogs to only a couple of bucks. Advance tickets for all Bay Area sports events are available through Ticketmaster's charge-by-phone ticket service (☎ 415/421-8497, 🌐 www.ticketmaster.com), or through the teams' headquarters.

Baseball: The Oakland A's play at the usually sunny Coliseum (🌐 www.oakland-athletics.com), which has a BART stop in front. The San Francisco Giants play at AT&T Park, where home runs sometimes land in the bay (☎ 415/972-2000, 🌐 www.sfgiants.com). There are five hundred bleacher-seat tickets made available two-and-a-half hours before game time and long lines form early and often. Walk up to the ticket booths at 24 Willie Mays Plaza, near Third and King streets, to get them.

Football: The San Francisco 49ers, five-time Super Bowl champions, also play at 3Com Park, where you may have to pay as much as $100 per seat (☎ 415/656-4900, 🌐 www.sf49ers.com), and the Oakland Raiders, blue-collar heroes and runners-up in the 2003 Superbowl, bash heads at the Oakland Coliseum (🌐 www.raiders.com).

Basketball: The reliably awful Golden State Warriors play at the newly renovated Oakland Arena (☎ 510/986-2200, 🌐 www.nba.com/warriors).

Ice hockey: The San Jose Sharks (☎ 408/287-7070, 🌐 www.sj-sharks.com) play at their own arena in San Jose.

Soccer: The San Jose Earthquakes (☎ 408/985-4625, 🌐 www.sjeearthquakes.com), MLS champs in 2001, draw large crowds at San Jose State's Spartan Stadium.

Aquarius Records 1055 Valencia St at 21st, Mission ☎415/647-2272. Small neighborhood store with friendly, knowledgeable staff and a good range of indie rock, jazz, and things experimental and obscure.

BPM 654 Fillmore St at Fell, Lower Haight ☎415/487-8680. One of the top DJ record stores in the city, with the latest UK imports from top-name British DJs and masses of flyers for upcoming events.

CD & Record Rack 3987 18th St at Castro, Castro ☎415/552-4990. Castro emporium with a superb selection of dance music, including a few 1970s twelve-inch singles.

Groove Merchant Records 687 Haight St at Pierce, Lower Haight ☎415/252-5766. Come here for secondhand soul, funk, and jazz: the owner is passionate and knowledgeable, so don't be afraid to ask questions.

Jack's Record Cellar 254 Scott St at Haight, Lower Haight ☎415/431-3047. The city's best source for American roots music – R&B, jazz, country, and Rock 'n' Roll – especially on LP. Closed Sun–Tues.

Mikado 1737 Post St, Japantown ☎415/922-9450. Enormous Japanese record store sprawled across three units of the Japan Center, with an exhaustive selection of Asian music.

Mission Music Center 2653 Mission St at 22nd, Mission ☎415/648-1788. Music from all over the continent, but especially South America.

Virgin Megastore 2 Stockton St at Market, Union Square ☎415/397-4525. Three floors packed with books, videos, and music, plus a café overlooking Market Street.

The Bay Area

Of the six million people who make their home in the vicinity of San Francisco, only a lucky one in eight lives in the city itself. Everyone else is spread around the Bay Area, a sharply contrasting patchwork of very rich and very poor towns dotted down the peninsula or across one of the three impressive bridges that span the chilly waters of the exquisite natural harbor. In the East Bay are industrial Oakland and intellectual Berkeley, while south of the city, the Peninsula holds the gloating wealth of Silicon Valley, which gained its nickname from the multibillion-dollar technology industry. To the north across the Golden Gate Bridge is the woody, leafy landscape and rugged coastline of Marin County, an elite pleasure zone of conspicuous luxury and abundant natural beauty.

The East Bay

The largest and the second-most-traveled bridge in the US, the Bay Bridge connects downtown San Francisco to the East Bay, part graceful suspension bridge and part heavy-duty steel truss. Currently being replaced along half its span, the Bay Bridge works a lot harder for a lot less respect than the more famous Golden Gate: a hundred million vehicles cross it each year. The heart of the East Bay is Oakland, a resolutely blue-collar city that spreads north to the progressive university town of Berkeley; the two communities all but merge into one city, and the hills above them are topped by a twenty-mile string of forested regional parks.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Flights direct to the East Bay touch down at Oakland Airport, just outside town (☎510/577-4015 or 1-800/992-7433 for automated flight info, @ www.oakland-airport.com). The AirBART shuttle van (every 15min; $2; ☎510/577-4294) runs to the Coliseum BART station from where you can hop on BART (see p.1138) to Berkeley, Oakland, or San Francisco. There are numerous door-to-door shuttle buses from the airport, such as Bridge Airporter Express (☎510/481-1050 or 1-800/300-1661) – expect to pay around $18 to downtown Oakland, $30–40 to San Francisco. Note that the Greyhound station is in a dodgy part of northern Oakland on San Pablo Avenue at 21st Street. Amtrak terminates at 2nd Street near Jack London Square in West Oakland, where you can catch a free shuttle bus to downtown San Francisco (a smoother alternative is to get off at Richmond and change onto the nearby BART trains).

There are two main visitor centers: Oakland CVB is at 463 11th St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 510/839-9000, 🌐 www.oaklandcvb.com), while Berkeley’s office is at 2015 Center St (Mon–Fri 9am–1pm & 2–5pm; ☎ 510/549-7040, 🌐 www.visitberkeley.com).

The underground BART system links the East Bay with San Francisco (Mon–Fri 4am–midnight, Sat 6am–midnight, Sun 8am–midnight; $1.40–7.65; ☎ 510/465-BART, 🌐 www.bart.gov). AC Transit (☎ 510/891-4777, 🌐 www.actransit.org) buses cover the entire East Bay area, with a more limited service running to Oakland and Berkeley from the Transbay Terminal in San Francisco; they’re the only option for crossing the Bay when BART shuts down for the night.

East Bay accommodation

The East Bay’s motels and hotels, which cost from $55 a night, are barely better value for money than their San Francisco counterparts.

Bancroft Hotel 2680 Bancroft Way, Berkeley ☎ 510/549-1000 or 1-800/549-1002, 🌐 www.bancrofthotel.com. Small hotel – just 22 rooms – with good location and service. Breakfast included. ⑥

The Claremont Resort & Spa 41 Tunnel Rd, Berkeley ☎ 510/843-3000 or 1-800/551-7266, 🌐 www.claremontresort.com. The lap of luxury among Berkeley hotels in a 1915 building. Even the basic rooms are a treat, but you’ll pay for the privilege. Spa sessions start around $100/hour for facials or massages. ⑤

Downtown Berkeley YMCA 2001 Allston Way at Milvia St, Berkeley ☎ 510/848-9622, 🌐 www.bayymca.org. Berkeley’s best bargain accommodation, just one block from the Berkeley BART stop. Rates, starting at around $39 for a single, $50 for a double, include use of gym and pool. ②

Hotel Shattuck Plaza 2086 Allston Way, Berkeley ☎ 510/845-7300, 🌐 www.hotelshattuckplaza.com.

Comfortable, central rooms in a well-restored older hotel. ④

Jack London Inn 444 Embarcadero West, Oakland ☎ 510/444-2032, 🌐 www.jacklondoninn.com. Kitschy 1950s-style motor lodge next to Jack London Square. ⑤

Maya Motel 4715 Telegraph Ave, North Oakland ☎ 510/654-5850. Basic motel but neat enough and better than most in this area, which is within walking distance of trendy Rockridge. ②

Nash Hotel 2045 University Ave, Berkeley ☎ 510/841-1163, 🌐 www.nashhotel.com. No frills rooms with threadbare carpets in Chinese-run hotel. Cheap and central. ③

Waterfront Plaza Hotel 10 Washington St, Oakland ☎ 510/836-3800 or 1-800/729-3638, 🌐 www.waterfrontplaza.com. Plush, modern hotel moored on the best stretch of the Oakland waterfront. ⑦

Oakland

OAKLAND, the workhorse of the Bay Area, is one of the largest ports on the West Coast. It has also been the breeding ground of revolutionary political movements. In the Sixties, the city’s fifty-percent black population found a voice through the militant Black Panthers, and in the Seventies the Symbionese Liberation Army, kidnappers of heiress Patty Hearst, obtained a ransom of free food for the city’s poor. It’s not all hard graft, though: the climate is often sunny and mild when San Francisco is cold and dreary, and there’s great hiking in the redwood- and eucalyptus-covered hills above the city.

There’s not much to see within the city. The major concession to the tourist trade is the waterfront Jack London Square, an aseptic cluster of national chains that have nothing to do with the writer. At the far eastern end of the promenade, however, you will find Heinhold’s First and Last Chance Saloon, a slanting tiny bar built in 1883 from the hull of a whaling ship. Jack London really did drink here, and the collection of yellowed portraits of him on the wall are the only genuine thing about the writer you’ll find on the square. A half-mile north up Broadway from the waterfront, Oakland's restored downtown is anchored by chain stores and the gargantuan open-air City Center complex of offices and fast-food outlets. Beside it, at Broadway and 14th Street, the massive space of Frank Ogawa Plaza is a pleasant place to eat lunch outdoors, while further east on 10th and Oak streets, the Oakland Museum of California (Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8, free every second Sunday of month; ☎ 510/238-2200, 🌐 www.museumca.org) has a good exhibit of California history, including the Beat Generation.

Writer Gertrude Stein was born in Oakland at around the same time as the macho and adventurous London, but she's barely commemorated anywhere. Perhaps it's because it was Stein who wrote "what was the use of me having come from Oakland... there is no there there" – a quote that has haunted the city ever since. Oakland residents argue that there is indeed a there there, notably in the small, trendy community of Rockridge and the lively neighborhoods around Piedmont and Grand avenues, the latter near pleasant Lake Merrit.

Joaquin Miller Park, the most easily accessible of Oakland's hilltop parks, stands above East Oakland (take AC Transit bus #64 from downtown). It was once home to the "Poet of the Sierras," Joaquin Miller, who made his name playing the eccentric frontier American in the salons of 1870s London. His poems weren't exactly acclaimed (his greatest poetic achievement was rhyming "teeth" with "Goethe"), but his prose account of the time he spent with the Modoc Indians near Mount Shasta (see p.1161) remains invaluable. His house, a small white cabin called The Abbey, still survives here, as do the thousands of trees he planted.

Berkeley

BERKELEY (named for the English philosopher-theologian George Berkeley) is dominated by the University of California, one of America's most famous – and infamous – universities. Its grand buildings and thirty thousand students give off an energy that spills south down raucous Telegraph Avenue, where aging hippies peddle rainbow bracelets in front of vegetarian restaurants, music stores, and pizza joints. The very name of Berkeley conjures up images of dissent and it remains a solidly left-wing oasis. Sproul Plaza, in front of the school's entranceway, Sather Gate, is where the Free Speech Movement began, and, as some historians would argue, the experience known as the Sixties. Among the sites of the almost-daily pitched battles of the Sixties and early Seventies, part of the broad campus revolt against the Vietnam War, is the now-quiet People's Park. Today the campus prides itself on its high academic rankings and Nobel-laureate-laden faculty. Stroll the campus's tree-shaded pathways or join the free student-led tours that leave from the visitor services office, 101 University Hall (Mon–Sat 10am, Sun 1pm; ☎ 510/642-5215, 🌐 www.berkeley.edu/visitor).

Telegraph Avenue holds most of the student hangouts, and several excellent bookstores. Older students congregate in Northside, popping down from their woodsy hillside homes to partake of goodies from "Gourmet Ghetto" – the restaurants, delis, and bakeries on Shattuck Avenue like the renowned Chez Panisse (see p.1140). North of here, on the hills, Tilden Regional Park has good trails and a fine rose garden. Along the bay itself, at the Berkeley Marina, you can rent wind-surfing boards and sailboats, or just watch the sun set behind the Golden Gate.

Eating

As befits the birthplace of California cuisine, the East Bay offers a choice of good restaurants. Berkeley is both an upmarket diner's paradise and a student town where you can eat cheaply and well, especially on and around Telegraph Avenue.

Bay Wolf 3853 Piedmont Ave, North Oakland ☎510/655-6004. Chic restaurant whose menu is influenced by the cuisine of Tuscany, Provence, and the Basque country. Entrees like double mustard-tarragon chicken cost mostly over $20.

Café Intermezzo 2442 Telegraph Ave near Haste, Berkeley ☎510/849-4592. Huge sandwiches on homemade bread, even bigger salads, and great coffee.

Cha-Am 1543 Shattuck Ave, North Berkeley ☎510/848-9664. Climb the stairs to this unlikely, always crowded small restaurant for deliciously spicy Thai food at bargain prices.

Cheeseboard Pizza 1512 Shattuck Ave, North Berkeley ☎510/549-3055. Incredibly good gourmet pizza at $2.50 a slice. Irregular hours, but usually open for lunch and dinner Tues–Sun.

 Chez Panisse 1517 Shattuck Ave, North Berkeley ☎510/548-5525. First and still the best of the California cuisine restaurants, overseen by legendary chef Alice Waters. Dinner is served at two sittings, 6pm and 8.30pm; the prix fixe menu costs $50–75 depending on the day of the week. The Café upstairs is comparatively inexpensive. Reservations recommended for the Café, essential for the main restaurant.

Fenton's Creamery 4226 Piedmont Ave, North Oakland ☎510/658-7000. The ultimate old-style ice-cream parlor. Sandwiches, fries, and other snacks are available to offset the sundae buzz. Open until 11pm on weeknights, midnight at weekends.

Cafés and bars

The many bohemian cafés in Berkeley are full from dawn to near midnight with earnest characters wearing their intellects on their sleeves; if you're not after a caffeine fix, you can generally get a glass of beer or wine. For serious drinking you're better off in one of the many bars, particularly in rough-hewn Oakland. Grittier versions of what you'd find in San Francisco, they're mostly blue-collar, convivial, and almost always less expensive.

The Alley 3325 Grand Ave, Oakland ☎510/444-8505. Ramshackle old-timers' piano bar where locals come specifically to sing. Music starts at 9pm. Closed Mon.

Ben 'n' Nick's 5612 College Ave, Rockridge ☎510/933-0327. Lively bar with good taped rock music and tasty pub food.

Café Mediterranean 2475 Telegraph Ave, Berkeley ☎510/841-5634. Berkeley's oldest café, straight out of the Beat Generation archives: beards and berets optional, books de rigueur.

Coffee Mill 3363 Grand Ave, Oakland ☎510/465-4224. This café doubles as an art gallery and often hosts poetry readings, too.

Heinhold's First and Last Chance Saloon 56 Jack London Square, Oakland ☎510/839-6761.

Homemade Café 2454 Sacramento St, Berkeley ☎510/845-1940. Nontraditional California-style Jewish and Mexican breakfasts and lunches – at shared tables when it's crowded.

Juan's Place 941 Carleton St, West Berkeley ☎510/845-6904. The original Berkeley Mexican restaurant, with great food (tons of it) and an interesting mix of people.

La Mediterranée 2936 College Ave, Berkeley ☎510/540-7773. Great Middle Eastern food in a relaxed atmosphere.

La Note 2377 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley ☎510/843-1535. The appropriately sunny, light cuisine of Provence isn't the only flavor you'll find in this petite dining room: students and teachers from the jazz school next door routinely stop in for casual jam sessions.

 Le Cheval 1007 Clay St, Oakland ☎510/763-8595. Downtown Vietnamese place serving exquisitely spiced food at reasonable prices in comfortable surroundings.

Tropix Backyard Café 3814 Piedmont Ave, North Oakland ☎510/653-2444. Large portions of fruity Caribbean delicacies at reasonable prices, with authentic jerk sauce and thirst-quenching mango juice. Outside seating on the patio.

Vik's Chaat Corner 726 Allston Way, West Berkeley ☎510/644-4412. Fantastic lunchtime spot, where you can feast cheaply on authentic South Indian dishes such as masala dosa in a huge, no-nonsense self-service canteen.

Authentic waterfront bar that's hardly changed since around 1900, when Jack London drank here. They've never even bothered to fix the slanted floor that was caused by the 1906 earthquake.

Jupiter 2181 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley ☎510/843-8277. Many, many beers to select from at this local favorite, which offers live jazz on weekends and an outdoor beer garden.

Pacific Coast Brewing Co 906 Washington St, Oakland ☎510/836-2739. The only real micro-brewery downtown, where you can also get decent grub to wash down with your ale.

Pyramid Brewery 901 Gilman St, Berkeley ☎510/528-9880. Great microbrewed beers in a popular pub, with industrial-chic decor and outdoor movie screenings on summer weekends.

Triple Rock Brewery 1920 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley ☎ 510/843-2739. Lively student bar with fine burgers and beers – be sure to check out which two revolving cask-conditioned ales are on.

The White Horse Inn 6551 Telegraph Ave at 66th St, North Oakland ☎ 510/652-3820. Oakland's oldest gay bar – a small, friendly place with mixed dancing for men and women nightly.

Live music and entertainment

Nightlife is where the East Bay really comes into its own. Though traditional clubs are virtually nonexistent, there are plenty of live music venues, from smoky jazz cafés to sweaty R&B dives. Live dance music thrives here; there's also plenty of holdovers still jangling along in poppy, punky guitar bands that echo Green Day and Nirvana.

The range of films screened here is top-notch. Berkeley's Pacific Film Archives at 2575 Bancroft Ave ($8; ☎ 510/642-5249 for tickets, @www.bampfa.berkeley.edu), one of the finest film libraries in California, puts on contemporary international films, plus old favorites. The free East Bay Express has the most comprehensive listings of what's on.

Ashkenaz 1317 San Pablo Ave, Berkeley ☎ 510/525-5054, @www.ashkenaz.com. World music and dance café hosting acts from modern Afro-beat to the best of the Balkans. Kids and under-21s welcome. Cover $5–10.

Blake's on Telegraph 2367 Telegraph Ave, Berkeley ☎ 510/848-0886, @www.blakesontelegaph.com. Funky student club featuring a variety of live acts from blues and soul through rock to punk and rap. $10–20

Freight and Salvage 1111 Addison St, West Berkeley ☎ 510/548-1761, @www.thefreight.org. Singer-songwriters perform in a coffeehouse setting. Cover $5–20.

Gilman Street Project 924 Gilman St, West Berkeley ☎ 510/525-9926, @www.924gilman.org. On the outer edge of the hardcore punk, indie, and experimental scene, this institution helped launch

Green Day and Sleater-Kinney. No alcohol, all ages. Weekends only; cover $5–10.

Starry Plough 3101 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley ☎ 510/841-2082, @www.starryploughpub.com. Lively Irish bar that features bargain-price live rock and country many nights of the week.

Stork Club 2330 Telegraph Ave, Oakland ☎ 510/444-6174, @www.storkcluboakland.com. Presently a favorite with DJs and indie bands, this historic club features a jukebox that specializes in country tunes. Closed Mon; cover $5.

Yoshi's World Class Jazz House 510 Embarcadero W, Oakland ☎ 510/238-9200, @www.yoshis.com. The centerpiece of Oakland's revived Jack London Square, this combination jazz club and sushi bar routinely attracts the biggest names in jazz. Cover $5–40.

CALIFORNIA

The Bay Area

The Peninsula

The city of San Francisco sits at the tip of a five-mile-wide neck of land commonly referred to as the Peninsula. Home of old money and new technology, the Peninsula stretches for fifty miles through relentless suburbia south from San Francisco along the Bay, winding up in the futuristic roadside landscape of the “Silicon Valley” near San Jose.

There was a time when the region was largely agricultural, but the computer boom – spurred by Stanford University in Palo Alto – has replaced the orange groves and fig trees of yesteryear with office complexes and parking lots. Most of the land along the coast – separated from the bayfront sprawl by a ridge of redwood-covered peaks – remains rural; it also contains some of the best beaches in the Bay Area.

Palo Alto

Palo Alto, home of preppy, conservative Stanford University (☎ 650/723-2300, @www.stanford.edu), has become somewhat of a social center for Silicon Valley's nouveau riche and wealthy students, as evidenced by the trendy cafés and chic new restaurants along its main drag, University Avenue. The town doesn't offer a lot in terms of sights other than Spanish Colonial homes, but it's a great place for a lazy stroll and a gourmet meal. Wash down a California-style Greek dish from Evvia, 420 Emerson St (☎650/326-0983), or Left Bank Parisian cuisine from La Cheminée, 530 Bryant St (☎650/328-2722), with a microbrewed beer from the Gordon Biersch Brewery, 640 Emerson St (☎650/323-7723), or a latte from Caffè Verona, 236 Hamilton Ave (☎650/326-9942). Cheaper but still delicious ethnic fare can be enjoyed at the Thai Krung Siam (☎650/322-5900) and Indian Mari-gold (☎650/327-3455) restaurants, located at nos. 423 and 448 University Ave, respectively. Surprisingly affordable rooms are available at the Cardinal Hotel, 235 Hamilton Ave, in the heart of downtown (☎650/323-5101, 🌐www.cardinalhotel.com; shared bath ③, private bath ④).

San Jose

Burt Bacharach could easily find SAN JOSE today by heading south from San Francisco and following the heat and smog that collects below the Bay. Although one of the fastest-growing cities in California, it is not strong on identity – though in area and population it's close to twice the size of San Francisco. Sitting at the southern end of the peninsula, San Jose has in the past 25 years emerged as the civic heart of Silicon Valley, surrounded by miles of faceless high-tech industrial parks where the next generations of computers are designed and built. Ironically, it's also acknowledged as the first city in California, though the only sign of this is the unremarkable eighteenth-century Mission Santa Clara de Asis, on the pleasant campus of the Jesuit-run Santa Clara University.

The area's most famous landmark is the Winchester Mystery House, 525 S Winchester Blvd, just off I-280 near Hwy-17 (mid-Oct to April daily 9am–5pm; May to early June & Sept to mid-Oct Sun–Thurs 9am–5pm, Fri & Sat 9am–7pm; mid-June to Aug daily 9am–7pm; tours $18.95–26.95; ☎408/247-2000, 🌐www.winchestermysteryhouse.com). Sarah Winchester, heiress to the Winchester rifle fortune, was convinced upon her husband's death in 1884 that he had been taken by the spirits of men killed with Winchester rifles, and believed that unless a room was built for each of the spirits, the same fate would befall her. The sound of hammers never ceased as work on the mansion went on 24 hours a day for the next thirty years – stairs lead nowhere, windows open on to solid brick. Today it's a relentlessly hyped commercial cash cow, but is still worth a detour. The Rosicrucian Museum, 1342 Naglee Ave (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm; $9; ☎408/947-3636, 🌐www.rosicrucian.org), houses a brilliant collection of Assyrian and Babylonian artifacts, while the revamped Tech Museum of Innovation (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; $8; ☎408/294-8224, 🌐www.thetech.org), downtown at 201 S Market St, contains hands-on displays of high-tech engineering as well as an IMAX theater (one show included in admission; extra show $4).

San Jose's visitor center is next to the huge Convention Center at 408 Almaden Blvd (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎408/295-9600 or 1-800/726-5673, 🌐www.sanjose.org), though it is geared more to business people than travelers. Downtown accommodation is grossly overpriced, so it's best to try further out. Options include the Valley Inn, 2155 The Alameda (☎408/241-8500, 🌐www.valleyinnsanjose.com; ③), and the Howard Johnson Express, 1215 S 1st St (☎408/280-5300 or 1-800/509-7666, 🌐www.hojo.com; ③). Good old-fashioned American food is dished up at Original Joe's, 301 S First St (☎408/292-7030). Grab a stool at the counter or settle into one of the comfy booths at this San Jose institution, where $10 goes a long way (open 11am–1am). For fresh coffee and pastries, head to Café Matisse, 371 S 1st St (☎408/298-7788).

The coast

The coastline of the Peninsula south from San Francisco is a world away from the valley of the inland: mostly undeveloped, with a few small towns, and countless beaches that run 75 miles down to the mellow cities of Santa Cruz and Capitola. Just south of San Francisco, Hwy-1 hugs the precipitous cliffs of Devil's Slide, passing the decent mini-resort of Pacifica en route to the clothing-optional sands of Gray Whale Cove State Beach (daily 8am–sunset; ☎ 650/728-5336, 🌐 www.parks.ca.gov). Despite the name, it's not an especially great place to look for migrating gray whales, but there is a stairway from the bus stop down to a fine strand of sand. Two miles further on Hwy-1, the red-roofed buildings of the 1875 Point Montara Lighthouse, set among the windswept Monterey pine trees at the top of a steep cliff, have been converted into a youth hostel (☎ 650/728-7177, 🌐 www.norcalhostels.org; dorm $19–21; 🍷). Just beyond the hostel, down California Street, the Fitzgerald Marine Reserve (☎ 650/728-3584; free) has three miles of diverse oceanic habitat, peaceful trails, and, at low tide, the best tidal pools. But continue a tiny bit further for the historic Moss Beach Distillery (☎ 650/728-5595), a great place to grab a snack and a beer on its windswept patio – they provide enormous blankets to help brave the fog.

A few miles further south on Hwy-1 is Princeton-by-the-Sea, where the waterfront Barbara's Fish Trap (☎ 650/728-7049) is a fine spot for good-value seafood, followed by the excellent strand of Miramar, the unlikely location of the Douglass Beach House (☎ 650/726-4143, 🌐 www.bachddsoc.org), an informal jazz pub that attracts some big names. The next town, constantly expanding Half Moon Bay, offers camping behind its eponymous state beach (☎ 650/726-8820; $20), as well as fancier accommodation such as the Old Thyme Inn, 779 Main St (☎ 650/726-1616 or 1-800/720-4277, 🌐 www.oldthymeinn.com; 🍷), and a few eating options – try Chateau des Fleurs, 523 Church St (☎ 650/712-8837), a small French place. Gas up here; fuel stations are rare for the next fifty miles to Santa Cruz.

Marin County

Across the Golden Gate from San Francisco, Marin County is an unabashed introduction to Californian self-indulgence: a pleasure zone of conspicuous luxury and abundant natural beauty, with sunshine or fog, sandy beaches, high mountains, and thick redwood forests. Though in the past the region served as logging headquarters, the county is now one of the wealthiest in the US, attracting young professionals to its swanky waterside towns.

The modern ferries that travel across the bay from San Francisco can make a great start to a day out. Boats to the chic bayside settlement of Sausalito leave from the Ferry Building on the Embarcadero, run by Golden Gate Ferry (Mon–Fri 7.40am–7.55pm, frequency varies; reduced timetable at weekends; $6.75 each way; ☎ 415/455-2000, 🌐 www.goldengate.org) or Pier 41 at Fisherman's Wharf, run by Blue & Gold Fleet ferries (6–7 trips daily; $8.50 each way; ☎ 415/705-8200, 🌐 www.blueandgoldfleet.com). Biking over here means a beautiful ride over the Golden Gate Bridge (unless there's fog) and allows you to explore the headlands freely. Golden Gate Ferries accommodate up to 25 bikes, first-come, first-served.

Across the Golden Gate: the Marin Headlands

The largely undeveloped Marin Headlands, across the Golden Gate Bridge from San Francisco, afford some of the most impressive views of the bridge and the city behind. The coastline is much more rugged than it is on the San Francisco side, and it makes a great place for an isolated clifftop scramble among the concrete remains of old forts and gun emplacements. Heading west on Bunker Hill Road takes you up to the brink of the headlands before the road snakes down to Fort Barry and wide, sandy Rodeo Beach, from which numerous hiking trails branch out. Check in at the Marin Headlands Visitor Center (daily 9.30am–4.30pm; ☎415/331-1540) above Rodeo Lagoon for free maps. The largest of the fort's old buildings has been converted into the spacious but homey HI-Marin Headlands hostel (☎415/331-2777 or 1-800/979-4776 ext 168, 🌐www.norcalhostels.org; dorm $20; 🍷), an excellent base for more extended explorations of the inland ridges and valleys.

Sausalito

Attractive, smug little SAUSALITO, along the Bay below US-101, was once a gritty community of fishermen and sea traders, full of bars and bordellos. Now exclusive restaurants and pricey boutiques line its picturesque waterfront promenade, and expensive, quirky houses climb the overgrown cliffs above Bridgeway Avenue, the main road and bus route through town. Ferries from San Francisco arrive next to the Sausalito Yacht Club in the town center. If you have sailing experience, split the daily rental fee of a four- to ten-person sailboat at Cass's Marina, 1702 Bridgeway Ave (rates from $124/half-day; ☎415/332-6789, 🌐www.cassmarina.com).

Aside from walking, shopping, and sucking in the sea air, Sausalito has a one-of-a-kind exhibit in the Bay Model Visitor Center, 2100 Bridgeway (Tues–Sat 9am–4pm; donation; ☎415/332-3870, 🌐www.baymodel.org), where elevated walkways in a huge building lead you around a scale model of the entire bay, surrounding deltas, and its aquatic inhabitants, offering insight on the enormity and diversity of this area.

If you decide to stay, Casa Madrona at 801 Bridgeway Ave (☎415/332-0502 or 1-800/288-0502, 🌐www.casamadrona.com; 🍷) is a deluxe hotel that climbs up the hill opposite the bay and also houses Mikayla, a delectable seafood restaurant (☎415/331-5888). For less expensive food, head for Tommy's Wok, 3001 Bridgeway Ave (☎415/332-1683), a largely organic Chinese restaurant, or try terrific, low-cost curries at Sartaj India Cafe, 43 Caledonia St (☎415/332-7103). The Bar With No Name, 757 Bridgeway Ave (☎415/332-1392), is an ex-haunt of the Beats hosting frequent live jazz.

Mount Tamalpais and Muir Woods

Mount Tamalpais dominates the skyline of the Marin peninsula, looming over the cool canyons of the rest of the county and dividing it into two distinct parts: the wild western slopes above the Pacific Coast and the increasingly suburban communities along the calmer bay frontage. The Panoramic Highway branches off from Hwy-1 along the crest above Mill Valley, taking ten miles to reach the center of Mount Tamalpais State Park (☎415/388-2070, 🌐www.mtia.net), which has some thirty miles of hiking trails and many campgrounds. While most of the redwood trees that once covered its slopes have long since been chopped down to build San Francisco's Victorian houses, one towering grove remains, protected as the Muir Woods National Monument (daily 8am–sunset; $3; ☎415/388-2595, 🌐www.nps.gov/muwo). It's a tranquil and majestic spot, with sunlight filtering three hundred feet down from the treetops to the laurel- and fern-covered canyon below. Being so close to San Francisco, Muir Woods is a popular target, and the paved trails nearest the car park are often packed with coach-tour hordes; more secluded hiking paths include the Matt Davis Trail, leading south to Stinson Beach and north to Mount Tamalpais.

Mill Valley

From the east peak of Mount Tamalpais, a quick two-mile downhill hike follows the Temelpa Trail through velvety shrubs of chaparral to the town of MILL VALLEY, the oldest and most enticing of the inland towns of Marin County. For many years the town has made a healthy living out of tourism and October's annual Mill Valley Film Festival, a world-class event that draws Bay Area stars and up-and-coming directors alike.

The restored town centers on the redwood-shaded square of the Depot Bookstore and Café (☎415/383-2665), a popular bookstore, café, and meeting place at 87 Throckmorton Ave. The Chamber of Commerce is next door at 85 Throckmorton Ave (Mon–Fri 10am–noon and 1–4pm; ☎415/388-9700, 🌐www.millvalley.org). Far and away the best place to stay is the Mill Valley Inn, 165 Throckmorton Ave (☎415/389-6608 or 1-800/595-2100, 🌐www.millvalleyinn.com; 📍), a gorgeous European-style inn with elegant rooms and two private cottages. Piazza D'Angelo, at 22 Miller Ave (☎415/388-2000), has delicious pizzas and pastas, while the Sunnyside Café, 31 Sunnyside Ave (☎415/388-5260), claims “the customers are rarely right” but serves large, affordable breakfasts and lunches nonetheless. Sweetwater, at 153 Throckmorton Ave (☎415/388-2820, 🌐www.sweetwatersaloon.com), is a comfortable saloon that doubles as Marin's prime live music venue, with gigs ranging from jazz and blues all-stars to Jefferson Airplane survivors.

Point Reyes National Seashore

The westernmost tip of Marin County comes at the end of the Point Reyes National Seashore, a near-island of wilderness bordered on three sides by over fifty miles of isolated coastline – pine forests and sunny meadows hemmed in by rocky cliffs and sandy, windswept beaches. This wing-shaped landmass is a rogue piece of the earth's crust that has been drifting steadily northward along the San Andreas Fault, having started out some six million years ago as a suburb of Los Angeles. When the great earthquake of 1906 shattered San Francisco, the land here, at the epicenter, shifted over sixteen feet in an instant, though damage was confined to a few skewed cattle fences.

The Bear Valley visitor center (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 8am–5pm; ☎415/464-5100, 🌐www.nps.gov/pore), two miles southwest of Point Reyes Station in Olema, has engaging displays on local geology and natural history, plus details of hiking trails. Just to the north, Limantour Road heads six miles west to the HI-Point Reyes hostel (closed 10am–4.30pm; ☎415/663-8811, 🌐www.norcalhostels.org; 📍) in an old ranch house. Nearby Limantour Beach is good (and cold) for swimming.

Eight miles west of the hamlet of Inverness, a small road leads down to Drake's Beach, the presumed landing spot of Sir Francis Drake in 1579. Appropriately, the coastline resembles the southern coast of England – cold, wet, and windy, with chalk-white cliffs rising above the wide sandy beach. The road continues southwest another four miles to the very tip of Point Reyes, where a precarious-looking lighthouse (Thurs–Sun 10am–4.30pm, tours first and third Sat of each month; free; ☎415/669-1534) stands firm against the crashing surf. The bluffs here are excellent for watching sea lions and, from mid-March to April and late December to early February, migrating gray whales.

The Gold Country

More than 150 years before techies from all over the world rushed to California in search of Silicon gold, rough-and-ready forty-niners invaded the GOLD COUNTRY of the Sierra Nevada, about 150 miles east of San Francisco, in search of the real thing. The area ranges from the foothills near Yosemite to the deep gorge of the Yuba River two hundred miles north, with Sacramento as its largest city. Many of the mining camps that sprang up around the Gold Country vanished as quickly as they appeared, but about half still survive. Some are bustling resorts, standing on the banks of whitewater rivers in the midst of thick pine forests; others are just eerie ghost towns, all but abandoned on the grassy rolling hills. Most of the mountainous forests along the Sierra crest are preserved as near-pristine wilderness, with excellent hiking, camping, and backpacking. There's also great skiing in winter, around the mountainous rim of Lake Tahoe on the border between California and Nevada, aglow under the bright lights of the nightclubs and casinos that line its southeastern shore.

Sacramento

California's state capital, SACRAMENTO, in the flatlands of the Central Valley, was founded in 1839 by the Swiss John Sutter. He worked hard for ten years to build a busy trading center and cattle ranch, only to be thwarted by the discovery of gold at a nearby sawmill in 1848. His workers quit their jobs to go prospecting, and thousands more flocked to the goldfields of the Central Mother Lode, without any respect for Sutter's claims to the land. Sacramento became the main supply point for the miners, and remained important as the western headquarters of the transcontinental railroad. Flashy office towers and hotel complexes have now sprung from its rather suburban streetscape, enlivening the flat grid of leafy, tree-lined blocks.

There's not a great deal to see, though the wharves, warehouses, saloons, and stores of the historic core along the riverfront have been restored and converted into the touristy shops and restaurants of Old Sacramento. On the northern edge of the old town, the California State Railroad Museum (daily 10am–5pm; $8; ☎ 916/445-6645, @ www.csrmm.org) brings together a range of lavishly restored 1860s locomotives, with “cow-catcher” front grilles and bulbous smokestacks.

A mile or so east of downtown, the dome of the state capitol stands proudly in a spacious green park two blocks south of K Street Mall. Recently restored to its original elegance, the luxurious building brims over with finely crafted details. Although you're free to walk around, you'll see a lot more on one of the free hourly tours (daily 9am–5pm). Further east at 27th and L streets, Sutter's Fort State Historic Park (daily 10am–5pm; $3; ☎ 916/445-4422) is a re-creation of Sacramento's original settlement. An adobe house displays relics from the Gold Rush, and on summer weekends costumed volunteers act out scenes from the 1850s.

Practicalities

Most tourists arrive in Sacramento by car, taking a logical break from driving on Rte-80. Trains come in at 4th and I streets, near Old Sacramento, while Greyhound buses arrive at 7th and L streets. The airport is twelve miles northwest of the city: SuperShuttle Sacramento vans ($13; ☎ 1-800/258-3826, @ www.supershuttle.com) take you directly to your downtown destination.

Sacramento's most accessible visitor information center is at 1102 2nd St (daily 10am–5pm; ☎916/442-7644, 🌐www.discovergold.org). Besides the central HI-Sacramento Hostel, 900 H St (☎916/443-1691, 🌐www.norcalhostels.org; dorm $20–23, ②), there are plenty of places to stay within walking distance of the city center – the best value being the Econo Lodge, 711 16th St (☎916/443-6631 or 1-800/553-2666, 🌐www.econolodge.com; ②), while a fancier option is Amber House B&B (☎916/444-8085 or 1-800/755-6526, 🌐www.amberhouse.com; ③). Further away, the Vizcaya Mansion, 2019 21st St (☎916/455-5243 or 1-800/456-2019, 🌐www.sterlinghotels.com; ⑥), offers historic luxury in a quiet residential area. Paesano's, at 1806 Capitol Ave (☎916/447-8646), is a deservedly popular pizza restaurant; Tapa the World, at 2115 J St (☎916/442-4353), serves delicious tapas until midnight, often accompanied by live flamenco guitar; and Centro Cocina Mexicana, 454 28th St near J Street (☎916/442-2552), offers innovative Californian-Mexican fusion cuisine. For alternative live music try Old Ironsides, 1901 10th St (☎916/443-9751). Pick up the free weekly Sacramento News & Review for more entertainment details.

The Mines

In the romantically rugged landscape of the Gold Country, overshadowed by the 10,000ft granite peaks of the Sierra Nevada, fast-flowing rivers cascade through steeply panned canyons. During the fall, the flaming reds and golds of poplars and sugar maples stand out against an evergreen background of pine and fir. The camps of the southern mines were the liveliest and most uproarious of all the Gold Rush settlements, and inspired most of the popular images of the era: Wild West towns full of gambling halls, saloons, and gunfights in the streets. Freebooting prospectors in these “placer” mines sometimes panned for nuggets of gold in the streams and rivers; further north, the diggings were far richer and more successful, but the gold was (and still is) buried deep underground, and had to be pounded out of hardrock ore.

Sonora, Columbia, Jamestown, and Mariposa

The center of the southern mining district is SONORA, set on steep ravines roughly a hundred miles east of San Francisco. This friendly and animated logging town boasts Victorian houses and false-fronted buildings on its main Washington Street. The Tuolumne County Visitors Bureau, 542 West Stockton Rd off Hwy-49 (Apr–Sep Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 10am–5pm; Oct–Mar Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 10am–6pm; ☎209/533-4420 or 1-800/446-1333, 🌐www.thegreatunfenced.com), is the best source of information.

Sonora's onetime arch-rival, COLUMBIA, three miles north on Parrots Ferry Road, is now a ghost town (and a state historic park), with a carefully restored Main Street that gives an excellent – if slightly contrived – idea of what Gold Rush life might have been like. In 1854 it was California's second largest city, and it missed becoming the state capital by two votes – just as well, since by 1870 the gold had run out and the town was abandoned.

The Railtown 1897 State Historic Park (daily Apr–Oct 9.30am–4.30pm, Nov–Mar 10am–3pm; free, tours $2; ☎209/984-3953, 🌐www.railtown1897.org), on the corner of 5th and Reservoir streets along the way to Sonora, in JAMESTOWN, holds an impressive collection of old steam trains including the one used in High Noon and offers rides some weekends. Further south, after a breathtaking drive over the Don Pedro Lake and Merced River, is MARIPOSA, gateway to Yosemite and one of the last Gold Rush towns on Hwy-49. Its California State Mining and Mineral Museum, a mile or so south of the historic downtown (May–Sept daily 10am–6pm; Oct–April Wed–Mon 10am–4pm; $2; ☎209/742-7625), has a working 1860s stamp mill model and hundreds of mineral samples.

Practicalities

In downtown Columbia, the best place to stay is right on the historic Main Street in the balconied City Hotel (☎209/532-1479 or 1-800/532-1479, 🌐www.cityhotel.com; 📍); in Sonora, Sterling Gardens is a comfortable B&B with four guestrooms among ten acres at 18047 Lime Kiln Rd (☎209/533-9300, 🌐www.sterlinggardens.com; 📍), while the well-placed Gunn House Hotel (☎209/532-3421, 🌐www.gunnhousehotel.com; 📍) is right in town at 286 S Washington St; motels on Hwy-49 between Sonora and Jamestown include the good-value Miner's Motel (☎209/532-7850 or 1-800/451-4176; 📍). Jamestown's Main Street is lined by old Gold Rush hotels such as the fantastic Jamestown Hotel (☎209/984-3902 or 1-800/205-4901, 🌐www.jamestownhotel.com; 📍), which boasts an impressive restaurant while being close to other good options, including Morelia Mexican (☎209/984-1432), across the street. Sonora has a wide variety of places to eat along Washington Street: Alfredo's at no. 123 (☎209/532-8332) is a local favorite for Mexican food, and The Old Stan, at no. 177 (☎209/536-9598), has tapas and Mediterranean dishes.

Grass Valley, Nevada City, and Downieville

The compact communities of GRASS VALLEY and NEVADA CITY, four miles apart in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, were the most prosperous and substantial of the gold-mining towns. Since the 1960s, artists and craftspeople have settled in the elaborate Victorian homes of the surrounding hills and gorges. In Grass Valley, the North Star Mining Museum (May–Oct daily 10am–5pm; donation; ☎530/273-4255) at the south end of Mill Street is housed in what used to be the power station for the North Star Mine. Its giant water-driven Pelton wheel, fitted with a hundred or so iron buckets, once powered the drills and hoists of the mine. Dioramas show the day-to-day working life of the miners, three-quarters of whom had emigrated here from the depressed tin mines of Cornwall (bringing the Cornish pasty with them).

The last mine in California to shut down was its richest, the Empire Mine (May–Aug 9am–6pm; Sept–April 10am–5pm; $3; ☎530/273-8522, 🌐www.empiremine.org), now preserved as a state park in the pine forests a mile southeast of Grass Valley off Rte-49. It closed in 1956, after more than six million ounces of gold had been recovered, when the cost of getting the gold out of the ground exceeded $35 an ounce, which was the government-controlled price at the time. Machinery sold off when the mine closed has been replaced from other disused workings and now augments the excellent and very informative museum at the entrance.

The excellent Grass Valley visitor center at 248 Mill St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–3pm; ☎530/273-4667 or 1-800/655-4667, 🌐www.grassvalleychamber.com) is housed in a replica of the original home of Lola Montez, an Irish entertainer and former mistress of Ludwig of Bavaria, who retired here after touring America with her provocative “Spider Dance” and kept a grizzly bear in her front yard.

Towns don’t get much quainter than Nevada City. Amid all its shops and restaurants, the lacy-balconied and bell-towered Old Firehouse at 214 Main St houses a small museum of social history of the region (May–Oct daily 11am–4pm; Nov–April Fri–Sun noon–3pm; donation).

Both towns are very compact and connected every thirty minutes by the Gold Country Stage minibus (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 9.15am–5.30pm; $1, $2 for a day pass; ☎ 530/477-0103). These also go to Auburn for connections to the five daily Amtrak Thruway buses from Sacramento and Truckee.

North on Rte-49, an hour’s drive from Nevada City, you’ll head into the most rugged and beautiful part of the Gold Country, where waterfalls tumble over black rocks bordered by pines and maples. DOWNIEVILLE is in the midst of an idyllic setting and particularly popular with mountain bikers; it abuts an extensive trail system with moderate to extreme bike trails. Oddly, as the only mining camp to have ever hanged a woman, the town has restored a gallows to commemorate that grisly passage of its history.

Accommodation

Accommodation in the revamped old Gold Rush hotels doesn’t come cheap, but if you can afford to splash out on a B&B, Nevada City has some excellent options.

Holbrooke Hotel 212 W Main St, Grass Valley ☎ 530/273-1353 or 1-800/933-7077, @ www.holbrooke.com. Historic hotel, once visited by Mark Twain, and right in the center of town. Breakfast included. 4

Holiday Lodge 1221 E Main St, Grass Valley ☎ 530/273-4406 or 1-800/742-7125. Comfortable, basic accommodation with perks such as a swimming pool, free breakfast, and free local calls. 3

com. Oozing faded glory, this historic landmark is the oldest continuously operating hotel in the West and still provides decent rooms

Outside Inn 575 E Broad St, Nevada City ☎ 530/265-2233, @ www.outsideinn.com. Quiet, 1940s motel with swimming pool, and only a 10min walk from the center of town. 3

Swan-Levine House 328 S Church St, Grass Valley ☎ 530/272-1873, @ www.swanlevinehouse.com. Attractively decorated, sunny rooms in an old Victorian hospital run by two artists. 4–5

Eating and drinking

Both Grass Valley and Nevada City have good places to eat, as well as many bars and saloons, where you’ll often be treated to free live music.

Café Mekka 237 Commercial St, Nevada City ☎ 530/478-1517. Relaxed coffeeshop, popular with arty locals.

Cirino’s 309 Broad St, Nevada City ☎ 530/265-2246. Casual Italian place serving filling deli sandwiches and a range of tasty entrees.

Marshall’s Pasties 203 Mill St, Grass Valley ☎ 530/272-2844. Stunning array of freshly filled Cornish-style pasties. Takeout only.

Sopa Thai 312 Commercial St, Nevada City ☎ 530/470-0101. Beautifully decorated place that dishes up authentic Siamese fare and has become a local favorite.

Swiss House 535 Mill St, Grass Valley ☎ 530/273-8272. The central European decor seems out of place here but the hearty food such as schnitzel and apple strudel will fill you up.

Lake Tahoe

One of the highest, deepest, cleanest, and coldest lakes in the world, Lake Tahoe is perched high above the Gold Country in an alpine bowl of forested granite peaks. Longer than the English Channel is wide, and more than a thousand feet deep, it's so cold that perfectly preserved cowboys who drowned over a century ago have been recovered from its depths. The lake borders Nevada as well and lures weekenders with sunny beaches in the summer, snow-covered slopes in the winter, and bustling casinos year-round.

Arrival, information, and getting around

The nearest you can get to Lake Tahoe on Greyhound or Amtrak from San Francisco and Sacramento is Truckee, fifteen miles north (see p.1153). From there, local TART buses (☎ 530/581-3922 or 1-800/736-6365, 🌐 www.laketahoetransit.com) run to Tahoe City and around but, frustratingly, there are only onward services to South Lake Tahoe in the summer months. Transport around the south shore is provided by BlueGo buses and trolleys (☎ 530/541-7149, 🌐 www.bluego.org). There are shuttles from both ends of the lake to Reno airport: North Lake Tahoe Express (☎ 530/541-4892, 🌐 www.laketahoetransit.com) and South Lake Tahoe Express (☎ 1-866/898-2463, 🌐 www.southtahoexpress.com); prices vary according to the number of passengers. You can rent bicycles from numerous outlets, including the Mountain Sports Center (☎ 530/542-6584, 🌐 www.camprichardson.com) in South Lake Tahoe's Camp Richardson Resort, and from Olympic Bike Shop (☎ 530/581-2500) in Tahoe City.

There are four official visitor centers around the lake: in California at 3066 US-50, South Lake Tahoe (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎ 530/544-5050 or 1-800/288-2463, 🌐 www.tahoeinfo.com), and 300 North Lake Blvd, Tahoe City (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 530/581-6900, 🌐 www.tahoeinfo.org); and in Nevada at 969 Tahoe Blvd, Incline Village (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 775/832-1606, 🌐 www.gotahoe.com), and at 168 Hwy-50 in Stateline (☎ 775/588-4591, 🌐 www.tahoechamber.org).

Accommodation

There are dozens of bargain motels along the Southshore, though weekday rates from $50 can easily more than double on weekends and in summer. In Tahoe City, there are fewer budget choices. If you're stuck, any of the visitor centers will try to help.

Doug's Mellow Mountain Retreat 3787 Forest Ave, South Lake Tahoe ☎ 530/544-8065, 🌐 www.hostelz.com. Basic hostel-style accommodation in essentially Doug's home, with cooking facilities and cheap bike rental. $25 per person. ①

Inn at Heavenly 1261 Ski Run Blvd ☎ 530/544-4244 or 1-800/692-2246, 🌐 www.innatheavenly.com. Friendly inn with cozy wood-paneled rooms and some huge cabins. Continental breakfast and use of spa included in rates. ⑤

River Ranch Hwy-89 and Alpine Meadows Rd, Tahoe City ☎ 530/583-4264 or 1-800/535-9900, 🌐 www.riverranchlodge.com. Historic lodge on the Truckee River with a casual atmosphere and one of the lake's best restaurants. ④

Royal Valhalla 4104 Lakeshore Blvd, South Lake Tahoe ☎ 530/544-2233 or 1-800/999-4104, 🌐 www.tahoeroyalvalhalla.com. Not exactly regal but one of the better motels, with balconies overlooking the lake and kitchenettes. ④

Stardust Lodge 4061 Lake Tahoe Blvd, South Lake Tahoe ☎ 530/544-5211 or 1-800/262-5077, 🌐 www.stardust-tahoe.com. Simple suites and guestrooms with kitchenettes, and an easy walk to the casinos and the lake. ④

Tahoe City Inn 790 North Lake Blvd, Tahoe City ☎ 530/581-3333 or 1-800/800-8246, 🌐 www.tahoeinn.com. The basic, centrally located rooms can cost as little as $50 midweek in the low season. ③

South Lake Tahoe and around

In South Lake Tahoe, the lakeside's largest community, ranks of restaurants, modest motels, and pine-bound cottages stand cheek by jowl with the high-rise gambling dens of Stateline, just across the border in Nevada. If you happen to lose your money at the tables and slot machines, you can always explore the beautiful hiking trails, parks, and beaches in the surrounding area.

The Heavenly Gondola, in the heart of town, rises to an elevation of 9136ft (summer daily 10am–5pm; $24, kids $15; see box p.1152). From there, enjoy breathtaking views from East Peak Lake, East Peak Lookout, or Sky Meadows. Hikes are graded from easy to strenuous. Closer to the water, the prettiest part of the lake is along the southwest shore, at Emerald Bay State Park, ten miles from South Lake Tahoe, which has a number of good shoreline campgrounds. A mile from the parking lot, Vikingsholm is a reproduction of a Viking castle, built as a summer home in 1929 and open for hourly tours (summer daily 10am–4pm; $6). In Sugar Pine Point State Park, two miles north, the huge Ehrman Mansion (daily 11am–4pm; $6) is decorated in Thirties-era furnishings; the extensive lakefront grounds were used as a location in The Godfather II.

The rest of the 75-mile drive is lovely enough, though certainly not the “most beautiful drive in America,” as one locally produced brochure touts. Another way to see the lake is to take a paddlewheel boat cruise on the MS Dixie II or Tahoe Queen, from Zephyr Cove (timetable varies; $33–61, kids $9–31; ☎ 775/589-4906, 🌐 www.zephyrcove.com), reached on a free shuttle from South Lake Tahoe. You can sign up for other boat tours through one of the casinos.

Tahoe City

Tahoe City, the hub on the lake's northwestern shore manages to retain a more relaxed small-town attitude than South Lake Tahoe. Hwy-89 meets Hwy-28 at Lake Tahoe's only outlet, the Truckee River. At the mouth of the river, the Gatekeeper's Museum (May to mid-June Wed–Sun 11am–5pm; mid-June to mid-Oct daily 11am–5pm; $2), contains a well-presented hodgepodge of artifacts from the nineteenth century, and a good collection of native basketware. Rafting down the Truckee is a common activity in summer, with raft rental companies clustered at the junction of highways 28 and 89.

A couple of miles south along Hwy-89, 500 yards past the Kaspian picnic grounds, hike ten minutes up the unmarked trail to the top of Eagle Rock for amazing panoramic views of the royal-blue lake. Several miles further along the highway is Chamber's Beach, which in summer is as popular for sunning and swimming as it is for socializing.

Squaw Valley, the site of the 1960 Winter Olympics, is situated five miles west of Tahoe City off of Hwy-89, although the original facilities (except the flame and the Olympic rings) are now swamped by the rampant development that has made this California's largest ski resort (see box, p.1152).

Eating and drinking

Fast food and casino all-you-care-to-eat buffets are standard in Southshore, while Tahoe City has a better range of moderately priced restaurants and a couple of good bars, all within a few minutes of each other.

Bridgetender Bar & Grill 30 West Lake Blvd, Tahoe City ☎ 530/583-3342. Friendly rustic bar with good music, a fine range of beers and huge portions of ribs, burgers, etc.

Lakehouse Pizza 120 Grove St, Tahoe City ☎ 530/583-2222. Tahoe's best place for pizza is also a popular spot for cocktails on the lake at sundown.

Pierce Street Annex in the back of the Safeway complex, Tahoe City ☎ 530/583-5800. The place for drinking and dancing on the Northshore, but with sometimes-cheesy music. Popular with the younger Tahoe City crowd.

Red Hut Waffle Shop 2749 Lake Tahoe Blvd, South Lake Tahoe ☎ 530/541-9024. Ever-popular coffee shop, justifiably crowded on early winter mornings with carbo-loading skiers.

River Ranch Hwy-89 and Alpine Meadows Rd, Tahoe City ☎ 530/583-4264 or 1-800/535-9900. Historic lodge on the Truckee River serving good New American cuisine in a relaxed atmosphere.

Sprouts 3123 Lake Tahoe Blvd near Alameda Ave, South Lake Tahoe ☎ 530/541-6969. Almost, but not completely, vegetarian, with good organic sandwiches, burritos, and smoothies.

Lake Tahoe skiing

Lake Tahoe has some of the best downhill skiing in North America, and its larger resorts rival their Rocky Mountain counterparts. Although skiing is not cheap – the largest ski areas charge at least $50 for a single day – many resorts offer decent-value rental/lift ticket/lesson packages or multiday discounts. Snowboarding has caught on in a big way, and the same resorts that once scoffed at the sport have now installed massive snow parks with radical half-pipes and jumps. Cross-country skiing is also popular. Most resorts rent skis for about $30 and snowboards for $35 or more.

Downhill skiing

Heavenly reachable by shuttle from Southshore, two miles from the casinos, or via the gondola on Hwy-50, next to the state line (☎ 775/586-7000 or 1-800/243-2836, @www.skiheavenly.com). Prime location and sheer scale (85 runs and 29 lifts) make this one of the lake's most frequented resorts, and it also offers the highest vertical skiing served by a lift. Lift tickets are $65.

Homewood five miles south of Tahoe City on Hwy-89 (☎ 530/525-2992 or 1-877/525-7669, @www.skihomewood.com). Smaller and more relaxed than its massive resort neighbors, Homewood boasts some surprisingly good skiing with unbeatable views of the lake and reasonable prices. Lift tickets go for $45, and drop as low as $27 mid-week.

Kirkwood Ski Resort 35 miles south of South Lake Tahoe on Hwy-88 (☎ 209/258-6000, @www.kirkwood.com). A bit out of the way if you're in Tahoe but worth the trip as a destination in itself for its recreational possibilities, including excellent hiking and biking trails. Lift tickets are $60.

Squaw Valley USA Squaw Valley Rd, halfway between Truckee and Tahoe City (☎ 530/583-6955 or 1-888/766-9321, @www.squaw.com). Thirty-three lifts service over four thousand acres of unbeatable terrain at the site of the 1960 Winter Olympics. Non-skiers can take the cable lift ($19) and use the ice-skating/swimming pool complex for the day. Lift tickets are $62.

Cross-country skiing

Royal Gorge in Soda Springs, ten miles west of Truckee (☎ 530/426-3871 or 1-800/666-3871, @www.royalgorge.com). The largest and best of Tahoe's cross-country resorts has 204 miles of groomed trails. Trail fee $28, rental fee $19.50, and lessons (group $25, private $40).

Spooner Lake in Nevada at the intersection of Hwy-50 and Hwy-28 (☎ 775/749-5349, @www.spoonerlake.com). The closest cross-country resort to South Lake Tahoe has lake views and 63 miles of groomed trails. Trail fee $20, rental fee $18.50, and lessons $42.50, including pass and rental.

Sunnyside 1850 West Lake Blvd, near Tahoe City ☎ 530/583-7200. One of the most popular places to have cocktails at sunset on the deck overlooking the lake.

Tahoe House Bakery Hwy-89, half a mile south of Hwy-28, Tahoe City ☎ 530/583-1377. Family-style bakery and deli, popular with locals.

Taj Mahal 3838 Lake Tahoe Blvd, in the Quality Inn, South Lake Tahoe ☎ 530/541-6495. Basic Indian fare with a daily eleven-dish lunch buffet.

Tep's Villa Roma 3450 Hwy-50, South Lake Tahoe ☎ 530/541-8227. Longstanding Southshore institution that serves large portions of hearty Italian food.

Truckee and Donner Lake

Fifteen miles north of Tahoe City, the pleasant town of TRUCKEE is not only a jumping off point for Lake Tahoe, but a developing tourist destination in its own right. It is well placed for outdoor excursions and it retains a fair amount of nineteenth-century wooden architecture along its main drag, Donner Pass Road, still referred to as Commercial Row by locals. This strip holds a good choice of eating and drinking joints, such as Dragonfly (☎ 530/587-0557), a Pacific Rim and Asian fusion restaurant at no. 10118, and OB's (☎ 530/587-4164), a relaxed pub with decent food at no. 10046. Around the corner at 10007 Bridge St, the Truckee Hotel (☎ 530/587-4444 or 1-800/659-6921, 🌐 www.thetruckeehotel.com; Ⓢ) is a central and inexpensive place to stay. The Chamber of Commerce, 10065 Donner Pass Rd (Mon–Fri 8.30am–6pm, Sat & Sun 9am–6pm; ☎ 530/587-2757, 🌐 www.truckee.com) is very helpful and friendly.

Several miles west of Truckee, DONNER LAKE, surrounded by alpine cliffs of silver-gray granite, was the site of a gruesome tragedy in 1846, when the Donner Party, heading for the Gold Rush, found their route blocked by early snowfall. They stopped and built crude shelters, hoping that the snow would melt; it didn't. Fifteen of their number braved the mountains in search of help from Sutter's Fort in Sacramento; only two men and five women made it, surviving by eating the bodies of the men who died. A rescue party set off immediately, only to find more of the same: thirty or so half-crazed survivors, living off the meat of their fellow travelers. The horrific tale is recounted in the small Emigrant Trail Museum (daily summer 9am–5pm, winter 9am–4pm; donation), just off Donner Pass Road in Donner State Park (parking $6 and camping May–Sep; $25; ☎ 1-800-444-7275, 🌐 www.reserveamerica.com).

CALIFORNIA

Truckee and Donner Lake

Northern California

The massive and eerily silent volcanic lands of northern California have more in common with Oregon and Washington than with the rest of the state. Its small settlements live by farming and an ever-decreasing number by logging and fishing, though locals have been joined in recent years by New Agers, ex-hippies, and a growing contingent of tourists. Once you're past the atypically lush valleys of the Wine Country, the coast stretches for four hundred miles of rugged bluffs and forests. Aside from the beautiful deserted beaches that stripe the coast, trees are the big attraction, thousands of years old and hundreds of feet high, dominating a landscape swathed in swirling mists. The Redwood National Park teems with campers and hikers in summer, but out of season it can be idyllic. The remote wildernesses of the interior can be enchanting, especially around the Shasta Cascade and Lassen Volcanic National Park.

Public transportation is, not surprisingly, scarce, though Greyhound buses run from San Francisco and Sacramento up and down I-5 into Oregon and US-101 as far as Arcata.

The Wine Country

The warm and sunny hills of Napa and Sonoma valleys, an hour north of San Francisco, are by reputation at the center of the American wine industry. In truth, less than five percent of California's wine comes from the region, but what it does produce is America's best. In summer, cars jam Hwy-29 through its heart, as visitors embark on a day's hectic tasting.

The Napa Valley

Thirty miles of gently landscaped hillsides, the Napa Valley looks more like southern France than a near-neighbor of the Pacific Ocean. The one anomaly is the town of Napa itself, a sprawling, ungainly city of 60,000 best avoided in favor of the wineries and small towns north on Hwy-29. Nine miles north is YOUNTVILLE, anchored by Vintage 1870, 6525 Washington St (daily 10.30am–5.30pm), a shopping and wine complex in a converted winery that's home to Napa Valley Aloft (☎ 1-800/944-4408, 🌐 www.nvaloft.com), which specializes in sunrise hot-air balloon tours.

Of the large wineries at the valley's southern end, Robert Mondavi, at 7801 St Helena Hwy in Oakville (daily 10am–5pm; $10; ☎ 1-888/766-6328, 🌐 www.mondavi.com) offers the most informative and least sales-driven tours and tastings.

Up the valley past the pretty village of ST HELENA, Beringer Vineyards, at 2000 Main St (daily 10am–5pm; $5; ☎ 707/963-7115, 🌐 www.beringer.com), is modeled on a German Gothic mansion and has graced the cover of many a wine magazine. Spacious lawns and a grand tasting room heavy with dark wood make for quite a regal experience.

Homey CALISTOGA, at the very northern tip of the valley, is well known for its mud baths, whirlpools, and mineral water, though its wineries are just as appealing. South of town, Clos Pegase, 1060 Dunaweal Lane (daily 10.30am–5pm; $5; ☎ 707/942-4981, 🌐 www.clospegase.com), is a flamboyant, high-profile winery that draws a link between fine wine and fine art, with an excellent sculpture garden; there are tours at 11am and 2pm. The Chateau Montelena, 1429 Tubbs Lane (daily 9.30am–4pm; $10; ☎ 707/942-5105, 🌐 www.montelena.com), just north of town, is one of the valley's oldest and smallest wineries, with an impressive medieval facade and a reputation for first-class chardonnays. A mile further up the road, the Old Faithful Geyser (daily 9am–6pm; $8; ☎ 707/942-6463) spurts boiling water sixty feet into the air at forty-minute intervals. The water source was discovered during oil drilling here in the 1920s, when search equipment struck a force estimated to be up to a thousand pounds per square foot. In time, landowners turned it into a high-yield tourist attraction, using the same name as the famous spouter in Yellowstone National Park.

Practicalities

From San Francisco there are daily Gray Line bus tours ($70; ☎ 415/558-9400 or 1-888/428-6937, 🌐 www.grayline.com) to the Wine Country; otherwise you will need a car. The main Visitors Bureau (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 707/226-7459, 🌐 www.napavalley.com) is at 1310 Napa Town Center, off First Street in Napa itself, but most towns have their own information outlet.

In St Helena, Hotel St Helena, 1309 Main St (☎ 707/963-4388; 6), provides cozy rooms right in the center of town, while the nearby Ambrose Bierce House (☎ 707/963-3003, 🌐 www.ambrosebiercehouse.com; 8), is a luxury B&B at 1515 Main St. St Helena's restaurants range from the inexpensive Mexican of Armadillo's, 1304 Main St (☎ 707/963-8082), to the haute cuisine and four-hundred-plus wine list at the gigantic Culinary Institute of America Restaurant, 2555 Main St (☎ 707/967-1010).

In Calistoga, Dr Wilkinson's Hot Springs, 1507 Lincoln Ave (☎ 707/942-4102, 🌐 www.drwillkinson.com; 5), is a legendary health spa and hotel, while less expensive lodgings (and spa facilities) lining the main drag, Lincoln Avenue, include the quiet, modern Comfort Inn at no. 1865 (☎ 707/942-9400, 🌐 www.comfortinn.com; 4). Downtown's most enticing hotel can be found at 1457 Lincoln Ave in the historic Mount View Hotel and Spa (☎ 707/942-6877 or 1-800/816-6877, 🌐 www.mountviewhotel.com; 7 double, 9 cottage with patio and Jacuzzi). Creative cuisine, featuring unheard-of combinations such as chile relleños with walnut pomegranate sauce, makes dining at the Wappo Bar & Bistro, 1226 Washington St (☎ 707/942-4712), a delicious adventure. The 🍷 Calistoga Inn, 1250 Lincoln Ave (☎ 707/942-4101), serves great seafood appetizers, including wheat-ale steamed clams and mussels, plus a wide range of wines, microbrewed beers, and excellent desserts. Brannan's Grill, 1374 Lincoln Ave (☎ 707/942-2233), serves fresh oysters, salmon, and roasted Sonoma chicken in an airy wood-interior bistro.

Sonoma Valley

On looks alone, the crescent-shaped Sonoma Valley beats Napa hands down. This altogether more rustic valley curves between oak-covered mountain ranges from the Spanish Colonial town of SONOMA to Glen Ellen, a few miles north along Hwy-12. It's far smaller than Napa, and many of its wineries are informal, family-run businesses, where a charge for tasting is still frowned upon and visitors are few.

The restored Mission San Francisco Solano de Sonoma (daily 10am–5pm; $2), just east of the spacious plaza in Sonoma, was the last and northernmost of the California missions, and the only one established in northern California by the nervous Mexican rulers, who were fearful of expansionist Russian fur-traders. The plaza was also the sight of the Bear Flag Revolt, the 1846 action that propelled California into independence from Mexico, and then statehood. Many of Sonoma's wineries are concentrated a mile east, within walking distance, and include the grand old Buena Vista Winery, 18000 Old Winery Rd (free tasting daily 10am–5pm; $5; historical tours daily 2pm; ☎ 1-800/678-8504, 🌐 www.buonavistawinery.com), which has champagne cellars, tunnels of oak caskets, and a high-ceilinged tasting room. A ten-minute drive further north, in charming Glen Ellen, is the Benziger Family Winery, 1883 London Ranch Rd (daily 10am–5pm; $5–10; ☎ 1-888/490-2739, 🌐 www.benziger.com). A self-guided tour explains how wine grapes are cultivated and flavored, and four times daily a tram tour ($5) takes you around the vineyard along the side of Mount Sonoma. A half-mile up London Ranch Road, Jack London State Park (daily 9.30am–5pm, until 7pm in summer; $5 per car) sits on the 140 acres of ranchland owned by the famed author of The Call of the Wild. Here you'll find the author's final resting place, along with a decent museum that houses a collection of souvenirs that he picked up while traveling the globe.

Practicalities

Public transportation to the valley is available through Golden Gate Transit's bus services from San Francisco to Petaluma and Santa Rosa (☎ 707/541-2000, 🌐 www.goldengate.org). For useful info, head for the Visitors Bureau (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 707/996-1090, 🌐 www.sonomavalley.com), in a cute building right on Sonoma's plaza. Accommodation is pricey, though the Sonoma Hotel, 110 W Spain St (☎ 707/996-2996, 🌐 www.sonomahotel.com; 📍), has French country-style doubles and a great bar, and the Swiss Hotel, 18 W Spain St (☎ 707/938-2884, 🌐 www.swisshotelsonoma.com; 📍), is in a landmark building on the plaza with four-poster beds in each room. Good shopping and cafés abound on and around the square; The Girl and the Fig, 110 W Spain St (☎ 707/938-3634), is a highly-rated French restaurant, while hidden away on 315 Second St E, the Vella Cheese Company (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm; ☎ 1-800/848-0505) attracts cheese aficionados from far and wide with hand-made Monterey Jack, sharp cheddar, and asiago.

The northern coast

The fog-bound towns and windswept, craggy beaches of the northern coast that stretches to the Oregon border is better suited for hiking and camping than sunbathing, with cool temperatures year-round and a huge network of national, state, and regional parks preserving magnificent redwood trees. Throw on your hiking boots and get out onto the trails that sweep past lolling seals, migrating whales, and some of the oldest, tallest trees on earth.

The Sonoma Coast and Russian River Valley

Despite the weekend influx from San Francisco, the villages of the Sonoma Coast and Russian River Valley seem all but asleep for most of the year. Tucked along the slow, snaking Hwy-1, towns include BODEGA BAY, where Hitchcock filmed The Birds. From here, a great thirteen-mile hike leads along the rugged cliffs to busy Goat Rock Beach, where the Russian River joins the ocean. A prime seal- and whale-watching spot, the beach is less than a mile from equally pleasing JENNER, which is a good place for clam chowder and ocean-staring.

About ten miles inland on Hwy-116, toward the warm and pastoral Russian River Valley, GUERNEVILLE is a well-established gay resort. It offers plenty of places to stay – though many are expensive. The New Dynamic Inn, 14030 Mill St (☎ 707/869-1563, 🌐 www.newdynamicinn.com; 📍), is one of the more modest places, while the campground at Johnson's Resort on 1st Street also has cabins (☎ 707/869-2022, 🌐 www.johnsonsbach.com; 📍). The popular Russian River Resort (“Triple R”), 16390 4th St (☎ 707/869-0691 or 1-800/417-3767, 🌐 www.russianriverresort.com; 📍), serves alcohol and food, and has comedy and karaoke nights, while Main St Station, 16280 Main St (☎ 707/869-0501), is a great pizzeria with nightly live jazz. The Armstrong Redwoods State Reserve ($6 per car), two miles north, contains 750 very dense acres of enormous redwoods interspersed by trails – one of the best ways to see it is on horseback. Guided expeditions run by the Armstrong Woods Pack Station (☎ 707/887-2939, 🌐 www.redwoodhorses.com) vary in length from half a day (from $70) to overnight rides (from $300) with tented accommodation.

MONTE RIO, four miles back down the river toward the coast, is a lovely old resort town, at the entrance to the 2500-acre Bohemian Grove, where the richest and most powerful men in the country traditionally gather in privacy each July for two weeks of (supposedly male-only) high jinks.

The Mendocino coast

The coast of Mendocino County, 150 miles north of San Francisco, is a dramatic extension of the Sonoma coastline – the headlands a bit sharper, the surf a bit rougher, but otherwise more of the same. MENDOCINO itself looks like a transplanted New England fishing village: weathered and charming, with plenty of art galleries and boutiques. Just south of town, hiking and cycling trails weave through the unusual Van Damme State Park, on Hwy-1 ($6 per car; ☎ 707/937-5804), where the ancient trees of the Pygmy Forest are stunted to waist height because of poor drainage and soil chemicals. Two-hour sea cave tours through the park are available through Lost Coast Kayaking (three times daily; $50; ☎ 707/937-2434, 🌐 www.lostcoastkayaking.com).

The best of the affordable accommodations in the center of town is the Sea Gull Inn, 44960 Albion St (☎ 707/937-5204 or 1-888/937-5204, 🌐 www.seagullbb.com; 📍), though the antique-filled The Mendocino Hotel and Garden Suites, 45080 Main St (☎ 707/937-0511 or 1-800/548-0513, 🌐 www.mendocinohotel.com; 📍), offers some more luxurious suites. The town's oldest bar is Dick's Place on Main Street, the closest thing you'll find to a local hangout. Of Mendocino's restaurants, the most famous is Café Beaujolais, 961 Ukiah St (☎ 707/937-5614), which specializes in organic California cuisine. 🍷 955 Ukiah Street (closed Tues; ☎ 707/937-1955) serves some of the best food in town: entrees are considered a steal for $15–25 a plate. For slightly cheaper fare with a great view, try the Bay View Café, 45040 Main St (☎ 707/937-4197), which serves tasty standards from salads to fish and chips daily.

The Humboldt coast

Humboldt is by far the most beautiful of the coastal counties: almost entirely forestland, overwhelmingly peaceful in places, in others plain eerie. The impassable cliffs of Kings Range prevent even the sinuous Hwy-1 from reaching the “Lost Coast” of its southern reaches. To get there you have to detour inland via US-101

Bigfoot Country

Willow Creek, forty miles east of Arcata, is the self-proclaimed gateway to “Bigfoot Country.” Reports of giant 350- to 800-pound humanoids wandering the forests of northwestern California have circulated since the late nineteenth century, fueled by long-established Indian legends, but weren’t taken seriously until 1958, when a road maintenance crew found giant footprints. Thanks to their photos, the Bigfoot story went worldwide. However, in 2002, the bereaved family of Ray L. Wallace claimed he made the 1958 footprints, a hoax they had promised to keep secret until after his death. But the number and variety of prints (over forty, since 1958) still points to a Bigfoot mystery, and the small visitor center in Willow Creek has details of Bigfoot’s alleged activities. Information on the adjacent Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation can be found here and at the Hoopa Museum in Hoopa, north of Willow Creek on Highway 96. The site of several violent confrontations between Native Americans and whites over fishing territory, the reservation was finally declared a sovereign territory in 1988, and is currently working on restoration of the Trinity River and its depleted fish stocks.

through the deepest redwood territory as far as GARBERVILLE, a one-street town with a few good bars that is the center of the “Emerald Triangle,” which produces the majority of California’s largest cash crop, marijuana. Every August, the town hosts the enormous Reggae on the River festival (information on ☎ 707/923-4583, 🌐 www.reggaeontheriver.com).

Redwood country begins in earnest a few miles north, at the Humboldt Redwoods State Park (☎ 707/946-2409, 🌐 www.humboldtredwoods.org), California’s largest redwood park. The serpentine Avenue of the Giants weaves for 33 miles through trees that block all but a few strands of sunlight, but you can exit at numerous points to get back on US-101. This is the habitat of Sequoia sempervirens, the coastal redwood, with ancestors dating back to the days of the dinosaurs, and some are over 350ft tall. Three campgrounds fill up quickly in summertime (☎ 1-800/444-7275, 🌐 www.reserveamerica.com; $20).

Tiny SAMOA, a few minutes by car over the bay from sprawling Eureka, holds the last remaining cookhouse in the West. Lumbermen came to the 🌲 Samoa Cookhouse (☎ 707/442-1659) to eat gargantuan meals after a day of felling redwoods; the oilskin tablecloths and burly workers have gone, but the lumber-camp style remains, with long tables and colossal portions of red meat.

ARCATA, seven miles north of Eureka, a small college town with an earthy, mellow pace, has a grassy central plaza surrounded by good restaurants, and some excellent white-sand, windswept beaches to the north. The Fairwinds Motel, 1674 G St (☎ 707/822-4824 or 1-866/352-5518, 🌐 www.fairwindsmotelarcata.com; 🍷), is probably the best deal in town. More upscale, the Hotel Arcata, 708 Ninth St (☎ 707/826-0217 or 1-800/344-1221, 🌐 www.hotelarcata.com; 🍷), is central and offers standard rooms and nicer suites. Humboldt Brewery, 856 10th St, no longer makes its own ale but stocks a good range and has low-priced food.

Redwood National Park

Thirty miles north of Arcata, the small town of ORICK marks the southern limit, and busiest section, of the Redwood National Park. Tall Trees Grove here is home to one of the world’s tallest trees – a mighty 367-footer. Many visitors hike to it on the 8.5-mile trail from Bald Hill Road near Orick, but make sure to visit the Kuchel information center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 707/464-6101), from which you can obtain the needed free permit to drive along the access road to the trailhead.

Of the three state parks within the Redwood National Park area, Prairie Creek is the most varied and popular, and while bear and elk roam in plain sight, rangers lead tours through the wild and damp profusion. Highlights include the meadows of Elk Prairie in front of the ranger station (daily: summer 9am–6pm; rest of year 9am–5pm; ☎ 707/464-6101), where herds of Roosevelt Elk – massive beasts weighing up to twelve hundred pounds – wander freely.

Spectacular coastal views can be had from trails in the Klamath area, especially the Klamath Overlook, two miles up Requa Road and about three-quarters of a mile above the sea. You can jump over, lumber under, or glide through all the naturally contorted and sculpted Trees of Mystery (daily: summer 8am–7pm; winter 9am–5pm; $13.50, kids $6.50), except the impressive Cathedral Tree, where nine trees have grown from one root structure to form a spooky circle. Further north in a stupendous coastal setting just off US-101, the 🏡 HI-Redwood National Park hostel (☎ 707/482-8265, 🌐 www.norcalhostels.org; 📍 2) has dorm beds from $20 and two private rooms.

The park headquarters are in otherwise missable Crescent City at 1111 Second St (summer daily 9am–5pm, winter Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎ 707/464-6101, 🌐 www.nps.gov/redw), but you can pick up information all over the park. There are campgrounds everywhere; three that have showers and water are Prairie Creek on US-101, Mill Creek, five miles south of Crescent City, and Jedediah Smith, eight miles north of Crescent City on the Smith River. If you do come in summer, make reservations through ReserveAmerica (☎ 1-800/444-7275, 🌐 www.reserveamerica.com), and if things get really desperate, head up US-101 to the numerous motels around Crescent City.

The northern interior

The remote northern interior of California, cut off from the coast by the Shasta Cascade range and dominated by forests, lakes, and mountains, is largely uninhabited. Interstate 5 leads through the heart of this near-wilderness, forging straight through the unspectacular farmland of Sacramento Valley to Redding – the region's only buses follow this route. Redding makes a good base for the Whiskeytown-Shasta-Trinity area and the more demanding Lassen National Volcanic Park. Mountaineers and the spiritually-minded flock to Mount Shasta, which is close enough to the volcanic Lava Beds at the very northeastern tip of the state for them to be a long but feasible day's car trip.

Chico

Charming little CHICO, about midway between Sacramento and Redding, some twenty miles east of I-5, is a good stopoff if you don't want to cover the whole valley from top to bottom in one day, or if you're here to visit Lassen Volcanic National Park (see p.1160) and need somewhere to stay. Home to Chico State University, the laid-back town is loved by mountain bikers for its many trails. Cheap rooms downtown can be found at the Vagabond Inn, 630 Main St (☎ 530/895-1323 or 1-800/522-1555, 🌐 www.vagabondinn-chico-hotel.com; 📍 3), and there are several good restaurants, notably the 24-hour Jack's Family Restaurant, 540 Main St (☎ 530/343-8383), a great down-home diner.

Redding and Shasta

A sprawling expanse of chain stores with a shopping mall at its heart and a poured-concrete convention center at its gate, REDDING appears to be an anomaly amidst the natural splendor of the northern interior. The region's largest city, with over 70,000 people, it has acted as a northern nexus since the late nineteenth century, when the Central Pacific Railroad came through. Today it remains a crossroads, bulging with cookie-cutter motels and fast food outlets, but the superb Turtle Bay Exploration Park, 800 Auditorium Drive (March–Oct daily 9am–5pm, Nov–Feb Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; $12; ☎530/243-8850, 🌐www.turtlebay.org), full of fascinating interactive exhibits, and stunning Sundial Bridge, designed by Spanish architect Santiago Calatrava, have greatly enhanced the town's image. If you have a car and need to stay, try the Best Western Hilltop Inn, 2300 Hilltop Drive (☎530/221-6100 or 1-800/336-4880, 🌐www.bestwestern.com; 📍); the Deluxe Inn, 1135 Market St (☎530/243-5141; 📍), is quite at odds with its name but close to the Greyhound station.

SHASTA, four miles west of Redding and not to be confused with Mount Shasta, is somewhat a ghost town. The row of half-ruined brick buildings here represent a once booming gold-mining town, literally at the end of the road from San Francisco and on the very edge of the wilderness. The Courthouse has been turned into a museum (Wed–Sun 10am–5pm; $2), full of historical California artwork and mining paraphernalia, while the gallows and prison cells are a grim reminder of the daily executions that went on here.

From Shasta, precipitous Hwy-299 climbs into the Whiskeytown-Shasta-Trinity National Recreation Area, which has artificial beaches, forests, and camping facilities at three lakes – Trinity, Whiskeytown, and Shasta. During summer it's completely congested with windsurfers, motorboats, jet skiers, and recreational vehicles block the narrow routes that serve the lakes. An extensive system of tunnels, dams, and aqueducts directs the plentiful waters of the Sacramento River in to California's Central Valley to irrigate cash crops. The lakes are pretty enough, but residents complain they're not a patch on the wild waters that used to flow from the mountains before the Central Valley Project came along in the 1960s.

Lassen Volcanic National Park

About fifty miles over gently-sloping plains east from Red Bluff on Hwy-36, or forty miles east from Redding on Hwy-44, the 106,000 acres that make up the pine forests, crystal-green lakes, and boiling thermal pools of the LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK are one of the most unearthly parts of northern California's forbidding climate, which receives up to fifty feet of snowfall each year, keeping the area pretty much uninhabited outside the brief summer season. Mount Lassen itself last erupted in 1915, when the peak blew an enormous mushroom cloud some seven miles skyward, tearing the summit into chunks that landed as far away as Reno; scientists predict that it is the likeliest of all the West Coast volcanoes to blow again.

The thirty-mile tour of the park along Hwy-89 from Manzanita Lake in the north should take no more than a few hours. There is a $10 access fee per vehicle to the park, valid for seven days. The Mount Lassen explosion denuded the devastated area, ripping out every tree and patch of grass. Slowly the earth is recovering a green blanket, but the most vivid impression is one of complete destruction. Marking the halfway point, Summit Lake is a busy camping area set around a beautiful icy lake, close to which are the park's most manageable hiking trails. From a parking area to the south (8000ft up), the steep, five-mile ascent to Lassen Peak begins. Experienced hikers can do it in four hours, but wilderness seekers will have a better time pushing east to the steep trails of the Juniper Lake area.

Continuing south along Hwy-89, Lassen's indisputable show-stealers are Bum-pass Hell and Emerald Lake, the former (named for a man who lost a leg trying to cross it) a steaming valley of active pools and vents that bubble away at a low rumble all around. The trails are sturdy and easy to manage, but you should never venture off them. The crusts over the thermal features are often brittle, and breaking through could plunge you into very hot water. Before leaving the park at Mineral, make an effort to stop at Sulphur Works, an acrid cauldron of steam vents. A magnificent but grueling trail leads for a mile around the site to the avalanche-prone summit at Diamond Peak, which affords great views over the entire park and forestland beyond.

The Park Service has its headquarters in Mineral (summer daily 8am–4.30pm, winter Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 530/595-4444, 🌐 www.nps.gov/lavo), where you can get free maps and information (there's a box outside when it's closed, and they'll leave your backcountry permits here if you arrive late), including the Lassen Park Guide. Another visitor center (summer daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 530/595-4444 ext 5180) is at Manzanita Lake, just inside the northern entrance, and includes the Loomis Museum, which documents the park's eruption cycle.

Mount Shasta City and Mount Shasta

Roughly sixty miles north of Redding, a scenic road branches off I-5 to the tiny town that describes itself as “the best kept secret in California”: MOUNT SHASTA CITY, hard under the enormous bulk of the 14,162-foot Mount Shasta. Still considered active despite not having erupted for two hundred years, this lone peak dominates the landscape for a hundred miles around, and its “energies” attract New Agers by the score. If you want to climb to the summit (10hr; crampons and ice axe needed most of the year), or simply to explore the flanks of the mountain along the many trails, you must obtain a free permit from the ranger district office, 204 W Alma St (April–Oct Mon–Sat 8am–4.30pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 530/926-4511), or you can self-issue one at the main trailheads.

The nearest Greyhound stop is at Weed, nine miles north, whence local STAGE buses (☎ 530/842-8295 or 1-800/247-8243) connect to Mt Shasta City. The Chamber of Commerce is at 300 Pine St (daily: summer 9am–5.30pm, winter 10am–4pm; ☎ 530/926-3696 or 1-800/926-4865, 🌐 www.mtshastachamber.com). There's friendly accommodation at the excellent Alpenrose Cottage Guest House, 204 E Hinkley St (☎ 530/926-6724, 🌐 www.snowcrest.net/alpenrose; ④), and more standard rooms at the Best Western Tree House Motor Inn, 111 Morgan Way (☎ 1-800/545-7164 or 530/926-3101, 🌐 www.bestwestern.com; ④). Nicer still, the 🍳 McCloud Hotel Bed & Breakfast, 408 Main St, McCloud (☎ 530/964-2822 or 1-800/964-2823, 🌐 www.mchotel.com; ⑤), has some rooms with Jacuzzis. Lake Siskiyou Campground (☎ 530/926-2618; $20) is four miles west of town and the most picturesque in the area.

Some of the town's best meals can be had at Trinity Café, 622 N Mount Shasta Blvd (☎ 530/926-3372), which serves quality California cuisine, and Vivify (☎ 530/926-1345), an upmarket Japanese restaurant at 531 Chestnut St. For good bar food and a chance to meet the locals, head for Billy Goats, 107 Chestnut St (☎ 530/926-0209).

Lava Beds National Monument

Lava Beds National Monument ($10 per vehicle for seven days), in the far north of the state, is one of the most remote and beautiful of California's parks, and also one of its most interesting. The history of these volcanic caves and huge black lava flows is as violent as the natural forces that created them. Before the Gold Rush the area was home to the Modoc Indians, but repeated and bloody confrontations with miners led the government to order them into a reservation shared with the Klamath, their traditional enemy. After only a few months the Modocs drifted back to the isolation of the lava beds, and in 1872 the army was sent in. Fifty-five Modoc warriors, under the leadership of “Captain Jack,” held back an army ten times the size of theirs for five months from a natural fortress of passageways now known as Captain Jack’s Stronghold, at the park’s northern tip. You can retrace the conflict through well-detailed, self-guided trails in the park and informative exhibits at the visitor center (daily: summer 8am–6pm; rest of year 8am–5pm; ☎ 530/667-2282, @www.nps.gov/labe).

The bulk of the lava tube caves are close to the visitor center from where you can take the free ranger tours (daily 2pm). With some nerve and a good light source (free loaner flashlights from the visitor center), you can explore the caves alone. You can camp near the visitor center, but there are no shops nearby, so bring everything you’ll need with you. Nearby is the Modoc Ranger Station (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 530/233-5811), which has general information on the Modoc National Forest. North and west of the Lava Beds region, the Klamath Basin National Wildlife Refuge hosts millions of birds migrating along the Pacific Flyway. The visitor center (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 530/667-2231) is off Hill Road near the northwest entrance for the Lava Beds. Surprisingly, the best way of spotting the wildlife is by driving along designated routes; getting out of the car and walking scares the birds off.

The Pacific Northwest

- * Pike Place Market, Seattle, WA Seattle's lively urban market holds an array of fine restaurants, seafood and produce vendors, and street entertainers. See p.1170

The Pacific Northwest

The PACIFIC NORTHWEST states of Washington and Oregon, while similar in climate, topography, and liberal politics, are quite different in their attitudes toward growth and expansion. Washington's sprawling development, bustling military bases, and notorious freeway gridlock contrast dramatically with Oregon's low-scaled design and easygoing temperament, thanks in no small measure to its stringent land-use laws and "urban-growth boundaries" around its larger cities.

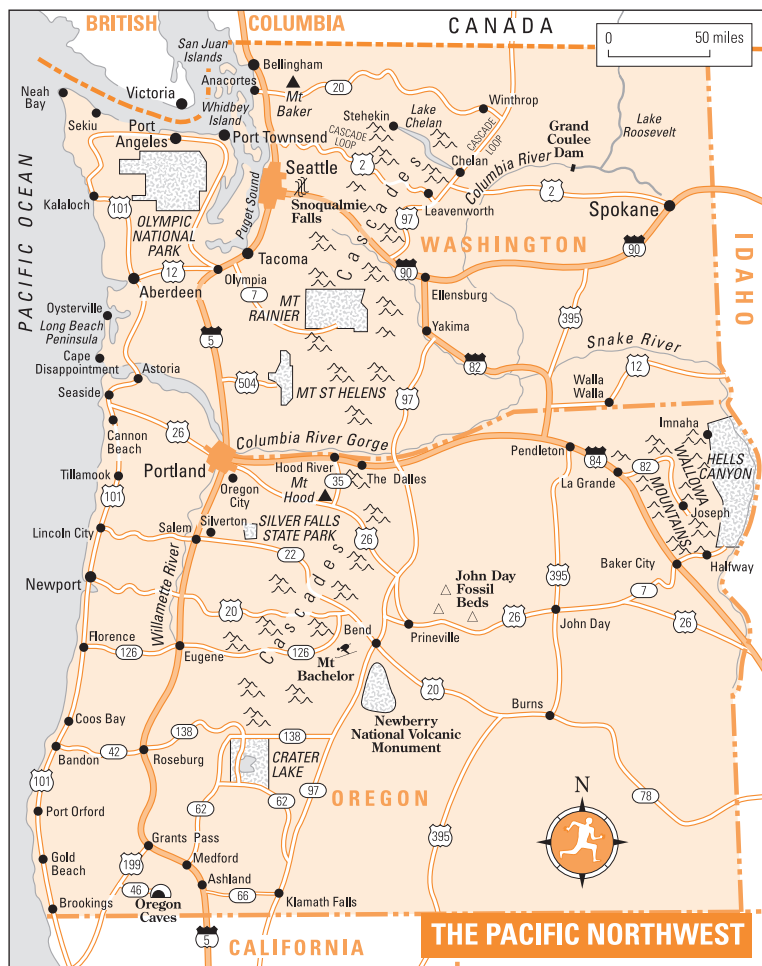

Cooler and wetter than California to the south, both states are split by the great north-south spine of the Cascade Mountains, with their western sides more appealing by far to visitors. Here, regular rainfall and a moist climate create a verdant landscape, thick with woodlands that on Washington's Olympic Peninsula have become small rainforests. This fertile land is where the region's population is most heavily concentrated, yet much of it remains remarkably pristine – especially in Oregon. Both Seattle and Portland lie roughly fifty miles from the Pacific Ocean along the I-5 freeway, running from Canada to California. Seattle, the commercial and cultural capital of the Northwest, is a major port sited along the beautiful, island-strewn Puget Sound. Portland offers much historic appeal for its old-time terracotta architecture and ten stately bridges crossing the scenic Willamette River.

Beyond the Cascades, the land to the east is far drier and less hospitable, peppered with desert and scrubland, as well as bleak stretches of lava beds and cinder cones. Of the towns, only Spokane in Washington is of any appreciable size, though Oregon's booming resort town of Bend is a far more appealing destination, as its Cascade-straddling location makes it a useful base for sampling the mountains, desert, and especially the beautiful Columbia River Gorge to the north. Of outstanding interest also is the scarred territory between Seattle and Portland around Mount St Helens, which erupted with devastating effect in 1980.

Some history

The first inhabitants of the Pacific Northwest may have reached the continent 12,000 to 20,000 years ago by crossing a land bridge over what is now the Bering Strait between Siberia and Alaska. White newcomers in the early nineteenth century initially focused on trading and exploring along the coast rather than making permanent settlements.

Around the same time, European sea captains such as James Cook and George Vancouver came in search of the fabled Northwest Passage, an ice-free route between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Explorers Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, who reached the Oregon coast near present-day Astoria in 1804, were the first whites to cross the interior of the continent, and within forty years American settlers were streaming in along the Oregon Trail. This legendary period of immigration gave de facto control of the region to the United States, and official title followed in 1846 with the signing of a land pact with Britain that established a territorial boundary for the US and Canada at the 49th Parallel. In 1859 Oregon became the second American state west of the Great Plains (after California). Thirty more years would pass before Washington entered the Union.

When the railroads reached Portland and Seattle, Oregon and Washington began their economic ascent, aided by timber sales and, in the case of Seattle, the booming trade supplying prospectors on their way to Alaska's Klondike Gold Rush. Later decades would see the rise and fall of the lumber market and the aerospace industry, and, most recently, the high-tech sector, which hit a local nadir just after the turn of the millennium. As of 2007, the Pacific Northwest has made a modest economic recovery, though it still regularly posts the nation's highest unemployment rate.

Washington

Although Seattle is one of America's most likeable and vibrant cities, perhaps its greatest asset is its proximity to the glorious scenery of Puget Sound, the deep-water inlet around which much of the population of Washington lives. Some of the islands here serve as stepping stones to the Olympic Peninsula to the west, whose mountains are home to rare elk and lush vegetation that merges into rainforest, and whose rustic beaches have remained pristine for centuries. Dazzling Olympic National Park occupies the bulk of the peninsula, and a hike along one of its clearly laid-out trails is a definite highlight of any trip. Wet, often stormy weather is almost sure to set the backdrop for many an outdoor pursuit in western Washington, though warm temperatures and blue skies reign during the summer.

Not quite as rainy as the mountains to the northeast, the southern coast is flatter and more accessible but not as appealing. The nearest real attraction lies a few hours east, where you can marvel at the eye-opening volcanic scenery of Mount St Helens.

Dry and desolate, the sprawling prairie-plateau and flood-scoured "channeled scablands" that make up most of eastern Washington are a long, slow grind with little of interest, though if a cross-country trek takes you through Spokane, the Grand Coulee Dam is worth a detour. Otherwise you're only likely to come out here if you're traveling the Cascade loop, a memorable four-hundred-mile round-trip drive through the stunning Cascade Mountains.

Getting around Washington

From Seattle, Amtrak runs its Coast Starlight train once daily south to Portland and LA, while its Cascades line runs four times per day south to Eugene, Oregon. Amtrak's twice-daily Empire Builder route heads east (to Chicago), just as Greyhound provides bus service east across the Cascades to Spokane and beyond, with other routes to Wenatchee (for Chelan), Ellensburg, Yakima, and Walla Walla.

Getting to and along the coast is more difficult and requires planning. Ferries from Seattle cross to Winslow on Bainbridge Island, from where Kitsap Transit services (☎ 360/373-2877 or 1-800/501-RIDE, 🌐 www.kitsaptransit.org) link with Jefferson Transit (☎ 360/385-4777 or ☎ 1-800/371-0497, 🌐 www.jeffersontransit.com) for bus access to Port Angeles, Port Townsend, and Olympic National Park. In the Seattle and Puget Sound areas, ferries (mostly run by Washington State Ferries; ☎ 206/464-6400 or 1-800/84-FERRY, 🌐 www.wsdot.wa.gov/ferries) are a reliable and picturesque way of getting to such places as Whidbey Island and the San Juan Islands. There are also long-distance services to Canada from Seattle, Anacortes, and Port Angeles, and to Alaska from Bellingham; see p.1185.

Seattle

Located on the shore of sparkling Elliott Bay, with attractive Lake Washington behind and the snowy peak of Mount Rainier in the distance, SEATTLE has a magnificent setting, with a modern skyline of glass skyscrapers, a friendly charm, and plenty of funky coffeehouses, good restaurants, and engaging clubs.

Seattle's beginnings were inauspiciously muddy. Flooded out of its first location on Alki Point in what is now the suburb of West Seattle, in the 1850s the town shifted to the present location of Pioneer Square, renaming itself after the Native American Chief Sealth, who helped reduce violent tensions between whites and local indigenous peoples. As the surrounding forest was gradually felled and the lumber shipped out, Seattle grew slowly until the Klondike Gold Rush of 1897 put it firmly on the national map as a transport and commercial hub. Since the beginning of the twentieth century, the Boeing corporation has been crucial to the city's economic strength, booming during World War II and employing one in five of Seattle's workforce by the 1960s. More recent success stories have included Microsoft and Amazon.com, and the 1990s dot-com boom resulted in an explosion of upscale restaurants, glossy museums, and cultural institutions. This was tempered somewhat by the violent 1999 WTO protests and a February 2001 earthquake, as well as a shakeout in the high-tech sector around the same time.

Despite the changes wrought by Seattle's rollercoaster economy as the city grows into an international destination, its more established neighborhoods remain distinctive, and it has a pleasantly down-to-earth ambiance. Unlike the larger cities in California, Seattle's visitors are apt to find many good deals in accommodation, dining, and package sightseeing tours.

Arrival and information

Flights land at Sea-Tac Airport (☎ 206/433-5388 or 1-800/544-1965, 🌐 www.portseattle.org/seatac), fourteen miles south of downtown Seattle. The Gray Line Airport Express bus (daily 5.30am–11pm every 30min; $10.25, $17 roundtrip ☎ 206/626-6088 or 1-800/426-7532, 🌐 www.graylineofseattle.com) drops off at eight major hotels in the downtown area, with connector services to other hotels from 5.30am to 9pm, for $2.50 extra; reserve at least one hour in advance for these connections at ☎ 206/255-7159. Shuttle Express has door-to-door service (daily 4am–midnight; ☎ 206/622-1424 or 1-800/487-RIDE, 🌐 www.shuttleexpress.com) for $28–30 to downtown. Taxis charge $35–40 for the airport-to-downtown route and leave from the taxi stand on the third floor of the parking garage; you can also call ☎ 206/246-9999 for pickup once you arrive. The Amtrak station at Third Avenue and Jackson Street (☎ 206/382-4125), a dozen blocks south of downtown, and the Greyhound bus terminal, at Eighth Avenue and Stewart Street to the east (☎ 206/628-5526), are both an easy bus ride from downtown, or a fifteen-to-twenty-minute walk. Located inside the Washington State Convention and Trade Center, Seventh Ave at Pike St (daily 9am–1pm & 2–5pm; ☎ 206/461-5840, 🌐 www.seeseattle.org), the local visitors bureau has a “Citywide Concierge Center” that can help with accommodations. The main post office is downtown at 301 Union St at Third Avenue (Mon–Fri 7.30am–5.30pm; ☎ 206/748-5417 or 1-800/275-8777; zip code 98101).

City transportation

You can get around Seattle for free either on foot or by Metro bus in the Downtown Ride Free Area, bordered by Jackson and Battery streets, 6th Avenue, and the waterfront. Otherwise, adult fares are $1.25, or $1.50–2 during peak hours (Mon–Fri 6–9am & 3–6pm); kids' fares are 50¢, and all tickets are valid for an hour. Day-passes ($5) are available from the Citywide Concierge Center (see above) or in King Street Center, 201 S Jackson St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 206/553-3000, 🌐 transit.metrokc.gov). Passes can be used on the elevated monorail (otherwise $3.50 per ride, kids $1.50) between downtown and the Seattle Center, and on the waterfront streetcar (replaced by buses due to construction until 2007; $1.25 off-peak, $1.50 peak). Washington State ferries run to Vashon and Bainbridge islands; tickets from Pier 52, Colman Dock (passengers $4.20–8.50, add $8–10 per vehicle; ☎ 206/464-6400, 🌐 www.wsdot.wa.gov/ferries). Gray Line (☎ 206/626-5208, 🌐 www.graylineofseattle.com) organizes three-hour bus tours (3hr; $29) of the city, as well as combination bus-and-boat tours (6hr; $54) on an Argosy sightseeing cruise (more tours at ☎ 206/623-4252, 🌐 www.argosycruises.com).

Accommodation

When it comes to hotels in Seattle, the best choices are often downtown. Also of good value are the city's hostels and B&Bs, the latter of which are abundant on Capitol Hill. Specialist B&B agencies include A Pacific Reservation Service (☎ 206/439-7677 or 1-800/684-2932, 🌐 www.seattlebedandbreakfast.com) and Seattle Bed and Breakfast Association (☎ 206/547-1020 or 1-800/348-5630, 🌐 www.lodginginseattle.com).

Hotels, motels, and B&Bs

Ace 2423 1st Ave ☎ 206/448-4721, 🌐 www.theacehotel.com. A Seattle favorite with modern, if somewhat austere, rooms and a chic white lobby in the heart of Belltown. Hardwood floors, lofty ceilings, and shared bathrooms for $75; more comfortable suites start at around twice as much. 4

Alexis 1007 1st Ave, downtown ☎ 206/624-4844 or 1-800/426-7033, 🌐 www.alexishotel.com. Renovated old hotel between Pike Place Market and Pioneer Square. Offers in-room hot tubs, spa, fitness center, and the bright, lurid tentacles of a Dale Chihuly lobby sculpture. Nearly half the rooms are suites that, at their largest, have fireplaces and dining rooms. 4

Bacon Mansion 959 Broadway E, Capitol Hill ☎ 206/329-1864 or 1-800/240-1864, 🌐 www.baconmansion.com. Eleven elegant rooms and spacious suites in a grand 1909 Tudor Revival structure, just north of Broadway. Well-decorated if a bit small, the least expensive rooms are cheap for Capitol Hill, at $84, although the price is more than double at the high end. Two-night minimum stay on weekends. 4–7

Hotel Andra 2000 4th Ave ☎ 206/448-8600 or 1-877/448-8601, 🌐 www.hotelandra.com. An intimate boutique hotel with 120 chic, modern units – more than half of them suites. Onsite gym and restaurant, and high-speed Internet access. An abundance of style for steep rates. 7–8

The City

Downtown Seattle sits alongside the curve of Elliott Bay just off the I-5 freeway, crowded with plenty of hotels, restaurants, and attractions, but none more popular than Pike Place Market and its array of stalls and cafés. Further south, the nineteenth-century center of Pioneer Square is lined with bars and clubs, while at the Seattle Center in the north, the Space Needle presides over museums and carnival rides, as well as the showpiece Experience Music Project. Several outlying districts are often livelier than downtown: Capitol Hill's cafés and bars are the heart of the city's hipster and gay scene, and the University District is a student area with inexpensive cafés and uptempo nightlife.

Pike Place Market and the Seattle Art Museum

Centrally located at Pike Street and First Avenue, Pike Place Market (daily Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ① 206/682-7453, ② www.pikeplacemarket.org) began in the early twentieth century and is the oldest continuous working public market in the US. Made up of various buildings stretching over several city blocks, the bustling market makes a real attempt to keep it true to its agrarian roots. Street entertainers play to crowds, the aroma of organic coffee drifts from cafés, and stalls offers piles of lobsters, crabs, salmon, vegetables, fruit, and flowers. Further inside, handmade jewelry, woodcarvings, and silk-screen prints are on sale, while small shops close by stock a massive range of ethnic foods.

Just down the road, the Seattle Art Museum, 100 University St and First Ave (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs open until 9pm; $7, ticket includes entry to the Seattle Asian Art Museum; free first Thurs of month; ② www.seattleartmuseum.org), features international touring exhibitions and an eclectic array of African, Pacific, and Native American work, with a more limited selection of modern art. Outside the main entrance is the 48ft "Hammering Man," a kinetic sculpture by Jonathan Borofsky, which has become the museum's enigmatic emblem. The museum is closed for renovation until spring 2007.

The Business District

Between Second and Seventh avenues, most of downtown is given over to the steel-and-glass office towers of Seattle's Business District. Here, the multi-story Westlake Center mall, 400 Pine St (daily 10am–9pm), is only notable for being the southern terminus of the 1.3-mile monorail (Mon–Fri 7.30am–11pm, Sat–Sun 9am–11pm; one-way fare $3.50, kids $1.50; @ www.seattlemonorail.com), a holdover from the 1962 Seattle World's Fair that still connects to the Seattle Center and provides the city with one of its prime emblems. Further south, the darkly looming Bank of America Tower (nicknamed "the BOAT"), 701 Fifth Ave, has three concave walls that give the structure an oddly curving silhouette. At nearly a thousand feet high, it's the biggest building west of the Mississippi River by number of stories (76). Head to the 73rd-floor observation deck (Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.30pm; $5, kids $3) for a predictably good panoramic view.

Just north of the BOAT, the New Central Library, 1000 Fourth Ave (Mon–Thurs 10am–8pm, Fri–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; @www.spl.org), is a colossal Rem Koolhaas creation that resembles few other libraries in America – and is unmissable for fans of modern architecture. With a facade composed of brilliantly reflective glass panels, unexpected angles, and cantilevered stories looming high above, the library will amaze at street level alone, long before you enter.

The waterfront

Continuing west from Pike Place Market, stairs in the complex lead down to the steep staircase of the Hillclimb, in turn conveying foot traffic to the waterfront below. Almost opposite the stairway, Pier 59, an old wooden jetty that once served tall ships, now houses the underwater viewing dome of the Seattle Aquarium (daily June–Aug 9.30am–7pm, rest of year 10am–5pm; $12.50, kids $8.50; ☎206/386-4320, @www.seattleaquarium.org). It has an easily navigable layout, including an outdoor portion near the shoreline, and includes around four hundred species of fish, birds, plants, and marine mammals. On Pier 54 to the south, the most famous of the waterfront's fish-and-chip stands, Ivar's Acres of Clams (☎206/624-6852, @www.ivars.net), is excellent for its streetside fish bar, open until 2am, where you can grab a bowl of clam chowder or a helping of cod-and-chips. Along the way, Colman Dock at Pier 52 is the terminal for Washington State Ferries (see p.1168).

On the opposite end of the waterfront, at 2901 Western Ave, the 8.5-acre Olympic Sculpture Park is a brand-new project by the Seattle Art Museum, highlighted by Richard Serra's five undulating steel panels, known as Wake. The free park offers much in the way of hulking, metallic modern sculpture, with pieces by Mark Di Suvero, Tony Smith and Alexander Calder among the other major works.

Pioneer Square

A few blocks inland from the ferry terminal, Pioneer Square is Seattle's oldest district, rich with appealing bookshops and galleries amid the old red-brick and wrought-iron buildings. Things get more raucous at night, when rock and jazz boom out from the taverns and many panhandlers take advantage of the foot traffic.

By far the most interesting way to find out about the city's seamy past is on a 90-minute Underground Tour from Doc Maynard's tavern, 610 First Ave (hours vary by month, usually leaving daily on the hour 11am–4pm, sometimes until 6pm; $11, kids $5; ☎206/682-4646, @www.undergroundtour.com), which details how, after a disastrous 1889 fire, this area was rebuilt with the street level raised by one story, so what used to be storefronts are now underground, linked by subterranean passageways. One long block east, the 1914 white-terracotta Smith Tower, 506 Second Ave, was the city's first skyscraper, as well as its longtime-visual icon well before the 1960s arrival of the Space Needle. These days, it's best for the prime views from its 35th-floor observation deck (Apr–Oct daily 10am–4pm, rest of year Fri–Sun only; $6; @www.smithtower.com).

A couple of blocks south at 117 S Main St, Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park (daily 9am–5pm; free; @www.nps.gov/klse) houses a small museum celebrating the days when Seattle was the gateway to Alaska gold, and prospectors streamed in and traders – and con artists – made their fortunes. Just as interesting, the nearby cobblestoned square of Occidental Park, between Main and Washington streets at Occidental, holds four totem poles carved with mythical creatures from Northwest native legends.

Once a month, highbrow culture finds a place at Pioneer Square: the Gallery Walk (first Thurs of month 6–8pm; free) showcases nearly forty local art dealers holding simultaneous openings, while Art in the Park (3–9pm; free) features a broad range of visual and performance-art pieces in Occidental Park. Both events occur on “First Thursday,” when the area’s ongoing gentrification is most openly on display.

Belltown and the Seattle Center

North of Downtown proper, Belltown was the home of the grunge music scene in the 1980s, but has since developed into ground zero for yuppie-friendly condominiums and fancy restaurants. A thin sliver of the good old days is preserved along Second Avenue, where diners and clubs like the Crocodile Café, 2200 Second Ave (☎ 206/441-5611, 🌐 www.thecrocodile.com), and funky galleries like Roq La Rue, 2312 Second Ave (Wed–Sat 1–6pm, Fri closes 7pm; free; 🌐 www.roqlarue.com), provide a small hint of the neighborhood’s lost vitality.

Further north, the Seattle Center (🌐 www.seattlecenter.com) dates from the 1962 Seattle World’s Fair and since then the 74-acre complex has become the city’s cultural hub, the site of museums, sporting events, concerts, and festivals. The Center is best reached by the monorail, which runs from the third floor of Westlake Center (see p.1171) and drops you close to the Space Needle, the Space Age-modernist city icon, which is most appealing at night when it’s lit up. The panoramic view from the observation deck, where there’s a bar, is unmatched (daily 9am–noon; $14, two trips in 24hr $17; 🌐 www.spaceneedle.com).

△ The Space Needle

Southwest of the Needle, the Pacific Science Center (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; $10, kids $7; ☎ 206/443-2001, @ www.pacsci.org) is full of science-related exhibits for children, and includes a planetarium and IMAX theater. Also good for the kids is the Children’s Museum, in the Center House complex (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; $7.50; @ www.thechildrensmuseum.org), which offers plenty of tot-friendly activities and attractions like the artificial mountain forest, which lets kids crawl through logs or simulate a rock climb.

The most recent highlight of the Seattle Center, though, is the Frank Gehry–designed Experience Music Project (Tues–Thurs 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; $20, kids $15; @ www.emplive.com), a giant burst of colored aluminum – into which the monorail passes – that houses an 80,000-piece collection of rock memorabilia divided up into exhibits on different phases of popular music history, as well as rotating exhibits on subjects from Bob Dylan to Brooklyn hip hop. Also on the site, the newer Science Fiction Museum and Hall of Fame is supposedly a separate institution, but you’ll have to purchase a combined ticket with the EMP ($27, kids $20) to see it. Pop sci-fi fans will delight in the toy spaceships, futuristic sets, and alien attire on display – including sleek costumes from Blade Runner, weapons from a simple phaser to a light saber to Jane Fonda’s Barbarella crossbow, and the iconic captain’s chair from Star Trek.

Capitol Hill

A fifteen-minute bus ride east of downtown takes you to Capitol Hill, the city’s alternative center ever since gays, hippies, and assorted radicals moved in during the 1960s and 1970s, and whose Broadway axis remains a good choice for eating, buying music, clubbing, and drinking coffee from sidewalk espresso carts. On the northern end of Broadway, between E Roy Street and E Highland Drive, the Harvard-Belmont Historic District, along with adjacent Millionaires Row, is rich with huge Neoclassical mansions and sprawling period-revival homes; for a tour, contact the Seattle Architectural Foundation ($10; ☎ 206/667-9186, @ www.seattlearchitecture.org). East of Broadway from Twelfth to Ninth avenues, the Pike/Pine Corridor is filled with all-night coffeehouses, live music venues, and trendy bars. Near its southern end, the Frye Art Museum, 704 Terry Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, Thurs closes at 8pm; free; ☎ 206/622-9250, @ fryeart.org), is devoted to the figurative painting of American and European artists from the last two centuries, though more daring temporary exhibits have included compelling multimedia, performance, and installation pieces.

The northern end of Capitol Hill is highlighted by Volunteer Park 1247 15th Ave (daily 6am–11pm), where you’ll find the 1912 Conservatory’s hothouses, home to flowers, shrubs, and orchids from jungle, desert, and rainforest habitats (daily 10am–4pm, summer closes 7pm; free), as well as the old Water Tower that provides a free, sweeping view of Seattle, albeit through wire mesh. In the same park, the Seattle Asian Art Museum, 1400 E Prospect St (Thurs–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs closes at 9pm; $5; @ www.seattleartmuseum.org), exhibits ceramics, jade, and snuff bottles from Japan, China, Korea, and Southeast Asia.

Ten blocks east, on the other side of Capitol Hill, Washington Park Arboretum (daily 7am–dusk; free; @ depts.washington.edu/wpa) is a lush showcase for indigenous vegetation, with many charming footpaths and regional trees, plus the immaculately designed Japanese Gardens, where banks of pink flowers sit beside neat little pools with brightly colored carp (March–Nov daily 10am–dusk; $5).

The University District

Across the Lake Washington Ship Canal from Washington Park, the University District, or the “U” District, is a busy hodgepodge of coffeehouses, cinemas, and boutiques catering to the University of Washington's 35,000 students. The area centers on University Way, known as "The Ave," and is lined with inexpensive ethnic restaurants and many decent book and record stores.

On campus, the Henry Art Gallery, 15th Ave NE and NE 41st St (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm, Thurs closes at 8pm; $10, free for any students with ID; @www.henryart.org), presents the most imaginative exhibits to be found in any of Seattle's art museums, and houses American and European paintings and photography from the last two centuries. The Burke Memorial Museum, 17th Ave NE and NE 45th St (daily 10am–5pm; $8; @www.washington.edu/burkemuseum), holds the US's largest collection of Native American art and artifacts west of the Mississippi – namely masks, totem poles, and baskets – and presents selections from its huge collection of 2.75 million fossils and Ice Age skeletons, including the remains of a 12,000-year-old sloth.

Along the Lake Washington Ship Canal

As with the "U" District, Seattle's northern neighborhoods are divided from the rest of town by the Lake Washington Ship Canal, which connects Lake Union with Elliott Bay to the west and Lake Washington to the east. On the north shore of Lake Union, Gas Works Park, 2101 N Northlake Way (daily 6am–11.30pm, parking lot open 6am–9pm; free), is a former gas plant turned postmodern park, where children now play on grassy hills that were once slag heaps and decaying, graffiti-covered machines offer surreal evidence of the site's previous industrial incarnation. Further west, a procession of boats passes through the Hiram M. Chittenden Locks (daily 7.30am–9pm; free), and a fish ladder is laid out with viewing windows, through which you can see enormous fish leaping up (late summer for salmon, fall and early winter for trout).

Beyond the locks is Salmon Bay, with Fisherman's Terminal on its south side, 3919 18th Ave W (daily 7am–4.30pm; @www.portseattle.org/seaport), crowded with Seattle's fishing fleet and stalls selling freshly caught fish. On the northern side of Salmon Bay, blue-collar Ballard appeals for its historic Ballard Avenue, between 17th and 22nd avenues NW, home to galleries, bars, and restaurants behind the stately facades of hundred-year-old buildings. The heritage of the Scandinavian fishermen who settled in Ballard in the late nineteenth century is celebrated at the Nordic Heritage Museum, 3014 NW 67th St (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $6; @www.nordicmuseum.org), offering memorabilia and folk art associated with their long journey from the Old World to the West Coast.

Fremont and the Woodland Park Zoo

East of Ballard, Fremont is a self-consciously hip area with a spate of used bookshops and artsy cafés, with its hub around Fremont Avenue N from N 34th to N 37th streets. Just off N 34th Street, the Fremont Sunday Market (April–Oct 10am–5pm, Nov–March 10am–4pm; free; @www.fremontmarket.com/fremont) hosts vendors of secondhand jewelry, furniture, clothing, trinkets, and music. Fremont's other main draws are its quirky public artworks scattered around the district, most notably the Fremont Troll lurking under the Aurora Bridge, 36th St and Aurora Ave, emerging from the gloom with an actual VW Bug in its clutches.

A bit further north, Aurora Avenue leads toward the Woodland Park Zoo, N 55th St and Phinney Ave N (daily 9.30am–4pm, summer closes at 6pm; $10.50, kids $7.50; @www.zoo.org), where more than 250 species reside in a sleek facility with exhibits arranged to reflect different climates and terrains, such as the Northern Trail, Tropical Asia, Tropical Forest, and Temperate Forest.

The Museum of Flight

The biggest of Seattle's museums, the Museum of Flight, a twenty-minute bus ride (#174) south of downtown at 9404 E Marginal Way (daily 10am–5pm; $14, kids $7.50; @ www.museumofflight.org), is partly housed in the restored 1909 “Red Barn” that was the original Boeing manufacturing plant. It now displays relics from the early days of flight, including the nearly decrepit 1914 Caproni Ca 20, the world's first fighter plane. Elsewhere, the Great Gallery features more than fifty full-sized airplanes, from ancient prototypes to a replica of John Glenn's 1962 Mercury space capsule, to an SR-71 Blackbird spy plane, which once flew 80,000 feet above the jungles of Vietnam. More icons are on display outside in the museum's expansive Airpark (daily 11am–3.30pm, summer closes 4.30pm; free with museum admission), which has a walk-in collection of models that include the 727, 737, and jumbo-jet 747, as well as the supersonic, but now discontinued, Concorde.

Eating

Seattle has many fine choices for restaurants, from the funky diners of Capitol Hill and ethnic restaurants of the University District to the delicious seafood of Pike Place Market. Moreover, local coffeehouses host an engaging cultural scene, and are inexpensive choices for whiling away the time or surfing the Internet. Corporate giant Starbucks started here in the early 1970s (in an extant location in the Pike Place Market), though you're better off sampling a local brew that you can't find in your hometown minimall. Better yet, check out one of the 200-plus espresso carts scattered about town, each colorfully styled and uniquely designed.

Restaurants and cafés

The 5 Spot 1502 Queen Anne Ave N, north of Seattle Center ☎ 206/285-SPOT. Southern-style diner whose “Melting Pot Meals” include Pumpkin Show Pasta in pumpkin-cream sauce, Honey Stung Fried Chicken dipped in buttermilk and honey, and Just So Brisket (with a Coca-Cola and onion marinade).

Anthony's Pier 66 2201 Alaskan Way ☎ 206/448-6688. Good, expensive seafood – such as shellfish, mahi mahi, and oysters – served in a waterfront restaurant (part of a local chain) with one of the best views of Puget Sound in town.

Assaggio 2010 4th Ave, Belltown ☎ 206/441-1399. Pleasant, mid-priced Italian restaurant with a friendly ambiance and a menu featuring such items as pan-seared scallops and potato dumplings with gorgonzola, among the expected pizzas, pastas, and veal.

Café Flora 2901 E Madison St, Capitol Hill ☎ 206/325-9100. One of the city's best vegetarian restaurants, attracting even devout carnivores for its creative, if expensive, soups, salads, and entrees, like Oaxaca tacos or black-eyed pea fritters.

Café Septieme 214 Broadway E, Capitol Hill ☎ 206/860-8858. A trendy, bustling European-style bistro offering sophisticated but affordable homemade food, with tasty, somewhat unusual breakfasts and lunches like vegetable frittatas and eggplant steaks.

Campagne 1600 Post Alley, downtown ☎ 206/728-2800. Superb French provincial cooking near the Pike Place Market, with excellent pan-roasted beef entrees and the ever-tasty pommes frites, fried in duck fat. A less expensive branch, Café Campagne, can be found downstairs.

Copacabana 1520 Pike Place, downtown ☎ 206/622-6359. One of Pike Place's most off-beat eateries, with a concentration on mid-priced Bolivian fare such as stuffed pies (like huminta, or corn pie) and seafood soups. The always-popular balcony seating offers a good view of the market hordes.

Dahlia Lounge 1904 4th Ave, Belltown ☎ 206/682-4142. Upscale restaurant best known for its seafood, featuring delicious main courses like Peking duck and Dungeness crab cakes. If you can't afford to drop a wad on dinner, try the adjoining, excellent Dahlia Bakery.

Il Terrazzo Carmine 411 1st Ave S, Pioneer Square ☎ 206/467-7797. The height of Italian chic in the city, with splendid risotto, rack of lamb, gnocchi and a fine range of pastas, for steep prices.

Monsoon 615 19th Ave E, Capitol Hill ☎ 206/325-2111. Upper-end pan-Asian restaurant that's popular for its scrumptious drunken crispy chicken, Alaska scallops with black-rice risotto, caramelized Idaho catfish, and ginger pork ribs.

Noodle Ranch 2228 2nd Ave, Belltown

☎206/728-0463. Delicious, pan-Asian cuisine starting at $10 and featuring imaginative noodle-based dishes and other creations, served in a casual atmosphere. The green curry is the chef's specialty and packs quite a punch.

Phnom Penh Noodle House 660 S King St, south of Pioneer Square ☎206/748-9825. Like the name says, an honest-to-God Cambodian noodle joint that doles out rich helpings of noodles in various sauces, as well as traditional favorites like spicy soups and fishcakes.

Piecora's 1401 E Madison St, Capitol Hill

☎206/322-9411. The best pizza parlor in a city not known for its pizza, leaning toward the New York style with rich, flavorful, and gooey pies served in a friendly neighborhood environment.

Place Pigalle 81 Pike St, on the staircase behind the Pike Place Market ☎206/624-1756. Great seafood offerings – mussels, crab, sturgeon – with fine French cuisine make this small spot an excellent choice, despite the high prices. Patio open in warm weather.

Salumi 309 3rd Ave S, Pioneer Square ☎206/621-8772. Sausages made the old-fashioned way, served on delicious homemade bread, and issued piping hot. Succulent ingredients include the likes of oxtail, prosciutto, lamb, and numerous hog parts.

Wild Ginger 1400 Western Ave, downtown

☎206/623-4450. Upscale restaurant with fiery dishes from Southeast Asia, India, and China. Try the tuna manada – yellowfin tuna fried in spicy Indonesian sauce.

Coffeeshouses

Allegro Espresso Bar 4214 University Way

☎206/633-3030. One of the better spots to taste local brews around the University, with Internet access in an adjoining room, for customers only.

Bauhaus Books & Coffee 301 E Pine St, Capitol Hill ☎206/625-1600. A hangout for the dressed-in-black crowd with large tables, a used-book section – focusing on art and architecture volumes – and good coffee.

Caffè Ladro 2205 Queen Anne Ave N ☎206/282-5313. Near the Seattle Center, this neighborhood coffeeshouse whose name translates to “coffee thief” has a groovy mix of industrial and organic designs. There's a range of light meals (some veggie options) in addition to hearty coffees.

Online Coffee Company 1720 E Olive Way, Capitol Hill ☎206/328-3731. Spacious and relaxed Internet café with coffee, beer, wine, and baked goods; the outside patio has a view of Puget Sound.

Verite Coffee 2052 NW Market St ☎206/709-4497. Fun coffee shop along Ballard's main drag, with excellent coffee and flavorful cupcakes with offbeat toppings like gummy fish and candy flowers.

Vivace Espresso 901 E Denny Way, Capitol Hill ☎206/860-5869. A large haunt for serious java-drinkers and run by self-proclaimed “espresso roasting and preparation specialists”; their sidewalk café at 321 Broadway E is the prime people-watching perch in the area.

Zeitgeist Coffee 171 S Jackson St ☎206/583-0497. Mostly coffee, a few sandwiches, some pastries, and modern art are found at this pleasant haunt in the heart of Pioneer Square's gallery scene.

Drinking and nightlife

Seattle's nightlife revolves around its engaging live music venues and bars, which pour an excellent selection of microbrewed beers. The tavern scene is most accessible, and touristy, in Pioneer Square, where the “joint cover night” plan (weekends $12, weekdays $5) allows you entrance into eight different music venues. Although its grunge heyday is long gone, Belltown still hosts well-known bands at the old, atmospheric Moore Theater, 1932 Second Ave (☎206/443-1744, ☞www.themoore.com), among others listed below.

Bars and clubs

Alibi Room 85 Pike St ☎206/623-3180. Swank martini bar tucked in a dramatic alley behind the Pike Street Market. Excellent food in café-type rooms upstairs, DJs spinning tunes on the dance floor downstairs, and a good selection of film scripts in the library.

Central Saloon 207 1st Ave S, Pioneer Square ☎206/622-0209. Seattle's oldest saloon was established in 1892, and is consistently crowded, owing to its location at the tourist district's epicenter. Every night, the live music ranges from alt-rock to punk to metal and eclectic/acoustic.

Comet Tavern 922 E Pike St, Capitol Hill ☎206/323-9853. The oldest bar on Capitol Hill and a grunge institution – not surprisingly a smoky dive and a bit of a rocker's hangout, with pool tables.

Doc Maynard's Public House 610 1st Ave S, Pioneer Square ☎206/682-4649. Pile-driving rock bands entertain tourists in this 1890s saloon. Meeting place for Underground Tours (see p.1172).

Kells Irish Pub 1916 Post Alley, Pike Place Market ☎206/728-1916. Fun Irish bar and restaurant in a central location, with patio seating and nightly performances by Irish-oriented folk and rock groups.

Linda's Tavern 707 E Pine St, Capitol Hill ☎206/325-1220. Popular with musicians for its jukebox stocked with classics and current indie rock acts. DJs spin two or three nights a week.

Panther Room 2421 1st Ave ☎206/441-1677. Swinging Belltown lounge with excellent, quirky drinks like the appropriately potent Latin Fireball and similarly fiery Dragon Mary, and even good happy-hour bar fare (most items $2–6; Mon–Fri 4–6pm) like drunken prawns and marsala mushrooms.

Pike Pub & Brewery 1415 1st Ave, downtown ☎206/622-6044. Small craft brewery serving its own beers, as well as numerous bottled brands; has a large wine list and an extensive fish- and pizza-heavy menu to boot.

Pyramid Alehouse 1201 1st Ave S, south of Pioneer Square ☎206/682-3377. Excellent regional brewery with a warehouse-like space that serves a dozen Pyramid brands, including some fruit-flavored varieties and an extra-special bitter (ESB).

Music venues

Baltic Room 1207 Pine St E, Capitol Hill ☎206/625-4444. Stylish alternative music venue – playing everything from industrial and electronica DJs to rock and jazz bands – comprising three different sections, and selling beer, wine, and cigars.

 Crocodile Café 2200 2nd Ave, Belltown ☎206/441-5611. A hip alternative joint promoting everything from rock to avant-garde jazz and spoken word. Also a decent diner.

Dimitriou's Jazz Alley 2033 6th Ave, downtown ☎206/441-9729. Best big-name jazz spot in town, showcasing international acts, as well as up-and-coming brilliants. Tickets start around $20.

Nuemo's 925 E Pike St, Capitol Hill ☎206/709-9467. A hard-thrashing venue that has clawed its way up (almost) to the top of the indie-rock heap. The murals and wall art are splashy and irreverent (themed by a creepy clown), and the bands are of the punk, goth, rock, and alt-anything variety.

Paramount Theatre 911 Pine St, downtown ☎206/682-1414. Large 1928 movie palace, seating around three thousand and often hosting well-known rock 'n' roll bands, as well as lectures, classic film programs, comedians, assorted concerts, and more.

Showbox 1426 1st Ave, downtown ☎206/628-3151. A good alternative choice for regional rock acts, and quite affordable compared to the bigger-name venues. Grab a drink in the venue's adjacent Green Room bar before the show. Across from Pike Place Market.

Tractor Tavern 5213 Ballard Ave NW, Ballard ☎206/789-3599. Solid joint in Ballard with great character, good microbrewed beers, and roots music of all kinds – zydeco, Irish, blues, bluegrass.

 Triple Door 216 Union St, Downtown ☎206/838-4333. Attractive modern complex that's the apogee of the folk, roots, alt-country, and blues scene in Seattle; the Mainstage has major players and up-and-comers, while the Musicquarium mixes things up with DJs and more experimental fare – it's also free.

Performing arts and festivals

Many of Seattle's performing arts venues are based around the Seattle Center; the most prominent of these is Marion Oliver McCaw Hall, a sleek, modern facility that hosts the Seattle Opera (☎206/389-7676, www.seattleopera.org). In the same complex, Pacific Northwest Ballet (☎206/441-2424, www.pnb.org) puts on around seven programs from September to June and has an active repertoire of seventy works. Away from Seattle Center, Seattle Symphony Orchestra performs downtown in the glass-walled Benaroya Concert Hall, 3rd and Union streets (☎206/215-4747, www.seattlesymphony.org), whose acoustics are heralded as being among the finest in the world for classical performances.

For theater, Seattle's longest-established small troupe is the Seattle Repertory Company (☎206/443-2222, www.seattlerep.org) at the Seattle Center, while next door, the Intiman Theater (☎206/269-1900, www.intiman.org) performs classics and premieres of innovative new works. A bit to the north at 100 W Roy St, On the Boards presents modern performances (☎206/217-9888, www.ontheboards.org), while big-name musicals open at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, 1308 5th Ave (☎206/625-1418, www.5thavenuetheatre.org), or the Paramount, 911 Pine St (☎206/682-1414, 🌐www.theparamount.com), both downtown.

Seattle's major events include Bumbershoot, hosting hundreds of artists on dozens of stages around town on Labor Day weekend (☎206/281-7788, 🌐www.bumbershoot.org), and the Northwest Folklife Festival (☎206/684-7300, 🌐www.nwfolklife.org), a Memorial Day event at the Seattle Center drawing folk musicians from around the world. In late May and early June, the Seattle International Film Festival (☎206/464-5830, 🌐www.seattlefilm.com) centers on classic moviehouses in Capitol Hill, and from late July to early August, Seafair (☎206/728-0123 ext 108, 🌐www.seafair.com), is a colorful celebration held all over town with airplane spectacles, hydroplane events, and milk-carton boat races.

For listings, Seattle Weekly and The Stranger are free from boxes on the streets and many cafés and stores, and are good for reviews of theater, cinema, and the arts, as is the Friday edition of the Seattle Post Intelligencer newspaper.

Day trips to Bainbridge and Vashon islands

For a brief escape from Seattle, the ferry ride across Elliott Bay to Bainbridge Island provides a relaxing, scenic experience. Washington State Ferries leave from Pier 52 (hourly 5.30am–1.35am; foot passengers $6.50 (collected westbound only in peak season); vehicle and driver $11 non-peak, $14.10 peak season; ☎206/464-6400 or 1-800/84-FERRY, 🌐www.wsdot.wa.gov/ferries) for the 35-minute trip to the island, a green and rural spot occupying less than fifty square miles. The island's only conventional attraction, the Bloedel Reserve, 7571 NE Dolphin Drive, off the Agatewood Road exit of Hwy-305 (Wed–Sun 10am–4pm; $10; by reservation only at ☎206/842-7631, 🌐www.bloedelreserve.org), is a natural conservatory containing nearly 150 acres of gardens, ponds, meadows, and wildlife habitats. If you want to pitch a tent on the island, there's camping at the far end in Fay Bainbridge State Park ($15–21; ☎206/842-3931, 🌐www.parks.wa.gov). Otherwise, accommodation is limited to B&Bs, details of which can be obtained from the visitor center in the town of WINSLOW, 590 Winslow Way E (☎206/842-3700, 🌐www.bainbridgechamber.com). Decent choices for eating in Winslow are the Harbour Public House, 231 Parfitt Way SW (☎206/842-0969), a renovated 1881 house now used for serving up seafood, salads, burgers, and microbrews, and San Carlos, 279 Madison Ave N (☎206/842-1999), which serves nouveau Mexican and Southwestern fare highlighted by mid-priced ribs, chili, garlic prawns, and chimichangas.

Other ferries from Seattle and West Seattle make the short trip to easygoing, bicycle-friendly Vashon Island. Ferries from downtown Seattle's Pier 50 are passenger-only (Mon–Fri 7.35am–6pm; 35min trip; $8.50), while West Seattle trips are also for vehicles (daily 5.20am–2am; 20min; foot passengers $4.20, vehicle and driver $14.50, $18 peak season). A few pleasant beaches lie along the coast of this island, where the community of VASHON is little more than a simple hamlet. The AYH Ranch Hostel, 12119 SW Cove Rd (☎206/463-2592, 🌐www.vashonhostel.com), six miles from the Seattle–Vashon ferry dock at the north end of the island, offers log-cabin dorm beds and teepees for $19, or private rooms for $65. Phone ahead to make a reservation and arrange a free pickup at the jetty. There are also a number of good B&Bs, among them Artist's Studio Loft, 16592 91st Ave SW (☎206/463-2583, 🌐www.asl-bnb.com; $110), and the Swallow's Nest Guest Cottages, 6030 SW 248th St (☎206/463-2646, 🌐www.vashonislandcottages.com; $105). Good places to eat include The Hardware Store, 17601 Vashon Hwy SW (☎206/463-1800), a former tool vendor now given over to tasty nouveau American cuisine, and Rock Island Pizza, 17322 Vashon Hwy SW (☎206/463-6814), which has gourmet pizzas and microbrews.

Puget Sound

The grand waterway of Puget Sound hooks far into western Washington, its array of tiny islands and ragged peninsulas the dramatic setting for passing yachts, oceangoing ships, fishing trawlers, and even nuclear submarines. The southern edge of the Sound is increasingly urban, where the formerly industrial Tacoma and the small state capital of Olympia are slowly becoming known for more than pollution and politicians, respectively, while the waterway itself surrounds countless appealing mountains, forests, and lakes. Popular weekend escapes include rural Whidbey Island and the beautiful San Juan Islands further north.

Tacoma

Sitting on the Seattle–Portland axis of I-5, TACOMA is an old industrial town that's recently experienced a resurgence with a slew of new museums, theaters, and restaurants. Its centerpiece is the massive blue-and-white Tacoma Dome, perched just off the freeway, a major concert venue (📞 www.tacomadome.org), if something of an eyesore.

Most of Tacoma's attractions sit near each other on the main drag of Pacific Avenue, just south of downtown. The most notable of these is unquestionably art celebrity Dale Chihuly's glittering pedestrian overpass, the Bridge of Glass (daily dawn–dusk; free), chockablock with crystalline blue spires and glass vases and curiosities on view. It leads to the Museum of Glass, 1801 E Dock St (Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, summer also Mon & Tues 10am–5pm; $10; 📞 www.museumofglass.org), which resembles a giant metal kiln and presents Chihuly's work and that of other glassblowers, along with a hodgepodge of modern art. On the west side of the bridge is the copper-domed Union Station (Mon–Fri 10am–4pm), built in 1911 and now redesigned as a courthouse and display space for some of Chihuly's more extravagant works. On the south side of Union Station, the excellent Washington State History Museum, 1911 Pacific Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs open until 8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8; 📞 www.wshs.org/wshm), has a huge array of exhibits on regional history, with interactive models of covered wagons, coal mines, frontier cabins, and a Depression-era lunch counter, among others. On the north side of the Station is the Tacoma Art Museum, 1701 Pacific Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7.50; 📞 www.tacomaartmuseum.org), which, like the other museums around here, is most notable for its locally made glassworks.

Further north, the restored historic core of Tacoma is centered around the two-block-long Antique Row, Broadway between S 7th and S 9th streets, a popular strip for everything from historic collectibles to modern castoffs, and the Broadway Center for the Performing Arts, 901 Broadway (📞 253/591-5894, 📞 www.broadwaycenter.org), whose two stunning former moviehouses are landmarks with terracotta facades and much historic-revival decor.

If you have time, head four miles north of downtown to picturesque Point Defiance Park, at Pearl Street off Ruston Way, which at seven hundred acres is one of the largest urban parks in the USA. Its Five-Mile-Drive loop has fine vistas of Puget Sound and many appealing trails branching off from it.

Practicalities

Hotels in Tacoma are less expensive than their counterparts in Seattle. The downtown Sheraton Tacoma, 1320 Broadway Plaza (📞 253/572-3200 or 1-800/845-9466, 📞 www.sheratontacoma.com; 🍷), has the best chain-hotel rooms in town, though the B&B rooms at The Villa, about a mile northeast of downtown at 705

N 5th St (☎ 253/572-1157, 🌐 www.villabb.com; 6), are much more appealing, set in a Renaissance Revival mansion surrounded by luxurious gardens. Some of the rooms have private verandas with prime views. Another solid B&B choice is Geiger Victorian, 912 North I St (☎ 253/383-3504, 🌐 www.geigervictorian.com; 5), loaded with all the chintz and antiques you'd expect, plus a fireplace, and claw-footed tubs in the rooms. For a bite to eat, try the Southern Kitchen, 1716 6th Ave (☎ 253/627-4282), whose delicious gumbo, catfish, hush puppies, candied yams, and fried okra are about as close to Dixie as you're going to get in the Pacific Northwest; and Spar Tavern, 2121 N 30th St (☎ 253/627-8215), a classic brick diner and watering hole serving up burgers, seafood, and microbrews, plus blues on Sunday nights.

Olympia

Picked as Washington's territorial capital in 1853, OLYMPIA offers a small but appealing set of attractions that are well worth a look on a stopover between Portland and Seattle. Its compact downtown area is presided over by the Old Capitol, Washington St at 7th Ave (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; free), an 1892 jewel with gothic turrets and arched windows, while nearby along East Fourth Ave is one of the prime strips for hearing Northwest rock at its best and cheapest (try Le Voyeur, no. 404, ☎ 360/943-5710, and The Clipper, no. 402, ☎ 360/943-6300, for starters). There's also the Olympia Farmers Market, 700 N Capitol Way (April–Oct Thurs–Sun 10am–3pm; Nov–Dec Sat & Sun only; 🌐 www.farmers-market.org), with a nice selection of fruits, vegetables, herbs, and handicrafts.

Just south of downtown, the neat lawns of the Capitol Campus are the setting for the grand Neoclassical Legislative Building, which was completed in 1928 and merits a look for its six gargantuan bronze entry-doors decorated with scenes from state history; a rotunda with a five-ton Tiffany chandelier; and a large circular walnut table in the State Reception Room, whose base was carved from a single tree trunk in the shape of eagles' legs (tours daily on the hour 10am–3pm; self-guided visits daily 10am–4pm; ☎ 360/753-2580). On the northern side of the campus, the Capitol Conservatory and Gardens, 11th Ave at Water St (Mon–Fri 8am–3pm; free), has an eclectic selection of plants from tropical to northern regions, while eight blocks south, the State Capital Museum, 211 W 21st Ave (Tues–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat noon–4pm; $2; 🌐 www.wshs.org/wscm), features local historical artifacts alongside displays of Native American art and Puget Sound natural history.

Practicalities

The Greyhound station is at 107 Seventh Ave SE at Capitol Way (☎ 360/357-5541), just north of the Capitol Campus, and the Amtrak station is eight miles southeast, at 6600 Yelm Hwy in the town of Lacey. Intercity Transit runs local buses (75¢ ticket, one-day pass $1.50; ☎ 360/786-1881, 🌐 www.intercitytransit.com), also providing a free DASH shuttle service between downtown, the Farmers Market, and the Capitol Campus. Olympia's visitor center (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 360/586-3460) is on the Capitol Campus, 14th Avenue and Capitol Way.

Beyond the typical motels, in-town accommodation is sparse, highlighted only by the Swantown Inn, 1431 11th Ave SE (☎ 360/753-9123, 🌐 www.swantowninn.com; $99), a striking 1887 Eastlake Victorian, with wireless Internet, savory breakfast, and views of the Capitol; and the Phoenix Inn, 415 Capitol Way (☎ 360/570-0555, 🌐 www.phoenixinnsuites.com; $109), with fridges and microwaves in each room, plus an onsite pool, Jacuzzi, and gym. There's also camping at forested Millersylvania State Park, 12245 Tilley Rd ($15–21; Ⓣ360/753-1519), south of Olympia, two miles east of I-5, exit 99. Of places to eat, the Urban Onion, 116 Legion Way (Ⓣ360/943-9242), has delicious burgers for vegetarians and carnivores, while a few blocks away, Spar Café, 114 Fourth Ave E (Ⓣ360/357-6444), is a 1930s diner with blues and jazz on Saturday nights.

Whidbey Island

With its sheer cliffs and craggy outcrops, rocky beaches and prairie countryside, WHIDBEY ISLAND is the second-largest island in the continental US – nearly fifty miles in length from north to south. Although it's possible to reach the island by road – Hwy 20 off I-5 drops into the north end of Whidbey, 85 miles north of Seattle – the ferry is usually a better option. The quickest route from Seattle is to head thirty miles north to Mukilteo and catch the ferry to Clinton on Whidbey's southern tip (daily 5am–1am; 20min trip; foot passengers $3.85, vehicle and driver $8.35). From Port Townsend on the Olympic Peninsula (see p.1185) another ferry goes to Keystone, in the middle of the island (6.30am–8.30pm; 30min; foot passengers $2.50, vehicle and driver $10.90; 🌐 www.wsdot.wa.gov/ferries). Whidbey's bus system, Island Transit (daily except Sun; Ⓣ360/321-6688, 🌐 www.islandtransit.org), runs eight free routes along the length of the island.

Just a few miles away from where the ferry docks in Clinton, the town of Langley offers an Old West main street of wooden storefronts set on a picturesque bluff overlooking the water. First Street is lined with antique stores and galleries such as the Artists Cooperative of Whidbey Island, no. 314 (Ⓣ360/221-7675), and the Hellebore Glass Studio, no. 308 (Ⓣ360/221-2067). Good places to stay are Country Cottage of Langley, 215 6th St (Ⓣ360/221-8709 or 1-800/718-3860, 🌐 www.acountrycottage.com; 📍), which has five rooms in a restored 1920s farmhouse, all with CD player and fridge; and The Inn at Langley, 400 First St (Ⓣ360/221-3033, www.innatlangley.com; 📍), whose posh rooms have porches and waterfront views. Among the limited food options in town, Langley Village Bakery, 221 2nd St, #1 (Ⓣ360/221-3525), has great baked goods, pizza, and soups; and Neil's Clover Patch Café, 2850 SR 525 (Ⓣ360/321-4120), is a buffet spot with gut-busting weekly specials of fish 'n' chips and pork ribs.

The middle part of the island contains Ebey's Landing National Historic Reserve (🌐 www.nps.gov/eblla), compelling for its turn-of-the-last-century military garrisons Fort Casey and Fort Ebey, which have since been converted into evocative state parks; Fort Ebey is also a good spot to camp ($15–21; Ⓣ360/678-4636). Nearby, charming little Coupeville features preserved Victorian mansions, and its Front Street is where you'll find most of the shops and eateries. Good accommodation includes Captain Whidbey Inn, 2072 W Captain Whidbey Inn Rd, two miles west of town at Penn Cove (Ⓣ360/678-4097, 🌐 www.captainwhidbey.com; 📍), a nautical-themed hotel serving superb food; and the Anchorage Inn, 807 N Main St (Ⓣ360/678-5581, 🌐 www.anchorage-inn.com; 📍), with seven affordable B&B rooms. For eating, try Knead & Feed, 4 Front St (Ⓣ360/678-5431), offering homemade bread, pies, and cinnamon rolls, and Christopher's Front Street Café, 23 Front St (Ⓣ360/678-5480), which strikes a balance between basic diner food and ritzier dining, with its panini, seafood, pastas, and steaks.

On the northern edge of the island, Deception Pass State Park (daily 8am–dusk; Ⓣ360/675-2417) is not to be missed, sprawling over four thousand acres of rugged land and sea that's great for hiking, fishing, bird-watching, and scuba diving.

The San Juan Islands

North and west of Whidbey Island, midway between Seattle and Vancouver, the beautiful SAN JUAN ISLANDS are scattered across the northern reaches of Puget Sound. Every summer brings more visitors than the islands can easily accommodate, especially on the largest ones, San Juan and Orcas, so you'll need to book your stay and transportation in advance.

Arrival and getting around

Washington State Ferries runs a dozen boats per day to the islands from the harbor a few miles west of Anacortes, a gritty port 75 miles north of Seattle at the end of Hwy-20. The ferry stops at Lopez, Shaw, Orcas, and San Juan Island (☎ 1-888/808-7977, 🌐 www.wsdot.wa.gov/ferries), and the slow cruise through the archipelago is a delight. Motorists should get to the port early, as there's often an hour's wait or more to get vehicles onto a summer crossing. Roundtrip fares to the islands – $12.80 for foot passengers and $35–50 for a car and driver, depending on the destination and season – are collected only on the westbound journey, and there is no charge for foot passengers on inter-island trips (bringing a bike is an extra $4).

If you want to catch an early ferry from Anacortes, Commercial Avenue is lined with numerous budget hotels, the least generic of which is the Islands Inn, no. 3401 (☎ 360/293-4644, 🌐 www.islandsinn.com; $63), offering bayside views and fireplaces, while the Majestic Hotel, no. 419 (☎ 360/293-3355; $98), is a nicely renovated option, with old-fashioned decor and a good onsite restaurant and bar.

As an alternative to ferry travel, Kenmore Air (☎ 1-800/543-9595, 🌐 www.kenmoreair.com) runs seaplane flights from Seattle to six stops in the San Juans ($129 one way, $228 roundtrip); booking by Internet can save around $50.

Lopez Island

Pleasant LOPEZ ISLAND is a quiet spot whose rolling hills make it an enjoyable place to ride a bicycle, which you can rent from Lopez Bicycle Works ($5 per hour, $25 per day; ☎ 360/468-2847, 🌐 www.lopezbicycleworks.com). The main destination is Shark Reef Park (☎ 360/378-8420), at the island's southwest tip on Shark Reef Road, where a fifteen-minute walk through dense forest is rewarded by beautiful vistas at the water's edge, where you can spot the occasional sea lion past the tidepools. For accommodation, on the edge of little Lopez Village, about four miles from the ferry dock, Lopez Islander, 2847 Fisherman Bay Rd (☎ 360/468-2233 or 1-800/736-3434, 🌐 www.lopezislander.com; 4), is a delightful and spacious resort hotel, not far from the excellent Bay Café, 9 Old Post Rd (☎ 360/468-3700). For a change of pace, Lopez Farm Cottages, Fisherman Bay Rd south of Military Rd (☎ 1-800/440-3556, 🌐 www.lopezfarmcottages.com; 4–7), offers five comfortable cottages – each with fireplace, porch, and deck – varying from $99–180 according to season.

Orcas Island

Horseshoe-shaped ORCAS ISLAND teems with rugged hills and leafy timber that tower over its fetching farm country, craggy beaches, and abundant wildlife. The ferry lands in tiny Orcas, mainly interesting for its Victorian Orcas Hotel (☎ 360/376-4300, 🌐 www.orcashotel.com; 4–8), whose plushiest rooms have Jacuzzis, balconies, and harbor views. You can rent bicycles from Dolphin Bay Bicycles, just up from the dock ($30 per day; ☎ 360/376-3093, 🌐 www.rockisland.com/~dolphin), to cycle inland.

Ten miles north, in the drab town of Eastsound, the Chamber of Commerce, on N Beach Rd past Eastsound Square (☎ 360/376-2273, 🌐 www.orcasisland.org), provides maps and information. Places to eat include Bilbo's Festivo, N Beach Road and A Street (☎ 360/376-4728), for its solid Mexican food, and Portofino Pizzeria, along A Street (☎ 360/376-2085), for tasty, handcrafted pizzas and calzones.

Nestled at the end of West Beach Road, Beach Haven Resort (☎360/376-2288, @www.beach-haven.com; 📍) is a great place to stay, its beachfront log cabins lining a densely wooded, sunset-facing cove; in summer they are only available by the week.

The island's highlight is Moran State Park, off Horseshoe Hwy southeast of Eastsound (@www.orcasisle.com/~elc), where more than thirty miles of hiking trails wind through dense forest and open fields to freshwater lakes, to the summit of Mount Constitution – the San Juans' highest point – crowned with a rugged stone observation tower. The park's four campgrounds ($15–21; ☎1-800/452-5687) fill up early in summer, so book ahead. Further along, lovely Doe Bay Village & Resort, Doe Bay Rd, 18 miles east of Eastsound (☎360/376-2291, @www.doebay.com), is tucked into a secluded bay and offers everything from hostel beds ($20) to basic campsites ($30) to modern cabins ($75–175). In nearby Olga, Café Olga (☎360/376-5098) serves tasty meals and fruit pies and has an adjoining art gallery.

San Juan Island

SAN JUAN ISLAND is the ferry's last stop before Canada, best known as the home of two harbor towns and, at the southern tip, American Camp (dawn–11pm; free; ☎360/378-2902, @www.nps.gov/sajh), a national park whose territory once played a role in the infamous “Pig War,” an 1859 border conflict between the US and Britain. More appealing is English Camp, to the west (same entry as American Camp), where forests overlook pleasant fields and maple trees near the shore, and four buildings from the 1860s and a small formal garden have been restored.

Friday Harbor, the lone incorporated spot in the San Juans, has cafés, shops, and a waterfront that make for pleasant wandering, and its small Whale Museum, 62 First St N (daily summer 9am–6pm, rest of year 10am–5pm; $6; @www.whale-museum.org), offers an interesting look at the sights and sounds of local cetaceans. To see the real thing, head past the coves and bays on the island's west side to Lime Kiln Point State Park, 6158 Lighthouse Rd, named after the site's former lime quarry. Orca (“killer”) whales come here in summer to feed on migrating salmon, and there's usually at least one sighting a day. San Juan Tours (☎360/378-1323 or 1-800/450-6858, @www.sanjuansafaris.com) is one of several companies offering three-hour whale-watching cruises (April–Sept only; $59).

From April to September, San Juan Shuttle stops at most of the island's principal attractions ($5/one-way, $8/roundtrip, $15/day-pass; ☎360/378-8887 or 1-800/887-8387, @www.sanjuantransit.com), and bikes ($35/day) can be rented at Island Bicycles, 380 Argyle St (Thurs–Sat only; ☎360/378-4941, @www.island-bicycles.com). Maps are available at the visitors center, 91 Front St (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm; ☎360/378-8887).

Choices to stay include Friday's, 35 First St (☎360/378-5848 or 1-800/352-2632, @www.friday-harbor.com/lodging; 📍), a cozy inn from 1891, with a range of rooms and suites; Lakedale Resort (☎1-800/617-2267, @www.lakedale.com; 📍), six miles from the ferry on Roche Harbor Rd (accessible by bus), which has everything from simple campsites ($21) to elegant lodge rooms ($169) and log cabins ($239); and a pleasant, cyclist-only campground called Pedal Inn, 1300 False Bay Drive (April–Oct only; ☎360/378-3049; $5). The local Bed & Breakfast Association (☎360/378-3030, @www.san-juan-island.net) can also hook you up with a room, though it's essential to reserve ahead, especially during late July's popular San Juan Island Jazz Festival (☎360/378-5509). Of Friday Harbor's plentiful places to eat, Bella Luna, 175 First St (☎360/378-4118), is good for Italian fare; Cannery House, 174 First St (☎360/378-2500), has fresh seafood,

The gateway of Bellingham

Eighteen miles south of the Canadian border, Bellingham is a pleasant town that's best used as a gateway, either to the winter-sports draw of Mount Baker, 56 scenic miles along Hwy-542 (ski season early-Nov to late-May; lift tickets $38 weekends, $32 weekdays; ☎ 360/734-6771, www.mtbaker.us), or west across Puget Sound on the Alaska Marine Highway, a three-day ferry ride ($231–352; ☎ 1-800/382-9229, www.akmhs.com) that winds between islands and a fjord-lined coast up to seven Alaska destinations, including Skagway (see p.1235).

If you find yourself in Bellingham for any length of time, the Victorian Fairhaven district, three miles south of downtown (I-5 exit 250), is the town's most appealing area, with hip bookstores, cafés, and boutiques – and it's near the ferry terminal, which also hosts Amtrak and Greyhound transit. The best rooms are the eight quaint units at the gabled Victorian North Garden Inn, 1014 N Garden St (☎ 360/671-7828 or 1-800/922-6414, www.northgardeninn.com; Ⓜ), a nice B&B near downtown and just off I-5, with good breakfasts and a great view of the bay; and the Bellwether, near Roeder Ave and F Street (☎ 1-877/411-1200, www.hotelbellwether.com; Ⓜ), a large resort hosting spacious rooms and suites with onsite spa, gym, and salon. The best place to camp is Larrabee State Park, seven miles south of Bellingham on Hwy-11 ($15–21), though there are other campgrounds on the road to Mount Baker as well.

Downtown has several decent places to eat, including Dirty Dan Harris, 1211 11th St (☎ 360/676-1011), for solid prime rib and steaks, and Dos Padres, 1111 Harris Ave (☎ 360/733-9900), for cheap Mexican staples. Fairhaven's hip coffee shop, Tony's, 1101 Harris Ave (☎ 360/733-6319), sometimes hosts live music.

soups, sandwiches, and homemade breads; and San Juan Donut Shop, 209 Spring St (☎ 360/378-5059), serves good, hefty breakfasts from 6.30am.

At the northwest tip of the island is Roche Harbor, established in the 1880s around the limestone trade, and highlighted by the gracious white Hotel de Haro, 248 Reuben Memorial Drive (☎ 360/378-2155 or 1-800/451-8910, www.rocheharbor.com; Ⓜ–☎), built over the harbor in 1886 and still appealing for its upscale suites, standard rooms, and quaint cottages. At the hotel there are several places to eat. The best by far is McMillen's (☎ 360/378-5757), with good, if pricey, steak and seafood entrees and waterside vistas.

The Olympic Peninsula

West of Puget Sound lies the great Olympic Peninsula, accessible by US-101, which loops around its coastal perimeter. The Olympic Mountains at the peninsula's core are rich with dense vegetation thickening into rainforest. Home to several of these forests and unspoiled Pacific beaches, the peninsula provides habitat for a huge variety of wildlife and seabirds. Luckily, much of the terrain is protected as Olympic National Park, a rugged preserve that merits a visit for its excellent hiking, bicycling, climbing and other outdoor activities.

Port Townsend

With its brightly painted mansions, convivial cafés, and easily walkable scale, PORT TOWNSEND is a charming, if somewhat isolated, relic from the 1890s that's a great place to spend a day or two before venturing on to the mountains. Perched on the peninsula's northeastern tip across from Keystone on Whidbey Island, Port Townsend's physical split – half on a bluff, half at sea level – reflects nineteenth-century social divisions, when wealthy merchants built their houses uptown, far above the rowdy clamor of the port below.

The downtown area lies at the base of the hill on Water Street, which sports an attractive medley of Victorian brick and stone buildings. The area's rich history is detailed in the museum of the Jefferson County Historical Society, 210 Polk St (Fri–Mon 11am–4pm; $3; 📞 www.jchsmuseum.org), which has an eclectic assortment of items, from a photographer's chair draped with bear and buffalo skins, to unusual late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century two-necked harp guitars. Up on the bluff, and even more eye-catching, is the grand Jefferson County Courthouse, Walker and Jefferson streets (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; 📞 www.co.jefferson.wa.us), a towering red Romanesque Revival edifice with a clock tower that looks like a medieval version of Big Ben.

Though bustling year-round, the town is busiest during its summer festivals – principally American Fiddle Tunes in early July, Jazz Port Townsend in late July, and the Wooden Boat Festival in September (📞 360/385-4742, 📞 www.woodenboat.org). Some of these take place at the state park at Fort Worden (📞 360/344-4400, 📞 www.fortworden.org), the remains of a military garrison two miles north of town. It offers a wide range of accommodation from dorm beds ($18) to campsites ($22) and former officers' houses (5–8), as well as several museums, a science center, and a lighthouse – not to mention dozens of good hiking trails at the edge of Puget Sound.

Practicalities

Although Port Townsend is easily accessed by road, you can also get there by ferry from Keystone (see p.1182). Get maps and information at the helpful visitor center, 2437 E Sims Way (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; 📞 360/385-2722 or 1-888/365-6978, 📞 www.ptguide.com), twelve blocks south of the ferry terminal on Hwy-20.

There's a good choice of places to stay, and the most central is the 🏠 Palace Hotel, 1004 Water St (📞 360/385-0773, 📞 www.palacehotelpuget.com; 5–9), a Victorian charmer with an elegant lobby and antique decor, claw-footed tubs, and excellent views of the sound. Rooms range from ultra-cheap units with shared bath to affordable two-room suites. The town's specialty, though, is its B&Bs, the best of which occupy grand Victorian mansions uptown, such as the Ann Starrett Mansion, 744 Clay St (📞 360/385-3205 or 1-800/321-0644, 📞 www.starrettmansion.com; 5), an 1889 Queen Anne gem with elegant ceiling frescoes, a splendid spiral staircase, and antique furnishings; and the delightful Manresa Castle, Seventh and Sheridan streets (📞 360/385-5750 or 1-800/732-1281, 📞 www.manresacastle.com), a quasi-French castle from 1892 that has thirty rooms ranging from affordable cozy single units to swanky suites in the tower (4–7).

Port Townsend has many fine places to eat, among them Fountain Café, 920 Washington St (📞 360/385-1364), with seafood and pasta specialties like oyster stew and wild mushroom risotto, and the Silverwater Café, 237 Taylor St (📞 360/385-6448), with fresh seafood such as Northwest floribunda and ahi tuna. Also excellent is 🏠 Sweet Laurette Patisserie, 1029 Lawrence St (📞 360/385-4886), the best French-style bakery in town, featuring elaborate (and expensive) cakes that resemble artworks, and cheaper scones, pies, and pastries.

Port Angeles

PORT ANGELES is the peninsula's main town and the most popular point of entry into Olympic National Park, a few miles to the south. Its working-class harbor is backed by striking mountains, but there are few reasons to linger, except as a stopover to more compelling destinations.

Although it's preferable to stay inside the park, Port Angeles has a number of inexpensive chain motels near its uninspiring one-way main drags, First Street and Front Street. The most serviceable is Best Western Olympic Lodge, 140 Del Guzzi Drive (☎ 360/452-2993, 🌐 www.portangeleshotelmotel.com; 📍 5), but for more upscale accommodation elsewhere in town, try Domaine Madeleine, 146 Wildflower Lane (☎ 360/457-4174, 🌐 www.domainemadeleine.com; 📍 7), an elegant B&B with art-themed rooms and a lovely five-acre garden.

For food, head for the tiny First Street Haven, 107 E First St and Laurel (☎ 360/457-0352), for its seafood, sandwiches, and pasta; the upscale Bella Italia, 118 E First St (☎ 360/457-5442), has solid seafood and Italian cuisine; and Thai Peppers, 222 N Lincoln St (☎ 360/452-4995), is surprisingly good for Thai fare.

Port Angeles has the peninsula's best transportation links. Olympic Bus Lines (☎ 360/417-0700, 🌐 www.olympicbuslines.com) offers daily trips to Seattle ($39) and Sea-Tac Airport ($49), while Clallam Transit buses (75¢–$2; ☎ 360/452-4511 or 1-800/858-3747, 🌐 www.clallamtransit.com) go west from Port Angeles around the peninsula and east to Sequim – from there connecting with Jefferson Transit ($1.25; ☎ 360/371-0497, 🌐 www.jeffersontransit.com) buses to Port Townsend. Black Ball Transport runs ferries to Victoria in Canada (May–Dec; $11 passengers, $42.50 vehicle and driver; ☎ 360/457-4491, 🌐 www.cohoferry.com), while Victoria Express (May–Sept; $12.50; ☎ 360/452-8088 or 1-800/633-1589, 🌐 www.victoriaexpress.com) operates a faster passenger-only service. Port Angeles' visitor center, 121 E Railroad St, beside the ferry terminal (☎ 360/452-2363, 🌐 www.portangeles.org), has information on the entire peninsula and can put you in touch with river-rafting and sea-kayaking operators.

Neah Bay and Cape Flattery

Whereas US-101 takes a turn inland from Port Angeles to skirt Olympic National Park, Hwy-112 clammers along the coast for seventy miles to NEAH BAY, the tiny fishing village that is home to the Makah tribe, seagoing Native Americans whose reservation is the site of the Ozette Dig. It's among the most significant archeological finds in North America, where erosion in 1970 uncovered thousands of artifacts: harpoons, intricately-carved seal clubs, watertight boxes made without metal, bowls, toys – all from an era before trade with Europeans. The site was reburied in 1981, but the finds are displayed at the Makah Cultural and Research Center, Hwy-112 at Bayview Ave (daily summer 10am–5pm, rest of year Wed–Sun only; $5; 🌐 www.makah.com), displaying marine dioramas, dugout cedar canoes, fishing gear, and a life-sized replica of a fifteenth-century Makah longhouse.

At the northern corner of the reservation is CAPE FLATTERY, the continental US's northwesternmost point, a remote headland accessible on an unpaved road from Neah Bay. A half-mile hike from the road through the rainforest leads to the cape that once “flattered” Captain Cook with the hope of finding a harbor. Below the cape, the waves have worn caves into the sheer rock of the cliff face, while opposite, on Tatoosh Island, the Coast Guard runs a remote lighthouse (closed to the public).

You can get to Neah Bay on Clallam Transit (see above), though there are few good options for accommodation. Given the area's drab motels, to find anything special you'll have to head seventeen miles east to Sekiū, a sports fishing town, to reach Van Riper's Resort, 280 Front St (☎ 360/963-2334, 🌐 www.vanrippersresort.com; 📍 3–6), which has a range of motel rooms and campsites, and more elaborate lodge units and waterfront suites, along with beach access and boat rentals.

Olympic National Park

Stunning Olympic National Park covers much of the peninsula's mountainous interior and a detached 57-mile strip of the Pacific coast. Created in 1938 by Franklin D. Roosevelt, partly to ensure the survival of the rare Roosevelt elk, it now has the largest remaining herd in the US. More than two hundred miles of wild rivers wind through the park, while the river valleys contain sizeable tracts of temperate rainforest.

The main visitor center, in Port Angeles at 600 E Park Ave (Mon–Fri 10am–4pm, summer also Sat & Sun 9am–4pm; ☎ 360/565-3100, 🌐 www.nps.gov/olym), has useful brochures and trail maps, while the Wilderness Information Center, 3002 Mount Angeles Rd (May & June daily 8am–4.30pm; July & Aug Sun–Thurs 7.30am–6pm, Fri & Sat 7.30am–7pm), supplies information on trail conditions in the area; smaller visitor centers are located at Hurricane Ridge and Hoh Rainforest. The entrance fee is $5 for individuals or $15 per car; both fees are good for seven days of park access. The weather is consistently erratic and often rainy – there's even a fair amount of snow as late as June. If you are staying inside the park, at any of the sixteen excellent campgrounds ($10–16), you'll need your own vehicle. Try Heart o' the Hills, six miles south of Port Angeles, along Hurricane Ridge Road, or further west, Elwah and Altaire – though these are closed in winter along with several others.

Hurricane Ridge and Lake Crescent

The main visitor center marks the start of a winding, precipitous road that climbs seventeen miles to daunting Hurricane Ridge, where the jagged peaks and sparkling glaciers of the Olympic Mountains spread majestically before you. A day lodge on the ridge (May–Oct daily 10am–4pm) has tourist facilities and information. From here, Hurricane Hill Trail (3-mile roundtrip) is a moderate hike, climbing through wildflower meadows to the peak where, on a clear day, Cape Flattery, the Juan de Fuca Strait, Vancouver Island, and the Cascade Mountains are all in view.

Ten miles west of Port Angeles, glacially carved Lake Crescent is popular for trout fishing and hiking on shoreline trails. Good places to stay are Lake Crescent Lodge (May–Oct; ☎ 360/928-3211, 🌐 www.lakecrescentlodge.com; ⑨–⑨), well placed among dense forest on the lake's south shore, offering simple rooms to elegant cottages; and Sol Duc Hot Springs Resort (March–Oct; ☎ 1-866/4SOLDUC, 🌐 visitsolduc.com; ⑨), set deep in the park twelve miles off US-101, providing free guest access to Sol Duc Hot Springs (otherwise $11) – three pools with mineral-rich waters bubbling up at 100 to 108F°.

Hoh Rainforest

The Hoh Rainforest sits nineteen miles along Upper Hoh River Road, which branches off from US-101 twelve miles south of the town of Forks. From the visitor center (Fri–Sun 10am–4pm, summer daily closes 6pm; ☎ 360/374-6925), there are two short trails to explore: the Hall of Mosses Trail, and the slightly longer Spruce Trail, following along the glacier-fed Hoh River. More energetic hikers can try the 36-mile Hoh River Trail up to the base of 8000ft Mount Olympus. Climbing the ice-covered peak is a major undertaking, so you may want to camp along the route ($12 per night). Cougars, black bears, eagles, beavers, and other wildlife are very much present, and in winter Roosevelt elk from higher elevations gather here.

South to Kalaloch and the ocean beaches

Beyond the Hoh turnoff, US-101 dips down to the wild beaches of the Pacific coast, where black rocks jut out of the sea, and the strong undertow, floating tree trunks, and dramatic tides make the churning waters striking to watch, if rather unsafe for swimming. The hiking can be magnificent, though, and a series of short, appealing trails head down to and along the seashore – Ruby Beach, named for its red-and-black-pebbled sand, is the unmistakable highlight. Near the end of the park's coastal stretch, Kalaloch has a few campgrounds ($14–18; reserve at ☎1-800/365-CAMP), and the impressive Kalaloch Lodge (☎360/962-2271, www.visitkalaloch.com), has basic lodge rooms (5–6) and more upscale cabins (5–9), as well as a good onsite restaurant. The ranger station here also provides information and suggestions for hiking trips (☎360/962-2283).

The rainforests and Lake Quinault

South of Kalaloch, US-101 turns inland before reaching the 25-mile dirt road that branches northeast to isolated Queets River Rainforest, worthwhile for its rustic trails, and for the luxuriant flora and fauna, highlighted by the world's tallest Douglas fir – 220ft tall and 45ft around.

The most accessible of the rainforests is the Quinault Rainforest, around the shores of glacier-carved Lake Quinault, just off US-101. One of the best hiking trails is the half-mile Maple Glade Trail on the north shore, leading through rainforest vegetation. Longer and more difficult trails, such as the dark, four-mile Quinault Loop Trail, through looming stands of old-growth trees, take hikers up the forested river valley and into the Olympic Mountains.

The best of Lake Quinault's three hotels is the charming 1926 Quinault Lodge (☎ 360/288-2900 or 1-800/562-6672, 🌐 www.visitlakequinault.com; 📍), on the shores of Lake Quinault, offering rooms with fireplaces or lakeside views, and a pool and sauna. There are also four lakeside campgrounds ($10–15), information for which is available at the ranger station, 353 S Shore Rd (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm, summer also Sat & Sun 9am–4pm; ☎ 360/288-2525, 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/r6/olympic).

The southwest coast

Heading south on US-101 from Lake Quinault, leaving the national park, it's about forty hilly miles to industrial Aberdeen, from where there's a choice of routes: US-12/Hwy-8 lead east towards Olympia (see p.1181), while Hwy-101 pushes south over the hills, threading along the shore of muddy Willapa Bay and the southwest coast of Washington. Here, the Long Beach Peninsula is something of a low-rent resort area, offering the usual chain motels and souvenir shops. It's worth a trip to the northern tip, however, to visit OYSTERVILLE, a forested collection of rusting old buildings and home to Oysterville Sea Farms (☎ 360/665-6585, 🌐 www.oysterville.net), recognizable by its piles of discarded shells and renowned for its fresh smoked oysters ($6.50 per package). Also good for the palate is the Pacific Coast Cranberry Museum, 2907 Pioneer Rd in the town of Long Beach (☎ 360/642-5553, 🌐 www.cranberrymuseum.com), where you can wander through a cranberry bog and purchase berry-flavored treats.

Down at the far southwestern tip of Washington, near the mouth of the Columbia River, the last points of interest are within scenic Cape Disappointment State Park (daily summer 6.30am–10pm, rest of year closes 4pm; 🌐 www.parks.wa.gov). The evocative 1856 North Head Lighthouse (summer daily 11am–3pm; $1) still stands watch, and the Lewis and Clark Interpretive Center (daily 10am–5pm; $3) can tell you all about the historical hazards of navigating the Columbia River. Fortunately, you'll be spared any such difficulty as you travel south on Hwy-101 over the 1966 span of the Astoria Bridge, crossing the state boundary into Oregon (see p.1197).

The Cascade Mountains

The Cascade Mountains offer mile upon mile of dense forested wilderness, stretching from Canada to Oregon, traversed by a tangle of beautiful trails – which, for all but a few summer months, you'll need snowshoes to hike. The most popular access point is Mount Rainier, set in its own national park ninety miles southeast of Seattle, while the haunting scenery around volcanic Mount St Helens compels visitors from near and far. Further north, Hwy-20, the high mountain road that crosses the Cascades, is by far the most spectacular route to eastern Washington, traversing the snow-capped wonder of North Cascades National Park.

The North Cascades and the Cascade Loop

When Hwy-20 opened up the rugged North Cascades in 1972, the towns of the eastern foothills created the Cascade Loop (☎509/662-3888, 🌐www.cascade-loop.com), a 400-mile roundtrip that channeled tourist traffic along highways 20, 153, 97, and 2. The full trip is only feasible during the summer, since at other times snow closes the mountain passes; unless you have at least three days to explore the territory in full, you're better off taking a few selected treks through the gorgeous environs, making brief stops along the way. You can find out more details about some of the best hikes at North Cascades National Park Information Center, 2105 Hwy-20 near Sedro Woolley, located just east of where Hwy-20 begins its journey inland at Burlington (daily 8am–4.30pm; ☎360/856-5700, 🌐www.nps.gov/noca). The center also offers information about the area's geology, climate, and wildlife.

Winthrop

From the information center, the highway threads through high mountain passes to tiny WINTHROP, an old mining town decked out in a Wild West get-up, and the original setting for Owen Wister's The Virginian. While the effect is more than a bit cheesy, the false-fronted “saloons” and “dance halls” do make for some good snapshots. If you'd like to stay, the best choice is the Hotel Rio Vista, 285 Riverside Ave (☎509/996-3535 or 1-800/398-0911, 🌐www.hotelriovista.com; 📍), which offers nice suites with hot tubs, kitchenettes, and DVD players.

As for eating and drinking options, Winthrop Brewing Co, 155 Riverside Ave (☎509/996-3183), dispenses solid microbrews, and the Duck Brand Cantina, 248 Riverside Ave (☎509/996-2192, 🌐www.methownet.com/duck), serves up cheap and tasty Mexican fare and has six simple, Western-themed rooms in its onsite B&B (📍). The nearby visitor center, 202 Riverside Ave (☎509/996-2125, 🌐www.winthropwashington.com), offers information and backcountry permits.

Chelan and Stehekin

The fetching resort of CHELAN, sixty miles south of Winthrop, nestles at the foot of Lake Chelan, whose spectacularly deep waters fill a glacially-carved trough nestled in the mountains. Of several good lodging options, Campbell's Resort, 104 W Woodin Ave (☎509/682-2561 or 1-800/553-8225, 🌐www.campbellsresort.com; 📍4–8, varies by season), is the most appealing for its range of lakeside rooms and suites, some of which come with fireplaces, kitchenettes, and balconies, though cheaper digs are available at the Apple Inn Motel, 1002 E Woodin Ave (☎509/682-4044; $40–65). For eating, Deepwater Brewing & Public House, 225 Hwy-150 (☎509/682-2720), has burgers, salads, and steaks, as well as its own microbrews. The ranger station at 428 W Woodin Ave (daily 7.45am–4.30pm; ☎509/682-2576) can ply you with hiking maps when you're ready to hit the trails.

The Lake Chelan Boat Company, 1418 W Woodin Ave (☎509/682-2224 info, ☎509/682-4584 reservations, 🌐www.ladyofthelake.com), runs a passenger ferry service to the head of Lake Chelan. Leaving from the jetty a mile west of town on Woodin Avenue, the Lady of the Lake II takes four hours to cruise the 55 miles of the nation's deepest gorge (May–Oct; $22.50 one-way, $38 roundtrip); the year-round Lady Express (May–Oct $34.50 one-way, $57 roundtrip; Nov–April $38 roundtrip) reaches Lake Chelan's mountainous western tip in half the time; and the high-speed Lady Cat takes you on a thrilling 75min jaunt (July–Sept; $63 one-way, $102 roundtrip). All cruises feature 60- to 90-minute layovers at STEHEKIN, a tiny, isolated village otherwise accessible only by a Chelan Airways seaplane ($89 one-way, $149 roundtrip; ☎509/682-5555, 🌐www.chelanairways.com), which is also available for airborne tours of the region ($99–229). At Stehekin there are campsites and trailheads leading to some of the best hiking and backpacking in the North Cascades. Bikes and canoes are available from the North Cascades Stehekin Lodge (☎509/682-4494, 🌐www.stehekin.com; 4–6), where the lakeside rooms are a bit pricier than standard units. For camping and hiking information (and, for some of the trails, a free wilderness permit), visit the Golden West Visitor Center near the Stehekin jetty (April–Oct daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎360/856-5700, ext. 340).

Leavenworth to Snoqualmie Falls

Several miles south of Chelan, the Cascade Loop turns west along US-2 at the apple-producing town of Wenatchee, then heads for pocket-sized LEAVENWORTH, a Bavarian theme town where even the fast-food outlets are decked out in high gables and half-timbered woodwork. It's best as a base for taking in the outdoor activities in the spectacular mountain surroundings. The ranger station, just off US-2 at 600 Sherbourne St (daily 7.45am–4.30pm; ☎509/782-1413), provides trail guides and hiking information, and bikes, canoes, and kayaks can be rented from Leavenworth Mountain Sports, 940 Hwy-2 at Icicle Rd (☎509/548-7864). The nearby visitor center, 894 Hwy-2 (☎509/548-5807, 🌐www.leavenworth.org), has copious listings of places to stay and eat. The cozy rooms and suites of the Hotel Pension Anna, 926 Commercial St (☎1-800/509-ANNA, 🌐www.pensionanna.com; 4), are decked out in cheerful Teutonic kitsch, but the rooms at the stylish Enzian Motor Inn, 590 Hwy-2 (☎509/548-5269 or 1-800/223-8511, 🌐www.enzianinn.com; 5), are more tasteful, if blander too. The Andreas Keller, 829 Front St (☎509/548-6000), doles out hefty helpings of gut-busting German cuisine, as does King Ludwig's, 921 Front St (☎509/548-6625), which also features lively Bavarian dancing, hearty pork schnitzel, and beer-bearing barmaids – bring your Tyrolean hat.

West of Leavenworth, US-2 crosses the mountains over Stevens Pass, but the principal east–west highway, I-90, lies further south, connecting Seattle with the Yakima Valley. Near I-90 is the striking, 270ft Snoqualmie Falls (☎425/831-5784, 🌐www.snoqualmiefalls.com), and behind it the luxurious 🏡 Salish Lodge, 6501 Railroad Ave SE (☎425/888-2556 or 1-800/2-SALISH, 🌐www.salishlodge.com; 9), still best known as a location in the David Lynch TV series Twin Peaks.

Set in its own national park, glacier-clad MOUNT RAINIER is the highest (14,410ft) and most accessible peak in the Cascades, and a major Washington landmark. Not until midsummer does the snow melt enough for roads to open, and then the deer and mountain goats appear, dazzling wildflowers paint the alpine meadows, and the mountain makes for some perfect hiking.

More than three hundred miles of trails criss-cross Mount Rainier National Park, ranging from short, simple interpretive walks – such as the 1.2-mile Nisqually Vista Trail loop – to the five-mile Skyline Trail up to Glacier Overlook, to the 93-mile Wonderland Trail that encircles Mount Rainier itself. If you only have a day to explore the park, visit the south and east sides from the Nisqually entrance to Paradise, with a side trip to Sunrise – a stunning eighty-mile drive winding through river valleys and lowland forests with glaciated peaks and stunning vistas.

Climbing Mount Rainier itself is hazardous and should only be undertaken by experienced climbers. The long-established guide service, Rainier Mountaineering, in Paradise (☎ 1-800/238-5756, 🌐 www.rmiguide.com), offers a one-day training course followed by a two-day guided climb to the summit for $795.

The Paradise visitor center (May to mid-Oct daily 10am–6pm; mid-Oct to April Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 360/569-2211 ext 2328) has films and exhibits on natural history and a circular observation room for viewing the mountain.

Practicalities

The park is located some seventy miles southeast of Tacoma by way of Hwy-7 and a transfer onto minor route 706. Admission is $15 per vehicle, $5 per person, for a one-week pass. The park has four entrances: Nisqually in the southwest corner, Stephen's Canyon in the southeast, White River in the northeast, and Carbon River in the northwest. Only the Nisqually entrance is open year-round (for cross-country skiing; the others open June–Sept) and the only one serviced by public transportation – a ten-hour day-trip with Gray Line from Seattle (May–Sept; $59; ☎ 360/624-5077 or 1-800/426-7505, 🌐 www.graylineseattle.com). For map and trail conditions, stop by the visitor centers at Longmire, Ohanapeosh, Paradise, Sunrise and White River (details at 🌐 www.nps.gov/mora).

For accommodation, the classic rustic lodge of the National Park Inn (☎ 360/569-2275, 🌐 rainier.guestservices.com; $100, plus $34 for private bath), is nestled in a forest at Longmire, open year-round with 25 guestrooms and a restaurant. Make reservations well in advance. Outside the park, in the town of Ashford, Whittaker's Bunkhouse, 30205 SR 706 E (☎ 360/569-2439, 🌐 www.whittakersbunkhouse.com), is an old loggers' bunkhouse with dorm beds ($30) and double rooms with private baths (📍–📍); and Mounthaven, 38210 SR 706 E (☎ 360/569-2594 or 1-800/456-9380, 🌐 www.mounthaven.com; 📍), has ten cabins, some with fireplaces, kitchenettes, fridges, wood stoves, and porches. The park's six campgrounds require reservations ($8–15; ☎ 1-800/365-CAMP, 🌐 reservations.nps.gov), which you can obtain up to 24 hours in advance from any hiking center in the park. For overnight backpacking, pick up a required wilderness permit, free from Longmire, White River, or Paradise ranger stations ($20 if by reservation; ☎ 360/569-2211).

Mount St Helens

The looming volcanic mound of MOUNT ST HELENS erupted on May 18, 1980, leaving a scorched area of near-total destruction: its blast wave flattened 230 square miles of surrounding forests, heavy clouds of ash settled as far away as Portland, and a massive mudflow sent an avalanche of debris down the river valleys. Since then, the forests and animal species have begun their recovery, though the scarred landscape still testifies to the awesome force of nature. All this has led to Mount St Helens justifiably becoming a major tourist attraction.

Located in Gifford Pinchot National Forest, the area around the mountain has three entry routes. Most visitors arrive along Hwy-504, off I-5 roughly halfway between Olympia and Portland, which snakes through dark green forests until bald, spiky trees give way to thousands of lifeless gray trees lying in combed-down rows. At the end is the Johnson Ridge Observatory (May–Oct daily 10am–6pm; ☎ 360/274-2140, 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/gpnf/mshnvm), which offers breathtaking views of the still-steaming lava dome, a film of the mountain's eruption, and testimony by blast survivors. On bright summer days, views of the mountain can be both picturesque and ominous. The only real disadvantage with the Hwy-504 approach to Mount St Helens is its popularity – expect long caravans of SUVs and RVs on any fair-weather day, and huge numbers of tourists at the observatory.

One alternative is to take Hwy-503 from Portland (via I-5) to Cougar, on the mountain's southern side – a surprisingly moist and verdant terrain, dotted with ravines and lava caves, as well as ashen lahars (volcanic mudflows) – from where the summer-only forest roads USFS-90, -25, and -99 wind along its flanks to Windy Ridge on the northeast side of the mountain. This is the best place to view the volcanic apocalypse up close: entire slopes denuded of foliage, colossal tree husks scattered like twigs, and huge dead zones where anything alive was vaporized. Windy Ridge can also be accessed from the north from Randle along USFS-25 and -99, which provides access to what remains of Spirit Lake and passes through lava flows with numerous viewpoints en route.

Practicalities

Although climbing Mount St Helens has been forbidden since the mountain began its rumblings again, you can still get the one-day Monument Pass ($3 single visit, $6 multiple visits) that allows entry to the Coldwater Ridge and Mount St Helens visitor centers, and the Johnston Ridge Observatory; the Northwest Forest Pass ($5) is good for other sites, and is available through putting money in drop boxes at site parking lots. En route to Windy Ridge from Hwy-503 is Mount St Helens Volcanic Monument Headquarters (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 360/449-7800) in Amboy, which has maps and information. Just off I-5 near Castle Rock is the Mount St Helens Visitor Center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 360/274-0962), complete with informative exhibits, while Coldwater Ridge Visitor Center, 3029 Spirit Lake Hwy (daily 10am–6pm, winter Thurs–Mon 10am–5pm; ☎ 360/274-2114), focuses on the ways plants and animals have successfully recolonized the blast zones.

Though there aren't any campgrounds within the national monument, there are private campgrounds in the vicinity of Cougar (June–Aug only; ☎ 503/813-6666 for reservations): the Cougar campsite, located on Yale Reservoir just north of the village (60 sites; $15); Beaver Bay, about a mile north on 503 (78 sites; $15); and Cresap Bay, two miles south of 503 (73 sites; $15). Inside the park, wilderness camping is allowed below 4800 feet, and at Climbers Bivouac – the only permit required is the Northwest Forest Pass ($5; see above). Alternately, Seaquest State Park (daily summer entry 8am–8pm, rest of year 8am–5pm; campsites $15–27; ☎ 1-800/452-5687), abuts Silver Lake about five miles east of I-5 on Hwy-504.

Eastern Washington

The dry expanse of eastern Washington has little in common with its green, western counterpart: olive-colored sagebrush covers many acres, and massive red rocks loom over the prairies, while huge bare patches of basalt and torn-away groundcover (from centuries of Ice Age floods) give the area the unattractive geological moniker of the “channeled scablands.” To the south lies the lower Yakima Valley, with miles of orchards and farms, which make it one of the largest producers of apples in the world. Of eastern Washington's major towns, only Spokane has any degree of cultural life, but some are decent bases for outdoor activities such as fishing, hiking, and skiing.

Ellensburg and Yakima

East of the mountains along I-90, 130 miles from Seattle, ELLENSBURG is the first notable stop. The dusty little burg of fetching nineteenth-century red-brick architecture is mainly known for its Ellensburg Rodeo (tickets start at $12; ☎ 509/962-7831 or 1-800/637-2444, 🌐 www.ellensburgrodeo.com), held over Labor Day weekend, with Stetson-clad cowhands roping steers, riding bulls, and braving bucking broncos.

Greyhound stops at 1512 Hwy-97. The visitor center, 609 N Main St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 509/925-3138, 🌐 www.ellensburg-chamber.com), provides maps and hotel options; one safe choice is the basic Ellensburg Inn, 1700 Canyon Rd (☎ 509/925-9801; 🌐 www.ellensburginn.com; 📍). The Art Deco Valley Café, 103 W Third Ave (☎ 509/925-3050), is a good place to dine on eclectic American fare.

To the south on I-82, the agricultural hub of YAKIMA has few attractions, but is an excellent base to visit the tasting rooms of the excellent vintners scattered throughout the Yakima Valley (information at ☎ 1-800/258-7270, 🌐 www.wineyakimavalley.com). Wine-tour maps, as well as lodging and dining information, can be found at the visitor center, 10 N Eighth St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/221-0751, 🌐 www.visityakima.com). Greyhound stops nearby at 602 E Yakima Ave. Standard-issue motels and diners abound along N First Street; worth noting are Gasparetti's, no. 1013 (☎ 509/248-0628), and Santiago's, 111 E Yakima Ave (☎ 509/453-1644), providing agreeable Italian and Mexican fare, respectively. There's camping across the Yakima River on Hwy-24 at Sportsman State Park ($15–21; ☎ 509/575-2774 or 1-800/562-0990).

Walla Walla

About 120 miles southeast of Yakima along I-82 and US-12, WALLA WALLA is an uneventful college and agricultural town best known for its sweet onions – eaten raw like apples. This was the place where the missionary Marcus Whitman arrived from the East Coast in 1836, only to be martyred eleven years later when a band of natives murdered him, his wife, and eleven others. The event generated such terror about native uprisings that the government declared the region a US territory and sent in the army to protect the settlers – and deal harshly with native tribes.

The site where the Whitman Mission was burned down (daily 8am–4.30pm, summer until 6pm; $3; ☎ 509/522-6360, 🌐 www.nps.gov/whmi), seven miles west of town off US-12, has basic marks on the ground to illustrate its layout; a visitor center shows a film on Whitman and exhibits the weapon thought to have killed him. Of more pseudo-historical value, the Fort Walla Walla Museum, 755 Myra Rd (April–Oct daily 10am–5pm; 🌐 www.fortwallawallamuseum.org; $7), is a curious mock-up of a pioneer village, with sixteen shacks loaded with antiques and Old West dioramas.

Walla Walla's visitor center is at 29 E Sumach St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–3pm; ☎ 1-877/WW-VISIT, 🌐 www.wwchamber.com). The Best Western Walla Walla Suites, 7 E Oak St (☎ 509/525-4700; 📍), provides good basic accommodation, as do the other familiar chains in town. The decent eateries are mostly downtown; Merchants Delicatessen, 21 E Main St (☎ 509/525-0900), is a nice breakfast spot for espresso and pastries, as well as lunchtime deli fare.

Spokane

A few miles past the Idaho border on I-90, SPOKANE (“spo-CAN”), eastern Washington's only real city of any size, has some grandiose late nineteenth-century buildings – built on the spoils of nearby Idaho silver mines – though its heyday is long gone. Still, its pleasant parks and striking architecture can nicely fill a half-day. The town's hub, hundred-acre Riverfront Park, was the site of the 1974 World's Fair and sprawls over two islands in the middle of the Spokane River, which tumbles down the rocky shelves of Spokane Falls. The attractions (day-passes $15; June–Aug Sun–Thurs 11am–8pm, Fri & Sat 11am–10pm; 🌐 www.spokaneriverfrontpark.com) include an ice-skating rink, the charming hand-carved Looft Carousel ($2), and the Spokane Falls Skyride ($6), which rises above the falls to take in a commanding view of the area.

Most of the relics of Spokane's early grandeur can be found several blocks southwest on West Riverside Avenue, where Neoclassical facades cluster around Jefferson Street. The city's other architectural highlights include the Clark Mansion, 2208 W Second Ave, an 1897 marvel of lovely classical arcades and red-tiled roofs, and the Tudor Revival splendor of the Campbell House, 2316 W First Ave. The latter can be toured as a part of the Northwest Museum of Art and Culture, at the same site (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm; $7; 🌐 www.northwestmuseum.org). The museum focuses on regional history and artwork, Native American culture, and fine arts from WPA-era paintings to items from nineteenth-century Japan and seventeenth-century Holland.

Practicalities

Amtrak and Greyhound share the transit center at 221 W First St, and the visitor center is at 201 W Main St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 509/747-3230 or 1-800/776-5263, 🌐 www.visitspokane.com). Nice accommodations include the 1914 🏠 Davenport Hotel, 10 S Post St (☎ 1-800/899-1482, 🌐 www.thedavenporthotel.com; 7), with its wildly ornate lobby and spacious, well-designed suites; and the West Coast Ridpath, 515 W Sprague Ave (☎ 509/838-2711, 🌐 www.westcoasthotels.com; 4), a 265-room hotel with good views over the city. There's also camping in Riverside State Park ($15–21; ☎ 509/456-3964), six miles northwest off Hwy-291. For eating, Luna, 5620 S Perry St (☎ 509/448-2383), serves up delicious, pricey Northwest Cuisine and cheaper gourmet pizzas, while Mizuna, 214 N Howard St (☎ 509/747-2004), has upscale seafood and regional cuisine, as well as a mean muscovy duck.

The Grand Coulee Dam and Lake Roosevelt

Eighty miles west of Spokane, amid parched and dusty land, the vast Grand Coulee Dam is the country's largest concrete structure and was one of the cornerstones of FDR's New Deal, providing jobs for workers from all over the country, including Woody Guthrie, who also worked on the Bonneville Dam in the Columbia Gorge (see p.1206) and was commissioned to write twenty songs about the project.

The dam's heyday was during World War II, when its waterpower was harnessed to make the aluminum that became essential to the production of war material, and it continues to be one of the world's top generators of hydroelectricity. Heroic tales of power production are detailed in the visitor center, on Hwy-155 on the west side of the dam (daily 9am–5pm, summer 8.30am–11pm; free; 🌐 www.grandcouleedam.org), which also runs free tours of the dam and one of its massive generating plants (daily every two hours 10am–4pm). On summer nights (June–Sept) the dam is even lit up by a laser show that takes place from 8.30pm to 10pm, depending on the month.

The area offers little in the way of notable accommodation or food, but more than thirty campgrounds lie around the 150-mile-long, spindly reservoir of Lake Roosevelt, which becomes more woody and secluded as you get further north. Some noteworthy spots include Spring Canyon Campground, on the lakeshore ($10 May–Sept, rest of year $5; ☎ 509/633-9188, 🌐 www.nps.gov/laro), and Steamboat Rock State Park, twelve miles south of Grand Coulee ($15–21; ☎ 509/633-1304).

Oregon

For nineteenth-century pioneers on the arduous Oregon Trail, the rich and fertile Willamette Valley was the promised land, and an obvious choice for Oregon's first settlements. Today, the valley is still the heart of the state's social, political, and cultural life. Portland, the biggest city, has a cozy European feel; Salem, the state capital, maintains a small-town air; and Eugene, at the southern foot of the valley, is a likable college community.

East of Portland, waterfalls cascade down mossy cliffs along the Columbia River Gorge, south of which looms the imposing presence of Mount Hood. Central Oregon, and its popular recreation hub of Bend, is located on a high chaparral desert, while further south around Grants Pass, the major rivers carve steep gorges and make for some excellent whitewater rafting, and the liberal hamlet of Ashland offers a splash of culture with its annual Shakespeare Festival.

Several highways link the Willamette Valley to the coast, whose most northerly town, Astoria, enjoys a magnificent setting strewn with imposing Victorian homes. South along the Oregon coast, wide expanses of sand are broken by jagged black monoliths, pale lighthouses look out from stark headlands, and rough cliffs conceal small, sheltered coves. The coast is every bit as appealing as its California counterpart, and though colder, is also more protected and accessible. Finally, the rugged deserts and lava fields of Eastern Oregon are much more remote, and some small towns still celebrate their cowboy roots with annual rodeos.

Wherever you go, try to pronounce the state's name as "OR-uh-gun"; calling it "ORY-gone" will mark you as a tourist, and is sure to invite a quick correction.

Getting around Oregon

From Union Station at 800 NW Sixth Ave and an adjacent bus station, Portland is well connected by train and bus to Seattle in the north and California to the south. Amtrak runs its Coast Starlight train once daily north to Seattle or south to LA; the Cascades four times daily between Eugene and Seattle; and the Empire Builder twice-daily east to Chicago. Bus routes radiate from Portland out to western and eastern Washington, across southern and central Oregon and to the coast. Finally, cycling throughout Oregon is a popular endeavor, especially along majestic stretches of coastal Hwy-101. Having your own vehicle can facilitate access to many of the state's more remote spots, particularly if you're planning to sample the great hiking and camping options on hand (see @ www.oregon.gov/OPRD).

Portland

With few major attractions and an unpretentious bohemian flavor, PORTLAND makes for an excellent spot to slow down and relax in the wealth of good diners, microbreweries, clubs, bookstores, and coffeehouses. Though sporting grand Beaux Arts architecture, Portland has a small-city feel thanks to a walkable urban core of short city blocks and attractions that cluster close together.

The city was named after Portland, Maine, following a coin toss between its two East Coast founders in 1845 ("Boston" was the other option). Its location on the Willamette River, just 78 miles from the Pacific, made it a perfect lumber and trading port, and it grew quickly, replacing its clapboard houses with ornate facades and Gothic gables. As a reminder of those days, the town's quirky "Benson Bubblers" – four-headed drinking fountains that are prime fixtures on downtown streets – are constantly flowing.

By the 1970s, when the lumber industry started to decline, Portland's historic buildings had decayed or were sacrificed to parking lots and expressways. In the last few decades, however, much effort has been made to salvage what was left of the past, replacing concrete with red brick, and introducing folksy statues and murals. More importantly, Portland's groundbreaking "urban growth boundary" has done much to limit unrestrained development, and preserve the low-slung scale and old-fashioned charms of many neighborhoods – thus making the city that much more appealing to refugees from California to New York.

Arrival and information

Portland International Airport (PDX) is a twenty-minute drive from downtown, also accessed by MAX "Red Line" light rail (3–5 times hourly, 5am–11pm; $1.95), which connects to the airport near Terminal C and takes about forty minutes to reach Pioneer Courthouse Square downtown. A cab from the airport into town costs $30. Greyhound, 550 NW 6th Ave, and Amtrak, close by at 800 NW 6th Ave, are within walking distance of the center; if you arrive at night, take a cab – this part of town is dicey after dark.

The visitor center, in Pioneer Square at 701 SW 6th Ave (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.30pm, Sat 10am–4pm; ☎ 503/275-8355, 🌐 www.pova.org), has plenty of maps and information on both the city and the state. Portland's main post office is at 715 NW Hoyt St (☎ 503/294-2124; zip code 97205). Unlike most US states, Oregon has no sales tax, so buying goods here can be cheaper than in neighboring states.

Although you can see much of the compact city center on foot, or along the city's impressive, extensive network of cycling paths and trails (visit 🌐 www.portlandonline.com/transportation for maps and information), Portland also has an excellent public transit network. Its MAX light rail system channels riders around central downtown and Old Town, connects to the western and eastern suburbs, and tunnels under Washington Park and the zoo. Tri-Met buses are based at the downtown transit mall along Fifth Avenue (southbound) and Sixth Avenue (northbound) – though renovation in coming years may shift buses to adjoining streets. The Tri-Met Ticket Office in Pioneer Square (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.30pm, unstaffed Sat 10am–4pm; ☎ 503/238-7433, 🌐 www.trimet.org) offers free transit maps and sells all-zone day-tickets ($4), regular fares ($1.65–1.95), and other passes.

The colorful Portland Streetcar line runs between the south waterfront, Portland State University, the Pearl District, and Northwest Portland, covering many downtown sights on NW and SW 10th and 11th streets. As with buses, fares are free inside Fareless Square – basically the downtown core – otherwise $1.65 (🌐 www.portlandstreetcar.org). Taxis don't stop in the street; get one at a hotel or call Broadway Cab (☎ 503/227-1234) or Portland Taxi Co. (☎ 503/256-5400).

Accommodation

Scads of flavorless motels line the interstates, but for a few dollars more you're far better staying downtown, where you'll find hostels, B&Bs, and a good range of hotels, the pick of which occupy grand and elegantly restored old buildings.

The City

The Willamette (pronounced "wuh-LAM-it") River bisects Portland into its east and west sides, with Burnside Street delineating the north from the south; each street address describes its relation to these dividers – SE, NW, and SW, and NE (there's also N, which is everything east of the river and roughly west of I-5). The downtown core lies between the river's west bank and the I-405 freeway, in the city's southwest section; the rest of town is mostly residential.

Downtown

Named after the adjacent Pioneer Courthouse, a squat 1868 structure that still maintains its judicial function, Pioneer Courthouse Square is the indisputable center of Portland. Surrounded by downtown's historic terracotta buildings, the square's curving brick terraces are perennially filled with music and people. Close by are some of Portland's leading attractions along SW Broadway and the Park Blocks – where fading plasterwork and ceramic reliefs face concrete and glass. From the square, you can take a two-and-a-half hour walking tour of city highlights (Fri–Sun 10am; $15; www.portlandwalkingtours.com).

Broadway epitomizes Portland's mix of early grandeur and new wealth, with prestigious hotels sharing space with cultural institutions, such as the grand old

Paramount movie theater, restored as part of the impressive Portland Center for the Performing Arts, 1111 SW Broadway (☎www.pcpa.com). One block west, the Portland Art Museum, 1219 SW Park Ave (Tues, Wed & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs & Fri 10am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10; ☎www.pam.org), has a wide-ranging collection of Northwest Native American masks, Mexican statues, and ancient Chinese figures, as well as temporary modern American and historic European shows. Nearby, decorated with huge trompe l'oeil pioneer murals, the Oregon History Center, 1200 SW Park Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10; ☎www.ohs.org), presents imaginative exhibits exploring different facets of the state's history. Between the museum and the history center run the South Park Blocks, a twelve-block green belt and favorite Portland hangout, under the shadow of statues of Teddy Roosevelt riding on to victory at San Juan Hill and a dour Abe Lincoln. Twice a week, the park hosts a popular farmers' market (May–Oct Wed 10am–2pm, April–Dec Sat 8.30am–2pm; ☎www.portlandfarmersmarket.org) that draws fruit and vegetable growers, and other vendors of bread, pastries, candles, and handicrafts.

Several blocks east is a favorite urban oasis, the two-mile-long Tom McCall Waterfront Park (created by demolishing the highway in the 1970s), where flocks of Canada geese abound on the grass, and young and old alike dash through the fountains of Salmon Street Springs. As a cheap and fun way to get wet, the springs are second only in popularity to the user-friendly Ira Keller Fountain, SW 3rd and Clay, a huge concrete water sculpture just west of the riverfront, where you can clamber around and get drenched on huge blocks and pillars.

Old Town and Chinatown

Old Town, the area around and just south of the Burnside Bridge, is where Portland was founded in 1843. These days, missions for the homeless coexist with galleries, brewpubs, boutiques, and, especially, clubs – the area is unavoidable if you're in town to dance to DJs or live music. The Saturday Market (March–Dec Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–4.30pm; ☎www.portlandsaturdaymarket.com) packs the area south of, and under, the Burnside Bridge with arts and crafts stalls, eclectic street musicians, spicy foods, and lively crowds, all right by the MAX tracks (check the website as the market may be moving in 2007). At First and Ankeny stands the Skidmore Fountain, a nineteenth-century bronze basin raised by caryatids above a granite pool, designed to provide European elegance for citizens and water for hard-working horses. Across the fountain's plaza, an ornamental colonnade stretches from the side of the New Market Theater, an 1899 restored brick treasure.

North of Burnside, the ornamental gate at Fourth Avenue marks Chinatown, once the second-largest Chinese community in the US until the 1880s, when racist attacks forced most to leave. There's still enough of a community here to support a range of cheap ethnic restaurants and dive bars, but otherwise the only attraction is the enticing Classical Chinese Garden, NW 3rd Ave at Everett (daily: April–Oct 9am–6pm; Nov–March 10am–5pm; $7; ☎www.portlandchinesegarden.org), a Suzhou-styled garden with traditional vegetation, ponds, and walkways.

Pearl District and Northwest Portland

Northwest of Chinatown lies the chic Pearl District, a gentrified zone thick with lofts, galleries, restaurants, and boutiques, at its swankiest between NW 10th and 12th avenues, and Glisan and Lovejoy streets. On the southern edge of the Pearl is Portland's biggest draw, Powell's City of Books, 1005 W Burnside St (daily 9am–11pm; ☎www.powells.com). With more than a million new, used, and rare books on four floors, Powell's occupies an entire block, as well as separate branches around town, and provides free color-coded maps so customers don't get lost.

△ Pioneer Courthouse Square

Further west, what's known in travel brochures as Nob Hill is called Northwest Portland by locals. Stretching between Burnside and Pettygrove streets along NW 23rd and 21st avenues, the neighborhood is choked with fine restaurants and boutiques, the assortment of restored Victorian piles adding a San Franciscan tinge.

Forest Park and Washington Park

A few miles west of Northwest Portland, the five-thousand-acre Forest Park (www.friendsofforestpark.org) is the country's largest urban green space, interlaced with countless hiking routes, including the thirty-mile Wildwood Trail, which can be accessed around NW 31st Avenue and Upshur Street; otherwise, follow NW Thurman until it dead-ends and take Leif Erickson Drive (closed to traffic) deep into the hills. South of Forest Park, the elegant houses of the wealthy include Pittock Mansion, 3229 NW Pittock Drive (daily noon–4pm, summer 11am–4pm, $6; www.pittockmansion.com), a 1914 Renaissance Revival gem whose most attractive attribute is its stunning – and free – view of the city from the front lawn.

Beyond the mansion, the 130-acre Washington Park is home to a number of Portland's top attractions. These include the lovely International Rose Test Garden (daily 7am–9pm; free; www.rosegardenstore.org), featuring a wide array of bright summertime blooms; the tranquil Japanese Garden (daily: April–Sept 10am–7pm; Oct–March 10am–4pm; $8; www.japanesegarden.com), actually a collection of five traditional gardens with ponds, bridges, foliage, and sand designs; and the Oregon Zoo (daily: April–Sept 9am–6pm; Oct–March 9am–4pm; $9.50; ④ www.zooregon.org), whose most unusual feature is its Elephant Museum, detailing the biological and cultural history of pachyderms – and decorated with a giant mastodon skeleton. Close by, the World Forestry Center (daily 10am–5pm; $7; ④ www.worldforestry.org) is largely an ode to the timber industry, but the Hoyt Arboretum, 4000 Fairview Blvd (daily 6am–10pm; free; ④ www.hoytarboretum.org), merits a leisurely walk for its collection of ten thousand trees and plants from throughout the region and the world.

Most park attractions have easy access to MAX light-rail ($1.65 from downtown), whose station is buried deep underground and accessible only by elevator. Once you get here, you can hop on a summertime shuttle (every 15min June–Sept 10am–7pm; $1.65) and access all the park’s major sights on a day-pass ticket.

The Eastside

Since the end of the nineteenth century, most of the city’s population has lived on the Eastside. Perhaps the best reason to venture across the river is to walk or bike the three-mile loop of the Eastbank Esplanade, which connects from the Hawthorne to the Steel bridge on floating walkways and cantilevered footpaths, offering striking views of downtown with the roar of nearby I-5 as a soundtrack. Near the loop’s south end, the interactive exhibits and high-tech toys of the Oregon Museum of Science and Industry (OMSI), 1945 SE Water Ave (Tues–Sun 9.30am–5.30pm; $9; ④ www.oms.edu), are primarily geared toward children and adults with only a sketchy knowledge of science.

Two miles further east, the Hawthorne District is Portland’s best alternative culture zone. With Hawthorne Boulevard as its axis between 34th and 45th streets, and dominated by the sparkly, quasi-Moorish 1927 Bagdad Theater & Pub at no. 3702 (⑤ 503/236-9234), the area teems with bookstores, hip cafés, dive bars, cheap restaurants, and only a handful of corporate chain stores. Six blocks north, Belmont Avenue is a historic corridor thick with boutiques, novelty shops, and ethnic diners, centered around 34th Street, while a mile southwest around 26th Avenue, Clinton Street is home to some good restaurants, funky bars, and vintage clothiers.

Finally, intrepid Eastside explorers may wish to venture up to NE Broadway, between 12th and 20th streets, good for its ethnic and upscale restaurants; the gallery- and boutique-rich stretch of NE Alberta Street, between 20th and 30th avenues, the leading edge of local gentrification, for better or worse; or the antique-buying center of Sellwood, several miles south of OMSI along Tacoma Street.

Eating

As in Seattle, Portland’s Northwest Cuisine is a mix of international cooking and fresh regional produce – emphasizing tasty local favorites like Pacific crabs, clams, and oysters, Hood River Valley fruit and berries, and Eastern Oregon organically raised beef – and the city offers many excellent dining options for all palates and pocketbooks. Downtown, the Pearl District and Northwest Portland have swank cocktail bars, sedate bistros, and fun brewpubs, while Hawthorne Boulevard and Belmont Avenue have the best cheap grub and ethnic diners.

Bombay Cricket Club 1925 Hawthorne Blvd
⑤ 503/231-0740. Terrific mid-level restaurant a mile west of the main Hawthorne scene with the town’s best Indian food. Dive right into the delicious vindaloos and tandooris.

Brasserie Montmartre 626 SW Park Ave
⑤ 503/224-5552. Popular French bistro with fresh seafood, tasty pasta, and free live jazz on most evenings.

Clay’s Smokehouse Grill 2932 SE Division St
⑤ 503/235-4755. Great barbecue house serving rich and hearty fare like ribs and pork sandwiches, as well as super-sweet, old-fashioned desserts like pineapple upside-down cake.

Genoa 2832 SE Belmont Ave ☎ 503/238-1464. Arguably the region's best, and certainly most expensive, Italian food, on a three- to seven-course rotating seasonal menu ($45–75) that offers a sumptuous taste of northern Italy.

Higgins 1239 SW Broadway ☎ 503/222-9070. Nationally recognized Northwest Cuisine restaurant, where fresh local ingredients and scrumptious desserts are served on a pricy, rotating menu.

Jake's Famous Crawfish 401 SW 12th Ave ☎ 503/226-1419. A landmark for more than a hundred years, with a staggering choice of fresh local seafood like sturgeon and Dungeness crab and spicy crawfish cakes. The "Bag of Chocolate" is a famously delicious, belt-breaking dessert.

Lauro Kitchen 3377 Division St ☎ 503/239-7000. The kind of local favorite that doesn't need any publicity – even the mayor has to wait for a table on weekends. If you don't mind the delay, come for some of the city's best and most affordable Northwest Cuisine.

McCormick and Schmick's 235 SW 1st Ave at Oak St ☎ 503/224-7522. The first location of what's become a national chain of fine seafood restaurants, with fresh nightly specials and a lively oyster bar.

Oba 555 NW 12th Ave ☎ 503/228-6161. Flashy mid-priced eatery that fuses flavors from all over Latin America. It's most inviting during happy hour, when succulent bar-menu entrees (like the artery-clogging queso fundido) are $3–5.

Papa Haydn 701 NW 23rd Ave ☎ 503/223-7317. Classic French eatery whose entrees aren't what they used to be, but you can still stop by for a taste of the fifty-odd desserts on offer, including heaping chocolate cakes, Baked Alaska, and others on view under glass.

Pazzo 621 SW Washington St ☎ 503/228-1515. Top-notch Italian and Northwest Cuisine with a solid selection of fresh seafood and inventive pasta, just off the lobby of the Vintage Plaza Hotel (see p.1119).

Pix Patisserie 3402 SE Division ☎ 503/232-4407. Local hot-spot with a colorful range of French desserts made by a Parisian-trained chef known as the "Pixie." Also good for its international beers.

Siam Society 2703 NE Alberta St ☎ 503/922-3675. While there are plenty of excellent, affordable Thai diners around town, this mid-level entry is a welcome newcomer, doling out innovative versions of Southeast Asian fare in a moody modern setting. Taqueria Nueve 28 NE 28th Ave ☎ 503/236-6195. Supreme new Latin cuisine on a two-block stretch of fine restaurants – this one's best for its seafood, innovative takes on Mexican staples, and rich and tasty desserts.

Wildwood 1221 NW 21st Ave ☎ 503/248-9663. Trendy, upscale restaurant with imaginative food using fresh local ingredients – morel mushrooms, Pacific salmon, Painted Hills beef, and the like.

Nightlife

Portland is a beer-drinker's haven, with more than thirty microbreweries, including Rogue Ales Public House, 1339 NW Flanders St (☎ 503/222-5910); Bridgeport Brewing, 1313 NW Marshall St (☎ 503/233-6540); and Widmer Gasthaus, 929 N Russell St (☎ 503/281-3333). McMenamins "concept" brewpubs sell their own locally ales in unique settings, such as former schoolhouses and renovated hotels (www.mcmenamins.com). For music, Portland maintains a small but vital presence on the national map, with countless alternative bands. The coolest venues are located around east and west Burnside.

Bars, brewpubs, and coffeehouses

The Alibi 4024 N Interstate Ave ☎ 503/287-5335. The pinnacle of Polynesian kitsch, a fun and somewhat divey joint that has cheap, powerful drinks, a spirited atmosphere, and a Thurs–Sun karaoke scene that's among the city's best.

Goose Hollow Inn 1927 SW Jefferson St ☎ 503/228-7010. Great microbrews, the city's top Reuben sandwich, and a convenient location near the MAX tracks, a mile west of downtown. Watch for colorful owner Bud Clark, the city mayor in the 1980s, best known for his slogan "Whoop! Whoop!"

Dot's Café 2521 SE Clinton St ☎ 503/235-0203. Funky late-night spot offering good brews, the classic bacon cheeseburger, cheese fries, and a helluva grilled-cheese sandwich.

Holocene 1001 SE Morrison St ☎ 503/239-7639. Packed with would-be hipsters posing at point-blank range and an essential stop for local DJs, Holocene mixes a range of cocktails and even broader spectrum of nightly electronica.

Huber's 411 SW 3rd Ave ☎ 503/228-5686. Portland's oldest bar is an elegant spot with an arched stained-glass skylight, mahogany paneling, and terrazzo floor. Famous for roast turkey sandwiches and flaming Spanish coffees.

Kell's 112 SW 2nd Ave ☎ 503/227-4057. Long-standing Irish bar, with fine authentic Irish stews and soda bread, and a range of microbrews, imported beers, and of course, Irish (and Scotch) whiskey.

Lucky Labrador 915 SE Hawthorne Blvd ☎ 503/236-3555. Dog-friendly brewpub occupying a large space with an outdoor patio. Fresh ales, great sandwiches, and a mean peanut-curry bento.

Pied Cow 3244 SE Belmont Ave ☎ 503/230-4866.

A favorite for its coffee, tea, and dessert. Set in a stately Victorian house, it offers late-night hours, lush garden seating, and the chance to puff fruit-flavored tobacco from a hookah pipe.

Produce Row 204 SE Oak St ☎ 503/232-8355. It's stuck in a gritty location by the railroad tracks in an industrial zone, but it boasts thirty brews on tap and a nice range of live music from country to rock.

Rimsky-Korsakoff House 707 SE 12th Ave ☎ 503/232-2640. Excellent place to linger for hours over dessert and coffee. Immensely popular with bohemians and slackers.

Ringlers Annex 1223 SW Stark St ☎ 503/525-0520. Great people-watching in the ornate wedge-shaped 1917 Flatiron Building. Companion bar, Ringlers, is two blocks away at 1332 W Burnside St (☎ 503/225-0627).

Saucebox 214 SW Broadway ☎ 503/241-3393. Great pan-Asian cuisine, colorful cocktails, and eclectic nightly music that attracts black-clad poseurs and serious hipsters.

 Stumptown Roasters 3356 SE Belmont Ave ☎ 503/232-8889. Widely acknowledged as the city's best coffee, made from a blend of seven different types. The best of a local chain of three coffeehouses. Also downtown at 128 SW 3rd Ave (☎ 503/295-6144).

Performing arts and film

The performing arts scene revolves around the Portland Center for the Performing Arts, 1111 SW Broadway (☎ 503/248-4335, www.pcpa.com), comprising the Arlene Schnitzer Concert Hall and New Theater Building. The "Schnitz" is a sumptuously restored 1928 vaudeville and movie house that presents musical extravaganzas, dance, and theater, hosting performances by the Oregon Symphony (☎ 503/228-1353, www.orsymphony.org) and Oregon Ballet Theater (☎ 503/222-5538, www.obt.org), among others. Several blocks away at SW 3rd Ave, between Market and Clay, the Ira Keller Auditorium is home to traveling musicals and the Portland Opera (☎ 503/241-1802, www.portlandopera.org).

If you're interested in catching a film, local favorites include Cinema 21, 616 NW 21st Ave (☎ 503/223-4515, www.cinema21.com), for foreign and independent movies; the Guild, 829 SW 9th Ave (☎ 503/221-1156), for classics and retrospectives; and the historic Hollywood Theatre, 4122 NE Sandy Blvd (☎ 503/281-4215, www.hollywoodtheatre.org), for all of the above.

Live music and clubs

Berbati's Pan 10 SW 3rd Ave ☎ 503/248-4579.

Overly large space has a nightly selection of eclectic bands – local to international – usually for $8–15 cover.

Crystal Ballroom 1332 W Burnside St ☎ 503/778-5625. This nineteenth-century dance hall, two levels above the Ringlers bar, has a "floating" floor on springs. Bands range from hippie to hip-hop, and the best of Portland's indie rock and retro-DJs are showcased in "Lola's Room" on the floor above the bar.

Dante's 1 SW 3rd Ave ☎ 503/226-6630. Perhaps the city's hippest nightclub. Cabaret acts and live music mix with the club's signature "Sinforno" Sunday strip shows and "Karaoke from Hell" Mondays.

Doug Fir 830 E Burnside ☎ 503/231-WOOD. For a cramped underground space with limited room to groove, this is, surprisingly, one of the city's prime venues for alt-country, dance, and indie rock.

Embers 11 NW Broadway ☎ 503/222-3082. An often-crowded club with drag shows in the gay-oriented front room and high-energy dancing in the straight-leaning room in back.

Goodfoot 2845 SE Stark St ☎ 503/239-9292. Frenetic live-music joint and dance club, always sweaty, smoky, and packed on weekends – but worth it to hear top-notch DJs spinning funk and retro-soul.

Jimmy Mak's 221 NW 10th Ave ☎ 503/295-6542. Newly renovated, this is one of the few choices for nightly jazz in a town not known to swing. Come by to hear local Mel Brown or visiting name acts.

Roseland Theater 8 NW 6th Ave ☎ 503/224-2038. Located in one of the city's dicier corners, but a top spot for rock and alternative acts – often the last affordable venue for fans before the groups start touring stadiums.

During the summer, free concerts are held at Pioneer Courthouse Square, Waterfront Park, the zoo, and the International Rose Test Garden. The free Willamette Week (📧 www.wweek.com) carries listings of what's on and where, as does the free Portland Mercury (📧 www.portlandmercury.com), and the Friday edition of the main local newspaper, The Oregonian (📧 www.oregonian.com). Just Out is the chief gay/lesbian publication (📧 www.justout.com).

Around Portland: the Columbia River Gorge and Mount Hood

East of Portland along the I-84 interstate, the Columbia River Gorge is a striking geological setting with gusty winds, craggy rocks, and incredible views. Scoured into a wide U-shape by huge Ice Age-era floods, the gorge is a nationally protected scenic area (📧 www.fs.fed.us/r6/columbia), where waterfalls tumble down sheer cliffs, and fir and maple trees turn fabulous shades of gold and red in the fall. Much more rugged in the nineteenth century before the arrival of modern dams, this was the ominous final leg of the Oregon Trail, where many pioneers met a dark end negotiating perilous rapids on flimsy wooden rafts.

The most dramatic part of the gorge, around the town of Hood River, is just north of the snowy peak of Mount Hood, where a romantic, mist-shrouded river landscape in the spring gives way to colorful windsurfers in the summer bounding over the whitecapped waves. The ideal way to explore the area is by driving along the narrow, winding Historic Columbia River Highway (accessible at exits 22 or 35 off I-84), which boasts several excellent vantage points, particularly at Crown Point, where the 1915 Vista House – a marvelous structure perched high above the gorge about ten miles east of Troutdale – has just been restored to its original rustic grandeur (May–Oct daily 9am–6pm; free; 📧 www.vistahouse.com). Further east, some highway sections are closed to automotive traffic, but open to hikers and cyclists.

Back on I-84 below, the most spectacular of the waterfalls en route is Multnomah Falls (daily 8am–9pm; free), whose waters plunge 530ft down a rock face, collect in a pool, and then drop another seventy feet. Be warned: this is the state's second most popular attraction (after a casino) and the crowds can get quite thick on the trails and viewing bridges. Further east, Bonneville Dam (daily 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 541/374-8820) is a huge New Deal project that generates regional electricity and offers a chamber where you can see salmon making their way upstream.

Mount Hood

To the south along Highway 35, Mount Hood is a dormant volcano rising over eleven thousand feet, the tallest peak in the Oregon Cascades. The Mount Hood Loop – a combination of highways 35 and 26 – takes in both the mountain and the gorge. One of the joys of the area is to explore the mountain via trails radiating out from its slopes; contact the Mount Hood Information Center (see below) for information. The highest point on the loop at some 4000ft, Barlow Pass is named after Sam Barlow, a wagon-train leader who blazed the first “road” around the mountain, which became the unpleasant alternative to the even more dangerous Columbia River route on the Oregon Trail. You can still see deep gashes on some of the trees where ropes were fastened to check the wagons' descent.

Near the intersection of highways 35 and 26, a turn-off leads to the rough-hewn stone of 🏡 Timberline Lodge (☎ 503/231-5400 or 1-800/547-1406, 📧 www.timberlinelodge.com; 📍), a colossal New Deal structure that is part of the year-round Timberline ski resort (☎ 503/622-0717; lift tickets $43), and the exterior setting for Stanley Kubrick's The Shining (though without that film's hedge maze). Two other downhill ski areas – Mount Hood Meadows (@www.skihood.com; $45) and Mount Hood SkiBowl (@www.skibowl.com; $39) – offer nighttime skiing from November to April (around $20). There are also many miles of cross-country skiing trails throughout the Mount Hood National Forest. For more information on mountain activities and cheaper area lodging, contact the Mount Hood Information Center (☎503/622-4822 or 1-888/622-4822, @www.mthood.info).

Hood River

Adjacent to the Columbia River, north of Mount Hood, charming little HOOD RIVER is a hub for river windsurfing and mountain biking, with outfitters' shops lining the hillside streets and a riverfront Port Marina Park to take it all in. One of the most exquisite places to stay in the entire region is the Columbia Gorge Hotel, just off I-84 at the far west end of town, at 3000 Westcliff Drive (☎1-800/345-1921, @www.columbiagorgehotel.com; 6), where hacienda-style buildings perch on a clifftop right above the gorge, and the hotel's exquisite gardens even have their own waterfalls. More central, and less expensive, options include Hood River Hotel, 102 Oak Ave (☎541/386-1900 or 1-800/386-1859, @www.hoodriverhotel.com; 4), built in 1913 and featuring tasteful rooms and more elaborate suites; and Inn at the Gorge, 1113 Eugene St (☎541/386-4429, @www.innathegorge.com; 4), a stately 1908 Colonial Revival home that's been transformed into a tasteful, elegant B&B with minimal Victorian kitsch. For eating and drinking, Full Sail Brewing, 506 Columbia St (☎541/386-2247), is a fine local microbrewery; the 6th Street Bistro, 509 Cascade Ave (☎541/386-5737), has some solid burgers and American fare; and Mike's Ice Cream, 504 Oak St (☎541/386-6260), is known for its marionberry milkshakes. The visitor center, in Port Marina Park (☎1-800/366-3530, @www.hoodriver.org), provides information on all the regional attractions, including the engaging summertime fruit loop (@www.hoodriverfruitloop.com), a driving concourse that connects to growers of cheap and delicious apples, pears, cherries, and peaches.

The Willamette Valley

South of Portland, the WILLAMETTE VALLEY has a diverse agricultural scene, but is best known for its grapes. The scenic route through wine country, Hwy-99 W, accesses dozens of acclaimed wineries, most of which pour superb pinot noirs, cabernets, and rieslings. Pick up a wine-country tour map from any local visitor center (or @www.oregonwine.org), and expect the odd traffic bottleneck in little burgs like Dundee, which is roughly in the center of the vineyard zone. A few miles south in Dayton, the renowned Joel Palmer House, 600 Ferry St (☎503/864-2995, @www.joelpalmerhouse.com), draws Portland urbanites for its delicious, if expensive, Northwest cuisine. The Valley also has some of the best examples of covered bridges, with thirty-four in the state spanning creeks from Albany to Cottage Grove (see @coveredbridges.stateoforegon.com).

From Portland, I-5 courses through the Willamette Valley on its way to California, but bypasses historic Oregon City, the first state capital, at the end of the Oregon Trail. Today, the only reasons to stop are the John McLoughlin House, 713 Center St (Wed–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $4; @www.mcloughlinhouse.org), the 1846 dwelling of a trail pioneer that's loaded with artifacts and details on local history; and the End of The Oregon Trail Interpretive Center, 1726 Washington St (March–Oct: Mon–Sat 9.30am–5pm, Sun 10.30am–5pm; Nov– Feb: Wed–Sat 11am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $9; www.endoftheoregontrail.org), housed in a trio of giant, imitation covered-wagon buildings, which hold a series of dioramas, replica antiques, and documentary films – and a staff in full period costume.

Salem

The main reason to visit SALEM is to see the modern, white Vermont-marble State Capitol, 900 Court St NE (Mon–Fri 7.30am–5.30pm; free; tours at 503/986-1388), whose cupola is topped by a large gold-leaf pioneer, axe in hand, eyes to the West. Also worth a look is Mission Mill Village, 1313 Mill St SE (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; $7; www.missionmill.org), a collection of well-preserved pioneer buildings and a gloomy, nineteenth-century woolen mill.

Greyhound is located at 450 Church St NE, and Amtrak at 500 13th St SE. The visitor center (503/581-4325) is in Mission Mill Village. Decent motels include Phoenix Inn Suites, 4370 Commercial St SE (1-800/445-4498, www.phoenixinn.com; 4), while the Creekside Garden Inn, 333 Wyatt Court NE (503/391-0837, www.salembandb.com; 4), is a stately B&B close to downtown. If you're camping, head for the huge waterfalls and lush forests of Silver Falls State Park (503/873-8681; $16–21), 26 miles east of Salem, the state's most popular park – so reserve many weeks (or months) in advance. For food, you're best off downtown, where Court Street Dairy Lunch, 347 Court St NE (503/363-6433), is a classic 1960s diner with primo burgers, and Jonathan's Oyster Bar, 445 State St (503/362-7219), serves fresh seafood, Cajun and Southwestern cuisine.

Eugene

Student and hippie central, EUGENE is a liberal enclave where Ken Kesey and some of his Merry Pranksters came to live after retreating from California. Although short on sights, it's an energetic cultural center, to which the University of Oregon in the city's southeast corner lends a youthful bohemian feel, especially along 13th Avenue just west of campus. For different pursuits, the glassy, modern Hult Center, Sixth Ave and Willamette St (541/682-5746, www.hultcenter.org), is home to the local opera, symphony, ballet, and renowned Oregon Bach Festival (www.oregonbachfestival.com) in early July. The other major attraction is the Saturday Market, Eighth Ave and Oak St (April–Dec 10am–5pm; www.eugenesaturdaymarket.org), something of a neo-hippie carnival with live folk music, plenty of handicrafts, and street performers. Finally, Eugene is also a prime spot for sports, and trails abound in the city center, along the river banks, and up imposing Spencer's Butte, a huge basalt monolith south of town.

Ten miles west of Eugene on US-126, little Veneta hosts the Oregon Country Fair (tickets $14; 541/343-4298, www.oregoncountryfair.org) in July, a hippie-flavored festival of music, art, food, and dancing. Traffic can be heavy, and even if you have a car it's easier to go by bus – the LTD (see below) operates special services.

Practicalities

Greyhound stops at 987 Pearl St, and Amtrak at Fourth Ave and Willamette St. Eugene has a terrific bus system, the LTD ($1.25; 541/687-5555, www.ltd.org), offering day-passes for $2.50, and 50¢ rides on the “Breeze” shuttle linking downtown and the university. The visitor center is at 115 W 8th Ave (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm; 541/484-5307, www.visitlane-county.org).

The best places to stay include the Campbell House, 252 Pearl St (☎ 541/343-1119 or 1-800/264-2519, 🌐 www.campbellhouse.com; 📍), an elegant 1892 Victorian mansion with eighteen rooms; and Franklin Inn, 1857 Franklin Blvd (☎ 541/342-4804, 🌐 www.eugenefranklininn.com; 📍), which has affordable motel rooms near the university. The Eugene International Hostel, 2352 Willamette St (☎ 541/349-0589; $20), offers twenty clean and comfortable dorm beds.

Of Eugene's better places to eat, Café Zenon, 898 Pearl St (☎ 541/343-3005), has an eclectic menu rich with international fare; Chanterelle, 207 E 5th Ave (☎ 541/484-4065), is an intimate French bistro; the Oregon Electric Station, 27 E 5th Ave (☎ 541/485-4444), serves top-notch prime rib and seafood in renovated railway cars; and the amazingly delicious truffles of 🍫 Euphoria Chocolate, 6 W 17th Ave (☎ 541/343-9223, 🌐 www.euphoriachocolate.com), are reason alone to visit Eugene.

Live music is also big in town. Jo Federigo's, 259 E 5th Ave (☎ 541/343-8488, 🌐 www.jofeds.com), has nightly jazz and serves solid Italian cuisine, while funky WOW Hall, 291 W 8th Ave (☎ 541/687-2746, 🌐 www.wowhall.org), showcases up-and-coming rockers. For a taste of the music scene near the university, stroll along 13th Avenue and hear the indie rock and punk wafting out from the bars and clubs.

South to California

South of Eugene along I-5, unenticing Grants Pass depends on the vigorous Rogue River for its living. Half a day of whitewater rafting costs around $50, a full day $70 – the visitor center, just off I-5 at 1995 NW Vine St (☎ 541/476-5510, 🌐 www.visitgrantspass.org), provides brochures from more than a dozen licensed river guides. Beyond Grants Pass, I-5 dips southeast through Ashland, taking a mountainous inland route to California, while US-199 heads southwest to the California (and southern Oregon) coast, passing near the Oregon Caves.

Oregon Caves National Monument

Thirty miles southwest of Grants Pass along US-199, at the dull burg of Cave Junction, Hwy-46 veers east twenty miles to the Oregon Caves National Monument (tours daily April–Nov: hours vary, often 9am–5pm; 75min; $8.50; ☎ 541/592-2100, 🌐 www.nps.gov/orca). Tucked in a wooded canyon at the end of a narrow, twisting road and kept at a constant temperature of 41°F, it's actually one enormous cave, with smaller branching passages, where the dripping marble walls are covered with elaborate stalactites, stalagmites, and flowstone.

Close to the cave entrance is the appealing Oregon Caves Chateau, 2000 Caves Hwy (May–Oct; ☎ 541/592-3400; 📍), an elegant 1930s lodge with grand public rooms; reservations are advised. Since there's little but drab lodging in Cave Junction, try one of the campgrounds along Hwy-46, with Grayback and Cave Creek being the closest to the monument ($10; ☎ 541/592-2166 for reservations).

Ashland and the Shakespeare Festival

The progressive hamlet of ASHLAND, forty miles southeast of Grants Pass, is a real anomaly among the agricultural towns that blanket the state. Since 1945, the Oregon Shakespeare Festival has been held here between February and October, packing audiences into the half-timbered Elizabethan Theatre, and cycling through the Bard's complete oeuvre every few years. The town's Rogue River Valley setting is magnificent, with good skiing in the winter and rafting in summer. There's also some excellent fringe theater – not to mention pleasant cafés, galleries, and boutiques, especially around the Historic Railroad District (📍 www.ashlandrrdistrict.com) a few blocks north of the festival.

The Angus Bowmer Theatre, adjacent to the Elizabethan Theatre, stages both Shakespearean and more recent works, while the austere New Theatre has a mostly modern repertoire. The three theaters share the same box office, 15 S Pioneer St (📞 541/482-4331, 📍 www.osfashland.org), and tickets average around $35 (with standing room at the Elizabethan Theatre for $10), and summer prices are $10–15 more expensive. For a dose of musical comedy to relieve the drama, try the Oregon Cabaret Theater, in a renovated pink church at First and Hargadine (📞 541/488-2902, 📍 www.oregoncabaret.com).

The visitor center is at 110 E Main St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; 📞 541/482-3486, 📍 www.ashlandchamber.com). Greyhound buses drop passengers on the edge of town near the I-5 freeway exit. Ashland has more than sixty B&Bs, most of which are in charming Victorian homes; the Ashland B&B Network (📞 1-800/944-0329, 📍 www.abbnet.com) has information on most of them. The best hotel is the grand and centrally located Ashland Springs, 212 E Main St (📞 1-888/795-4545, 📍 www.ashlandspringshotel.com; 📍), with its charming two-story lobby, day spa, afternoon tea, and nicely appointed rooms. Another good option is the Winchester Inn, 35 S 2nd St (📞 541/488-1113, 📍 www.winchesterinn.com; 📍), with nineteen en-suite rooms and attractive gardens. The top budget option is the friendly, clean, and well-placed Ashland Hostel, 150 N Main St (📞 541/482-9217, 📍 www.theashlandhostel.com; $25 dorm beds, $55 private rooms).

The main choices for eating are found along Main Street, near the entrance to Lithia Park. The choices vary widely, from the eclectic entrees of the upscale French Chateaulin, 50 E Main St (📞 503/482-2264), to the cheap but tasty pasta, burgers, salads, and seafood of Greenleaf, 49 N Main St (📞 541/482-2808). If you come in the summer, head twenty miles northwest to the preserved Old West hamlet of Jacksonville for the annual Britt Festival (June–Aug; tickets $20–46; 📞 1-800/882-7488; 📍 www.brittfest.org), to hear the top names in jazz, pop, and country music.

The Oregon Coast

The Oregon coast is as beautiful as any stretch of coastline in America, a moody and secluded four-hundred miles of stunning terrain, almost all of it public land. State parks and campgrounds abound, and extensive and often isolated beaches are free for hiking, beachcombing, shell-fishing, and whale-watching. Although the shoreline hasn't escaped commercialism, and it has its occasional eyesores of development, the Oregon coast remains the least exploited in the entire US.

A number of coastal state parks offer novel accommodation in the form of seaside cabins and yurts – Mongolian-style domed circular tents with wooden floors, electricity, and lockable doors, as well as bunk beds and a futon (yurts $27–30 per night, cabins $35–38; 📞 1-800/452-5687, 📍 www.oregonstateparks.org). Alternatively, you can camp for $15–20 at various sites on the coast.

For the most scenic transportation along the waves, cycling is always a good option, whether within the state parks, along US-101 (following the coastline to the California border), or on the many smaller “scenic loop” roads. Pick up the Coast Bike Route Map from any major visitor center.

Astoria

Set near the mouth of the Columbia River, the port of ASTORIA was founded in 1811 as a base for exporting furs to Asia by the millionaire John Jacob Astor.

A small replica of the old fort stands at 15th and Exchange streets, but nowadays many of Astoria's canneries and port facilities have vanished, as the city tries to reinvent itself for tourists interested in nautical history and working-class color.

From the east, the main road into Astoria, Marine Drive, runs parallel to the waterfront, about eight miles from the Pacific Ocean. Exhibits from Astoria's seafaring past are on display at the Columbia River Maritime Museum, 1792 Marine Drive (daily 9.30am–5pm; $8; www.cmmm.org), which also features impressive displays of scrimshaw, native artifacts, and reconstructed ships.

From Marine Drive, numbered streets climb up towards fancy Victorian mansions, many now renovated B&Bs. Painted emblems on the street direct you to the top of Coxcomb Hill, where the Astoria Column is decorated with a winding mural depicting pioneer history, and offers stunning views for anyone willing to climb its 164 cramped spiral stairs. Back in town, further west, the Flavel House, 441 8th St (daily 10am–5pm, summer 11am–4pm; $5), is one of the grandest of the city's mansions, the grand, 1886 Queen Anne home of sea captain George Flavel, featuring main rooms set up as dioramas featuring period furniture and decor.

A few miles southwest of town is Fort Clatsop (daily 9am–5pm; $5; www.nps.gov/lewi), a reconstruction of the winter quarters Lewis and Clark built here in 1805. The site mysteriously burned in 2005, but a new version aims to replicate the pioneer living conditions with greater historical accuracy, based on the latest evidence. Further west, also off US-101, Fort Stevens State Park (☎ 503/861-1671) offers good trails and camping and miles of beaches. The fort was developed as a Union post in the Civil War, and was shelled during World War II by a passing Japanese submarine, which makes it the only military installation on the mainland US to have been fired on by a foreign government since 1812.

Practicalities

Bus or train access to this part of the coast is limited, but Amtrak operates a once-daily bus service that drops off at the visitor center at 111 W Marine Drive (summer daily 8am–6pm; winter Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 503/325-6311, www.oregon.com), near the base of the US-101 bridge over the Columbia, which leads into southwest Washington. To make a leisurely trip along the waterfront, hop aboard the Astoria Trolley (summer Mon–Thurs 3–9pm, Fri–Sun noon–9pm; rest of year Fri–Sun 1–4pm; $2), historic rail cars that ply a tourist-oriented route. You can camp at Fort Stevens State Park ($18–22; ☎ 1-541/861-1671), but the town's most distinctive offerings are its B&Bs, many of them in Victorian mansions. Among the best are Franklin St Station, 1140 Franklin St (☎ 503/325-4314 or 1-800/448-1098, www.franklin-st-station-bb.com; 📍), having six rooms with balconies overlooking town, and the Rosebriar, 636 14th St (☎ 503/325-7427 or 1-800/487-0224, www.rosebriar.net; 📍), a renovated, modernized 1902 convent with great river views. For fancier digs, the Hotel Elliott, 357 12th St (☎ 1-877/EST-1924, www.hotelelliott.com; 📍), is a historic 1924 charmer with upscale amenities in its rooms and suites, some with fireplaces and Jacuzzis; rates increase by $60 and up during the summer.

Good places to eat include Columbian Café, 1114 Marine Drive (☎ 503/325-2233), which has gourmet seafood and vegetarian meals, and offers tasty pizzas and weekend musical jams in its attached Voodoo Room; the Cannery Café, 1 6th St (☎ 503/325-8642), a solid breakfast and lunch spot with good pierside views; and the Home Spirit Baking Company, 1585 Exchange St (☎ 503/325-6846), which serves homemade sourdough bread and ice cream in a lovely Victorian home.

Cannon Beach

Seventeen miles south of Astoria, Seaside is a rather seedy resort of carnival rides, the one spot on the Oregon coast nature-lovers avoid, but another nine miles south, the more upmarket and pleasant CANNON BEACH manages to retain its small-town air despite decades of relentless commercialism. The place is at its liveliest during the mid-June Sandcastle Competition, a one-day event that starts when the tide permits, drawing artistic sand-crafters and hapless muck-shovelers from around the region. You're apt to see anything from sand dinosaurs and sphinxes to mermaids and monkeys, with Jesus and Elvis also putting in frequent appearances. Cannon Beach's best natural draw is its 240ft Haystack Rock, a black monolith crowned with nesting seagulls – accessible at low tide, though definitely not climbable. To escape the town's crush of tourists, head four miles north to Ecola State Park, where dense conifer forests decorate the basaltic cliffs of Tillamook Head, or south to Oswald West State Park, named after the pioneering governor who helped preserve most of the state's beaches, where there's a beautiful beach, rocky headland, and coastal rainforest. The park's tent-only campground (Mar–Oct; ☎ 541/368-3575; $10–14) is popular with surfers and provides wheelbarrows to transport your gear to the site.

The visitor center is at 207 N Spruce St (☎ 503/436-2623, 🌐 www.cannon-beach.org). In town, accommodation is tight, especially in the summer. Cannon Beach Hotel, 1116 S Hemlock St (☎ 503/436-1392, 🌐 www.cannonbeachhotel.com; 4), is a cozy boutique hotel, while the Waves Motel, 188 W Second St (☎ 503/436-2205 or 1-800/822-2468, 🌐 www.thewavesmotel.com; 5), has studios and suites on the seafront. For food, the Bistro, 263 N Hemlock St (☎ 503/436-2661), doles out a fine range of fresh seafood, and Bill's Tavern & Brewhouse, 188 N Hemlock St (☎ 503/436-2202), is the town's busiest bar, offering bar food along with their own handcrafted brews.

Tillamook to Newport

Forty-four miles south of Cannon Beach, TILLAMOOK provides two good reasons for a stopover: the first is the Tillamook Cheese Factory (daily 8am–6pm, summer closes at 8pm; free; 🌐 www.tillamookcheese.com), just north of town on US-101, where on a self-guided tour you can watch cheese evolve from milky liquid in large vats to yellow and orange bricks on conveyor belts. The other milk product you can leave with is an oversized ice-cream cone, scooped from the factory's counter. Tastier cheese can be had a mile south at the Blue Heron (daily 9am–6pm, summer 8am–8pm; free; 🌐 www.blueheronoregon.com), where you can sample the pepper brie or taste Oregon wine before heading out back to have a close encounter with a goat or rooster in a quasi-petting zoo.

Forty miles further south, there's no avoiding Lincoln City, the ugliest town on the Oregon coast, sprawling along the highway for seven congested, dreadful miles, but hold out for another thirty miles and you'll reach NEWPORT, both an active port and something of a resort. While the Historic Bayfront along Bay Boulevard is the obvious first stop for many – with its souvenir shops, seafood diners, and sea lions wallowing on the wharves – the town's real highlight is uncrowded Nye Beach, a quiet oceanside gem further west. Here, there are few official sights other than a deserted, modern Vietnam War Memorial (24hr; free), but the beach makes for an excellent stroll, and the seaside development is a bit more restrained than elsewhere in town. To the south, across the bridge at 2820 SE Ferry Slip Rd, the impressive Oregon Coast Aquarium (daily summer 9am–6pm; rest of year 10am–5pm; $12; 🌐 www.aquarium.org) is home to sea otters, seals, and tufted puffins, as well as Passages of the Deep, a shark-oriented underwater tunnel. Just north of town, Newport's other top attraction is Yaquina Head (daily 9am–5pm; $5), an officially decreed "Outstanding Scenic Area" with a marine biology center, cape lighthouse, manmade tidepools, and seals and sea lions playing on the shoreline rocks.

Practicalities

The Greyhound station is at 956 SW 10th St, and the chamber of commerce is at 555 SW Coast Hwy (☎ 541/265-8801, 🌐 www.newportchamber.org). The most prominent place to stay is the Sylvia Beach Hotel, on Nye Beach at 267 NW Cliff St (☎ 541/265-5428, 🌐 www.sylviabeachhotel.com; 📍), whose twenty rooms each bear the name of a famous writer, from Melville to Dickinson. Newport also has a handful of fine B&Bs (details at 🌐 www.moriah.com/npbba), with charming amenities set in historic houses and estates.

There's a cluster of first-rate cafés and restaurants on Bay Boulevard at the bay-front. Mo's Original (☎ 541/265-2979) and Mo's Annex (☎ 541/265-7512), both in the 600 block, are two decent local-chain seafood diners that are always thick with tourists. 🍷 Rogue Ales Public House, no. 748 (☎ 541/265-3188), is the liveliest spot for food and beer, and also offers one- and two-bedroom "Bed and Beer" hotel units (📍-📍, plus two complimentary bottles) so you don't have to risk driving away drunk. On Nye Beach, April's, 749 NW 3rd St (☎ 541/265-6855), offers fine Continental cuisine – the town's best restaurant by far.

Bandon

At the mouth of the Coquille River along US-101, easygoing BANDON was once one of the Oregon Coast's great hidden jewels, its deserted beaches and quaint, small-town appeal adding to its seaside charm. However, in recent years a successful golf resort has changed the atmosphere, and the usual souvenir shops, chain stores, and motels have all taken root.

Bandon's main attraction is still its rugged beach, strewn with unusual rock formations and magnificent in stormy weather. In calmer conditions, clam-diggers head off to the river's mudflats, crabbers gather at the town dock, and the whole scene makes for a nice stroll. The visitor center is at 300 SE 2nd St (☎ 541/347-9616, 🌐 www.bandon.com), and there's oceanfront accommodation just south of town at the Sunset Motel, 1865 Beach Loop Drive (☎ 541/347-2453 or 1-800/842-2407, 🌐 www.sunsetmotel.com; 📍-📍), which offers rooms, condos, and seafront cabins. In town, the place to stay is the harbor-front Sea Star Guest House, 370 1st St (☎ 541/347-9632, 🌐 www.seastarbandon.com; 📍-📍), offering rooms, suites, and a penthouse, plus a harbor and sunset view from a deck. You can camp just north of town at Bullards Beach State Park (☎ 541/347-2209), where the disused Coquille River Lighthouse casts a romantic silhouette over miles of windswept sands. Try the good seafood at Bandon Boatworks, 275 Lincoln Ave SW (☎ 541/347-2111), or pick up a tasty block of cheese at the Bandon Cheese Factory, 680 SE 2nd St (☎ 541/347-2456), or a tangy treat at Cranberry Sweets, 1st St at Chicago SE (☎ 541/347-9475).

Gold Beach and Siskiyou National Forest

Towns are fewer and farther apart going south on US-101 from Bandon, with the coastline at its prettiest beyond Port Orford, where forested mountains sweep smoothly down to the sea. These mountains mark the western limit of the SISKIYOU NATIONAL FOREST, a vast slab of remote wilderness best explored by boat along the turbulent Rogue River from workaday GOLD BEACH. Here, the visitor center, on the main road at 29279 S Ellensburg (☎ 541/247-0923, 🌐 www.goldbeachchamber.com), has details of rafting and powerboat excursions plus details for the town's basic motels and hotels. Finally, at the state's far southwestern corner, Brookings has a warmer climate, and is best used as a base for exploring northern California's Redwood National Park (see p.1158). Contact the local visitor center (☎ 541/469-3181, 🌐 www.brookingsor.com) for more details.

Central Oregon

East of the Cascades, Oregon grows warmer, drier, and wilder; green valleys give way to the high desert with sagebrush, juniper trees, craggy hills, and stark rock formations broken up by the occasional tract of pine forest. Central Oregon's volcanic landscape features cracked lava beds, towering cone-like hills, and deep craters such as beautiful Crater Lake in the south.

Bend and around

BEND is the most useful base for visiting central Oregon, giving access both to mountain grandeur and eerie volcanic landscapes, and packed with restaurants, microbreweries, and outdoor-gear shops. Greyhound is at 20545 Builders St, the visitor center is at 917 NW Harriman (☎ 541/382-8048, 🌐 www.visitbend.com), and the Central Oregon Welcome Center, 661 SW Powerhouse Drive (☎ 1-800/800-8334, 🌐 www.covisitors.com), has brochures and accommodation listings. Beyond recreation, the area's main attraction is the High Desert Museum, 59800 US-97 (daily 9am–5pm; $12; 🌐 www.highdesertmuseum.org), a fascinating collection of artifacts from Native American and pioneer history, along with displays of regional flora, and a reconstructed pioneer homestead and sawmill. There are panoramic views over Bend from Pilot Butte, the remains of a small volcano a mile east of downtown off US-20; you can drive or walk to the top.

The compact town center is the best place to find accommodation, especially in several smart B&Bs in stately, early twentieth-century residences, such as the Lara House, 640 NW Congress St (☎ 541/388-4064, 🌐 www.larahouse.com; ⑤), and Sather House, 7 NW Tumalo Ave (☎ 541/388-1065, 🌐 www.satherhouse.com; ④). Alternatively, the St Francis Hotel, 700 NW Bond St (☎ 541/330-8560, 🌐 www.mcmenamins.com; ⑤), is a charmingly renovated, former Catholic school from 1936 that offers rooms with the latest luxuries and the chance to stay in a nunnery, friary and parish house (⑥–⑧). You can also camp in Tumalo State Park (☎ 541/388-6055), a wooded dell by the Deschutes River five miles northwest along US-20. You can rent a yurt or a large canvas-covered tepee ($27–35).

For eating and drinking, Pine Tavern, 967 NW Brooks St (☎ 541/382-5581), and Bend Brewing, 1019 NW Brooks St (☎ 541/383-1599), both serve microbrewed ales and stouts and sturdy American cuisine, while the Deschutes Brewery and Public House, 1044 NW Bond St (☎ 541/385-8606), brews and serves some of the Northwest's most prominent beers. West Side Café & Bakery, 1005 NW Galveston Ave (☎ 541/382-3426), has filling breakfasts and delicious baked goods.

Mount Bachelor and the Cascades Lake Highway

The Northwest's largest ski resort, Mount Bachelor, 22 miles southwest of Bend (mid-Nov to late-May; ☎ 541/382-2442 or 1-800/829-2442, 🌐 www.mtbachelor.com; lift tickets $49), caters to downhill and cross-country skiers, and snowboarders alike. It's also the first stop on the Cascade Lakes Highway, a hundred-mile mountain loop road giving access to trailheads into the Three Sisters – a trio of spiky peaks visible throughout central Oregon – or, further south, the Diamond Peak wilderness area and a sprinkling of campgrounds (see 🌐 www.oregonstateparks.org for information). Get details from Deschutes National Forest Ranger Station, just outside of Bend at 1645 NE Hwy-20 (☎ 541/388-2715, 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/r6/centraloregon), or in Bend at 1001 SW Emkay Drive (☎ 541/383-5300).

Newberry National Volcanic Monument

The so-called Lava Lands cover a huge area of central Oregon, but especially in the Bend area at Newberry National Volcanic Monument (dawn–dusk; five-day parking passes $5). Dating back seven thousand years to the eruption of Mount Newberry, the monument is actually a huge, gently sloping crater laced with hiking paths, nature trails, campgrounds, and prime fishing spots. Some of the highlights (most free with monument admission) include the chilly, mile-long Lava River Cave (summer daily 9am–5pm; $3 for a lamp), an eerie subterranean passage made from a hollow lava tube that remains a steady 42 degrees; the Lava Cast Forest, circular, basalt casts of tree trunks burnt by lava before they could fall; and the surreal landscape of the Big Obsidian Flow, huge hills of volcanic black glass that native tribes throughout the area once used to make arrowheads. The Lava Lands visitor center (May–Oct Wed–Sun 9am–5pm, summer daily; ☎ 541/593-2421), eleven miles south of Bend on US-97, is an excellent source of maps and information on hiking trails, and provides access to the monument's other major sight, Lava Butte, a massive 500ft cinder cone, whose narrow rim you can reach by car and traverse in a short walk.

Crater Lake National Park

Just over a hundred miles south of Bend, the blown-out shell of Mount Mazama holds the resoundingly beautiful CRATER LAKE (seven-day access fee $10; @ www.nps.gov/crla), the deepest lake in the Western Hemisphere, formed after an explosion 42 times greater than that of Mount St Helens (see p.1193). The biggest island on the lake, Wizard Island, is actually the tip of a still-rising cinder cone. In its snowy isolation, the lake, at a depth of nearly two thousand feet, is awe-inspiring; in summer, wildflowers bloom along its high rim. The most popular hike is up 8054ft Garfield Peak, which offers a tremendous vista and is particularly striking in winter. More intrepid hikers can explore the marginally better views offered by the park's tallest outcrop, Mount Scott, at almost nine thousand feet.

You'll need a car to get to the park, though only the southern roads (US-62 from Medford or US-97 from Klamath Falls) are open year-round. The northern access road (via Hwy-138) is closed from mid-October to June, as is the spectacular, 33-mile "Rim Drive" around the crater's edge. Regular boats cruise the lake (July–Sept daily 10am–4pm; 1hr 45min; $22), reached via the sheer, mile-long Cleetwood Cove trail, which provides the only access to the lake. The trail is on the north edge, but visitor facilities are clustered on the south edge, at tiny Rim Village, where the visitor center (June–Sept 9.30am–5pm) is a few steps from Crater Lake Lodge (late-May to mid-Oct; ☎ 541/830-8700, @ www.craterlakelodges.com; $169), a grand old lodge built in 1915; ask for a room overlooking the lake (the lodge perches on the rim of the caldera, nine hundred feet above the water's surface). Operated by the same company, Mazama Village Cabins (June–Oct; same phone; $111) is seven miles from the crater, but has an adjoining campground ($18) in a quiet wooded setting. There are also two campgrounds, the large Mazama ($10) and the much smaller Lost Creek ($14.75), both inside the park boundary. The park headquarters is at the Steel Visitors Center, a few miles south of the rim on the main access road (May–Oct 9am–5pm; rest of year 10am–4pm; ☎ 541/594-3100), where you can inquire about the full range of activities on offer, including taking a scuba dive (June–Sept; free permits) into the depths of the deep blue lake.

Klamath Falls

Sixty miles southeast of Crater Lake, the burg of KLAMATH FALLS isn't particularly pretty, but it does boast the Favell Museum, 125 W Main St (Mon–Sat 9.30am–5.30pm; $6; @ www.favellmuseum.org), which hosts a fine collection of native artifacts and a large assortment of Wild West paintings and sculptures.

Klamath Falls sits in the middle of Klamath Basin, whose lakes and marshes once formed a vast wetland stretching far beyond the California border. Much of it has been drained, but six sections are now protected as national wildlife refuges, with upwards of a million birds during spring and fall migrations. The visitor center, 507 Main St (T 541/882-1501, @ klamathcounty.net), has maps and information.

Eastern Oregon

Eastern Oregon, former Wild West country, can be surprisingly beautiful with its bare, sun-scorched landscape of ochre and beige. The unexpected colors of the John Day Fossil Beds, the remote, snowcapped Wallowa Mountains, and the deep slash of Hells Canyon are all very dramatic landscapes, and not to be missed if you have the time to explore them. Eastbound on Hwy-126/26 from Redmond, you'll emerge from a brief passage through the Ochoco National Forest – also worth a look for its wooded slopes, craggy canyons, and rocky pillars.

John Day Fossil Beds and around

Many eastern Oregon features are named, oddly enough, after John Jacob Astor's fur-trapping employee John Day, best known for being attacked and stripped naked by natives and enduring fits of dementia. As writer Ralph Friedman remarks, places in the state bearing his name are "probably the only ones in Oregon honoring a man acknowledged to have been violently insane.” The most significant of his namesakes are the John Day Fossil Beds, preserved in a layer of volcanic ash while the Cascades formed, just after the extinction of the dinosaurs 65 million years ago. There are three fossil sites, with the most interesting being the Painted Hills unit, nine miles northwest of Mitchell, just off US-26. Striped in shades of beige, rust, and brown, the surfaces of these evocative, sandcastle-like hills are quilted with rivulets worn by draining water. Thirty miles east is the Sheep Rock unit, on Hwy-19, two miles from its junction with US-26. Here, the Condon Paleontology Center (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 541/987-2333, 🌐 www.nps.gov/joda) provides a good introduction to the local geology and the world of fossils. (The last site, the Clarno unit, is 20 miles west of the town of Fossil, but doesn’t have a visitor center.) A mile north of the Condon Center is the Blue Basin, a natural amphitheater where a mile-long trail leads past various fossil replicas, like that of a saber-toothed cat and a tortoise that hurtled to its death millions of years ago.

Beyond the fossil beds, the largest town along US-26 between Baker City and Prineville is little John Day, home of the fascinating Kam Wah Chung & Co. Museum, just off US-26 (May–Sept daily 9am–5pm; free). This was once the residence, opium den, and general store of famed Chinese herbalist Ing Hay, whose apothecary wares – five hundred herbs, dried lizard, bear claw, and rattlesnakes – have been preserved and are still on display, providing an authentic, unexpected glimpse into Oregon’s pioneer history. Six miles west of John Day, there’s camping at Clyde Holliday State Park (Mar–Nov; $13–17; ☎ 503/932-4453), which also offers a pair of tepees ($28) and hiker and biker campsites for only $4.

Baker City

In the forested hills east of John Day, US-26 turns southeast for the long run down to Idaho. More enjoyable is the far shorter drive on Hwy-7 through the southern reaches of the Wallowa-Whitman National Forest to the Gold Rush boomtown of BAKER CITY. The Oregon Trail Interpretative Center, five well-sign-posted miles east of town at Flagstaff Hill (daily: April–Oct 9am–6pm; Nov–Mar 9am–4pm; $5; 🌐 oregontrail.blm.gov), has audiovisual displays and four miles of trails revealing wagon ruts and other points of interest from that historic route (see box overleaf). Back in town, the Oregon Trail Regional Museum, 2480 Grove St (April–Oct daily 9am–5pm; $3.50), showcases artifacts from pioneer days, but is most notable for its fine collection of rocks, petrified wood, and fluorescent geodes.

Baker City’s Main Street, with its handsome early-twentieth-century, red-brick buildings, has the best accommodations, including the Baer House, 2333 Main St (☎ 541/523-1055, 🌐 www.baerhouse.com; 📍), a fetching 1882 Victorian B&B with rooms awash in period antiques, and the opulent Geiser Grand, 1996 Main St (☎ 541/523-1889, 🌐 www.geisergrand.com; 📍), a classic 1889 hotel decked out with a stained-glass ceiling and mahogany fixtures. The surrounding Wallowa-Whitman National Forest has many campgrounds; get details from the visitor center, 490 Campbell St, beside exit 304 on I-84 (☎ 541/523-3356, 🌐 www.visitbaker.com). Among the limited choices for eating, try Barley Brown’s Brewpub, 2190 Main St (☎ 541/523-4266), for its dependable pub fare. Greyhound buses connect to Portland from the bus station at 515 Campbell St.

Pendleton

The large, flat Grande Ronde Valley, north of Baker City on I-84, is based around the dusty town of La Grande, but for local color and history you’re better off pushing northwest on I-84, following the route of the Oregon Trail, to

The Oregon Trail

Between the 1840s and 1870s, more than a quarter-million Americans journeyed by wagon train from the Midwest on the Oregon Trail in search of a new start. Ever since Lewis and Clark completed their successful survey of the Oregon Country in 1806, the idea of “manifest destiny” had both politicians and prospective settlers keen to see their country expand from coast to coast, regardless of who or what might be in the way. The first migrants were further inspired by the missionaries who went west to try to Christianize Native Americans in the 1830s, and who sent back glowing reports of the region’s temperate climate, fertile soil, dense forests, fish-rich rivers, and absence of malaria.

In spring 1843 more than a thousand would-be migrants gathered at Independence and Westport on the banks of the Missouri, preparing for the “Great Migration.” The pioneers were a remarkably homogenous bunch, nearly all experienced farmers, using ox-pulled wagons with flimsy canvas roofs to transport supplies and often walking alongside their vehicles, instead of riding and adding extra weight to them – as Hollywood would have it.

Traversing almost two thousand miles of the West, the migrants forced their wagons across pristine rivers, forests, and mountains, pausing at the occasional army fort or missionary station to recuperate. After three months on the trail, they arrived at what is now the town of The Dalles. From there the group faced an uneasy choice before reaching the lush Willamette Valley just beyond: build rafts and risk the treacherous currents and whirlpools of the Columbia River or take the equally perilous Barlow Road around Mount Hood (see p.1206), notorious for its swiftly changing weather and steep hillsides.

Over the next thirty years, fifty thousand more settlers arrived in the Willamette Valley, with others moving into Washington and California. Along with helping Oregon to become a state in 1859, the migration spawned a cottage industry of specialist suppliers and wagon-builders. Inevitably, except for some isolated wagon-wheel ruts here and there, there are few surviving signs of the migrants, but they are commemorated by several museums, the best of which is near Baker City (see p.1217).

PENDLETON. The town is best known as the home of the popular, week-long Pendleton Round-Up in September ($11–15 per rodeo event; ☎541/276-2553 or 1-800/45-RODEO, 🌐www.pendletonroundup.com), combining traditional rodeo with extravagant pageantry; the Round-Up Hall of Fame, 1205 SW Court Ave (June–Sept Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; free), is stuffed with related memorabilia. The famed Pendleton Woolen Mills, 1307 SE Court Place (tours Mon–Fri; free; information at ☎541/276-6911, 🌐www.pendleton-usa.com), will mainly appeal to textile fans, although you can always pick up a sweater there, while the fascinating Pendleton Underground, 37 SW Emigrant Ave (Mar–Oct Mon–Sat 9.30am–3pm, rest of year varies; 90min; $10; 🌐www.pendletonundergroundtours.org), lets you tour the town’s many subterranean passageways, used during Prohibition for saloons, card rooms, and brothels.

The chamber of commerce is at 501 S Main St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎541/276-7411, 🌐www.pendletonchamber.com), and the Greyhound station is at 801 SE Court Ave. For accommodation try the Victorian rooms of the Parker House B&B, 311 N Main St (☎541/276-8581, 🌐www.parkerhousebnb.com; 4), or the functional Oxford Suites, 2400 SW Court Place (☎1-877/545-7848, 🌐www.oxfordsuites.com; 4). Most restaurants dole out hefty portions of all-American fare like burgers and fries, although Raphael’s, 233 SE 4th Ave (☎541/276-8500), offers a touch of upscale Northwest cuisine, from crab legs and salmon to barbecued elk chops.

The Wallowa Mountains

The Wallowa Mountains, reached by leaving I-84 at La Grande and heading east on Hwy-82, are one of Eastern Oregon's loveliest and least-known areas. At the northern tip of the glacially carved Wallowa Lake, tiny JOSEPH is a perfect spot to spend the night. There are quite a few B&Bs of varying quality, the best of which is the Bronze Antler, 309 S Main St (☎ 541/432-0230, 🌐 www.bronzeantler.com; 4–5, by season), with rustic, Arts and Crafts design and antique European furniture. Also on Main Street are many antique stores and the small Wallowa County Museum, 110 S Main St (summer daily 10am–5pm; donation), where the story of the Nez Percé tribe is presented along with a collection of pioneer artifacts.

A mile south of Joseph, Wallowa Lake is inhabited by the Native American legend of the great horned Wallowa Lake Monster, also known as “Wally.” At its far end, the state park has camping ($17–21; 🌐 www.wallowalake.net), and the Wallowa Lake Tramway, 59919 Wallowa Lake Hwy (daily: June–Aug 10am–5pm; May & Sept 10am–4pm; $20 roundtrip; 🌐 www.wallowalaketramway.com), whisks visitors to the top of 4000ft Mount Howard, where short trails lead to magnificent overlooks. Much of the mountain scenery makes up the Eagle Cap Wilderness ($5 day-passes; 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/r6/w-w), whose lakes, streams, and peaks are accessible only via hiking trails, and the backcountry camping is strikingly remote. Contact the Wallowa Mountains Visitor Center, 88401 Hwy-82 (☎ 541/426-5546, 🌐 www.wallowacounty.org), for details on the Eagle Cap, as well as Hells Canyon.

Hells Canyon

East of Joseph, marking the Idaho border, the Snake River has cut the deepest chasm on the continent – Hells Canyon, a 130-mile gorge that's a thousand feet deeper than the Grand Canyon. With the Seven Devils mountains rising above it and the river glimmering in its depths, the canyon is still best known as the site of the ill-fated (but non-fatal) 1974 motorcycle jump by daredevil Evel Knievel.

The area is preserved as Hells Canyon National Recreation Area (day-pass $5; 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/hellscanyon), where deer, otters, mink, and elk live, along with rattlesnakes, black bears, and mountain lions. Motor vehicles are banned in much of the canyon, so you can only explore by foot or horseback. The forest roads that skirt the area are rough and slippery, and many are closed by snow much of the year. If you intend to use them, check with the rangers in Enterprise, 88401 Hwy-82 (☎ 541/426-5546), or Baker City, 1550 Dewey Ave (☎ 541/523-6391), before you go.

From Joseph, Little Sheep Creek Highway leads to Imnaha, where a narrow and vertiginous graveled Forest Service road leads to the ultimate view from Hat Point, site of a campground and lookout tower. The easier approach is at the south end of the canyon, along Hwy-86 east from Baker City. On the way, tiny Halfway makes a good stop, with accommodation at the three cabins and five rooms available at the rustic farmhouse of the Clear Creek Farm B&B, 48212 Clear Creek Rd (☎ 541/742-2238, 🌐 www.clearcreekfarm.biz; 3).

The other approach heading into the canyon, from Halfway on Hwy-86, meets the Snake River at Oxbow Dam, where a rough Forest Service road leads to Hells Canyon Dam, the launching-point for exhilarating jet-boat and rafting trips through the canyon. Hells Canyon Adventures (reserve at ☎ 541/785-3352 or 1-800/422-3568; 🌐 www.hellscanyonadventures.com) and other companies run sightseeing tours in summer (2–3hr; $35–45 per person). Skimming over the rapids, the boats also operate a “drop-off” service, taking you to hiking trails along the canyon and picking you up the same day or later in the week ($35 per person).

Alaska

No other region in North America fires the imagination like ALASKA – a derivation of Alayeska, an Athabascan word meaning “great land of the west.” Few who see this land of gargantuan ice fields, sweeping tundra, glacially excavated valleys, lush rainforests, deep fjords, and occasionally smoking volcanoes leave unimpressed. Wildlife may be under threat elsewhere, but here it is abundant, with Kodiak bears standing twelve feet tall, moose stopping traffic in downtown Anchorage, wolves prowling national parks, bald eagles circling over the trees, and rivers solid with fifty-plus-pound salmon.

Alaska’s sheer size is hard to comprehend. If superimposed onto the Lower 48 states, it would stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific, while its coastline is longer than the rest of the US combined. All but three of the nation’s twenty highest peaks are found within its boundaries, and one glacier alone is twice the size of Wales. In addition, not only does it contain America’s northernmost and westernmost points, because the Aleutian Islands stretch across the 180th meridian, it contains the easternmost point as well.

Perhaps surprisingly then, a mere 665,000 people live in Alaska, of whom only one-fifth were born in the state: as a rule of thumb, the more winters you have endured, the more Alaskan you are. Often referred to as the “Last Frontier,” Alaska in many ways mirrors the American West of the nineteenth century: an endless, undeveloped space in which to stake one’s claim and set up a life without interference – or at least that’s how Alaskans would like it to be. Throughout the last hundred years or so, tens of thousands have been lured by the promise of wealth, first by gold and then by fishing, logging, and, most recently, oil. However, Alaska’s 100,000 Native peoples have been greatly marginalized, though Native corporations set up as a result of pre-oil boom land deals have increasing economic clout.

Traveling around Alaska still demands a spirit of adventure, and to make the most of the state you need to have an enthusiasm for striking out on your own and roughing it a bit. Binoculars are an absolute must, as is bug spray; the mosquito is referred to as the “Alaska state bird” and it takes industrial-strength repellent to keep it away. On top of that, there’s the climate – though Alaska is far from the great big icebox people imagine it to be. While winter temperatures of -40°F are commonplace in Fairbanks, the most touristed areas – the southeast and the Kenai Peninsula – enjoy a maritime climate (45–65°F in summer) similar to that of the Pacific Northwest, meaning much more rain (in some towns 180-plus inches per year) than snow. Remarkably, the summer temperature in the Interior often reaches 80°F.

Alaska is far more expensive than most other states: apart from two dozen hotels and myriad campgrounds, there’s little budget accommodation, and eating and drinking will set you back at least twenty percent more than in the Lower 48 (perhaps fifty percent in more remote regions). Still, experiencing Alaska on a low budget is possible, though it requires planning and off-peak travel. From June to August room prices are crazy; May and September, when tariffs are relaxed and the weather only slightly chillier, are just as good times to go, and in April or October you'll have the place to yourself, albeit with a smaller range of places to stay and eat. Ground transportation, despite the long distances, is reasonable, with backpacker shuttles ferrying budget travelers between major centers. Winter, when hotels drop their prices by as much as half, is becoming an increasingly popular time to visit, particularly for the dazzling aurora borealis (see box, p.1258).

Some history

It is thought that Alaska has been inhabited for longer than anywhere else in the Americas; it was here that humans first reached the "New World" from eastern Russia, most likely around fourteen thousand years ago. These first settlers can be classified into four groups. The Aleut, in the inhospitable Aleutian Islands, built underground homes and hunted sea mammals such as walrus for food and clothing, while the nomadic Athabascan herded caribou in the Interior. The warrior Tlingit lived in the warmer coastal regions of the southeast, where food was plentiful, while the Eskimos (or, more correctly, the Yup'ik and Iñupiat), who inhabited the northwestern coast, lived off fish and larger marine life. Descendants of all these groups can be found in Alaska today, and a few live in much the same way as their ancestors.

In 1741, Danish explorer Vitus Bering, working for the Tsar of Russia, became the first Caucasian to set foot on Alaskan soil and found huge numbers of fur seals and sea otters, whose treasured pelts were made into hats. Russians, and later British and Spaniards, joined in the ensuing slaughter, both of the otters and the Aleut, who were enslaved and forced to hunt on behalf of the fur traders. By the end of the century, the Russians had established their Alaskan capital at present-day Sitka, pushed down the coast as far as Northern California and, in the process, decimated the sea otter colonies.

During the 1860s, limited returns and domestic economic problems forced Russia to sell its lands to America. On October 18, 1867, Secretary of State William Seward purchased what was disparagingly known as "Seward's Folly" or "Seward's Icebox" for $7.2 million – less than 2¢ per acre. Alaska soon turned out to be a literal gold mine with major discoveries at Juneau (1880), Nome (1898), and Fairbanks (1902). With logging companies and commercial fishing operations soon descending upon Alaska, the government began to take a more active interest in its affairs, and in 1959 Alaska became the 49th state.

Fortune-seekers headed to Alaska again in the mid-1970s to build the trans-Alaska pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to the ice-free port of Valdez. Today, Alaska still derives the majority of its wealth from oil and gas and, consequently, is prone to extreme boom-and-bust cycles. Once-lucrative fishing and lumber industries are fast giving way to tourism as a source of income, and the ethical question of how best to use Alaska lands in the future has led to bitter controversy. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the case of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, a vast tract of tundra in Alaska's northeast that has some degree of protection, but is constantly under threat from the oil industry and Alaska's Republican governor, senators, and congressman.

Getting to Alaska

Alaska is a long way from the rest of the United States, and however you get there it is going to be expensive. Once you accept that, however, there is no question as to the most enjoyable method – the memorable ferry trip on the Alaska Marine Highway.

By air

Anchorage is no longer the major air crossroads it was, but it's still easy to fly to Alaska. Most, but not all, flights from the Lower 48 are routed via Seattle. The most frequent service is operated by Alaska Airlines (☎ 1-800/252-7522, 🌐 www.alaskaair.com), whose moneysaving package enables you to stop at towns like Juneau, Sitka, Cordova, and Fairbanks at little extra cost. Roundtrips from Seattle to Anchorage cost around $400 if bought two weeks in advance, and $600 or more on short notice, though there can be Web specials.

By sea

The ferries of the state-run Alaska Marine Highway System (☎ 1-800/642-0066, 🌐 www.ferryalaska.com) reaching many places that cars can't, operates in two separate regions with an occasional "Cross-Gulf" link. The popular south-east route runs a thousand miles from Bellingham, north of Seattle, through a wonderland of pristine waters, narrow fjords, and untouched forests to Skagway, at the northern end of the Inside Passage, stopping at Ketchikan, Wrangell, Sitka, Juneau, and Haines. The whole trip takes three days and costs $342 for walk-on passengers, $448 for a small car, $55 for bicycles, and $85 for kayaks. It is possible to sleep – and even to pitch a tent – on the "solarium," a covered, heated upper deck, while a two-berth cabin costs from $271. The southwest ferry system connects the Kenai Peninsula and Prince William Sound to Kodiak and the Aleutians, and the two systems are linked by "Cross-Gulf" ferries from Juneau to Whittier and Kodiak twice a month in summer. Throughout, section passenger fares depend on distance traveled: $44 from Sitka to Juneau; $80 from Sitka to Ketchikan; or $214 from Juneau to Whittier. While it's a bargain for foot passengers prepared to rough it, an extended voyage with vehicle and a cabin (both of which should be reserved in advance) becomes expensive. If you're driving up from the Lower 48, consider boarding a ferry at Prince Rupert in British Columbia, two days' drive north of Seattle. This saves one day at sea without missing much of the natural spectacle.

By road

For many people, the drive up through Canada is one of the major highlights of a visit to Alaska. The only road is the 1500-mile Alaska Highway from Dawson Creek in British Columbia to Fairbanks, which was built by the military in just eight months. It has a fearsome reputation, but is now fully paved with gas stations, campgrounds and hotels along the way. It remains as beautiful as ever, and still demands a spirit of adventure from drivers who attempt it.

No direct buses run to Alaska, though for around $169 ($107 7-day advance purchase) you can hop on a Greyhound in Seattle and, after a few transfers over two grueling days, reach Whitehorse in the Yukon, from where Alaska/Yukon Trails (☎ 1-800/770-7275, 🌐 www.alaskashuttle.com) make the run to Anchorage ($175) or Fairbanks ($162).

Getting around Alaska

Getting around Alaska on the cheap can be tough; public transportation is limited, and many areas are only accessible by boat or plane, which is invariably pricey. With the exception of the ferry system (see above), Anchorage is very much the hub of

The AlaskaPass

Foot passengers planning to travel up the Inside Passage to Anchorage, Denali, and Fairbanks may make considerable savings by purchasing the AlaskaPass, which allows unlimited ferry, train, and bus travel for a certain period. Currently, only the Alaska Marine Highway ferries, the Alaska Railroad, the White Pass & Yukon Railroad and Holland-America Motorcoaches are members, but it's worth checking if other operators have come on board. There are four passes: 15 consecutive days of travel ($829); 8 travel days out of 12 ($699); 12 days out of 21 ($849); and a land-only pass from Skagway to Anchorage ($399). Kids (2 to 11) travel half-price, except for the land-only pass. Add on a $75 booking fee, which is charged per itinerary (not per person). Buy your pass from AlaskaPass Inc, PO Box 351, Vashon, WA 98070 (☎ 1-800/248-7598, 🌐 www.alaskapass.com).

Alaska, with several bus companies running to major destinations: Seward with Seward Bus Line (☎ 907/224-3608, 🌐 www.sewardbuslines.com; $45); Homer with Homer Stage Line (☎ 907/235-2252, 🌐 www.homerstageline.com; $60); Talkeetna with Talkeetna Shuttle Service (☎ 907/733-17258, 🌐 www.denalicentral.com) and Denali ($65) and Fairbanks ($90) with Alaska/Yukon Trails (☎ 1-800/770-7275, 🌐 www.alaskashuttle.com). The expensive Alaska Railroad runs nearly five hundred miles from Seward north through Anchorage to Fairbanks, with a spur to Whittier for cruise liners and ferries to Valdez and Juneau. One-way summer fares from Anchorage are: Denali $129, Fairbanks $185, Whittier $55 and Seward $62.

Driving around Alaska in summer requires no special skills, though minor routes are often gravel, requiring caution. Wildlife, especially moose, can be a danger any time, even on city streets. In spring and fall you should be prepared for snow, and it is wise to carry a survival kit, particularly in winter, as traffic can be sparse even on major routes. Road conditions can change rapidly – call ☎ 511 or 1-866/282-7577 or see 🌐 511.alaska.gov.

Travel by plane is not always more expensive than other methods, especially if you can map out your itinerary in advance with the state's largest operator, Alaska Airlines (see opposite), which flies to most major communities and uses partners such as ERA Aviation (☎ 1-800/866-8394, 🌐 www.flyera.com) and PenAir (☎ 1-800/448-4226, 🌐 www.penair.com) to get to smaller towns. Chartering a plane might sound extravagant but can be inexpensive for groups of four or more, and may be the crowning glory of an Alaska vacation. To arrange this, contact any 'bush plane' operator (every town has at least one). ERA Aviation and PenAir are good starting points, though they may refer you to another company.

Southeast Alaska

Southeast Alaska is archetypal Alaska: an awesome four-hundred-mile-long tableau of fjords, mountains, glaciers, a thousand islands, and thick conifer forests lining the Inside Passage. The area's first settlers were the Tlingit (thling-get), and it was not until the end of the eighteenth century that Russian expansionists burst into the region. Today, southeast Alaska's small communities resound with tales of endurance, folly, and cruelty.

The state's southernmost town, Ketchikan, rich in Native heritage, makes a pretty introduction, while Sitka retains a Russian influence. Further north are swanky Juneau, the capital; Haines, with its mix of old-timers and arty newcomers; and Skagway, thoroughly redolent of the old gold-mining days. You could spend months exploring here, but most are content to focus on the towns of Sitka and Skagway, and Glacier Bay National Park, an expensive side-trip from Juneau that penetrates one of Alaska's most stunning regions.

With no roads connecting towns, by far the best way to travel is by ferry, though at some stage make sure you take a floatplane ride. For a true outdoor adventure, you can rent a cabin in the huge Tongass National Forest – which encompasses most of southeast Alaska – for around $35 per night; details from the visitor centers in Juneau (see p.1232) and Ketchikan (see below), or through the NRRS reservation service (📞 www.reserveusa.com).

Ketchikan and around

KETCHIKAN, almost seven hundred miles north of Seattle, is Alaska's "first city." It is the first port of call for many cruise ships and its historic downtown, wedged between water and forested mountains, becomes saturated in summer with elderly tourists. Beyond the souvenir shopping, it can be a delight, built into steep hills and partly propped on wooden pilings, dotted with boardwalks, wooden staircases, and totem poles.

By 1886, white settlers had opened the first of dozens of canneries in what was soon to be the "salmon capital of the world." Forests of cedar, hemlock, and spruce, which had provided timber for Tlingit homes and totems, also fed the town's sawmills. The timber and fishing industries have since declined, and Ketchikan has increasingly looked to tourism as its savior, with the nearby Misty Fjords National Monument as the prime draw.

The state's fourth largest city is a strong contender for the nation's wettest; annual precipitation averages 165 inches, but Ketchikan's perennial drizzle and sporadic showers won't spoil your visit.

Arrival and information

Ferries dock two miles north of downtown on Tongass Highway; city buses stop here every thirty minutes until 8.30pm. Alaska Airlines serves the airport, which is on an island and is linked to town by half-hourly ferries ($5 roundtrip). The visitor center stands downtown at 131 Front St (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/770-3300, 🌐 www.visit-ketchikan.com), and for information about the surrounding Tongass forests visit the Southeast Alaska Discovery Center, 50 Main St (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 907/228-6220, 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/r10/tongass), a striking cedar-framed building which houses absorbing displays ($5) of the region's natural habitats and native culture.

Accommodation

Hotels in Ketchikan vary widely, and the closest campgrounds to town ($10) are in the attractive Ward Lake Recreation Area, five miles northwest of the ferry terminal.

Ketchikan Youth Hostel in the United Methodist Church, 400 Main St ☎ 907/225-3319, @ ktynyh@ eagle.ptialaska.net. Very basic youth hostel with beds for $15, June–Aug only.

The New York Hotel 207 Stedman St ☎1-866/225-0246, 🌐www.thenewyorkhotel.

com. Tastefully refurbished hotel by the small boat harbor with cozy, tastefully decorated rooms and a good café. 🍷

The town

The bulk of Ketchikan's historic buildings lie on Creek Street, a rickety-looking boardwalk along Ketchikan Creek. This was a red-light district until 1954; now all the former houses of ill-repute are given over to gift shops and galleries. Dolly's House, 24 Creek St, once the home and workplace of Dolly Arthur, the town's most famous madam, is now a small museum stuffed with saucy memorabilia (generally daily 8am–5pm; $5).

Most of the totem poles you see around town are authentic replicas, but the Totem Heritage Center, 601 Deermount St (daily 8am–5pm; $5), exhibits the largest collection of original totem poles in the US: 33 mostly nineteenth-century examples recovered from abandoned Native villages. The Tlingit-run Saxman Totem Park, two miles south of town, displays the world's largest standing collection of poles and an authentic tribal house. For $3 you get to see the poles and exterior of the buildings, but you'll need to join the Saxman Native Village Tour (May–Sept daily; 1hr; $35; 🌐www.capefoxtours.com, ✉info@capefoxtours.com; no phone) to see sculptors at work and a dance performance inside the clan house.

Fourteen of the best replica totem poles and a rebuilt tribal house stand in Totem Bight State Park, breathtakingly set on a forested strip of coast overlooking the Narrows, ten miles north of town on the Tongass Highway. On the way back, take some time out to do the easy but enjoyable boardwalk trail up to Perseverance Lake, starting on Ward Lake Road, four miles north of town.

Eating and drinking

Inexpensive food in Ketchikan tends to be rather good, a rare combination in Alaska. The town is also renowned for its hard drinking.

Chico's 435 Dock St ☎907/225-2833. Bargain authentic Mexican food and pizza with dinners starting at $10, or just grab a $6.50 burrito to eat in or take out.

Diaz Café 335 Stedman St ☎907/225-2257. Great inexpensive diner food with some tasty Filipino dishes. Closed Mon.

First City Saloon 830 Water Street. Straightforward boozing bar occasionally featuring bands and shows. Probably the mostly likely place to indulge in a little dancing.

That One Place 207 Stedman St

☎907/225-0246. Nonsmoking restaurant and bar with a daytime menu loaded with excellent soups, burgers, wraps, and salads (mostly $9–12), plus some sumptuous desserts. Also open evenings when there's an excellent tapas menu, with most plates $5–7. Closed Sun.

Misty Fiords National Monument

Twenty-two miles east of Ketchikan on the mainland, the awe-inspiring MISTY FIORDS NATIONAL MONUMENT consists of 2.3 million acres of deep fjords flanked by sheer 3000ft glacially scoured walls topped by dense rainforest. As befits its name, the monument is at its most atmospheric when swathed in low-lying mists. The best access is with Alaska Cruises (☎1-800/225-1905, 🌐www.mistyfjord.net) who offer a six-hour cruise ($130) and an excellent four-hour cruise/fly combo ($260, occasional evening specials $200). Fourteen rustic cabins (mostly $35) are rented out by the Forest Service (☎1-877/444-6777). Access is either by floatplane with Taquan Air (☎1-800/770-8800, 🌐www.taquanair.com), or kayak with Southeast Sea Kayaks (☎1-800/287-1607, 🌐www.kayakketchikan.com).

Sitka

Perched on the seaward edge of the Inside Passage, SITKA ranks as one of Alaska's prettiest and most historic towns. The Russians established a fort here in 1799; three years later, Tlingit warriors massacred the imperialist troops, but were themselves cannoned into submission in 1804. Under Russian occupation the town became the capital of Russian America and witnessed transfer of ownership to the US in 1867. Sitka today earns its keep mostly from fishing and tourism – you'll find more nesting dolls here than in the rest of the US put together – but the town also has a wealth of great outdoor opportunities and a fine reputation for its festivals, especially the chamber-oriented Summer Music Festival each June.

Arrival and information

Traditional ferries and a new fast catamaran jointly visit Sitka around five times per week, mooring seven miles northwest of town. Sitka Tours shuttles (☎ 907/747-8443; $8 roundtrip) run downtown and offer two-hour town tours ($12). Flights arrive a half-hour walk from downtown. Mountain bikes can be rented from Yellow Jersey Cycles, 329 Harbor Drive (☎ 907/747-6317; $25 a day). You can rent kayaks from Sitka Sound Ocean Adventures (☎ 907/747-6375, 🌐 www.ssoceanadventures.com; $30 a half-day, double $40), who also organize day-long guided trips on the Sound ($132). The visitor center is in the Centennial Building, 330 Harbor Drive (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 907/747-3220, 🌐 www.sitka.org).

Accommodation

Sitka has a good range of accommodation: the historic 🏠 Sitka Hotel, 118 Lincoln St (☎ 907/747-3288, 🌐 www.sitkahotel.com; 3–4), offers a touch of old-fashioned style and good-value rooms that come with and without bathrooms; the centrally located Finn Alley Inn B&B, 711 Lincoln St (☎ 907/747-3655, 🌐 www.ptialaska.net/~seakdist/finn; 5), has one large half-basement apartment with a private entrance, full kitchen, and a continental breakfast; and the new Sitka Youth Hostel, 109 Jeff Davis St (☎ 907/747-8661), is expected to open in June 2007, with bunk beds around $20. Campers should head less than a mile north of the ferry dock to the gorgeous Starrigavan Campground, on Halibut Point Rd

△ Sitka Sound

(☎ 1-877/444-6777; $12), or seven miles east of Sitka to the free but basic Sawmill Creek Campground, on Blue Lake Rd, at the start of the Beaver Lake Trail.

The Town

The best place to get a grasp of Sitka's Russian past is from diminutive Castle Hill, where Alaska was officially transferred to the US on October 18, 1867; a plaque marks the spot. A two-minute stroll to the heart of downtown leads to St Michael's Cathedral, a fine piece of Russian church architecture, completed in 1848 and rebuilt after a disastrous fire in 1966. It displays priceless original icons (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm; $2). Nearby is the large, mustard-colored 1842 Russian Bishop's House (daily 9am–5pm; $4). Guided tours take in the restored chapel, schoolroom, and bishop's living quarters. Four blocks further along at 104 College Drive, the Sheldon Jackson Museum (daily 9am–5pm; $4) houses a compact but extensive display of Native artifacts accumulated by missionary and educationalist Sheldon Jackson.

At the end of Lincoln Street, Sitka National Historic Park stands on the site of a decisive battle between the Tlingit and the Russians. Nothing remains of the fort except a grassy clearing, but the evocative air is enhanced by several vividly painted totem poles alongside the footpaths, all replicas of nineteenth-century classic designs. A visitor center (summer daily 8am–5pm; $4) features good interpretative displays on what is commonly called the “Battle of Sitka,” as well as hosting Native craft workshops.

Sitka's trail system ranges from shoreside strolls to harder climbs up Gavan Hill and steep Mount Verstovia: for more information visit the Forest Service office, 204 Siganaka Way (☎ 907/747-6671).

Eating and drinking

Sitka's restaurants aren't exactly going to set gourmet tongues wagging, though there are several decent places to dine out. You can duck through Old Harbor Books to access 🐾 Backdoor, 104 Barracks St ☎ 907/747-8856, a daytime café with great coffee, plus tasty sandwiches, pastries, and light lunches, while the simple, cafeteria-style Sheldon Jackson College Dining Room has all-you-care-to-eat breakfast (6.30–8am; $5.50), lunch (11.30am–1pm; $8.25), and dinner (5–6pm; $11). Follow the road opposite the entrance to the Sheldon Jackson Museum to reach it. For more upscale dining, try 🐾 Ludvig's Bistro, 256 Katlian St (☎ 907/966-3663), offering expensive but excellent Spanish-, Portuguese-, Italian-, and Moroccan-influenced dishes. Closed Sun. If you're looking for evening drinks, Pioneer Bar, 212 Katlian St (☎ 907/747-3456), is a down-to-earth boozing spot lined with hundreds of black-and-white photographs of fishing boats.

Juneau and around

The sophisticated and vibrant city of JUNEAU is the only state capital in the nation not accessible by road. It is exceptionally picturesque, hard against the Gastineau Channel, with steep, narrow roads clawing up into the rainforested hills behind. Gold features heavily in its history. In 1880, Joe Juneau made Alaska's first gold strike in the rainforest along the banks of the Gastineau Channel. Until the last mine was shut down in 1944, this was the world's largest producer of low-grade ore – all the flat land in Juneau, stretching from downtown to the airport, is landfill from mine tailings. Today, state government provides much of the employment, and tourism plays its part with the drive-to Mendenhall Glacier and the watery charms of Tracy Arm fjord as temptation.

Arrival, information, and getting around

The ferry terminal is fourteen miles northwest of downtown at Auke Bay; ferries often arrive at unearthly hours, so getting into town can be a problem. Apart from taking a $40 taxi ride, the only transport is the city's Capital Transit bus service (Mon–Sat hourly 7am–10.30pm, Sun 9am–5pm; ☎ 907/789-6901; $1.50), which stops a mile and a half south outside DeHarts grocery. Buses also pick up from close to the airport, nine miles north of downtown, which sees daily Alaska Airlines flights.

The main visitor center, Centennial Hall, 101 Egan Drive (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; ☎ 1-888/581-2201, @ www.traveljuneau.com), contains an unstaffed desk devoted to brochures about the Tongass National Forest, including material on Glacier Bay, Tracy Arm fjord, and the trails and cabins in Juneau's wooded surroundings. Popular hikes from Juneau include the undemanding Perseverance Trail and, over the bridge on Douglas Island, the Treadwell Mine Historic Trail. Driftwood Lodge (☎ 907/586-2280), rents out mountain bikes for $25 a day.

Accommodation

Juneau has the widest range of accommodation in Southeast Alaska, as well as some fine camping.

Alaskan Hotel and Bar 167 S Franklin St ☎ 1-800/327-9374, @ www.thealaskanhotel.com.

Pleasant old hotel with a salacious past and a fine bar in the heart of downtown. Twelve doubles with shared or private bath. ③–④

 Gold Street Inn 303 Gold St, downtown ☎ 907/586-9863, @ www.goldstreetinn.com. Quiet and attractive B&B with self-catering facilities, self-serve breakfast, satellite TV and free WiFi. Suite ③, rooms ④

 Juneau Hostel 614 Harris St ☎ 907/586-9559, @ www.juneauhostel.org. Clean, comfortable, and relaxed hostel, in an old home near downtown, with dorm beds ($10) and a family room, but an inconvenient daytime lock-out (9am–5pm) and an 11pm curfew.

Mendenhall Lake Campground Montana Creek Rd, 13 miles from downtown. A gorgeous Forest Service campground within sight of the Mendenhall Glacier and with space for RVs ($26) and some lovely lakeside walk-in tent sites ($10).

 Silverbow Inn 120 2nd St, downtown ☎ 1-800/586-4146, @ www.silverbowinn.com.

Attractive, small hotel with smallish but nicely furnished and tastefully decorated rooms, each with TV, phone and WiFi, and with a good continental breakfast included. ⑥

Thane Road Tent Camping Mile 1 Thane Rd. Primitive site 15min walk south of downtown. $5.

The Town

Many original buildings stand in the South Franklin Street Historic District – Juneau managed to avoid the fires that destroyed many other gold towns in Alaska. The onion-domed St Nicholas Russian Orthodox Church, on Fifth and Gold (Mon 9am–6pm, Tues & Thurs 9am–5pm, Fri 10am–noon & 3–5pm, Sat 11am–3pm, Sun 1–5pm; $2 donation), contains icons and religious treasures, while the well-presented Alaska State Museum, 395 Whittier St (daily 8.30am–5.30pm; $5), covers Native culture, Russian heritage, and the first gold strikes. Its pride and joy is the logbook in which Bering reported his first sighting of Alaska. The smaller City Museum, at Main and Fourth streets (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $4), displays relics from the mining era. The best views of town are from the top of the Mount Roberts Tramway (summer daily 9am–9pm; $24), which careers from the cruise-ship dock 1800 feet up Mount Roberts, where there's a nature center and some easy trails.

Eating and drinking

Downtown has a reasonable selection of places to eat and drink, but most fill up very quickly when cruise ships are in town.

Alaskan Hotel Bar 167 S Franklin St. Great old bar, with live music most nights, especially toward the weekend.

The Hanger on the Wharf Merchants Wharf ☎907/586-5018. Former float-plane hanger with tremendous waterfront views. There are over twenty beers on tap, plus pool tables and live music on weekends. Also serves wraps and burgers at lunch and the likes of jambalaya and halibut tacos ($10–12) at dinner.

Paradise Café 245 Marine Way. Stylish little café and bakery with excellent soups, salads, phyllo rolls, and wraps, all made from scratch and eaten at tables in an adjacent room. A little pricey but worth it. Open for breakfast and lunch to 3pm.

Rainbow Foods 224 4th St ☎907/586-6846.

Wholefood and organic grocery serving a limited selection of light lunches (Mon–Fri), plus a salad bar. Try the homemade cookies and espresso.

Silverbow Bakery 120 2nd St ☎907/586-4146. Relaxed eat-in bakery and coffee bar with bagels and superb pastries bolstering a menu of homemade breads used in hot and cold deli sandwiches ($6–11).

Uncle Sam's Cafeteria 2nd floor, 709 W 9th St ☎907/586-3430. Low-cost dining with a view, inside the Federal Building. Open for breakfast ($5; 7–10.30am) and lunches including daily specials ($7; noon–4pm) such as taco salad and chicken fried steak.

Mendenhall Glacier and Tracy Arm Fjord

Thirteen miles from downtown, the one-and-a-half-mile-wide Mendenhall Glacier is the state's most accessible. The visitor center (daily 8am–7.30pm; $3) is built on a point occupied by the glacier as recently as 1940. Hiking trails include the West Glacier Trail, on which, with extreme caution and without official approval, you can explore the ice caves. Capital Transit buses leave for Mendenhall hourly from downtown; get off at Glacier Spur Road for the visitor center, or Montana Creek Road for the West Glacier trail. MGT (☎907/789-5460) charges $6 each way from town as part of their Glacier Express tour. Temsco (☎1-877/789-9501, www.temscoair.com; $199) offers one-hour helicopter trips with 25 minutes on the glacier itself.

One of the best day-trips out of Juneau is up the narrow, twisting Tracy Arm fjord, with waterfall-fringed cliffs and common sightings of whales and seals. Take one of the day-long cruises with Adventure Bound Alaska (☎1-800/228-3875, www.adventureboundalaska.com; $120).

Glacier Bay National Park

Alaska's finest array of tidewater glaciers feed into GLACIER BAY, sixty miles northwest of Juneau. Sixteen glaciers surround this tranquil 65-mile-long wilderness where the flora ranges from mature spruce forests to delicate plant life. Brown and black bears, moose, mountain goats, sea otters, humpback whales, porpoise, seals, and a colorful array of birds have made the area their home. It is an expensive place to visit requiring a flight from Juneau to Gustavus ($90–130 roundtrip) with either Alaska Airlines or LAB (☎907/789-9160, www.labflying.com). Glacier access is by day-cruise (8hr; $170) from nearby Bartlett Cove, and you'll also need at least one night's accommodation. At Bartlett Cove you can camp for free or stay at Glacier Bay Lodge (☎1-888/229 8687, www.visitglacierbay.com; ⑦), with tasteful rooms, a good restaurant, and cruise bookings. Further accommodation can be found in Gustavus in the form of Bear's Nest B&B (☎907/679-2440, www.gustavus/bearsnest; ④), a completely self-contained and fully furnished cabin with a double bed upstairs and a single futon down, plus a more basic A-frame. Eat next door to the Bear's Nest Café.

Haines

The small community of HAINES sits on a peninsula between the Chilkat and the Chilkoot inlets at the northern end of the longest and deepest fjord in the US,

Lynn Canal. The town tends to be overshadowed by its brasher neighbor, Skagway, but it remains a real Alaska experience nonetheless. The community itself is an interesting mix of locals and urban escapees from the Lower 48.

The Tlingit fished and traded here for years before 1881, when the first missionaries arrived. Today, the town survives on fishing and tourism, and though cruise ships tend to press on to Skagway, it remains a popular spot, hosting in mid-August the cookouts, crafts, and log-rolling of the Southeast Alaska Fair. The fairgrounds also hold Dalton City, a free pioneer theme park notable only in that its buildings came from the movie sets of Jack London's White Fang, which was filmed in the Haines area in 1989.

Arrival and information

Haines's AMHS ferry terminal is five miles north of town, with a daily service to and from Juneau and Skagway. Local taxis meet all ferry arrivals; downtown should cost $10, but ask before you board. Chilkat Cruises & Tours (☎ 907/766-2100 or 1-888/766-2103, 🌐 www.chilkatcruises.com) runs a convenient passenger-only fast ferry ($25 one-way, $45 roundtrip) between Haines and Skagway from a dock near Fort Seward. The visitor center, 122 Second St (Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat & Sun 9am–6pm; ☎ 1-800/458-3579, 🌐 www.haines.ak.us), has all kinds of maps and information.

Accommodation

As well as the usual mid-range accommodation, Haines has half a dozen handy campgrounds.

Bear Creek Cabins and Hostel Small Tract Rd ☎ 907/766-2259, 🌐 bearcreekcabinssalaska.com. Good hostel over a mile south of Fort Seward with coin-op laundry and no lock-out or curfew. Campers ($14 for two) can use hostel facilities. Dorms $18, cabins 2

Port Chilkoot Camper Park Mud Bay Rd beside Fort Seward ☎ 1-800/542-6363, 🌐 www.hotelhalsingland.com. Simple campsite with pay-showers and a laundromat on site. Full hookup $25, dry RV $16, tents $10.

Portage Cove State Recreation Site Beach Rd, half a mile southeast of Fort Seward. A small site for backpackers and cyclists only. It's right by the beach and has great views and potable water. No overnight parking. $5.

 Summer Inn B&B 117 2nd Ave ☎ 907/766-2970, 🌐 www.summerinnbnb.com.

Immaculately kept downtown B&B with shared-bath rooms, some with sea views and all including a good cooked breakfast. It has a very homey feel with clawfoot baths, quilts, and fresh flowers. 4

The Town

In the center of town, the Sheldon Museum & Cultural Center, 11 Main St (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 1–4pm; 🌐 www.sheldonmuseum.org; $3), does a great job of showing how Haines fits into its Chilkat environment and the wider Tlingit world, and exhibits fine examples of woodwork, clothing, and the distinctive yellow and black Chilkat blanket in wolf, raven, and killer whale designs.

Half a mile away, grassy Fort William H. Seward was established in 1903 to contain general Gold Rush lawlessness, and territorial disputes with Canada. It is now the site of Alaska Indian Arts (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free), with a gallery for locally produced sculpture, photos, and carving, and a back room where you can watch and chat to carvers as they work on huge totem poles.

Nearby, the stuffed birds of the American Bald Eagle Foundation, 113 Haines Hwy at Second Avenue (daily 10am–6pm; $3), make a poor substitute for seeing the world's largest gathering of bald eagles, which flock to the banks of the Chilkat River each fall. By November over three thousand of these once-endangered rare birds – as many as two dozen to a tree – are gathered along a five-mile sand bar at the Chilkat Bald Eagle Preserve, nine miles north of town on the Haines Highway.

Two great, wild state parks – Chilkoot Lake and Chilkat – are just a half-hour cycle ride to the north and south of town respectively. Chilkat in particular has some good trails and vistas, while well-tramped treks lead from town to the summits of Mount Riley and the much more difficult Mount Ripinsky. Haines is also a popular starting point for rafting trips: Chilkat Guides on Beach Road (☎ 907/766-2491, 🌐 www.raftalaska.com) is one of many operators to offer four-hour float trips ($79) down the Chilkat River, ideal for viewing eagles and other wildlife.

Eating and drinking

Haines's most exciting bars and restaurants can be found in the Fort Seward area. In the evening visitors converge on the friendly bar at the Hotel Hålsingland, while some locals stick to the more raucous joints downtown.

Bamboo Room 11 2nd St near Main ☎ 907/766-2800. Standard diner popular for its well-prepared meals (especially the locally caught halibut and chip dinner), and fresh-baked pies.

Chilkat Restaurant and Bakery 5th Ave & Dalton St ☎ 907/766-3653. A great spot for some of their baked goods with an espresso coffee, or more substantial fare. They do everything from tasty breakfasts, salads and halibut sandwiches to regular Thai lunches for $10, all beautifully cooked. Mountain Market & Café 151 3rd Ave at Haines Hwy ☎ 907/766-3340. Combined natural-food grocery and espresso bar that's one of the best places in town for a $6 bagel breakfast, a $7 tortilla wrap, or just a muffin with your mocha.

Skagway and around

SKAGWAY, the northernmost ferry stop on the southeast route, sprang up overnight in 1897 as a trading post serving Klondike Gold Rush pioneers about to set off on the five-hundred-mile ordeal. Having grown from one cabin to a town of twenty thousand in three months, Skagway, rife with disease and desperado violence, was reported to be “hell on earth.” It boasted over seventy bars and hundreds of prostitutes, and was controlled by organized criminals, including Jefferson “Soapy” Smith, notorious for cheating hapless prospectors out of their gold.

By 1899, the Gold Rush was over, but the completion in 1900 of the White Pass and Yukon Route railway from Skagway to Whitehorse, the Yukon capital, ensured Skagway's survival. Today, the town's eight hundred residents have gone to great lengths to maintain (or recreate) the original appearance of their home, much of which lies in the Klondike Gold Rush National Historic Park, and in summer as many as five cruise ships a day call in to appreciate the effort.

AMHS ferries and an independent operator (see p.1234) arrive daily from Haines and Juneau at the foot of the main thoroughfare, Broadway, and just a block from the train station from where WP&YR trains (see p.1236) head inland. Yukon Alaska Tourist Tours (reservations essential ☎ 1-866/626-7383, 🌐 www.yatt.ca), run a bus from Skagway to Whitehorse ($40) and a train-bus combo ($95).

Skagway is very compact, and most of the sights can easily be seen on foot. The Klondike Gold Rush National Historic Park visitor center, Broadway at 2nd Avenue (daily 8am–6pm; ☎ 907/983-2223, 🌐 www.nps.gov/klgo), holds talks, leads walking tours, and has historical displays and an impressive movie about the Gold Rush, as well as maps and information on the Chilkoot Trail. Skagway's visitor center (daily 8am–6pm; ☎ 1-888/762-1898, 🌐 www.skagway.org) is on Broadway between Second and Third avenues in the Arctic Brotherhood Hall building.

Accommodation

In such a touristy little town, accommodation prices run slightly high, and rooms are often reserved far in advance.

At the White House 475 8th Ave at Main St
☎ 907/983-9000, 🌐 www.atthewhitehouse.com

High-standard B&B in one of Skagway's original homes; restored and modernized rooms with super-comfy beds, cable TV, and ceiling fans. A continental breakfast buffet is served and there's always tea, coffee, and home-baked cookies on hand. ⑤

Chilkoot Trail Outpost Dyea ☎ 907/983-3799, 🌐 www.chilkoottrailoutpost.com. Comfortable modern log cabins in the woods at this welcoming B&B located almost 9 miles from Skagway and a quarter mile from the start of the Chilkoot Trail. Cabins sleep up to four and come with bedding, TV, microwave, fridge, and coffeemaker. Cheaper "Hikers' Cabins" come with bunks and bedding but lack microwave and fridge. Free bikes, WiFi, and breakfast are included for all guests. Large cabins ⑥, hikers ⑤

Cindy's Place Mile 0.2 Dyea Rd ☎ 1-800/831-8095, 🌐 www.alaska.net/~croland. Three cabins in the woods two miles from downtown Skagway, one budget, two more luxurious log-built affairs with private bathrooms (one with a wood-burning stove), phone, and cooking equipment. All guests have free use of the hot tub and there are thoughtful touches like a dozen varieties of tea and coffee in the cabins, plus homemade jams and jellies for breakfast. Deluxe ⑤, budget ②

Skagway Home Hostel 3rd Ave and Main St
☎ 907/983-2131, 🌐 www.skagwayhostel.com

In-with-the-family hostel in a century-old building with bunks in single-sex dorms ($20), mixed dorms ($20) and one private room (②). There's a communal feel, ample supplies for cooking (honesty box), and an 11pm curfew. ②

Skagway Mountain View RV Park Broadway at 12th Ave ☎ 1-888/778-7700, 🌐 www.alaskarv.com. Large RV-dominated spot with all the expected facilities, water and electricity hookup ($30), dry sites ($20), and a few wooded tent sites ($17) that are in high demand.

The Town

Strolling up Broadway you can't miss the eye-catching facade of the 1899 Arctic Brotherhood Hall, decorated with almost nine thousand pieces of driftwood and housing the Skagway Visitor Center. Many of the other buildings hereabouts form part of the Klondike Gold Rush National Historic Park, notably the former Mascot Saloon on Broadway (daily 8am–6pm; free), and Moore House, Fifth Avenue at Spring Street (daily 10am–5pm; free), a museum devoted to Skagway's original resident that features stories and photos of the Gold Rush. There's further detail in the recently refurbished City of Skagway Museum (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm; $2), which contains Soapy's Derringer pistol and good Tlingit artifacts.

If you've had enough of Soapy and his cronies, you may feel like hiking. The useful Skagway Trail Map, available from the visitor center, details other walks in the area, including those in the Dewey Lakes system, which pass pretty subalpine lakes and tumbling waterfalls, and the more difficult scramble up AB Mountain. Sockeye Cycles, Fifth Avenue and Broadway (☎ 907/983-2851, 🌐 www.cyclealaska.com), rents out well-maintained mountain bikes for $20 a half-day, and the neighboring Mountain Shop (☎ 907/983-2544) rents and sells backpacking supplies.

A lazier way to take in the scenery is on the White Pass and Yukon Route railway (early May to late Sept; 2–3 departures daily; ☎ 1-800/343-7373, 🌐 wpyr.com), which follows the gushing Skagway River upstream past waterfalls and ice-packed gorges and over a 1000ft-high wooden trestle bridge, stopping at the White Pass summit ($95 roundtrip) before occasionally continuing to Lake Bennett, British Columbia ($150; steam-hauled $180). There's no shortage of riders, so get there early and grab a seat on the left-hand side going up. The company also offers a through bus service to Whitehorse.

Eating and drinking

Most of Skagway's bars and restaurants line the touristy part of Broadway.

The Haven State St at 9th Ave ☎907/983-3553.

Relaxed coffee shop with sofas and stacks of magazines, serving good espresso, egg or granola breakfasts, mouthwatering panini and fresh salads – Santa Fe, Greek, Caesar – all available with added chicken ($7–9).

Red Onion Saloon Broadway at 2nd Ave ☎907/983-2222. An 1898 bar and former bordello with heaps of character, draft beers, and excellent pizza.

Sabrosa Broadway at 6th Ave ☎907/983-2469. Daytime café and bakery tucked in behind the gift shops that's great for breakfast (from $5) and lunches of burritos ($8), vegetarian chili (cup $4, bowl $6), and tarragon, pecan, and chicken salad ($9). Shaded outdoor seating for those hot days.

Stowaway Café 205 Congress Way ☎907/983-3463. Stop by in the evening for the likes of lemongrass halibut ($22), back baby ribs ($22), and peach bread pudding ($6), all served in a congenial atmosphere with views of the small boat harbor. Open nightly 4pm–10pm.

The Chilkoot Trail

Alaska's most famous trail, the 33-mile CHILKOOT TRAIL, is a hike through one huge wilderness museum following the footsteps of the original Klondike prospectors. Starting in Dyea, nine miles from Skagway, and ending in Bennett in Canada, the trail climbs through rainforest to tundra often strewn with haunting reminders of the past, including ancient boilers that once drove aerial tramways, and several collapsed huts.

The three- to five-day hike can be strenuous, especially the final ascent up from Sheep Camp (1000ft) to Chilkoot Pass (3550ft). You must be self-sufficient for food, fuel, and shelter, and be prepared for foul weather. Campgrounds line the trail, as well as emergency shelters with stoves and firewood. There are also ranger stations at Dyea, Sheep Camp, and Lindeman City. Dyea is accessible by road, and the White Pass and Yukon Railway runs a service for hikers returning to Skagway (Sun & Mon only; $80).

The main hiking season runs from July to early September, when there is a quota system administered by Parks Canada (🌐www.pc.gc.ca/chilkoot). Whether you have a reservation or not, you must first visit the Skagway Trail Center, Broadway at 1st Avenue (early June to early Sept daily 8.30am–4.30pm), where rangers make sure you understand the challenges and dangers, and can advise on weather conditions and current bus and train schedules for the trip back to Skagway. While here, you must also pay out a rather extravagant Can$55 for a permit.

Anchorage

Wedged between the two arms of Cook Inlet and the imposing Chugach Mountains, ANCHORAGE is home to over forty percent of Alaska's population and is the state's transport hub. A sprawling city on the edge of one of the world's great wildernesses, it often gets bad press from those who live elsewhere in the state and deride it as "just half an hour from Alaska." However, it has its attractions and, with its beautiful setting, can make a pleasant one- or two-day stopover.

Anchorage was born in 1915 as a tent city for Alaska Railroad construction workers. During the 1930s, hopefuls fleeing the Depression poured in from the Lower 48, and World War II – and construction of the Alaska Highway – further boosted the city. The opening of the airport established Anchorage – midway between New York and Tokyo – as the "Crossroads of the World", and statehood in 1959 and the 1970s oil boom brought in yet more optimistic adventurers.

Arrival and information

Anchorage International Airport, five miles southwest of town, is served by bus #7, part of the citywide People Mover system (Mon–Fri 6am–11pm, Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 9.30am–6.30pm; $1.75 flat fare or $4 day-pass from the driver). Alaska Shuttle Service (☎ 907/388-8888) charges $10 to take you downtown ($5 each for three or more passengers), and taxis cost around $20. The train station is downtown at 411 W 1st Ave (☎ 1-800/544-0552, 🌐 www.alaskarailroad.com), and the major sights are easily reached on foot.

The Log Cabin Visitor Center, downtown at 4th and F (daily: May & Sept 8am–6pm; June–Aug 7.30am–7pm; Oct–April 9am–4pm; ☎ 907/274-3531, 🌐 www.anchorage.net), has all the brochures you could need and details of an easy self-guided downtown walking tour. Across the street, the Alaska Public Lands Information Center (June–Aug daily 9am–5pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 10am–5pm; ☎ 907/271-2737, 🌐 www.nps.gov/aplic) has an excellent natural history display plus maps and more brochures. It'll help plan trips into the Interior, and make reservations both for accommodation and the shuttle bus in Denali National Park – vital in summer.

Accommodation

Inexpensive accommodation in Anchorage can be hard to find, especially in summer when many places are fully booked. Campers should head for the central Ship Creek Landings RV Park, 150 N Ingraham (☎ 907/227-0877, 🌐 www.alaskarv.com; $14), or the more woody Centennial Campground (☎ 907/343-6986; $15), five miles north on the Glenn Highway.

Anchorage Guesthouse 2001 Hillcrest Drive ☎ 907/274-0408, 🌐 www.akhouse.com. Upscale backpacker-style hostel, just over a mile from downtown and handy for the Coastal Trail (rent a bike for $2.50 per hour). Other perks include sheets, towels, breakfast, use of kitchen, free gear storage, free local calls, and Internet access. Dorm beds cost $30 and there are private doubles and kings. ☎ Anchorage International Hostel 700 H St ☎ 907/276-3635, 🌐 www.anchorageinternationalhostel.com

.org. Functional and very central hostel with luggage storage, Internet access, and laundry along with a daytime lock-out and evening curfew. Dorm beds $20; reserve well ahead in summer.

Earth B&B 1001 W 12th Ave ☎907/279-9907, www.earthbb.com. Enthusiastically and liberally run, this is home away from home for Denali-bound climbers. It's simple but very accommodating, with a barbecue out back. Bus #6, #36, or #60 from downtown. ⑥

Oscar Gill House 1344 W 10th Ave ☎907/279-1344, www.oscargill.com. Lovely B&B in a 1913 house, comprehensively restored while maintaining character and understated elegance. Two rooms share a bath while the largest has its own jacuzzi, all tastefully done and managed by very welcoming hosts. Private bath ⑤, shared ④

Qupqugiac Inn 640 W 36th Ave, midtown ☎907/563-5633, www.qupq.com. Great budget hotel with clean, simple rooms with phone and satellite TV, and a communal lounge with kitchen and free Internet. Bus #9 from downtown passes a block away on Arctic Blvd. Rooms with bath ④, without ③

Spenard Hostel International 2845 W 42nd Place ☎907/248-5036, www.alaskahostel.org. Friendly suburban hostel with nearby mall just a mile and a half from the airport (bus #6). $10 bike rental, no curfew or lock-out, and dorm beds for $21.

Voyager Hotel 501 K St at 5th Ave ☎1-800/247-9070, www.voyagerhotel.com. The best of the mid- to upper-range hotels featuring spacious rooms (with kitchenette) and most of the facilities of a business hotel at much lower cost. Reserve well in advance in summer. ⑦

The City

Travelers eager to rush off into the “real” Alaska tend to overlook cosmopolitan Anchorage – a blend of old and new, urban blight and rural parks – but there is plenty to see, and it's worth spending some time experiencing it. The city is laid out on a grid; numbered avenues run east–west, lettered streets north–south.

Your first stop should be the Anchorage Museum of History and Art, 121 W Seventh Ave (summer daily 9am–6pm and to 9pm on Thurs; rest of year Tues–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8), providing an excellent overview of the state and its history through intricate dioramas, alongside beautiful examples of carved ivory and basketware. The art gallery on the ground floor is notable for the works by Alaska's best-known painter, Sydney Laurence, including a monumental oil painting of Mount McKinley.

The rest of the downtown sights are more modest: the Imaginarium, 737 W Fifth Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5.50), has hands-on displays telling you all about glaciers, the Northern Lights, polar bears, and the private life of the dopey-looking moose; the period-furnished 1915 Oscar Anderson House Museum, 420 M St (June to mid-Sept Mon–Fri noon–5pm; $3), illustrates early Anchorage life; and the Alaska Experience Theater, Sixth Avenue and G Street (summer daily 9am–9pm; $10), presents forty minutes of Alaska's best scenery, shot from choppers and beamed onto a 180° wraparound screen; the admission price includes a film of the devastating 1964 Good Friday earthquake that leveled much of downtown – North America's strongest-ever quake at Magnitude 9.2.

Seven miles east on the edge of town lies the Alaska Native Heritage Center, off the Glenn Highway at Muldoon Road (summer daily 9am–6pm; $21). Although pricey, it gives an excellent introduction to the state's five main ethnic groups, each represented by a typical house where Native guides interpret their culture. Throughout the day, cultural groups perform in the main auditorium, where there is also an instructive introductory film. A free shuttle runs to the Center from the Anchorage Museum and Ship Creek Center, while People Mover #4 takes almost an hour to get here from downtown.

On long summer days it is better to stay outside, perhaps strolling (or biking) along the Tony Knowles Coastal Trail, which offers restorative views of Turnagain Arm, or exploring the mountains and lakes of the 495,000-acre Chugach State Park, just fifteen minutes' drive east from Anchorage. Challenging trails traversing the park include an often treacherous scramble up 4500ft Flattop Mountain, giving spectacular views of the city and Cook Inlet.

Eating, drinking, and nightlife

Nowhere in Alaska will you find a more diverse range of places to eat than in Anchorage. That's not to say you'd make a special journey here for the culinary wonders, but after a few weeks in the wilds, the city can seem like heaven. For groceries, make for Carr's supermarket at the junction of Northern Lights Boulevard and Minnesota Drive (bus #3, #4, or #36), which has a strong deli section.

Good bars abound downtown, and the atmosphere varies as much as the clientele. Also visit the lively (and somewhat edgy) neighborhood of Spenard – on Spenard Road between Northern Lights Boulevard and International Airport Road – which can be fun as long as you're careful. Women travelers may not find the “bohemian” side of macho Anchorage quite as endearing as some locals do, with some innocent-looking bars turning out to be strip joints. Shows, plays, opera, and concerts take place at the Center for Performing Arts (☎907/263-2787).

Bear Tooth Theatre Pub 1230 W 27th Ave ☎907/276-4200, www.beartooththeatre.net. Top-notch combined restaurant, bar, and cinema where, for $3 on top of your meal price, you can also watch an arthouse movie. The menu has a wide range – halibut chowder ($4), Caesar salads ($6), burritos and tacos ($5–8), and gourmet pizzas ($15 for a 16-inch), and the microbrews are excellent.

Chilkoot Charlie's 2435 Spenard Rd ☎907/272-1010, www.koots.com. Sawdust-strewn barn that packs them in nightly for pricey drinks, pool, foosball, two floors of DJ-led dance, and live music from 9.30pm.

Court Café 222 W 7th at C St ☎907/277-6736. Breakfast and lunch cafeteria that's about the best budget value downtown, certainly a cut above the fast-food joints and more filling. Steaming clam chowder or an entrée will cost around $5.

Darwin's Theory 426 G St at 4th Ave ☎907/277-5322. Straightforward local bar good for moderately priced boozing and neighborly encounters with colorful local characters.

Glacier Brewhouse 737 W 5th St ☎907/274-2739 www.glacierbrewhouse.com. Hugely popular restaurant, bar, and microbrewery serving wonderful food and drink. At least half a dozen toothsome house-brewed beers accompany alderwood-baked gourmet pizza ($11), spit-grilled three-peppercorn prime rib ($25), or steamed Alaska King crab legs ($37).

Humpy's 610 W 6th Ave ☎907/276-2337, www.humpys.com. Popular watering hole with live music and a strong college-bar feel. The likes of charbroiled salmon, burgers, soups, and salads (mostly about $10) slip down with local microbrews plus English and Belgian bottled beers, and over thirty single malts.

The Marx Bros. Café 627 W 3rd Ave ☎907/278-2133, www.marxcafe.com. The best all-round fine dining downtown served up in a historic house with views of the water. Start on the likes of Kachemak Bay oysters with pepper vodka and ginger sorbet ($13) or Neapolitan seafood mousse ($15), followed by baked halibut rolled in a macadamia-nut crust and curry sauce and chutney ($30). Dinner only.

Moose's Tooth 3300 Old Seward Hwy at 33rd Ave ☎907/258-2537, www.moosetooth.net. A perennial favorite, always alive with folks tucking into some of the town's best gourmet pizza or sipping great microbrews.

New Sagaya's City Market 900 W 13th Ave at I St ☎907/274-6173. Trendy and expensive grocery store, deli, and café with a great selection ranging from organic vegetables and great cheeses to pizza, wraps, Thai dishes, and good coffee. The nearest groceries to downtown.

Snow City Café 1034 W 4th Ave ☎907/272-2489. The best place downtown for breakfast – eggs Benedict or Florentine for $9.50, yogurt, fruit & granola for $5 – or relaxing over a pot of Earl Grey and a slice of cake. Lunchtime options include soups, salads, pesto chicken pasta ($9), and tofu stir-fry ($9). Closed for dinner except for soup and sandwiches on Wednesday when there's an Irish music session.

Kenai Peninsula and Kodiak Island

South of Anchorage, the Seward Highway hugs the shore of Turnagain Arm past Girdwood and the ski resort of Alyeska. Just beyond, a side road cuts to the ever-popular Portage Glacier, and continues through a tunnel to Whittier, little more than a ferry dock for accessing Prince William Sound (see p.1247). Beyond Portage, the Seward Highway enters the Kenai Peninsula, “Anchorage’s playground,” which at over nine thousand square miles is larger than some states. The peninsula offers an endless diversity of activities and scenery, mostly concentrated around major communities such as Seward, the base for cruises into the inspirational Kenai Fjords National Park, and artsy Homer, where the waters and shorelines of the glorious Kachemak Bay State Park are the main destination. Most Alaskans come to the Kenai Peninsula to fish: the Kenai, Russian, and Kasilof rivers host “combat fishing,” with thousands of anglers standing elbow to elbow using strength and know-how to pull in thirty-pound-plus king salmon. Campgrounds along the rivers fill up fast, especially in July and August.

A hundred miles beyond Homer in the Gulf of Alaska, the “Emerald Isle” of Kodiak Island offers some of Alaska’s most uncommon and pleasing landscapes, and is home to the Kodiak bear, an overgrown subspecies of the grizzly.

Girdwood and Portage Glacier

Outdoorsy GIRDWOOD, 37 miles south of Anchorage, lies two miles inland in the shade of the Alyeska Resort, Alaska’s largest winter sports complex and the lowest-elevation ski resort in the world, starting just 270 feet above sea level. Downhill runs and an extensive night-skiing operation run from November to mid-April (tows $52 a day), and in summer you can ride the Alyeska Tramway ($16) up to stunning views and some good hiking territory. Girdwood Ski and Cyclery, Mile 1.5 Alyeska Highway (☎907/783-2453; closed Mon & Tues), rents city bikes ($25 a day) to explore the town and coastal cycle path.

The resort’s Alyeska Prince Hotel (☎907/754-1111 or 1-800/880-3880, 🌐www.alyeskaresort.com; 📍) is a grand ski lodge with half a dozen good restaurants and service to match. Alternatively, try The Carriage House B&B, Mile 0.2 Crow Creek Road (☎1-888/961-9464, 🌐www.thecarriagehousebandb.com; 📍), or Alyeska Hostel (☎907/783-2099), with $15 bunks. There’s tasty, inexpensive food at 🍷 The Bake Shop (☎907/783-2831) on Olympic Mountain Loop at the base of the ski tows, and at the unmissable 🍷 Double Musky Inn on Crow Creek Road (☎907/783-2822); budget on $40 a head and a meal to remember.

Eleven miles south of Girdwood, a road leads to Whittier, past Portage Glacier, a popular day-tour from Anchorage. Frustratingly, you can’t see the glacier from the parking lot; instead you must pay Gray Line $29 for a cruise around the lake’s corner to the glacier’s snout. Two USFS campgrounds ($10–13) can be found two or three miles back down the road.

Seward and Kenai Fjords National Park

SEWARD, ringed by glaciers and mountains 127 miles south of Anchorage, sprang to life in 1903 after engineers declared this ice-free port the ideal starting point for railroad tracks to the Interior. Since then it has been a key freight terminal, but tourism – particularly cruises into Kenai Fjords National Park – is now its most conspicuous business.

Seward’s main activities are enjoying the scenery and visiting the wonders at the waterfront SeaLife Center (daily: summer 8am–7pm; $15), a successful marriage of marine research and visitor education partly funded by the Exxon Valdez oil spill settlement. The center offers the chance to watch ongoing cold-water research in action and marvel at the underwater antics of stellar sea lions, harbor seals, and adorable puffins. After a visit to the center, another good local option is the four-hour hike up nearby Mount Marathon for some glorious views. The trail here is also the scene of an annual Fourth of July race, thanks to the antics of two pioneers who, in 1909, bet each other to run up and down the 3022-foot mountain – the current race record is 43 minutes 23 seconds.

Most visitors also drive thirteen miles out to Exit Glacier (24hr; free), one of the few in the state you can approach on land. From the nature centre at the end of the road (summer daily 9am–8pm; free), a short stroll leads to the still-active glacier, though signs warn you back from the ice wall and its inviting blue clefts. Exit Glacier is part of KENAI FJORDS NATIONAL PARK, a magnificent 580,000-acre region of peaks, glaciers, and craggy coastline. Its towering mountains are mantled by the prodigious three-hundred-square-mile Harding Icefield, feeding the three dozen retreating glaciers, which have exposed the dramatic fjords after which the park is named. Eight of these tidewater glaciers “calve” icebergs into the sea with thunderous booms, and the fjords also hold a wealth of marine wildlife – sea otters, porpoises, seals, stellar sea lions, plus orca, gray, humpback, and minke whales – as well as the seabird rookeries on the cliffs of the Chiswell Islands. All the Seward-based cruise companies do a good job: try Renown Tours (☎1-888/514-8687; $69–129); pay out for the longer day-tours that go right up to the calving tidewater glaciers.

The park's visitor center, 1212 Fourth Ave in Seward's small boat harbor (summer daily 8.30am–7pm; ☎907/224-2125), provides maps, film shows, and details on regional hikes.

Practicalities

Trains from Anchorage (a lovely journey) arrive and depart daily (☎1-800/544-0552; $62 one-way, $103 roundtrip). Seward Bus Line (☎907/224-3608) charges $45 for a one-way ride from Anchorage. Seward's two hubs of activity, the small boat harbor and downtown, are joined by the mile-long Fourth Avenue, while the main visitor center is inconveniently situated at Mile 2 Seward Hwy (summer daily 8am–6pm; ☎907/224-8051, 🌐www.sewardak.org). There's a shuttle bus (☎907/224-5569; $9 roundtrip) running from the small boat harbor hourly to Exit Glacier.

For budget accommodation downtown, go to the slightly cramped Moby Dick Hostel, 432 3rd Ave (mid-April to Sept; ☎907/224-7072, 🌐www.mobydickhostel.com; ③), with bunks ($19), limited kitchen facilities, and small private rooms, or try the more upscale Murphy's Motel, 911 Fourth Ave (☎907/224-8090 or 1-800/886-8191, 🌐www.murphysmotel.com; ⑤–⑦), close to the small boat harbor. Rooms come with microwave, fridge, dataport, and cable TV, though older rooms are small. Alternatively, head out of town to the lovely 🌲 Alaska's Treehouse (☎907/224-3867, 🌐www.seward.net/treehouse; room ④, suite ⑤), a very welcoming B&B in a large timber house seven miles out along the Seward Highway (turn into Timber Lane Drive then Forest Rd). There's one room with a private (but separate) bathroom and a suite that sleeps up to five. Everyone gets a full sourdough-pancake breakfast and access to a hot tub out on the deck among the spruce trees. For campers, there's the excellent, centrally located Waterfront Campground (mid-April to Sept; ☎907/224-4055; tents $8, RVs $12–25), off Ballaine Boulevard and so close to the shores of Resurrection Bay you can almost fish from inside your tent.

Food in Seward is fairly reasonably priced: for good coffee or light meals, head to 🍷 Resurrect Art, 320 3rd Ave (☎907/224-7161), a converted church where you can also play board games, while Yoly's Bistro, 220 4th Ave (☎ 907/224-3295) is a great downtown restaurant and bar serving soups, sandwiches, and the likes of lemongrass chicken ($15) and wasabi halibut ($20), with live music on weekends. For fine dining, try 🦋 Ray's Waterfront 1316 4th Ave (April–Oct; ☎ 907/224-5606), which is near the small boat harbor and has great mountain views. Pan-seared Thai scallops ($24), prime rib ($24), and more are all beautifully cooked. If you're looking for a good range of beers, stop at the lively Yukon Bar, 201 4th Ave at Washington St (☎ 907/224-3063), which also offers live music throughout the summer – jam session (Mon), karaoke (Wed), live bands (Thurs–Sat), and usually a set or two from Kenai Peninsula legend Hobo Jim on Sunday.

Homer and around

HOMER, 226 miles south from Anchorage, is the Kenai Peninsula's southernmost road-accessible town. It commands a truly magnificent setting, spread beneath gently sloping verdant bluffs with a four-mile finger of land – The Spit – slinking out into the dark waters of Kachemak Bay, into which flow crystal-blue glaciers, framed by dense black forest. With abundant activities, a lively nightlife, and a varied, youthful population that supports a thriving arts community, it's so appealing you'll probably want to linger a few days extra.

Russians, drawn by the abundance of coal, were the first whites to reach the area, and by the mid-1800s several American companies had followed suit. In 1896, Homer Penstock, a gold-seeker from Michigan, set up the community that still bears his name. Every summer in recent years, young people from the Lower 48 have arrived here in droves to work on the halibut boats, many living in an impromptu tent city on the beach.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Ferries from Seldovia and Kodiak arrive at the end of The Spit. Homer Stage Lines (☎ 907/235-7009) runs a daily bus service between Anchorage and Homer for $60 each way. Most hotels, restaurants, and shops are in town, while almost all of the fishing charter and tour operators can be found along the twee boardwalks of The Spit. There is no public transport between the town and The Spit so hitch, grab a cab or rent a bike from Homer Saw & Cycle, 1532 Ocean Drive (☎ 907/235-8405; $25 a day). The main visitor center is at 201 Sterling Hwy (summer Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; ☎ 907/235-7740, @homeralaska.org).

Accommodation

Homer's good-value hotels and B&Bs are often fully booked in midsummer; the visitor center, though, can help if you arrive without reservations.

Driftwood Inn 135 W Bunnell Ave ☎ 1-800/478-8019, @ www.thedriftwoodinn.com. Rambling older hotel with an extensive and varied range of rooms, RV parking, and a communal TV lounge with video library. Breakfast is not included, though there is free tea and coffee (breakfast is available for a fee). Private bath ④–⑥, shared bath ④

Homer Hostel 304 W Pioneer Ave ☎ 907/235-1463, @ www.homerhostel.com. Centrally located hostel in a converted home where you sleep in made-up beds and bunks ($23), in 4- to 6-bed dorms, and relax in a big lounge with a great view of the mountains. There's no curfew or lock-out. Bikes and fishing rods can be rented for $10 and $5 a day, respectively. Rooms ②

Homer Spit Camping ☎ 907/235-1583. The classic Homer experience, either in tents on the beach or in RVs around the fishing hole. Within a short walk of each site, you'll find drinking water, toilets, and fish-cleaning tables. $8 per tent, $15 per RV.

Old Town B&B 106 W Bunnell Ave ☎ 907/235-7558. Beautiful, three-room B&B in a 1936 building. The rooms have wooden floors and a restrained decor of antiques, quilted bed covers, and old-fashioned bathroom fittings; two have tremendous sea views (one with private bathroom). Breakfast (included) is at Panarelli's, downstairs. ⑤

 Seaside Farm Hostel Mile 5 East End Rd
☎ 907/235-7850, 🌐 www.xyz.net/~seaside.

Small farm hostel with slightly cramped bunks ($20) and a lovely range of rooms, plus small cabins dotted around the property. Open May–Sept. Camping $10, rooms & cabins. ⑤

The Town and around

Stop first at the new Alaska Islands & Ocean Visitor Center, 95 Sterling Hwy (summer daily 9am–6pm; ☎ 907/235-6961, 🌐 www.islandsandocean.org), designed to showcase various facets of the Alaska Maritime National Wildlife Refuge through interactive exhibits, replica seabird cliffs, and sections on the work of biologists in remote locations. Not far away, the Pratt Museum, 3779 Bartlett St (daily 10am–6pm; $6), features excellent displays on Kachemak Bay, its people and history along with remote-controlled cameras trained on nesting seabirds and the salmon-feeding bears. Many of Homer's most popular activities, however, revolve around The Spit. To Alaska anglers, Homer is "Halibut Central": a full day's fishing excursion with any of the charter companies begins at around $190. If you don't mind joining the crowds, it's cheaper and simpler to visit the Fishing Hole, a tiny bight on The Spit, which is stocked with salmon and offers good fishing from mid-May to mid-September.

The prime tourist attraction in the Homer area is Kachemak Bay State Park, directly across the bay, with its 250,000 acres of forested mountains, glaciers, pristine fjords, and inlets. Bird species here include puffin, auklets, kittiwakes, and storm petrels, and marine creatures such as seals, sea otters, and whales are also plentiful. The most popular destination is the gorgeous hamlet of Halibut Cove, where boardwalks link art galleries and The Saltry restaurant: the Danny J ferry (☎ 907/235-7847) makes two daily trips to Halibut Cove, on the south shore of the bay, via Gull Island rookery, for $48 roundtrip, $25 if you book in for an evening meal.

The area's best trails, most of them manageable in a day, are those in Kachemak Bay State Park, on the south side of Kachemak Bay: pick up the park's hiking-trails leaflet ($2) and other information from the visitor center. The most-traveled route, up to Grewingk Glacier, is an easy three-and-a-half-mile trek above the spruce and cottonwood forest to the foot of the glacier, from where you get splendid views of the bay.

Eating and drinking

Not surprisingly, Homer's culinary scene focuses mostly on fresh fish. For night-life, head out to a colorful bar or to the relaxed Pier One Theater (June–Aug; ☎ 907/235-7333), next to the fishing hole on the Spit.

Café Cups 162 Pioneer Ave ☎ 907/235-8330.
Relaxing yet vibrant café serving some of the best coffee and great sandwiches and salads.

 Fat Olive's 276 Olsen Lane ☎ 907/235-3448. Chic modern restaurant with strong Italian leanings, excellent pizza, a convivial atmosphere, and a good selection of micro-brews.

Lands End Resort at the end of The Spit ☎ 907/235-0400 or 1-800/478-0400. Plush and not-too-pricey restaurant offering an absolutely wonderful view of the bay as well as a fairly standard but tasty Alaska menu. Breakfast is a must.

Salty Dawg The Spit. No self-respecting drinker should pass up a few jars in the Dawg with its dark interior, life preservers pinned to the wall, and what is reliably claimed to be the only surveyors' benchmark located in a bar in the US.

 Two Sisters Espresso/Bakery 233 E Bunnell Ave ☎ 907/235-2280. Great little spot for that morning coffee either in the bakery or at tables out on the deck. Good too for pizza, soups, and quiches at moderate prices.

Kodiak

A nine-hour ferry ride connects Homer with KODIAK ISLAND, at a hundred miles long and sixty wide, the largest island in the US. In the north it is thick with spruce forests, but the interior is carpeted by wild grasses studded with marshes, lumpy knolls, and reeded lakes. This is prime territory for the renowned Kodiak bear, a subspecies of the grizzly, which weighs up to 1500 pounds. Streams chock-full of spawning salmon allow these monsters to thrive in the Kodiak National Wildlife Refuge, covering the southwestern two-thirds of the island. Roughly ten bears inhabit each square mile around Red and Fraser lakes, and bear-watching trips are big business.

The warm Japanese Current that flows around the island supports a mild maritime climate along with plenty of rain and fog, creating poor flying conditions and the distinct possibility that your stay could be extended by a day or two. If you want to avoid peak-season prices, note that May and June are notoriously wet, but September weather is usually fairly reliable.

All but two thousand of the island's twelve thousand inhabitants live in and around its only major town, the likeable and busy fishing port of KODIAK on the northeastern tip. Before Russian explorers established a community here in 1792, Aleut and Alutiiq had fished the area for millennia. After Alaska was transferred to the US, Kodiak survived as a center for trappers, whale-hunters, and salmon-fishers, and in 1939 was just another sleepy Alaskan village when a massive military base was established here and the population rocketed to around fifty thousand. However, most of Kodiak's wealth comes from fishing the rich waters of the Gulf, and the town maintains a fleet of over six hundred fishing vessels. Tourism definitely plays second fiddle and few cruise ships stop here.

AMHS ferries from Homer dock downtown three times a week in summer. Alaska Airlines and ERA Aviation jointly dispatch eight one-hour flights a day from Anchorage at around $250 roundtrip. The local bus ($3) is very infrequent so you may want to catch a cab the five miles into town ($15). The helpful visitor center is by the ferry dock at 100 Marine Way (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat & Sun dependant on ferry arrivals; ☎ 907/486-4782, 🌐 www.kodiak.org). The Kodiak National Wildlife Refuge Visitor Center, 1390 Buskin River Rd, close to the airport, four miles south of town (April–Sept Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat & Sun noon–4pm; ☎ 907/487-2600, 🌐 www.r7.fws.gov/nwr/kodiak), stocks a wealth of information on bears and the backcountry. It should move to a site beside the main visitor centre in 2008. Accommodation is quite expensive and there's no hostel, but at least there are plenty of good places to eat.

Accommodation

Most lodging in Kodiak is expensive, but the hotels and B&Bs are generally very good. Kodiak Inn, 236 Rezanof Drive West (☎ 1-888/563-4254, 🌐 kodiakin.com; Ⓜ), the town's fanciest hotel, has eighty pleasant and well-equipped rooms, plus a restaurant and bar, while the Shelikof Lodge, 211 Thorsheim Ave (☎ 907/486-4141, 🌐 www.shelikoflodge.com; Ⓜ), has Kodiak's cheapest hotel rooms, offering an on-site bar and restaurant plus a free airport shuttle. Bev's Bed And Make Your Own Darn Breakfast!, 1510 Mission Road (☎ 907/486-0834, 🌐 www.bevsbedandbreakfast.com; Ⓜ), an easy walk from downtown, has queen-bedded rooms (one with private bath), and ingredients are available in the kitchen for you to cook all your meals. Campers can pitch a tent at Fort Abercrombie State Historical Park, four miles north of town (🌐 www.dnr.state.ak.us/parks; $10 per site), and eat meals in the covered picnic area (prepayment required).

The Town and around

In downtown Kodiak, your first stop should be the small Baranov Museum (summer Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $3), in an old Russian house opposite the dock, which holds Aleut, Russian, and American pioneer artifacts, including an impressive collection of whalebones. Nearby, the small but beautifully formed Alutiġ Museum, 215 Mission Rd (June–Aug Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm; $3), centers on the life and culture of the island’s native people.

Etched out of lush rainforest, less than four miles north, Fort Abercrombie State Historical Park is a great place to do some seabird- and whale-watching, camp or take a shoreline hike: a meadow at the north end provides a dazzling blaze of color in summer. Other moderately easy hiking trails originating near town go to the top of Pillar Mountain and Termination Point. However, most trails are not maintained and can be confusing; get precise details from the visitor center or the rangers at Fort Abercrombie. The undulating and unpaved Chiniak Highway runs for 48 miles to Cape Greville and the Road’s End Restaurant, sweeping through tightly bunched spruce and passing many abandoned World War II defenses, plus prime vistas of Chiniak Bay.

Eating and drinking

Food in Kodiak is generally good. Henry’s Great Alaskan, 512 Marine Way (☎ 907/486-8844), a restaurant and sports bar with microbrewed beer, has a good range of salads, sandwiches, burgers, and dinners (like the halibut with fries) that cost around $14, while Harborside Coffee and Goods, 216 Shelikov St (☎ 907/486-5862), is just the spot for watching the harbor activity over an espresso or light meal. 🍷 Old Powerhouse, 516 E Marine Way (☎ 907/481-1088; closed Mon), is a predominantly Japanese seafood restaurant with great views over the channel and excellent box-lunch specials for around $8.

Prince William Sound

Prince William Sound, a largely unspoiled wilderness of steep fjords and mountains, glaciers and rainforest, rests calmly at the head of the Gulf of Alaska. Sheltered by the Chugach Mountains in the north and east, and the Kenai Peninsula in the west, and with its sparkling blue waters full of whales, porpoise, sea otters, and seals, the Sound has a relatively low-key tourist industry. The only significant settlements, spectacular Valdez, at the end of the trans-Alaska pipeline, and Cordova, a fishing community only accessible by sea or air, are the respective bases for visiting the Columbia and Childs glaciers.

The region’s first settlers, the Chugach Eskimos, were edged out by the more aggressive Tlingit, in their turn displaced by Russian trappers in search of sea otter pelts, and then by American gold prospectors and fishers. The whole glorious show was very nearly spoiled forever on Good Friday 1989, when the Exxon Valdez spilled eleven million gallons of its cargo of crude oil. Although the long-term effects have yet to be fully determined, the spill fortunately affected just a fifth of the Sound and today no surface pollution is visible.

Valdez

VALDEZ, 304 road miles from Anchorage and the Western Hemisphere’s northernmost ice-free port, lies at the head of a fjord reaching twelve miles inland from Prince William Sound. Sometimes hyped as “Little Switzerland” for its stunning backdrop of mountains, glaciers, and waterfalls, and a record annual snowfall of over forty feet, Valdez (pronounced val-Deez) offers great hiking, rafting, sea kayaking, wildlife-viewing, and, of course, fishing.

The 1890s Gold Rush transformed Valdez from a remote whaling station into a flourishing settlement, when thousands of prospectors came to cross the deadly Valdez and Klutina glaciers on the Valdez Trail to the mines in the Yukon. Only three hundred of the 3500 miners who set out made it to the goldfield – those that did not perish from frostbite and starvation gave up. Valdez came to depend on fish canneries, logging, and occasional military use for its survival, but nature conspired to finish it off on Good Friday 1964: the epicenter of North America's largest earthquake was just 45 miles away. The ground turned to quivering jelly, snapping roads, toppling buildings, and killing 33 residents. However, the citizens of Valdez refused to be intimidated, and moved sixty-odd buildings to the more stable present site four miles away.

The town's fortunes rose again during the 1970s, when oil was found beneath Prudhoe Bay, and Valdez became the southern terminus of the 800-mile trans-Alaska pipeline, carrying close to a million barrels of oil per day. Although winds and tides kept the oil from the Exxon Valdez out of the port of Valdez, ironically the spill triggered an economic boom as the city became the base for the massive cleanup. The operation, which lasted into 1991, cost Exxon three billion dollars, and called on eleven thousand workers in over one thousand boats and three hundred planes to scour the beaches. All seems pristine now, though many species have still not fully recovered their former numbers.

Arrival and information

One of the most exciting things about Valdez is getting here; both car and ferry rides are unforgettable. The Richardson Highway holds epic scenery: restful alpine meadows, mountain glaciers, the icy summit of Thompson Pass, and the waterfall-fringed Keystone Canyon. Alaska/Yukon Trails (☎ 1-800/700-7275, 🌐 www.alaskashuttle.com) run along this route from Fairbanks, Delta Junction, and Glennallen, but only when numbers make the journey viable. Ferries from Cordova or Whittier dock at the end of Hazelet Avenue (☎ 907/835-4436). ERA Aviation (☎ 1-800/866-8394, 🌐 www.flyera.com) flies three times daily from Anchorage (from $90 plus tax each way) to the airport five miles north, from where taxis (☎ 907/835-2500) run downtown for around $10. The visitor center (summer Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/770-5954, 🌐 www.valdezalaska.org) is at 200 Fairbanks St.

Accommodation

Valdez's accommodation gets snapped up pretty quickly and there's no hostel, but a free phone outside the visitor center connects with some of the fifty-plus B&Bs. Campers can choose between the central but busy Bear Paw Camper Park (☎ 907/835-2530; $20), and the inconvenient Valdez Glacier Campground (☎ 907/835-2282; $10), five miles from town past the airport. The cheapest rooms are at L&L's B&B, 533 W Hanagita St (☎ 907/835-4447, 🌐 www.lnlalaska.com; 📍), with five comfortable shared-bath rooms ten minutes' walk from the center, but with free bikes and a good breakfast. Other good candidates are the renovated Keystone Hotel, 401 Egan Drive (☎ 1-888/835-0665, 🌐 www.keystonehotel.com; 📍), which has comfortable rooms (some with bath) and a light continental breakfast; the motel-style Downtown B&B Inn, 113 Galena Drive (☎ 1-800/478-2791, 🌐 www.alaskaone.com/downinn; 📍); and Valdez Harbor Inn, 100 N Harbor Drive (☎ 1-888/222-3440, 🌐 www.valdezharborinn.com; 📍), a recently renovated Best Western, with a great water-side location, where rooms have cable TV, DVD player, microwave, fridge, and free WiFi.

The Town and around

The Valdez Museum, 217 Egan Drive (summer daily 9am–6pm; $5), carries just enough detail on the Gold Rush, oil terminal, glaciation, and Exxon Valdez oil spill. Its annex, at 436 S Hazelet Ave (summer daily 9am–6pm; $1.50), covers the 1964 earthquake at length. For security reasons, you can no longer tour the pipeline terminal; instead, take in the Alaska Pipeline Media Tour and Exhibit at the Community College, 303 Lowe St (summer daily 9.30am, 11.30am & 1.30pm; $5).

Out at the airport, the Maxine & Jesse Whitney Museum (summer daily 9.30am–7pm; $5) has an astounding collection of carved ivory and an assortment of dead beasts, including a couple of moose hides with Alaskan scenes burned into them by an early pioneer. If you fancy something more active, Anadyr Adventures (☎ 1-800/865-2925, @ www.anadyradventures.com) and Pangaea Adventures (☎ 1-800/660-9637, @ www.alaskasummer.com) offer sea-kayaking trips to Duck Flats (3–4hr; $55), or a more ambitious coastal paddle to Gold Creek (6–7hr; $75–80). It is worth making the effort to reach distant paddling destinations, (accessed by water taxi), principally Shoup Glacier (8hr; $150) and Columbia Glacier (10hr; $185–199). Both companies also offer kayak rentals (single $45 per day, double $65, triple $80), the rates reducing by $5–10 a day after the first or second day of rental. Anadyr Adventures rents mountain bikes as well, for $8 an hour.

You should also take a cruise out into Prince William Sound, principally to see the spectacular Columbia Glacier, three miles wide at its face and towering three hundred feet above the sea. Unfortunately it is receding rapidly and the fjord is now so choked with ice that you can't get close to the face. Weather permitting, you can see it at long range from the AMHS ferries running between Valdez and Whittier, but for a closer look go with Stan Stephens Glacier & Wildlife Cruises (☎ 1-866/867-1297, @ www.stanstephenscruises.com), who pick their way through a floating icefield and point out such sights as Bligh Reef, where the Exxon Valdez grounded. Choose between a six-hour cruise at $90 and the nine-hour cruise that also visits the Meares Glacier ($130).

Eating

The dining selection in Valdez, while nothing particularly special, should satisfy for the night or two you're here. The Alaska Halibut House, 208 Meals Ave (☎ 907/835-2788) serves budget halibut sandwiches and salmon wedges, but the best all-around dining is at Alaska's Bistro (☎ 907/835-5688, @ www.alaskasbistro.com) in the Valdez Harbor Inn. Oil-boom survivor The Pipeline Club, 136 Egan Drive (☎ 907/835-4332), is also worth a try for top-quality steak and seafood, as well as for its lively dark bar.

Cordova and the Copper River Delta

Far quieter than Valdez, and only accessible by sea or air, CORDOVA is an unpretentious fishing community on the southeastern edge of the Sound. In 1906 Irish engineer Michael J. Heney chose Cordova as the port for the copper mined in Kennicott, a hundred miles northeast, and gambled on cutting a path between two active glaciers for his proposed Copper River and Northwestern Railroad – the CR&NW – ridiculed at the time as the “Can't Run & Never Will.” Nonetheless, in 1911 Heney spanned the Copper River with the elaborate “Million Dollar Bridge” and the railroad was completed. Even so, the mines were exhausted just 27 years later and Cordova shifted its dependency to fishing, in turn dealt a potentially fatal blow by the grounding of the Exxon Valdez in 1989. For the next two seasons, the community reeled from the effects of the oil spill; since then fortunes have slowly improved.

Today the “Million Dollar Bridge”, battered by the 1964 earthquake, cuts a lonely figure at the end of the Copper River Highway, a 48-mile gravel road across the wondrous wetlands of the Copper River Delta, a major breeding ground for America’s migratory birds backed by the Chugach Mountains. It is a tranquil spot for fishing, bird-watching, or hiking along many of the excellent trails, such as the easy Saddlebag Glacier Trail. The road ends just over the bridge beside the incredibly active Childs Glacier.

By far the best way to make the trip is in a rental car (from around $70 a day, unlimited mileage) from either Chinook Auto Rentals, in the Airport Depot Diner or at the Northern Nights Inn (☎ 1-877/424-527, 🌐 www.chinookautorentals.com) or Cordova Auto Rental, at the airport (☎ 907/424-5982, 🌐 www.ptialaska.net/~cars). Alternatively, Copper River and Northwest Tours (☎ 907/424-5356) runs a five-hour tour to the bridge for $45 including lunch (though currently only on Wednesdays).

Cordova itself has few sights; the small boat harbor is the core of the town’s activity, particularly when the fleet is in, from May until September. The Cordova Historical Museum, 620 First St (summer Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 2–4pm; rest of year Tues–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat 1–5pm; $1 donation), has quirky exhibits on local history, including the evolution of the little ice worm that lives in the glaciers and the funky festival that celebrates its existence each mid-February. The new Ilanka Cultural Center, by the harbor at 110 Nicholoff Way (☎ 907/424-7903, ✉ iccilanka@nveyak.org; end May to mid-Sept Tue–Sat 9am–5pm, rest of year Tues–Fri 10am–4pm; donation), has a complete orca skeleton hanging over the entrance, plus local native arts and crafts and a fine bookshop.

Practicalities

There is no road access to Cordova; daily flights from Anchorage and Juneau land at the airport twelve miles down the Copper River Highway, to be met by a bus ($12). Near-daily ferries from Valdez and Whittier dock a mile north of town. For information, contact the Chamber of Commerce at 404 First St (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm; ☎ 907/424-7260, 🌐 www.cordovachamber.com). Cordova has no hostel and the only tent camping close to town is at the scruffy City Camper Park on Whitshed Road, half a mile south of town (☎ 907/424-6200; $18), so you might want to rent a car and camp out along the Copper River Delta. The cheapest option in town is the basic Alaskan Hotel, 600 First St (☎ 907/424-3299, ✉ hotelak@yahoo.com; ②), though you may prefer the Northern Nights Inn, 501 Third St (☎ 907/424-5356; ③–④), or the cosy modern Cordova Lighthouse Inn, Nicholoff Way (☎ 907/424-7080, 🌐 www.cordovaighthouseinn.com; ⑤), overlooking the small boat harbor. For food, try the popular Killer Whale Café, 507 First St (☎ 907/424-7733), or the excellent breakfasts and gourmet pizzas at the Cordova Lighthouse Café by the harbor. Wash it down afterwards with a drink at the Alaskan Hotel’s bar.

Interior and northern Alaska

Interior and northern Alaska is the quintessential “great land.” For the most part it’s a rolling plateau divided by the Alaska and Brooks ranges, crisscrossed by rivers, punctuated by glaciers, and with views of imposing peaks, above all Mount McKinley, the nation's highest. Even in high summer, when RVs clog the George Parks Highway, people are still hugely outnumbered by game: moose, Dall sheep, grizzly bears, and herds of caribou sweep over seemingly endless swathes of taiga (sparse birch woodland) and tundra.

Heading north from Anchorage the first essential stop is tiny Talkeetna, which has great views of Mount McKinley and the opportunity to fly around it. The mountain is at the heart of Denali National Park, the jewel of the Interior. If you prefer your wilderness with fewer people and regulations, head east to the untrammelled vastness of Wrangell-St Elias National Park. Alternatively, Fairbanks, Alaska's second city, is diverting in its own right and serves as the hub of the North, with roads fanning out to hot springs and five hundred miles north to the Arctic Ocean at Prudhoe Bay.

Weather here can vary enormously from day to day, with even greater seasonal variations: in winter temperatures can drop to -50°F for days at a time, while summer days reach a sweltering 90°F. However, the major problem during the warmer months is huge mosquitoes; don't forget the insect repellent.

Talkeetna

A hundred miles from Anchorage, TALKEETNA has a palpable small-town Alaska feel: this eclectic hamlet was the model for Cicely in TV's Northern Exposure, but to its credit Talkeetna doesn't use this as tour-bus bait. The town is lent an international flavor by the world's mountaineers, who come here to scale the 20,320ft Mount McKinley, usually referred to in Alaska by its Athabascan name of Denali, "the Great One." Whatever you choose to call it, North America's highest peak rises from 2000ft lowlands, making it the world's tallest from base to peak (Everest et al rise from high terrain). Though central to Denali National Park, the mountain is best seen from the overlook just south of Talkeetna, which reveals the peak's transcendent white glow, in sharp contrast to the warm colors all around.

From mid-April to mid-July, climbers mass in Talkeetna to be flown to the mountain: only half of the 1200 attempting the climb each year succeed, due to extreme weather. Air-taxi companies also run flightseeing trips ranging from a spectacular one-hour ($140) flight to the full ninety-minute grand tour ($200) all around the mountain. K2 Aviation (☎ 1-800/764-2291, 🌐 www.flyk2.com), the choice of most climbers, offers the widest range of options, including glacier landings (extra $60) in planes fitted with skis.

Talkeetna's famed Moose Dropping Festival falls on the second weekend of July; little brown balls sell fast (with a sanitary coat of varnish) for use in earrings or necklaces. In addition to these highly desirable lumps of Alaskana, the festival features dancing, drinking, a moose-dropping throwing competition and some more drinking.

Practicalities

Talkeetna is at the end of a fourteen-mile spur off the George Parks Highway, which can usually be hitched. Bus services avoid Talkeetna except for Alaska Park Connection (daily from Anchorage; $41; ☎ 1-800/266-8625, 🌐 www.alaskacoach.com); Anchorage to Denali trains stop half a mile south of the center of Talkeetna once a day. Information is available from the Talkeetna Ranger Station, on B Street (summer daily 8am–6pm; ☎ 907/733-2231).

For a town of just three hundred, Talkeetna teems with good accommodation, the cheapest being House of Seven Trees on Main St (☎ 907/733-7733 or 243-3456, ✉ patm_ak@hotmail.com), with bunkhouse (📍) and private (📍) and family rooms

(4), or the less central Talkeetna Hostel International on I Street (☎ 907/733-4678, 🌐 www.talkeetnahostel.com; bunks $27, rooms 3). Dating back to 1917, the central Talkeetna Roadhouse (☎ 907/733-1351, 🌐 www.talkeetnaroadhouse.com; 1–4) bolsters its old-style atmosphere with great home-cooking, bunks ($21) and rooms with shared bathrooms. Easily the fanciest hotel is the Talkeetna Alaskan Lodge (☎ 1-888/959-9590, 🌐 www.talkeetnalodge.com; 3), on the hill to the south of town. Campers can stay at the Talkeetna River Park ($12), at the western end of Main Street, but many stroll another hundred yards west and (unofficially) pitch by the river.

Good places to eat include the bakery/diner at the Talkeetna Roadhouse (see above), and the West Rib Pub & Grill, Main Street (☎ 907/733-3354), which has good burgers and sandwiches. And make sure you stop for a drink in the wonderfully ancient Fairview Inn on Main Street.

Denali National Park

The six-million-acre DENALI NATIONAL PARK, 240 miles north of Anchorage, is home to Mount McKinley, which is often shrouded in cloud. The mountain is far from the park's only attraction, however. Shuttle buses offer a glimpse of a vast world of tundra and taiga, glaciers, huge mountains, and abundant wildlife – the Park Service reports that 95 percent of visitors see bears, caribou, and Dall sheep, 82 percent moose, and over one-fifth wolves, along with porcupine, snowshoe hare, red foxes, and over 160 bird species. Visiting Alaska without trying to see Denali is unthinkable for most travelers, and therein lies a problem. In high summer, the visitor center and service areas out on the Parks Highway are a stream of RVs, tour buses, and the like. Things pick up in the park itself, and backcountry hiking, undertaken by only a tiny fraction of visitors, remains a wonderfully solitary experience.

In winter, Denali is transformed into a ghostly, snow-covered world. Motorized vehicles are banned and transportation, even for park personnel, is by snowshoe, skis, or dogsled as temperatures dive and northern lights glitter over the snows.

▲ Rafting in Denali National Park

Getting to the park

Driving to Denali Park takes about five hours from Anchorage or three from Fairbanks; hitching is quite easy with twenty hours of summer daylight. Bus services from Anchorage are run by Anchorage Denali Shuttle (☎ 301-5436, 🌐 www.anchoragedenalishuttle.com), Alaska Park Connection (☎ 1-800/266-8625, 🌐 www.alaskacoach.com) and Alaska/Yukon Trails (☎ 1-800/770-7275, 🌐 www.alaskashuttle.com), charging $65–76, with the last continuing to Fairbanks ($46). Trains (daily in summer) leave at 8.15am from both Anchorage ($129) and Fairbanks ($56), depositing you at 4pm and noon respectively at the train station a mile and a half inside the park entrance. Park entry costs $10 per person and is valid for a week.

Sightseeing, hiking, and other activities

The only vehicles allowed on Denali's narrow, unpaved ninety-mile road are a few tour buses and green shuttle buses, which you should book well in advance (☎ 1-800/622-7275, 🌐 www.reservedenali.com) or up to two days ahead at the wilderness access center (May–Sept daily 7am–8pm; ☎ 907/683-1266), just inside the park entrance. You can pick up a free copy of the Denali Alpenglow paper and a wide range of literature here or at the new visitor center, near the train station, or join ranger-led activities including short hikes and the popular, and free, dogsled demonstration held daily at 10am, 2pm, and 4pm.

Shuttle buses run to either the Toklat River at Mile 53 ($19), where rangers lead one-hour tundra tours each day at 1.30pm, or to the aptly named Wonder Lake at Mile 84 ($33); roundtrips take about eight and ten hours, respectively. The shuttle drivers don't give guided tours, but with forty pairs of watchful eyes on board, you're almost guaranteed to see the big mammals. You can also hop off at any point for a day-hike (no permits required), returning to the road to flag down the next bus back, if it has room. Buses run at least hourly in season, and there are others used mainly by campers that will pick up stragglers at day's end.

Backcountry camping is the best way to appreciate Denali's scenery and its inhabitants. Don't expect it to be easy though, as there are no formal trails, and with thick spongy tundra and frequent river crossings even hardy hikers find themselves limited to five miles a day. The park is divided into 87 units and only a designated number of hikers are allowed into each section at a time. Free permits are available, one day in advance, from the Backcountry Information Center (daily 7am–8pm), facing the Wilderness Access Center, though high demand means you should be prepared to hike in the less popular areas. The BIC will also teach you about avoiding run-ins with bears and issue you with bear-resistant food containers. Special camper buses reserved for those with campground or backcountry permits cost $24.25. If there's room, buses also carry bikes; cyclists can be dropped anywhere, but are obliged to keep to the road. Another option is to join a narrated tour (☎ 1-800/622-7275) along the park road: either the five-hour Natural History Tour ($60) or the full-day Tundra Wilderness Tour ($90), which penetrates as far as Mile 53, stopping frequently to observe wildlife.

Just outside the park entrance, several rafting companies offer two-hour trips down the Nenana River: all offer a gentle "scenic float" and an eleven-mile "Canyon Run" through Class III and IV rapids – they cost around $65 individually and $90 for a joint run. Denali Outdoor Center (☎ 1-888/303-1925, 🌐 www.denalioutdoorcenter.com) charges a couple of dollars more than some of the others, but offers a quality experience.

Practicalities

With the exception of several exclusive lodges deep in the heart of the park, there are no hotels in Denali, so your choice is between camping, the $130-a-night gaggle of summer-only hotels a mile north of the park entrance, or the cheaper offerings either ten miles further north in the little coal-mining town of HEALY, or spots a few miles south along the George Parks Highway. The only cheap option by the park entrance is to camp at Denali Rainbow Village RV Park (Mile 238.6, ☎907/683-7777, 🌐www.denalirvvpark.com; from $20) or Denali Riverside RV Park (Mile 240.5, ☎1-866/583-2696, 🌐www.denaliriversiderv.com; $16), while the only real hostel hereabouts is the excellent Denali Mountain Morning Hostel and Lodge, Mile 224.5, thirteen miles south (☎907/683-7503, 🌐www.hostelalaska.com; cabins ③, rooms ②, bunks ①), set in wooded seclusion and with a bargain shuttle service ($3 a day) to the park. Accommodation is in spacious dorms ($25) or separate cabins, there's an efficient kitchen, all manner of games, and the hosts will do everything to facilitate your Denali visit. In Healy there's the high-quality Motel Nord Haven, Mile 249.5 Parks Hwy (☎1-800/683-4501, 🌐www.motelnordhaven.com; ⑤), and the lovely Earth Song Lodge, Mile 4, Stampede Rd (☎907/683-2863, 🌐www.earthsonglodge.com; ⑥), with a cluster of cabins with great mountain views and a café on site.

Camping is the best way to experience Denali up close, with most of the park's six campgrounds open from mid-May to mid-September. The best is Wonder Lake ($16), with a stunning view of McKinley; failing that, Igloo Creek ($9) is good for spotting Dall sheep, while Riley Creek ($12–19), near the entrance, is open year-round. All sites are bookable at the main visitor center or via phone or the Web (☎1-800/622-7275, 🌐www.reservedenali.com). If you don't do this you may have to wait a day or two to get a spot. The best alternative is Denali Grizzly Bear Cabins & Campground, Mile 231.1, seven miles south of Denali (☎1-866/583-2696, 🌐www.denaligrizzlybear.com; ①–⑦), set in the trees close to the Nenana River with a wide variety of attractive cabins all around.

Eating is expensive, with only a limited range of grocery stores and a small selection of fairly pricey restaurants close to the park entrance, such as the Black Bear Coffee House (☎907/683-1656), serving light meals, and Lynx Creek Pizza and Pub (☎907/683-2547), where the menu includes salads and sandwiches as well as pizza and draft microbrews.

Wrangell-St Elias National Park

As Denali becomes more crowded, people are increasingly making the trip to remoter WRANGELL-ST ELIAS NATIONAL PARK in the extreme south-east corner of the Interior, where four of the continent's great mountain ranges – the Wrangell, St Elias, Chugach, and Alaska – cramp up against each other. Everything is writ large: glacier after enormous glacier, canyon after dizzying canyon, and nine of the sixteen highest peaks in the US, all laced together by braided rivers and idyllic lakes where mountain goats, Dall sheep, bears, moose, and caribou roam.

The first whites in the area came in search of gold but instead hit upon one of the continent's richest copper deposits. The mines closed in 1938, after 27 frantic years of production, and today Kennicott, with over thirty creaking, disused buildings, is a virtual ghost town. You can visit the mill complex on fascinating two-hour walking tours run by St Elias Alpine Guides ($25; ☎1-888/933-5427, 🌐www.steliasguides.com), who also run a number of hikes, ice-climbing trips, mountain-bike rides, raft trips, and even glacier skiing adventures out into the virtually trailless park.

Practicalities

Half the fun is getting to McCarthy along 58 rugged miles of the McCarthy Road, following the trackbed of the abandoned railroad that once linked the Kennicott mill to the port at Cordova. Take it slow and stop often to admire the scenery and abandoned trestle bridges. At the end of the road you cross the Kennicott River on a footbridge and continue half a mile to the village of McCarthy on foot, from where a shuttle bus runs along the rough five-mile dirt road to Kennicott. Hitching along the McCarthy Road can be a hit-or-miss affair; if you haven't got a vehicle you can go with Backcountry Connections (☎ 1-866/582-5292, 🌐 www.alaska-backcountry-tours.com), who charge $119 roundtrip from Glennallen. The park's visitor center is just south of Glennallen at Mile 107 on the Richardson Highway (summer daily 8am–6pm; ☎ 907/822-5234, 🌐 www.nps.gov/wrst).

Accommodation around McCarthy and Kennicott isn't cheap, though there are two hostels. Kennicott River Lodge and Hostel (☎ 907/554-4441, 🌐 www.kennicottriverlodge.com; 📍), near the road end, has four-bunk cabins ($28 per person) and nice common areas; Lancaster's Backpacking Hotel, in McCarthy (☎ 907/554-4402, 🌐 www.mccarthyhodge.com; 📍) has simple shared-bath rooms costing $48 for one, $68 for two. The associated Ma Johnson Hotel (same details; 📍) is very pleasant and atmospheric, and McCarthy Lodge across the road serves good food. In Kennicott there's the upscale Kennicott Glacier Lodge (☎ 1-800/582-5128, 🌐 www.kennicottlodge.com; 📍), which also has the town's one restaurant (reserve for dinner).

Fairbanks

FAIRBANKS, 358 miles north of Anchorage, is at the end of the Alaska Highway from Canada and definitely at the end of the road for most tourists. Though somewhat bland, its central location makes a great base for exploring a hinterland of gold mines and hot springs, and a staging point for trips into the surrounding wilderness and for journeys along the Dalton Highway to the Arctic Ocean oil community of Prudhoe Bay.

Alaska's second most populous town was founded accidentally, in 1901, when a steamship carrying trader E.T. Barnette ran aground in the shallows of the Chena River. Unable to move his supplies any further, he set up shop in the wilderness and catered to the few trappers and prospectors trying their luck in the area. The following year gold was found, a tent city sprang up, and Barnette made a mint. In 1908, at the height of the rush, Fairbanks had a population of 18,500, but by 1920 it had dwindled to only 1100. To thwart possible Japanese attacks during World War II, several huge military bases were built and the population rebounded, getting a further boost in the mid-1970s when it became the construction center for the trans-Alaska pipeline, causing the population to reach an all-time high. The city's economy dropped dramatically with the oil crash, and unemployment hit twenty percent before government spending put the city back on track.

The spectacular aurora borealis is a major winter attraction, as is the Ice Festival in mid-March, with its ice-sculpting competition and open-sled dog racing on the frozen downtown streets. Summer visitors should try to catch the three-day World Eskimo-Indian Olympics in mid-July, when contestants from around the state compete in the standard dance, art, and sports competitions, as well as some unusual ones like ear-pulling, knuckle hop, high kick, and the blanket toss.

Fairbanks suffers remarkable extremes of climate, with winter temperatures dropping to -70°F and summer highs topping 90°F. Proximity to the Arctic Circle means over 21 hours of sunlight in midsummer, when midnight baseball games take place under natural light, and 2am bar evacuees are confronted by bright sunshine.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Alaska Airlines flies frequently from Anchorage to Fairbanks Airport, four miles southwest of downtown; the MACS Yellow Line bus (Mon–Sat; $1.50) runs downtown, but the long wait between services means you'll probably want to grab a taxi (around $12). Alpenglow's Fairbanks Shuttle (☎ 1-800/770-2267, 🌐 www.alaskashuttles.com) will take you around town for $5 ($8 return) or to the airport or rail depot for $7. The airport is also a gateway for flights into the bush; Frontier Flying Service (☎ 1-800/478-6779, 🌐 www.frontierflying.com) operates a reliable service. Trains from Anchorage (daily in summer, weekly in winter) stop beside the Johansen Expressway inconveniently far from downtown. It's cheaper to get here by bus with Alaska/Yukon Trails (☎ 1-800/770-7275, 🌐 www.alaskashuttle.com), who drop off at the visitor center and major hostels and hotels. The best way to get around town is by car, but there's a good riverside cycle trail and the five bus lines, run by MACS (☎ 907/459-1011), provide a reasonable service. Among the companies that can whisk you off into the surrounding bush and fly you to the Arctic Circle, the widest choice is with the Northern Alaska Tour Company (☎ 1-800/474-1986, 🌐 www.northernalaska.com).

The visitor center, at 550 First Ave (summer daily 8am–8pm; rest of year daily 10am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/327-5774, 🌐 www.explorefairbanks.com), carries a vast amount of information on lodging and activities. For information on the area's parks, including Denali, stop by the useful Alaska Public Land Information Center (APLIC) at 250 N Cushman St (summer daily 9am–6pm; rest of year Tues–Sat 10am–6pm; ☎ 907/456-0527, 🌐 www.nps.gov/aplic).

Accommodation

Downtown motels and hotels tend to be either quite pricey or pretty dodgy. B&Bs are plentiful, with rooms from $75 a night; the visitor center offers free phone calls and all the brochures. Thankfully there are a couple of good hostels, and for campers there's the tranquil and convenient Tanana Valley Campground, 1800 College Rd at Aurora Drive (mid-May to mid-Sept; ☎ 907/456-7956; $10), on the MACS bus Red line and with free bikes for guests.

Ah, Rose Marie 302 Cowles St ☎ 907/456-2040, 📧 ahrosemarie@yahoo.com. Small but well-run and justly popular B&B where a hearty breakfast is served on the glassed-in porch. ③

Billie's Backpackers 2895 Mack Rd ☎ 907/479-2034, 🌐 www.alaskahostel.com. Welcoming though somewhat cramped hostel, in a nice area and handily placed on the bus route between downtown and the university. Bikes and Internet access available. Bunks $25, camping $15. ①

Golden North Motel 4888 Old Airport Way ☎ 1-800/447-1910, 🌐 www.goldennorthmotel.com. Friendly and spotlessly clean motel near the airport with cable TV, WiFi, and continental breakfast. Courtesy pickups are available, and the Yellow and Blue buses pass nearby. ③–④

GoNorth Base Camp 3500 Davis Rd ☎ 907/479-7272, 🌐 www.paratours.net. A kind of outdoors hostel in a forested area with large fixed tents with five beds ($24; bring a sleeping bag). There's also camping ($12). Bikes available for $18 a day.

Midge's Birch Lane B&B 4335 Birch Lane ☎ 907/388-8084, 🌐 www.alaskaone.com/midgebb. Relaxed, welcoming, and spacious house in the quiet University district. Rooms with and without private bathrooms. ③

Minnie Street B&B Inn 345 Minnie St ☎ 1-888/456-1849, 🌐 www.minniestreetbandb.com. Top-line B&B with every luxury, including phones with dataports plus WiFi and a spacious deck with a hot tub. Some rooms have a Jacuzzi and there's a full breakfast. Jacuzzi ⑦, private bath ⑥, shared bath. ⑤

Besides the visitor center, the main point of interest downtown is the small Fairbanks Community Museum, 410 Cushman St at 5th Avenue (Tue–Sat 10am–6pm; donation appreciated), containing locally donated trapping, mining, and dogsled racing equipment. The museum also acts as the public face of the Yukon Quest dogsled race – a grueling thousand-mile marathon between Fairbanks and Whitehorse – selling related books, videos, and T-shirts. A similarly wintry theme is pursued at the Ice Museum, 500 2nd Ave at Lacey Street (summer daily 10am–9pm; $8), a year-round taster of the Ice Sculpting competition by way of a slide show and walk-in refrigerators housing some small carvings. A couple of miles west on the banks of the Chena River, Pioneer Park celebrates Alaska history in a very touristy, but not unpleasant way; admission is free, though different attractions charge small fees. Five decent little museums cover the early pioneering days, you can board the only large wooden sternwheeler left in the US, and a miniature railway encircles the entire park; there's plenty to amuse the kids. College Road heads west past Creamer's Field, thick with sandhill cranes and Canada geese, especially in spring and fall, to the University of Alaska Fairbanks's attractive campus. Here the superb new extension to UAF's Museum of the North (summer daily 9am–7pm; winter Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun noon–5pm; $10; ☎907/474-7505, 🌐www.uaf.edu/museum) allows it to display its eclectic collection of native and contemporary art, as well as natural and human history displays.

Unashamedly touristy but fun and very popular is a four-hour cruise down the Chena River on the “Riverboat Discovery” ($47; ☎907/479-6673, 🌐www.riverboatdiscovery.com), which includes a visit to a mock Native village.

Eating and nightlife

Fairbanks's eating options are varied, with good Thai particularly prevalent. They're also well scattered, with downtown and College Road, toward the university, having the greatest concentrations. Nowhere downtown sells groceries: the closest are Safeway and Fred Meyer at the eastern end of College Road. Fairbanks has its decent nightspots, though none lie in hard-drinking downtown.

Alaska Coffee Roasting Co. West Valley Plaza, 4001 Geist Rd ☎907/457-5282. Fairbanks's best coffee, roasted daily on the premises served in a cozy café hung with local art. There's a good selection of wraps, cakes, and muffins, too.

Blue Loon Mile 353.5 Parks Hwy ☎907/457-5666, 🌐www.theblueloon.com. Late-closing hotspot five miles west of Fairbanks that's always good for a convivial drink. Hosts local and touring bands (sometimes a DJ) several nights a week, and screens cult and art-house movies. Closed Mon.

The Diner 244 Illinois St ☎907/451-0613. Reliable diner fare at good prices.

Gambardella's Pasta Bella 706 2nd Ave, downtown ☎907/457-4992, 🌐www.gambardellas.com. Fairbanks' best Italian and not wildly expensive, with a pleasant outdoor area for those endless summer evenings.

Hot Tamale 112 N Turner Rd ☎907/457-8350. Authentic downtown Mexican decorated in a kind of “cantina kitsch” style and particularly noted for cheap beer and their all-you-care-to-eat $11 buffet lunch and dinner.

Howling Dog Saloon Mile 11 Old Steese Hwy, Fox ☎907/457-8780. Eleven miles north of town, but perhaps the north's best bar – unassuming, unpretentious, and fun. Live rock and R&B bands perform and it's the ideal place to play volleyball under the midnight sun.

The Marlin 3412 College Rd ☎907/479-4646.

Poky wood-paneled cellar bar at the cutting edge of Fairbanks's music scene with live bands – blues, jazz, and rock – most evenings from around 9pm and only a small cover charge, if any.

Pump House Mile 1.3 Chena Pump Rd ☎907/479-8452, 🌐www.pumphouse.com. A local favorite in a historic pumphouse, stuffed with gold-mining paraphernalia and with a deck to watch life go by on the Chena River. Great for steak, seafood, and burgers, and also pulls in a substantial drinking crowd.

Second Storey Café 3525 College Rd ☎907/474-9574. Pleasant spot above Gulliver's Bookstore, serving wraps, sandwiches, bagels, biscotti, and coffee, all at reasonable prices. Free Internet access as well.

Thai House 412 5th Ave, downtown ☎907/452-6123. A small but ever-popular restaurant serving the usual range of Thai dishes, but all done to perfection and at very modest prices for around $10. Closed Sun.

The Northern Lights

The aurora borealis, or “Northern Lights,” an ethereal display of light in the uppermost atmosphere, give their brightest and most colorful displays in the sky above Fairbanks. For up to one hundred winter nights, the sky appears to shimmer with dancing curtains of color ranging from luminescent greens to fantastic veils that run the full spectrum. Named after the Roman goddess of dawn, the aurora is caused by an interaction between the earth’s magnetic field and the solar wind, an invisible stream of charged electrons and protons continually blown out into space by the innate violence of the sun. The earth deflects the solar wind like a rock in a stream, with the energy released at the magnetic poles – much like a neon sign.

The Northern Lights are at their most dazzling from December to March, when nights are longest and the sky darkest, but late September can be good for summer visitors. They are pretty much visible everywhere, but the further north the better, especially around Fairbanks.

keg (grassy swampland) and forest traversed by good hiking trails and teeming with moose. For $10 a day non-guests can use the hot pools and large outdoor “rock pool”, which are free for those staying at the fully-equipped resort (☎ 1-800/478-4681, 🌐 www.chenahotsprings.com; 📍 4–5), where camping costs $20. The resort also rents out canoes and mountain bikes, as well as offering rafting float trips.

The traditional favorite for Fairbanks folk has been the more rustic Circle Hot Springs, 130 miles northeast of the city along scenic Steese Highway. Though the resort has been closed since 2001, the caretaker will usually allow access to the pool. Call first (☎ 907/520-5113) as it is a long drive through pristine scenery beside the Chatanika River to the tiny mining village of Central, then eight miles to the resort; there’s camping two miles short of the resort.

The Dalton Highway

Built in the 1970s to service the trans-Alaska pipeline, the mostly gravel-surfaced Dalton Highway, or Haul Road, runs from Fairbanks five hundred miles to the oil facility of Prudhoe Bay on Alaska’s north coast, some three hundred miles beyond the Arctic Circle. It is a long, bumpy, and demanding drive, so take spare tires, gas, provisions, and, ideally, a sturdy four-wheel-drive vehicle: most regular rentals aren’t permitted up here. Not far from Fairbanks you start to parallel the pipeline, snaking up hills and in and out of the ground. At 188 miles, a sign announces that you’ve just crossed the Arctic Circle. The Northern Alaska Tour Company (☎ 1-800/474-1986, 🌐 www.northernalaska.com) will drive you up in a minibus and fly you back down to Fairbanks for around $270 (you can save $130 by taking the minibus back, but it’s a long day and you miss out on the flight).

Most people are happy to return south at this point, but the highway plugs on through increasingly barren territory, finally dispensing with trees as you climb through the wilderness of the Brooks Range, a 9000ft chain mostly held within the Gates of the Arctic National Park. From Atigun Pass you descend through two hundred miles of grand glaciated valleys and blasted arctic plains to the end of the road at dead-boring Deadhorse. You can’t stroll by the ocean or camp here, so your choices are confined to staying in one of the $120-per-night hotels and taking a $39 tour past the adjacent – and off-limits – Prudhoe Bay oil facility to the Arctic Ocean where you can dip your toe or go for the full body immersion. By far the best way to do it is with Northern Alaska, who run a three-day fly/drive tour to Prudhoe Bay for $750.

△ Waikiki Beach

Hawaii

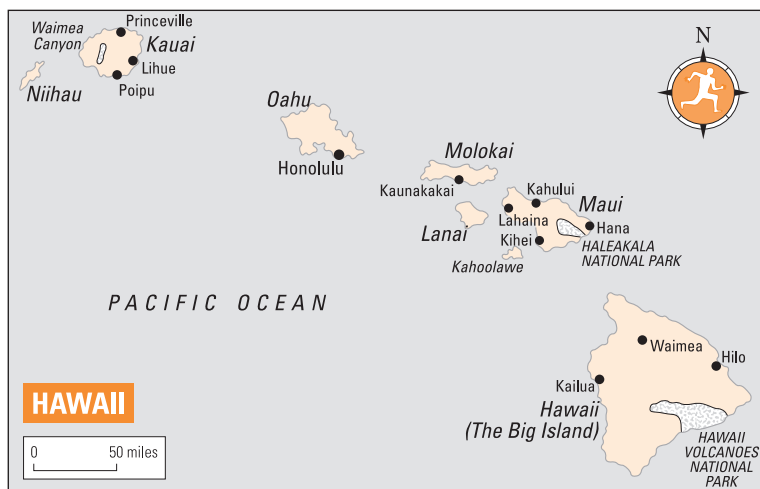

With their fiery volcanoes, palm-fringed beaches, verdant valleys, glorious rainbows, and awesome cliffs, the islands of HAWAII boast some of the most spectacularly beautiful scenery on earth. Two thousand miles from the country it belongs to, the fiftieth state pulls in seven million tourists per year, including honeymooners from all over the world, frequent fliers cashing in their mileage, and almost two million Japanese. This Pacific archipelago can seem at times like a gigantic theme park.

Honolulu, on Oahu, is by far the largest city of Hawaii; its resort annex of Waikiki is the main tourist center. The biggest island, Hawaii itself, is known as the Big Island in a vain attempt to avoid confusion, while Maui and Kauai also attract mass tourism. All the islands share a similar topography and climate. Ocean winds shed their rain on the northeast, windward coast, keeping it wet and green; the southwest, leeward (or “Kona”) coasts can be almost barren, and so make ideal locations for big resorts. While temperatures remain consistent all year at between 70°F and 85°F, rainfall is heaviest from December to March. That is nonetheless the most popular time to visit, enabling mid- to upper-range hotels to add a premium of at least $30 per night to their standard room rates. A visit to Hawaii doesn't have to cost a fortune, however; budget facilities do exist. The one major expense you can't avoid, except possibly on Oahu, is car rental – rates are very reasonable, but gas is pricey.

Some history

Each of the Hawaiian islands was forced up like a vast mass of candle drippings by submarine volcanic action, all fueled by the same “hot spot,” which has remained stationary as the Pacific plate drifted above. The process continues at Kilauea on the Big Island, where lava explodes into the sea to add new land day by day, while the oldest islands are now mere atolls way to the northwest. Until two thousand years ago, these unknown specks were populated only by the very few plants, birds, and animals that had chanced to be carried here by wind or wave. The first known human inhabitants were the Polynesians, who arrived in two principal migrations: one from the Marquesas in the eighth century, and another from Tahiti four or five hundred years later.

No Western ship chanced upon Hawaii until Captain Cook arrived at Kauai in 1778. He was amazed to find a civilization sharing a culture – and language – with the peoples of the South Pacific. Although Cook himself was killed in Hawaii in 1779, his visit started an irreversible process of change. In reshaping the islands to suit their needs, Westerners decimated most of the indigenous flora and fauna – as well as the Hawaiians themselves. Cook's men estimated that there were a million islanders; the population today is roughly the same, but only eight thousand pure-blood Hawaiians are left.

Within a few years of Cook's arrival, Kamehameha became the first king to unite all the islands. However, exposure to the world economy swiftly devastated Hawaii's traditional way of life. White advisers and ministers soon dominated the government, and the families of the first missionaries from New England became Hawaii's wealthiest and most powerful class. As the US grew increasingly reliant on Hawaiian-grown sugar, Hawaii moved inexorably towards annexation. In 1887 an all-white group of "concerned businessmen" forced King David Kalakaua to surrender power, and subsequently called in the US warship Boston and declared a provisional republican government. US President Cleveland (a Democrat) responded that "Hawaii was taken possession of by the United States forces without the consent or wish of the government of the islands . . . (It) was wholly without justification . . . not merely a wrong but a disgrace."

On August 12, 1898, Hawaii was formally annexed as a territory of the United States. Its ultimate integration into the American mainstream was hastened by its crucial role in the war against Japan, and the expansion of tourism thereafter. The islands finally became the fiftieth of the United States in 1959, after a plebiscite showed a seventeen-to-one majority in favor. The only group to oppose statehood were the few remaining native Hawaiians.

Modern Hawaii

Roughly sixty percent of the million-plus modern Hawaiians were born here. Around one-third are Caucasian (many of them US military personnel), one-third Japanese, and one-sixth Filipino, with 200,000 claiming at least some Hawaiian ancestry. The traditional reliance on agriculture seems to be in terminal decline, with sugar and pineapple plantations closing one after the other, and the need to import virtually all the basics of life resulting in an extraordinarily high cost of living.

Visitors in search of ancient Hawaii will find that few vestiges remain. What is presented as "historic" usually postdates the missionary impact. Although the ruins of temples (heiaus) to the old gods still stand in some places – notably on the Big Island – the "old towns" are pure nineteenth-century Americana, with false-front stores and raised wooden boardwalks. While authentic hula dancing is a powerful art form, you're most likely to encounter it bastardized in a luau. Primarily tourist money-spinners, these “traditional feasts” provide an opportunity to sample Hawaiian foods such as kalua pig, baked underground, and local fish such as ono, ahi, mahi mahi, and lomi-lomi (raw salmon). Poi – a paste made from mashed taro root – remains a staple of the diet, much as it was when one of Captain Cook’s men described it as “a disagreeable mess.”

The Hawaiian language endures primarily in place names and music. At first glance it looks unpronounceable – especially as it is written using a mere twelve letters (the five vowels, plus h, k, l, m, n, p, and w) – but usually, each letter is enunciated individually, and long words often break down into repeated sounds, such as “meha-meha” in “Kamehameha.”

Getting to and around Hawaii

Honolulu, just under six hours by plane from the US West Coast, is one of the world’s busiest centers for air traffic; return fares from LA, San Francisco, and Seattle start at around $350. There are also direct flights from the mainland to Maui, the Big Island, and Kauai. Many flights to the US from Australia – such as those on Continental – include free stopovers in Hawaii. European travelers should buy all-inclusive tickets from Europe.

The principal inter-island carriers are Hawaiian Airlines (☎1-800/882-8811 or 1-800/367-5320, @www.hawaiianair.com) and Aloha Air (☎808/484-1111 or 1-800/367-5250, @www.alohaair.com), together with its subsidiary Island Air (☎808/484-2222 or 1-800/323-3345). They connect all the major islands several times per day, with standard one-way fares of around $85. In 2006, go! (☎1-888/435-9462, @www.iflygo.com) entered the market, offering standard one-way fares of $39 and some as cheap as $19; its survival remains to be seen. A new inter-island ferry (@www.hawaiisuperferry.com) promises to start daily sailings between Oahu, Maui and Kauai in July 2007 (from $42 one-way), adding the Big Island in 2009 (from $52 one-way).

All the airports have car rental outlets; with the exception of Oahu, however, bus services on the islands barely exist.

Oahu

Three-quarters of Hawaii’s population live on OAHU, which has monopolized the islands’ trade and tourism since the first European sailors realized that Honolulu offered the safest in-shore anchorage for thousands of miles. Eighty percent of visitors to Hawaii arrive in Honolulu, and most remain for their entire vacation. Oahu effectively confines tourists to the tower-block enclave of Waikiki, just east of downtown Honolulu; there are few rooms anywhere else. In much the same way, the military are closeted away in relatively inconspicuous camps. On any given day, the numbers of military personnel and tourists on Oahu are roughly the same.

While overcrowding and development mean Oahu can’t be recommended over the Neighbor Islands (as the other Hawaiian islands are known), it can still give a real flavor of Hawaii. Oahu has some excellent beaches, with those on the North Shore a haven for surfers and campers, and the cliffs of the Windward side are awesome.

HAWAII
Honolulu

Honolulu

Until the Europeans came, HONOLULU was insignificant; soon so many foreign ships were frequenting its waters that it had become Kamehameha's capital, and it remains the economic center of the archipelago. While the city covers a long (if narrow) strip of southern Oahu, downtown is a manageable size, and a lot quieter than its glamorous image might suggest. The tourist hotels are concentrated among the skyscrapers of very distinct Waikiki, a couple of miles east.

While its setting is beautiful, right on the Pacific and backed by dramatic cliffs and extinct volcanoes, most visitors are here simply to enjoy the sheer hedonism of shopping, eating, and generally hanging out in the sun. It's also the center of an exemplary public transportation system that facilitates exploration of the whole island.

Arrival, information, and getting around

The runways of Honolulu's International Airport, just west of downtown, extend out to sea on a coral reef. Car rental outlets abound on the island, but a car is not especially desirable in Honolulu, what with city traffic and hefty parking fees in Waikiki. The nine-mile (not at all scenic) drive to Waikiki takes anything from 25 to 75 minutes; Reliable (one-way $8, roundtrip $15; ☎ 808/924-9292, www.reliableshuttle.com) is one of many shuttle services that run to any Waikiki hotel. Regular buses #19 and #20 also head to Waikiki, but don't allow large bags, cases, or backpacks. A taxi will cost around $25.

Information

The Hawaii Visitors Bureau maintains a strong online presence at www.gohawaii.com. Free listings magazines and leaflets are everywhere you turn, and all the hotels have information desks. Kiosks around Kalakaua Avenue offer greatly discounted rates for island tours, helicopter rides, dinner cruises, surfing lessons, and so on.

Getting around

A network of over sixty bus routes, collectively named TheBus, covers the whole of Oahu. All journeys, however long, cost $2, with free transfers onto any connecting route if you ask as you board (information ☎808/848-5555, 🌐www.thebus.org). The most popular routes with Waikiki-based tourists are #2 to downtown, #8 to Ala Moana Shopping Center, #20 to Pearl Harbor, #22 to Hanauma Bay, and the bargain “Circle Island” buses (#52 clockwise and #55 counterclockwise), which take four hours to loop around the central valley and the east coast, passing the legendary North Shore surf spots.

Among companies running city and island bus tours, for anything from $26 up to $75 for a full day, as well as off-island packages, are Polynesian Adventure Tours (☎808/833-3000 or 1-800/622-3011, 🌐www.polyad.com).

Accommodation

All the accommodation listed below is in or near Waikiki; very little is available in central Honolulu. Waikiki accommodation covers a wide range, and the highest rates will bring absolute luxury, but it's possible to find comfortable lodging for much less. An ocean view costs a $50-plus premium; everything is close to the ocean, however.

Aloha Punawai 305 Saratoga Rd ☎808/923-5211 or 1-866/713-9694, 🌐www.alternative-hawaii.com/alohapunawai/. This 19-room hotel, opposite the post office, offers clean, air-conditioned apartments and studios, all with kitchenettes. ⑤

The Breakers 250 Beach Walk ☎808/923-3181 or 1-800/426-0494, 🌐www.breakers-hawaii.com. Small, intimate hotel on the western edge of central Waikiki; all rooms have kitchenettes and TV, and there's a bar and grill beside the pool. ⑤

 Hawaiiana Hotel 260 Beach Walk ☎808/923-3811 or 1-800/367-5122, 🌐www.hawaiianahotelatwaikiki.com. Pleasant little family hotel, abounding in tiki images, where the rooms are ranged around two pools; all have kitchenettes, some have balconies. ⑤

New Otani Kaimana Beach Hotel 2863 Kalakaua Ave ☎808/923-1555 or 1-800/421-8795, 🌐www.kaimana.com. Intimate, Japanese-toned beachfront hotel half a mile east of central Waikiki. ⑥

Outrigger and Ohana are linked hotel chains with numerous locations around Waikiki, mostly high-rises (reservations Outrigger ☎1-800/688-7444, 🌐www.outrigger.com; Ohana ☎303/369-7777 or 1-800/462-6262, 🌐www.ohanahotels.com). Choices include the Ohana Maile Sky Court, 2058 Kuhio Ave (④), or the more luxurious Ohana Waiki- ki Beachcomber, 2300 Kalakaua Ave (⑦); most of the other Ohanas have rooms for around $125, while the Outriggers, such as the Reef, 2169 Kalia Rd (⑦), are generally more expensive. ④–⑨

Polynesian Beach Club Hostel 2584 Lemon Rd ☎808/922-1340, 🌐www.hawaiihostels.com. Clean, efficiently-run hostel, a block from the sea. Some rooms hold four $25 bunk beds, some hold ten at $20, some serve as good-value private doubles, and there are also private suites. Free snorkels and boogie boards are available; there's cheap Internet access; and meals are served in the communal area some nights. ①/③

 The Royal Hawaiian 2259 Kalakaua Ave ☎808/923-7311 or 1-800/325-3535, 🌐www.royal-hawaiian.com. This 1920s “Pink Palace,” commanding the beach, is one of Waikiki's best-loved landmarks. The original building looks out across terrace gardens to the sea, but is now flanked by a less atmospheric tower block, which holds the most expensive suites. ⑨

Waikiki Beachside Hostel 2556 Lemon Rd ☎808/923-9566 or 1-866/478-3888, 🌐www.hokondo.com. Small hotel block near the park in eastern Waikiki that has been converted into a popular, lively private hostel, with dorm beds for $25, plus pricier double rooms, and Internet access. ①/⑤

The City

Downtown Honolulu is surprisingly small, set back a little from the sea and focused around a spacious plaza on King Street that includes Iolani Palace and the state capitol. The palace was built for King David Kalakaua in 1882, but, apart from its koa-hardwood floors, contains little that is distinctively Hawaiian, or that justifies the high tour price (by reservation, ☎ 808/522-0832; Tues–Sat 9am–2.15pm; $20). Across the road is a flower-bedecked, gilt statue of Kamehameha the Great.

To reach the nearby ocean, pedestrians have to negotiate fearsome traffic. The Aloha Tower on Pier 9 used to be the city's tallest building; the surrounding area is now a mall, fronting onto the docks and better for dining than it is for shopping. The view from the top of the tower is little short of ugly, but is good for getting your bearings (daily 9am–5pm; free). The Hawaii Maritime Center just east on Pier 7 (daily 8.30am–5pm; $7.50) documents Hawaii's seafaring past in superb detail, from ancient migrations through to tourism in the twentieth century. A stunning film from 1922 shows the true-life drama of whaling, and there's a wall of gigantic historic surfboards. In the adjacent dock are the fully rigged four-master Falls of Clyde and the replica Polynesian canoe Hokulea, whose voyages to Tahiti and New Zealand have inspired tremendous interest in traditional methods of navigation.

Honolulu residents take great pride in the stunning fine art on display at the Academy of Arts, half a mile east of the capitol at 900 S Beretania St (Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun 1–5pm; $7; ☎ 808/532-8700, www.honoluluacademy.org). As well as paintings including Van Gogh's Wheat Field, Gauguin's Two Nudes on a Tahitian Beach, and one of Monet's Water Lilies, the Academy also holds fascinating depictions of Hawaii by visiting artists, including vivid, stylized studies of Maui's Iao Valley and Hana coast by Georgia O'Keeffe, plus magnificent ancient Chinese ceramics and bronzes.

Chinatown

Just five minutes' walk down Hotel Street west of downtown Honolulu, the faded green-clapboard storefronts of Chinatown seem like another world. Traditionally the city's red-light district, the narrow streets leading down to the Nuuanu Stream are still characterized by pool halls, massage parlors, and heavy-duty bars.

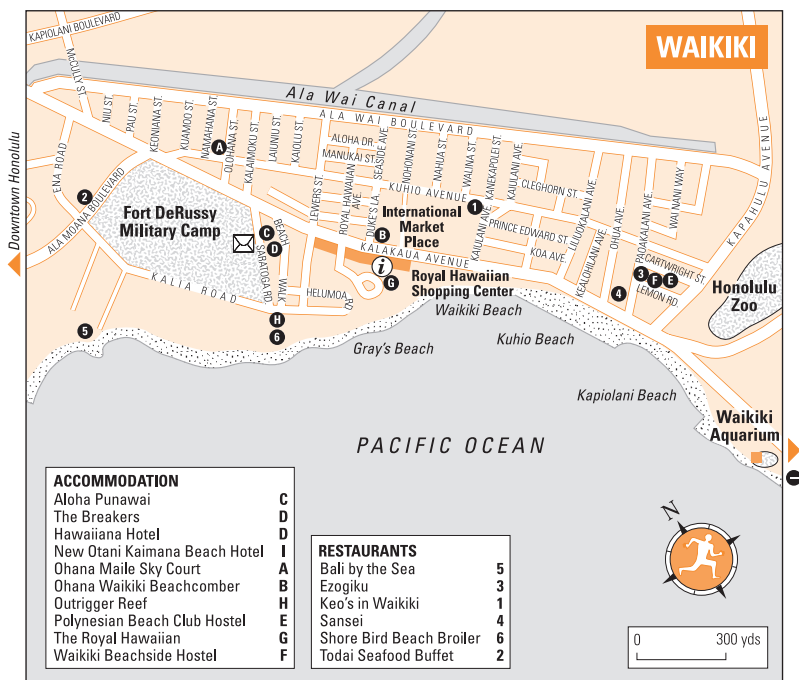

It's well worth delving into a few of Chinatown's inconspicuous alleyways. Some of its old walled courtyards are now malls, but the businesses remain much the same as ever, and you can still find herbalists weighing out dried leaves in front of vast arrays of bottles. Pig snouts and salmon heads are among the food specialties at Oahu Market, on N King and Kekaulike streets.

Bishop Museum

The anthropological collection at the Bishop Museum at 1525 Bernice St (daily 9am–5pm; $15; ☎ 808/847-3511, www.bishopmuseum.org) – well away from both the ocean and downtown, near the foot of the Likelihi Highway – showcases real Polynesian culture. Three floors display ancient carved stone and wooden images of gods, magnificent feather leis and cloaks, and a full-sized hale (traditional hut) brought here from Kauai, in addition to Japanese samurai armor and even a full-sized sperm whale. There are also excellent exhibitions for kids, and a planetarium. TheBus #2 from Waikiki stops two blocks away on Kapalama Street.

Punchbowl

High above Honolulu, lush lawns growing in the caldera of an extinct volcano are the setting for the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific (daily:

March–Sept 8am–6.30pm; Oct–Feb 8am–5.30pm), which holds casualties from all US Pacific wars, including Vietnam, as well as Hawaiian shuttle astronaut Ellison Onizuka. This spot is said to have held an ancient sacrificial temple, and is on TheBus route #15 from town.

Waikiki

Built on a reclaimed swamp, Waikiki is very nearly an island, all but separated from Honolulu between the sea and the Ala Wai canal (which provides the drainage to make its incredible highrise profusion possible). Once home to Kamehameha the Great, the site may be venerable, but these days its raison d'être is rampant commercialism. You could, just about, survive here with very little money, but there would be no point – there's nothing to see, and the only thing to do apart from surf and sunbathe is to stroll along the seafront Kalakaua Avenue and shop.

The most striking thing about the parallel Waikiki Beach is how narrow it is, a thin strip of shipped-in sand. Compared to many other Hawaiian beaches, it's overcrowded and small, but it's still a wonderful place to spend a lazy day, and the fact that it's lined by a pedestrian walkway, with several pleasant gardens en route, makes it a refuge from the frenzy nearby.

Two possible diversions on the eastern fringes of Waikiki are Honolulu Zoo (daily 9am–4.30pm; $8; ☎ 808/971-7171, 🌐 www.honolulu-zoo.org), where you can walk through a mock African savannah set against the magnificent backdrop of Diamond Head, and the oceanfront Waikiki Aquarium (daily 9am–5pm; $9; ☎ 808/923-9741, 🌐 www.waquiaryum.org) which, as well as holding sharks and monkfish seals, has a tank devoted to the many-hued reef fish of Hanauma Bay (see p.1268).

△ Activity along Waikiki Beach

Diamond Head

Waikiki's most famous landmark is the pinnacle of Diamond Head, another extinct volcano just to the east. The lawns of the crater interior are oddly bland, but a straightforward hiking trail leads up a mile or so to the summit, and a panorama of the whole coast, passing through a network of tunnels built during World War II. TheBus #22 and #58 stop on the road nearby.

Hanauma Bay

A few miles to the east, the magnificent crescent-shaped Hanauma Bay, formed when the wall of a crater collapsed and let in the sea, is renowned as Oahu's best place to snorkel (summer daily except Tues 6am–7pm, 2nd and 4th Sat of month 6am–10pm; winter daily except Tues 6am–6pm, 2nd Sat of month 6am–10pm; $5, under-13s free; ☎808/396-4229). Thanks to strict conservation measures, the sea abounds in brightly colored fish. Hourly buses from Waikiki drop passengers at the visitor center, which shows educational videos about the bay's fragile ecology.

Pearl Harbor

Almost the whole of Pearl Harbor, the principal base for the US Pacific fleet (just over one hour west of Waikiki on TheBus #20), is off-limits to visitors. However, the surprise Japanese attack of December 7, 1941, which an official US inquiry called “the greatest military and naval disaster in our nation's history,” is commemorated by a simple white memorial set above the wreck of the battleship USS Arizona, still discernible in the clear blue waters. More than 1100 of its crew lie entombed there.

Free tours of the memorial operate between 8am and 3pm each day, but it can be two or three hours after you pick up your numbered ticket at the Pearl Harbor visitor center (daily 7.30am–5pm, last program starts 3pm; ☎808/422-0561) before you're called to board the ferry that takes you there. There's a small museum and bookstore in the visitor center, as well as long-range views of the memorial, which was partly financed by Elvis Presley's 1961 Honolulu concert, his first show after leaving the army. The huge USS Missouri, which survived the attack and was used four years later for the ceremony in Tokyo Harbor that ended World War II, is moored alongside the Arizona. Guided visits, by bus from alongside the Pearl Harbor visitor center, include the actual surrender site as well as sweeping views of the harbor from the Missouri's bridge (daily 9am–5pm; tours $16–25; ☎ 1-877/MIGHTYMO, 🌐 www.ussmissouri.com).

Eating

Honolulu and Waikiki offer an enormous range of dining possibilities, and the recommendations below are just a sampling. For fine dining, all the larger Waikiki hotels have good restaurants, and, in Honolulu, Restaurant Row mall near the harbor is a good bet. There are excellent fast-food malls in the Ala Moana Center, and the much cheaper and more exotic Maunakea Marketplace on Maunakea Street in Chinatown, while Waikiki's Kuhio Avenue is lined with snack outlets and fast-food franchises.

Bali by the Sea Hilton Hawaiian Village, 2005 Kalia Rd, Waikiki ☎ 808/941-2254. Highly refined gourmet restaurant, with irresistible views of the full length of Waikiki and very tasteful (and expensive) Pacific Rim cuisine.

Ezogiku 2546 Lemon Rd, Waikiki ☎ 808/923-2013. Plain and very inexpensive Japanese diner, with three branches in Waikiki – the others are at 2420 Koa Ave and 2146 Kalakaua Ave. Ramen soups plus rice and curry dishes, all at around $8, to eat in or take out.

Kakaako Kitchen Ward Center, 1200 Ala Moana Blvd ☎ 808/596-7488. Mall diner that dishes up high-quality fast food; pretty much everything, from the hamburger stew to the signature dish chicken linguine, costs $7–10, and there's a menu of daily $8 specials like meat loaf or pot roast.

Keo's in Waikiki 2028 Kuhio Ave, Waikiki ☎ 808/951-9355. Hawaii's best Thai restaurant, and though its menu isn't exceptional, everything, from the specialty "Evil Jungle Prince" curries onwards, tastes great, and all entrees cost under $15. Breakfast is both American and Asian; lunch and dinner are entirely Thai.

Sam Choy's Breakfast, Lunch, and Crab 580 N Nimitz Hwy ☎ 808/545-7979. Copious quantities of modern Hawaiian cuisine, including the signature raw tuna salad ahi poke, plus a microbrewery, located a mile or two west of downtown Honolulu.

Sansei Waikiki Beach Marriott, 2552 Kalakaua Ave ☎ 808/931-6286. Wonderful, dinner-only Japanese-inspired restaurant, serving superb sushi at around $10 for a specialty roll, and a full Pacific Rim menu with entrees from $20. Late-night dining and free karaoke Fri & Sat.

Shore Bird Beach Broiler Outrigger Reef on the Beach, 2169 Kalia Rd, Waikiki ☎ 808/922-2887. Open-air oceanfront restaurant serving a $10 breakfast buffet, and dinner with an open salad bar for $15–20, depending on choice of entree. Guests cook their own meat or fish on a communal grill.

Todai Seafood Buffet 1910 Ala Moana Blvd, Waikiki ☎ 808/947-1000. Stylish all-you-care-to-eat Japanese buffet in western Waikiki. Lunch costs $16 and dinner $29, but the range and quality of the food, including sushi, shrimp, crab, and lobster, makes it a real bargain.

Yakiniku Canellia 2494 S Beretania St ☎ 808/946-7955. Korean buffet restaurant a mile north of Waikiki, where you select slices of marinated beef, chicken, or pork and grill it yourself at the gas-fired burners set into each table. Open daily for lunch ($12) and dinner ($18).

Nightlife

Most of Honolulu's nightlife is concentrated in Waikiki, where fun-seeking tourists set the tone. On the whole, the available entertainment is on the bland side. Hawaii tends to be off the circuit for touring musicians, so if you enjoy live music you'll probably have to settle for lesser-known local performers. Look out also for special events at downtown's beautifully restored Hawaii Theatre, 1130 Bethel St (☎ 808/528-0506, 🌐 www.hawaii theatre.com).

Chai's Island Bistro Aloha Tower Marketplace, 101 Ala Moana Blvd ☎ 808/585-0011. Sumptuous and very expensive Thai restaurant, where the very finest Hawaiian musicians perform for diners nightly 6.45–8.45pm.

Duke's Canoe Club Outrigger Waikiki on the Beach, 2335 Kalakaua Ave ☎ 808/922-2268. Smooth Hawaiian sounds wash over this oceanfront Waikiki cocktail bar nightly from 4pm to 6pm and 10pm to midnight – including big-name “Concerts on the Beach” Fri–Sun 4–6pm. No cover charge.

Hula's Bar and Lei Stand Waikiki Grand Hotel, 134 Kapahulu Ave ☎ 808/923-0669. Waikiki's most popular gay venue occupies a suite of ocean-view rooms across from the Honolulu Zoo. As well as a state-of-the-art dance floor equipped with giant video screens, there's also a more casual lounge area. Daily 10am–2am.

Ocean Club Restaurant Row, 500 Ala Moana Blvd ☎ 808/526-9888. Flamboyant, frenetic downtown bar-cum-restaurant that serves inexpensive food in the early evening and turns into a wild dance club as the night wears on. Over-22s only; no T-shirts.

Windward Oahu

The most spectacular moment on a tour of Oahu comes as you cross the Koolau Mountains on the Pali Highway (Hwy-61) to see the sheer green cliffs of the windward side of the island, veiled by swirling mists. The highest spot, four miles northeast of Honolulu, is the Nuuanu Pali Lookout. Kamehameha the Great finalized his conquest of Oahu here in 1795, forcing hundreds of enemy warriors over the edge of the cliffs.

Oahu's leading paying attraction, with one million annual visitors, is the Polynesian Cultural Center, ten miles short of the island's northernmost tip at Laie (Mon–Sat 12.30–9pm; $50–200; ☎ 1-800/367-7060, 🌐 www.polynesia.com). This haphazard mixture of real and bogus Polynesia – in which the history is firmly on the latter – is owned by the Mormons, and staffed by students from the adjacent Brigham Young University, who perform tired music and dance routines. TheBus #52 takes roughly two hours to get this far.

North Shore Oahu

The surfing beaches of northern Oahu are famous the world over, but they're minimally equipped for tourists. Waimea, Sunset, and Ehukai beach parks are

Sea sports and safety

The nation that invented surfing – long before the whites came – remains its greatest arena. The sport was popularized early in the twentieth century by Olympic swimmer Duke Kahanamoku, using a 20ft board; these days most are around six feet. As a rule, the best surfing beaches are on the north shore of each island. Windsurfing, too, is hugely popular, in similar locations, while smaller boogie boards make an exhilarating initiation. Snorkeling and diving are top-quality, although Hawaii's coral has fewer brilliant hues than those seen in warmer equatorial waters.

Bear in mind, however, that drownings in Hawaii are all too common. Waves can sweep in from two thousand miles of open ocean onto beaches that are unprotected by any reef. Not all beaches have lifeguards and warning flags, and unattended beaches are not necessarily safe. Watch the sea carefully before going in, and never take your eyes off it thereafter. If you get swept out, don't fight the big waves; wait for the current to die down before trying to swim back to shore.

Sea creatures to avoid include black spiky sea urchins, Portuguese man-of-war jellyfish, and coral in general, which can give painful infected cuts. Shark attacks are much rarer than popular imagination suggests; those that do occur are usually due to “misunderstandings,” such as surfers idling on their boards looking a bit too much like turtles from below.

all laid-back roadside stretches of sand, where you can usually find a quiet spot to yourself. In summer, the tame waves may leave you wondering what all the fuss is about; see them at full tilt in the winter, and you'll have no doubts.

HALEIWA, the main surfers' hangout, combines alternative shops and cafés with upfront tourist traps. Much of the food around is vegetarian; the Paradise Found Café, 66-443 Kamehameha Hwy (☎808/637-4640), serves breakfast and lunch, both for about $7, while Cholo's Homestyle Mexican, in the North Shore Marketplace across the street (☎808/637-3059), is a busy, plain but very lively Mexican joint.

For accommodation, you'll have to head five miles northeast to the 🏠 Backpacker's Vacation Inn, at 59-788 Kamehameha Hwy by Waimea Bay (☎808/638-7838, 🌐 www.backpackers-hawaii.com; 📍 1-9), which has dorm beds for $22-26 a night, as well as some great-value ocean-view private rooms and studios.

The Big Island

Although the Big Island of Hawaii could hold all the other islands with room to spare, it has the population of a medium-sized town, with just 150,000 people (half what it was in Captain Cook's day). Visitation is low compared to Oahu or Maui; despite its fair share of restaurants, bars, and facilities, this is basically a rural community, and sleepy old towns all over the island have remained unchanged for a century. The few resorts are built on the barren lava flows of the Kona coast to catch maximum sunshine; the beaches are great, but these are otherwise the least beautiful areas on the island.

Thanks to the Kilauea volcano, which has destroyed roads and even towns, and spews out pristine beaches of jet-black sand, the Big Island is still growing, its southern shore inching ever further out to sea. Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, which includes Mauna Loa as well as Kilauea (though not Mauna Kea, further to the north and higher than either), is absolutely compelling; you can explore steaming craters and cinder cones, venture into the rainforest, and at times approach within feet of the eruption itself.

As befits the birthplace and base of King Kamehameha, more of the ancient Hawaii survives on the Big Island than anywhere else in the islands. Puuhonua O Honaunau National Historical Park preserves a "place of refuge" for defeated warriors and those who ran afoul of society's rules, and there are further temples north along the Kohala coast, while Waipio Valley, where Kamehameha spent his youth, remains as lush and green as ever.

Flights to the Big Island arrive at both Hilo on the rainy east coast, or near the resort town of Kailua (often referred to as Kona) on the west. Public transportation is all but nonexistent.

Windward Hawaii

Almost all the rain that falls on the slopes of Mauna Kea flows down the eastern side of the Big Island. As a result, myriad streams and waterfalls nourish dense jungle-like vegetation, ensuring that the main road north along the coast from Hilo – the only sizeable base for travelers – is alive with flowering trees and orchids.

Hilo

Although it's the Big Island's capital and largest town, just 45,000 people live in HILO, which remains endearing and unpressured. Mass tourism has never taken off here, mainly because it rains too much. However, the rain falls mostly at night, and America's wettest city blazes with tropical blooms against a backdrop of rainbows.

With its modest streets and wooden stores, Hilo's downtown looks appealingly low-key. Sadly, that's largely because all the buildings that stood on the seaward side of Kamehameha Avenue were destroyed by two tsunamis, in 1946 and 1960. The story is told in the Pacific Tsunami Museum, on Kamehameha Avenue at Kalakaua Street (Mon–Sat 9am–4pm; $7; ☎808/935-0926, 🌐www.tsunami.org). A scale model shows how the city looked before the 1946 disaster; contemporary footage and personal letters bring home the full impact of the tragedy.

The focus of the two-part Lyman Museum at 276 Haili St (Mon–Sat 9.30am–4.30pm; $7; ☎808/935-5021, 🌐www.lymanmuseum.org) is the original 1830s Mission House, furnished in dark koa wood, of Calvinist missionaries David and Sarah Lyman. The museum next door starts with a fascinating display of ancient weapons and then documents Hawaii's various ethnic groups, including the Portuguese brought here in 1878 from the similarly volcanic Azores, whose braginha became the ukelele.

A couple of miles up Waianuenue Avenue, at Rainbow Falls, just to the right of the road, a spectacular wide waterfall plummets 100ft across the mouth of a huge cavern.

Practicalities

Hilo's airport is at General Lyman Field (☎808/935-4782), on the eastern outskirts; a taxi into town costs around $8. The Hawaii Visitors Bureau is at 250 Keawe St (Mon–Fri 8am–noon & 1–4.30pm; ☎808/961-5797, 🌐www.bigisland.org). From a terminal on Kamehameha Avenue, Hilo's Hele-On bus (☎808/961-8744) operates one daily service to Kailua (Mon–Sat) and down to Hawaii Volcanoes National Park (Mon–Fri).

There are two good hostels in town, both with private rooms as well as dorm beds. The attractive 🏠 Hilo Bay Hostel, downtown at 101 Waianuenue Ave (☎808/933-2771, 🌐www.hawaiihostel.net; ①–⑥), offers $18 dorm beds and assorted private rooms. Arnott's Lodge, in the woods two miles southeast at 98 Apapane Rd. (☎808/969-7097, 🌐www.arnottslodge.com; ①–③), has tent spots and dorm beds for $10, and you can join organized island tours. Otherwise, the Dolphin Bay, 333 Iliahi St (☎808/935-1466 or 1-877/935-1466, 🌐www.dolphinbayhilo.com; ④), is a nice, friendly little hotel. Naung Mai Thai, 86 Kilauea Ave (☎808/934-7540; closed Sun) is an excellent little Thai café downtown.

North from Hilo

The Belt Road (Hwy-19) follows the Hamakua coast north of Hilo, clinging to the hillsides and crossing ravines on slender bridges. For a glimpse into the interior, head into the mountains after fifteen miles to the 450ft Akaka Falls. A short loop trail through the forest, festooned with wild orchids, offers views of Akaka and other jungle-like tropical waterfalls.

Waipio Valley

Highway 240, which turns north off the Belt Road at HONOKAA, comes to an abrupt end after nine miles at the edge of Waipio Valley. As the southernmost of six successive sheer-walled valleys, this is the only one accessible by land – and it's as close as Hawaii comes to the classic South Seas image of an isolated and self-sufficient valley, dense with fruit trees and laced by footpaths leading down to the sea.

It's perfectly possible to walk down the steep, mile-long track into Waipio, but most visitors take tours, either in the four-wheel-drive vehicles of the Waipio Valley Shuttle (Mon–Sat 9am, 11am, 1pm & 3pm; ☎808/775-7121, 🌐www.waipiovalleytour.com; $45), at the Waipio Valley Art Works in Kukuiahae, a mile from the end of the road, or on horseback (☎808/775-1007; $85).

The Kona coast

Hawaii's leeward Kona coast divides into two distinct areas. To the north of its only sizeable community, Kailua, barren lava trails down to the sea from the third highest of the Big Island's volcanoes, Hualalai. Thanks to the relentless sun on its superb beaches, luxury hotels dot the shoreline as incongruous green patches in the wasteland. To the south, the hillsides are more fertile, and although the condos are spreading, you can still get a real feel for the old Hawaii in the land where Captain Cook met his end.

North Kona and the resorts

The best of the spectacular sandy beaches along the Kona coast – safe for summer swimming, though with tempestuous winter surf – lie to the north of Kailua. Hapuna Beach, almost forty miles up the coast, is deservedly the most famous, despite being overshadowed by the giant 🏨 Hapuna Beach Prince Hotel (☎808/880-1111 or 1-888/977-4623, 🌐www.hapunabeachprincehotel; 📍). For idyllic seclusion, head instead for Kekaha Kai State Park (daily except Wed 9am–7pm; free), reached via a bumpy dirt road a couple of miles north of Keahole Airport (see below).

Several extraordinary resort hotels lie in the district of South Kohala, thirty miles north of Kailua (see below). Three separate enclaves – Waikoloa, Mauna Kea, and Mauna Lani – have been landscaped out of this inhospitable lava desert, each one a self-contained oasis holding two or three hotels, a beach or two, and nothing else. Although Waikoloa is the least exclusive of the three, it's home to the ostentatious, mile-long Hilton Waikoloa (☎808/886-1234 or 1-800/221-2424, 🌐www.hiltonwaikoloavillage.com; 📍), where guests travel to and from their rooms by electric boats or monorail.

Kailua (Kona)

Although the Big Island's main resort is officially called KAILUA, it's much more commonly referred to as Kona. An attractive little town that has played a major part in Hawaiian history, it's more affected by tourism than any other Big Island community, and its seafront row of fast-food restaurants and souvenir shops could be almost anywhere.

Arrival

The largely open-air Keahole Airport, situated on a field of black lava nine miles north of Kailua, has the usual car rental places; otherwise Speedishuttle buses into town cost around $20 per person (☎ 808/521-2085, 🌐 www.speedishuttle.com). In Kailua, a regular shuttle bus runs the six-mile length of Alii Drive every ninety minutes (Mon–Sat 8.30am–7.30pm; $2; ☎ 808/775-7121). One daily Hele-On bus (see p.1272) follows Hwy-11 around the north of the island to Hilo, leaving Kailua at 6.45am and returning in the late afternoon.

Accommodation

Alii Drive is lined for about five miles south from Kailua with hotels and condos, but none offers much in the way of budget accommodation. The listings below therefore include places a bit further along the coast.

King Kamehameha's Kona Beach Hotel 75-5660 Palani Rd ☎ 808/329-2911 or 1-800/367-6060, 🌐 www.konabeachhotel.com. Landmark hotel at the northern end of oceanfront Kailua, set around a picturesque little beach. ⑦

Kona Seaside Hotel 75-5646 Palani Rd ☎ 808/329-2455 or 1-800/560-5558, 🌐 www.sand-seaside.com. Six floors of reasonable, air-conditioned rooms, with and without kitchens. ③

 Kona Tiki Hotel 75-5968 Alii Drive ☎ 808/329-1425, 🌐 www.konatiki.com.

This simple three-story motel, beside the ocean a mile south of central Kailua, is very popular with bargain hunters. No phones or TVs, but some rooms have kitchenettes. ③

The Town

Hulihee Palace (daily 9am–4pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; $6) faces out to sea from the center of Kailua. Built as the governor's residence in 1838, it's not all that imposing from the outside, but within it's notable for massive koa-wood furnishings, made to fit the considerable girth of the various members of the Hawaiian royal family who later lived here, such as the redoubtable four-hundred-pound Princess Ruth. The 1836 Mokuaikaua Church directly opposite – Hawaii's first church – holds a museum on the early days of Hawaiian Christianity. King Kamehameha's funeral rites were performed in the ancient temple of Ahuena Heiau, which juts into the sea at the northern end of the bay.

Some of the world's best fishing, snorkeling, and scuba spots are approached by sea from Kailua. The catamaran Fair Wind offers snorkeling cruises to Kealahakua Bay (daily: 9am departure $105, shorter 2pm departure $69; ☎ 808/322-2788, 🌐 www.fair-wind.com).

Eating and drinking

Competition ensures that the restaurants and bars of central Kailua – especially those along the seafront – are well priced, though the relentless vacation atmosphere means the place can seem a bit unreal.

Cassandra's Greek Taverna 75-5669 Alii Drive ☎ 808/334-1066. Greek food might seem incongruous for Hawaii, but the fish specialties taste all the better for the sea view.

Huggo's 76-6828 Kuhakui St ☎ 808/329-1493. Lunch and dinner served on a large terrace with ocean views. Burgers, salads, and sandwiches, as well as Pacific Rim specialties, plus live evening entertainment.

O's Bistro Crossroads Shopping Center, 75-1027 Henry St ☎ 808/329-9222. Pan-Asian noodle joint, a mile up from the ocean near the highway, serving great dinners from around $20.

Sibu Café Banyan Court Mall, 75-5695 W Alii Drive ☎ 808/329-1112. Popular, informal Indonesian restaurant, with atmospheric outdoor seating but no views. Serves $12–15 entrees, including a tasty shrimp sate.

Kealahakua Bay

Kealahakua Bay, a dozen miles south of Kailua, was where Captain Cook was killed on February 14, 1779, during his second visit to Hawaii, after a year spent searching for the fabled Northwest Passage. One of ancient Hawaii's major population centers, it's now barely inhabited, and the white obelisk on the death site – legally a small piece of England – is all but inaccessible. You can only get to within a mile of the bay by car, at Napoopoo Beach, though you'll get a glimpse of it from the road on the way down. The bay itself is the best place on the Big Island for snorkeling, even if there are sharks further out. It's also possible to hike down to the monument, but it's a grueling four-hour roundtrip, for which you need to carry all your water and supplies. The trail starts just before the town of CAPTAIN COOK, which is also home to the bargain 🍷 Manago Hotel (☎ 808/323-2642, 🌐 www.managohotel.com; 📍 1–9), offering comfortable ocean-view rooms amid flowering Japanese gardens.

This region, South Kona, is the prime source of Kona coffee, which sells here for around $26 per pound (including shipping). A mile south of Captain Cook, the 🍷 Coffee Shack (daily 7am–4pm; ☎ 808/328-9555) serves wonderfully fresh coffee and smoothies on a terrace that enjoys staggering views all the way down to Kealahou Bay.

Puuhonua O Honaunau – “The City of Refuge”

Puuhonua O Honaunau National Historical Park (Mon–Thurs 6am–8pm, Fri–Sun 6am–11pm; $5 per vehicle), four miles on from Kealahou, is the single most evocative historical site in all of the Hawaiian islands, jutting into the Pacific on a small peninsula of jagged black lava. The grounds include a palace, complete with fishpond and private canoe landing, and three heiaus (places of worship), guarded by large carved effigies of gods – reproductions, but still eerie in their original setting. An ancient “place of refuge” lies firmly protected behind the mortarless masonry of the sixteenth-century Great Wall. Those who broke ancient Hawaii's intricate system of kapu (taboo) – perhaps by treading on the shadow of a chief or fishing in the wrong season – could expect summary execution unless they fled to the sanctuary of such a place. As chiefs lived on the surrounding land, transgressors had to swim through the shark-infested seas. If successful, they would be absolved and released overnight.

Hawaii Volcanoes National Park

The Big Island's southernmost volcanoes, Mauna Loa and Kilauea, jointly constitute HAWAII VOLCANOES NATIONAL PARK, thirty miles from Hilo and eighty from Kailua. Possibly the most dramatic of all the US national parks, it includes desert, arctic tundra, and rainforest, besides two active volcanoes.

Evidence is everywhere of the awesome power of the volcanoes to create and destroy; no map can keep up with the latest whims of the lava flow. Whole towns have been engulfed, and what were once prized beachfront properties lie buried hundreds of yards back from the sea.

Kilauea Caldera

The main focus of the park is Kilauea Caldera. Close to the rim, on the eleven-mile Crater Rim Drive, both the visitor center (daily 7.45am–5pm; $10 per vehicle; ☎ 808/967-7311, 🌐 www.nps.gov/havo) and the fascinating Jaggar Museum of geology (daily 8.30am–5pm; free) offer basic orientation. Kilauea is said to be the home of the volcano goddess Pele, who has followed the “hot spot” from island to island. In 1824 Queen Kapiolani, a recent convert to Christianity, defied her by descending into the crater, reading aloud from her Bible, eating the tabu red ohelo berries, and throwing stones into the pit. When Mark Twain came here in 1866, he observed a dazzling lake of liquid fire; since a huge explosion in 1924 it's been shallower and quieter, a black dusty expanse dotted with hissing steam vents. Enthusiastic hikers should set time aside to follow the long trails that explore the caldera floor. Both the Halemaumau Trail, a seven-mile roundtrip, and the Kilauea Iki Trail, a total of five miles, involve picking your way from cairn to cairn across an eerie landscape of cracked and jagged lava.

Among shorter routes, the mile-long Devastation Trail is a boardwalk laid across the scene of a 1959 eruption. Most of what you see is new growth – fresh lava is full of nutrients, and rainwater and seeds soon collect in the recesses – but a few older trees survived partial submersion in ash by growing “aerial roots” some way up their trunks.

Chain of Craters Road

Chain of Craters Road winds down to the sea from Crater Rim Drive, sweeping around a succession of cones and vents in an empty landscape where the occasional dead white tree trunk or flowering shrub pokes up. Fresh sheets of lava constantly ooze down the slopes to cover the road. When a new road is built on top of the flow, more lava covers it. Along the coast, the scale of the damage since 1983 has been too great to repair – over seven miles have been lost – so now the road is a dead end, and getting shorter year by year. One by one the landmarks along its seafront stretch have been destroyed, and before long it may not follow the shoreline at all.

Check current conditions at the visitor center when you arrive, and make sure you have enough gas. The end of the road is a fifty-mile roundtrip from the park entrance, and there are no facilities of any kind along the way. For the last few years, depending on where current volcanic activity is concentrated, it has been possible at times to walk across the congealed lava blocking Chain of Craters Road to see molten rock gush from the earth – sometimes directly into the sea. The park's Volcano Update (☎ 808/985-6000, 🌐 hvo.wr.usgs.gov) has the latest details; for information on ranger-led tours, call the visitor center.

Practicalities

The national park operates two free campgrounds on a first-come, first-served basis, while the famous Volcano House, on the very edge of the crater within the park (☎ 808/967-7321, 🌐 www.volcanohousehotel.com; cabins ③, rooms ④), has spectacular views, and good food in the evening, although the prices for its simple motel-style rooms are rather high. Otherwise, the small and inconspicuous town of VOLCANO, just before the park entrance on the Hilo side, provides the best places to stay in the vicinity, with B&Bs such as 🌳 Hale Ohia (☎ 808/967-7986, 🌐 www.haleohia.com; ④), south of the highway across from the village. Kilauea Lodge, on the leafy main street (☎ 808/967-7366, 🌐 www.kilauealodge.com; ⑤), is a comfortable inn with a very good restaurant.

Maui

The island of MAUI, the second largest in the Hawaiian chain, is Oahu's principal rival, attracting roughly a third of all visitors to the state. Some would say that things have gone too far, with formerly remote, unspoiled beaches, around Kaanapali and Kihei for example, now swamped by sprawling resorts. On the other hand, the crowds come to Maui for the good reason that it's still beautiful. This is the best equipped of all the islands for activity holidays – whale-watching,

Maui

Maui activities

From the moment you arrive on Maui, promotional handouts and free newspapers will bombard you with details on the island's wide range of activities. Operators in all the tourist areas, especially along Front Street in Lahaina, including Barefoot's Cashback Tours at no. 834 (☎ 1-888/222-3601, 🌐 www.tombarefoot.com), offer cut-rate deals.

Snorkeling and diving

Maui's best-known snorkeling and diving spot is the tiny crescent of Molokini, poking above the sea – all that's left of a once-great volcano. There's no beach or landfall, but you do see a lot of fish, including deep-water species. Countless cruises leave early each morning (to avoid the heat) from Maalea Harbor; snorkelers can pay anything from $50 to $110 for a morning trip, and from $35 for a shorter afternoon jaunt. Vessels range from the twenty-passenger Hokua (☎ 808/249-2583, 🌐 www.alohabluecharters.com) up to the 150-seater Prince Kuhio (☎ 808/242-8777, 🌐 www.mvprince.com).

Downhill cycle rides

One of Maui's more unusual opportunities is to be taken by van to the top of Haleakala, watch the sun rise, and then ride a bicycle 39 miles down to Paia by the sea – without pedaling once. Serious cyclists find the slow pace of the trip frustrating; complete novices or the unfit shouldn't try; in-betweens think it's great. Companies running trips for around $80 (including pickups) include Cruiser Phil's (☎ 808/893-2332 or 1-877/764-2453, 🌐 www.cruiserphil.com) and Maui Downhill (☎ 808/871-2155 or 1-800/535-2453, 🌐 www.mauidownhill.com).

windsurfing, diving, sailing, snorkeling, and cycling. Temperatures along the coast can be searing, especially at historic Lahaina, but it's always possible to escape to somewhere cooler. Upcountry Maui, on the slopes of the mighty Haleakala volcano, is a delight, well away from the bustle, while the waterfalls and ravines along the tortuous road out west to Hana outclass anything on Oahu.

Kahului and Wailuku

Almost half of Maui's 125,000 inhabitants – the workers who keep this fantasy island going – live in the twin towns of KAHULUI and WAILUKU, to the north of the “neck” connecting its two mountainous sections. The land here can be so flat you fear the waves will wash right over it. Kahului is the main commercial center; Wailuku, if not aesthetically pleasing, is one of the few towns on Maui that feels like a genuine community, and the presence of budget accommodation and restaurants – and the stunning Iao Needle nearby – make it a good central base.

Arrival and information

Virtually all visitors to Maui arrive at Kahului Airport, which is well placed for all the island's major destinations and has an information booth. Speedishuttle buses (☎808/661-6667 or 1-800/977-2605, 🌐www.speedishuttle.com) connect the airport regularly with resorts around the island.

The offices of the Maui Visitors Bureau are hard to find, tucked away at 1727 Wili Pa Loop in Wailuku (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎808/244-3530 or 1-800/525-6284, 🌐www.visitmaui.com), and it's easier simply to pick up information in major hotels.

Accommodation

Wailuku is nowhere near Maui's main resort areas, and lacks any hotels, but thanks to its two hostels and convenient restaurants, it's the island's most popular destination for budget travelers.

Banana Bungalow 310 N Market St, Wailuku
☎808/244-5090 or 1-800/846-7835, 🌐www.maiihotel.com. Friendly, lively hostel that offers $25 dorm beds as well as some bare, basic doubles. Free airport shuttles, a changing schedule of free island tours, and cut-price car rental. ①–③

Exploring Kahului and Wailuku

There's no sightseeing to speak of in either Kahului or Wailuku, though you may become familiar with both while shopping for food and other necessities. Market Street in Wailuku also contains several interesting curio and souvenir shops, and commands a view across to Haleakala.

Wailuku's Main Street heads straight into the West Maui Mountains, stopping three miles in at Iao Needle, a stunning 1200ft pinnacle of green-clad lava that stands, head usually in the clouds, at the intersection of two lush valleys. Kamehameha won control of Maui here in 1790, in a battle determined by a cannonade directed by two European gunners.

Eating

While both Kahului and Wailuku hold a handful of good-value restaurants, neither has anything that could be considered fine dining.

AK's Cafe 1237 L Market St, Wailuku
 ☎ 808/244-8774. Healthy and very tasty local specialties, with cheap lunches and fish dinners for around $15. Closed Sat & Sun.

 ☎ 808/877-2877. Relaxed espresso bar serving

West Maui

Despite largely guaranteed sunshine, you can feel somewhat cut off if you choose to stay on Maui's west coast, where the prices are higher than elsewhere, and the long drive is worsened by heavy traffic. The hotels and shopping centers are concentrated in the two main resorts, Lahaina and Kaanapali, although develop- ment has sensibly been restricted to the makai (oceanward) side of the Honoapi- ilani Highway, leaving the inland hills and valleys untouched except by drifting rainbows.

Lahaina

LAHAINA, West Maui's only real town, is one of the prettiest communities in all Hawaii. During the early nineteenth century it served as capital of the entire King- dom of Hawaii, but it has barely grown since then, and still resembles the peaceful tropical village it used to be. Its main oceanfront street is lined with timber-frame buildings; coconut palms sway to either side of the mighty central banyan tree; surfers swirl into the thin fringe of beach to the south; and the mountains of West Maui dominate the skyline.

Whale-hunting and whale-watching

The first whaling ships arrived in Hawaii in 1820, the same year as the missionaries – and had an equally dramatic impact. With the ports of Japan closed to outsiders, Hawaii swiftly became the center of the industry. Any Pacific port of call must have seemed a godsend to the whalers, who were away from New England for three years at a time, and paid so badly that most were either fugitives from justice or just plain mad. Hawaii was such a paradise that up to fifty percent of each crew would desert, to be replaced by native Hawaiians, born seafarers eager to see the world.

Until the 1840s, Honolulu, which permitted drinking, was the whalers' favorite port. Then potatoes and prostitution lured them to Lahaina as well, where the sea was calm enough for ships to dock beside the open road and stock up on provisions at a grassy marketplace beside a central canal.

At the peak of the trade, almost six hundred whaling vessels docked in Honolulu in a single year. Decline came with the Civil War – when many whaling ships were delib- erately sunk to blockade Confederate ports – and an 1871 disaster, when 31 vessels lingered in the Arctic too long, became frozen in, and had to be abandoned.

Ironically, the waters off western Maui now rate among the world's best areas for whale-watching and whale research. Between January and March each year, and for up to a month either side of that, humpback whales use the ocean channels here as both sanctuary and playground. The whales are often clearly visible from the shore, but specific whale-watching trips can take you much closer (with money-back guar- antees if you don't see one). Operators include the nonprofit Pacific Whale Founda- tion ($20; ☎ 808/249-8811 or 1-800/942-5311, @ www.pacificwhale.org).

△ Lahaina

The view out to sea from Lahaina, towards the island of Lanai, is superb. If you have the time, consider taking a ferry there for the day; there's little to see on the island, but the main beach, at Hulopoe Bay, is a delight. Expeditions provides five sailings daily, from Lahaina Harbor ($25 each way; ☎ 808/661-3756, 🌐 www.go-lanai.com).

Accommodation

If you have the money to spend on resort-style accommodation, Lahaina and the coast to the north have some good options, but there's very little available for under $100 per night.

Food and nightlife

Lahaina's harborside malls contain a tremendous selection of restaurants, national and local chain outlets, and take-out places, not all of them good by any means, but covering a wider spectrum than the hotels.

David Paul's Lahaina Grill Lahaina Inn, 127 Lahainaluna Rd ☎ 808/667-5117. Upmarket dinner-only restaurant serving Maui's finest Pacific Rim cooking; it's slightly cramped, but the food is great.

The Feast at Lele 505 Front St ☎ 808/667-5353. An inspired cross between a luau and a gourmet restaurant. Each of the five Polynesian courses consists of at least two dishes – a colossal amount of food, but it's excellent and unusual, and the beachfront setting is superb. The $99 charge, though steep, includes unlimited cocktails and other beverages. Reservations are essential. Daily, April–Sept 6pm, Oct–March 5.30pm.

Sunrise Café 693A Front St at Market St ☎ 808/661-8558. Small, laid-back, and very central café, with outdoor seating beside its own tiny patch of beach. Espressos, smoothies, salads, sandwiches, and daily specials are all on offer, with prices starting at around $6.

Kaanapali

KAANAPALI, just a few miles north of Lahaina but reliably cooler, was never a town; fields of sugar cane here were replaced in the 1960s by highrise hotels and condos, each comfortable enough but soulless en masse. Besides several perfect family beaches – swimming and snorkeling are best at Black Rock, in front of the Sheraton – the other main attraction is the whaling museum in the Whalers Village mall (daily 9am–10pm; free). Grisly but fascinating exhibits include a cast-iron “try pot,” used for reducing whale blubber at sea; such pots gave rise to the stereotyped, but not entirely untrue, image of cannibals cooking missionaries in big black cauldrons.

A free shuttle bus connects Kaanapali with Lahaina, and a trolley operates within the resort. The warnings of the car rental companies concerning the sinuous Kahekili Highway, which on the map looks like a good route to continue on around northwest Maui and back to Wailuku, should be taken seriously; it’s an exceptionally dangerous drive. However, two of Maui’s most famous surfing spots, at Mokuleia Bay and Honolua Bay, are a few miles along, before the road gets too hair-raising.

Kihei and Wailea

Maui’s other main resort area is south of Kahului, across the isthmus. The long strip of hotels, malls, and condos begins at KIHEI, with the road heavily built up on both sides, but thins out beyond the manicured lawns of WAILEA, near some superb beaches. Paluea Beach is ideal for families, while Little Beach, reached by a trail from Makena (Big) Beach, is famous for (illegal) nudism.

Few of the accommodation options are geared towards budget travelers, though the pretty little Sunseeker Resort, 551 S Kihei Rd (☎ 808/879-1261 or 1-800/532-6284, 🌐 www.maui-sunseeker.com; Ⓜ), which looks like an old-fashioned motel, has great-value ocean-view rooms, and the Wailana Inn, 14 Wailana Place (☎ 808/874-3131 or 1-800/399-3885, 🌐 www.wailanabeach.com; Ⓜ), is a slightly more expensive and comfortable version. For food, Sansei, at the Kihei Town Center (☎ 808/879-0004), offers great-value sushi and Pacific Rim concoctions.

Upcountry Maui

Hawaii is not always a land tarnished by civilization. Central Maui, in the nineteenth century “a dreary expanse of sand and shifting sandhills, with a dismal growth . . . of thornless thistles,” is now a pastoral idyll, thanks to an ingenious system of irrigation channels.

The highway to the top of Haleakala climbs higher, at a faster rate, than any road on earth. Starting in rich meadows, it climbs past purple-blossoming jacaranda, firs, and eucalyptus to reach open ranching land, and then ascends in huge curves to the volcanic desert and the crater itself.

Kihei and Wailea • Upcountry Maui

Haleakala

Though HALEAKALA – “the House of the Sun” – is the world’s largest dormant volcano, you may not appreciate its full ten-thousand-foot majesty until you’re at the top. Shield volcanoes are not as dramatic as the classic cones, as lava oozes from fissures along broad flanks to create a long, low profile, and the summit is often obscured by clouds. That it hasn’t erupted for two hundred years doesn’t necessarily mean it won’t ever again – in 1979, for example, Haleakala was thought more likely to explode than Mount St Helens (see p.1193).

The higher reaches of the mountain are a national park, which never closes (admission $10 per vehicle). Manhattan would fit comfortably into the awe-inspiring crater, almost eight miles across, which was for the ancient Hawaiians a site of deep spiritual power. The most popular time to come is for the sunrise; the visitor center at the top operates from just before dawn until 3pm (☎ 808/572-4400, 🌐 www.nps.gov/hale). Hiking trails of varying difficulty cross the crater floor, where camping is permitted in three remote cabins that are awarded by lottery two months in advance. They require a hike of four to ten miles and a $75 fee per night. In addition, fifteen to twenty-five free tent sites outside the crater are available every day (first-come, first-served).

Makawao and Paia

Coming down from Haleakala, Hwy-365 leads north to two laid-back little country towns populated mainly by old Californian hippies: MAKAWAO, five miles up from the ocean, and PAIA, Maui’s first plantation town, near the great windsurfing beach of Hookipa. Neither offers any accommodation, but in the center of Makawao, the friendly Italian restaurant Casanova’s, 1188 Makawao Ave (☎ 808/572-0220), puts on live music at night, courtesy of the local community of rock exiles. Fresh fish is the specialty at the oceanfront Mama’s, a mile east of Paia at 799 Poho Place (☎ 808/579-8488), while vegetarians will be glad of the top-quality food at Fresh Mint, 115 Baldwin Ave, in Paia (☎ 808/579-9144).

The road to Hana

The rains that fall on Haleakala cascade down Maui’s long windward flank, covering it in thick, jungle-like vegetation. Convicts in the 1920s hacked out a road along the coast that has become a major tourist attraction, twisting in and out of gorges, past innumerable waterfalls and over more than fifty tiny one-lane bridges. All year round, and especially in June, the route is ablaze with color from orchids, rainbow eucalyptus, and orange-blossomed African tulip trees. The usual day’s excursion is roughly fifty miles (three hours) each way from Paia, to gorgeous Oheo Gulch, ten miles beyond Hana, where waterfalls tumble down the hillside to oceanfront meadows.

Hana

The former sugar town of HANA itself might seem a disappointment at the end of the road; it’s a pleasant enough little community that isn’t especially interested in attracting tourists. Hasegawa’s General Store is a friendly place to pick up supplies, and a red-sand beach can be reached by a precarious trail from the end of Uakea Road. Rooms at the deluxe 🏡 Hotel Hana-Maui (☎ 808/248-8211 or 1-800/321-4262, 🌐 www.hotelhanamaui.com; 🍷) start at around $400; Joe’s Place on Uakea Road is a basic but affordable alternative (☎ 808/248-7033, 🌐 www.joesrentals.com; ②). There's also camping beside the black-sand beach at lovely Waianapanapa State Park, four miles short of Hana (☎ 808/984-8109; $5).

Kauai

Although no point on the tiny island of KAUAI is as much as a dozen miles from the sea, the variety of its landscapes is quite incredible. This is the oldest of the major islands, and the forces of erosion have had more than six million years to sculpt it into fantastic shapes. The mist-shrouded extinct volcano Mount Waialeale at its heart is the world's wettest spot, draining into a high landlocked swamp, and full of unique plants and animals. Nearby is the chasm of Waimea Canyon, while the north shore holds the vertiginous green cliffs of the awe-inspiring Na Pali coast, familiar to millions from films such as Jurassic Park and South Pacific, but the sole preserve of adventurous hikers. Kauai is a place to be active, on sea and land; and if you only take one helicopter flight in your life, this is the place to do it.

Lihue

Flights to Kauai arrive at the capital, LIHUE, which stands slightly inland of little Nawiliwili Harbor at the southeast corner of the island. It's roughly at the midpoint of the one main road that encircles the island (prevented from completing a loop by the Na Pali cliffs), but as a base it's undistinguished. The population is just five thousand, and downtown consists of a few tired plantation-town streets set well back from the sea.

The small Kauai Museum at 4428 Rice St (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm, Sat 10am–4pm; $7) traces the island's history from the mythical menehune (dwarfs said to have been here before the Polynesians arrived) through Captain Cook's 1778 landfall and on to its sugar-growing heyday. Kauai was the one island not conquered by Kamehameha the Great; he spent six years amassing a fleet that never sailed, and settled in the end for accepting economic tribute.

Practicalities

Lihue's airport is only two miles from downtown ($8 by taxi; Wailua or Kapaa cost closer to $20). Along with the usual car rental outlets, it also has helicopters – Safari Helicopter Tours (☎ 808/246-0136 or 1-800/326-3356, 🌐 www.safariair.com) is typical, offering basic tours from $150. The Hawaii Visitors Bureau is in town at 4334 Rice St (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 808/245-3971 or 1-800/262-1400, 🌐 www.kauaidiscovery.com).

There's no great point staying in Lihue rather than along the coast. However, the 🌺 Garden Island Inn, near the harbor at 3445 Wilcox Rd (☎ 808/245-7227 or 1-800/648-0154, 🌐 www.gardenislandinn.com; ④), is a lovely refurbished three-story motel, dripping with purple bougainvillea. For a quick meal in the heart of town, call in at Hamura's Saimin, 2956 Kress St (☎ 808/245-3271), a family-run Japanese food counter which specializes in bowls of saimin (noodles) for $4. A mile or two east, the 🍷 Hanamaulu Restaurant and Tea House (☎808/245-2511) is a delightful old place, complete with fishponds, that serves both Chinese and Japanese food.

East Kauai

Most Kauaians live between Lihue and the overlapping communities of WAILUA, WAIPOULI, and KAPAA, whose malls, condos, and hotels blend into each other a few miles north of the capital. All the way along there's an exposed thin strip of beach; only Wailua is especially scenic, and you have to go further north for snorkeling.

Accommodation

While most East Shore hotels are expensive by any other than Hawaiian standards, there are several possibilities on a more affordable scale.

Hotel Coral Reef 1516 Kuhio Hwy, Kapaa ☎808/822-4481 or 1-800/843-4659, 🌐www.hotelcoralreef.com. Simple little hotel facing the beach that offers some of Kauai's best rates. ④

Kauai International Hostel 4532 Lehua St, Kapaa ☎808/823-6142, 🌐www.kauaihostel.net. Kauai's only hostel, across from Kapaa Beach and open to everyone except Hawaiian residents, with a maximum one-week stay. $25 dorm beds, and a few private rooms. ①–③

Lae Nani 410 Papaloa Rd, Wailua ☎808/822-4938 or book through Outrigger 1-800/688-7444, 🌐www.outrigger.com. Irresistible complex of luxurious oceanfront apartments and condos, with lovely swimming alongside. ⑦

Eating

Kapaa is the only town in East Kauai with anything like a center; you can windowshop for restaurants along its street of wooden stores, which are fronted by a beach park.

Caffè Coco 4-1639 Kuhio Hwy, Wailua ☎808/822-7990. Attractively ramshackle café, serving cheap and wholesome, if not entirely vegetarian, breakfasts and lunches for under $10, plus changing dinner specials. Closed Mon.

Coconuts 4-919 Kuhio Hwy, Kapaa ☎808/823-8777. Roomy, attractive (but viewless) Pacific Rim restaurant, serving flavorful fish and meat entrees for $20 and up. Dinner only.

Korean Bar-B-Q Restaurant 4-3561 Kuhio Hwy, Wailua ☎808/823-6744. Unassuming barbecue diner serving excellent grilled meats and chicken; the best bet for a bargain meal, with large combos for under $10.

North Kauai

Despite the development elsewhere on the island, the astonishing valleys of Kauai's Na Pali coast are likely to remain inviolate – though accessible enough by canoe to sustain large Hawaiian populations, their awesome walls shield them from any attempt to build roads.

Long, golden Secret Beach, hidden away from the road up from Kapaa, is among Kauai's best-looking beaches, though swimming here is usually unsafe. To get there, drive up Hwy-56 from the south, pass Kilauea, and then turn right at Kalihiwai. Take the second right onto a dirt track leading to a parking area, and the beach is a ten-minute walk down through the woods. At the far end, a waterfall of beautiful fresh mountain water cascades down the cliffs, and there are often spinner dolphins just offshore, especially around the picturesque 1913 Kilauea lighthouse. The cliffs above are a bird sanctuary.

Hanalei

Major development stops beyond the resort of Princeville, mainly because the road then crosses seven successive one-lane bridges. The first is over the Hanalei River, where the valley stretching away inland is a National Wildlife Refuge. Here endangered Hawaiian ducks, coots, and stilts are protected by the preservation of their major habitats – natural wetlands and taro ponds. As a result, this is a rare chance to see a Hawaiian landscape relatively unchanged since ancient times.

The small town of HANALEI, set around a magnificent bay, has some low-key apartments for rent, but otherwise little formal accommodation. Of local restaurants, the busy Hanalei Gourmet in the Hanalei Center mall (☎808/826-2524) makes an ideal stop for breakfast or a sandwich lunch, and also has live music every night.

Gorgeous Lumahai Beach, at the western edge of Hanalei Bay, has starred in countless movies, among them South Pacific, but is too treacherous for swimming. All the roadside beaches from here on, however, are good for snorkeling. Just two miles from the start of the Na Pali coast (see below), the 🏖️ Hanalei Colony Resort (☎808/826-6235 or 1-800/628-3004, 🌐www.hcr.com; 📍) is Kauai's most dramatic waterfront property, within a few feet of the pounding surf; all its units have two bedrooms. The road finally comes to an end at Kee Beach, perhaps the loveliest spot of all.

The Na Pali coast

The lush valleys of the Na Pali coast, separated by knife-edge ridges of rock thousands of feet high but just a few feet thick, make Kauai one of the world's great hiking destinations. Although many of the best views (other than from a helicopter) are from the trails in Kokee State Park (see p.1286) or boat trips out to sea, the Kalalau Trail along the shore is unforgettable. The full eleven miles to Kalalau Valley is arduous and gets progressively more dangerous; in places you have to scramble along a precipitous (and shadeless) wall of crumbly red rock.

However, the first two miles of the trail, to Hanakapiai Beach, are probably the most beautiful. They're steep but straightforward, passing through patches of dense vegetation where you clamber over the gnarled root systems of the splay-footed hala (pandanus) tree. Creepers and vines hang down, and it's all exposed to the sun. From the beach, a further hour's arduous hike (off the main trail) leads inland to the natural amphitheater of the towering Hanakapiai Falls. It takes at least four and a half hours to get to the falls and back from the trailhead at Kee Beach, opposite the ten-mile marker at the end of the road. Hikers and campers doing anything more than a day-hike must obtain permits, costing $10 per person per night, from the State Parks Office (3060 Eiwa St, Lihue; ☎808/274-3444). Accidents and drownings are not uncommon, and the staff need a record of who may be missing.

South Kauai

POIPU, Kauai's principal beach resort, lies on the south coast roughly ten miles west of Lihue, where sunshine is more consistent and there's great surfing and snorkeling. Its finest hotel is the sumptuous 🏠 Hyatt Regency, 1571 Poipu Rd (☎808/742-1234 or 1-800/554-9288, 🌐www.kauai-hyatt.com; 9), while Grantham Resorts (☎808/742-7220 or 1-800/325-5701, 🌐www.grantham-resorts.com; 7–9) quotes lower prices for local condos than you'll be offered by individual properties. The best restaurants are two upmarket Pacific Rim options: Casa di Amici, 2301 Nalo Rd (☎808/742-1555), and 🏠 Roy's Poipu Bar & Grill (☎808/742-5000), in the Poipu Shopping Village mall.

West Kauai

Two of the major scenic attractions in all Hawaii – the gorge of Waimea Canyon and Kokee State Park (with its views of the Na Pali cliffs to one side and the sodden Alakai Swamp to the other) – can only be reached from the west coast of Kauai. The coast itself, however, is nondescript. WAIMEA, the largest town here, is just one short street at the foot of the poorly marked road up to the canyon. The statue of Captain Cook, which commemorates his “discovery” of Hawaii here on January 20, 1778, is an exact replica of one in Cook's home town of Whitby, England. Western Kauai's only accommodation option is 🏠 Waimea Plantation Cottages (☎808/338-1625 or 1-800/992-4632, 🌐www.waimea-plantation.com; 6), set in an attractive coconut grove, and with a good restaurant and brewpub in the main plantation house.

Waimea Canyon and Kokee State Park

It's not unreasonable to call Waimea Canyon the “Grand Canyon of the Pacific.” At three thousand feet, it may not be quite as deep as its Arizona rival, but the colors – all shades of green against the bare red earth – are absolutely breathtaking. Erosion by torrential rains created this landscape, but the process began when a massive geological fault almost split Kauai in two. The road from Waimea climbs beside the widening gorge, until after eight miles the mile-wide canyon can be seen in all its splendor. Each of the roadside lookouts is definitely worth stopping for.

Explore Kokee State Park, higher up, as early in the day as possible; by late morning the valleys may be filled with mist and clouds. Hiking trails lead off from both sides of the highway, and although the ranger station at KOKEE, the park headquarters, is often unstaffed, you can pick up trail information from the small but informative Kokee Natural History Museum nearby (daily 10am–4pm; $1 donation), where displays center on the area's indigenous wildlife. Kauai is the only island where mongooses have not killed off most native birds, and at this height mosquitoes are no threat either, so some of the world's rarest species (such as the o'o a'a) survive here and nowhere else.

Kokee Lodge Housekeeping Cabins, next to the park headquarters, are rented by the day (PO Box 819, Waimea, Kauai, HI 96796; ☎808/335-6061; 2), and there's free camping, available with a permit from the parks office in Lihue (see p.1283). For food, Kokee Lodge has lunch specials for around $8.

Kalalau Lookout and Pihea Trail

A few miles further up, Kalalau Lookout stands over the valley where the Kalalau Trail ends – though to attempt a descent would be certain suicide. The Pihea Trail follows the course of a lunatic attempt to extend the road beyond its current end. At times it narrows to a few feet, with precipitous drops to either side, and visibility can drop to nothing as the clouds siphon across the ridges. Inland lies the Alakai Swamp, where the heaviest rainfall on earth collects in the volcanic rock; the few humans who manage to penetrate the mists are assailed on all sides by the shrills, whistles, and buzzes of a jungle without mammals or snakes. The trail running through the swamp consists of a boardwalk for almost its entire six-mile length, though in places the planks just rest on cloying black mud. Giant ferns dangle above the trail, and orchids gleam from the undergrowth. If you make it all the way to the end, you're rewarded with a stupendous panorama of Hanalei Bay.

A brief history of the USA

There is much more to the history of North America than the history of the United States alone. In these few pages, however, there's little room to do more than briefly survey the peopling and political development of the disparate regions that now form the USA. Many of the events and issues discussed below are covered in more detail in the relevant chapters, while the books listed on p.1314 onwards are invaluable resources for serious students.

First peoples

The first definitely dated trace of human beings in the Americas stems from just 14,000 years ago, when the true pioneers of North America, nomadic hunter-gatherers from Siberia, reached what's now Alaska. Thanks to the last ice age, when sea levels were three hundred feet lower than in the modern Bering Strait, a "land-bridge" – actually a vast plain, measuring six hundred miles north to south – connected Eurasia to America.

At that time, Alaska effectively formed part of Asia rather than North America, being separated by impenetrable glacier fields from what is now Canada and points south. Much like an air lock, the region has "opened" in different directions at different times; migrants reaching it from the west, oblivious to the fact that they were leaving Asia, would at first have found their way blocked to the east. Several generations might have passed, and the connection back towards Asia been severed, before an eastward passage appeared. When thawing ice did clear a route into North America, it was not along the Pacific coast but via a corridor that led east of the Rockies and out onto the Great Plains.

This migration was almost certainly spurred not by the urge to explore what must have seemed unpromising territory, but the pursuit of large mammal species, and especially mammoth, that had already been harried to extinction throughout almost all of Eurasia. A huge bonanza awaited the hunters when they finally encountered America's own indigenous "megafauna," such as mammoths, mastodons, giant ground sloths and enormous long-horned bison, all of which had evolved without fear of, or protection against, human predation.

Within a thousand years, both North and South America were filled with a total of ten million people. Although that sounds like a phenomenal rate of spread, only a small group of original human settlers need have been responsible. To achieve that impact, it would have taken a band of just one hundred individuals to enter the continent, and then advance a mere eight miles per year, with a population growth of 1.1 percent each year. The mass extinction of the American megafauna coincided so exactly with the advent of humans that humans must surely have been responsible, eliminating the giant beasts in each locality in one fell swoop, before pressing on in search of the next kill.

Quite apart from its ecological impact, the consequences of the elimination of large land mammals were legion. It precluded future American civilizations from domesticating any of the major animal species that were crucial to Old World economies. Without cattle, horses, sheep, or goats, or significant equivalents, they lacked the resources used elsewhere to supply food and clothing to large settlements, provide draft power to haul ploughs or wheeled vehicles, or increase mobility and the potential for conquest. What's more, most of the human diseases later introduced from the rest of the world evolved in association with domesticated animals; the first Americans developed neither immunity to such diseases, nor any indigenous diseases of their own that might have attacked the invaders.

At least three distinct waves of migrants arrived via Alaska, each of whom went on to settle in, and adapt to, a more marginal environment than its predecessors. The second, five thousand years on, were the “Nadene” or Athapascans – the ancestors of the Haida of the Northwest, and also the Navajo and Apache of the Southwest – while the third, another two thousand years later, found their niche in the frozen Arctic north and became the Aleuts and the Inuits.

Within the modern United States, the earliest known settlement site, dating back 12,000 years, has been uncovered at Meadowcroft in southwest Pennsylvania. Five hundred years later, the Southwest was dominated by what archeologists call the Clovis culture, whose distinctive arrowheads were first identified at Clovis, New Mexico. Subsequent subgroups ranged from the Algonquin farmers of what’s now New England to peoples such as the Chumash and Macah, who lived by catching fish, otters, and even whales along the coasts of the Pacific Northwest.

Nowhere did a civilization emerge that could rival the wealth and sophistication of the great cities of ancient Mexico, such as Teotihuacan or Tenochtitlan. However, the influence of these far-off cultures did filter north; the cultivation of crops such as beans, squash, and maize made the development of large communities possible, and northern religious cults, including those that performed human sacrifice, are thought to owe much to Central American beliefs. The so-called Moundbuilders of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys developed sites such as the Great Serpent Mound in modern Ohio and Poverty Point in Louisiana. The most prominent of these early societies, now known as the Hopewell culture, flourished between around 1 and 400 AD. Later on, Cahokia, just outside present-day St Louis, became the largest pre-Columbian city in North America, centered on a huge mound topped by some form of temple, and reaching its peak between 1050 and 1250 AD.

In the deserts of the Southwest, the Hohokam settlement of Snaketown, near what’s now Phoenix in Arizona, set about grappling with the same problems of water management that plague the region today. Nearby, the Ancestral Puebloan “Basketmakers” developed pottery around 200 AD, and began to gather into the walled villages later known as pueblos, possibly for protection against the threat of Athapaskan invaders, such as the Apache, who were arriving from the north. Ancestral Puebloan “cities,” such as Pueblo Bonito in New Mexico’s Chaco Canyon – a center for the turquoise trade with the mighty Aztec – and the “Cliff Palace” at Mesa Verde in Colorado, are the most impressive monuments to survive from ancient North America. Although the Ancestral Puebloans are no longer identifiable as a group after the twelfth century – they probably dispersed after a devastating drought – many of the settlements created by their immediate descendants have remained in use ever since. Through centuries of migration, war, and changes of government, the desert farmers of the Hopi Mesas in Arizona (see p.983), and the pueblos of Taos and Ácoma in New Mexico, have never been dispossessed of their homes.

Estimates of the total indigenous population held by the Americas before the arrival of the Europeans vary widely. Although serious suggestions for North America range between two and twelve million, an acceptable median figure would be around fifty million people in the Americas as a whole, with five million of those in North America, speaking around four hundred different languages.

European contacts

The greatest seafarers of early medieval Europe, the Vikings, established a colony in Greenland around 982 AD. Under the energetic leadership of Eirik the Red, this became a base for voyages along the mysterious coastline to the west. Leif Eiriksson – also known as Leif the Lucky – spent the winter of 1001–02 at a site that has been identified with L'Anse aux Meadows in northern Newfoundland. Climatic conditions may well have been much better than they are today, though it remains unclear what were the “grapes” that led him to call it Vinland. Subsequent expeditions returned over the next dozen years, and may have ventured as far south as Maine. However, repeated clashes with the people the Vikings knew as Skraelings or “wretches” – probably Inuit, also newcomers to the area around this time – led them to abandon plans for permanent settlement.

A further five centuries passed before the crucial moment of contact with the rest of the world came on October 12, 1492, when Christopher Columbus, sailing on behalf of the Spanish, reached San Salvador in the Bahamas. A mere four years later the English navigator John Cabot officially “discovered” Newfoundland, and soon British fishermen in particular were setting up makeshift encampments in what became known as New England, to spend the winter curing their catch.

Over the next few years various expeditions mapped the eastern seaboard. In 1524, for example, the Italian Giovanni Verrazano sailed past Maine, which he characterized as the “Land of Bad People” thanks to the inhospitable and contemptuous behavior of its natives, and reached the mouth of the Hudson River. The great hope initially was to find a sea route in the Northeast that would lead to China – the fabled Northwest Passage. To the French Jacques Cartier, the St Lawrence Seaway seemed a distinct possibility, and successive expeditions explored and attempted (unsuccessfully) to settle the northern areas of the Great Lakes region from the 1530s onwards. Intrepid trappers and traders began to venture ever further west.

To the south, the Spaniards had started to nose their way up from the Caribbean in 1513, when Ponce de Leon's expedition in search of the Fountain of Youth landed at what is now Palm Beach, and named the region of Florida. Spanish attentions for the next few years focused on the lucrative conquest of Mexico, but in 1528 they returned under Panfilo de Narvaez, whose voyage ended in shipwreck somewhere in the Gulf. One of his junior officers, Cabeza de Vaca, managed to survive, and together with three shipmates spent the next six years on an extraordinary odyssey across Texas into the Southwest. Sometimes held as slaves, sometimes revered as seers, they finally managed to get back to Mexico in 1534, bringing tales of golden cities deep in the desert, known as the Seven Cities of Cibola.

One of Cabeza de Vaca's companions was a black African slave called Estevanico the Moor, a giant of a man who had amazed the native peoples they encountered. Rather than return to a life of slavery, he volunteered to map the route for a new expedition; racing alone into the interior, with two colossal greyhounds at his side, he was killed in Zuni Pueblo in 1539. The following year, Francisco Vázquez de Coronado's full party managed to prove to everyone's intense dissatisfaction that the Seven Cities of Cibola did not exist. They reached as far as the Grand Canyon, encountering the Hopi and other pueblo peoples along the way. Hernán Cortés, the conqueror of the Aztec, had meanwhile traced the outline of the peninsula of Baja California, and in 1542 Juan Cabrillo sailed right up the coast of California, failing to spot San Francisco Bay in the usual mists.

Although no treasures were found in North America to match the vast riches plundered from the Aztec and Inca empires, a steady stream of less spectacular discoveries – whether new foodstuffs such as potatoes, or access to the cod fisheries of the northern Atlantic – began to boost economies throughout Europe. It was the Spanish who established the first permanent settlement in the present United States, when they founded St Augustine on the coast of Florida in 1565 – permanent, at least, until it was burned to the ground by Sir Francis Drake in 1586. In 1598 the Spanish also succeeded in subjugating the pueblo peoples, and founded the colony of New Mexico along the Rio Grande. This was more of a missionary than a military enterprise, and its survival was always precarious due to the vast tracts of empty desert that separated the colony from the rest of Mexico. Nonetheless, the construction of a new capital, Santa Fe, began in 1609 (see p.926).

The growth of the colonies

The great rivalry between the English and the Spanish in the late sixteenth century extended right around the world. Freebooting English adventurers-cum-pirates contested Spanish hegemony along both coasts of North America. Sir Francis Drake staked a claim to California in 1579, five years before Sir Walter Raleigh claimed Virginia in the east, in the name of his Virgin Queen, Elizabeth I. The party of colonists he sent out in 1585 established the short-lived settlement of Roanoke, now remembered as the mysterious “Lost Colony” (see p.494).

The Native Americans encountered by the earliest settlers were seldom hostile at the outset. To some extent the European newcomers were obliged to make friends with the locals; most had crossed the Atlantic to find religious freedom or to make their fortunes, and lacked the experience or even the inclination to make a success of the mundane business of subsistence farming. Virginia’s first enduring colony, Jamestown, was founded by Captain John Smith on May 24, 1607. He bemoaned “though there be Fish in the Sea, and Foules in the ayre, and Beasts in the woods, their bounds are so large, they are so wilde, and we so weake and ignorant, we cannot much trouble them”; not surprisingly, six out of every seven colonists died within a year of their arrival in the New World.

Gradually, however, the settlers learned the techniques necessary to cultivate the strange crops that grew in this unfamiliar terrain. As far as the English government was concerned, the colonies were strictly commercial ventures, intended to produce crops that could not be grown at home, and it was inconceivable to them that the colonists might have goals of their own. After early failures with sugar and rice, Virginia finally found its feet with its first tobacco harvest in 1615 (the man responsible, John Rolfe, is now better known as the husband of Pocahontas). A successful tobacco plantation requires two things in abundance: land, which intensified the pressure to dispossess the Indians, and labor. No self-respecting Englishman came to America to work for others; when the first slave ship called in at Jamestown in 1619, the captain found an eager market for his cargo of twenty African slaves. By that time there were already a million slaves in South America.

The 102 Puritans known to history as the “Pilgrim Fathers” were deposited on Cape Cod by the Mayflower in late 1620, and soon moved on to set up their own colony at Plymouth (see p.221). Fifty of them died during that winter, and the whole party might well have perished but for their fortuitous encounter with the extraordinary Squanto. This Native American had twice been kidnapped and taken to Europe and succeeded in making his way home; during his wanderings he had spent four years working as a merchant in the City of London, and had also lived in Spain. Having recently come home to find his entire tribe exterminated by smallpox, he decided to throw in his lot with the English. With his guidance, they finally managed to reap their first harvest, celebrated with the mighty feast of Thanksgiving that is still commemorated today.

Of greater significance to the history of New England was the founding in 1630 of a new colony, further up the coast at Naumkeag (which became Salem), by the Massachusetts Bay Company. Its governor, John Winthrop, soon moved to establish a new capital on the Shawmut peninsula – the city of Boston, complete with its own university of Harvard. His vision of a Utopian “City on a Hill” did not extend to sharing Paradise with the Indians; he argued that they had not “subdued” the land, and it was therefore a “vacuum” for the Puritans to use as they saw fit. While their faith helped individual colonists to endure the early hardships, the colony as a whole failed to maintain a strong religious identity (the Salem witch trials of 1692 did much to discredit the notion that the New World had any moral superiority to the Old), and breakaway groups soon left to create the rival settlements of Providence and Connecticut.

Between 1620 and 1642, sixty thousand migrants – which amounted to 1.5 percent of the population – left England for America. Those who came in pursuit of economic opportunities tended to join the longer-established colonies, where in effect they diluted the religious zeal of the Puritans. Groups hoping to find spiritual freedom were more inclined to start afresh; thus Maryland was created as a haven for Catholics in 1632, and fifty years later Pennsylvania was founded by the Quakers.

The English were not alone, however. After Sir Henry Hudson rediscovered Manhattan in 1609, it was “bought” by the Dutch in 1624 – though the Indians who took their money were passing nomads with no claim to it either. The Dutch colony of New Amsterdam, founded in 1625, lasted less than forty years before it was captured by the English and renamed New York; by that time, there was a strong Dutch presence on the lower reaches of the Hudson River.

From their foothold in the Great Lakes region, meanwhile, the French sent the explorers Joliet and Marquette to map the course of the Mississippi in 1673. They turned back once they had established that the river did indeed flow into the Gulf of Mexico, but their trip cleared the way for the foundation of the huge and ill-defined colony of Louisiana in 1699. The city of New Orleans, at the mouth of the Mississippi, was created in 1718.

While the Spanish remained firmly ensconced in Florida, things were not going so smoothly in the Southwest. In the bloody Pueblo Revolt of 1680, the pueblo peoples managed to drive the Spanish out of New Mexico altogether, only to have them return in force a dozen years later. Thereafter, a curious synthesis of traditional and Hispanic religion and culture began to evolve, and, but for hostile raids from the north, the Spanish presence was not seriously challenged.

With the arrival of the foreigners, things were also changing in the unknown hinterland. The frontier in the east was pushing steadily forward, as colonists seized Indian land, with or without the excuse of an “uprising” or “rebellion” to provoke them into bloodshed. The major killer of the indigenous peoples, however, was smallpox, which worked its way deep into the interior of the continent long before the Europeans. (Scientists speculate that the Native Americans may have had no equivalent “new” diseases to inflict on the newcomers because of the long period their ancestors had spent crossing the Arctic in subzero temperatures.) As populations were decimated, great migrations took place. In addition, around this time the horse arrived on the Great Plains. The original inhabitants of the region were sedentary farmers, who also hunted buffalo by driving them over rocky bluffs. The bow and arrow was discovered around the fifth century, but the acquisition of horses (probably captured from the Spanish, and known at first as “mystery dogs”) made possible the emergence of an entirely new, nomadic lifestyle. Groups such as the Cheyenne and the Apache swept their rivals aside to dominate vast territories, and eagerly seized the potential offered by firearms when they were introduced in due course. This created a very dynamic, but fundamentally unstable culture, as they became dependent on trade with Europeans for the necessities of life.

The American Revolution

The American colonies prospered during the eighteenth century, with the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia in particular becoming home to a wealthy, well educated, and highly articulate middle class. Frustration began to mount at the inequities of the colonies’ relationship with Britain. While they were allowed to trade among themselves, the Americans could otherwise only sell their produce to the British, and all transatlantic commerce had to be undertaken in British ships.

Although full-scale independence was not an explicit goal until late in the century, the main factor that made it possible was the economic impact of the pan-European conflict known as the Seven Years’ War. Officially, the war in Europe lasted from 1756 to 1763, but fighting among the English, French, and Spanish in North America broke out a little earlier. Beginning in 1755 with the mass expulsion of French settlers from Acadia in Nova Scotia (triggering their epic migration to Louisiana, where as the Cajuns they remain to this day), the British went on to conquer all of Canada. In forcing the surrender of Québec in 1759, General Wolfe brought the war to a close; the French ceded Louisiana to the Spanish rather than let it fall to the British, while Florida passed into British control for a year before reverting to the Spanish. All the European monarchs were left hamstrung by debts, and it became apparent to the British that colonialism in America was not as profitable a business as in those parts of the world where the native populations could be coerced into working for their overseas masters.

There was one other major player on the scene – the Iroquois Confederacy. Evidence of Iroquois culture, characterized by military expansionism and even human sacrifice, has been found in the Great Lakes region dating from around 1000 AD onwards. Forever in competition with the Algonquin and the Huron, the southern Iroquois had by the eighteenth century resolved themselves into a League of Five Nations – the Seneca, Cayuga, Onondaga, Oneida, and Mohawk, all in what’s now upstate New York. Wooed by both French and British, the Iroquois for most of the century charted an independent course between the two. During negotiations with the colonists in 1744, an Onondaga chief, unimpressed by the squabbling representatives of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Maryland, had recommended “by your observing the same methods our wise forefathers have taken, you will acquire fresh strength and power.” Benjamin Franklin, who was present, wrote in 1751 that “It would be a very strange thing if . . . ignorant savages should be capable of forming a scheme for such a union . . . that has subsisted ages and appears indissoluble; and yet that a like union should be impracticable for ten or a dozen English colonies.”

Shortly after the Seven Years’ War, an unsuccessful insurrection by the Ottawa tribe in 1763, led by their chief Pontiac, led the cash-strapped British to conclude that, while America needed its own standing army, it was not unreasonable to expect the colonists to pay for it.

△ Statue of George Washington

In 1765, the British introduced the Stamp Act, which required duty on all legal transactions and printed matter in the colonies to be paid to the British Crown. Firm in the belief that there should be “no taxation without representation,” delegates from nine of the colonies met in the Stamp Act Congress in October 1765. By that time, however, the British prime minister responsible for the Act had already been dismissed by King George III. Only briefly, in Georgia, were the offending stamps ever distributed, and the Act was repealed in 1766.

However, in 1767, Chancellor Townshend made political capital at home by proclaiming “I dare tax America,” as he introduced a program of legislation that included the broadly similar Revenue Act. That led the merchants of Massachusetts, inspired by Samuel Adams, to vote to boycott English goods; they were subsequently joined by all the other colonies except New Hampshire. Townshend’s Acts were repealed in turn by a new prime minister, Lord North, on March 5, 1770. By chance, on that same day a stone-throwing mob surrounded the Customs House in Boston; shots from the guards killed five people in what became known as the Boston Massacre. Even so, most of the colonies resumed trading with Britain, and the crisis was postponed for a few more years.

In May 1773, Lord North’s Tea Act relieved the debt-ridden East India Company of the need to pay duties on exports to America, while still requiring the Americans to pay duty on tea. Massachusetts called for the colonies to unite in action, and its citizens took the lead on December 16 in the Boston Tea Party, when three tea ships were boarded and 342 chests thrown into the sea. As John Adams put it, “to let it be landed would be giving up the principle of taxation by Parliamentary authority.”

The infuriated British Parliament thereupon began to pass a body of legislation collectively known as both the “Coercive” and the “Intolerable” Acts, which included closing the port of Boston and disbanding the government of Massachusetts. Thomas Jefferson argued that the acts amounted to “a deliberate and systematical plan of reducing us to slavery.” To discuss a response, the first Continental Congress was held in Philadelphia on May 5, 1774, and attended by representatives of all the colonies except Georgia.

War finally broke out on April 18, 1775, when General Gage, the newly imposed governor of Massachusetts, dispatched four hundred British soldiers to destroy the arms depot at Concord, in order to prevent weapons from falling into rebel hands. Silversmith Paul Revere was dispatched by the citizens of Boston on his legendary ride to warn the rebels, and the British were confronted en route at Lexington by 77 American “Minutemen”. The resulting skirmish led to the “shot heard ‘round the world.”

Congress set about forming an army at Boston, and decided for the sake of unity to appoint a Southern commander, George Washington. One by one, as the war raged, the colonies set up their own governments and declared themselves to be states, and the politicians set about defining the society they wished to create. The writings of pamphleteer Thomas Paine – especially Common Sense – were, together with the Confederacy of the Iroquois, a great influence on the Declaration of Independence. Drafted by Thomas Jefferson, this was adopted by the Continental Congress in Philadelphia on July 4, 1776. The anti-slavery clauses originally included by Jefferson – himself a slave-owner – were omitted to spare the feelings of the Southern states, though the section that denounced the King’s dealings with “merciless Indian Savages” was left in.

At first, the Revolutionary War went well for the British. General Howe crossed the Atlantic with around twenty thousand men, took New York and New Jersey, and ensconced himself in Philadelphia for the winter of 1777–78. Washington’s army was encamped not far away at Valley Forge, freezing cold and all but starving

The Constitution

As signed in 1787 and ratified in 1788, the Constitution stipulated the following form of government:

All legislative powers were granted to the Congress of the United States. The lower of its two distinct houses, the House of Representatives, was to be elected every two years, with its members in proportion to the number of each state’s “free Persons” plus “three fifths of all other persons” (meaning slaves). The upper house, the Senate, would hold two Senators from each state, chosen by state legislatures rather than by direct elections. Each Senator was to serve for six years, with a third of them to be elected every two years.

Executive power was vested in the President, who was also Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He would be chosen every four years, by as many “Electors” from each individual state as it had Senators and Representatives. Each state could decide how to appoint those Electors; almost all chose to have direct popular elections. Nonetheless, the distinction has remained ever since between the number of “popular votes,” across the whole country, received by a presidential candidate, and the number of state-by-state “electoral votes,” which determines the actual result. Originally, whoever came second in the voting automatically became Vice President.

The President could veto acts of Congress, but that veto could be overruled by a two-thirds vote in both houses. The House of Representatives could impeach the President for treason, bribery, or “other high crimes and misdemeanors,” in which instance the Senate could remove him from office with a two-thirds majority.

Judicial power was invested in a Supreme Court, and as many “inferior Courts” as Congress should decide.

The Constitution has so far been altered by 27 Amendments. Those that have introduced significant governmental changes include 14 and 15, which extended the vote to black males in 1868 and 1870; 17, which made senators subject to election by direct popular vote, in 1913; 18, introducing women’s suffrage, in 1920; 22, restricting the president to two terms, in 1951; 24, which stopped states using poll taxes to disenfranchise black voters, in 1964; and 26, which reduced the minimum voting age to 18, in 1971.

to death. It soon became clear, however, that the longer the Americans could avoid losing an all-out battle, the more likely it was that the British would over-extend their lines as they advanced through the vast and unfamiliar continent. Thus, General Burgoyne's expedition, which set out from Canada to march on New England, was so harried by rebel guerrillas that he found himself obliged to surrender at Saratoga in October 1777. As the logistical difficulty of maintaining the British war effort became ever more apparent, other European powers took delight in coming to the aid of the Americans. Benjamin Franklin led a wildly successful delegation to France to request support, and soon the nascent American fleet was being assisted in its bid to cut British naval communications by both the French and the Spanish. The end came when Cornwallis, who had replaced Howe, was instructed to dig in at Yorktown and wait for the Royal Navy to come to his aid, only for the French to seal off Chesapeake Bay and prevent reinforcement. Cornwallis surrendered to Washington on October 17, 1781, just fifteen miles from the site of the first English settlement at Jamestown.

The ensuing Treaty of Paris granted the Americans their independence on generous terms – the British completely abandoned their Native American allies, including the Iroquois, to the vengeance of the victors – and Washington entered New York as the British left in November 1783. The Spanish were confirmed in their possession of Florida.

The victorious US Congress met for the first time in 1789, and the tradition of awarding political power to the nation's most successful generals was instigated by the election of George Washington as the first president. He was further honored when his name was given to the new capital city of Washington DC, deliberately sited between the North and the South.

The nineteenth century

In its first century, the territories and population of the new United States of America expanded at a phenomenal rate. The white population of North America in 1800 stood at around five million, and there were another one million African slaves (of whom thirty thousand were in the North). Of that total, 86 percent lived within fifty miles of the Atlantic, but no US city could rival Mexico City, whose population approached 100,000 inhabitants. (Both New York and Philadelphia reached that figure within twenty years, however, and New York had passed a million fifty years later.)

It had suited the British to discourage settlers from venturing west of the Appalachians, where they would be far beyond the reach of British power and therefore inclined to carry on independent existences. For George Washington, however, any agreement to follow such a policy had been a "temporary expedient to quieten the minds of the Indians." Adventurers such as Daniel Boone started to cross the mountains into Tennessee and Kentucky during the 1770s. Soon makeshift rafts, made from the planks that would later be assembled to make log cabins, were careering west along the Ohio River (the only westward-flowing river on the continent).

In 1801, the Spanish handed Louisiana back to the French, on the express undertaking that the French would keep it for ever. However, Napoleon swiftly realized that any attempt to hang on to his American possessions would involve spreading his armies too thinly. He chose instead to make the best of things by selling them to the United States for $15 million, in the Louisiana Purchase of 1803. The new territories extended far beyond the boundaries of present-day Louisiana (see map opposite), and for President Thomas Jefferson it was a matter of urgency to send the explorers Lewis and Clark to map them out. With the help of Sacagawea, their female Shoshone guide, they followed the Missouri and Columbia rivers all the way to the Pacific; in their wake, trappers and “mountain men” came to hunt in the wilderness of the Rockies. The Russians had already reached the Pacific Northwest by this time and established a network of fortified outposts to trade in the pelts of beaver and otter.

British attempts to blockade the Atlantic, primarily intended as a move against Napoleon, gave the new nation its first chance to flex its military muscles. Although British raiders succeeded in capturing Washington, DC, and burned the White House to the ground, the War of 1812 most significantly provided the US with a cover for aggression against the Native American allies of the British. Thus Tecumseh of the Shawnee was defeated near Detroit, and Andrew Jackson moved against the Creek of the southern Mississippi. Jackson’s campaign against the Seminole in Florida enabled the US to gain possession of the state from the Spanish; he was rewarded first with the governorship of the new state, and later by his election to the presidency. During his period in office, in the 1830s, Jackson went even further, and set about clearing all states east of the Mississippi of their native populations. The barren region that later became Oklahoma was designated as “Indian Territory,” home to the “Five Civilized Tribes.” The Creek and the Seminole, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw of Mississippi were eventually joined by the Cherokee of the lower Appalachians there, after four appalling months on the forced march known as the “Trail of Tears.”

For the citizens of the young republic, it took only a small step from realizing that their country might be capable of spreading across the whole continent to supposing that it had a quasi-religious duty – a “Manifest Destiny” – to do so. At its most basic, that doctrine amounted to little more than a belief that might must be right, but the idea that they were fulfilling the will of God inspired countless pioneers to set off across the plains in search of a new life.

Mexico had by now gained its independence from Spain. The Spanish territories of the Southwest had never attracted enough migrants to turn into full-fledged colonies, and the American settlers who arrived in ever-increasing numbers began to dominate their Hispanic counterparts. The Anglos of Texas rebelled in 1833, under the leadership of General Sam Houston. Shortly after the legendary setback at the Alamo (see p.731), in 1836, they defeated the Mexican army of Santa Anna, and Texas became an independent republic in its own right.

The ensuing Mexican War was a bare-faced exercise in American aggression, in which most of the future leading figures of the Civil War received their first experience fighting on the same side. The conflict resulted in the acquisition not only of Texas, but also of Arizona, Utah, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, and finally California, in 1848. A token US payment of $15 million to the Mexican government was designed to match the Louisiana Purchase. Controversy over whether slavery would be legal in the new states was rendered academic when it turned out that, on virtually the same day the war ended, gold had been discovered in the Sierra Nevada of California. The resultant Gold Rush created California’s first significant city, San Francisco, and brought a massive influx of free white settlers to a land that was in any case utterly unsuitable for a plantation-based economy.

Proponents of Manifest Destiny seem never to have given much thought to the Pacific Northwest, which remained nominally under the control of British Canada. However, once the Oregon Trail started to operate in 1841 (see p.1218), American settlers there swiftly outnumbered the British. In 1846, a surprisingly amicable treaty fixed the border along the 49th parallel, just as it already did across eastern Canada, and left the whole of Vancouver Island to the British.

The Civil War

From the moment of its inception, the unity of the United States had been based on shaky foundations. Great care had gone into devising a Constitution that balanced the need for a strong federal government with the aspirations for autonomy of its component states. That was achieved by giving Congress two separate chambers – the House of Representatives, in which the number of representatives from each state depended upon its population, and the Senate, in which each state, regardless of size, had two members. Thus, although in theory the Constitution remained silent on the issue of slavery, it allayed the fears of the less populated Southern states (where although the slaves lacked the vote, each was counted as three-fifths of a person when it came to determining the number of representatives elected per state) that the voters of the North might destroy their economy by forcing them to abandon their “peculiar institution.” However, it gradually became apparent that the system only worked so long as there were equal numbers of “Free” and slave-owning states. The only practicable way to keep the balance was to ensure that each time a new state was admitted to the Union, a matching state taking the opposite stance on slavery was also admitted. Thus the admission of every new state became subject to endless intrigue. The 1820 Missouri Compromise, under which Missouri joined as a slave-owning state and Maine as a Free one, was straightforward in comparison to the prevarication and chest-beating that surrounded the admission of Texas, while the Mexican War was widely seen in the North as a naked land grab for new slave states.

Abolitionist sentiment in the North was not all that great before the middle of the nineteenth century. At best, after the importation of slaves from Africa ended in 1808, Northerners had vague hopes that slavery was an anachronism that might simply wither away. As it turned out, the profitability of the Southern plantations was dramatically boosted by the development of the cotton gin, and the increased demand for manufactured cotton goods triggered by the Industrial Revolution. What ultimately changed the situation was the rapid growth of the nation as a whole, making it ever more difficult to maintain a political balance between North and South.

Matters came to a head in 1854, when the Kansas–Nebraska Act sparked guerrilla raids and mini-wars between rival settlers by allowing both prospective states self-determination on the issue. That same year, the Republican Party was founded, on the platform of resisting the further expansion of slavery. Escaped former slaves such as Frederick Douglass were by now inspiring Northern audiences to moral outrage, and Harriet Beecher Stowe’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin found unprecedented readership.

In October 1859, John Brown – a white-bearded, wild-eyed veteran of some of Kansas’s bloodiest infighting – led a dramatic raid on the US Army at Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, intending to secure arms for a slave insurrection (see p.453). Swiftly captured by forces under the command of Robert E. Lee, he was hanged within a few weeks, proclaiming that “I am now quite certain that the crimes of this guilty land will never be purged away but with blood.”

The Republican candidate for the presidency in 1860 was the little-known Abraham Lincoln from Kentucky; he won no Southern states, but with the Democrats split into Northern and Southern factions he was elected with 39 percent of the popular vote. Within weeks, on December 20, South Carolina became the first state to secede from the Union; the Confederacy was declared on February 4, 1861, when it was joined by Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas. Its first (and only) president was Jefferson Davis, also from Kentucky; at their inauguration, his new vice president remarked that their government was “the first in the history of the world based upon the great physical and moral truth that the negro is not equal to the white man.” Lincoln was inaugurated in turn in March 1861, proclaiming that “I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so.” He was completely inflexible, however, on one paramount issue: the survival of the Union.

The Civil War began just a few weeks later. The first shots were fired on April 12, when a much-postponed federal attempt to resupply Fort Sumter, in the harbor at Charleston, South Carolina, was greeted by a Confederate bombardment that forced its surrender. Lincoln’s immediate call to raise an army against the South was greeted by the further secession of Virginia, Arkansas, Tennessee, and North Carolina. Within a year, both armies had amassed 600,000 men; Robert E. Lee had been offered command of both and opted for the Confederacy, while George McLellan became the first leader of the Union forces. Although the rival capitals of Washington, DC, and Richmond, Virginia, were a mere one hundred miles apart, over the next four years operations of war reached almost everywhere south of Washington and east of the Mississippi.

Tracing the ebb and flow of the military campaigns – from the Confederate victories of the early years, via Grant’s successful siege of Vicksburg in 1863 and Sherman’s devastating March to the Sea in 1864, to Lee’s eventual surrender at Appomattox in April 1865 – it’s easy to lose sight of the fact that it was not so much generalship as sheer economic (and man) power that won the war. The war pitted the Union of 23 Northern states, holding over 22 million people, against the Confederacy of 11 Southern states, with 9 million people. As for potential combatants, the North initially drew upon 3.5 million white males aged between 18 and 45 – and later recruited blacks as well – whereas the South had more like one million. In the end, around 2.1 million men fought for the Union, and 900,000 for the Confederacy. Of the 620,000 soldiers who died during the conflict, a disproportionate 258,000 came from the South – representing one quarter of its white men of military age. Meanwhile, not only was the North able to continue trading with the rest of the world as it maintained its industrial and agricultural output, but it also stifled the Confederacy with a devastating naval blockade. The Southern war effort was primarily financed by printing $1.5 billion of paper currency, which with neither reserves nor income to support it was so eroded by inflation that it became worthless.

Even so, the Confederacy came much closer to victory than is usually appreciated. The repeated out-maneuvering of federal forces by General Robert E. Lee, and his incursions into Union territory, meant that in each of three successive years, from 1862 to 1864, there was a genuine possibility that Northern morale would collapse, allowing opponents of the war to be elected to power and agree to peace. After all, the Revolutionary War had shown how such a war could be won: for the Union to triumph, it had to invade and occupy the South, and destroy its armies, but for the South to win it only had to survive until the North wearied of the struggle.

The dashing tactics of Confederate generals Lee and Jackson, forever counter-attacking and carrying the fight to the enemy, may have been in the finest romantic traditions of the Old South, but they arguably contributed to the Southern defeat. The grim, relentless total-war campaigning of Grant and Sherman eventually ground the South down. There’s a particular irony in the fact that had the Confederacy sued for peace before Lee gave it fresh hope, a negotiated settlement might not have included the abolition of slavery. In the event, as the war went on, with Southern slaves flocking to the Union flag and black soldiers fighting on the front line, emancipation did indeed become inevitable. Lincoln took the political decision to match his moral conviction by issuing his Emancipation Proclamation in 1862, though the Thirteenth Amendment outlawing slavery only took effect in 1865.

Lincoln himself was assassinated within a few days of the end of the war, a mark of the deep bitterness that would almost certainly have rendered successful Reconstruction impossible even if he had lived. There was a brief period, after black men were granted the vote in 1870, when Southern states elected black political representatives, but without a sustained effort to enable former slaves to acquire land, racial relations in the South swiftly deteriorated. Thanks to white supremacist organizations such as the Ku Klux Klan, nominally clandestine but brazenly public, Southern blacks were soon effectively disenfranchised once more. Anyone working to transform the South came under attack either as a carpetbagger (a Northern opportunist who headed South for personal profit) or a treacherous scalawag (a Southern collaborator).

The aftermath of the Civil War can almost be said to have lasted for a hundred years. While the South condemned itself to a century as a backwater, the rest of the re-United States embarked on a period of expansionism and prosperity.

The Indian Wars

With the completion of the transcontinental railroad in 1867, Manifest Destiny became an undeniable reality. Among the first to head west were the troops of the federal army, with Union and Confederate veterans marching under the same flag to do battle with the remaining Native Americans. Treaty after treaty was signed, only to be broken as it became expedient to do so (usually upon the discovery of gold or precious metals). When the whites overreached themselves, or when driven to desperation, the Indians were capable of fighting back. The defeat of General George Custer at Little Bighorn in 1876, by Sitting Bull and his Sioux and Cheyenne warriors (see p.894), provoked the full wrath of the government. Within a few years, leaders such as Crazy Horse of the Oglala Sioux and Geronimo of the Apache had been forced to surrender, and their people were confined to reservations. One final act of resistance came in the form of the visionary, messianic cult of the Ghost Dance, whose practitioners hoped that by correct ritual observance they could win back their lost way of life, in a land miraculously free of white intruders. Such aspirations were regarded as hostile, and military harassment of the movement culminated in the massacre at Wounded Knee in South Dakota in 1890.

A major tactic in the campaign against the Plains Indians was to starve them into submission, by eliminating the vast herds of bison that were their primary source of food. As General Philip Sheridan put it, "For the sake of a lasting peace . . . kill, skin and sell until the buffalo are exterminated. Then your prairies can be covered by the speckled cow and the festive cowboy." More significant than the activities of the much-mythologized cowboys, however, was the back-breaking toil of the miners up in the mountains, and the homesteading families out on the plains.

Industry and immigration

The late nineteenth century was an era of massive immigration to North America from the rest of the world, with influxes from Europe to the East Coast paralleled by those from Asia to the West. As in Colonial times, national groups tended to form enclaves in specific areas – examples range from the Scandinavian farmers of Minnesota and the northern Plains, to the Basque shepherds of Idaho, and the Cornish miners of Colorado. In the Southwest, where individual hard work counted for less than shared communal effort, the Mormons of Utah had fled persecution eastward across the United States to become the first white settlers to eke a living from the unforgiving desert.

The fastest growth of all was in the nation's greatest cities, especially New York, Chicago, and Boston. Their industrial and commercial strength enabled them to attract and absorb migrants not only from throughout Europe but also from the Old South – particularly ex-slaves, who could now at least vote with their feet.

Now that it stretched “from sea to shining sea,” the territorial boundaries of the US had reached almost their current form. In 1867, however, Secretary of State William Seward agreed to buy Alaska from the crisis-torn Russian government for $7.2 million. The purchase was at first derided as “Seward’s Folly,” but it was not long before the familiar Midas touch of the Americans was revealed by the discovery of gold there as well.

The various US presidents of the day, from the victorious General Grant (a man palpably out of his depth) onwards, now seem anonymous figures compared to the industrialists and financiers who manipulated the national economy. These “robber barons” included such men as John D. Rockefeller, who controlled seventy percent of the world’s oil almost before anyone else had realized it was worth controlling; Andrew Carnegie, who made his fortune introducing the Bessemer process of steel manufacture; and J.P. Morgan, who went for the most basic commodity of all – money. Their success was predicated on the willingness of the government to cooperate in resisting the development of a strong labor movement. A succession of widely publicized strikes – such as those on the railroads in 1877, in the mines of Tennessee in 1891, and in the steel mills of Pittsburgh in 1892 – were forcibly crushed.

The nineteenth century had also seen the development of a distinctive American voice in literature, which rendered increasingly superfluous the efforts of passing English visitors – such as Charles Dickens, and the Trollopes, mother and son – to “explain” the United States. From the 1830s onwards, a wide range of writers set out to find new ways to describe their new world, with results as varied as the introspective essays of Henry Thoreau, the morbid visions of Edgar Allan Poe, the all-embracing novels of Herman Melville, and the irrepressible poetry of Walt Whitman, whose endlessly revised Leaves of Grass was an exultant hymn to the young republic. Virtually every leading participant in the Civil War wrote at least one highly readable volume of memoirs, while public figures as disparate as Buffalo Bill Cody and the showman P. T. Barnum also produced lively autobiographies. The boundless national self-confidence found its greatest expression in the vigorous vernacular style of Mark Twain, whose depictions of frontier life, whether in the journalistic Roughing It and Life on the Mississippi, or fictionalized in novels like Huckleberry Finn, gave the rest of the world perhaps its most abiding impression of the American character.

Many Americans saw the official “closure” of the Western frontier, announced by the Census Bureau in 1890, as tantamount to depriving the country of the Manifest Destiny that was its raison d’être, and were prompted to search for new frontiers further afield. Such imperialist ventures reached a crescendo in 1898, with the annexation of the Kingdom of Hawaii – which even then-President Cleveland condemned as “wholly without justification . . . not merely wrong but a disgrace” – and the double seizure of Cuba and the Philippines in the Spanish-American War, which catapulted Theodore Roosevelt to the presidency. Though he took the African proverb “speak softly and carry a big stick” as his motto – and was hardly, if truth be told, noted for being soft-spoken – Roosevelt in office did much to heal the divisions within the nation. While new legislation reigned in the worst excesses of the Robber Barons, and of rampant capitalism in general, it alleviated popular discontent without substantially threatening the business community, or empowering the labor movement. A decade into the twentieth century, the United States had advanced to the point that it knew, even if the rest of the world wasn't yet altogether sure, that it was the strongest, wealthiest country on earth.

The twentieth century

It may not have been apparent to everyone at the time, but the first few years of the twentieth century witnessed the emergence of many of the features that came to characterize modern America. In 1903 alone, Wilbur and Orville Wright achieved the first successful powered flight, and Henry Ford established his Ford Motor Company. Ford's enthusiastic adoption of the latest technology in mass production – the assembly line – gave Detroit a head start in the new automobile industry, which swiftly became the most important business in America. Both jazz and blues music came to the attention of a national audience for the first time during that same period, while Hollywood acquired its first movie studio in 1911, and its first major hit in 1915 with D. W. Griffith's unabashed glorification of the Ku Klux Klan in Birth of a Nation.

This was also a time of growing radicalism. Both the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) and the socialist International Workers of the World ("the Wobblies") were founded in the early 1900s, while the campaign for women's suffrage also came to the forefront. Writers such as Upton Sinclair, whose The Jungle exposed conditions in Chicago's stockyards, and Jack London proselytized to the masses; contemporary improvements in the educational system suggest this may well have been the most literate period in US history.

President Wilson managed to keep the US out of the Great War for several years but, when the time came, American intervention was decisive. With the Russian Revolution illustrating the dangers of anarchy, the US also took charge of supervising the peace. However, although Wilson presided over the postwar negotiations that resulted in the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, isolationist sentiment at home kept the US from joining his pet scheme to preserve future world peace, the League of Nations.

Back home, the 18th Amendment to the Constitution, in 1920, forbade the sale and distribution of alcohol, while the 19th finally gave all American women the vote. Quite how Prohibition ever became the law of the land is something of a mystery; certainly, in the buzzing metropolises of the Roaring Twenties, it enjoyed little conspicuous support. There was no noticeable elevation in the moral tone of the country, and Chicago in particular became renowned for the street wars between bootlegging gangsters such as Al Capone and his rivals.

The two Republican presidents who followed Wilson did little more than sit back and watch the Roaring Twenties unfold. At least until his premature death, Warren Harding enjoyed considerable public affection, but he's now remembered as probably the worst of all US presidents, thanks to the cronyism and corruption of his associates. It's hard to say quite whether Calvin Coolidge did anything at all; his laissez-faire attitude extended to working a typical four-hour day, and announcing shortly after his inauguration that "four-fifths of our troubles would disappear if we would sit down and keep still."

The Depression and the New Deal

By the middle of the 1920s, the US was enough of an industrial powerhouse to be responsible for more than half the world's output of manufactured goods. After leading the way into a new era of prosperity, however, it suddenly found itself dragging the rest of the world down into economic collapse. It's hard to say exactly what triggered the Great Depression; the consequences were out of all proportion to any one specific cause. Possible factors include American overinvestment in the floundering economy of postwar Europe, combined with high tariffs on imports that effectively precluded European recovery. Conservative commentators at the time chose to interpret the calamitous Wall Street Crash of October 1929 as a symptom of impending depression rather than a contributory cause, but the quasi-superstitious faith in the stock market that preceded it showed all the characteristics of such classic speculative booms as Britain's eighteenth-century South Sea Bubble. On "Black Tuesday" alone, enough stocks were sold to produce a total loss of ten thousand million dollars – more than twice the total amount of money in circulation in the US. Within the next three years, industrial production was cut by half, the national income dropped by 38 percent, and, above all, unemployment rose from 1.5 million to 13 million.

National self-confidence, however shaky its foundations, has always played a crucial role in US history, and President Hoover was not the man to restore it. Matters only began to improve in 1932, when the patrician figure of Franklin Delano Roosevelt accepted the Democratic nomination for president with the words "I pledge myself to a new deal for America," and went on to win a landslide victory. At the time of his inauguration, early in 1933, the banking system had all but closed down; it took Roosevelt the now-proverbial "Hundred Days" of vigorous legislation to turn around the mood of the country.

Taking advantage of the new medium of radio, he used his "Fireside Chats" to cajole America out of crisis; among his earliest observations was that it was a good time for a beer, and that therefore the experiment of Prohibition was over. The New Deal took many forms and worked through many newly created agencies, but was marked throughout by a massive growth in the power of the federal government, which only now seems to be under threat. Among its accomplishments were the National Recovery Administration, which created two million jobs; the Social Security Act, of which Roosevelt declared "no damn politician can ever scrap my social security program"; the Public Works Administration, which built dams and highways the length and breadth of the country; the Tennessee Valley Authority, which by generating electricity under public ownership for the common good was probably the closest the US has ever come to institutionalized socialism; and measures to legitimize the role of the unions and revitalize the "Dust Bowl" farmers out on the plains.

Roosevelt originally saw himself as a populist who could draw support from every sector of society. By 1936, however, business leaders – and the Supreme Court – were making it clear that as far as they were concerned he had done more than enough already to kick-start the economy. From then on, as he secured an unprecedented four consecutive terms as president, he was firmly cast as the champion of the little man.

After the work-creation programs of the New Deal had put America back on its feet, the deadly pressure to achieve victory in World War II spurred industrial production and know-how to new heights. Once again the US stayed out of the war at first, until it was finally forced in by the high-stakes gamble of the Japanese, who launched a pre-emptive strike on Hawaii's Pearl Harbor in December 1941. In both the Pacific and in Europe, American manpower and economic muscle eventually carried all before it. Roosevelt died early in 1945, after laying the foundations for the postwar carve-up with Stalin and Churchill at Yalta, and thus was spared the fateful decision, made by his successor Harry Truman, to use the newly developed atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The coming of the Cold War

With the war won, Americans were in no mood to revert back to the isolationism of the 1930s. Amid much hopeful rhetoric, Truman enthusiastically participated in the creation of the United Nations, and set up the Marshall Plan to speed the recovery of Europe – a task in which it was far more successful than any of the corresponding attempts made 25 years earlier. However, as Winston Churchill announced in Missouri in 1946, an “Iron Curtain” had descended upon Europe, and Joseph Stalin was transformed from ally to enemy almost overnight.

The ensuing Cold War lasted for more than four decades, at times fought in ferocious combat (albeit often by proxy) in scattered corners of the globe, and during the intervals diverting colossal economic resources towards the stockpiling of ever more destructive arsenals. Some of its ugliest moments came in its earliest years; Truman was still in office in 1950 when war broke out in Korea. A dispute over the arbitrary division of the Korean peninsula into two separate nations, North and South, soon turned into a stand-off between the US and China (with Russia, in theory at any rate, lurking in the shadows). Two years of bloody stalemate ended with little to show for it, except that Truman had by now been replaced by the genial Dwight D. Eisenhower, the latest war hero to turn president.

The Eisenhower years are often seen as an era characterized by bland complacency. Once Senator Joseph McCarthy, the “witch-hunting” anti-Communist scourge of the State Department and Hollywood, had finally discredited himself by attacking the army as well, middle-class America seemed to lapse into a wilful suburban stupor. Great social changes were starting to take shape, however. World War II had introduced vast numbers of women and members of ethnic minorities to the rewards of factory work, and it had shown many Americans from less prosperous regions the lifestyle that was attainable in other parts of their own country. The development of a national highway system, and a huge increase in automobile ownership, encouraged people to pursue the American Dream wherever they chose. Combined with increasing mechanization on the cotton plantations of the South, this led to another mass exodus of blacks from the rural South to the cities of the North, and to a lesser extent the West. The cities of California entered a period of rapid growth, with the aeronautical industries of Los Angeles in particular attracting thousands of prospective workers.

It was also during the 1950s that television reached every home in the country. Together with the LP record, it created an entertainment industry that seemed designed to promote mass conformity, but which swiftly showed itself capable of addressing the needs of consumers who had previously been barely identified. Youth culture burst into public prominence from 1954 onwards, with Elvis Presley’s recording of “That’s Alright Mama” appearing within a few months of Marlon Brando’s moody starring role in On the Waterfront and James Dean’s in Rebel Without a Cause.

The civil rights years

Racial segregation of public facilities, which had remained the norm in the South ever since Reconstruction, was in 1954 finally declared illegal by the Supreme Court ruling on Brown v. Topeka Board of Education. Just as a century before, however, the Southern states saw the issue more in terms of states' rights than of human rights, and attempting to implement the law, or even to challenge the failure to implement it, required immense courage. The action of Rosa Parks in refusing to give up her seat to a white man on a bus in Montgomery, Alabama, in December 1955 triggered a successful mass boycott (see p.585), and pushed the 27-year-old Rev Dr Martin Luther King Jr to the forefront of the civil rights campaign. Further confrontation took place at the Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1957 (see p.599), when the reluctant Eisenhower found himself forced to call in federal troops to counter the state's unwillingness to integrate its education system.

The election of John F. Kennedy to the presidency in 1960, by the narrowest of margins, marked a sea-change in American politics, even if in retrospect his policies do not seem exactly radical. At 43 the youngest man ever to be elected president, and the first Catholic, he was prepared literally to reach for the moon, urging the US to victory in the Space Race in which it had thus far lagged humiliatingly behind the Soviet Union. The two decades that lay ahead, however, were to be characterized by disillusion, defeat, and despair. If the Eisenhower years had been dull, the 1960s in particular were far too interesting for almost everybody's liking.

Kennedy's sheer glamor made him a popular president during his lifetime, while his assassination suffused his administration with the romantic glow of "Camelot." His one undisputed triumph, however, came with the Cuban missile crisis of 1962, when the US military fortunately spotted Russian bases in Cuba before any actual missiles were ready for use, and Kennedy faced down premier Khrushchev to insist they be withdrawn. On the other hand, he'd had rather less success the previous year, in launching the abortive Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba, and he also managed to embroil America deeper in the ongoing war against Communism in Vietnam, by sending more "advisers," including Green Berets, to Saigon.

Although a much-publicized call to the wife of Rev Martin Luther King Jr, during one of King's many sojourns in Southern jails, was a factor in Kennedy's election success, he was rarely keen to identify himself with the civil rights movement. The campaign nonetheless made headway, given added momentum by the global television coverage of such horrific confrontations as the onslaught by Birmingham police on peaceful demonstrators in 1963. The movement's defining moment came when Rev King delivered his electrifying "I Have a Dream" speech during the March on Washington later that summer. King was subsequently awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his unwavering espousal of Gandhian principles of nonviolence. Perhaps an equally powerful factor in middle America's recognition that the time had come to address racial inequalities, however, was the not-so-implicit threat in the rhetoric of Malcolm X, who argued that black people had the right to defend themselves against aggression.

After Kennedy's assassination in November 1963, his successor, Lyndon B. Johnson, pushed through legislation that enacted most of the civil rights campaigners' key demands. Even then, violent white resistance in the South continued, and only the long, painstaking and dangerous work of registering Southern black voters en masse eventually forced Southern politicians to mend their ways.

Johnson won election by a landslide in 1964, but his vision of a "Great Society" soon foundered. Instead, he was brought low by the war in Vietnam, where US involvement escalated beyond all reason or apparent control. Broad-based popular opposition to the conflict grew in proportion to the American death toll, and the threat of the draft heightened the mood of youthful rebellion. San Francisco in particular responded to psychedelic prophet Timothy Leary's call to "turn on, tune in, drop out"; 1967's "Summer of Love" saw the lone beatniks of the 1950s transmogrify into an entire generation of hippies.

From the earliest days of the civil rights struggle, Dr King had argued that social justice could only be achieved through economic equality. That message was given a new urgency by riots in the ghettos of Los Angeles in 1965 and Detroit in 1967, and the emergence of the Black Panthers, an armed defense force in the tradition of the now-dead Malcolm X. King also began to denounce the Vietnam War; meanwhile, after refusing the draft with the words “No Vietcong ever called me nigger,” Muhammad Ali was stripped of his title as world heavyweight boxing champion.

In 1968, the very social fabric of the US reached the brink of collapse. Shortly after Johnson’s plummeting popularity forced the president to withdraw from the year-end elections, Martin Luther King was gunned down in a Memphis motel. Next, JFK’s brother Robert Kennedy, now redefined as spokesman for the nation’s dispossessed, was fatally shot just as he emerged as Democratic front-runner. It didn’t take a conspiracy theorist to see that the spate of deaths reflected a malaise in the soul of America.

Richard Nixon to Jimmy Carter

Somehow – perhaps because the brutally suppressed riots at the Chicago Democratic Convention raised the specter of anarchy – the misery of 1968 resulted in the election of Republican Richard Nixon as president. Eisenhower’s vice president while still in his thirties, Nixon had famously told the press after his failed bid for the governorship of California in 1962 that “you won’t have Nixon to kick around any more.” Now he was back, and it soon became apparent that he had scores to settle with his countless perceived enemies, above all in the media. Nixon’s impeccable conservative credentials enabled him to bring the US to a rapport with China, but the war in Vietnam dragged on, to claim a total of 57,000 American lives. Attempts to win it included the secret and illegal bombing of Cambodia, which raised opposition at home to a new peak, but ultimately it was simpler to abandon the original goals in the name of “peace with honor.” The end came either in 1972 – when Henry Kissinger and Le Duc Tho were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for negotiating a treaty, and Tho at least had the grace to decline the award – or in 1975, when the Americans finally withdrew from Saigon.

During Nixon’s first term, many of the disparate individuals politicized by the events and undercurrents of the 1960s coalesced into activist groupings. Feminists united to campaign for abortion rights and an Equal Rights Amendment; gay men in New York’s Stonewall bar fought back after one police raid too many; Native Americans formed the American Indian Movement; and even prisoners attempted to organize themselves, resulting in such bloody debacles as the storming of Attica prison in 1971. Nixon directed various federal agencies to monitor the new radicalism, but his real bugbear was the antiwar protesters. Increasingly ludicrous covert operations against real and potential opponents culminated in a botched attempt to burgle Democratic National Headquarters in the Water-gate complex in 1972. It took two years of investigation for Nixon’s role in the subsequent cover-up to be proved, but in 1974 he resigned, one step ahead of impeachment by the Senate, to be succeeded by Gerald Ford, his own unelected appointee as vice president.

With the Republicans momentarily discredited, former Georgia governor Jimmy Carter was elected president as a clean-handed outsider in the bicentennial year of 1976. His victory showed how far the US had come in a decade, let alone two centuries; a crucial constituency for this new-style Southern Democrat was the recently enfranchised black population of the South. However, Carter’s enthusiastic attempts to put his Baptist principles into practice on such issues as global human rights were soon perceived as naive, if not un-American. Misfortune followed misfortune. He had to break the news that the nation was facing an energy crisis, following the formation of the OPEC cartel of oil producers. Worse still, the Shah of Iran was overthrown, and staff at the US embassy in Tehran were taken hostage by Islamic revolutionaries. Carter's failed attempts to arrange their release were seized upon by the Republicans as a sign of his weak leadership, and all but destroyed his hopes of winning re-election in 1980. Instead he was replaced by a very different figure, the former Hollywood movie actor Ronald Reagan.

The Reagan–Bush years

Reagan was a new kind of president. Unlike his workaholic predecessor, Jimmy Carter, he made a virtue of his hands-off approach to the job, joking that “they say hard work never killed anybody, but I figured why take the risk?” That laissez-faire attitude was especially apparent in his domestic economic policies, under which the rich were left to get as rich as they could. The common perception that Reagan was barely aware of what went on around him allowed his popularity to remain undented by a succession of scandals, including the labyrinthine Iran–Contra affair, under which illegal arms sales to Iran were used to fund support for the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. When Reagan was finally confronted with proof that he had been wrong in his insistence that “I did not trade arms for hostages,” he produced an extraordinary apology: “My heart and my best intentions still tell me that’s true, but the facts and the evidence tell me it is not.”

Reagan’s most enduring achievement came during his second term, when, with his credentials as a Cold Warrior beyond question, the electorate allowed him greater leeway than a Democrat might have received to negotiate arms-control agreements with Mikhail Gorbachev, the new leader of what he had previously called the “Evil Empire.” On the down side, his successors were left to cope with the explosion in the national debt that followed the combination of extensive tax cuts alongside the deregulation of the financial markets, the collapse of the savings and loan system, and above all, the enormous increases in defense spending that funded such pet projects as the Strategic Defense Initiative (“Star Wars”).

In 1988, George Bush became the first vice president in 150 years to be immediately elected to the presidency. Despite his unusually broad experience in foreign policy (which included a spell as director of the CIA), Bush did little more than sit back and watch in amazement as the domino theory suddenly went into reverse. One after another, the Communist regimes of eastern Europe collapsed, until finally even the Soviet Union crumbled away. Bush was also president when Operation Desert Storm drove the Iraqis out of Kuwait in February 1991, an undertaking that lasted 100 hours and in which virtually no American lives were lost. At the moment of triumph in Kuwait, Bush’s soaring popularity seemed certain to guarantee his re-election.

And yet the much-anticipated “peace dividend” – the dramatic injection of cash into the economy that voters expected to follow the end of the arms race – never materialized. As one Democrat contender for the 1992 presidential nomination, Paul Tsongas, succinctly put it, “the Cold War is over and Japan won.” Between 1980 and 1990, the US had gone from being the world’s largest creditor to being the world’s largest debtor. The national debt had trebled from $908 billion to $2.9 trillion, and much of the borrowing came from Japan, spared from incurring military expenditures on anything like the same scale. With the 1992 campaign focusing on domestic affairs rather than what was happening overseas, twelve years of Republican government were ended by the election of Arkansas Governor Bill Clinton.

Clinton and the end of the century

Clinton's first two years were characterized by his failure to deliver on specific promises – most obviously, to reform the health-care system. That enabled the Republicans to sweep to power in Congress in 1994, and resulted in two years of legislative gridlock. Displaying a better grasp of the popular mood, Clinton managed to assign most of the blame for the government's ineffectiveness to the Republicans and was elected to a second term with surprising ease. However, the “Comeback Kid” found holding on to office more of a challenge when his adulterous affair with White House intern Monica Lewinsky was exposed in 1998. Special Prosecutor Kenneth Starr's exhaustive probing led to the disgrace of impeachment, but the Senate ultimately failed to convict, sensing perhaps that the American people did not feel Clinton's indiscretions were serious enough to merit removal.

The new millennium

As Clinton left the presidency, the economy was booming, coming to the end of a record ten-year burst of sustained growth that had seen the budget deficit eradicated far ahead of even the most optimistic schedule, and the Dow Jones rise by over 260 percent since the day Clinton came to office. His former vice president, however, Al Gore, seemed too ashamed of his boss's character failings to bring himself to campaign on his economic record, and contrived to throw away the 2000 presidential election. Clinton is generally agreed to have won the 1996 election via “triangulation,” adopting elements of his opponents' agenda to scoop up middle-ground voters; arguably, both Gore and his Republican opponent, George W. Bush, followed Clinton's example so well, and so precisely targeted the center of the political spectrum, that the result was inevitable: a tie. With the final conclusion depending on a mandatory re-counting of votes in Florida, where various irregularities and mistakes complicated the issue, the impasse was ultimately decided by the conservative Supreme Court, and Bush won the presidency. At the time, the charge that he had “stolen” the election was expected to seriously impair his presidency, while the authority of the Supreme Court was also threatened by the perception of its ruling as partisan.

A recession was probably due whoever was in the White House, as the bursting of the dot-com bubble drove hundreds of high-tech companies into bankruptcy. However, during his first months in office Bush showed little sign of halting the slide, and also seemed alarmingly indifferent to the concerns of America's friends and neighbors abroad. As well as cutting taxes and federal spending, he alienated environmentalists by rejecting US compliance with the 1997 Kyoto Agreement on global warming.

Then the atrocity of September 11 2001, abruptly made matters infinitely worse, inflicting a devastating blow to both the nation's economy and its pride. Over three thousand people were killed in the worst terrorist attack in US history, when two hijacked planes were flown into the World Trade Center in New York City, and one into the Pentagon. (A fourth crashed in Pennsylvania after its passengers and crew attempted to regain control.) The attacks were quickly linked to the al-Qaeda network of Saudi Arabian terrorist Osama bin Laden, and within weeks President Bush declared an open-ended “War on Terror”.

Bush found himself confronting a new, changed world where the costs of maintaining vigilance and military preparedness seem incalculable, and yet the costs of not doing so might prove even higher. Far from balking at the challenge, he set about re-writing the traditional rule-book of diplomacy and international law. In

△ The White House

June 2002, he declared that the US has a right to launch pre-emptive attacks: “If we wait for threats to fully materialize, we will have waited too long . . . We must take the battle to the enemy, disrupt his plans, and confront the worst threats before they emerge.”

A US-led invasion took control of Afghanistan in 2001, and was followed by a similar incursion into Iraq in 2003, ostensibly on the grounds that Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein was developing “weapons of mass destruction.” Saddam was deposed, apprehended, and in due course executed, but it’s now acknowledged that no such weapons existed, and Iraq has both degenerated into a hopeless civil war and become a major recruiting ground for international terrorism. Meanwhile, at the time of writing in early 2007, bin Laden himself has yet to be found.

Despite a wave of financial scandals, spearheaded by the collapse of the mighty energy firm Enron, Bush defeated Senator John Kerry of Massachusetts in 2004 to win a second term as president. That election did little to suggest the country had become any less polarized, however, and the Bush administration was widely lambasted for its appalling failure to respond promptly or adequately when Hurricane Katrina and consequent floods devastated New Orleans and the Gulf Coast in 2005.

By the mid-term elections of November 2006, the deteriorating situation in Iraq – where the US death toll had topped three thousand and was evoking memories of Vietnam – rather than the legacy of Katrina was the major factor that enabled the Democrats to regain control of both the Senate and the House of Representatives for the first time in twelve years. At press time, Bush still seems determined to escalate rather than end the US presence in Iraq, while Democrat anti-war rhetoric hasn’t yet led to a clear withdrawal strategy.

Books

It would be futile to attempt to provide a comprehensive overview of American literature in the limited space available. The following bibliography is, therefore, an idiosyncratic selection of books intended as a starting point for interested readers. Books tagged with the 🦋 symbol are particularly recommended.

History and society

John Berendt Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil. Voodoo, transvestism, and murder; best-selling true-life tales of life and death in contemporary Savannah (see p.534).

Dee Brown Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee. Approaching forty years on from its first publication, this remains the best narrative of the impact of white settlement and expansion on Native Americans across the continent.

Bill Bryson Made in America. A compulsively readable history of the American language, packed with bizarre snippets, which does much to illuminate the history of the nation.

Mike Davis City of Quartz. City politics, neighborhood gangs, unions, film noir, and religion are drawn together in this award-winning, leftist, hyperbolic history of Los Angeles.

John Demos The Unredeemed Captive. This story of the aftermath of a combined French and Indian attack on Deerfield, Massachusetts, in 1704 illuminates frontier life in the eighteenth century.

W.E.B. DuBois The Souls of Black Folk. Seminal collection of largely autobiographical essays examining the separation of the races in American society at the start of the twentieth century.

Joseph J. Ellis Founding Brothers. Enjoyable and informative essays on the “revolutionary generation” that bring the characters of Washington, Jefferson, et al to life.

Brian Fagan Ancient North America. Archeological history of America’s native peoples, from the first hunters to cross the Bering Strait up to European contact.

Tim Flannery The Eternal Frontier. “Ecological” history of North America that reveals how the continent’s physical environment has shaped the destinies of all its inhabitants, from horses to humans.

Shelby Foote The Civil War: a Narrative. Epic, three-volume account containing anything you could possibly want to know about the “War Between the States.”

John Kenneth Galbraith The Great Crash 1929. An elegant and authoritative interpretation of the Wall Street Crash and its implications.

David Halberstam The Fifties. A delightfully readable yet satisfyingly comprehensive overview of the Eisenhower years.

Tony Horwitz Confederates in the Attic: Dispatches from the Unfinished Civil War. Strange meld of past and present, as journalist Horwitz explores the places in the South where die-hards keep the Civil War very much alive.

Meriwether Lewis and William Clark The Original Journals of the Lewis and Clark Expedition, 1804–1806. Eight volumes of meticulous jottings by the Northwest’s first inland explorers, scrupulously following President Jefferson’s orders to record every detail of flora, fauna, and native inhabitant.

Magnus Magnusson and Herman Pálsson (trans) The Vinland Sagas. If you imagine stories that the Vikings reached America to be no more than myths, here's the day-to-day minutiae to convince you otherwise.

James M. McPherson Battle Cry of Freedom. Extremely readable history of the Civil War, which integrates and explains the complex social, economic, political, and military factors in one concise volume.

Clyde A. Milner II, Carol A. O'Connor, and Martha A. Sandweiss The Oxford History of the American West. Fascinating collection of essays on Western history, covering topics ranging from myths and movies to art and religion.

James Mooney The Ghost Dance Religion and The Sioux Outbreak of 1890. An extraordinary Bureau of Ethnology report, first published in 1890 but still available in paperback. Mooney persuaded his Washington superiors to allow him to roam the West in search of first-hand evidence, and even interviewed Wovoka, the Ghost Dance prophet, in person.

Samuel Eliot Morison The European Discovery of America. An excellent resource for anyone interested in the early navigators who explored the Americas, divided into two fat volumes – The Northern Voyages and The Southern Voyages – and written by a former admiral who meticulously retraced many of the routes himself.

Roderick Frazier Nash Wilderness and the American Mind. Classic study of the American take on environmental and conservation issues over the past couple of hundred years. Especially good sections on John Muir and his battles to preserve Yosemite.

Stephen Plog Ancient Peoples of the Southwest. Much the best single-volume history of the pre-Hispanic Southwest, packed with diagrams and color photographs.

Marc Reisner Cadillac Desert. Concise, engaging account of the environmental and political impact on the West of the twentieth-century mania for dam-building and large-scale irrigation projects.

Eric Schlosser Fast Food Nation. A century on from The Jungle, Eric Schlosser warns America once again that you are what you eat.

Alan Taylor American Colonies.

Perhaps the best book on any single era of American history – a superb account of every aspect of the peopling of the continent, from remote antiquity until the Declaration of Independence.

Mark Twain Roughing It, Life on the Mississippi, and many others.

Mark Twain was by far the funniest and most vivid chronicler of nineteenth-century America. Roughing It, which covers his early wanderings across the continent, all the way to Hawaii, is absolutely compelling.

Geoffrey C. Ward, with Ric and Ken Burns The Civil War. Illustrated history of the Civil War, designed to accompany the TV series and using hundreds of the same photographs.

Allen Weinstein and David Rubel The Story of America. This glossy volume is so beautifully illustrated you might not expect the text to be first-rate too. In fact, it provides fascinating detail and analysis on the one representative topic it chooses to cover from each of 26 eras.

Richard White It's Your Misfortune And None of My Own. Dense, authoritative and all-embracing history of the American West, which debunks the notion of the rugged pioneer by stressing the role of the federal government.

Juan Williams Eyes on the Prize.

Informative and detailed account of the Civil Rights years from the early 1950s up to 1966, with lots of rare, and some very familiar, photos.

Edmund Wilson Patriotic Gore. Fascinating eight-hundred-page survey of the literature of the Civil War, which serves in its own right as an immensely readable narrative of the conflict.

Bob Woodward Plan Of Attack, Bush At War, and State Of Denial. Woodward's role as the ultimate insider journalist dates back to Watergate, of course, but his extraordinary access to the Bush White House makes his ongoing account of the “War On Terror” essential reading.

Biography and oral history

Muhammad Ali The Greatest. Powerful and entertaining autobiography of the Louisville boy who grew up to become world heavyweight boxing champion. The most memorable parts deal with his fight against the Vietnam draft and the subsequent stripping away of his world championship title.

Maya Angelou I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings. First of a five-volume autobiography that provides an ultimately uplifting account of how a black girl transcended her traumatic childhood in 1930s Arkansas.

Paul Auster (ed) True Tales of American Life (UK)/I Thought My Father Was God (US). Anthology of true-life stories sent to Auster for a National Public Radio project. Arranged by subject, it's best dipped into at random; among the mawkish and the mundane are just enough quirky, touching, and plain crazy tales to make it worth the while.

Donald A. Barclay, James H. Maguire, and Peter Wild (eds) Into the Wilderness Dream. Gripping collection of Western exploration narratives written between 1500 and 1800; thanks to any number of little-known gems, the best of many such anthologies.

Bill Clinton My Life. The exhaustive, and exhausting, autobiography of the last twentieth-century president; biased, of course, but the man's sheer energy and commitment are astonishing.

William F. Cody The Life of Hon. William F. Cody, Known as Buffalo Bill. Larger-than-life autobiography of one of the great characters of the Wild West. Particularly treasurable for the moment when he refers to himself more formally as “Bison William.”

Frederick Douglass, et al The Classic Slave Narratives. Compilation of ex-slaves' autobiographies, ranging from Olaudah Equiano's kidnapping in Africa and global wanderings to Frederick Douglass's eloquent denunciation of slavery. Includes Harriet Jacobs' story of her escape from Edenton, North Carolina – see p.490.

Jill Ker Conway (ed) Written by Herself. Splendid anthology of women's autobiographies from the mid-1800s to the present, including sections on African-Americans, scientists, artists, and pioneers.

U.S. Grant Personal Memoirs.

Encouraged by Mark Twain, the Union general and subsequent president wrote his autobiography just before his death, in a (successful) bid to recoup his horrendous debts. At first the book feels oddly downbeat, but the man's down-to-earth modesty grows on you.

Henry Hampton and Steve Fayer Voices of Freedom. Hugely impressive oral history of the Civil Rights movement.

Malcolm X, with Alex Haley

The Autobiography of Malcolm X. Searingly honest and moving account of Malcolm's progress from street hoodlum to political leadership. Written on the hoof over a period of years, it traces the development of Malcolm X's thinking before, during, and after his split from the Nation of Islam. The conclusion, when he talks about his impending assassination, is painful in the extreme.

Edmund Morris The Rise of Theodore Roosevelt and Theodore Rex. Thoroughly engaging and superbly researched two-volume biography of Theodore Roosevelt, tracing the energetic and controversial president's astonishing trajectory to the White House, and his far-reaching achievements.

Ron Powers Mark Twain. Definitive recent biography of America's most compelling literary figure.

Joanna L. Stratton Pioneer Women. Original memoirs of women – mothers, teachers, homesteaders, and circuit riders – who ventured across the Plains from 1854 to 1890. Lively, superbly detailed accounts, with chapters on journeys, homebuilding, daily domestic life, the church, the cowtown, temperance, and suffrage.

Studs Terkel American Dreams Lost and Found. Interviews with ordinary American citizens. As illuminating a guide to US life as you could hope for.

 Frank Waters Book of the Hopi. Extraordinary insight into the traditions and beliefs of the Hopi, prepared through years of interviews and approved by tribal elders.

Gary Younge Stranger In A Strange Land and No Place Like Home. Black British journalist Gary Younge is one of the most acute observers of contemporary America; his experiences in the self-proclaimed New South, chronicled in No Place Like Home, make fascinating reading.

Entertainment and culture

Kenneth Anger Hollywood Babylon. A vicious yet high-spirited romp through Tinseltown's greatest scandals, amply illustrated with gory and repulsive photographs, and always inclined to bend the facts for the sake of a good story. A shoddily researched second volume covers more recent times.

Joshua Berrett (ed) The Louis Armstrong Companion: Eight Decades of Commentary. Broad selection of essays, interviews, letters, reviews, and autobiography, revealing the world's most influential musician in all his complexity. A fine introduction to the subject, featuring lots of previously unpublished material: standouts include Armstrong's own lament about defeatism and negativity in his fellow black men.

Bob Dylan Chronicles: Volume One. Far from the kind of endless stream-of-consciousness he wrote in his younger days, Dylan chose in this long-awaited autobiography to focus in almost microscopic detail on three distinct moments in his life, including Greenwich Village in the early 1960s, and New Orleans in the 1980s. The result is a compelling testament to his place at the epicenter of America's cultural life.

Charlotte Greig Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow? Enthusiastic feminist appraisal of (predominantly American) girl groups from the 1950s (the Chan-tels and the Crystals) through to 1980s rap stars like Salt'n'Pepa. Though inevitably somewhat dated, its many photos and personal recollections still make it a great read.

 Peter Guralnick Lost Highways, Feel Like Going Home and Sweet Soul Music. Thoroughly researched personal histories of black popular music, packed with obsessive detail on all the great names. His twin Elvis biographies, Last Train to Memphis and Careless Love, trace the rise and fall of the iconic star in an unsensational but nonetheless gripping documentary manner, while also performing the rare trick of evaluating him seriously as a musician.

Gerri Hershey Nowhere to Run: the History of Soul Music. Definitive run-down on the evolution of soul music from the gospel heyday of the 1940s through the Memphis, Motown, and Philly scenes to the sounds of the early 1980s. Strong on social commentary and political background and studded with anecdotes and interviews.

Michael Ondaatje Coming through Slaughter. Extraordinary, dream-like fictionalization of the life of doomed New Orleans cornet player Buddy Bolden, written in a lyrical style that evokes the rhythms and pace of jazz improvisation.

Robert Palmer Deep Blues. Readable history of the development and personalities of the Delta Blues.

 Geoffrey C. Ward, Ken Burns, et al Jazz: a History of America's Music. While the story peters out somewhat after bebop, this highly readable volume (linked to the TV series) boasts hundreds of illustrations and rare photographs, first-hand accounts and lively essays to provide a beautifully drawn picture of America's home-grown music and its icons.

Travel writing

Edward Abbey The Journey Home. Hilarious accounts of whitewater rafting and desert hiking trips alternate with essays by the man who inspired the radical environmentalist movement Earth First! All of Abbey's many books, especially Desert Solitaire, a journal of time spent as a ranger in Arches National Park, make great traveling companions.

James Agee and Walker Evans Let Us Now Praise Famous Men. A deeply personal but also richly evocative journal of travels through the rural lands of the Depression-era Deep South, complemented by Evans's powerful photographs.

Bill Bryson The Lost Continent. Using his boyhood home of Des Moines in Iowa as a benchmark, the author travels the length and breadth of America to find the perfect small town. Hilarious, if occasionally a bit smug. A Walk in the Woods applies his trademark irony to the Appalachian Trail from Georgia to Maine, but suffers from too much nature and too few quirky characters.

J. Hector St-John de Crèvecoeur Letters from an American Farmer and Sketches of Eighteenth-Century America. A remarkable account of the complexities of Revolutionary America, first published in 1782.

Robert Frank The Americans. The Swiss photographer's brilliantly evocative portrait of mid-century American life from coast to coast, with striking images contextualized by an introductory essay from Jack Kerouac.

 Ian Frazier Great Plains. An immaculately researched and well-written travelogue containing a wealth of information on the people of the American prairielands from Native Americans to the soldiers who staff the region's many nuclear installations.

Jack Kerouac On the Road. Definitive account of transcontinental Beatnik wanderings, which now reads as a curiously dated period piece. Not as incoherent as you might expect.

James A. MacMahon (ed) Audubon Society Nature Guides. Attractively produced, fully illustrated and easy-to-use guides to the flora and fauna of seven different US regional ecosystems, covering the entire country from coast to coast and from grasslands to glaciers.

Virginia and Lee McAlester A Field Guide to American Houses. Well-illustrated and engaging guide to America's rich variety of domestic architecture, from pre-Colonial to postmodern.

John McPhee Encounters with the Arch Druid. In three interlinked narratives, the late environmental activist and Friends of the Earth founder David Brower confronts developers, miners, and dam-builders, while trying to protect three different American wilderness areas – the Atlantic shoreline, the Grand Canyon, and the Cascades of the Pacific Northwest.

William Least Heat-Moon Blue Highways. Account of a mammoth loop tour of the US by back roads, in which the author interviews ordinary people in ordinary places. A good overview of rural America, with lots of interesting details on Native Americans. His next book, Prairyerth, opted for the microcosmic approach, taking six hundred loving pages over the story of Chase County, Kansas.

Jonathan Raban Old Glory. A somewhat pompous though always interesting account of Raban's journey on a small craft down the Mississippi River from the head-waters in Minnesota to the bayous of Louisiana.

Bernard A. Weisberger (ed) The WPA Guide to America. Prepared during the New Deal as part of a make-work program for writers, these guides paint a fairly comprehensive portrait of 1930s and earlier America.

Fiction

General Americana

 Raymond Carver Will You Please Be Quiet Please? Stories of the American working class, written in a distinctive sparse, almost deadpan style that perhaps owes something to Hemingway and certainly influenced untold numbers of contemporary American writers. The stories served as the basis for Robert Altman's film Short Cuts.

Don DeLillo White Noise; Underworld. The former is his best, a funny and penetrating pop culture exploration, while the latter is one of those typically flawed attempts to pack the twentieth-century American experience into a great big novel. Worthwhile, though.

 John Dos Passos USA. Hugely ambitious novel (originally a trilogy) that grapples with the US in the early decades of the twentieth century from every possible angle. Gripping

Also available are state-by-state guides, most of them out of print but easily found in US libraries and secondhand bookshops.

Edmund White States of Desire: Travels in Gay America. A revealing account of life in gay communities across the country, focusing heavily on San Francisco and New York.

human stories with a strong political and historical point of view.

William Kennedy Ironweed. Terse, affecting tale of a couple of down-on-their-luck drunks haunted by ghosts from a checkered past; excellent evocation of 1930s America, specifically working-class Albany, New York.

 Herman Melville Moby-Dick. Compendious and compelling account of nineteenth-century whaling, packed with details on American life from New England to the Pacific.

E. Annie Proulx Accordion Crimes. Proulx's masterly book comes as close to being the fabled "Great American Novel" as anyone could reasonably ask, tracing a fascinating history of immigrants in all parts of North America through the fortunes of a battered old Sicilian accordion.

New York City

Paul Auster New York Trilogy. Three Borgesian investigations into the mystery and madness of contemporary New York. Using the conventions of the detective novel, Auster unfolds a disturbed and disturbing picture of the city.

Truman Capote Breakfast at Tiffany's and In Cold Blood. The first story is about a fictional social climber in New York called Holly Golightly; the second concerns the true-life stories of two serial killers in the heartland. The subject matter of these two stories could hardly be more different, but the degree of insight drawn from two uniquely American stories is equally high in both accounts.

Michael Chabon The Amazing Adventures of Kavalier & Clay. Pulitzer Prize-winning novel charting the rise and fall of comic book-writing cousins in New York City – one a refugee from World War II Prague, the other a closeted Brooklynite.

Jonathan Franzen The Corrections. While it never quite lived up to the hype – what could? – this ambitious saga, about a classically dysfunctional American family, manages to capture all that late twentieth-century navel searching in a nutshell. And it's very funny in places, too.

 Chester Himes Cotton Comes to Harlem, Blind Man with a Pistol, and many others. Action-packed and uproariously violent novels set in New York's Harlem, starring the much-feared detectives Coffin Ed Johnson and Grave Digger Jones.

Grace Paley Collected Stories. Shrewd love-hate stories written over a lifetime by the daughter of Russian-Jewish immigrants, who published dead-on accounts of New York life in three installments: her first book of stories came out in the 1950s, her second in the early 1970s and her third in the late 1980s.

 J.D. Salinger The Catcher in the Rye. Classic novel of adolescence, tracing Holden Caulfield's sardonic journey through the streets of New York.

New England

John Irving The Cider House Rules. One of Irving's more successful sprawling novels, weaving themes of love, suffering, and the many facets of the abortion debate against a Maine backdrop.

H.P. Lovecraft The Best of H.P. Lovecraft: Bloodcurdling Tales of Horror and the Macabre. Creepy New England stories from the author Stephen King called "the twentieth century's greatest practitioner of the classic horror tale."

Florida and the South

William Faulkner The Reivers. The last and most humorous work of this celebrated Southern author. The Sound and the Fury, a fascinating study of prejudice, set like most of his books in the fictional Yoknapatawpha County in Mississippi, is a much more difficult read.

Carl Hiaasen Basket Case, and many others. Hiaasen is the funniest crime writer on the scene – and a razor-sharp chronicler of Florida's weirder, wilder side. This one sees dead rock stars, a grumpy investigative reporter, and a giant frozen lizard caught up in a fast-moving caper plot.

Zora Neale Hurston Spunk. Short stories celebrating black culture and experience from around the country, by a writer from Florida who became one of the bright stars of the Harlem cultural renaissance in the 1920s.

Harper Lee To Kill a Mockingbird. Classic tale of racial conflict and society's view of an outsider, Boo Radley, as seen through the eyes of children.

Cormac McCarthy Suttree. McCarthy is better known for his "modern Western" works like Blood Meridian and All the Pretty Horses, but this beautifully written tale, of a Knoxville, Tennessee, scion opting for a hard-scrabble life among a band of vagrants on the Tennessee River, is his best.

Carson McCullers The Heart is a Lonely Hunter. McCullers is unrivaled in her sensitive treatment of misfits, in this case the attitude of a small Southern community to a deaf-mute.

Margaret Mitchell Gone With the Wind. Worth a read even if you know the lines of Scarlett and Rhett by heart.

 Toni Morrison Beloved. Exquisitely written ghost story by the Nobel Prize-winning novelist, which recounts the painful lives of a group of freed slaves after Reconstruction, and the obsession a mother develops after murdering her baby daughter to spare her a life of slavery.

Flannery O'Connor A Good Man is Hard to Find. Short stories, featuring strong, obsessed characters, that explore religious tensions and racial conflicts in the Deep South.

Alice Walker In Love and Trouble. Moving and powerful stories of black women in the South, from the author of the much-acclaimed The Color Purple.

Eudora Welty The Ponder Heart. Quirky, humorous evocation of life in a backwater Mississippi town. Her most critically acclaimed work, The Optimist's Daughter, explores the tensions between a judge's daughter and her stepmother.

Louisiana

James Lee Burke Black Cherry Blues. Perhaps the best in Burke's series featuring Cajun cop Dave Robicheaux. Here Robicheaux sets out to expose alliances between government and organized crime in Louisiana and Montana.

George Washington Cable The Grandissimes. Romantic saga of Creole family feuds, written c.1900 but set during the Louisiana Purchase. Superb evocation of steamy Louisiana elite, the Creole lifestyle, and the resistance of New Orleans to its Americanization. Apparently shocking at the time for its sympathetic portrayal of blacks.

 Kate Chopin The Awakening. Subversive story of a bourgeois married woman whose fight for independence ends in tragedy. The swampy Louisiana of a century ago is portrayed as both a sensual hotbed for her sexual awakening and as her eventual nemesis.

Valerie Martin Property. A bleak but wonderfully written tale of the brutalizing effects of slavery, on both mistress and slave, on a Louisiana sugar plantation.

Anne Rice Feast Of All Saints. Rice's vampire novels are great fun, but her finest portrait of nineteenth-century New Orleans comes in this sensitive examination of race, sexuality and gender issues in the antebellum period.

 John Kennedy Toole A Confederacy of Dunces. Anarchic black tragicomedy in which the pompous and repulsive anti-hero Ignatius J. Reilly wreaks havoc through an insubrious and surreal New Orleans.

 Robert Penn Warren All The King's Men. This fascinating fictionalized saga of Louisiana's legendary "Kingfish", Huey Long, is also a truly great American novel in its own right.

The Great Lakes and the Great Plains

 Willa Cather My Antonia. Stunning book set in Nebraska that provides a great sense of the pioneer hardships on the Plains.

Louise Erdrich The Beet Queen. Offbeat tale of passion and obsession among poor white North Dakota folk – particularly women – against the backdrop of an economy and culture changing with the introduction of sugar beet as a crop in the 1940s. Erdrich's other novels play through the tensions between tradition and "progress" in Native American communities.

Garrison Keillor Lake Wobegon Days. Wry, witty tales about a mythical Minnesota small town, poking gentle fun at the rural Midwest.

Mari Sandoz Old Jules. Written in 1935, this fictionalized biography gives a wonderful insight into the life of the author's pioneer Swiss father on the Nebraskan plains. Sandoz's other major work, Crazy Horse, contains great historical overviews but is spoiled somewhat by her insistence on narrating it through Sioux eyes.

Upton Sinclair The Jungle. Documenting the horrific unsanitary conditions in Chicago's meat-packing industry, Sinclair's compelling Socialist-tract-cum-novel, first serialized in 1905, ranks among the most influential books in US history.

Richard Wright Native Son. The harrowing story of Bigger Thomas, a black chauffeur who accidentally kills his employer's daughter. The story develops his relationship with his lawyer, the closest he has ever come to being on an equal footing with a white.

The Rockies and the Southwest

A.B. Guthrie Jr Big Sky. When first published in the Thirties it shattered the image of the mythical West peddled by Hollywood. Realistic historical fiction at its very best, following desperate mountain man and fugitive Boone Caudill, whose idyllic life in Montana was ended by the arrival of white settlers.

Tony Hillerman The Dark Wind, and many others. The adventures of Jim Chee of the Navajo Tribal Police on the reservations of northern Arizona, forever dabbling in dark and mysterious forces churned up from the Ancestral Puebloan past.

Barbara Kingsolver Pigs in Heaven. A magnificent evocation of tensions and realities in the contemporary Southwest, by a Tucson-based writer who ranks among America's finest prose stylists.

Norman MacLean A River Runs Through It. Unputdownable – the best ever novel about fly-fishing, set in beautiful Montana lake country.

California and the West

Raymond Chandler The Big Sleep and Farewell My Lovely.

The original incarnations of archetypal tough guy and iconic private eye Philip Marlowe are far more complex and beautifully written than the related movies would lead you to expect. Pulp fiction at its finest – written by an American raised in London.

David Guterson Snow Falling on Cedars and East Of the Mountains. Two gripping novels that capture the flavor of the Pacific Northwest; the first is an atmospheric mystery centering on postwar interracial tensions, the second features a dying man looking back on his life.

Jack London The Call of the Wild and Other Stories. London's classic tale, of a family pet discovering the ways of the wilderness while forced to pull sleds across Alaska's Gold Rush trails, still makes essential reading before a trip to the far north.

Armistead Maupin Tales of the City. Long-running saga comprising sympathetic and entertaining tales of life in San Francisco, that also work surprisingly well as suspenseful stand-alone novels. That many of its key characters are gay meant that over the years the series became a chronicle of the impact of AIDS on the city. Maupin's Maybe the Moon is the poignant true-life story of his friend, the short person who played ET in the movie but was never allowed to reveal her true identity.

Thomas Pynchon The Crying of Lot 49. Shorter, funnier, and more accessible than Gravity's Rainbow, this novel of techno-freaks and potheads in Sixties California reveals, among other things, the sexy side of stamp collecting.

John Steinbeck The Grapes of Wrath. The classic account of a migrant family forsaking the Midwest for the Promised Land. Steinbeck's light-hearted but crisply observed novella Cannery Row captures daily life on the prewar Monterey waterfront. The epic East of Eden updates and resets the Bible in the Salinas Valley and details three generations of familial feuding.

Nathanael West The Day of the Locust. West wrote dark novels wholly vested in the American experience; this one, set in LA, is an apocalyptic story of fringe characters at the edge of the film industry.

Film

The list below focuses on key films in certain genres that have helped define the American experience for domestic and foreign audiences alike, cementing cultural stereotypes such as the gangster, cowboy, and blonde chorus girl, as well as national iconography such as expansive prairies, open highways, big-city skyscrapers, and suburban dream homes. Films tagged with the 🍿 symbol are particularly recommended.

Music/musicals

Calamity Jane (David Butler, 1953). The Western gets a rumbustious musical twist with tomboy Doris Day's thigh-slapping gusto in the title role and Howard Keel as the rugged hero who (almost) tames her.

Gimme Shelter (Albert and David Maysles, 1969). Excellent documentary about the ill-fated Rolling Stones concert at Altamont. Its searing look at homegrown American violence and Vietnam-era chaos at the end of the 1960s also includes an on-camera stabbing.

Gold Diggers of 1933 (Mervyn LeRoy/Busby Berkeley, 1933). The most entertaining in a famous trio of 1933 films (including 42nd Street and Footlight Parade), in which genius choreographer Berkeley pioneered stunning overhead-crane shots of flamboyant, mechanized dance numbers featuring lines of glamorous chorines.

Meet Me in St Louis (Vincente Minnelli, 1944). Most famous for its Judy Garland number "The Trolley Song," this charming piece of nostalgia celebbrates turn-of-the-century America through the ups and downs of a St Louis family during the 1903 World's Fair.

On the Town (Stanley Donen/Gene Kelly, 1949). An exuberant musical tour of New York City, led by director Kelly and Frank Sinatra, who play sailors on shore leave.

 Singin' in the Rain (Stanley Donen/Gene Kelly, 1952). Beloved musical comedy about Hollywood at the dawn of the sound era, featuring memorable tunes like "Make 'Em Laugh" and the title song, along with energetic performances by star Kelly, sidekick Donald O'Connor, and a pixie-ish Debbie Reynolds.

Woodstock (Michael Wadleigh, 1969). Gimme Shelter's upbeat counterpart, documenting the musical pinnacle of the hippie era, showing a half-million flower children peacefully grooving to Jimi Hendrix, The Who, and Sly and the Family Stone while getting stoned, muddy, and wild on an upstate New York farm.

Silent era

Birth of a Nation (D.W. Griffith, 1915). Possibly the most influential film in American history, both for its pioneering film technique (close-ups, cross-cutting, and so on) and appalling racist propaganda, which led to a revival of the KKK and a resurgence in lynchings across the country.

 The General (Buster Keaton, 1926). A fine introduction to Keaton's acrobatic brand of slapstick and his inventive cinematic approach, in which the Great Stone Face chases down a stolen locomotive during the Civil War.

The Gold Rush (Charlie Chaplin, 1925). Chaplin's finest film: the Little Tramp gets trapped in a cabin during an Alaska blizzard in an affecting story that mixes sentiment and high comedy in near-perfect balance.

Greed (Erich von Stroheim, 1923). An audacious scene-by-scene adaptation of Frank Norris's novel McTeague, a tragic tale of love and revenge in San Francisco at the end of the nineteenth century. Slashed from ten to two-and-a-half hours by MGM, the film remains a cinematic triumph for its striking compositions, epic drama, and truly bleak ending.

Intolerance (D.W. Griffith, 1916).

Westerns

McCabe and Mrs. Miller (Robert Altman, 1971). Entrepreneur Warren Beatty brings prostitution to a Washington State town and tries to reinvent himself as a gunslinger, in what's often referred to as an anti-Western because of its stark, snowy landscapes, soft-focus images, and unromantic outlook.

Once upon a Time in the West (Sergio Leone, 1968). The quintessential spaghetti Western, actually filmed in Spain by an Italian director, steeped in mythic American themes of manifest destiny and rugged individualism.

Red River (Howard Hawks, 1948). Upstart Montgomery Clift battles beef-baron John Wayne on a momentous cattle drive through the Midwest.

Americana

 Breakfast at Tiffany's (Blake Edwards, 1961). Manhattan never looked more chic, and Audrey Hepburn, dressed in Givenchy, gives a quintessentially stylish perform-

The greatest debacle of the silent era, a colossal bomb that helped destroy Griffith's career, but still fascinates for its multiple storylines, arch melodrama, and stunning Babylonian set (a replica was built as part of a shopping mall in Hollywood).

Sunrise (F.W. Murnau, 1927). Among the most beautiful Hollywood productions of any era. Sunrise's German émigré director employed striking lighting effects, complex traveling shots, and emotionally compelling performances in a tale of a country boy led astray by a big-city femme fatale.

Prototypical Hawks tale of clashing tough-guy egos and no-nonsense professionals on the range.

 The Searchers (John Ford, 1956). Perhaps the most iconic of Ford's many Westerns; a highly influential production with vivid cinematography and epic scale, in which John Wayne relentlessly hunts down the Indian chief who massacred his friends and family.

The Wild Bunch (Sam Peckinpah, 1969). A movie that says as much about the chaotic end of the 1960s as it does about the West, featuring a band of killers who hunt for women and treasure and wind up in a bloodbath unprecedented in film history.

ance as vulnerable kept-woman Holly Golightly. The theme tune, "Moon River", penned by Henry Mancini, also shines as a perennial classic. Based on a novella by Truman Capote.

A Rough Guide to Rough Guides

Published in 1982, the first Rough Guide – to Greece – was a student scheme that became a publishing phenomenon. Mark Ellingham, a recent graduate of English from Bristol University, had been traveling in Greece the previous summer and couldn't find the right guidebook. With a small group of friends he wrote his own guide, combining a highly contemporary, journalistic style with a thoroughly practical approach to travelers' needs.

The immediate success of the book spawned a series that rapidly covered dozens of destinations. And, in addition to impecunious backpackers, Rough Guides soon acquired a much broader and older readership that relished the guides' wit and inquisitiveness as much as their enthusiastic, critical approach and value-for-money ethos.

These days, Rough Guides include recommendations from shoestring to luxury and cover more than 200 destinations around the globe, including almost every country in the Americas and Europe, more than half of Africa and most of Asia and Australasia. Our ever-growing team of authors and photographers is spread all over the world, particularly in Europe, the USA, and Australia.

In the early 1990s, Rough Guides branched out of travel, with the publication of Rough Guides to World Music, Classical Music, and the Internet. All three have become benchmark titles in their fields, spearheading the publication of a wide range of books under the Rough Guide name.

Including the travel series, Rough Guides now number more than 350 titles, covering: phrasebooks, waterproofs, music guides from Opera to Heavy Metal, reference works as diverse as Conspiracy Theories and Shakespeare, and popular culture books from iPods to Poker. Rough Guides also produce a series of more than 120 World Music CDs in partnership with World Music Network.

Help us update

We've gone to a lot of effort to ensure that the eighth edition of The Rough Guide to the USA is accurate and up to date. However, things change – places get “discovered”, opening hours are notoriously fickle, restaurants and rooms raise prices or lower standards. If you feel we've got it wrong or left something out, we'd like to know, and if you can remember the address, the price, the time, the phone number, so much the better. We'll credit all contributions, and send a copy of the next edition (or any other Rough Guide if you prefer) for the best letters. Everyone who writes to us and isn't already a subscriber will receive a copy of our full-color thrice-yearly newsletter. Please mark letters: “Rough Guide the USA Update” and send to: Rough Guides, 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, or Rough Guides, 4th Floor, 345 Hudson St, New York, NY 10014. Acknowledgments

Sam: At Rough Guides, a very big thank you to Amy Hegarty, a great editor and a pleasure to work with; to new co-authors Jeff and Nick; and above all to dear Greg, for everything. Of the many people who helped in the USA, I am particularly grateful to Jackie Reed and Kelly Earnest in Memphis; Christine deCuir and Meire Ramos in New Orleans; Allie Hardee in Nashville; Jorge Franz and Celia Morales in Houston; Penélope Benedict in San Antonio; and to Kilynn Sommer in Dallas. Thanks also to David Nicholson; Eve Gardiner at First PR; and Susie, Jody, and Kirsty at TTM World.

Greg: Thanks to everyone at Rough Guides for agreeing to delay this new edition while Sam and I got married. Thanks to Sam for every minute, and to Amy for her enthusiasm and precision. On the road, thanks to Chris Nobles in Charleston; Carey Ferrara, Erica Backus, and Teresa Jacobs in Savannah; Elizabeth Walasin Lulla, Robert Prohaska, and Sally Baker in Chicago; Bob Harris in Georgia; Candy Aluli and Nancy Daniels in Hawaii; and Edie Jarolim, Steve Lewis, and Bruce Brossman in the Southwest.

JD would like to thank his family for their support, his editor for her excellent work in managing this project, and other colleagues at Rough Guides, including Steve Horak and Andrew Rosenberg, and all his friends and associates throughout the Northwest, who made useful suggestions, provided illuminating insight, and otherwise made this book worth writing.

Nick would like to thank the many folk at the various CVBs and tourist organizations for their invaluable help: Jill d'Anzeris, NY; Cathy Ellis, Ulster Co, NY; Margaret Marchuk, Lake Placid, NY; Patti Donoghue, Rochester, NY; Nancy Vargo, Buffalo, NY;

Ellen Kornfield, Philadelphia, PA; Terese Balzareit, Harrisburg, PA; Mindy Bianca, Hershey, PA; Tammy Brown, Columbus, OH; DeAnn Hazey, Cleveland, OH; Jeff Blom, Cincinnati, OH; Kirsten Borgstrom, MI; Carolyn Artman, Detroit, MI; Sally Laukitis, Holland, MI; Nick Miller, Ann Arbor, MI; Marge Bateman, KY; Jennifer Broadwater, Pleasant Hill, KY; Tim Zahner & Kelly Chamberlin, San Francisco, CA; Adele, Berkeley, CA; Sharon Hunt, Lake Tahoe, CA; Suzi Brakken, Plumas Co, CA; Joanne Steele, Siskiyou Co, CA; Richard, Humboldt Co, CA; Sharon Rooney, Mendocino Co, CA; Nina Laramore, Russian River, CA; Jenny Franklin, Truckee, CA; Bob Warren & Karen Whitaker, Shasta Cascades, CA. Many thanks to all the fine places I ate and stayed, too numerous to mention and to the friends who sheltered me at various points: Clint, Anandamayi, & Laramie in Berkeley; Nicki & Eric in Gold Country; and Karen Kaschak in NJ. For spiritual inspiration en route, gratitude goes to the Yogananda retreat near Nevada City and The Beloved Community outside Ashland, OR. Well done to Amy Hegarty at RG in NYC for steering us patiently through the mammoth project. Finally, heartfelt thanks as ever to Maria for teaching all that I could ever want to know about Pittsburgh.

The editor would like to thank Sam, Greg, Jeff, Nick, and all the contributors for their excellent and inspiring work, and for making this book such a pleasure to be a part of. Additional thanks go to Dan May, Diana Jarvis, Maxine Repath, Katie Lloyd-Jones, Ed Wright, Sarah Smithies, Stewart Wild, Christina Knight, Chloë Roberts, Megan McIntyre, Philippa Hopkins, David Paul, Katherine Owers, April Isaacs, Andrew Rosenberg, AnneLise Sorensen, and Steven Horak.

About the authors

Samantha Cook first visited the USA in 1988 and has returned at least once a year since. She has been involved with Rough Guides for more than ten years and has written, among other titles, The Rough Guide to New Orleans, The Rough Guide to Chick Flicks, and, with husband Greg Ward, The Rough Guide to Online Travel.

Greg Ward edited the first two editions of The Rough Guide to USA and has contributed to all eight. He has also written Rough Guides to the History of the USA, Southwest USA, Las Vegas, the Grand Canyon, Hawaii, Blues CDs, Brittany & Normandy, and several others.

JD Dickey has contributed to eight Rough Guides titles, including Washington DC, Los Angeles, the Pacific Northwest, California, and Seattle. He makes his home on the West Coast, but enjoys traveling with much vigor and gusto, and is a rabid consumer of news, culture, history, and folly.

Nick Edwards grew up in south London and studied Classics at Oxford. In between his various travels, he now lives with his spouse, Maria, in Pittsburgh, where he is an active member of the Peace Movement and still manages to keep tabs on underground rock and his beloved Spurs.

Tim Perry has co-written Fodor's Rock & Roll Traveler USA and contributes regularly on music to the Independent newspaper and various magazines.

Author Picks

Although we try not to waste pages on places we don't like, anything marked with this icon merits a special recommendation, whether it's an atmospheric café, a perfectly sited hotel or a favorite novel. Stickers have been sent out to all of the relevant establishments, but to make sure the place is a genuine recommendation, it's worth checking that it's also listed in the guide.

Accommodation price codes

Throughout this book, accommodation prices have been graded with the symbols below, according to the cost of the least expensive double room throughout most of the year. Only where we explicitly say so do these room rates include local taxes. For full details see p.40.
