

ROUGH GUIDES

THE ROUGH GUIDE to

The USA

About this book

Rough Guides are designed to be good to read and easy to use. The book is divided into the following sections and you should be able to find whatever you need in one of them.

The color section is designed to give you a feel for the USA, suggesting when to go and what not to miss, and includes a full list of contents. Then comes basics, for pre-departure information and other practicalities.

The guide chapters cover the USA's 50 states in depth, each starting with a highlights panel, an introduction, and a map to help you plan your route.

The contexts section fills you in on history, books, and film, while individual color inserts introduce America's music, food, architecture, and great outdoors.

The book concludes with all the small print, including details of how to send in updates and corrections, and a comprehensive index.

This eighth edition published April 2007.

The publishers and authors have done their best to ensure the accuracy and currency of all the information in The Rough Guide to the USA, however, they can accept no responsibility for any loss, injury, or inconvenience sustained by any traveler as a result of information or advice contained in the guide.

The Rough Guide to

USA

written and researched by

Samantha Cook, Greg Ward, JD Dickey, Nick Edwards, and Tim Perry

with additional contributions by

Tim Burford, Ken Derry, Sarah Hull, Todd Obolsky, Rebecca Strauss, Stephen Timblin, Ross Velton, Paul Whitfield, and Christian Williams

NEW YORK • LONDON • DELHI

www.roughguides.com

Contents

Color section 1–24

Introduction	6
Where to go	7
When to go	12
Things not to miss	15

Basics 25–68

Getting there	27
Getting around	32
Accommodation	39
Food and drink	43
Festivals	46
Sports and outdoor activities...	48
National parks and outdoor activities	49
Shopping	54
Traveling with children	55
Gay and lesbian travelers	56
Women travelers	57
Travel essentials	58

Guide 69–1288

1 New York City	71
2 The Mid-Atlantic	129
3 New England	197
4 The Great Lakes	301
5 The Capital Region	397
6 The South	483
7 Florida	607
8 Louisiana	673
9 Texas	713

10 The Great Plains	769
11 The Rockies	835
12 The Southwest	919
13 California	1027
14 The Pacific Northwest	1163
15 Alaska	1221
16 Hawaii	1259

Contexts 1289–1326

A brief history of the USA	1291
Books	1314
Film	1324

Travel store 1325–1328

Small print & Index 1329–1352

American food color section following p.264

Music color section following p.504

The great outdoors color section following p.776

Architecture in America color section following p.1112

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Introduction to the

USA

Perhaps no other country has left as great an impression on the contemporary world as the United States – a big achievement for such a (relatively) young nation. Lauded as a beacon of freedom, where over the centuries millions of immigrants have come to better their lives, and reviled as an international bully, perhaps never more so than in recent years, it's a place you have to explore in order to understand and appreciate.

The images of the country that named itself after a continent are embedded in the mind of every traveler: endless highways cutting through shimmering deserts; forests of skyscrapers towering over urban jungles; acres of beaches dotted with surfboards and suntanned skin; high mountain peaks and green river valleys; magnificent feats of engineering, from the Brooklyn Bridge to the Hoover Dam. The country's emblems are so familiar that they constitute as much a part of the world's culture as its own – Lady Liberty, the Grand Canyon, the Empire State Building, the US Capitol, the “Hollywood” sign . . . the list goes on.

The combination of a shoot-from-the-hip mentality with laissez-faire capitalism and religious fervor can make the USA maddening at times, even to its own residents. But what's most surprising, perhaps, is how such an initially daunting land can prove so enticing – its vibrant mix of peoples, striking landscapes and city skylines, and rich musical, cinematic, and culinary heritage seduce almost every visitor in the end.

And for all of its pride and bluster, the USA can be a land of quiet nuances: snow falling on a country lane in Vermont, cherry trees blooming under Washington memorials, crocodiles swimming through the bayou. You could easily plan a trip that focuses on the out-of-the-way hamlets, remote wilderness, eerie ghost towns, and forgotten byways that are every bit as “American” as its showpiece icons and monuments. Putting aside the sheer size of the place, deciding exactly what version of America you want to see may be the hardest decision of all.

One of the principal joys of getting to know the country is the repeated, delicious shock of the familiar

Where to go

Traveling in the United States is extremely easy; in a country where everyone seems to be forever on the move, there's rarely any problem finding a room for the night, and you can almost invariably depend on being able to eat well and

Fact file

- The US government is divided into three branches: the executive, headed by the president; the legislative, which comprises the Senate and the House of Representatives; and the judicial, with the Supreme Court as its highest office.
- Despite New York's status as the cultural and economic center of the US, the federal capital is in Washington DC, which doesn't even rank among the top twenty cities in terms of population (though officially, it is a district, not a city).
- The population of the US (some 300 million) owns 200 million cars and trucks (roughly 1 vehicle for every 1.4 people), with more than 5.7 million miles of paved highway on which to drive them.
- With an area of 9.6 million square kilometers, the US is the third-largest country in the world (ranking behind Russia and Canada).
- The US is the only country that contains all six major climate zones: tropical humid, dry, mild mid-latitude, severe mid-latitude, polar, and high-land.
- With its Aleutian Islands crossing the Greenwich Meridian, Alaska is technically home to both the easternmost and westernmost points in the US. Alaska also has the highest point in the US, Mount McKinley (20,320ft), and is the largest state by area (Rhode Island is the smallest).

▲ The Washington Monument

throughout; you can pretty much get to wherever you choose by a nationwide network of air, bus, and rail. However, if you do travel this way, there's a real temptation to see America as a succession of big cities. True enough, New York and Los Angeles have an exhilarating dynamism and excitement, and among their worthy rivals are New Orleans, the wonderfully decadent home of jazz, Chicago, a showcase of modern architecture, and San Francisco, on the beautiful Pacific bay. Few other cities – with the possible, and idiosyncratic, exception of Las Vegas, shimmering in the desert – can quite match this level of interest, however, and following a heavily urban itinerary will cut you off from the astonishing landscapes that make the USA truly distinctive. Especially in the vast open spaces of the West, the scenery is often breathtaking. The glacial splendor of inexpensively. The development of transportation has played a major role in the growth of the nation; the railroad opened the way for transcontinental migrations, while the automobile has been responsible for shaping most of the great cities. Your experience of the country will be very much flavored by how you choose to get around.

By far the best way to explore the country is to drive your own vehicle: it takes a long time before the sheer pleasure of cruising down the highway, with the radio blaring blues or country music, and the signs to Chicago, Memphis, or Monument Valley flashing past, begins to pall. Car rental is reasonable, and every main road is lined with budget motels charging around $50 per night for a good room.

We also give detailed public transportation options

Traveling through American history

To explore the United States is to explore its history. Some early European settlements, such as St Augustine, Florida, and Santa Fe, New Mexico, founded by the Spanish in 1565 and 1609 respectively, remain thriving to this day. Others, like Roanoke Island in North Carolina, home to Sir Walter Raleigh's ill-fated "Lost Colony" of 1585; Jamestown, Virginia, established in 1607; and Plimoth Plantation in Massachusetts, where the Pilgrims landed in 1620, are now preserved as fascinating living-history parks.

Other sites commemorate the two major conflicts fought on US soil: the Revolutionary War and the Civil War. Among Revolutionary landmarks are a plaque (and replica ship and museum) honoring 1773's legendary "Tea Party" in Boston, Massachusetts; Minute Man National Park in nearby Lexington, where the "shot heard 'round the world" was fired in 1775; and Philadelphia's Independence Hall, which hosted the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776. Civil War flashpoints scattered throughout the South, Capital, and mid-Atlantic regions include Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, site of John Brown's infamous (and ill-fated) raid in 1859; Fort Sumter, off Charleston, South Carolina, where the war's first shots were fired in 1861; and Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, scene, in 1863, of the bloodiest battle of all, as well as Abraham Lincoln's immortal address.

Pilgrims also flock to the scenes of tragedies that have shaped US history over the last century, like the spot in Dallas, Texas, where President John F. Kennedy was assassinated in 1963, and the motel (now a museum) in Memphis, Tennessee, where Dr Martin Luther King Jr was gunned down in 1968. The only two sites where the US has been attacked on its own soil by foreign invaders receive throngs of visitors each year as well: Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, which was bombed on December 7, 1941, and Ground Zero, in New York City, where the World Trade Center stood before it was destroyed by terrorists on September 11, 2001.

Yosemite, the thermal wonderland of Yellowstone, the awesome red-rock canyons of Arizona and Utah, and the spectacular Rocky Mountains are among many of the treasures preserved and protected in the excellent national park system. Once you reach such wilderness, the potential for hiking and camping is magnificent – but it's usually essential to have a car to get near these spots.

Above all, travelers can enjoy the sheer thrill of experiencing American popular culture in the places where it began. Rock 'n' roll place-names spring to life; panoramas etched on our consciousness from a century of movies spread across the horizon; and road trips taken by your favorite literary characters are still there to be traveled.

For music fans, the chance to hear country music in Nashville or rhythm and blues in New Orleans, to shake it in a Mississippi jook-joint, or to visit Elvis's grave in Memphis, verges on a religious experience; readers brought up on the books of Mark Twain can ride a sternwheeler on the Mississippi; and movie-goers can live out their Wild West fantasies in the rugged Utah deserts.

The Wild West

Nowhere in the US is imbued with myth and history quite like the Wild West, much of which remains unchanged since the days of pioneers, prospectors, and, of course, "cowboys and Indians." In Lincoln, New Mexico, you can trace the footsteps of Billy the Kid; in Tombstone, Arizona, you can relive the gunfight at the OK Corral; and at Little Bighorn, Montana, you can climb the windswept hillside where General Custer made his "Last Stand." Colorado and California still abound with ghost towns abandoned when the gold and silver mines played out, while the great cattle drives are commemorated in Dodge City, Kansas, and Fort Worth, Texas. Above all, many Native Americans continue to inhabit their ancestral lands, especially in the Southwest, where the Hopi and the Ácomans survive in remote mesa-top villages, the Navajo ride through Monument Valley, and the Havasupai still farm alongside magical waterfalls deep in the Grand Canyon.

The United States is all too often dismissed, even by its own inhabitants, as a land almost devoid of history. Though mainstream America tends to trace its roots back to the Pilgrims and Puritans of New England, the land itself has a longer history, stretching back way beyond the French culture of Louisiana and the Spanish presence in California to the majestic cliff palaces built by the Ancestral Puebloans in the Southwest a thousand years ago. There are also any number of fascinating strands to America's post-revolutionary history: relics of the Gold Rush in California, of the Civil Rights years in the South, or of the Civil War anywhere east of the Mississippi.

Though we've had to structure this book regionally, the most invigorating expeditions are those that take in more than one area. You do not, however, have to cross the entire continent from shore to shore in order to appreciate its amazing diversity, or to be impressed by the way in which such an extraordinary range of topography and people has been melded into one nation. It would take a long time to see the whole country, and the more time you spend on the road simply getting from place to place – no matter how enjoyable in itself that can be – the less time you'll have to savor the small-town pleasures and back-road oddities that may well provide your strongest memories. It will hit you early on that there is no such thing as a typical American person, any more than there is a typical American landscape, but there can be few places where strangers can feel so confident of a warm reception.

When to go

All US cities are pretty much year-round destinations (though Fairbanks, Alaska, in winter and Houston, Texas, in summer can be less than ideal), national parks and mountain ranges sometimes less so.

The US climate is characterized by wide variations, not just from region to region and season to season, but also day to day and hour to hour. Even setting aside far-flung Alaska and Hawaii, the main body of the US is subject to dramatically shifting weather patterns, most notably produced by westerly winds sweeping across the continent from the Pacific. As a general rule, however, temperatures tend to rise the further south you go, and to fall the higher you climb, while the climate along either coast is, on the whole, milder and more uniform than inland.

The Northeast, from Maine down to Washington DC, experiences relatively low precipitation as a rule, but temperatures can range from bitterly cold in winter to uncomfortably hot (made worse by humidity) in the short summer. Farther south, summers get warmer and longer. Florida's air temperatures are not necessarily dramatically high in summer, being kept down by the proximity of the sea both east and west; in the winter, the state is warm and sunny enough to attract visitors from all over the country.

The Great Plains, which for climatic purposes can be said to extend from the Appalachians to the Rockies, are alternately exposed to icy Arctic winds streaming down from Canada and humid tropical airflows from the Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico. Winters in the north, around the Great Lakes and Chicago, can be abjectly cold, with driving winds and freezing rain. It can freeze or even snow in winter as far south as the Gulf of Mexico, though spring and fall get progressively longer and milder farther south through the Plains. Summer is much the wettest season in the South as a whole, the time when thunderstorms are most likely to strike. One or two hurricanes each year rage across Florida and/or the Southeast, from obscure origins in the Gulf of Mexico on the way to extinction out in the Atlantic. Tornadoes (or “twisters”) are usually a much more local phenomenon, tending to cut a narrow swath of destruction in the wake of violent spring or summer thunderstorms. Average rainfall dwindles to lower and lower levels the further west you head across the Plains.

▲ Nantucket, Massachusetts

Temperatures in the Rockies correlate closely with altitude; beyond the mountains in the south lie the extensive arid and inhospitable deserts of the Southwest. Much of this area is within the rain shadow of the California ranges. In cities such as Las Vegas and Phoenix, the mercury regularly soars above 100°F, though the atmosphere is not usually humid enough to be as enervating as that might sound.

West of the barrier of the Cascade Mountains, the fertile Pacific Northwest is the only region of the country where winter is the wettest season, and throughout the year the European-style climate is wet, mild, and seldom hot. California weather more or less lives up to the popular idyllic image, though the climate is markedly hotter and drier in the south than in the north, where there’s enough snow to make the mountains a major skiing destination. San Francisco is kept milder and colder than the surrounding district by the propensity of the Bay Area to attract sea fog, while the Los Angeles basin is prone to filling up with smog, as fog and pollution become trapped beneath a layer of warm air.

▼ The French Quarter, New Orleans, LA

See overleaf for corresponding climate chart

Average temperature (°F) and rainfall

To convert °F to °C, subtract 32 and multiply by 5/9

	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	May	June	July	Aug	Sept	Oct	Nov	Dec
Anchorage
av. max temp	19	27	33	44	54	62	65	64	57	43	30	20
av. min temp	5	9	13	27	36	44	49	47	39	29	15	6
days of rain	7	6	5	4	5	6	10	15	14	12	7	6
Boston
av. max temp	36	37	43	54	66	75	80	78	71	62	49	40
av. min temp	20	21	28	39	49	58	63	62	55	46	35	25
days of rain	12	10	12	11	11	10	10	10	9	9	10	11
Chicago
av. max temp	32	34	43	55	65	75	81	79	73	61	47	36
av. min temp	18	20	29	40	50	60	66	65	58	47	34	23
days of rain	11	10	12	11	12	11	9	9	9	9	10	11
Honolulu
av. max temp	76	76	77	78	80	81	82	83	83	82	80	78
av. min temp	69	67	67	68	70	72	73	74	74	72	70	69
days of rain	14	11	13	12	11	12	14	13	13	13	13	15
Las Vegas
av. max temp	60	67	72	81	89	99	103	102	95	84	71	61
av. min temp	29	34	39	45	52	61	68	66	57	47	36	30
days of rain	2	2	2	1	1	1	2	2	1	1	1	2
Los Angeles
av. max temp	65	66	67	70	72	76	81	82	81	76	73	67
av. min temp	46	47	48	50	53	56	60	60	58	54	50	47
days of rain	6	6	6	4	2	1	0	0	1	2	3	6
Miami
av. max temp	74	75	78	80	84	86	88	88	87	83	78	76
av. min temp	61	61	64	67	71	74	76	76	75	72	66	62
days of rain	9	6	7	7	12	13	15	15	18	16	10	7
New Orleans
av. max temp	62	65	71	77	83	88	90	90	86	79	70	64
av. min temp	47	50	55	61	68	74	76	76	73	64	55	48
days of rain	10	12	9	7	8	13	15	14	10	7	7	10
New York City
av. max temp	37	38	45	57	68	77	82	80	79	69	51	41
av. min temp	24	24	30	42	53	60	66	66	60	49	37	29
days of rain	12	10	12	11	11	10	12	10	9	9	9	10
San Francisco
av. max temp	55	59	61	62	63	66	65	65	69	68	63	57
av. min temp	45	47	48	49	51	52	53	53	55	54	51	47
days of rain	11	11	10	6	4	2	0	0	2	4	7	10
Seattle
av. max temp	45	48	52	58	64	69	72	73	67	59	51	47
av. min temp	36	37	39	43	47	52	54	55	52	47	41	38
days of rain	18	16	16	13	12	9	4	5	8	13	17	19
Washington DC
av. max temp	42	44	53	64	75	83	87	84	78	67	55	45
av. min temp	27	28	35	44	54	63	68	66	58	48	38	29
days of rain	11	10	12	11	12	11	11	11	8	8	9	10

38

things not to miss

It's not possible to see everything that the USA has to offer in one trip – and we don't suggest you try. What follows is a selective and subjective taste of the country's highlights: unforgettable cities, spectacular drives, magnificent parks, spirited celebrations, and stunning natural phenomena. They're arranged in five color-coded categories to help you find the very best things to see, do, and experience. All highlights have a page reference to take you straight into the Guide, where you can find out more.

02 Savannah, GA Page 534

• Mint juleps on wide verandas, horse-drawn carriages on cobbled streets, and lush foliage draped with Spanish moss; this historic cotton port remains the South's loveliest town.

03 Walt Disney World, Orlando, FL Page 648

• Though each of Orlando's theme parks strives to outdo the rest, Walt Disney World remains the one to beat.

04 Niagara Falls, NY Page 154
• The sheer power of Niagara Falls is even more overwhelming when seen from below, aboard the Maid of the Mist.

05 Kentucky Derby, KY Page 549
• Two weeks of wild partying precedes the world's most thrilling thoroughbred race.

06 Yellowstone National Park, WY Page 880 • The national park that started it all has it all, from steaming fluorescent hot springs and spouting geysers to sheer canyons and meadows filled with wildflowers and assorted grazing beasts.

07 Mardi Gras, New Orleans, LA Page 698 • Crazy, colorful, debauched, and historic – this is the carnival to end them all.

08 Pike Place Market, Seattle, WA Page 1170 • Piled high with salmon, lobster, clams, and crab, the oldest public market in the nation is also home to some great seafood restaurants.

09 Glacier National Park, MT Page 905 • Montana's loveliest park holds not only fifty glaciers, but also two thousand lakes, a thousand miles of rivers, and the exhilarating Going-to-the-Sun road.

10

Monticello, VA Page 447 •

This elegant estate, designed by Thomas Jefferson himself, was the former president's home and final resting place.

11 Ancestral Puebloan sites Page 933 •

Scattered through desert landscapes like New Mexico's magnificent Bandelier National Monument, the dwellings of the Ancestral Puebloans afford glimpses of an ancient and mysterious world.

12 Hiking in the Grand Canyon Page

968 • Explore the innermost secrets of this wondrous spot on many of its superb hiking trails at the heart of California's best-loved park.

13 Swamps Page 664

& 770 • From the steamy Everglades of Florida to the ghostly bayous of Louisiana's Cajun country, America's swamplands are hauntingly beautiful.

14 San Francisco, CA Page 1109 • Enchanting, fog-bound San Francisco remains bohemian and individualistic at heart.

15 New England in the fall Page 199 • The Northeast's breathtaking fall foliage presents an ever-changing palette of color and light.

16 Yosemite Valley, CA Page 1093 • Enclosed by near-vertical, mile-high cliffs, and laced with hiking trails and climbing routes, the dramatic geology of Yosemite Valley is at the heart of California's best-loved park.

17 Eating a Philly cheesesteak, PA Page 168 • Dig into this sloppy feast of a meal, born in Philadelphia's South Side.

18
Cheyenne Frontier Days, WY
 Page 873 • Relive the Old West with some cowboys and cowgirls at the world's most prestigious outdoor rodeo.

19 Hawaii's volcanoes Page 1275 • Hawaii's Big Island grows bigger by the minute, as the world's most active volcano pours molten lava into the ocean.

20 Sternwheeler rides
 Pages 555, 681, & 786 • Just as they did in Mark Twain's day, steam-driven sternwheelers still ply the Mississippi from great old river towns like New Orleans, St Louis, and Memphis.

21
Aurora borealis, AK
 Page 1258 • Winter visitors to Alaska just might see the skies ablaze with the shimmering veils of the Northern Lights.

22 Big Bend National Park, TX
 Page 762 • Forcing the Rio Grande – and the Mexican frontier – to take a very big bend indeed, Texas's remote Chisos Mountains form a vast, barely charted enclave that bursts into color each spring.

23 Mount Rushmore, SD
 Page 824 • Preserved in the sternest granite, this larger-than-life monument presides forever above the Black Hills of South Dakota.

24 Country Music Hall of Fame, Nashville, TN
 Page 569 •

Everything you ever wanted to know about country music, explained in loving detail.

25 The Strip, Las Vegas, NV
 Page 1014 • With its erupting volcanoes, Eiffel Tower, and Egyptian pyramid, the legendary Strip will blow your mind as well as your wallet.

26 Miami's Art Deco, FL
Page 616 • This flamboyant city is deservedly famed for the colorful pastel architecture of its restored South Beach district.

27 Skiing in the Rocky Mountains

Pages 854, 858 & 861
• The Rockies make for some of the best skiing anywhere, with their glitzy resorts and atmospheric mining towns.

28 Going to a baseball game

Page 363 • America's summer pastime is a treat to watch wherever you are, from Chicago's ivy-clad Wrigley Field to Boston's Fenway Park, the oldest in the country.

29 The National Mall, Washington DC

Page 409 • From the Lincoln Memorial to the US Capitol by way of the towering Washington Monument – the National Mall is an awesome showcase of American culture and history.

30 Austin nightlife, TX Page 740 • Laid-back, progressive, and home to an eclectic live-music scene – Austin is like nowhere else in the state.

31 Driving Highway 1 Page 1101 • The rugged Big Sur coastline, pounded by Pacific waves, makes an exhilarating route between San Francisco and LA.

32 Chicago's modern architecture, IL
Page 351 • The history of modern architecture is writ large on Chicago's skyline, site of the world's first skyscraper.

33 Graceland, Memphis, TN Page 562 • Pilgrims from all over the world pay homage to the King by visiting his gravesite and endearingly modest home.

34 Baltimore crabs, MD Page 466 • Tear into some delicious, fresh steamed crabs, the pride and joy of this characterful port city.

35 Mount St Helens, WA Page 1193 • A breathtaking example of volcanic devastation, wrought by a powerful eruption in 1980.

36 Sweet Auburn, Atlanta, GA Page 526 •

This historic district holds the birthplace of Dr Martin Luther King Jr, the Center for Nonviolent Social Change, and other spots honoring King's legacy.

37 Saguaro cactus Page 954 • The astonishing saguaro, which can reach fifty feet tall, grow as many as forty arms, and live for two centuries, is emblematic of the desert Southwest.

38 Hitting the open road Page 36 & The Great Outdoors Color section • There's no better way to experience the staggering diversity of people and places in this vast country.

Basics

Basics

Getting there	27
Getting around.....	32
Accommodation.....	39
Food and drink.....	43
Festivals	46
Sports and outdoor activities.....	48
National parks and outdoor activities	49
Shopping.....	54
Traveling with children	55
Gay and lesbian travelers	56
Women travelers.....	57
Travel essentials.....	58

Getting there

Anyone traveling to the US from abroad has to begin by deciding which area they want to explore first; the country is so vast that it makes a huge difference which airport you fly into. Once you've chosen whether to hit the swamps of Florida, the frozen tundra of Alaska, the summer heat of the South, or the splendor of the Rockies and Southwest, you can then buy a flight to the nearest hub city.

In general, ticket prices are highest from July to September, and then around Easter and Christmas. Fares drop during the shoulder seasons – April to June, and October. You'll get the best prices during the low season, November to March (excluding Easter, Christmas, and the New Year, when prices are hiked up and seats are at a premium). If anything, the cost depends more on when Americans want to head overseas than on the demand from foreign visitors. Flying on weekends ordinarily adds a substantial amount to the round-trip fare; prices quoted below assume midweek travel.

Flights from the UK and Ireland

More than twenty US cities are accessible by nonstop flights from the UK. At these gateway cities, you can connect with onward domestic flights into the rest of the country. Direct services (which may land once or twice on the way, but are called direct if they keep the same flight number throughout their journey) fly from Britain to nearly every other major US city.

Nonstop flights to Los Angeles from London take eleven or twelve hours; the London–Miami flight takes eight hours; while flying time to New York is seven or so hours. Following winds ensure that return flights are always an hour or two shorter than outward journeys. One-stop direct flights to destinations beyond the East Coast add time to the journey, but can work out cheaper than nonstop flights. They can even save you time, because customs and immigration are cleared on first touchdown into the US rather than the final destination, which may be a busy international gateway.

Four airlines run nonstop scheduled services to the US from Ireland. Flights depart from both Dublin and Shannon airports, and the journey times are very similar to those from London.

As for fares, Britain remains one of the best places in Europe to obtain flight bargains, though prices vary widely according to season, availability, and the current level of inter-airline competition. In low or shoulder season, you should be able to find a return flight to East Coast destinations such as New York for around £250, or to California for more like £325, while high-season rates can be anything up to £400 more expensive. An air pass can be a good idea if you want to see a lot of the country. These are available only to non-US residents, and must be bought before reaching the US (see p.36).

With an open-jaw ticket you can fly into one city and out of another; fares are calculated by halving the return fares to each destination and adding the two figures together. Remember to check whether there is a high drop-off fee for returning a rental car in a different state from the one where you picked it up (see p.36).

Nonstop flights

From London (Heathrow, Gatwick, or Stansted)

Atlanta British Airways, Delta

Baltimore British Airways

Boston American Airlines, British Airways, Virgin Atlantic

Charlotte US Airways

Chicago Air India, American Airlines, British Airways, United, Virgin Atlantic

Cincinnati Delta

Dallas/Fort Worth American Airlines, British Airways

Fly less – stay longer! Travel and climate change

Climate change is a serious threat to the ecosystems upon which humans rely, and air travel is among the fastest-growing contributors to the problem. Rough Guides regard travel, overall, as a global benefit, and feel strongly that the advantages to developing economies are important, as is the opportunity of greater contact and awareness among peoples. But each of us has a responsibility to limit our personal impact on global warming, and that means giving thought to how often we fly, and what we can do to redress the harm that our trips create.

Flying and climate change

Pretty much every form of motorized travel generates CO₂ – the main cause of human-induced climate change – but planes also generate climate-warming contrails and cirrus clouds and emit oxides of nitrogen, which create ozone (another greenhouse gas) at flight levels. Furthermore, flying simply allows us to travel much further than we otherwise would do. The figures are frightening: one person taking a return flight between Europe and California produces the equivalent impact of 2.5 tonnes of CO₂ – similar to the yearly output of the average car in the UK.

Fuel-cell and other less harmful types of plane may emerge eventually. But until then, there are really just two options for concerned travelers: to reduce the amount we travel by air (take fewer trips – stay for longer!), and to make the trips we do take “climate neutral” via a carbon-offset scheme.

Carbon-offset schemes

Offset schemes run by @climatecare.org, @carbonneutral.com and others allow you to make up for some or all of the greenhouse gases that you are responsible for releasing. To do this, they provide “carbon calculators” for working out the global-warming contribution of a specific flight (or even your entire existence), and then let you contribute an appropriate amount of money to fund offsetting measures. These include rainforest reforestation and initiatives to reduce future energy demand – often run in conjunction with sustainable development schemes.

Rough Guides, together with Lonely Planet and other concerned partners in the travel industry, are supporting a carbon-offset scheme run by climatecare.org. Please take the time to view our website and see how you can help to make your trip climate-neutral.

🌐 www.roughguides.com/climatechange

Denver British Airways

Detroit Northwest, British Airways

Houston British Airways, Continental

Las Vegas Virgin Atlantic

Los Angeles Air New Zealand, American Airlines, British Airways, United, Virgin Atlantic

Miami American Airlines, British Airways, Virgin Atlantic

Minneapolis Northwest

New York Air India, American Airlines, British Airways, Continental, Kuwait Airways, Virgin Atlantic

Orlando British Airways, Virgin Atlantic

Philadelphia British Airways, US Airways

Phoenix British Airways

Raleigh/Durham American Airlines

San Francisco British Airways, Continental, United, Virgin Atlantic

Seattle British Airways

Washington DC British Airways, United, Virgin Atlantic

From Birmingham

New York Continental

From Manchester

Atlanta Delta

Boston American Airlines

Chicago American Airlines, BMI (seasonal), United

Las Vegas BMI

New York American Airlines, British Airways, Continental, Delta

Orlando Virgin Atlantic

Philadelphia US Airways

From Edinburgh

Atlanta Delta

New York Continental

From Glasgow

Chicago British Airways

New York British Airways, Continental

From Dublin/Shannon

Atlanta Delta

Boston Aer Lingus

Chicago Aer Lingus, American Airlines

Los Angeles Aer Lingus, American Airlines

New York Aer Lingus, American Airlines, Continental, Delta

Flights from Australia, New Zealand and South Africa

If you're traveling from Australasia to the US, the most expensive time to fly is during the northern summer (mid-May to end Aug) and over the Christmas period (Dec to mid-Jan); shoulder seasons cover March to mid-May and September, while the rest of the year is low season.

Los Angeles is the main US gateway airport for flights from Australia: in low season, the regular Air New Zealand, Qantas, and United flights cost around Aus$1500 from the eastern states, or Aus$2000 from Western Australia, including tax; flying all the way through to New York can cost as little as $50 extra. During peak season, however, fares to the US West Coast start at more like Aus$2500, and to New York at Aus$3000.

From New Zealand, fares from Auckland or Christchurch to LA or San Francisco start at around NZ$1700 in low season, and range up to around NZ$3000 for a flight to New York in summer.

Various add-on fares and air passes valid in the continental US are available with your main ticket, allowing you to fly to destinations across the States. These must be bought before you go.

Airlines, agents and operators

Online booking

www.cheapflights.com (US), www.cheapflights.co.uk (UK), www.cheapflights.ca (Canada), www.cheapflights.com.au (Australia), www.cheaptickets.com
www.ebookers.com

www.expedia.co.uk (in UK), www.expedia.com (in US), www.expedia.ca (in Canada)
www.flyawow.com
www.hotwire.com
www.lastminute.com (UK), www.lastminute.com.au (Australia), www.lastminute.co.nz (New Zealand), www.opodo.co.uk (in UK)
www.orbitz.com (in US)
www.site59.com (US)
www.travelocity.co.uk (in UK), www.travelocity.com (in US), www.travelocity.ca (in Canada), www.zuji.com.au (in Australia), www.zuji.co.nz (in New Zealand)

Airlines

Aer Lingus US and Canada ☎ 1-800/IRISH-AIR, UK ☎ 0870/876 5000, Republic of Ireland ☎ 0818/365 000, www.aerlingus.com.

Air Canada ☎ 1-888/247-2262, UK ☎ 0871/220 1111, Republic of Ireland ☎ 01/679 3958, Australia ☎ 1300/655 76, New Zealand ☎ 0508/747-767, www.aircanada.com.

Air France US ☎ 1-800/237-2747, Canada ☎ 1-800/667-2747, UK ☎ 0870/142 4343, Australia ☎ 1300/390-190, www.airfrance.com.

Air India US ☎ 1-800/223-7776, Canada ☎ 416/865-1033, UK ☎ 020/8560 9996 or 8745 1000, Australia ☎ 02/9283 4020, New Zealand ☎ 09/631 5651; www.airindia.com.

Air New Zealand UK US ☎ 1-800/262-1234, Canada ☎ 1-800/663-5494, UK ☎ 0800/028-4149, Republic of Ireland ☎ 1800/551-447, New Zealand ☎ 0800/737 000, www.airnewzealand.com.

Air Scotland UK ☎ 0141/222-2363, www.air-scotland.com.

Airtran US ☎ 1-800/247-8726, www.airtran.com

Alaska Airlines US ☎ 1-800/252-7522, www.alaskaair.com.

Alitalia US ☎ 1-800/223-5730, Canada ☎ 1-800/361-8336, UK ☎ 0870/544 8259, Republic of Ireland ☎ 01/677 5171, New Zealand ☎ 09/308 3357, www.alitalia.com.

American Airlines US ☎ 1-800/433-7300, UK ☎ 0845/7789 789, Republic of Ireland ☎ 01/602 0550, Australia ☎ 1300/650 7347, New Zealand ☎ 0800/887 997, www.aa.com.

American Trans Air US ☎ 1-800/435-9282, www.ata.com

America West US ☎ 1-800/235-9292, www.americawest.com.

Australian Airlines Australia ☎ 1300/799 798, www.australianairlines.com.au.

British Airways US and Canada ☎ 1-800/AIRWAYS, UK ☎ 0870/850 9850, Republic of Ireland 1890/626 747, Australia 1300/767 177, New Zealand 09/966 9777, www.ba.com.

BMI US 1-800/788-0555, UK 0870/607 0555, Ireland 01/407-3036, www.flybmi.com.
Continental Airlines US and Canada 1-800/523-3273, UK 0845/607 6760, Ireland 1890/925-252, Australia 2/9244 2242, NZ 9/308 3350, International 1-800/231-0856, www.continental.com.
Delta US and Canada 1-800/221-1212, UK 0845/600 0950, Republic of Ireland 1850/882-031 or 01/407 3165, Australia 1-300/302-849, New Zealand 09/379 3370, www.delta.com.
Hawaiian Airlines US 1-800/367-5320, www.hawaiianair.com.
JAL (Japan Air Lines) US and Canada 1-800/525-3663, UK 0845/774 7700, Ireland 01/408 3757, Australia 02/9272 1111, New Zealand 09/379 9906, www.jal.com or www.japanair.com.
JetBlue US 1-800/JET-BLUE, www.jetblue.com.
Korean Air US and Canada 1-800/438-5000, UK 0800/0656 2001, Republic of Ireland 01/799 7990, Australia 02/9262 6000, New Zealand 09/914 2000, www.koreanair.com.
Kuwait Airways US 201/582-9200, UK 020/7412 0006, www.kuwait-airways.com.
Lufthansa US 1-800/645-3880, Canada 1-800/563-5954, UK 0870/837 7747, Republic of Ireland 01/844 5544, Australia 1300/655 727, New Zealand 09/303 1529, www.lufthansa.com.
Malaysia Airlines US 1-800/552-9264, UK 0870/607 9090, Republic of Ireland 01/676 2131, Australia 293/13 26 27, New Zealand 0800/777 747, www.malaysia-airlines.com.
Mexicana US 1-800/531-7921, Canada 1-866/281-3094, UK 020/8492 0000, Australia 03/9699 9355, New Zealand 09/914 2573, SA 011/784-0985, www.mexicana.com.
Midwest Express US 1800/452-2022, www.midwestairlines.com.
Northwest 1-800/225-2525, UK 0870/507 4074, www.nwa.com.
Qantas US and Canada 1-800/227-4500, UK 0845/774 7767, Republic of Ireland 01/407 3278, Australia 13 13 13, New Zealand 0800/808 767 or 09/357 8900, www.qantas.com.
SAS (Scandinavian Airlines) US 1-800/221-2350, Canada 1800/221-2350, UK 0870/6072 7727, Republic of Ireland 01/844 5440, Australia 1300/727 707, SA 011/484-4711, www.scandinavian.net.
Singapore Airlines US 1-800/742-3333, Canada 1-800/ 663-3046, UK 0844/800 2380, Republic of Ireland 01/671 0722, Australia 13 10 11, New Zealand 0800/808-909, www.singaporeair.com.

Southwest US 1-800/435-9792, www.southwest.com

Swiss US 1-877/FLY-SWIS, UK 0845/601 0956, Australia 1300/724 666, New Zealand 09/977 2238, www.swiss.com.

Ted 1-800/225-5833, www.flyted.com.

United US 1-800/241-6522, UK 0845/844 4777, Australia 13 17 77, www.united.com.

US Airways US and Canada 1-800/428-4322, UK 0845/600-3300, Ireland 1890-925065, www.usair.com

Virgin Atlantic US 1-800/821-5438, UK 0870/380 2007, Australia 1300/727-340, www.virgin-atlantic.com.

Agents and operators

Adventure World Australia 02/8913 0755, www.adventureworld.com.au, New Zealand 09/524 5118, www.adventureworld.co.nz.

Agents for a vast array of international adventure travel companies that operate trips to every continent.

American Holidays Northern Ireland 028/9031 0000, Republic of Ireland 01/673 3840 www.american-holidays.com. Offers tour packages from Ireland to North America.

Bon Voyage UK 0800/316 0194, www.bonvoyage.co.uk. Tailor-made trips to the US.

British Airways Holidays UK 0870/850 9850, www.baholidays.co.uk. Packages and independent itineraries for both long trips and short city-breaks.

North America Travel Service UK 020/7499 7299, www.northamericatravelservice.co.uk. Various itineraries cater to city-breaks, cruises, spa vacations, guided tours, and more.

ebookers UK 0800/082 3000, Republic of Ireland 01/488-3507, www.ebookers.com. Low fares on an extensive selection of scheduled flights and package deals.

Exodus UK 020/8675 5550, www.exodus.co.uk. Adventure and action-oriented vacation packages focused on low-impact tourism.

Explore Worldwide UK 0870/333 4001, www.explore.co.uk. Hundreds of group tours including everything from short weekend trips to action-oriented family adventures.

Jetsave UK 0870/162 3502, www.jetsave.co.uk. Packages to North America include airfare, accommodation, and guided tours.

North South Travel UK 01245/608 291, www.northsouthtravel.co.uk. Friendly, competitive travel agency, offering discounted fares worldwide. Profits are used to support projects in the developing world, especially the promotion of sustainable tourism.

Saddle Skedaddle UK ☎0191/265 1110, @www.skedaddle.co.uk. Biking and activity-oriented tours.

STA Travel US ☎1-800/781-4040, Canada ☎1-888/427-5639, UK ☎0870/1630 026, Australia ☎1300/733 035, New Zealand ☎0508/782 872. Worldwide specialists in independent travel; also student IDs, travel insurance, car rental, rail passes, and more. Good discounts for students and under-26s. @www.statravel.com.

Sydney Travel Australia ☎02/9220 9230, @www.sydneytravel.com. Flights, accommodation, city stays, and car rental.

Titan HiTours UK ☎01293/455345, @www.titantravel.co.uk. Escorted tours, tailor-made itineraries, cruises, and more.

travel.com.au Australia ☎1300/130 482, @www.travel.com.au. Itineraries, accommodation, and car hire, as well as ski trips, adventure travel, and family vacations.

travel.co.nz New Zealand ☎0800/468 332, @www.travel.co.nz

Travelsphere UK ☎0870/240 2426, @www.travelsphere.co.uk. Wide-range of options includes, among other things, cruises, activity-based vacations, and short trips.

TrekAmerica UK ☎0870/444-8735, @www.trekamerica.co.uk. Offers small-group adventure vacations.

Trailfinders UK ☎0845/058 5858, Republic of Ireland ☎01/677 7888, Australia ☎1300/780 212, @www.trailfinders.com. One of the best-informed and most efficient agents for independent travellers.

Rail contacts

Amtrak US ☎1-800/872-7245, @www.amtrak.com.

Packages and tours

There are countless flight and accommodation packages to all the major American cities. Although you can often do things cheaper independently, these allow you to leave the organizational hassles to someone else. Drawbacks include the loss of flexibility and the fact that you'll probably be made to stay in hotels in the mid-range to expensive bracket, even though less expensive accommodation is almost always readily available. A typical package might be a roundtrip flight plus mid-range Midtown hotel accommodation for three nights in New York City, starting at around £500 per person in low season and more like £800 at peak periods. Pre-booked accommodation schemes, where you buy vouchers for use in a specific group of hotels, are not normally good value.

Fly-drive deals, which give cut-rate (sometimes free) car rental when a traveler buys a transatlantic ticket from an airline or tour operator, are always cheaper than renting on the spot, and give great value if you intend to do a lot of driving. They're readily available through general online booking agents such as Expedia and Travelocity, as well as through specific airlines.

Several of the operators listed here go one stage further and book accommodation for self-drive tours; some travelers consider having their itineraries planned and booked by experts to be a real boon. Bon Voyage, for example, arranges tailor-made packages in the Southwest; the cost of twelve nights in Arizona, Utah, and Nevada, flying into Las Vegas and out from Phoenix, and staying in standard hotels, ranges from around £1300 per person in low season up to more like £1700 at other times.

A simple and exciting way to see a chunk of America's great outdoors, without being hassled by too many practical considerations, is to take a specialist touring and adventure package, which includes transportation, accommodation, food, and a guide. Companies such as TrekAmerica carry small groups around on minibuses and use a combination of budget hotels and camping. Most concentrate on the West – ranging from Arizona to Alaska, and lasting from seven days to five weeks; cross-country treks and Eastern adventures that take in New York or Florida are also available. Typical rates for a two-week trip – excluding transatlantic flights – range from £519 in low season up to £800 in midsummer. Trips to Alaska cost a good bit more. For another touring and adventure package option, see the box on Green Tortoise, p.34.

contiki
HOLIDAYS for 18-35's

Whether you're after a weekend break in New York or a 24 day extravaganza across 22 states of America... Contiki offer a hassle free experience of a lifetime!

18 action packed adventures!
Includes fantastic accommodation, transport, many meals, sightseeing and much more!

020 8466 7755 contiki.com
USA, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Bali & Europe

Adventure Travel

TrekAmerica's small group camping, walking, lodging and family tours explore national parks, Native American lands, big cities and small towns of North America.

www.trekamerica.co.uk
(44) 0870 444 8735

STA Travel US ☎ 1-800/781-4040, Canada ☎ 1-888/427-5639, UK ☎ 0870/1630 026, www.statravel.com.

Bus contacts

Greyhound US ☎ 1-800-231-2222, Canada ☎ 1-416-367-8747, www.greyhound.com.

Green Tortoise US and Canada ☎ 1/800-867-8647, www.greentortoise.com.

Peter Pan US ☎ 1/800-237-8747 or 1/413-781-2900, www.peterpanbus.com.

STA Travel US ☎ 1-800/781-4040, Canada ☎ 1-888/427-5639, UK ☎ 0870/1630 026, Australia ☎ 1300/360 960, New Zealand ☎ 0508/782 872, www.statravel.com.

Getting around

Distances in the US are so great that it's essential to think carefully in advance about how you plan to get from place to place. Your choice of transportation will have a crucial impact on your trip. Amtrak provides a skeletal but often scenic rail service, and there are usually good bus links between the major cities. But even in rural areas, by adroit advance planning, you can usually reach the main points of interest without too much trouble by using local buses and charter services.

That said, travel is almost always easier if you have a car. Many worthwhile and memorable US destinations are far from the cities: even if a bus or train can take you to the general vicinity of one of the great national parks, for example, they're of little use when it comes to enjoying the great outdoors. The cities themselves can be so vast, and so heavily car-oriented, that the lack of a car can seriously impair your enjoyment.

For all Amtrak information, and to make reservations, check the Amtrak website, www.amtrak.com, or call toll-free ☎ 1-800/872-7245. Do not phone individual train stations.

By rail

Traveling by rail is rarely the fastest way to get from A to B, though if you have the time it can be a pleasant and relaxing experience. As you will see from our map, on p.34, the Amtrak system isn't comprehensive – such popular destinations as Nashville and Santa Fe, and even some entire states, are left out altogether. What's more, the cross-country routes tend to be served by one or at most two trains per day, so in large areas of the nation the only train of the day passes through at three or four in the morning. That said, the train is by far the most comfortable way to travel, and especially on long-distance rides it can be a great way to meet people. A number of local train services connect stops on the Amtrak lines with towns and cities not on the main grid. Amtrak also runs the coordinated Thruway bus service that connects some cities that their trains don't reach. However, this network is not comprehensive, either.

For any one specific journey, the train can be more expensive than taking a Greyhound bus, or even a plane – the standard rail fare from New York to Los Angeles, for example, is around $185 one-way – though special deals, especially in the off-peak seasons (Sept–May, excluding Christmas), bring the cost of a coast-to-coast round-trip to around $300. Booking online can also yield bargains, with discounts of up to 90 percent posted weekly; there are also a number of money-saving passes available. Flat-rate Explore America fares allow 45 days of travel within one or more of four regions – Western, Central, Florida, and East – covered by the network, allowing a maximum of three stopovers on route. The California rail pass buys you seven days' travel in a 21-day period for $159, while for $249 the Florida Rail Pass gives a year of unlimited travel throughout that state. In addition, foreign travelers can benefit from the passes detailed in the box on p.35.

Even with a pass, you should always reserve as far in advance as possible; all passengers must have seats, and some trains, especially between major east coast cities, are booked solid. Sleeping compartments (which start at around $300 per night, including three full meals, in addition to your seat fare, for one or two people) and the plush Metroliner carriages cost extra. However, even standard Amtrak carriages are surprisingly spacious, and there are additional dining cars and lounge cars (with full bars and sometimes glass-domed 360° viewing compartments).

Beautiful east coast Amtrak trips include the Hudson River Valley north of New York City (on several routes); along the Potomac River at Harpers Ferry, West Virginia (on the Capitol Limited out of Washington DC); and the New River Gorge (on the Cardinal). In the West, the California Zephyr, which runs between Chicago and San Francisco, follows a stunning route west of Denver over the Rockies, rivaled a day later by the towering Sierra Nevada. Last but not least, the Coast Starlight gives While Amtrak has a monopoly on long-distance rail travel, a number of historic or scenic railways, some steam-powered or running along narrow-gauge mining tracks, bring back the glory days of train travel. Many are purely tourist attractions, doing a full circuit through beautiful countryside in two or three hours, though some can drop you off in otherwise hard-to-reach wilderness areas. Fares vary widely according to the length of your trip. We've covered the most appealing options in the relevant guide chapters.

Historic railroads

Green Tortoise

One alternative to Long-Distance Bus Hell is the fun, countercultural Green Tortoise, whose buses, complete with foam cushions, bunks, fridges, and rock music, mostly ply the west and the northwest of the country, but can go as far as New Orleans and New York. Highlights include a national park loop (16 days; $885 including food and park admissions) and the coast-to-coast USA Explorer (37 days; $1600, including food and park admissions); there are more than 25 seductive options, each allowing plenty of stops for hiking, river-rafting, bathing in hot springs and the like.

Green Tortoise's main office is at 494 Broadway, San Francisco, CA 94133 (☎415/956-7500 or 1-800/867-8647, @www.greentortoise.com).

unsurpassed views of the California coast on its journey between San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara. Confirm when you book your journey that the train passes through the scenic splendor during daylight hours.

By bus

If you're traveling on your own and making a lot of stops, buses, by far the cheapest way to get around, make sense. The main long-distance operator, Greyhound (☎1-800/231-2222, @www.greyhound.com, international customers without toll-free access can also call ☎214/849-8100 from 5am–1am CST), links all major cities and many towns. Out in the country, buses are fairly scarce, sometimes appearing only once a day, if at all; here, you'll need to plot your route with care. However, along the main highways, buses run around the clock to a fairly full timetable, stopping only for meal breaks (almost always fast-food dives) and driver changeovers.

To avoid possible hassle, lone female travelers in particular should take care to sit as near to the driver as possible, and to arrive during daylight hours – many bus stations are in fairly dodgy areas. It used to be that any sizable community would have a Greyhound station; now, in some places, the post office or a gas station doubles as the bus stop and ticket office, and in many others bus service has been canceled altogether. Reservations, which can be made in person at the station, online, or on the toll-free number, are not essential, but recommended – if a bus is full, and you don't have a reservation, you may be forced to wait until the next one, sometimes overnight or longer. It's best to arrive at the bus station an hour or so before travel in order to check in.

Fares on shorter journeys average out at about 15¢ per mile, but for longer hauls there are plenty of savings available. Check the website's discounts page. Buying your ticket even a few days in advance of travel will save money, as will traveling between Monday and Thursday. For long-haul travel though, considering the time expended (around 65 hours coast-to-coast, if you eat and sleep on the bus), riding the bus is not necessarily a much better deal than flying, unless you plan to make a lot of stops using a Discovery Pass (see p.36).

To plan your route, check the website or pick up the free route-by-route timetables from larger bus stations.

By plane

Don't be misled by movies in which characters stroll into large airports and casually buy cross-country tickets. Choosing to fly that way tends to be outrageously expensive – $1000 for a one-way flight is not unheard of. However, with planning, air travel can work out to be quite reasonable, especially since the arrival of the budget airlines – often, as in the case of Ted, which is owned by United Airlines, subsidiaries of larger airlines – which has led to cut-throat competition. In some cases, flying can cost less than the train – especially if you take into account how much you save not paying for food and drink while on the move – and only a little more than the bus. Flying can also make sense for relatively short local hops, turning a full day's cross-desert $25 bus journey, for example, into a quick and scenic $50 flight of under an hour. We mention such options wherever appropriate throughout this guide.

Pre-trip planning for overseas travelers

Amtrak USA Rail Passes

In addition to a number of regional passes offered to all (see the Amtrak website, www.amtrak.com), overseas travelers have a choice of the following USA Rail Passes, covering the areas shown on the map on p.34. The Northeast Pass is also available as a five-day offer, for $155 (Sept–May)/$180 (June–Aug).

	15-day (June–Aug)	15-day (Sept–May)	30-day (June–Aug)	30-day (Sept–May)
East	$335	$215	$415	$280
Northeast	$200	$220	—	—
West	$335	$215	$415	$280
National	$455	$305	$565	$395

Passes can be bought from the Amtrak website, which also lists several places you can buy them in your home country.

Greyhound Discovery Passes

Foreign visitors, especially those inclined to venture beyond the major destinations, can buy a Greyhound Discovery Pass either online (give yourself at least 14 days before you leave home) or at any of the major Greyhound terminals and agencies in the States. The pass offers unlimited travel within a set time period. A seven-day pass costs $283; a 15-day pass $415; 30 days $522; and 60 days $645. No daily extensions are available.

Each time you travel, you'll need to present your pass at the ticket counter to receive a boarding ticket. For more information go to www.greyhound.com.

Where to buy Amtrak and Greyhound passes abroad

Rail Plus Level 1, 149-155 Parnell Rd, Parnell, Auckland, New Zealand ☎09/377 5415; info@railplus.co.nz; www.railplus.co.nz.

STA Travel UK ☎0870/1630 026, Australia ☎1300/733 035, New Zealand ☎0508/782 872; www.statravel.com.

Trailfinders UK ☎0845/058 5858, Republic of Ireland ☎01/677 7888, Australia ☎1300/780 212; www.trailfinders.com.

Air passes

The main American airlines offer air passes for visitors who plan to fly a lot within the US. These must be bought in advance, and are often sold with the proviso that you cross the Atlantic with the same airline or group of airlines (such as One World Alliance). Each deal will involve the purchase of a certain number of flights, air miles, or coupons. An Air Canada and United Airlines Global Pass, for example, will cost $609–679 for any three flights within the continental USA and Canada, rising to $1109–1179 for eight.

Other plans entitle foreign travelers to discounts on regular US domestic fares, again with the proviso that you buy the ticket before you leave home. Check with the individual airlines to see what they offer. However you do it, flying within the US is only a wise choice for travel in regions where fares are low anyway; flights within Florida, for example, are very expensive.

Phone the airlines or visit their websites to find out routes and schedules. The best discounts are usually offered on tickets booked and paid for at least two weeks in advance; these are almost always non-refundable and hard to change.

By car

For many, the concept of cruising down the highway, preferably in an open-top convertible with the radio blasting, is one of the main reasons to set out on a tour of the US.

Driving for foreigners

Foreign nationals from English-speaking countries can drive in the US using their full domestic driving licenses. (International Driving Permits are not always regarded as sufficient.) Fly-drive deals are good value if you want to rent a car (see below), though you can save up to sixty percent simply by booking in advance with a major firm. If you choose not to pay until you arrive, be sure you take a written confirmation of the price with you. Remember that it's safer not to drive right after a long transatlantic flight – and that most standard rental cars have automatic transmissions.

It's easier and cheaper to book an RV (see overleaf) in advance from abroad. Most travel agents who specialize in the US can arrange RV rental, and usually do so for less if you book a flight through them as well. A price of US$650 for a five-berth van for two weeks is fairly typical.

The romantic images of countless road movies, from Bonnie and Clyde to Thelma and Louise, are not far from the truth, though you don't have to embark on a wild spree of drink, drugs, crime, and murder to enjoy driving across America. Apart from anything else, a car makes it possible to choose your own itinerary and to explore the astonishing wide-open landscapes that may well provide your most enduring memories of the country.

Driving in the cities, on the other hand, is not exactly fun, but in the larger places a car is by far the most convenient way to negotiate your way around, especially as public transportation tends to be spotty outside the major conurbations. Many urban areas, especially in the west, have grown up and assumed their present shapes since cars were invented. As such, they sprawl for so many miles in all directions – Los Angeles and Houston are classic examples – that your hotel may be fifteen or twenty miles from the sights you came to see, or perhaps simply on the other side of a freeway that can't be crossed on foot. Only in a few cities, more often in the east, are the main attractions and facilities concentrated within walking distance of each other. Even in smaller towns the motels may be six miles or more out along the interstate, and the restaurants in a shopping mall on the far side of town.

To rent a car, you are supposed to have held your license for at least one year. Drivers under 25 may encounter problems and have to pay higher than normal insurance premiums. Rental companies expect customers to have a credit card; if you don't, they may let you leave a cash deposit (at least $200), but don't count on it. All the major rental companies have outlets at the main airports. Reservations are handled centrally, so the best way to shop around is either online, or by calling their national toll-free numbers. Potential variations are endless; certain cities and states are consistently cheaper than others, while individual travelers may be eligible for corporate, frequent-flier, or AAA discounts. In low season you may find a tiny car (a "subcompact") for as little as $100 per week, but a typical budget rate would be more like $35–40 per day or $150 per week including taxes.

Don't automatically go for the cheapest rate. Little-known local companies may offer appealing prices, but if you break down several hundred miles from their offices it may be hard to get assistance. Even between the major operators, there can be a big difference in the quality of cars. Industry leaders like Alamo, Hertz, and Avis tend to have newer, lower-mileage cars, often with air-conditioning and stereo CD players as standard – no small consideration on a 2000-mile desert drive. Always be sure to get unlimited mileage, and remember that leaving the car in a different city to the one where you rented it can incur a drop-off charge of as much as $200.

When you rent a car, read the small print carefully for details on Collision Damage Waiver (CDW), sometimes called Liability Damage Waiver (LDW), usually included in the price if you pre-pay outside the US, but well worth considering if it isn't. This form of insurance specifically covers the car that you are driving yourself – you are in any case

Hitchhiking

The usual advice given to hitchhikers is that they should use their common sense; but common sense should tell anyone that hitchhiking in the United States is a bad idea. We do not recommend it under any circumstances.

insured for damage to other vehicles. At $10–15 a day, it can add substantially to the total cost, but without it you're liable for every scratch to the car – even those that aren't your fault. Increasing numbers of states are requiring that this insurance be included in the weekly rental rate and are regulating the amounts charged to cut down on rental-car company profiteering. Some credit card companies offer automatic CDW coverage to customers using their card; contact your issuing company for details.

The American Automobile Association, or AAA (☎1-800/222-4357; 🌐www.aaa.com), provides free maps and assistance to its members and to members of affiliated associations overseas, such as the British AA and RAC.

If you break down in a rented car, call the emergency number pinned to the dashboard. If you don't have a mobile, you can rent one from the car rental agency – you often have to pay only a nominal amount until you actually use it – and in larger cities, they increasingly come built into the car.

Driveaways

One variation on renting a car is a drive-away: you drive a car from one place to another for the owner, paying only for the gas you use. The same rules as for renting apply, but look the car over before you take it; you'll be charged for any repair costs in addition to a large fuel bill if it's a gas-guzzler. Some driveaway companies want a personal reference from someone either in the town you're leaving or in the car's destination. Get in touch in advance, to spare yourself a week's wait for a car to turn up. The most common routes are between the coasts, but there's a fair chance of finding something that needs transporting to where you want to go. You needn't drive flat out, although three to four hundred miles a day – around six hours – is expected. Look under Automobile Transporters in the Yellow Pages or try one of the sixty branches of Auto Drive-away (🌐www.autodriveaway.com).

Renting an RV

Recreational vehicles (RVs) can be rented from around $600 per week (plus mileage charges) for a basic camper on the back of a pickup truck with sleeping room for two adults. If you're after one of those juggernauts that rumble down the highway, complete with multiple bedrooms, bathrooms, and kitchens, you'll have to pay at least double that. Though good for groups or families traveling together, RVs can be unwieldy on the road, and rental outlets are not that common. On top of the rental fees, take into account the cost of gas (some RVs do twelve miles to the gallon or less) and any drop-off charges. It is rarely legal simply to pull off in an RV and spend the night at the roadside: you are expected to stay in designated RV parks that cost $20–30 per night. The Recreational Vehicle Dealers Association (☎703/591-7130 or 1-800/336-0355 🌐www.rvda.org), publishes a newsletter and a directory of rental firms. Among the larger companies offering RV rentals are Cruise America (🌐www.cruiseamerica.com) and Moturis (🌐www.moturis.com).

Car rental agencies

Alamo US ☎1-800/462-5266, 🌐www.alamo.com.

Avis US ☎1-800/230-4898, 🌐www.avis.com.

Budget US ☎1-800/527-0700, 🌐www.budget.com.

Dollar US ☎1-866/434-2226, 🌐www.dollar.com.

Enterprise Rent-a-Car US ☎1-800/261-7331, 🌐www.enterprise.com.

Hertz US ☎1-800/654-3131, 🌐www.hertz.com.

Holiday Autos US ☎1-866/392-9288, 🌐www.holidayautos.com.

National US ☎1-800/CAR-RENT, UK ☎0870/400 4581, Australia ☎02/13 10 45, 🌐www.nationalcar.com.

Thrifty US and Canada ☎1-800/847-4389, 🌐www.thrifty.com.

Cycling

In general, cycling is a cheap and healthy way to get around the big cities, an increasing number of which have cycle lanes and local buses equipped to carry bikes (strapped to the outside). In country areas, roads are usually well maintained and have wide shoulders. Bikes can be rented for $15–30 per day, or at discounted weekly rates, from outlets that are usually found close to beaches, university campuses, and good cycling areas. Rates in heavily visited areas can be higher. Local visitor centers should have details.

The national non-profit Adventure Cycling Association (formerly Bikecentennial), based in Missoula, Montana (☎406/721-1776 or 1-800/755-2453, 🌐www.adv-cycling.org), publishes maps ($10.50 each) of several 400-mile routes, detailing campgrounds, motels, restaurants, bike shops, and sites of interest. Many individual states issue their own cycling guides; contact the tourist offices listed on p.67. Before setting out on a long-distance cycling trip, you'll need a good-quality, multispeed bike, panniers, tools and spares, maps, padded shorts, and a helmet (legally required in some states and localities). Plan a route that avoids interstate highways (on which cycling is unpleasant and usually illegal). Of problems you'll encounter, the main one is traffic – RVs, huge eighteen-wheelers, logging trucks – that scream past and create intense backdrafts capable of pulling you out into the middle of the road.

Backroads Bicycle Tours (🌐www.backroads.com), and the HI-AYH hosteling group (see p.41) arrange multi-day cycle tours tours, with camping or stays in country inns; we've also mentioned local firms that offer this where appropriate.

Greyhound, Amtrak, and major airlines will carry passengers' bikes – dismantled and packed into a box – for a small fee.

Accommodation

Accommodation costs form a significant proportion of the expenses for any traveler exploring the US – in part, because the standards of comfort and service are usually fairly high.

If you're on your own, it's possible to pare down what you pay by sleeping in dormitory-style hostels, where a bed usually costs between $15–30 a night. However, with basic room prices away from the major cities starting at around $45 per night, groups of two or more will find it little more expensive to stay in the far more abundant motels and hotels. Many hotels will set up a third single bed for around $15 on top of the regular price, reducing costs for three people sharing. On the other hand, the lone traveler has a hard time of it: "singles" are usually double rooms at an only slightly reduced rate. When visiting certain parts of the US, camping can be a cheap alternative, costing around $8–21 per night or, in the West, a little more for a yurt or cabin.

Addresses

Generally speaking, roads in built-up areas of the US are laid out on a grid system, creating "blocks" of buildings. The first one or two digits of a specific address refer to the block, which will be numbered in sequence from a central point, usually Downtown; for example, 620 S Cedar Avenue will be six blocks south of Downtown. It is crucial, therefore, to take note of components such as "NW" or "SE" in addresses; 3620 SW Washington Boulevard will be a very long way indeed from 3620 NE Washington Boulevard.

Accommodation price codes

Throughout this book, accommodation prices have been graded with the symbols below, according to the cost of the least expensive double room throughout most of the year.

However, except at interstate budget motels, there's rarely such a thing as a set rate for a room. A basic motel in a seaside or mountain resort may quadruple its prices according to the season, while a big-city hotel that charges $200 per room during the week will often slash its rate on the weekend. Because the high and low seasons for tourists vary widely across the country, astute planning can save a lot of money. Watch out also for local events – Mardi Gras in New Orleans, Spring Break in Myrtle Beach, college football games – which can raise rates far above normal.

Only where we explicitly say so do these room rates include local taxes.

- | | | |
|--------------|-------------|-------------|
| 1 up to $35 | 4 $75–100 | 7 $160–200 |
| 2 $35–50 | 5 $100–130 | 8 $200–250 |
| 3 $50–75 | 6 $130–160 | 9 $250+ |

Wherever you stay, you'll be expected to pay in advance, at least for the first night and perhaps for further nights, too. Most hotels ask for a credit card imprint when you arrive, but some still accept cash or US dollar traveler's checks. Reservations – essential in busy areas in summer – are held only until 5 or 6pm, unless you've warned the hotel you'll be arriving late.

Hotels and motels

Hotels and motels are essentially the same thing, although motels tend to be found beside the main roads away from city centers – and thus are much more accessible to drivers. The budget ones are pretty basic affairs, but in general there's a uniform standard of comfort everywhere – each room comes with a double bed (often two), a TV and phone, and an attached bathroom – and you don't get a much better deal by paying, say, $60 instead of $45. Over $60, the room and its fittings simply get bigger and more luxurious, and there'll probably be a swimming pool, free for guests (in states with warmer weather, this is often included in even the cheaper motels).

The least expensive properties tend to be family-run, independent motels, but there's a lot to be said for paying a few dollars more to stay in motels belonging to the national chains. After a few days on the road, if you find that a particular chain consistently suits your requirements, you can use its central reservation number or website, listed below and on p.41, to book ahead, and possibly obtain discounts as a regular guest.

During off-peak periods, many motels and hotels struggle to fill their rooms, and it's worth bargaining to get a few dollars off the asking price. Staying in the same place for more than one night may bring further reductions. Also, look for discount coupons, especially in the free magazines distributed by local visitor centers and interstate Welcome Centers. These can offer amazing value but read the small print first.

Few budget hotels or motels bother to compete with the ubiquitous diners by offering breakfast, although many provide free self-service coffee, sticky buns, and sometimes fruit or cereal, collectively referred to as "continental breakfast."

National accommodation chains

Baymont Inn & Suites ☎ 1-866/999-1111, www.baymontinns.com. 3–4

Best Western ☎ 1-800/780-7234, www.bestwestern.com. 3–6

Comfort Inn ☎ 1-877/424-6423, www.comfortinns.com. 3–6

Courtyard by Marriott ☎ 1-800/321-2211, www.courtyard.com. 5–6

Days Inn ☎ 1-800/329-7466, www.daysinn.com. 3–6

Econolodge ☎ 1-877/424-6423, www.econolodge.com. 2–4

Embassy Suites Hotels ☎ 1-800/362-2779, www.embassysuites.com. 5–6

Fairfield Inn ☎ 1-800/228-2800, @ www.fairfieldinn.com. 4–5
Hampton Inns ☎ 1-800/426-7866, @ www.hamptoninn.com. 4–6
Hilton Hotels ☎ 1-800/774-1500, @ www.hilton.com. 5 and up
Holiday Inn ☎ 1-800/465-4329, @ www.holidayinn.com. 4 and up
Howard Johnson ☎ 1-800/446-4656, @ www.hjojo.com. 2–4
La Quinta Inns ☎ 1-866/725-1661, @ www.lq.com. 3–5
Marriott Hotels ☎ 1-888/236-2427, @ www.marriott.com. 5 and up
Motel 6 ☎ 1-800/466-8356, @ www.motel6.com. 2–3
Ramada Inns ☎ 1-800/272-6232, @ www.ramada.com. 4 and up
Red Roof Inns ☎ 1-800/843-7663, @ www.redroof.com. 2–4
Renaissance Hotels ☎ 1-888/468-3571, @ www.renaissancehotels.com. 5 and up
Rodeway Inns ☎ 1-800/228-2000, @ www.rodeway.com. 3–4
Sheraton ☎ 1-888/625-5144, @ www.sheraton.com. 5 and up
Sleep Inns ☎ 1-800/753-3746, @ www.sleepinn.com. 3–4

Bed-and-breakfasts

Staying in a bed-and-breakfast is an increasingly popular, and often luxurious, alternative to conventional hotels. Some B&Bs consist of no more than a couple of furnished rooms in someone's home, and even the larger establishments tend to have fewer than ten rooms, sometimes without TV or phone, but often laden with potpourri, chintzy cushions, and an almost over-conjured homey atmosphere.

The price you pay for a B&B – which varies from around $70 to $250 for a double room – always includes breakfast (sometimes a buffet on a sideboard, but more often a full-blown cooked meal). The crucial determining factor is whether each room has an en-suite bathroom; most B&Bs provide private bath facilities, although that can damage the authenticity of a fine old house. At the top end of the spectrum, the distinction between a hotel and a “bed-and-breakfast inn” may amount to no more than that the B&B is owned by a private individual rather than a chain, and has a more personal feel.

In many areas, B&Bs have united to form central booking agencies, making it much easier to find a room at short notice; we've given contact information for these where appropriate.

Hostels

Although hostel-type accommodation is not as plentiful in the US as it is in Europe, provision for backpackers and low-budget travelers is on the rise. Unless you're traveling alone, most hostels work out little cheaper than motels; stay in them only if you prefer their youthful ambience and sociability. Many are not accessible on public transportation, or convenient for sightseeing in the towns and cities, let alone in rural areas.

The official HI-AYH (Hostelling International-American Youth Hostels; ☎ 1-800/909-4776, @ www.hiayh.org) network has nearly eighty hostels in major cities and rural locations throughout the US. Urban hostels tend to have 24hr access, while rural ones may have a curfew and limited daytime hours. Annual membership is currently $28 and rates range from $14 to $29 for HI members; non-members generally pay an additional $3 per night. Check the HI-AYH website for comprehensive listings.

Youth hostel associations

Overseas travelers will find a comprehensive list of hostels in the International Youth Hostel Handbook, available from the following hosteling organizations. These organizations all sell hosteling memberships as well, which are accepted at affiliated hostels around the world.

US and Canada

Hostelling International-American Youth Hostels ☎ 301/495-1240, @ www.hiayh.org.
Hostelling International Canada ☎ 1-800/663 5777, @ www.hihostels.ca.

UK and Ireland

Youth Hostel Association (YHA) England and Wales ☎ 0870/770 8868, @ www.yha.org.uk.
Scottish Youth Hostel Association ☎ 01786/891 400, @ www.syha.org.uk.
Irish Youth Hostel Association ☎ 01/830 4555, @ www.irelandyha.org.
Hostelling International Northern Ireland ☎ 028/9032 4733, @ www.hini.org.uk.

handpicked
hotels...
perfect prices!

...in the USA

2 star
from £12

3 star
from £15

4 star
from £24

lowest prices
guaranteed

or we'll refund the difference

(conditions apply)

2 star to deluxe, hotels and apartments handpicked, vetted and honestly reviewed city info, map and hotel brochure provided award winning service from our knowledgeable staff book now on:

www.hotelconnect.co.uk

0845 230 4321

*prices are per person per night based on a twin/double room, subject to availability

hotelconnect.co.uk

Australia, New Zealand and South AfricaAustralia Youth Hostels Association☎ 02/9565-1699, 🌐 www.yha.com.auYouth Hostelling Association New Zealand☎ 0800/278 299 or 03/379 9970, 🌐 www.yha.co.nzHostelling International South Africa☎ 021/424 2511, 🌐 www.hisa.org.za

Food and drink

“Fast food” may be America’s most enduring contribution to the modern culinary world but, because of the country’s large immigrant population, the sheer variety of the foods available is astonishing.

In addition to the numerous regional cuisines on offer (see overleaf and the “American cuisine” color insert), international food is everywhere, turning up at times in some unexpected places. Many farming and ranching regions—Nevada and central California in particular—have a number of Basque restaurants; Portuguese restaurants, dating from whaling days, line the New England coast; and old-fashioned Welsh pasties can be found in the mining towns of Montana.

When it comes to Asian food, Indian cuisine is usually better in the bigger cities, though there are exceptions. Chinese cooking is everywhere, is sometimes top-notch, and can often be cheap — though look out for the dismal-tasting “chop suey” and “chow mein” joints in rural towns. Japanese, found on the coasts and in all big cities, is rather more expensive and fashionable, though sushi restaurants come in all sizes and price ranges, from candlelit affairs done up like French restaurants to the lowest-end diners where you grab color-coded plates of raw fish from a moving belt. Thai and Vietnamese fare, meanwhile, provide some of the best, cheapest, and most exciting cooking to come along in recent decades, sometimes in diners mixing the two, but always with an excellent range of savory soups and noodle dishes, and occasionally “fusion” cooking with other Asian cuisines (ie, “pan-Asian,” as it’s known).

French cuisine is almost always expensive, typically nouvelle, and associated with high-end hotels and ultra-chic, jacket-only affairs. That said, country French dining and French sub-styles (like Cajun and French Canadian) offer a much cheaper variant on Gallic cooking, and are often excellent as well.

Italian fare is even broader in its range; the top-shelf restaurants in major cities tend to focus on the northern end of the boot, with careful presentation, subtle flavors, and high prices, while the tomato-heavy, gut-busting portions associated with southern Italian cooking are still, in America at least, confined to lower-end, checkered-tablecloth diners with massive portions and pictures of Frank

Coping as a vegetarian

In the big U.S. cities at least, being a vegetarian—or even a vegan—presents few problems. However, don’t be too surprised in rural areas if you find yourself restricted to a diet of eggs, cheese sandwiches (you might have to ask them to leave the ham out), salads, and biscuits. In the Southeast, most soul-food cafés offer great-value vegetable plates (four different vegetables, including potatoes) for around $5, but these are often cooked with pork fat. Similarly, baked beans, and the nutritious-sounding red beans and rice, usually contain bits of diced pork.

and Dino on the walls. Pizza restaurants occupy a similar range from high-end gourmet eateries to cheap and tasty dives—New Yorkers and Chicagoans can argue for days over which of their respective cities makes the best kind, either Gotham's shingle-flat "slices" or the Windy City's overstuffed wedges that actually resemble slices of meat pie.

Eating out

In the big cities, you can pretty much eat whatever you want, whenever you want, thanks to the ubiquity of restaurants, 24-hour diners, and street carts selling food well into the night. Also, along all the highways and on virtually every town's main street, restaurants, fast-food joints and coffeeshops try to outdo one another with flashing neon signs as well as bargains and special offers.

Whatever you eat and wherever you eat, service is usually enthusiastic – thanks in large part to the institution of tipping. Waiters depend on tips for the bulk of their earnings; fifteen to twenty percent is the standard rate, with anything less sure to draw a sneer or an insult.

Regional cuisines

While the predictable enormous steaks, burgers, and piles of ribs or half a chicken, served up with salads, cooked vegetables, and bread, are found everywhere, it's more rewarding to explore the diverse regional and ethnic cuisines around the country. Beef is especially prominent in the Midwest and Texas, while fish and seafood dominate the menus in Florida, Louisiana, around Chesapeake Bay in Maryland, and in the Pacific Northwest. Shellfish, such as the highly rated Dungeness crab and the Chesapeake's unique soft-shell crab, highly spiced and eaten whole, is popular, too. Maine lobsters and steamers (clams), eaten alone or mixed up in a chowder, are reason alone to visit New England.

Cajun food, which originated in the bayous of Louisiana as a way to use up leftovers, is centered on red beans and rice, enlivened with unusual seafood like crawfish and catfish, and always highly spiced. The oft-misunderstood distinction between Cajun and Creole cooking is explained in our "Louisiana" chapter, on p.693.

Southern cooking – sometimes known as "soul food" – is not always easy to find outside the South, but is worth seeking out for everything from grits to collard greens, and from fried chicken to hogjaw (meat from the mouth of a pig). Barbecue is also very popular in the South, where a mouth-watering plate, with sides, can be had for usually less than $10. (Generally, the more ramshackle the restaurant, the better the food.) There's also great barbecue outside of the South, in places like Kansas City and Chicago.

California Cuisine is geared toward health and aesthetics. It's basically a development of French nouvelle cuisine, utilizing a wide mix of fresh, local ingredients in season and offered as small but beautifully presented portions, with accompanying high prices: expect to pay $50 a head (or much more) for a full dinner with wine. California's culinary experiments have since the 1980s branched out into what's called the New American Cuisine, which is essentially California cooking transplanted to different regions – New Southern, New England, Northwest, Southwestern and Western (or Midwestern) are but a few manifestations of this trend.

Although technically ethnic, Mexican food is so common it might as well be an indigenous cuisine, especially in southern California. In the States, though, Mexican food is different from that found south of the border, making more use of fresh meats and vegetables, sometimes in odd combinations. The essentials, however, are the same: lots of rice and black or pinto beans, often served refried (boiled, mashed, and fried), with variations on the tortilla, a thin corn or flour pancake that can be wrapped around fillings and eaten by hand (a burrito); folded, fried, and filled (a taco); rolled, filled, and baked in sauce (an enchilada); or fried flat and topped with a stack of filling (a tostada). In Texas and the Southwest, beef and bean chili con carne is the distinguishing dish of Tex-Mex cuisine. Day or night, this is the cheapest type of food to eat: even a full dinner with a few drinks will rarely be more than $10 anywhere except in the most upmarket establishment.

Finally, there are also regional variations on American staples. You can get plain old burgers and hot dogs anywhere, but for a truly American experience, grab a piping-hot “Philly cheesesteak” sandwich, gooey with cheese and thin-sliced beef from a diner in eastern Pennsylvania, or one of New York’s signature Coney Island hot dogs – or the LA version of the frankfurter, rolled in a tortilla and stuffed with cheese and chilli. Almost every Eastern state has at least one spot claiming to have invented the hamburger, and regardless of where you go, you can find a good range of authentic diners where the buns are fresh, the patties are large, handcrafted, and tasty, and the dressings and condiments are inspired. Needless to say, although we list the better of these locations in the Guide, almost none of them can be found along the interstate, under massive signs advertising their wares for 99 cents.

Drink

Across the country, bars and cocktail lounges are often dimly lit spots with long counters, a few customers perched on stools before a bartender-cum-guru, and tables and booths for those who don’t want to join in the drunken barside debates. New York, Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, and San Francisco are the consummate boozing towns – filled with tales of plastered, famous authors indulging in famously bad behavior – but almost anywhere you shouldn’t have to search very hard for a comfortable place to drink. Keep in mind that you need to be 21 years old to buy and consume alcohol in the US, and it’s likely you’ll be asked for ID even if you look much older.

“Blue laws” – archaic statutes that restrict when, where, and under what conditions alcohol can be purchased – are a source of great annoyance. The most common of these, held by many states, prohibits the sale of alcohol on Sundays; on the extreme end of the scale, some counties (known as “dry”) don’t allow any alcohol, ever. The famous whiskey and bourbon distilleries of Tennessee and Kentucky, including Jack Daniels (see p.573), can be visited—though maddeningly, several are in dry counties, so they don’t offer samples. A few states – Vermont, Oklahoma, and Utah (which, being predominantly Mormon, has the most byzantine rules) – restrict the alcohol content in beer to just 3.2 percent, almost half the usual strength. Rest assured, though, that in a few of the more liberal parts of the country (New York City, for one), alcohol can be bought and drunk any time between 6am and 4am, seven days a week.

The most popular American beers are still fizzy, insipid lagers from national brands like Budweiser, Miller, and Coors, but there is no lack of alternatives. The craze for microbreweries started in northern California several decades ago, and even today Anchor Steam—at the forefront of the charge—is still an excellent choice for sampling. The West Coast continues to be, to a large extent, the center of the microbrewing movement, and even the smaller towns have their own share of decent handcrafted beers. The town with the most such breweries, per capita or raw quantity, is Portland, Oregon, which enthusiasts from across the country (or world for that matter) have been known to visit just to sample draughts of such notable brands as Widmer, Bridgeport, Full Sail, Rogue, and, best of all, Hair of the Dog. Los Angeles, San Diego, Seattle, the Bay Area, Denver, and other Western cities rank up there, too, and you can even find excellent brews in tiny spots such as Whitefish, Montana, where the beers of Great Northern Brewing are well worth seeking out.

On the East Coast look for Boston-based Samuel Adams and its mix of mainstream and alternative brews, the top-notch offerings of Pennsylvania’s Victory Brewing, or stop in to Washington, DC’s two great beer-tasting spots, the Brickseller and D.A.’s R.F.D. Washington, to sample a broad array of the country’s finest potables—some eight hundred and three hundred different kinds, respectively. Elsewhere, the Texas brand Lone Star has its dedicated followers, Indiana’s best beverages come from Three Floyds Brewing, and Pete’s Wicked Ales in Minnesota can be found throughout the country. Keep an eye out in local stores rather than supermarkets for bottled specialty beers, or track down the best American and international beers at www.beeradvocate.com. Indeed, microbreweries and brewpubs can now be found in virtually every sizable US city and college town. Almost all serve a wide range of good-value, hearty food to help soak up the drink.

California and, to a lesser extent, Oregon, Washington, and a few other states, are famous for their wines. In California, it's the Napa and Sonoma valleys that boast the finest grapes, and beefy reds such as Merlot, Pinot Noir, and Cabernet Sauvignon as well as crisp or buttery whites like Chardonnay and Sauvignon Blanc all do very well up here. Many tourists make a pilgrimage to these valleys for "wine-tasting" jags, where you can sip (or slurp) at sites ranging from downhome country farms with tractors and hayrides to upper-crust estates thick with modern art and yuppies in designer wear. Some quaffable but not horribly expensive brands include Frog's Leap, Beaulieu, Bontera, and Terre Rouge for reds and Andrew Murray, Ridge, and Bighorn for whites. In Oregon, seek out Cristom and Foris for reds, Adelsheim and WillaKenzie for whites; in Washington, reds from Chatter Creek and Barnard Griffin are good, as are whites from Chateau Ste Michelle and Paul Thomas. Throughout this book, you'll find details of tours and tastings where relevant.

Festivals

Someone, somewhere, is always celebrating something in the US – although, apart from national holidays, few festivities are shared throughout the country. Instead, there is a diverse multitude of engaging local events: arts-and-crafts shows, county fairs, ethnic celebrations, music festivals, rodeos, sandcastle-building competitions, chili cook-offs, and countless others.

Listed here are some of the best local festivals covered in this book. The tourist offices for each state (see p.67) can provide you with full lists, or simply phone the visitor center in a particular region and ask what's coming up. Certain festivities, such as Mardi Gras in New Orleans, are well worth planning your vacation around – obviously other people will have the same idea, so visiting during these times requires an extra amount of advance effort.

A particularly popular, all-American holiday is Independence Day. On July 4, virtually everyone in the country takes time out to picnic, drink, salute the flag, and watch or participate in fireworks displays, marches, beauty pageants, eating contests, and more, all in commemoration of the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776.

Halloween (October 31) lacks any such patriotic overtones, and is not a public holiday, despite being one of the most popular yearly flings. Traditionally, masked kids run around the streets banging on doors and demanding "trick or treat," returning home with heaping piles of candy. In some bigger cities Halloween has evolved into a massive celebration: in LA's West Hollywood, New York's Greenwich Village, New Orleans' French Quarter, and San Francisco's Castro district, the night is marked by colorful parades, mass cross-dressing, huge block parties, and wee-hours partying.

More sedate is Thanksgiving Day, on the fourth Thursday in November. Relatives return to the nest to share a meal (traditionally, roast turkey and stuffing, cranberry sauce, and all manner of delicious pies) and give thanks – hence the holiday's name – for family and friends. Ostensibly, the holiday recalls the first harvest of the Pilgrims in Massachusetts. In fact, Thanksgiving was a national holiday before anyone thought to make that connection.

Annual festivals and events

For further details of the selected festivals and events listed below, including more precise dates, see the relevant page of the Guide, or contact the local authorities directly. The state tourist boards listed in the box on p.67 can provide more complete calendars for each area.

January

Elko, NV Cowboy Poetry Gathering, p.1024
St Paul, MN Winter Carnival, p.390

February

Daytona Beach, FL Daytona 500 stock-car race, p.638
Fort Worden, WA Hot Jazz Festival, p.1186
New Orleans, LA (the six weeks before Lent) Mardi Gras, p.698; also elsewhere in Louisiana, p.704

March

Austin, TX South by Southwest Music Festival and Media Conference, p.740
Butte, MT St Patrick's Day, p.898
Eunice, LA World Championship Crawfish Étouffée Cookoff, p.704
Fairbanks, AK Ice Festival, p.1255
Los Angeles, CA Academy Awards (the "Oscars"),
New Orleans, LA St Joseph's Day and the Mardi Gras Indians' "Super Sunday", p.698

April

Boston, MA Patriots' Day Marathon, p.220
Lafayette, LA Festival International de Louisiane, p.704
Mountain View, AR Arkansas Folk Festival, p.604
New Orleans, LA French Quarter Festival, and Jazz and Heritage Festival (into May), p.699
San Antonio, TX Fiesta San Antonio, p.734
Santuario de Chimayó, NM Easter Pilgrimage, p.935

May

Black Mountain, NC Leaf Festival, p.507
Breaux Bridge, LA Crawfish Festival, p.704
Flagstaff, AZ Zuni Crafts Show, p.963
Indianapolis, IN Indianapolis 500 sports-car race, p.347
Kerrville, TX Folk Festival, p.741
Louisville, KY Kentucky Derby (horse race), p.549
Memphis, TN Memphis in May International Festival, p.565
San Antonio, TX Tejano Conjunto Festival, p.735

June

Eureka Springs, AR Eureka Springs Blues Festival, p.605
Hardin, MT Little Bighorn Days, p.894
Nashville, TN CMA Music Festival, p.572
San Antonio, TX Texas Folklife Festival, p.735
Telluride, CO Bluegrass Festival, p.868

July

Blowing Rock, NC Highland Games, p.505
Cheyenne, WY Cheyenne Frontier Days, p.873
Elko, NV National Basque Festival, p.1024
Fairbanks, AK Eskimo/Indian Olympics, p.1255
Flagstaff, AZ Hopi Crafts Show, p.963;
Navajo Crafts Show (into Aug), p.963
Fort Totten, ND Powwow and rodeo
New Orleans, LA Satchmo music festival (into Aug), p.699
St Paul, MN Taste of Minnesota, p.390
Talkeetna, AK Moose Dropping Festival, p.1251
Traverse City, MI Cherry Festival, p.337

August

Asheville, NC Mountain Dance and Folk Festival, p.506
Elkins, WV Augusta Festival of Appalachian Culture, p.456
Gallup, NM Inter-tribal Indian Ceremonial, p.945
Memphis, TN anniversary of Elvis's death, p.565
Newport, RI folk and jazz festivals, p.249
San Antonio, TX Texas Folklife Festival, p.735
Santa Fe, NM Indian Market, p.929
Sturgis, SD Motorcycle Rally and Races, p.822

September

Detroit, MI International Jazz Festival, p.328
Greenville, MS Delta Blues Festival, p.589
Lafayette, LA Festivals Acadiens, p.704
Lubbock, TX Panhandle South Plains Fair, p.758
Memphis, TN Memphis Music and Heritage Festival, p.558
Monterey, CA Monterey Jazz Festival, p.1107
New Orleans, LA Southern Decadence, p.699
New York, NY Festa di San Gennaro, p.90
Opelousas, LA Zydeco Festival, p.704
Pendleton, OR Pendleton Round-Up, p.1218
Santa Fe, NM Fiestas de Santa Fe, p.929
Claremore, OK Chile Cookoff and Bluegrass Festival, p.776

Albuquerque, NM Hot-air Balloon Rally, p.940
 Charleston, SC Moja Arts Festival, p.518
 Custer State Park, SD Round-up of bison, p.826
 Eureka Springs, AR Ozark folk festival, p.605

Half Moon Bay, CA Pumpkin Festival, p.1143
 Helena, AR Arkansas Blues and Heritage Festival
 (formerly King Biscuit Blues Festival), p.598
 Opelousas, LA Louisiana Yambilee p.704
 Tombstone, AZ Helldorado Days, p.957

Sports and outdoor activities

Besides being good fun, catching a baseball game at Chicago's Wrigley Field on a summer afternoon or joining in with the screaming throngs at a Steelers football game in Pittsburgh can give visitors an unforgettable insight into a town and its people. Professional teams almost always put on the most spectacular shows, but big games between college rivals, minor league baseball games, and even Friday night high-school football games provide an easy and enjoyable way to get on intimate terms with a place.

Specific details for the most important teams in all the sports are given in the various city accounts. They can also be found through the major league websites: @www.mlb.com (baseball); @www.nba.com (basketball); @www.nfl.com (football); @www.nhl.com (ice hockey); and @www.mlsnet.com (soccer).

Baseball, because the major league teams play so many games (162 in total, usually five or so a week throughout the summer), is probably the easiest sport to catch when traveling. The ballparks – such as Boston's historic Fenway Park, LA's glamorous Dodger Stadium, or Baltimore's evocative Camden Yards – are great places to spend time. It's also among the cheapest sports to watch (from around $10 a seat), and tickets are usually easy to come by.

Pro football, the American variety, is quite the opposite. Tickets are exorbitantly expensive and almost impossible to obtain (if the team is any good), and most games are played in anonymous municipal bunkers; you'll do better stopping in a bar to watch it on TV. College football is a whole lot better and more exciting, with chanting crowds, cheerleaders, and cheaper tickets. Although New Year's Day games such as the Rose Bowl or the Orange Bowl are all but impossible to see live, big games like Nebraska vs

Oklahoma, Michigan vs Ohio State, or Notre Dame vs anybody are not to be missed if you're anywhere nearby.

Basketball also brings out intense emotions. The interminable – though invariably exciting – pro playoffs run well into June. The men's month-long college playoff tournament, called "March Madness," is acclaimed by many as the nation's most exciting sports extravaganza.

Ice hockey, usually referred to simply as hockey, was long the preserve of Canada and cities in the far north of the US, but today it penetrates the rest of the country. Tickets, particularly for successful teams, are hard to get and not cheap.

Soccer, meanwhile, remains much more popular as a participant sport, especially for kids, than a spectator one and those Americans that are interested in it usually follow foreign matches like England's Premier League, rather than their home-grown talent. The good news for international travelers is that any decent-sized city will have one or two pubs where you can catch games from England, other European countries, or Latin America; check out @www.livesoccerv.com for a list of such establishments and match schedules.

Skiing is the biggest mass-market participant sport, and downhill resorts can be found all over the US. The Eastern resorts of Vermont and New York State, however, pale by comparison with those of the Rockies, such as Vail and Aspen in Colorado, and the Sierra Nevada in California. Expect to pay $30–60 per day (depending on the quality and popularity of the resort) for lift tickets, plus another $25 or more per day to rent equipment.

A cheaper option is cross-country skiing, or ski touring. Backcountry ski lodges dot mountainous areas along both coasts and in the Rockies. They offer a range of rustic accommodation, equipment rental, and lessons, from as little as $15 a day for skis, boots, and poles, up to about $150 for an all-inclusive weekend tour.

The other sporting events that attract national interest involve four legs or four wheels. The Kentucky Derby, held in Louisville on the first Saturday in May (see p.549), is the biggest event on the horseracing calendar. Also in May, the NASCAR Indianapolis 500, the largest motor-racing event in the world, fills that city with visitors throughout the month, with practice sessions and carnival events building up to the big race.

National parks and outdoor activities

The US is blessed with fabulous backcountry and wilderness areas, coated by dense forests, cut by deep canyons, and capped by great mountains. Even the heavily populated East Coast has its share of open space, notably along the Appalachian Trail, which winds from Mount Katahdin in Maine to the southern Appalachians in Georgia – some two thousand miles of untrammelled forest. In order to experience the full breathtaking sweep of America's wide-open stretches, however, head west to the Rockies, to the red-rock deserts of the Southwest, or right across the continent to the amazing wild spaces of the West Coast. On the down side, be warned that in many coastal areas, the shoreline can be disappointingly hard to access, with a high proportion under private ownership.

National parks and monuments

The National Park Service administers both national parks and national monuments. Its rangers do a superb job of providing information and advice to visitors, maintaining trails, and organizing such activities as free guided hikes and campfire talks.

In principle, a national park preserves an area of outstanding natural beauty, encompassing a wide range of terrain and prime examples of particular landforms and wildlife. Thus Yellowstone has boiling geysers and herds of elk and bison, while Yosemite offers towering granite walls and cascading waterfalls. A national monument is usually much smaller, focusing perhaps on just one archeological site or geological phenomenon, such as Devil's Tower in Wyoming. Altogether, there are around four hundred units of the national park system, including national seashores, lakeshores, battlefields, and other historic sites.

National parks tend to be perfect places to hike – almost all have extensive trail networks – but they're all far too large to tour entirely on foot. (Yellowstone, for example, is bigger than Delaware and Rhode Island combined.) Even in those rare cases where you can use public transportation to reach a park, you'll almost certainly need some sort of vehicle to explore it once you're there. The Alaska parks are mostly howling wilderness, with virtually no roads or facilities for tourists – you're on your own.

1 Olympic, WA, p.1188

2 North Cascades, WA, p.1191

3 Mount Rainier, WA, p.1192

4 Crater Lake, OR, p.1215

5 Glacier, MT, p.905

6 Yellowstone, WY, p.880

7 Grand Teton, WY, p.887

8 T. Roosevelt (north), ND, p.832

9 T. Roosevelt (south), ND, p.832

10 Wind Cave, SD, p.827

11 Badlands, SD, p.818

12 Redwood, CA, p.1158

13 Lassen Volcanic, CA, p.1160

14 Yosemite, CA, p.1091

15 Kings Canyon, CA, p.1090

16 Sequoia, CA, p.1089

17 Death Valley, CA, p.1082

18 Joshua Tree, CA, p.1079

19 Great Basin, NV, p.1023

20 Zion, UT, p.987

21 Bryce Canyon, UT, p.990

22 Capitol Reef, UT, p.993

23 Canyonlands, UT, p.994

24 Arches, UT, p.996

US NATIONAL PARKS

for a detailed description of each park
see the page indicated

25 Grand Canyon, AZ, p.968

26 Petrified Forest, AZ, p.963

27 Saguaro, AZ, p.954

28 Mesa Verde, CO, p.870

29 Rocky Mountain, CO, p.848

30 Carlsbad Caverns, NM, p.945

31 Guadalupe Mtns, TX, p.767

32 Big Bend, TX, p.762

33 Haleakala, HI, p.1282

34 Hawaii Volcanoes, HI, p.1275

35 Glacier Bay, AK, p.1233

36 Wrangell-St Elias, AK, p.1254

37 Kenai Fjords, AK, p.1243

38 Denali, AK, p.1252

39 Gates of the Arctic, AK, p.1258

40 Voyageurs, MN, p.396

41 Isle Royale, MI, p.343

42 Acadia, ME, p.293

43 Mammoth Cave, KY, p.551

44 Great Smoky Mtns, TN, p.507

45 Shenandoah, VA, p.449

46 Hot Springs, AR, p.601

47 Everglades, FL, p.665

For up-to-the-minute information on the national park system, access the official Park Service website at www.nationalparks.org. It features full details of the main attractions of the national parks, plus opening hours, the best times to visit, admission fees, hiking trails, and visitor facilities.

Most parks and monuments charge admission fees, ranging from $4 to $25, which cover a vehicle and all its occupants. For anyone on a touring vacation, it will almost certainly make more sense to buy one of the various passes that are sold at all federal parks and monuments. The annual National Parks Pass ($50) grants unrestricted access to the bearer, and any accompanying passengers, to all national parks and monuments for a year from the date of purchase.

Two additional passes grant free access for life to all national parks and monuments, again to the holder and any accompanying passengers, and also provide a fifty percent discount on camping fees. The Golden Age Passport is available to any US citizen or permanent resident aged 62 or older for a one-time processing charge of $10, while the Golden Access Passport is issued free to blind or permanently disabled US citizens or permanent residents.

While hotel-style lodges are found only in major parks, every park or monument tends to have at least one well-organized campground for visitors. Often, a cluster of motels can be found not far outside the park boundaries. With appropriate free permits – subject to some restrictions in popular parks – backpackers can also usually camp in the backcountry (a general term for areas inaccessible by road).

Other public lands

National parks and monuments are often surrounded by tracts of national forest – also federally administered but much less protected. These too usually hold appealing rural campgrounds but, in the words of the slogan, each is a “Land Of Many Uses,” and usually allows logging and other land-based industry (thankfully, more often ski resorts than strip mines).

Other government departments administer a whole range of wildlife refuges, national scenic rivers, recreation areas, and the like. The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) has the largest holdings of all, most of it open rangeland, such as in Nevada and Utah, but also including some enticingly out-of-the-way reaches. Environmentalist groups engage in endless running battles with developers, ranchers, and the extracting industries over uses – or alleged misuses – of the federal lands.

Holders of National Parks passes (see this page) can pay an additional $15 to affix a Golden Eagle hologram to their pass, which extends its cover to sites managed by the US Fish and Wildlife Service, the Forest Service, and the BLM.

State parks and state monuments, administered by individual states, preserve sites of more limited, local significance. Many are explicitly designed for recreational use, and thus hold better campgrounds than their federal equivalents.

Camping and backpacking

The ideal way to see the great outdoors – especially if you're on a low budget – is to tour by car and camp in state and federal campgrounds. Typical public campgrounds range in price from free (usually when there's no water available, which may be seasonal) to around $8 per night. Fees at the generally less scenic commercial campgrounds – abundant near major towns, and often resembling open-air hotels, complete with shops and restaurants – are more like $15–25. If you're camping in high season, either reserve in advance or avoid the most popular areas.

Backcountry camping in the national parks is usually free, by permit only. Before you set off on anything more than a half-day hike, and whenever you're headed for anywhere at all isolated, be sure to inform a ranger of your plans, and ask about weather conditions and specific local tips. Carry sufficient food and drink to cover emergencies, as well as all the necessary equipment and maps. Check whether fires are permitted; even if they are, try to use a camp stove in preference to local materials. In wilderness areas, try to camp on previously used sites. Where there are no toilets, bury human waste at least six inches into the ground and a hundred feet from the nearest water supply and campground.

Backpackers should never drink from rivers and streams; you never know what acts people – or animals – have performed further upstream. Giardia – a water-borne bacteria that causes an intestinal disease characterized by chronic diarrhea, abdominal cramps, fatigue, and weight loss – is a serious problem. Water that doesn't come from a tap should be boiled for at least five minutes, or cleansed with an iodine-based purifier or a giardia-rated filter.

Hiking at lower elevations should present few problems, though swarms of mosquitoes near water can drive you crazy; Avon Skin-so-soft, or anything containing DEET, are fairly reliable repellents. Ticks – tiny beetles that plunge their heads into your skin and swell up – are another hazard. They sometimes leave their heads inside, causing blood clots or infections, so get advice from a park ranger if you've been bitten. One species of tick causes Lyme Disease, a serious condition that can even affect the brain. Nightly inspections of your skin are strongly recommended.

Beware, too, of poison oak, which grows all over the western states, usually among oak trees. Its leaves come in groups of three (the middle one on a short stem) and are distinguished by prominent veins and shiny surfaces. If you come into contact with it, wash your skin (with soap and cold water) and clothes as soon as possible – and don't scratch. In serious cases, hospital emergency rooms can give antihistamine or adrenaline shots. A comparable curse is poison ivy, found throughout the country. For both plants, remember the sage advice, "Leaves of three, let it be."

Mountain hikes

When hiking at higher elevations, for instance in the 14,000ft peaks of the Rockies, or in California's Sierra Nevada (and certainly in Alaska), you should take special care. Late snows are common, and in spring there's a real danger of avalanches, not to mention meltwaters that make otherwise simple stream crossings hazardous. Weather conditions can also change abruptly. Altitude sickness can affect even the fittest of athletes: take it easy for your first few days above seven thousand feet. Drink lots of water, avoid alcohol, eat plenty of carbohydrates, and protect yourself from the sun.

Desert hikes

If you intend to hike in the desert, tell someone where you are going, and write down all pertinent information, including your expected time of return. Carry an extra two days' food and water and never go anywhere without a map. Cover most of your ground in early morning: the midday heat is too debilitating. If you get lost, find some shade and wait. As long as you've registered, the rangers will eventually come looking for you.

At any time of year, you'll stay cooler during the day if you wear full-length sleeves and trousers, while a wide-brimmed hat and good sunglasses will spare you the blinding headaches that can result from the desert light. You may also have to contend with flash floods, which can appear from nowhere. Never camp in a dry wash, and don't attempt to cross flooded areas until the water has receded.

It's essential to carry – and drink – large quantities of water in the desert. An eight-hour hike in typical summer temperatures above 100°F would require you to drink a phenomenal thirty pints of water. Loss of appetite and thirst are early symptoms of heat exhaustion, so it's possible to become seriously dehydrated without feeling thirsty. Watch out for signs of dizziness or nausea; if you feel weak and stop sweating, it's time to get to the doctor. Check whether water is available on your trail; ask a ranger, and carry at least a quart per person even if it is.

When driving in the desert, carry two gallons of water per person in the car, and take along an emergency pack with flares, a first-aid kit and snakebite kit, matches, and a compass. A shovel, tire pump, and extra gas are always a good idea. If the engine overheats, don't turn it off; instead, try to cool it quickly by turning the front end of the car towards the wind. Carefully pour some water on the front of the radiator, and turn the air conditioning off and the heat up full blast. In an emergency, never panic and leave the car: you'll be harder to find wandering around alone.

Adventure travel

The opportunities for adventure travel in the US are all but endless, from whitewater rafting down the Colorado River, to mountain biking in the volcanic Cascades, canoeing down the headwaters of the Mississippi River, horseback riding in Big Bend on the Rio Grande in Texas, and Big Wall rock-climbing on the sheer granite monoliths of Yosemite Valley.

While an exhaustive listing of the possibilities could fill another volume of this book, certain places have an especially high concentration of adventure opportunities, such as Moab, Utah (p.998), or New Hampshire's White Mountains (p.1084). Throughout the book we recommend guides, outfitters, and local adventure-tour operators.

Wildlife

Watch out for bears, deer, moose, mountain lions, and rattlesnakes in the backcountry, and consider the effect your presence can have on their environment.

Other than in a national park, you're highly unlikely to encounter a bear. Even there, it's rare to stumble across one in the wilderness. If you do, don't run, just back away slowly. Most fundamentally, it will be after your food, which should be stored in airtight containers when camping. Ideally, hang both food and garbage from a high but slender branch some distance from your camp. Never attempt to feed bears, and never get between a mother and her young. Young animals are cute; irate mothers are not.

Snakes and creepy-crawlies

Though the deserts in particular are home to a wide assortment of poisonous creatures, these are rarely aggressive towards humans. To avoid trouble, observe obvious precautions. Don't attempt to handle wildlife; keep your eyes open as you walk, and watch where you put your hands when scrambling over obstacles; shake out shoes, clothing, and bedding before use; and back off if you do spot a creature, giving it room to escape.

If you are bitten or stung, current medical thinking rejects the concept of cutting yourself open and attempting to suck out the venom. Whether snake, scorpion, or spider is responsible, apply a cold compress to the wound, constrict the area with a tourniquet to prevent the spread of venom, drink lots of water, and bring your temperature down by resting in a shady area. Stay as calm as possible and seek medical help immediately.

Shopping

Not surprisingly, the US has some of the greatest shopping opportunities in the world – from the luxury-lined blocks of Fifth Avenue in New York, the Miracle Mile in Chicago, and Rodeo Drive in Beverly Hills, to the local markets found in both big cities and small, offering everything from fruits and vegetables to handmade local crafts.

When buying clothing and accessories, international visitors will need to convert their sizes into American equivalents (see box, opposite). For almost all purchases, state taxes will be applied (see "Costs," p.58).

Clothing and shoe sizes

Women's dresses and skirts

American	4	6	8	10	12	14	16	18
British	8	10	12	14	16	18	20	22
Continental	38	40	42	44	46	48	50	52

Women's blouses and sweaters

American	6	8	10	12	14	16	18
British	30	32	34	36	38	40	42
Continental	40	42	44	46	48	50	52

Women's shoes

American	5	6	7	8	9	10	11
British	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Continental	36	37	38	39	40	41	42

Men's suits

American	34	36	38	40	42	44	46	48
British	34	36	38	40	42	44	46	48
Continental	44	46	48	50	52	54	56	58

Men's shirts

American	14	15	15.5	16	16.5	17	17.5	18
British	14	15	15.5	16	16.5	17	17.5	18
Continental	36	38	39	41	42	43	44	45

Men's shoes

American	7	7.5	8	8.5	9.5	10	10.5	11	11.5
British	6	7	7.5	8	9	9.5	10	11	12
Continental	39	40	41	42	43	44	44	45	46

Traveling with children

Traveling with kids in the United States is relatively problem-free. Children are readily accepted – indeed welcomed – in public places across the country. Hotels and motels are quite accustomed to them, most state and national parks organize children's activities, every town or city has clean and safe playgrounds, and, of course, Disneyland in California and Disney World in Florida provide the ultimate in kids' entertainment, as do countless other theme parks nationwide.

Many, if not most, restaurants encourage parents to bring in their offspring. All the national chains provide highchairs and a special kids' menu, packed with huge, excellent-value (if not necessarily healthy) meals – cheeseburger and fries for 99¢, and so on. Virtually all museums and tourist attractions offer reduced rates for kids. Most large cities have natural history museums or aquariums, and quite a few also have hands-on children's museums.

State tourist offices can provide more specific information (see the box on p.67), while guidebooks for parents include the Unofficial Guide to California with Kids ($18.99) and New York City with Kids ($16.99), both in the Frommer's Family Guides list, and Vicki Lansky's helpful Trouble-Free Travel with Children ($9.95). Each of the John Muir Publications' Kidding Around series covers the history and sights of a major US city in a family-friendly way.

Getting around

Children under two years old fly free on domestic routes and for ten percent of the adult fare on international flights – though that doesn't mean they get a seat, let alone frequent-flier miles. Kids aged between two and twelve years old are usually entitled to half-price tickets.

Traveling by bus may be the cheapest way to go, but it's also the most uncomfortable for kids. Under-twos travel (on your lap) for free. Children under twelve are charged half the standard fare.

Taking the train is by far the best option for long journeys – not only does everyone get to enjoy the scenery, but you can get up and walk around. Most cross-country trains have sleeping compartments, which may be quite expensive, but are likely to be seen by the kids as a great adventure. Children's discounts are much the same as for bus or plane travel.

All that said, most families choose to travel by car. If you hope to enjoy a driving vacation with your kids, make plans. Don't set unrealistic targets; pack sensible snacks and drinks; stop every couple of hours; arrive at your destination before sunset; and avoid traveling through big cities during rush hour. Car rental companies usually provide kids' car seats – which are required by law for children under the age of four – for $5–8 a day. You would, however, be advised to check, or bring your own; they are not always available.

Recreational vehicles (RVs) are a good option for families, combining the convenience of kitchens and bedrooms with the freedom of the road (see "Getting around," p.38).

Resources

Rascals in Paradise in San Francisco, (☎ 415/921-7000, ✉ www.rascalsinparadise.com), can arrange scheduled and customized itineraries built around activities for kids in the US and abroad, ranging from hiking and horseriding to mountain biking and watersports. Travel with Your Children in New York (☎ 212/477-5524 or 1-888/822-4388) publishes a newsletter, Family Travel Times (✉ www.familytraveltimes.com), as well as books on travel with children, including Great Adventure Vacations with Your Kids.

Gay and lesbian travelers

The gay scene in America is huge, albeit heavily concentrated in the major cities. San Francisco, where between a quarter and a third of the voting population is reckoned to be gay or lesbian, is arguably the world's premier gay city. New York runs a close second, and up and down both coasts gay men and women enjoy the kind of visibility and influence those in other places can only dream about. Gay officeholders are no longer a novelty, while resources, facilities, and organizations are endless.

In the heartland, however, life can look more like the Fifties – away from large cities, homosexuals are still oppressed and commonly reviled. Gay travelers need to watch their step to avoid hassles and possible aggression.

Virtually every major city has a predominantly gay area – Chelsea and Christopher Street in New York City, Los Angeles' West Hollywood, San Francisco's Castro district, Houston's Montrose, Seattle's Capitol Hill, and so on. Things change quickly in the gay and lesbian (and emerging bisexual) scene, but we've tried to give an overview of local resources, bars, and clubs in each large urban area.

National publications are available from any good bookstore. Bob Damron in San Francisco (☎415/255-0404 or 1-800/462-6654, @www.damron.com) produces the best and sells them at a discount online. These include the Men's Travel Guide, a pocket-sized yearbook listing hotels, bars, clubs, and resources for gay men ($15.96); the Women's Traveler, which provides similar listings for lesbians ($14.36); the Damron City Guide, which details lodging and entertainment in major cities ($17.56); and Damron Accommodations, which lists 1000 accommodations for gays and lesbians worldwide ($19.16).

Gayellow Pages in New York (☎212/674-0120, @www.gayellowpages.com) publishes a useful directory of businesses in the US and Canada ($25), plus regional directories for New England, New York, and the South, as well as a CD-ROM version ($10). The Advocate, based in Los Angeles ($3; @www.advocate.com) is a bimonthly national gay news magazine, with features, general info, and classified ads. Finally, the International Gay & Lesbian Travel Association in Fort Lauderdale FL (☎1-954/776-2626, @www.iglta.org), is a comprehensive, invaluable source for gay and lesbian travelers.

Women travelers

A woman traveling alone in America is not usually made to feel conspicuous, or liable to attract unwelcome attention. Cities can feel a lot safer than you might expect, simply because there are so many people around. Like anywhere, though, particular care must be taken at night: walking through unlit, empty streets is never a good idea, and, if there's no bus or subway service, take a taxi. Women who look confident are less likely to encounter trouble; those who stand around looking lost and a bit scared are prime targets.

In the major urban centers, if you stick to the better parts of town, going into bars and clubs alone should pose few problems: there's generally a pretty healthy attitude toward women who do so, and your privacy will be respected.

However, small towns may lack the same liberal or indifferent attitude toward lone women travelers. People seem to jump immediately to the conclusion that your car has broken down, or that you've suffered some strange misfortune; you may get fed up with well-meant offers of help. If your vehicle does break down on heavily traveled roads, wait in the car for a police or highway patrol car to arrive. If you don't already have one, you should rent a mobile phone with your car, for a small charge – a potential lifesaver.

Women, even more so than for men, should never hitchhike in the US. Similarly, you should never pick up anyone who's trying to hitchhike. If someone is waving you down on the road, ostensibly to get help with a broken-down vehicle, just drive on by – the highway patrol will be along soon enough to see what the trouble is.

Avoid traveling at night by public transportation – deserted bus stations, if not actually threatening, will do little to make you feel secure. Where possible, team up with a fellow traveler (there really is safety in numbers). On Greyhound buses, sit near the driver.

Should disaster strike, all major towns have some kind of rape counseling service; if not, the local sheriff's office will arrange for you to get help and counseling, and, if necessary, get you home. The National Organization for Women (@www.now.org) is a leader in seeking to advance issues of importance to women. NOW branches, listed in local phone directories and on the website, can provide information on rape crisis centers, counseling services, feminist bookstores, and lesbian bars.

Resources and specialists

Call of the Wild Berkeley CA ☎510/849-9292 or 1-888/378-1978, @www.callwild.com. This established outfitter offers hiking adventures for women of all ages and abilities. Trips include visits to Native American ruins, backpacking in California national parks, cross-country skiing, yoga, and jaunts to Hawaii.

Gutsy Women Travel Glenside PA

☎215/572-7676 or 1-866/464-8879, @www.gutsywomentravel.com. International agency that provides practical support, as well as organising trips for lone female travelers.

Womanship Annapolis MD ☎410/267-6661 or 1-800/342-9295, @www.womanship.com. Learn-to-sail cruises for women of all ages. Destinations include Chesapeake Bay, Florida, the Pacific Northwest, and Mystic, Connecticut.

The Women's Travel Club Bloomfield NJ ☎1-800/480-4448, @www.womenstravelclub.com. Arranges vacations, itineraries, room-sharing, and various activities for women.

Travel essentials

Costs

When it comes to average costs for traveling expenses, much depends on where you've chosen to go. A jaunt around the barbecue shacks of Texas and the Deep South won't cost you much in accommodation, dining, or souvenir-buying, but gas prices (currently around $3 per gallon) will add to the expense. By contrast, getting around a centralized city such as Boston, New York, or Chicago will be relatively cheap, but you'll pay much more for your hotel, meals, and shopping purchases. A simple rule of thumb is, prices will vary directly with the size and glamour of the location. Also keep in mind that added to the cost of most items you purchase is a state – but not federal – sales tax, anywhere from less than three percent (in Colorado) to more than eight percent (in New York), and big cities may add on another point or two to that rate. (Alaska, Delaware, Montana, New Hampshire, and Oregon have no state sales tax.) Additionally, some cities – probably the ones you most want to visit – tack on a hotel tax that makes the total tax for accommodation around fifteen percent.

Unless you're camping or staying in a hostel, accommodation will be your greatest expense while in the US. Adequate lodging is rarely available for under $60, outside of bare-bones roadside motels, and a marginally decent room will run anywhere from $75–90, with fancier hotels costing much, much more – upwards of $200–350 in many of the big cities.

Unlike accommodation, prices for good food don't automatically take a bite out of your wallet, and you can indulge anywhere from the lowliest (but still scrumptious) burger shack to the chicest restaurant helmed by a celebrity chef. You can get by on as little as $20 a day, but realistically you should aim for around $60.

Public transit options are usually affordable, with the best deals being the multi-day or week-long transit passes offered by most cities for riding on buses, light rail, and subways. Renting a car, at around $150–200 per week, is a far more efficient way to explore the broader part of the country, and, for a group of two or more, it's no more expensive, either. Keep in mind, though, that for those under 25 years of age, there are often supplements of $20 a day tacked onto car rental fees.

For attractions in the Guide, prices are quoted for adults, with children's rates listed if they are more than a few dollars less; at some spots, kids get in for half-price, or for free if they're under 6.

Tipping

Tipping is expected for all bar and restaurant service. Expect to tip about 15 percent of the bill before tax to waiters in most restaurants (unless the service is truly wretched), and 20 percent for good service. In the US, this is where most of a waiter's income comes from, and not leaving a fair amount is seen as an insult. About 15 percent should also be added to taxi fares; round up to the nearest 50¢ or dollar, as well. A hotel porter should get $1–2 per bag; if he's lugged your suitcases up several flights of stairs, make it $3–$5. Chambermaids get $1–2 per guest for each day; valet attendants get $2.

Crime and personal safety

No one could pretend that America is crime-free, although away from the urban centers crime is often remarkably low. Even the lawless reputations of Miami, Detroit, or Los Angeles are far in excess of the truth, and most parts of these cities, by day at least, are safe; at night, however, some areas are completely off-limits. All the major tourist areas and the main nightlife zones in cities are invariably brightly lit and well policed. By planning carefully and taking good care of your possessions, you should, generally speaking, have few problems.

Car crime

Crimes committed against tourists driving rented cars aren't as common as they once were, but it still pays to be cautious. In major urban areas, any car you rent should have nothing on it – such as a particular license plate – that makes it easy to spot as a rental car. When driving, under no circumstances should you stop in any unlit or seemingly deserted urban area – and especially not if someone is waving you down and suggesting that there is something wrong with your car. Similarly, if you are accidentally rammed by the driver behind you, do not stop immediately, but proceed on to the nearest well-lit, busy area and call 911 for assistance. Keep your doors locked and windows never more than slightly open. Do not open your door or window if someone approaches your car on the pretext of asking for directions. Hide any valuables out of sight, preferably locked in the trunk or in the glove compartment.

Disabled travellers

By international standards, the US is exceptionally accommodating for travelers with mobility concerns or other physical disabilities. All public buildings, including hotels and restaurants, must be wheelchair accessible and provide suitable toilet facilities. Almost all street corners have dropped curbs, and most public transportation systems include subway stations with elevators and buses that “kneel” to let wheelchair passengers board.

Resources

Most state tourism offices provide information for disabled travelers (see p.67). In addition, SATH, the Society for Accessible Travel and Hospitality, in New York (☎212/447-7284, @www.sath.org), is a not-for-profit travel-industry group of travel agents, tour operators, hotel and airline management, and people with disabilities. They pass on any inquiry to the appropriate member, though you should allow plenty of time for a response. Mobility International USA, in Eugene OR (☎541/343-1284, @www.miusa.org), offers travel tips to members ($35 a year) and operates exchange programs for disabled people. They also serve as a national information center on disability. If you'd like to plan a specific itinerary for your trip, contact the Directions Unlimited travel agency in New York (☎914/241-1700 or 1-800/533-5343), which has a department for disabled travelers.

Disabled Outdoors is a quarterly magazine specializing in facilities for disabled travelers who wish to explore the great outdoors. The useful publications by Twin Peaks Press, Travel for the Disabled and Wheelchair Vagabond, are both out of print but widely available online.

The Golden Access Passport, issued without charge to permanently disabled or blind US citizens, gives free lifetime admission to all national parks. It can only be obtained in person at a federal area where an entrance fee is charged; you'll have to show proof of permanent disability, or that you are eligible for receiving benefits under federal law.

Getting around

The Americans with Disabilities Act (1990) obliges all air carriers to make the majority of their services accessible to travelers with disabilities, and most airlines will usually let attendants of more seriously disabled people accompany them at no extra charge.

Almost every Amtrak train includes one or more coaches with accommodation for handicapped passengers. Guide dogs travel free and may accompany blind, deaf, or disabled passengers. Be sure to give 24 hours' notice. Hearing-impaired passengers can get information on ☎1-800/523-6590 (though it can take a while to get through; the service is poorly staffed).

Greyhound, however, is not recommended. Buses are not equipped with lifts for wheelchairs, though staff will assist with boarding (intercity carriers are required by law to do this), and the "Helping Hand" policy offers two-for-the-price-of-one tickets to passengers unable to travel alone (carry a doctor's certificate). The American Public Transportation Association, in Washington, DC (☎202/496-4800, 🌐www.apta.com), provides information about the accessibility of public transportation in cities.

The American Automobile Association (☎1-877/244-9790, 🌐www.aaa.com) produces the Handicapped Driver's Mobility Guide, while the larger car-rental companies provide cars with hand controls at no extra charge, though only on their full-sized (ie, most expensive) models; reserve well in advance.

Electricity

Electricity runs on 110V AC. All plugs are two-pronged and rather insubstantial. Some travel plug adapters don't fit American sockets.

Entry requirements

Keeping up with the constant changes to US entry requirements since 9/11 can sometimes feel like a hopeless task. At least once a year the American government announces new, often harsher, restrictions on foreign entry into the country, adding considerably to the red tape involved in visiting it. Nonetheless, there are several basic rules that apply to these requirements, which are detailed (and should be frequently checked for updates) on the US State Department website 🌐travel.state.gov.

Under the Visa Waiver Program, if you're a citizen of the UK, Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, most Western European states, or other selected countries like Singapore, Japan, and Brunei (27 in all), and visiting the United States for less than ninety days, at a minimum you'll need an onward or return ticket, a visa waiver form, and a Machine Readable Passport (MRP). MRPs issued before October 2005 are acceptable to use on their own; those issued from October 2005 to October 2006 must include a digital photograph of the passport holder; and those issued after October 2006 require a high-tech security chip built into the passport. It is up to the various countries covered by the Visa Waiver Program to provide such passports to their citizens; for more information, inquire at American embassies or consulates.

The I-94W Nonimmigrant Visa Waiver Arrival/Departure Form will be provided either by your travel agency or embassy, or when you get on the plane, and must be presented to Immigration on arrival. The same form covers entry across the US borders with Canada and Mexico (for non-Canadian and non-Mexican citizens). If you're in the Visa Waiver Program and intend to work, study, or stay in the country for more than ninety days, you must apply for a regular visa through your local US embassy or consulate. You will not be admitted under the VWP if you've ever been arrested (not just convicted), have a criminal record, or been previously deported from or refused entry to the US. Under no circumstances are visitors who have been admitted under the Visa Waiver Program allowed to extend their stays beyond ninety days. Doing so will bar you from future use of the program.

Canadian citizens, who have not always needed a passport to get into the US, should have their passports on them when entering the country. If you're planning to stay for more than ninety days, you'll need a visa, which can be applied for by mail through the US embassy or nearest US consulate. If you cross the US border by car, be prepared for US Customs officials to search your vehicle. Remember, too, that without the proper paperwork, Canadians are barred from working in the US.

Citizens of all other countries should contact their local US embassy or consulate for details of current entry requirements, as they are often required to have both a valid passport and a non-immigrant visitor's visa. To obtain such a visa, complete the application form available through your local American embassy or consulate, and send it with the appropriate fee, two photographs, and a passport. Beyond this, you can expect additional hassles to get a visa, including one or more in-depth interviews, supplemental applications for students and "high-risk" travelers, and long delays in processing time. Visas are not issued to convicted criminals, those with ties to radical political groups, and visitors from countries identified by the State Department as being "state sponsors of terrorism" (eg, North Korea, Iran, etc). Complications also arise if you are HIV positive or have TB, hepatitis, or other communicable diseases, or previously been denied entry to the US for any reason. Furthermore, the US government now electronically fingerprints most visitors and applies spot background checks looking for evidence of past criminal or terrorist ties.

For further information or to get a visa extension before your time is up, contact the nearest US Citizenship and Immigration Service office, whose address will be at the front of the phone book, under the Federal Government Offices listings, or call ☎1-800/877-3676. You can also contact the National Customer Service Center at ☎1-800-375-5283. Immigration officials will assume that you're working in the US illegally, and it's up to you to prove otherwise. If you can, bring along an upstanding American citizen to vouch for you, and be prepared for potentially hostile questioning.

US embassies and consulates

In Australia

Embassy Canberra: 21 Moonah Place, Yarralumla ACT 2600 ☎02/6214 5600, www.usembassy-australia.state.gov

Consulates Melbourne: 553 St Kilda Rd, VIC 3004 ☎03/9526 5900
Perth: 16 St George's Terrace, 13th floor, WA 6000 ☎08/9202 1224
Sydney: MLC Centre, Level 10, 19–29 Martin Place, NSW 2000 ☎02/9373 9200
Visa hotline ☎1902/941 641 (prerecorded information, Aus$1.05 per minute) or ☎1800/687 844 (live operators, Aus$2.75 per minute)

In Canada

Embassy 490 Sussex Drive, Ottawa, ON K1N 1G8 ☎613/238-5335, www.usembassycanada.gov
Consulates Calgary: 615 Macleod Trail SE, Room 1000, AB T2G 4T8 ☎403/266-8962
Halifax: Wharf Tower II, 1969 Upper Water St, Suite 904, NS B3J 3R7 ☎902/429-2480
Montreal: 1155 St Alexandre St, QC H3B 1Z1 ☎514/398-9695, montreal.usconsulate.gov
Québec City: 2 Place Terrasse Dufferin, QC G1R 4T9 ☎418/692-2095
Toronto: 360 University Ave, ON M5G 1S4 ☎416/595-1700, www.usconsulatetoronto.ca
Vancouver: 1095 W Pender St, 21st floor, BC V6E 2M6 ☎604/685-4311, www.usconsulatevancouver.ca
Winnipeg: 201 Portage Ave, Suite 860, MB R3B 3K6 ☎204/940-1800, www.usconsulatewinnipeg.ca

In Ireland

Embassy 42 Elgin Rd, Ballsbridge, Dublin 4 ☎01/668 8777, dublin.usembassy.gov

In New Zealand

Embassy 29 Fitzherbert Terrace, Thorndon, Wellington ☎04/462 2000, newzealand.usembassy.gov
Consulate 3rd floor, Citibank Building, 23 Customs St, Auckland ☎09/303 2724
address for visa applications: Non-Immigrant Visas, Private Bag 92022, Auckland

In the UK

Embassy London: 24 Grosvenor Square, W1A 1AE ☎020/7499 9000, visa hotline ☎09042-450100, www.usembassy.org.uk
Consulates Belfast: Danesfort House, 223 Stranmillis Road, Belfast BT9 5GR ☎028/9038 6100
Edinburgh: 3 Regent Terrace, EH7 5BW ☎0131/556 8315

Foreign embassies and consulates in the US

Australia

Embassy 1601 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington DC 20036 ☎ 202/797-3000, 🌐 www.austemb.org

Canada

Embassy 501 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington DC 20001 ☎ 202/682-1740, 🌐 canadianembassy.org

Consulates Boston: Three Copley Place, suite 400, MA 02216 ☎ 617/262-3760
Chicago: Two Prudential Plaza, 180 N Stetson Ave, suite 2400, IL 60601 ☎ 312/616-1860
Los Angeles: 550 S Hope St, 9th floor, CA 90071-2627 ☎ 213/346-2700
Miami: First Union Financial Center, 200 S. Biscayne Blvd, FL 33131 ☎ 305/579-1600
New York: 1251 Avenue of the Americas, NY 10020-1175 ☎ 212/596-1628
San Francisco: 580 California St, 14th Floor, CA 94104 ☎ 415/834-3180

Ireland

Embassy 2234 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington DC 20008 ☎ 202/462-3939, 🌐 www.irelandemb.org

New Zealand

Embassy 37 Observatory Circle NW, Washington DC 20008 ☎ 202/328-4800, 🌐 www.nzembassy.com

UK

Embassy 3100 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington DC 20008 ☎ 202/588-7800, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/consular/embassy
Consulates Atlanta: Georgia Pacific Centre, Suite 3400, 133 Peachtree St NE, GA 30303 ☎ 404/954-7700, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/atlanta
Boston: One Memorial Drive, Suite 1500, Cambridge, MA 02142 ☎ 617/245-4500, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/boston
Chicago: 13th floor, The Wrigley Building, 400 N Michigan Ave, IL 60611 ☎ 312/970-3800, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/chicago
Denver: Suite 1030, World Trade Center, 1675 Broadway, CO 80202 ☎ 303/592-5200, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/denver

Houston: Wells Fargo Plaza, 1000 Louisiana, 19th Floor, TX 77002 ☎ 713/659-6270, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/Houston

Los Angeles: 11766 Wilshire Blvd, Suite 1200, CA 90025 ☎ 310/481-0031, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/la
Miami: Brickell Bay Office Tower, 1001 Brickell Bay Drive, Suite 2800, FL 33131 ☎ 305/374-1522, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/miami

New York: 845 Third Ave, NY 10022 ☎ 212/745-0202, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/ny

San Francisco: 1 Sansome St, Suite 850, CA 94104 ☎ 415/617-1300, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/sf
Seattle: 900 Fourth Ave, Suite 3001, WA 98164 ☎ 206/622-9255, 🌐 www.britainusa.com/seattle

Health

If you have a serious accident while in the US, emergency medical services will get to you quickly and charge you later. For emergencies or ambulances, dial ☎ 911, the nationwide emergency number.

Should you need to see a doctor, consult the Yellow Pages telephone directory under "Clinics" or "Physicians and Surgeons." The basic consultation fee is $50–100, payable in advance. Tests, X-rays, etc., are much more. Medications aren't cheap either – keep all your receipts for later claims on your insurance policy.

Foreign visitors should bear in mind that many pills available over the counter at home – most codeine-based painkillers, for example – require a prescription in the US. Local brand names can be confusing; ask for advice at the pharmacy in any drugstore.

In general, inoculations aren't required for entry to the US.

Medical resources for travelers

CDC 🌐 www.cdc.gov/travel. Official US government travel health site.

International Society for Travel Medicine 🌐 www.istm.org. Full listing of travel health clinics.

Insurance

In view of the high cost of medical care in the US, all travelers visiting the US from overseas should be sure to buy some form of travel insurance. American and Canadian citizens should check that you're not already covered – some homeowners' or renters' policies are valid on vacation, and credit cards such as American Express often

Rough Guides travel insurance

Rough Guides has teamed up with Columbus Direct to offer you travel insurance that can be tailored to suit your needs. Products include a low-cost backpacker option for long stays; a short break option for city getaways; a typical holiday package option; and others. There are also annual multi-trip policies for those who travel regularly. Different sports and activities (trekking, skiing, etc) can be usually be covered if required.

See our website (www.roughguidesinsurance.com) for eligibility and purchasing options. Alternatively, UK residents should call ☎0870/033-9988; US citizens should call ☎1-800/749-4922; Australians should call ☎1-300/669 999. All other nationalities should call ☎+44 870/890 2843.

include some medical or other insurance; most Canadians are covered for medical mishaps overseas by their provincial health plans. If you only need trip cancellation/interruption coverage (to supplement your existing plan), this is generally available at about $6 per $100.

Internet

Due to the fact that over 70% of American homes are now online, cybercafes, where you can get plugged in to the Web for around 5 to 10 cents a minute, are not as common as they were, though many places have WiFi to hook up your own laptop. Hotels may offer free or cheap high-speed Internet access (noted throughout this guide by establishment), and nearly all public libraries provide free Internet access, though often there's a wait and machine time is limited.

A useful website – www.kropla.com – has information on how to plug in a laptop when abroad, as well as phone country codes around the world and details on electrical systems in different countries. For a database of Internet cafés and public Internet access points worldwide, go to www.cybercaptive.com.

Living in the USA

Study and work programs

AFS Intercultural Programs US ☎1-800/AFS-INFO, Canada ☎1-800/361-7248 or 514/288-3282, UK ☎0113/242 6136, Australia ☎1300/131736 or ☎02/9215-0077, NZ ☎0800/600 300 or 04/494 6020, international enquiries ☎+1-212/807-8686, www.afs.org. Global UN-recognized organization running summer programmes to foster international understanding.

From the US and Canada

American Institute for Foreign Study ☎1-866/906-2437, www.aifs.com. Language study and cultural immersion, as well as au pair and Camp America programs.

BUNAC USA (British Universities North America Club) ☎1-800/GO-BUNAC, www.bunac.org. Offers students the chance to work in Australia, New Zealand, Ireland or Britain.

Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE) ☎1-800/40-STUDY or ☎1/207-533-7600, www.ciee.org. Leading NGO offering study programs and volunteer projects around the world.

Earthwatch Institute ☎1-800/776-0188 or 978/461-0081, www.earthwatch.org. International non-profit that does research projects in over 50 countries all over the world.

From the UK and Ireland

BTCV (British Trust for Conservation Volunteers) ☎01302/572 244, www.btcv.org.uk. One of the largest environmental charities in Britain, with a programme of national and international working holidays (as a paying volunteer).

BUNAC (British Universities North America Club) ☎020/7251 3472, www.bunac.co.uk. Organizes working holidays in the US and other destinations for students.

Camp America Camp America ☎020/7581 7373, www.campamerica.co.uk.

Council Exchange ☎020/8939 9057, www.councilexchanges.org.uk. International study and work programmes for students and recent graduates.

Earthwatch Institute ☎01865/318 838, www.uk.earthwatch.org. Long-established international charity with environmental and archeological research projects worldwide.

From Australia and New Zealand

AFS Intercultural Programs Australia

☎ 1300/131 736 or 02/9215-0088, NZ ☎ 0800/600 300 or 04/494 6020, 🌐 www.afs.org.au, 🌐 www.afsnz.org.nz. Runs summer experiential programs aimed at fostering international understanding for teenagers and adults.

From South Africa

AFS Intercultural Programs ☎ 27/11-339-2741,

🌐 www.afs.org/southafrica. Non-profit, self-funded and volunteer-based NGO organization..

Mail

Post offices are usually open Monday to Friday from 9am to 5pm, and Saturday from 9am to noon, and there are blue mail boxes on many street corners. At time of publication, mail within the US costs 39¢ for a letter weighing up to an ounce. Postcards and aerograms to Europe are 75¢, while letters weighing up to an ounce (roughly four thin sheets) are 84¢. Air mail between the US and Europe may take a week to be received.

In the US, the last line of the address includes the city or town and an abbreviation denoting the state (California is "CA" and Texas is "TX"). The last line also includes a five-digit number – the zip code – denoting the local post office. It is very important to include this, though the additional four digits that you will sometimes see appended are not essential. You can check zip codes on the US Postal Service website, at 🌐 www.usps.com.

Rules on sending parcels are very rigid: packages must be in special containers bought from post offices and sealed according to their instructions, which are given at the start of the Yellow Pages. To send anything out of the country, you'll need a green customs declaration form, available from a post office.

Maps

The free road maps distributed by each state through its tourist offices and welcome centers are usually fine for general driving and route planning. In addition, Rough Guides makes rip-proof, waterproof maps for numerous cities, states, and regions in the US, such as New York, California, New England, and much more.

Rand McNally produces maps for each state, bound together in the Rand McNally Road Atlas, and you're apt to find even cheaper state and regional maps at practically any gas station along the major highways for around $3–7. Britain's best source for maps is Stanfords, at 12–14 Long Acre, London WC2E 9LP (☎ 020/7836 1321, 🌐 www.stanfords.co.uk), which also has a mail-order service.

The American Automobile Association, or AAA ("Triple A"; ☎ 1-877/244-9790, 🌐 www.aaa.com), based at 4100 E Arkansas Drive, Denver, CO 80222, provides free maps and assistance to its members, and to British members of the AA and RAC. Call the main number to get the location of a branch near you; bring your membership card, or at least a copy of your membership number.

If you're really after detailed maps that go far beyond the usual fold-out, try Thomas Guides ($20-40), though they only cover places in the western US.

Highly detailed park, wilderness, and topographical maps are available through the Bureau of Land Management for the West (🌐 blm.gov) and for the entire country through the Forest Service (🌐 www.fs.fed.us/maps). The best supplier of detailed, large-format map books for travel through the American outback is Benchmark Maps, whose elegantly designed depictions are easy to follow and make even the most remote dirt roads look appealing.

Money

The US dollar, the country's currency, comes in $1, $5, $10, $20, $50 and $100 denominations. One dollar comprises one hundred cents, made up of combinations of one-cent pennies, five-cent nickels, ten-cent dimes, and 25-cent quarters. You can check current exchange rates at 🌐 www.xe.net/currency; at the time of writing one pound sterling will buy $1.80–1.90 and a Euro $1.20–1.35.

Bank hours are generally from 9am to 5pm Monday to Thursday, and until 6pm on Friday; the big bank names are Wells Fargo, US Bank, and Bank of America. With an ATM card, you'll be able to withdraw

Wiring money

Having money wired from home is never cheap, and should be considered a last resort. If you must, the quickest way is to have someone take cash to the nearest American Express Moneygram office (call ☎ 1-800/543-4080 for locations; also available at participating Travelex branches) and have it instantaneously wired to you, minus a ten-percent commission. For similar, if slightly pricier, services, Western Union also has offices throughout the country (☎ 1-800/325-6000 in the US; ☎ 0800/833 833 in the UK; and ☎ 1800/649 565 in Australia; @www.westernunion.com), with credit-card payments subject to an additional $10 fee.

cash just about anywhere, though you'll be charged $1.50–4 per transaction for using a different bank's network. Foreign cash-dispensing cards linked to international networks, such as Plus or Cirrus, are also widely accepted – ask your home bank or credit card company which branches you can use. To find the location of the nearest ATM, call AmEx ☎ 1-800/CASH-NOW; Cirrus ☎ 1-800/4-CIRRUS; The Exchange ☎ 1-800/237-ATMS; or Plus ☎ 1-800/843-7587. Make sure you have a personal identification number (PIN) that's designed to work overseas.

Credit and debit cards are the most widely accepted form of payment at major hotels, restaurants, and retailers, even though some smaller merchants still do not accept them. You'll be asked to show some plastic when renting a car, bike, or other such item, or to start a "tab" at hotels for incidental charges; in any case, you can always pay the bill in cash when you return the item or check out of your room.

US traveler's checks are the safest way for overseas visitors to carry money, and the better-known checks, such as those issued by American Express and Visa, are treated as cash in most shops.

Opening hours and public holidays

Government offices (including post offices) and banks will be closed on the following national public holidays:

Jan 1 New Year's Day
Third Mon in Jan Martin Luther King Jr's Birthday
Third Mon in Feb Presidents' Day
Last Mon in May Memorial Day
July 4 Independence Day
First Mon in Sept Labor Day
Second Mon in Oct Columbus Day
Nov 11 Veterans' Day
Fourth Thurs in Nov Thanksgiving Day
December 25 Christmas Day

Phones

The US currently has well over one hundred area codes – three-digit numbers that must precede the seven-figure number if you're calling from abroad (following the 001 international access code) or from a different area code, in which case you prefix the ten digits with a 1. It can get confusing, especially as certain cities have several different area codes within their boundaries; for clarity,

Visa TravelMoney

Visa TravelMoney is a disposable debit card pre-paid with dedicated travel funds that you can access from more than nearly a million Visa ATMs in more than 150 countries with a PIN that you select. When your funds are depleted, simply throw the card away. Because you can buy up to nine cards to access the same funds – useful for couples/families traveling together – it's recommended that you buy at least one extra as a backup, in case your first is lost or stolen. You can call a 24hr Visa customer-assistance services center toll-free: ☎ 1-800/VISA-911 for lost or stolen cards; visit also @www.visa.com. In the UK and the US, Travelex (@www.travelex.com) sells the card.

Calling home from abroad

Note that the initial zero is omitted from the area code when dialing the UK, Ireland, Australia and New Zealand from abroad.

US and Canada international access code + 1 + area code.

Australia international access code + 61 + city code.

New Zealand international access code + 64 + city code.

UK international access code + 44 + city code.

Republic of Ireland international access code + 353 + city code.

South Africa international access code + 27 + city code.

For codes not listed here, dial 0 for the operator, consult any phone directory or log onto www.countrycallingcodes.com.

in this book, we've included the local area codes in all telephone numbers. Note that some cities require you to dial all ten digits, even when calling within the same code.

The cheapest way to make long-distance and international calls is by purchasing a prepaid phonecard, commonly found in $5 and $10 denominations in newsagents or minimarkets, especially in urban areas. These are cheaper than the similar cards issued by the big phone companies that are usually on sale in pharmacy outlets and chain stores. The rate using such cards from the USA to most European and other western countries is only 2/3¢ per minute; they also provide the lowest rates to developing countries. Such cards can be used from any touchpad phone but there is usually a surcharge for using them from a payphone. You can also usually arrange with your local telecom provider to have a chargecard account with a freephone access in the US, so that any calls you make are billed to your home. This may be convenient, but it's far more expensive than using prepaid cards.

If overseas travellers wish to use their mobile phones (always referred to as cell phones in the US), check with your service provider that your phone will work in the US and what the roaming charges will be, or if you can use a local SIM card in it (though that will change your number to an American one). If you find out your phone won't work in the States, you might consider renting one.

US residents setting out on a cross-country trip should make sure that their mobile phone will work – and if additional charges will be imposed – when using the phone outside of its “home” area code. Travelers from Canada will have no problems using their phones, though they may have to pay roaming charges, depending on their plan and network

Senior travelers

Anyone over age 62 (with appropriate ID) can enjoy a vast range of discounts in the US. Both Amtrak and Greyhound offer (smallish) percentage reductions on fares to older passengers, and any US citizen or permanent resident 62 or over is entitled to free admission for life to all national parks, monuments, and historic sites using a Golden Age Passport (issued for a one-time fee of $10 at any such site). This free admission applies to all accompanying travelers in the same vehicle and also gives a fifty percent reduction on park user fees, such as camping charges.

Membership in the AARP (formerly the American Association of Retired Persons), based in Washington DC (☎202/434-2277 or 1-888/687-2277, www.aarp.org), is open to US residents 50 or over for an annual $12.50 fee; the organization plans group travel for seniors and can provide discounts on accommodation and vehicle rental.

Elderhostel, in Boston (☎1-800/454-5768, www.elderhostel.org), runs an extensive network of educational and activity programs for people over 60 throughout the US, at prices broadly in line with those of commercial tours. Deluxe and fun-orientated group tours are available from Vantage Travel, also based in Boston (☎1-800/322-6677, www.vantagetravel.com).

State tourism information

Alabama ☎ 1-800/252-2262, 🌐 www.touralabama.org
Alaska ☎ 1-800/862-5275, 🌐 www.travelalaska.com
Arizona ☎ 1-866/275-5816, 🌐 www.arizonaguide.com
Arkansas ☎ 1-800/628-8725, 🌐 www.arkansas.com
California ☎ 1-800/TO-CALIF, 🌐 www.gocalif.ca.gov
Colorado ☎ 1-800/COLORADO, 🌐 www.colorado.com
Connecticut ☎ 1-888/288-4748, 🌐 www.ctvisit.com
Delaware ☎ 1-866/284-7483, 🌐 www.visitdelaware.com
Florida ☎ 1-888/735-2872, 🌐 www.visitflorida.com
Georgia ☎ 1-800/847-4842, 🌐 www.georgiaonmymind.org
Hawaii ☎ 1-800/GO-HAWAII, 🌐 www.gohawaii.com
Idaho ☎ 1-800/VISIT-ID, 🌐 www.visitid.org
Illinois ☎ 1-800/226-6632, 🌐 www.enjoyillinois.com
Indiana ☎ 1-888/365-6946, 🌐 www.enjoyindiana.com
Iowa ☎ 1-800/345-IOWA, 🌐 www.traveliowa.com
Kansas ☎ 1-800/252-6727, 🌐 www.travelks.com
Kentucky ☎ 1-800/225-8747, 🌐 www.kentuckytourism.com
Louisiana ☎ 1-800/99-GUMBO, 🌐 www.louisianatravel.com
Maine ☎ 1-888/624-6345, 🌐 www.visitmaine.com
Maryland ☎ 1-800/634-7386, 🌐 www.mdisfun.org
Massachusetts ☎ 1-800/227-6277, 🌐 www.massvacation.com
Michigan ☎ 1-888/784-7328, 🌐 www.michigan.org
Minnesota ☎ 1-800/657-3700, 🌐 www.exploreminnesota.com
Mississippi ☎ 1-866/733-6477, 🌐 www.visitmississippi.org
Missouri ☎ 1-800/519-2100, 🌐 www.visitmo.com
Montana ☎ 1-800/847-4868, 🌐 www.visitmt.com
Nebraska ☎ 1-800/228-4307, 🌐 www.visitnebraska.org
Nevada ☎ 1-800/237-0774, 🌐 www.travelnevada.com
New Hampshire ☎ 1-800/386-4664, 🌐 www.visitnh.gov
New Jersey ☎ 1-800/847-4865, 🌐 www.visitnj.org
New Mexico ☎ 1-800/545-2070, 🌐 www.newmexico.org
New York ☎ 1-800/I-LOVE-NY, 🌐 www.iloveny.com
North Carolina ☎ 1-800/847-4862, 🌐 www.visitnc.com
North Dakota ☎ 1-800/435-5663, 🌐 www.ndtourism.com
Ohio ☎ 1-800/BUCKEYE, 🌐 www.discoverohio.com
Oklahoma ☎ 1-800/652-6552, 🌐 www.travelok.com
Oregon ☎ 1-800/547-7842, 🌐 www.traveloregon.com
Pennsylvania ☎ 1-800/847-4872, 🌐 www.visitpa.com
Rhode Island ☎ 1-800/556-2484, 🌐 www.visitrhodeisland.com
South Carolina ☎ 1-888/727-6453, 🌐 www.discoversouthcarolina.com
South Dakota ☎ 1-800/732-5682, 🌐 www.travelsd.com
Tennessee ☎ 1-800/462-8366, 🌐 www.tnvacation.com
Texas ☎ 1-800/888-8839, 🌐 www.traveltex.com
Utah ☎ 1-800/882-4386, 🌐 www.utah.com
Vermont ☎ 1-800/VERMONT, 🌐 www.vermontvacation.com
Virginia ☎ 1-800/847-4882, 🌐 www.virginia.org
Washington ☎ 1-800/544-1800, 🌐 www.experiencewashington.com
Washington, D.C. ☎ 1-800/422-8644, 🌐 www.washington.org
West Virginia ☎ 1-800/225-5982, 🌐 www.callwva.com
Wisconsin ☎ 1-800/432-8747, 🌐 www.travelwisconsin.com
Wyoming ☎ 1-800/225-5996, 🌐 www.wyomingtourism.org

Time

The continental US covers four time zones, and there's one each for Alaska and Hawaii as well. The Eastern zone is five hours behind Greenwich Mean Time (GMT), so 3pm London time is 10am in New York (see below for the one-week exception). The Central zone, starting approximately on a line down from Chicago and spreading west to Texas and across the Great Plains, is an hour behind the East (10am in New York is 9am in Dallas). The Mountain zone, which covers the Rocky Mountains and most of the Southwest, is two hours behind the East Coast (10am in New York is 8am in Denver). The Pacific zone includes the three coastal states and Nevada, and is three hours behind New York (10am in the Big Apple is 7am in San Francisco). Lastly, most of Alaska (except for the St Lawrence Islands, which are with Hawaii) is nine hours behind GMT (10am in New York is 6am in Anchorage), while Hawaii is ten hours behind GMT (10am in New York is 5am in Honolulu). The US puts its clocks forward to daylight saving time on the first Sunday in April (a week later than the EU) and turns them back on the last Sunday in October.

Tourist information

Each state has its own tourist office, as listed in the box on p.67. These offer prospective visitors a colossal range of free maps, leaflets, and brochures on attractions from overlooked wonders to well-trod tourist traps. You can either contact the offices before you set off, or, as you travel around the country, look for the state-run "welcome centers," usually along main highways close to the state borders. In heavily visited states, these often have piles of discount coupons for cut-price accommodation and food. In addition, visitor centers in most towns and cities—often known as the "Convention and Visitors Bureau," or CVB, and listed throughout this book—provide details on the area, as do local Chambers of Commerce in almost any town of any size.

Tourist offices and government sites

Australian Department of Foreign Affairs

📧 www.dfat.gov.au, 📧 www.smarttraveller.gov.au.

British Foreign & Commonwealth Office

📧 www.fco.gov.uk.

Canadian Department of Foreign Affairs

📧 www.dfait-maeci.gc.ca.

Irish Department of Foreign Affairs 📧 www.foreignaffairs.gov.ie.

New Zealand Ministry of Foreign Affairs

📧 www.mft.govt.nz.

US State Department 📧 www.travel.state.gov.

Guide

Guide

1	New York City	71-128
2	The Mid-Atlantic	129-196
3	New England	197-300
4	The Great Lakes	301-396
5	The Capital Region	397-482
6	The South	483-606
7	Florida	607-672
8	Louisiana	673-712
9	Texas	713-768
10	The Great Plains	769-834
11	The Rockies	835-918
12	The Southwest	919-1026
13	California	1027-1162
14	The Pacific Northwest	1163-1220
15	Alaska	1221-1258
16	Hawaii	1259-1288

New York City

CHAPTER 1

Highlights

- * Ellis Island Once the first stop for millions of prospective immigrants from all over the world. See p.82
- * The Brooklyn Bridge Take a stroll across this much-loved bridge for spectacular views of the city's skyline. See p.89
- * Grand Central Station tours Admire the magnificent Beaux Arts building and savor the seafood in its subterranean Oyster Bar. See p.96
- * Central Park A massive, gorgeous greenspace, filled with countless bucolic amusements; understandably called "the lungs of the city." See p.102
- * The Metropolitan Museum of Art The museum's mammoth collection could keep you busy for days. See p.103
- * Coney Island The world's tallest Ferris wheel is among the landmark attractions at this beachside amusement park. See p.110
- * A baseball game at Yankee Stadium Between April and October, it would be a shame not to take in a Bronx Bombers ballgame. See p.112

△ Central Park

New York City

The most beguiling city in the world, New York City is an adrenaline-charged, history-laden place that holds immense romantic appeal for visitors. Whether gazing at the flickering lights of the Midtown skyscrapers as you speed across the Queensboro Bridge, experiencing the 4am half-life in the Village, or just whiling the day away in Central Park, you really would have to be made of stone not to be moved by it all. There's no place quite like it.

New York City comprises the central island of Manhattan and the four outer boroughs – Brooklyn, Queens, the Bronx, and Staten Island. Manhattan, to many, is New York; certainly, this is where you're likely to stay and spend most of your time. The island is broadly divided into three areas: Downtown (below 14th St), Midtown (from 14th St to Central Park/59th St), and Uptown (north of 59th St). Though you could spend weeks here and still barely scratch the surface, there are some key attractions and pleasures that you won't want to miss. These include the different ethnic neighborhoods, like Chinatown, and the more artsy concentrations of SoHo, TriBeCa, and the East and West villages. Of course, there is the celebrated architecture of Midtown and the Financial District, as well as many fabulous museums – not just the Metropolitan and MoMA, but countless other smaller collections that afford weeks of happy wandering. In between sights, you can eat just about anything, at any time, cooked in any style; you can drink in any kind of company; and enjoy any number of obscure movies. The more established arts – dance, theater, and music – are superbly presented. For the avid consumer, the choice of shops is vast, almost numbingly exhaustive, in this heartland of the great capitalist dream.

Manhattan is a hard act to follow, and the four outer boroughs, essentially residential in character, inevitably pale in comparison. However, all hold treasures that are worth seeking out. Brooklyn Heights is one of the city's most beautiful neighborhoods; Long Island City and Astoria, both in Queens, hold many innovative museums; and a visit to the Bronx Zoo is sure to be rewarding. Last but not least, a free trip on the Staten Island Ferry is not to be missed; a sea-sprayed, refreshing good time, it provides excellent views of the city.

Some history

The first European to see Manhattan Island, then inhabited by the Algonquin Indians, was the Italian navigator Giovanni da Verrazano, in 1524. Dutch colonists established the settlement of New Amsterdam exactly one hundred years later. The first governor, Peter Minuit, was the man who famously “bought” the whole island for a handful of trinkets. Considering that the Indians he actually paid were not locals, but only passing through, it might be said that they received a fine deal, too. A strong defensive wall – today's Wall Street follows its course – surrounded the colony. By the time the British laid claim to the area in 1664, the heavy-handed rule of governor Peter Stuyvesant had so alienated its inhabitants that the Dutch handed over control without a fight.

Renamed New York, the city prospered and grew, its population reaching 33,000 by the time of the American Revolution. The opening of the Erie Canal in 1825 facilitated trade farther inland, spurring the city to become the economic powerhouse of the nation, the base later in the century of financiers such as Cornelius Vanderbilt and Pierpont Morgan. The Statue of Liberty arrived from France in 1886, a symbol of the city's role as the gateway for generations of immigrants, and the early twentieth century saw the sudden proliferation of Manhattan's extraordinary skyscrapers, which cast New York as the city of the future in the eyes of an astonished world.

Almost a century later, the events of September 11, 2001, which destroyed the World Trade Center, shook New York to its core. Several years on, the site of the attacks at Ground Zero has been cleared, and construction has begun on the city's new skyline jewel—the Freedom Tower (see box, p.84), which will also commemorate those who were killed.

Arrival, information, and city transportation

New York City is served by three major airports: John F. Kennedy, or JFK, in Queens, LaGuardia, also in Queens, and Newark, in New Jersey.

From JFK, New York Airport Service buses run to the Port Authority Bus Terminal, Grand Central Station, Penn Station, and major Midtown hotels in Manhattan (every 15–20min 6am–midnight; trip time 45min–1hr; $15 one-way, $27 roundtrip, students $6.50). Another option is the bus/subway link, which costs just the $2 subway fare: take the free shuttle bus (labeled “Long-term parking”) to the Howard Beach station on the #A subway line, then the 65min subway ride to central Manhattan.

From LaGuardia, New York Airport Service buses take 45 minutes to get to Grand Central and Port Authority (every 15–30min 7am–midnight; $12 one-way, $21 roundtrip, students one-way $6.50). Alternatively, for $2, you can take the #M60 bus to 125th Street in Manhattan, where you can transfer to multiple Downtown-bound subway lines.

From Newark, Olympia Airport Express buses take up to forty minutes to get to Manhattan, where they stop at Grand Central, Penn Station, Port Authority, and multiple locations in Lower Manhattan (every 20–30min 4am–midnight; $14 one-way, $23 roundtrip). Alternatively, you can use the AirTrain service, which runs for free between all Newark terminals, parking lots, and the Newark Airport Rail Link station, where you can connect with NJ Transit or Amtrak trains into New York Penn Station. It usually takes about 20min, and costs $14 one-way (every 20–30min 6am–midnight).

Taxis are pricey from the airports; expect to pay $18–24 from LaGuardia, a flat rate of $35 from JFK, and $35–55 from Newark (airport taxis at Newark will tell you their flat fares to different parts of Manhattan before you leave). You should only use official yellow taxis.

Minibus shuttle services are a decent mid-priced option if you don't mind multiple stops along the way and a very early start. Super Shuttle minivans run 24hr and arrange pick-ups three hours before domestic departures and five hours before international ones (☎ 1-800/BUE-VAN or 212/BUE-VAN). One-way fares to the airport run $15–20, more for a ride from the airport into the city ($30–35). Be forewarned that, if your van has many pick-ups, the time spent picking up riders is not always equal to the money saved. For general information on getting to and from the airports, call the Port Authority ground transportation and parking hotline at ☎ 1-800/AIR-RIDE.

Greyhound buses pull in at the Port Authority Bus Terminal, 42nd Street and Eighth Avenue. Amtrak trains come in to Penn Station, at Seventh Avenue and 33rd Street. From either Port Authority or Penn Station, multiple subway lines will take you where you want to go from there.

If arriving by car, you have multiple options: Rte-495 transects Midtown Manhattan from New Jersey through the Lincoln Tunnel and from the east through the Queens-Midtown Tunnel. From the southwest, I-95 (the New Jersey Turnpike) and I-78 serve Canal and Spring streets (near SoHo and TriBeCa) via the Holland Tunnel. From the north, I-87 (New York State Thruway) and I-95 serve Manhattan's loop roads. Be prepared for delays at tunnels and bridges; most charge tolls. Also, when parking your car in Manhattan, try for a garage as near to the rivers as possible to avoid high fees.

Information

The best place for information is the New York Convention and Visitors' Bureau, 810 Seventh Ave at 53rd Street (Mon–Fri 8.30am–6pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; ☎212/484-1222, @www.nycvisit.com). It has leaflets on what's going on in the arts, bus and subway maps, and information on accommodation – though they can't actually book anything for you. You can also find lots of listings at @newyork.citysearch.com. For trendier offerings, go to @www.dailycandy.com. Free city maps are available at the tourist cubicle in Grand Central.

The James A. Farley Post Office, Manhattan's main branch, is at 421 Eighth Ave, between West 31st and 33rd streets (Mon–Sat 24hr for all services except registered mail; zip code 10001).

City transportation

Few cities equal New York for sheer street-level stimulation, and walking is the most exciting way to explore. However, it's also exhausting, so at some point you'll need to use some form of public transportation. Citywide subway and bus system maps – the subway map is especially invaluable – are available from all subway station booths, the Convention and Visitors' Bureau (see above), the concourse office at Grand Central, or online at @www.mta.nyc.ny.us.

The subway

The fastest way to get from point A to point B in Manhattan and the boroughs is the subway, open 24hr a day. Intimidating at first glance, the subway system is actually quite user-friendly. A number or letter identifies each train and route, and most routes run uptown or downtown, rather than crosstown. Every trip, whether on the express lines, which stop only at major stations, or the locals, which stop at all stations, costs $2. The old-fashioned subway token is no longer accepted; now all riders must use a MetroCard, available at station booths or credit/debit/ATM card-capable vending machines. MetroCards can be purchased in any amount from a $2 single ride to $80; a $20 purchase allows 12 rides for the

City streets and orientation

The first part of Manhattan to be settled was what is now Downtown; this is why the streets here have names (as opposed to numbers) and are somewhat randomly arranged. A map (see p.81) is key for getting around Lower Manhattan effectively. Often you will hear of places referred to as being either on the West Side or the East Side; what this means, simply, is whether the place in question lies west or east of Fifth Avenue, the greatest of the main avenues, which begins Downtown at the arch in Washington Square Park and runs north to cut along the east side of Central Park. On the East Side above Houston Street (pronounced "Howstun"), and on the West Side above 14th, the streets follow a sensible grid pattern, progressing northward one by one. When looking for a specific address, keep in mind that on streets, house numbers increase as you walk away from Fifth in either direction; on avenues, house numbers increase as you move north.

CityPass

For significant discounts at six of the city's major tourist and cultural attractions – the American Museum of Natural History, the Guggenheim Museum, the Museum of Modern Art, the Intrepid Sea-Air-Space Museum, the Circle Line Harbor Cruise, and the Empire State Building – you can purchase a CityPass ($45; ☎ 707/256-0490, @ www.citypass.com). Valid for nine days, it allows you to skip most lines and save (up to $46, if you visit all six sights). CityPasses are sold at each of the six attractions to which the pass provides admission.

cost of 10. Unlimited rides are available with a 24hr “Fun Pass” ($7), a 7-day pass ($24), and a 30-day pass ($76).

Once you get past the turnstile, forget everything you've seen in the movies. New York City subways are generally quite safe, in part because they are almost always crowded, even at night. The key to being safe is to use common sense. Always use the more crowded center subway cars late at night. Once inside the subway system, you can ride around for as long as you like, as long as you don't pass back out through the turnstiles; if you do, you'll have to swipe your card again to get back in.

Buses

New York's bus system is clean, efficient, and fairly frequent. Its one disadvantage is that it can be extremely slow – in peak hours almost down to walking pace – but it can be your best bet for traveling crosstown. Buses leave their route terminal points at five- to ten-minute intervals, and stop every two or three blocks. The fare is payable on entry with a MetroCard (the same one used for the subway) or in cash, but with exact change only; you can transfer for free within two hours of swiping your MetroCard. Keep in mind, though, that transfers can only be used to continue on in your original direction, not for return trips on the same bus line.

Taxis

Taxis can be expensive, but they're convenient and can be caught just about anywhere. Although many drivers speak rudimentary English, they can normally get you where you want to go. Knowing the exact address and its cross street is helpful. You should only use official yellow taxis.

Guided tours

Countless businesses and individuals compete to help you make sense of the city, offering all manner of guided tours. One of the more original – and least expensive – ways to get oriented is with Big Apple Greeter, 1 Centre St, suite 2035 (☎ 212/669-8159, @ www.bigapplegreeter.org). This not-for-profit group matches you with a local volunteer and points you to places that interest you. It's free, so get in touch well ahead of time.

New York City Vacation Packages (☎ 1-888/692-8701, @ www.nycvp.com) can book rooms at some of the city's finest hotels, land tickets to sold-out Broadway shows, and organize a walking tour of Ground Zero or Chinatown for you; just pick from an à la carte menu of offerings. Package prices vary widely, so call or email @info@nycvp.com for information.

Gray Line, the biggest operator of guided bus tours in the city, is based in Midtown Manhattan at Eighth Avenue between 47th and 48th streets (☎ 1-800/669-0051, @ www.grayline.com); they also have an office at the Port Authority Bus Terminal. Double-decker bus tours offer unlimited hop-on, hop-off service, tak-

Walking tours

Adventure on a Shoestring ☎ 212/265-2663. This 40-year-old tour company offers such wonderfully off-beat options as “Marilyn Monroe’s Manhattan,” the “When Irish Eyes Were Smiling” tour of Hell’s Kitchen, and “Greenwich Village Ghosts Galore.” Tours ($5) run 90 minutes, and are offered on weekends, rain or shine, throughout the year.

Big Onion Walking Tours ☎ 212/439-1090, 🌐 www.bigonion.com. The Onion guides peel off the many layers of the city’s history (all guides hold advanced degrees in American history). Tours run from $15; call or visit the website for schedules and meeting places. Expect to add $4 if the tour includes “noshing stops.”

HarlemHeritageTours 230W116thSt, suite5C ☎ 212/280-7888, 🌐 www.harlemheritage.com. Cultural walking tours of Harlem, general and specific (such as Harlem jazz clubs), are led middays and evenings seven days a week for $10–100 (most tours average $25); reservations are recommended and can be booked online.

ing in the main sights of Manhattan, for around $49. Tours are bookable through any travel agent, or directly at the bus stops. If you’re not happy with your tour guide (quality can vary widely), you can hop off the bus and wait another fifteen minutes for the next bus and guide.

A good way to see the city skyline is with the Circle Line Ferry, which sails around Manhattan in three hours from Pier 83 at the west end of 42nd Street (at 12th Ave), with a commentary and on-board bar (March–Dec with varying regularity; $24 for 2hr tour; ☎ 212/563-3200, 🌐 www.circleline.com). They also operate more exhilarating tours on “The Beast,” a speedboat (May–Oct; $17 adults, $11 children for 30min ride). Alternatively, the Staten Island Ferry provides a beautiful panorama of the Downtown skyline for free.

For a bird’s-eye view, Liberty Helicopter Tours, at the west end of 30th Street near the Jacob Javits Convention Center (☎ 212/967-4550, 🌐 www.libertyhelicopters.com), offers helicopter flights from around $69 for 7 minutes to $186 for 17 minutes per person.

Accommodation

Prices for accommodation in New York are well above the norm for the US as a whole. Most hotels charge more than $100 a night (although exceptions and decent double rooms from $75 a night do exist). Most of New York’s hotels are in Midtown Manhattan – a good enough location, though you may well want to travel downtown for less expensive (and usually better) food and nightlife. Book-ahead is strongly advised; at certain times of the year – Christmas and early summer in particular – everything is likely to be full. Phone the hotels directly, or at no extra charge contact a booking service, such as CRS (☎ 407/740-6442 or 1-800/555-7555) or Quick Book (Mon–Fri only ☎ 1-800/789-9887). The price codes given at the end of each review reflect the cost of the cheapest double room during the high season.

Apartment stays and bed-and-breakfasts are an attractive alternative. Staying in a New Yorker’s spare room or subletting an apartment is an increasingly popular and somewhat less expensive option. Reservations are normally arranged through an agency such as those listed above. Rates run about $80–100 for a double, or $100 and up a night for a studio apartment. Book well in advance.

Hostels offer still more savings, and run the gamut in terms of quality, safety, and amenities. It pays to do research ahead of time so as to ensure satisfaction upon arrival; most of the city's best cheap sleeps have websites. Average hostel rates range from $30–60.

Hotels

60 Thompson 60 Thompson St, between Spring and Broome ☎212/431-0400, www.60thompson.com. This boutique property oozes sophistication and tempts guests with countless amenities, including gourmet minibars, DVD players, and a summertime rooftop lounge overlooking the SoHo skyline. All this fabulousness comes at a price, though. ⑤

Algonquin 59 W 44th St, between 5th and 6th aves ☎212/840-6800, www.algonquinhotel.com. At New York's classic literary hangout, you'll find a resident cat named Matilde, cabaret performances, and suites with silly names. The decor remains little changed since its Round Table heyday, though the bedrooms have been refurbished to good effect, and the lobby restored. Ask about summer and weekend specials. ⑤

Amsterdam Inn 340 Amsterdam Ave, at 76th St ☎212/579-7500, www.nyninns.com. Within easy walking distance of Central Park, Lincoln Center, and the American Museum of Natural History. Rooms are basic but clean, with TVs, phones, and maid service. The staff is friendly and there's a 24hr concierge. ⑤

The Chelsea Hotel 222 W 23rd St, between 7th and 8th aves ☎212/243-3700, www.hotelchelsea.com. One of New York's most noted landmarks, this aging neo-Gothic building boasts a fabulous past (see p.94). Ask for a renovated room, with wood floors, log-burning fireplaces, and plenty of space for a few extra friends. ⑤

Dylan 52 E 41st St, between Park and Madison ☎212/338-0500 or 1-866/55-DYLAN, www.dylanhotel.com. The hardwood floors, warm light, and vaguely lemony-tasting air in the lobby are indicative of the whole experience at Dylan – classy and clever. If you can afford it, book the Alchemy Suite, a one-of-a-kind Gothic bedchamber with a vaulted ceiling and unusual stained-glass windows. ⑤

Edison 228 W 47th St, between Broadway and 8th Ave ☎212/840-5000, www.edisonhotelnyc.com. The most striking thing about the funky 1000-room Edison, a good value for Midtown, is its beautiful Art Deco lobby. The rooms are not fancy. ⑦

Gramercy Park 2 Lexington Ave, at E 21st St ☎212/475-4320, www.gramercyparkhotel.com. In a lovely location, this hotel reopened in August 2006 after Ian Schrager (co-founder of Studio 54) made great bohemian renovations.

The lobby is like stepping into a 3-D painting. Guests get a key to the adjacent private park (see p.94). ⑤

Larchmont 27 W 11th St, between 5th and 6th aves ☎212/989-9333, www.larchmonthotel.com. This budget hotel, with a terrific location on a tree-lined street in Greenwich Village, has small but nice, clean rooms. Slightly more expensive on weekends. ⑤

Lucerne 201 W 79th St, at Amsterdam ☎212/875-1000 or 1-800/492-8122, www.newyorkhotel.com. This beautifully restored 1904 brownstone, with its extravagantly Baroque red terracotta entrance, charming rooms, and friendly, helpful staff, is just a block from the American Museum of Natural History and close to the liveliest stretch of the Columbus Avenue scene. ⑤

 Mercer 147 Mercer St, at Prince ☎212/966-6060, www.mercerhotel.com. Housed in a landmark Romanesque Revival building, this hot SoHo hotel has been the choice of many celebs since 1998. Some loft-like guest rooms also have massive baths with 90 square feet for splashing around, and the Mercer Kitchen restaurant garners rave reviews. ⑤

Milburn 242 W 76th St, between Broadway and West End ☎212/362-1006, www.milburnhotel.com. This welcoming and well-situated hotel is great for families. ⑤

Pickwick Arms 230 E 51st St, between 2nd and 3rd aves ☎212/355-0300, www.pickwickarms.com. This thoroughly pleasant budget hotel is one of the best deals in Midtown. All 370 rooms are air-conditioned, with cable TV, direct-dial phones, and room service. The open-air roof deck has stunning views, and there are two restaurants (one French, one Mediterranean) downstairs. ⑤

Roger Smith 501 Lexington Ave, at E 47th St ☎212/755-1400, www.rogersmith.com. One of the best Midtown hotels. Pluses include individually decorated rooms, a great restaurant, helpful service, and artwork on display in public spaces. Breakfast is included. ⑤

Royalton 44 W 44th St, between 5th and 6th aves ☎212/869-4400, www.royaltonhotel.com. Attempting to capture the market for the arbiters of style, the Philippe Starck–designed Royalton has tiny, nautical-themed rooms that are comfortable and quiet, affording a welcome escape from the bustle of Midtown. Stop in just to see the elegant lobby, which runs the length of a city block. ⑤

Seventeen 225 E 17th St, between 2nd and 3rd aves ☎212/475-2845, 🌐www.hotel17ny.com. Seventeen's rooms feature AC, cable TV, and phones, though they still have shared baths. It's clean, friendly, and nicely situated on a pleasant tree-lined street minutes from Union Square and the East Village. Check out the excellent weekly rates. ⑥

SoHo Grand 310 W Broadway, at Grand ☎212/965-3000, 🌐www.sohogrand.com.

In a great location at the edge of SoHo, this hotel draws guests of the model/media-star/actor variety. Its appeal includes small but stylish rooms, a good bar, restaurant, and fitness center. Call for info about its sleek sister property, the Tribeca Grand. ⑥

Stanford 43 W 32nd St, between Broadway and 5th Ave ☎212/563-1500 or 1-800/365-1114, 🌐www.hotelstanford.com. In this clean, moderately priced hotel on the block known as Little Korea, rooms are a tad small, but attractive and very quiet. Free continental breakfast, valet laundry, and an efficient, friendly staff. ⑥

W 541 Lexington Ave, between 49th and 50th sts ☎212/755-1200, 🌐www.whotels.com. Downtown location at 201 Park Ave S at 17th St ☎212/253-9119. These two branches of the stylish luxury hotel chain offer top-to-bottom comfort, priding themselves on the wired in-room services, sleek neutral tones, and trendy public spaces, such as the Whisky Blue Bar in the Midtown location, or celebrity chef Todd English's Olives restaurant in the Downtown one. ⑥

Wales 1295 Madison Ave, between 92nd and 93rd sts ☎212/876-6000, 🌐www.waleshotel.com. Just steps from NYC's "Museum Mile" (see p.101), this Carnegie Hill hotel has hosted guests for over a century. Rooms are attractive with antique details, thoughtful in-room amenities, and some views of Central Park. There's also a rooftop terrace, fitness studio, famous Sarabeth's Café, and live harp music during breakfast. ⑥

Washington Square 103 Waverly Place, at Washington Square Park ☎212/777-9515, 🌐www.washingtonsquarehotel.com. Location in the heart of Greenwich Village, a stone's throw from the NYU campus. Don't be deceived by the posh-looking lobby – the rooms are surprisingly shabby for the price, but serviceable. Continental breakfast is included. ⑥

Bed-and-breakfasts

Affordable New York City 21 E 10th St ☎212/533-4001, 🌐www.affordablenyc.com. Detailed descriptions are provided for this established network of 120 properties (B&Bs and apartments) around the city. B&B accommodations with shared or private bath run ④, unhosted studios are ⑥, and one-bedroom apartments are ⑦–⑧. Cash or traveler's checks only; three-night minimum. Very customer-oriented and personable.

Bed and Breakfast Network of New York 130 Barrow St ☎212/645-8134 or 1-800/900-8134, 🌐www.bedandbreakfastnetny.com. Call at least a month in advance, and ask about weekly and monthly specials. Hosted doubles ⑥

CitySonnet.com ☎212/614-3034, 🌐www.citysonnet.com. This small, personalized, artist-run B&B/short-term apartment agency offers accommodations all over the city, but specializes in Greenwich Village. Singles, doubles, and unhosted studio apartments. ④–⑤

Colby International 139 Round Hey, Liverpool L28 1RG, England UK ☎0151/220 5848, 🌐www.colbyinternational.com. Guaranteed B&B accommodations can be arranged from the UK. Book at least two weeks ahead in high season for these excellent-value double apartments (④–⑤) and studios (④).

Urban Ventures 38 W 32nd St, suite 1412 ☎212/594-5650, 📧reservations@gamutnyc.com. Book up until the last minute for nightly, weekly, or monthly rentals; there's a minimum stay of only two nights. Budget doubles from ④, "comfort range" rooms from ⑥.

Hostels

Chelsea International Hostel 251 W 20th St, between 7th and 8th aves ☎212/647-0010, 🌐www.chelseahostel.com. In the heart of Chelsea, this is a smart Downtown choice: beds are $28 a night, with four or six sharing the clean, rudimentary rooms. Private double rooms are $70 a night. Guests must leave a $10 key deposit. No curfew; passport required.

Gershwin 7 E 27th St, between 5th and Madison aves ☎212/545-8000, 📞684-5546, 🌐www.gershwinhotel.com. This hostel/hotel geared toward young travelers offers Pop Art decor and dormitories with two, six, or ten beds per room (from $33 a night) and private rooms from $109. Reservations recommended for both room types.

Hostelling International-New York 891 Amsterdam Ave, at W 103rd St ☎212/932-2300, 🌐www.hinewyork.org. Dorm beds cost $32 (in ten-bed rooms) to $38 (in four-bed rooms); members pay a few dollars less per night. The massive facilities – 624 beds in all – include a restaurant, library, travel shop, TV room, laundry, and kitchen. Reserve well in advance – this hostel is very popular.

Jazz on the Park 36 W 106th St, at Central Park West ☎ 212/932-1600, 🌐 www.jazzonthepark.com. This groovy bunkhouse boasts a TV/games room, the Java Joint Café, and lots of activities, including live jazz on weekends. Rooms sleep between 2 and 14 people, are clean, bright, and air-conditioned, and range from $32 to $130 per night. Reserve at least one week in advance.

West Side YMCA 5 W 63rd St, at Central Park West ☎ 212/441-8800, 🌐 www.ymcanyc.org. The “Y,” just steps from Central Park, houses two floors of renovated rooms, an inexpensive restaurant, swimming pool, gym, and laundry. All rooms are air-conditioned. Singles $80, doubles $110 with private bath.

1

NEW YORK CITY | Accommodation

Whitehouse Hotel of New York 340 Bowery
☎ 212/477-5623, 🌐 www.whitehousehotelofny.com. This is the only hostel in the city that offers single and double rooms at dorm rates. Also popular for its Downtown location, and amenities such as AC, ATMs, cable TV, and linens. Private singles start at $27.25, private doubles at $53.90.

Downtown Manhattan

The patchwork of neighborhoods below 14th Street, DOWNTOWN MANHATTAN, runs the gamut from high finance and cutting-edge cool to Old World charm; it's truly one of the most vibrant, exciting parts of the city. Downtown's interest actually begins below Manhattan's southern tip in New York Harbor, which holds the compulsory attractions of the Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island. The southernmost neighborhood on the mainland is the Financial District, with Wall Street at its center, flanked by Battery Park and the South Street Seaport; less than a half-mile north, the buildings of the Civic Center transition into the jangling street life of Chinatown, which is fast encroaching upon the once-authentic, now-touristy Little Italy. East of Chinatown and Little Italy, the Lower East Side marks the traditional point of entry into the city for many different immigrant groups. These days, it's very trendy, with chic bars and restaurants opening up weekly.

West of Chinatown and Little Italy, respectively, the one-time industrial areas of TriBeCa and SoHo are now expensive residential (and, in the case of SoHo, shopping) districts, ostensibly home to Manhattan's film and art scenes, but with few sights to reflect either fact. The smallish area known as NoLiTa takes in numerous boutiques and hip restaurants in its few well-manicured blocks. North of Houston Street, the activity picks up even more in the West Village and East Village, two former bohemian enclaves that are now more traditional than their residents would like to think. Still, both are good fun, the former for its charming backstreets and brownstones, the latter for its energetic nightlife.

It's hard to talk for too long about Lower Manhattan without mentioning the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001, which killed more than 2600 people and destroyed the Twin Towers, a longtime symbol of the Financial District and an iconic part of the New York City skyline. A pilgrimage to Ground Zero, as the former site of the towers has come to be called, is for many an integral part of a visit to New York.

The Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island

Standing tall and proud in the middle of New York Harbor, the Statue of Liberty has for more than a century served as a symbol of the American Dream. Depicting Liberty throwing off her shackles and holding a beacon to light the world, the monument was the creation of the French sculptor Frédéric Auguste Bartholdi, crafted a hundred years after the American Revolution, in recognition of fraternity between the French and American people. The statue, designed by Gustave Eiffel, of Eiffel Tower fame, was built in Paris between 1874 and 1884. Bartholdi enlarged his original terracotta model to its present size through four successive versions; one of these now stands beside the Seine in Paris. The one here was formally dedicated by President Grover Cleveland on October 28, 1886.

Just across the water, Ellis Island was the first stop for more than twelve million prospective immigrants. Originally called Gibbet Island by the English (who used it for punishing unfortunate pirates), it became an immigration station in 1892, mainly to handle the massive influx from southern and eastern Europe. It remained open until 1954, when it was left to fall into atmospheric ruin.

△ Ellis Island Immigration Museum

The immigrants who arrived at Ellis Island were all steerage-class passengers; richer voyagers were processed at their leisure on-board ship. Most families arrived hungry and penniless; con men preyed on them from all sides, stealing their baggage as it was checked and offering rip-off exchange rates for whatever money they had managed to bring. Each family was split up – men sent to one area, women and children to another – while a series of checks weeded out the undesirables and the infirm. Steamship carriers were obliged to return any immigrants not accepted to their original port, but according to official records only two percent were rejected. Many of those jumped into the water and tried to swim to Manhattan rather than face going home.

By the time of its closure, Ellis Island was a formidable complex, the island having been expanded by landfill. In the turreted central building, the Ellis Island Immigration Museum (daily 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 212/363-3200, 🌐 www.nps.gov/stli) successfully recaptures the spirit of the place with features such as “Treasures from Home,” a collection of family heirlooms, photos, and other artifacts, as well as live, somewhat hit-or-miss re-enactments of the immigrant experience (April–Sept; $5, children $2.50). The “Wall of Honor” (🌐 www.wallofhonor.com) displays the names of some of those who passed through Ellis Island – though controversially, families were required to pay $100 to be included on the list.

To get to Liberty and Ellis islands (no admission fees for either), you’ll need to take a Circle Line ferry from the pier in Battery Park (sailings every 30min, daily 9.30am–3.30pm; roundtrip $11.50, children $4.50; tickets from Castle Clinton, in the park; ☎ 212/269-5755, 🌐 www.circlelineferry.com); the ferry goes first to Liberty Island, and then continues on to Ellis. It’s best to leave as early in the day as possible, both to avoid long lines and to insure you get to see both islands; if you take the last ferry of the day, you won’t be able to visit Ellis Island. Liberty Island needs a good couple of hours, especially if the weather’s nice and there aren’t too many people; Ellis Island, too, demands at least two hours for the Museum of

The World Trade Center

Completed in 1973, the Twin Towers of the World Trade Center were an integral part of New York's legendary skyline, and a symbol of the city's social and economic success. While the World Trade Center's claim to be the world's tallest building was quickly usurped by Chicago's Sears Tower (and later on by other buildings), and despite the damage wrought in February of 1993 by a terrorist bomb explosion that killed six, the Twin Towers were very successful, having become both a busy workspace and a much-loved tourist destination. However, on September 11, 2001, all that changed, as two hijacked planes crashed into the towers just twenty minutes apart. The subsequent collapse of both towers (as well as other buildings in the World Trade Center complex) served as a terrible wake-up call, and took the lives of hundreds of firefighters, police officers, and rescue workers, among the approximately 2600 people who died.

In 2003, Polish-born American architect Daniel Libeskind was named the winner of a competition held to decide what shape the new World Trade Center would take. Libeskind's visionary design includes the use of windmills, meant as symbols of energy independence, beneath the planned Freedom Tower spire. However, he has lost control of designing the Freedom Tower; maneuverings have handed that job to David Childs. While Libeskind's design was irregularly faceted and asymmetrical, Childs' vision smooths out the rough edges, yet essentially keeps to the original plan. In addition to the tower, Reflecting Absence will serve as a memorial to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, and February 26, 1993. The design includes a ceremonial one-and-a-half acre clearing on the plaza level and a gallery on a second level, where the names of those lost during those two attacks can be viewed with a waterfall in the background. Additionally, there will be a memorial hall, offering a space to sit and reflect, with a contemplation room that will also house the remains of those lost and never identified. After heated political debate, construction on below-grade utility relocations, footings, and foundations began on the Freedom Tower in April 2006.

Immigration. If you just want the views and some time out on the water, take the free, fun Staten Island Ferry into the harbor; see p.112 for full details.

The Financial District

The Financial District has been synonymous with the Manhattan of popular imagination for some time, its tall buildings and powerful skyline symbols of economic strength and financial wheeling and dealing. Though New York City had an active securities market by 1790, the New York Stock Exchange wasn't officially organized until 1817, when 28 stockbrokers adopted their own constitution and established membership rules. It's been one of the world's great financial centers ever since, having most recently weathered the fallout from the World Trade Center attacks. Besides visiting a temporary viewing platform where you can glimpse the first phase of the new construction at Ground Zero (see box, above), there is plenty more to see and do here – it remains the city's most historic district, with many winding streets, old churches, and fine twentieth-century architecture.

Wall Street and around

When the Dutch arrived in New York and settled at the site of the future Financial District, they built a wooden wall at the edge of their small settlement to protect themselves from pro-British settlers to the north. Hence, the narrow canyon of Wall Street gained its name. Today, behind the Neoclassical mask of the New York Stock Exchange, at Broad and Wall streets, the purse strings of the world are pulled. Due to security concerns, however, the public can no longer observe the frenzied trading on the floor of the exchange.

The Federal Hall National Memorial, at 26 Wall St, looks a little foolish surrounded by skyscrapers. The building was once the Customs House, but the exhibit inside (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; free; ☎212/825-6888, @www.nps.gov/fehha) relates to the headier days of 1789, when George Washington was sworn in as president from a balcony on this site. Washington's statue stands, very properly, on the steps outside the gently domed hall. At Wall Street's western end, on Broadway between Rector and Church streets, Trinity Church (guided tours daily at 2pm; free) is an ironic onlooker to the street's dealings, a knobably neo-Gothic structure erected in 1846, and the city's tallest building for fifty years thence. The place has much the air of an English church, especially in its sheltered graveyard, which is the resting place of early luminaries including the first Secretary of the Treasury (and the man on the ten-dollar bill) Alexander Hamilton, who was killed in a duel by then-Vice President Aaron Burr.

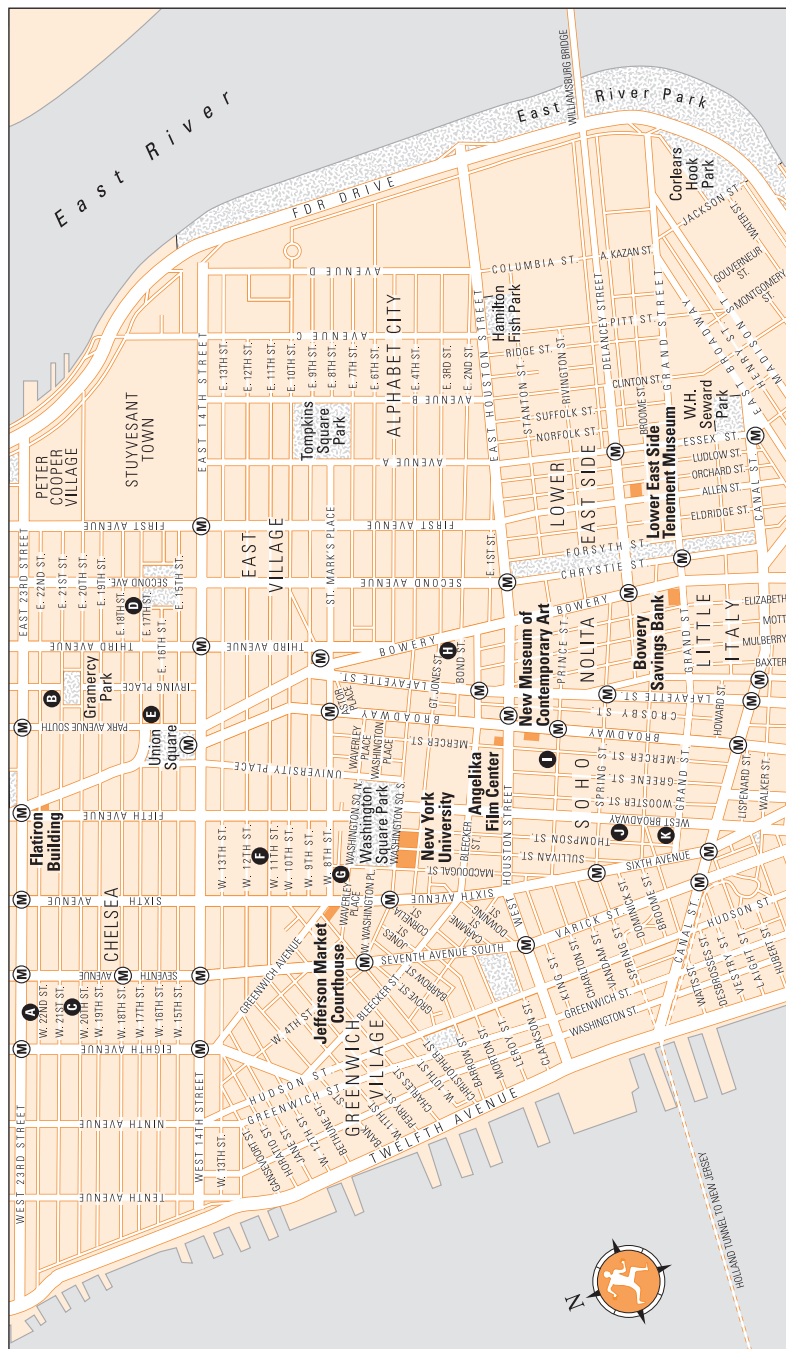

Just down from Trinity Church, Broadway comes to a gentle end at Bowling Green Park, an oval of turf used for the game (of bowling) by eighteenth-century colonial Brits, on a lease of "one peppercorn per year." Earlier still, the green was the site of one of Manhattan's more memorable business deals: Peter Minuit, first director general of the Dutch colony of New Amsterdam, bought the whole island from the Indians for a handful of baubles worth sixty guilders (about $25). At the green today, office workers picnic in the shadow of Cass Gilbert's 1907 US Customs House, a monument to New York's once-booming maritime economy. Four statues at the front (sculpted by Daniel Chester French, who also created the Lincoln Memorial in Washington DC) represent the African, Asian, European, and North American continents, while the twelve statues near the top personify the world's great past and present commercial centers – Genoa and Phoenecia among them. The building's Corinthian columns each feature the head of Mercury, the god of commerce.

The Customs House contains the superb Smithsonian National Museum of the American Indian (daily 10am–5pm, Thurs until 8pm; free; ☎212/514-3700, @www.si.edu/nmai), a fascinating assembly of artifacts from almost every tribe native to the Americas. The curators give a creative presentation of their material, which includes large wood and stone carvings from the Pacific Northwest; elegant featherwork from Amazonia; a large array of masks; Aztec mosaics; Mayan textiles; seven-foot house posts shaped like animals; a handful of scalps; and a tribe's worth of elaborately beaded moccasins.

Battery Park and around

Across State Street from the Customs House, Downtown Manhattan lets out its breath in Battery Park, where the nineteenth-century Castle Clinton (daily 8.30am–5pm) once protected the southern tip of Manhattan and now sells ferry tickets to the Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island (see p.83). The spruced-up park stretches for blocks up the west side and is dotted with piers, cool corners, a restaurant, and some inventive landscaping. Not far from where the World Trade Center stood is one of the city's first (and few official, so far) memorials to the victims of September 11th; its focal point is the cracked 15-foot steel-and-bronze spherical sculpture, designed by Fritz Koenig, that once stood in the World Trade Center Plaza.

Further toward the tip of the island, in the adjacent Robert F. Wagner Park and just a few feet from the Hudson River, the Museum of Jewish Heritage, 36

Battery Place (April–Sept Sun–Tues & Thurs 10am–5.45pm, Wed 10am–8pm, Fri 10am–5pm; Oct–March same hours, except the museum closes at 3pm on Fri; $10; ☎ 646/437-4200, 🌐 www.mjhnyc.org), is essentially a memorial of the Holocaust, and has three floors of exhibits on twentieth-century Jewish history. The moving and informative collection features practical accoutrements of everyday Eastern European Jewish life, prison garb that survivors wore in Nazi concentration camps, photographs, personal belongings, and multimedia presentations.

South Street Seaport and the Brooklyn Bridge

North up Water Street from Battery Park stands the partly reconstructed Fraunces Tavern, at Pearl and Broad streets (Tues–Fri noon–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm; $4; ☎ 212/425-1778, 🌐 www.frauncestavernmuseum.org). Here, on December 4, 1783, with the British conclusively beaten, a weeping George Washington took leave of his assembled officers, intent on returning to rural life in Virginia. Today there's a colonial-looking bar and restaurant on the ground floor, and a fun museum upstairs.

△ Brooklyn Bridge

Further up Water Street, at the eastern end of Fulton Street, is the renovated South Street Historic District, formerly New York's bustling sail-ship port. Trade eventually moved elsewhere, and the blocks of warehouses and ships' chandlers were left to rot until they were renovated in the 1970s. Regular guided tours of the area run from the South Street Seaport Museum, 12 Fulton St (April–Sept Wed–Mon 10am–6pm; Oct–March 10am–5pm; $8; ☎ 212/748-8600, 🌐 www.southstseaport.org), and feature refitted ships and chubby tugboats (the largest US collection of sailing vessels by tonnage), plus a handful of maritime art and trade exhibits. The museum also offers daytime, sunset, and nighttime cruises around New York Harbor on the Pioneer, an 1895 schooner that accommodates up to forty people (May–Sept; $25, $20 for students and seniors, $20 for children under 12; reservations on ☎ 212/748-8766); it's a good alternative to the crowded and noisy Circle Line cruises. And with lots of pubs, restaurants, and well-known chain stores, the seaport is always bustling.

From just about anywhere in the seaport you can see the much-loved Brooklyn Bridge. At the time of its opening in 1883, it was the first bridge to use steel cables, and for its first twenty years in use it was the world's largest suspension bridge. The impressive structure didn't go up easily, though: John Augustus Roebling, its architect and engineer, crushed his foot taking measurements for the piers and died of gangrene three weeks later. His son Washington took over, only to be crippled by the bends from working in an insecure underwater caisson. Twenty workers died during the construction, and, a week after the opening day in 1883, twelve people were crushed to death in a panicked rush on the bridge's footpath. Despite this gory history, the beauty of the bridge itself and the spectacular views of Manhattan it offers make a walk across its wooden planks an essential part of any New York trip. Watch out, however, for rollerbladers and cyclists going at a clip.

West from the foot of the Brooklyn Bridge, at the corner of Vesey Street and Broadway, the defiantly antique St Paul's Chapel seems decidedly out of place in this downtown temple to modernity. The oldest church in Manhattan dates from 1766 – eighty years earlier than Trinity Church and almost prehistoric by New York standards.

City Hall Park and the Civic Center

Immediately north of St Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Park Row form the apex of City Hall Park, a recently restored, brightly flowered triangle now worthy of its handsome setting. Cass Gilbert's 1913 Woolworth Building, at 233 Broadway, between Barclay Street and Park Place, is a venerable onlooker, with its soaring lines fringed with Gothic decoration. Frank Woolworth made his fortune from “five and dime” stores and, true to his philosophy, he paid cash for his skyscraper. The whimsical reliefs at each corner of the lobby show him doing just that, counting out the money in nickels and dimes. Facing him in caricature are the architect (medievally clutching a model of his building), the renting agent, and the builder. Within, vaulted ceilings ooze honey-gold mosaics, and even the mailboxes are magnificent, but the building is closed to tourists, however.

At the top of the park, marking the beginning of the Civic Center, with its incoherent jumble of municipal offices and courts, stands City Hall, which was completed in 1812. After New York saluted the hero aviator Charles A. Lindbergh in 1927, City Hall became the traditional finishing point for Broadway ticker-tape parades given for astronauts, returned hostages, and sports champions. Inside, it's an elegant meeting of arrogance and authority, with the sweeping spiral staircase delivering you to the precise geometry of the Governor's Room and the self-important rooms that formerly contained the Board of Estimates Chamber.

1

NEW YORK CITY

Downtown Manhattan

Chinatown, Little Italy, and NoLita

A short stroll northeast from the Civic Center leads into Chinatown, Manhattan's most thriving ethnic neighborhood, which over recent years has extended north across Canal Street into Little Italy and east into the Lower East Side. With more than 150,000 residents (125,000 of them Chinese), seven Chinese newspapers, about 150 restaurants and more than three hundred garment factories, it is a model for other neighborhoods; it has the lowest crime rate, highest employment, and least juvenile delinquency of any city district. There aren't many sights; rather, the appeal of the neighborhood lies simply in its unbridled energy, in the hordes of people coursing the sidewalk all day long – and, of course, for its excellent Chinese food (see p.113 for some restaurant suggestions).

Today, Mott Street is the most vibrant thoroughfare, and the streets around – Canal, Pell, Bayard, Doyers, and the Bowery – host a positive glut of restaurants, tea and rice shops, grocers, and vendors selling everything from jewelry to toy robots.

On the north side of Canal Street, Little Italy is light years away from the solid ethnic enclave of old. Originally settled by the huge nineteenth-century influx of Italian immigrants, the neighborhood has far fewer Italians living here now. Families were driven away by the high rents or the expanse of Chinatown. The restaurants (of which there are plenty) tend to have high prices and a touristy feel. However, some original bakeries and salumerias (specialty food stores) do survive, and you can still indulge yourself with a good cappuccino and a tasty pastry. During September's ten-day Festa di San Gennaro, a wild and raucous party held in honor of the patron saint of Naples, Italians from all over the city converge on Mulberry Street, transforming Little Italy's main strip with food outlets and street stalls.

North of Little Italy, the trendy enclave of NoLita runs from Houston to Grand Street between Bowery and Lafayette. Originally an authentic Italian neighborhood, NoLita now brims with hipsters and fashionistas who take advantage of the many chic boutiques and restaurants that have popped up.

SoHo and TriBeCa

Since the early 1980s, SoHo, the grid of streets that runs South of Houston Street, has been all about fashion chic, urbane shopping, and cosmopolitan art galleries. However, for the first half of the twentieth century, this area was a wasteland of manufacturers and warehouses. But as rising rents drove artists out of Greenwich Village in the 1940s and 1950s, SoHo suddenly became "in." Its commercial spaces were ideal for large, low-rent lofts, art studios, and galleries. In the 1960s, largely due to the effort of artists living illegally in these lofts (as well as for the area's magnificent cast-iron architecture; see box, opposite), SoHo was declared a historic district. Following this, yuppification – albeit an ultra-trendy strain of it – set in, bringing the fashionable boutiques, hip restaurants, and tourist crowds that are SoHo's signature today. Apart from consumer culture, there's also the New Museum of Contemporary Art, 235 Bowery at Prince Street (Tues–Sun noon–6pm, Thurs until 8pm; $6, students and seniors $3, under-18s free, Thurs 6–8pm free; ☎212/219-1222, 🌐www.newmuseum.org), which has earned a reputation as one of the most exciting, cutting-edge arts institutions in town.

SoHo's cast-iron architecture

The technique of cast-iron architecture originated as a way of assembling buildings quickly and inexpensively, with iron beams rather than heavy walls carrying the weight of the floors. The result was the removal of supporting walls, greater space for windows, and, most noticeably, decorative facades. Almost any style or whim could be cast in iron and pinned to a building, and architects indulged themselves in Baroque balustrades, forests of Renaissance columns, and all the effusion of the French Second Empire to glorify SoHo's sweatshops. Have a look at 72–76 Greene Street, a neat extravagance whose Corinthian portico stretches the whole five stories, all in painted metal, and at the strongly composed elaborations of its sister building at nos. 28–30. At the northeast corner of Broome Street and Broadway the magnificent Haughwout Building is perhaps the ultimate in the genre, with rhythmically repeated motifs of colonnaded arches framed behind taller columns in a thin sliver of a Venetian palace.

TriBeCa, the Triangle Below Canal Street, has caught some of the fallout of SoHo's artists (the rest went to Williamsburg, in Brooklyn, and to Chelsea), and has rapidly changed from a wholesale garment district to a very upscale community. Less a triangle than a crumpled rectangle – the area is bounded by Canal and Chambers streets, Broadway, and the Hudson River – TriBeCa contains spacious industrial buildings that house the apartments of a new gentry, including Nathan Lane and Robert De Niro (whose film production-company, TriBeCa Film Center, and restaurant, TriBeCa Grill, are at 375 Greenwich St). There's not much to see here, but a weekend walk around this serene neighborhood is a pleasant affair, with lots of bars and restaurants on hand.

Greenwich Village

For many visitors, Greenwich Village (or simply “the Village”) is the most-loved neighborhood in New York, despite having lost any radical edge long ago. Its bohemian image endures well enough if you don't live in the city, and it still sports many attractions that brought people here in the first place: a busy streetlife that lasts later than in many other parts of the city; more restaurants per head than anywhere else; and bars cluttering every corner.

Greenwich Village grew up as a rural retreat from the early and frenetic nucleus of New York City. During the yellow fever epidemic of 1822 it became a refuge from the infected streets Downtown. Refined Federal and Greek Revival townhouses lured some of the city's highest society names, and later, at the start of World War I, the Village proved fertile ground for struggling artists and intellectuals, who were attracted to the area's cheap rents and growing community of free-thinking residents. During Prohibition (1920–1933), speakeasies were more prolific and accessible here than anywhere else in the city, and the rebellious fervor that permeated the Village then extended beyond the Twenties and Thirties. It was here that progressive New Yorkers gave birth to countless small magazines, unorthodox “happenings,” and bacchanalian parties that were promoted as “pagan romps,” while the neighborhood's off-Broadway theatres, cafés, and literary and folk clubs came to define Village life.

The natural heart of the Village, Washington Square Park, is not exactly elegant, though it does retain its northern edging of redbrick row houses – the “solid, honorable dwellings” of Henry James's novel Washington Square – and Stanford White's imposing Triumphal Arch, built in 1892 to commemorate the centenary of George Washington's inauguration. The park is also the heart of the truly urban campus of New York University. As soon as the weather gets warm, the park becomes a sports field, performance space, chess tournament, protest site, and social club, feverish with life as street entertainers strum, skateboards flip, and the pulsing bass of hip-hop resounds through the whispered offers of the few surviving dope peddlers (who are just as likely to be undercover cops as dealers).

From the bottom of the park, follow MacDougal Street south and you hit Bleecker Street – the Village’s main drag, packed with shops, bars, people, and restaurants. This junction is also the area’s best-known meeting place, a vibrant corner whose European-style sidewalk cafés have been turned from the literary hangouts of Modernist times to often overpriced tourist draws – though they’re still fun for a spot of people-watching.

Right onto Bleecker, then right again (north) on Sixth Avenue, walk until you see the unmistakable clock tower of the beautiful nineteenth-century Jefferson Market Courthouse. This imposing High Victorian-style edifice first served as an indoor market, but later went on to be a firehouse, a jail, and finally a women’s detention center before enjoying its current incarnation as a public library.

West of here, in the brownstone-lined side streets off Seventh Avenue, such as Bedford and Grove, you’ll glimpse one of the city’s most desirable living areas. Nearby, Christopher Street joins Seventh at Sheridan Square, home of the Stonewall Inn’s gay bar where, in 1969, a police raid precipitated a siege that lasted the best part of an hour. If not a victory for gay rights, it was the first time that gay men had stood up to the police en masse, and as such represents a turning point in the struggle for equal rights, remembered by the Annual Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender March (often just referred to as the Gay Pride Parade). Typically held on the last Sunday in June, the parade, which is arguably the city’s most exciting, and certainly its most colorful, begins at Fifth Avenue and 52nd Street, and ends among the snarl of streets around Sheridan Square.

The East Village

The East Village differs quite a bit from its western counterpart. Once, like the adjacent Lower East Side, the East Village was a refuge for immigrants and solidly working-class people. Home to New York’s nonconformist intelligentsia in the early twentieth century, it later became the haunt of the Beats – Kerouac, Burroughs, Ginsberg, et al – who would get together at Ginsberg’s house on East Seventh Street for declamatory poetry readings. Later, Andy Warhol debuted the Velvet Underground here; the Fillmore East hosted almost every band under the sun; and Richard Hell, Patti Smith, and The Ramones invented punk rock at a hole-in-the-wall club called CBGB, which closed its doors after 33 years in October 2006.

Much of the East Village has changed since the economic boom of the mid-1980s and the 1990s, not the least of which has been escalating rents and gentrification, stripping it of its former status as a hotbed of dissidence and creativity. Nevertheless, the area’s main drag, the vaudevillian St Mark’s Place (Eighth Street), is still one of downtown’s more vibrant strips, even if the thrift shops, panhandlers, and political hustlers have given way to more sanitized forms of rebellion and a cluster of chain sandwich and coffeeshops.

Astor Place, at the western end of St Mark’s Place, was one of the city’s most desirable neighborhoods in the 1830s. The now-undistinguished Lafayette Street was home to such wealthy names as John Jacob Astor, one of New York’s most hideously greedy tycoons. The antique Astor Place subway station, bang in the middle of the junction, discreetly remembers the man on its platforms, where colored reliefs of beavers recall Astor’s first big killings – in the fur trade.

A stone's throw from the subway, Cooper Square is dominated by the seven-story brownstone mass of Cooper Union, erected in 1859 by the industrialist Peter Cooper as a college for the poor and now a prestigious art and architecture school. Early in 1860, Abraham Lincoln wowed top New Yorkers here with his “right makes might” speech, in which he boldly criticized the pro-slavery South and helped propel himself to the Republican nomination for president.

Further east, Alphabet City (avenues A, B, C, and D), a former Slavic enclave – and erstwhile turf of drug dealers and gangs – has gentrified at an alarming rate. Along Avenue A, you'll pass a number of worthwhile fashion and design shops, as well as sushi bars, cafés, and record stores. Tompkins Square Park, between avenues A and B, and Seventh and Tenth streets, is the area's center, and the streets that frame it continue the restaurant and bar theme. Further east, Avenue D is an edgy affair you'll have little need to see.

The Lower East Side

Below the eastern stretch of Houston Street, the Lower East Side began life toward the end of the nineteenth century as an insular slum for roughly half a million Jewish immigrants. Since then it has changed considerably, with many Dominican and Chinese inhabitants, being followed by a recent influx of well-off students, artists, designers, and the like. It's all made the neighborhood quite cool, and the hotbed for trendy shops, bars, and restaurants, with Clinton Street as the epicenter.

You can still buy just about anything cut-price in the Lower East Side, especially on Sunday mornings, when Orchard Street is filled with stalls and stores selling hats, clothes, and designer labels at hefty discounts. Next to this melee is the excellent Lower East Side Tenement Museum, 90 Orchard St between Broome and Delancey (Mon–Wed & Fri 11am–5.30pm, Thurs 11am–7pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm; public tours $14 or $15; ☎212/431-0233, @www.tenement.org), which is housed in a tenement and offers the lowdown on the neighborhood's immigrant and impoverished past.

On the western edge of the Lower East Side, The Bowery runs up as far as Cooper Square on the edge of the East Village. This wide thoroughfare has gone through many changes during its long history: it took its name from bouwerij, the Dutch word for farm, when it was the city's main agricultural supplier; later, in the closing decades of the nineteenth century, it was lined with music halls, theaters, hotels, and restaurants, drawing people from all parts of Manhattan. The only city thoroughfare never to have been graced by a church, it is still – in some sections – a skid row; see, for instance, the Bowery Mission at no. 227. However, such days are surely limited, as the demand for apartments grows and the tide of gentrification continues to sweep through the Lower East Side. The one – bizarre – focus is the Bowery Savings Bank (now the restaurant-club Capitale) at Grand Street. Designed by Stanford White in 1894, its splendid architecture makes the surrounding debris even more depressing (much as its sister bank does on 42nd Street; see p.96).

Midtown Manhattan

MIDTOWN MANHATTAN encompasses everything from the East River to the Hudson between 14th Street and 59th Street, the southern border of Central Park. New York's most glamorous (and most expensive) stretch, Fifth Avenue cuts through Midtown's heart, with the neon theater strip of Broadway running just to the west for much of the way. The character of Midtown is very different depending on which side of Fifth you find yourself. On the avenue itself and to the east are corporate businesses and prestigious skyscrapers – including the Empire State, Chrysler, and Seagram buildings – as well as Grand Central Station and the UN. Here you'll also find the residential neighborhoods of Murray Hill and elegant Gramercy Park. Just below Gramercy's eponymous park, busy Union Square is always great for people-watching. Meanwhile, west of Fifth, Chelsea is home to many quality art galleries, and bordered by the Garment District, where apparel-shop employees still roll racks of clothing through the streets. Around 42nd Street, the Theater District heralds a cleaned-up, frenetic area of entertainment that culminates at Times Square. West of Broadway in the 40s and low 50s, colorful Hell's Kitchen is now more or less wholly gentrified.

Union Square and Gramercy Park

Downtown Manhattan ends at 14th Street, which slices across from the housing projects of the East Side through rows of cut-price shops to the meatpacking warehouses on the Hudson. In the middle is Union Square, its shallow steps enticing passers-by to sit and watch the skateboarders and buskers, or to stroll the cool, tree-shaded paths and lawns. The shopping that once dominated the stretch of Broadway north of here, formerly known as Ladies' Mile for its fancy stores and boutiques, has been moved to Fifth Avenue, where chain stores now cover virtually every block in the mid-teens through the 20s.

East from here, between 20th and 21st streets, where Lexington Avenue becomes Irving Place, Manhattan's clutter suddenly breaks into the ordered open space of Gramercy Park. This former swamp, reclaimed in 1831, is one of the city's best parks, its center tidily planted and, most noticeably, completely empty for much of the day – principally because the only people who can gain access are those rich enough to live here and possess keys to the gate. (There is, however, another way: guests at the Gramercy Park Hotel are allowed into the park; see p.79.)

Broadway and Fifth Avenue meet at 23rd Street at Madison Square, by day a maelstrom of cars and cabs, but with a serene, well-manicured park to take the edge off. Most notable among the elegant structures nearby is the Flatiron Building, 175 Fifth Ave, between 22nd and 23rd streets; the 1902 Beaux Arts structure is known for its unusual narrow corners and six-and-a-half-feet-wide rounded tip. Just north from here, the Museum of Sex, 233 Fifth Ave at 27th St (Sun–Fri 11am–6.30pm, Sat 11am–8pm; $14.50; ☎212/689-6337 or 1-866/667-3984, @www.museumofsex.com), offers other titillating views of the city through a scholarly lens.

Chelsea and the Garment District

Home to a thriving gay community, as well as many good art galleries (check out West 24th, between Tenth and Eleventh aves), the heart of Chelsea lies west of Broadway between 14th and 23rd streets. The neighborhood took shape in 1830 when its owner, Charles Clarke Moore, laid out his land for sale in broad lots. It failed to achieve the desirability he sought, taking until recent decades. Now, though, up and down Eighth Avenue, you'll see all manner of trendy bars and restaurants mingled in with bodegas, frequented by the neighborhood's mixed clientele.

During the nineteenth century, Chelsea was a focus of New York's theater district. Nothing remains of that now, but the hotel that put up all the actors, writers, and attendant entourages – the Chelsea Hotel – remains a New York landmark, with an Edwardian grandeur all its own (for a review, see p.79). Mark Twain and Tennessee Williams lived here, Brendan Behan and Dylan Thomas staggered in and out during their New York visits, and in 1951 Jack Kerouac, armed with a customized typewriter (and a lot of Benzedrine), typed the first draft of On the Road nonstop onto a 120ft-long roll of paper. Perhaps most famously, however, in October 1978 Sid Vicious stabbed Nancy Spungen to death in their suite, a few months before his own life ended with an overdose of heroin. The hotel also inspired Joni Mitchell to write Chelsea Morning.

The Garment District, a loosely defined patch north of Chelsea between 34th and 42nd streets and Sixth and Eighth avenues, produces three-fourths of all the women's and children's clothes in America. You'd never guess it, though; the outlets are strictly wholesale, with no need to woo customers. Retail stores abound, however: Macy's, the largest department store in the world, is on Herald Square at 34th Street and Seventh Avenue.

The district's dominant landmark is the Penn Station and Madison Square Garden complex, which swallows up millions of commuters in its train station below and accommodates the Knicks and Liberty basketball – and Rangers hockey – teams up top. The original Penn Station, demolished to make way for this structure, is now hailed as a lost masterpiece, which reworked the ideas of the Roman baths of Caracalla to awesome effect. Immediately behind Penn Station, the same architects of the original – McKim, Mead, and White – were responsible for the grand, 1914 General Post Office, which is open 24 hours a day.

The Empire State Building and around

Up Fifth Avenue is the Empire State Building, 34th Street and Fifth Avenue (daily 9.30am–midnight, last trip up at 11.30pm; $18, bring photo ID; ☎212/736-3100, 🌐www.esbny.com), which has been a muscular 102-story symbol of New York since being completed in 1931. After the terrorist attacks of September 11th, it became, as it once was, the city's tallest building. An elevator takes you to the 86th floor, which was the summit of the building before the radio and TV mast was added. The views from the outside walkways here are as stunning as you'd expect. For the best views, you should try to time your visit so that you'll reach the top at sunset. (Be advised that during peak season, wait times to ascend are often upwards of an hour.)

East of the Empire State Building, the residential district of Murray Hill was once dominated by the crusty old financier J.P. Morgan and his son, J.P. Jr; the latter's brownstone, at 37th Street and Madison Avenue, is now headquarters of the American Lutheran Church. The home of the elder Morgan, once adjacent to his son's, was razed to make way for the Pierpont Morgan Library. Highlights of the library include one of two surviving copies of the first edition of Sir Thomas Malory's stories of King Arthur, Dylan Thomas's heavily corrected manuscript of "Lament," and Galileo's research notes for an astronomical treatise.

Forty-second Street

On the corner of 42nd Street and Fifth Avenue stands the Beaux Arts New York Public Library (Tues & Wed 11am–7pm, Thurs–Sat 10am–6pm; ☎212/930-0830, 🌐www.nypl.org). Leon Trotsky worked occasionally in the large coffered Reading Room at the back of the building during his brief sojourn in New York, just prior to the 1917 Russian Revolution. He was introduced to the place by his Bolshevik comrade Nikolai Bukharin, who was bowled over by a library one could visit so late in the evening. The opening times are less impressive now, but the library still boasts one of the five largest collections of books in the world. It's worth going inside just to appreciate its reverent, church-like atmosphere.

East on 42nd Street at Park Avenue, the huge bulk of Grand Central Terminal was built around a basic iron frame but features a Beaux Arts facade. The structure's immense size is now dwarfed by the MetLife building behind it. Regardless, the main station's concourse is a sight to behold – 470ft long and 150ft high, it boasts a barrel-vaulted ceiling speckled like a Baroque church with a painted representation of the winter night sky. The 2500 stars are shown back to front – “as God would have seen them,” the painter is reputed to have explained.

You can explore Grand Central on your own, or you can take the Municipal Arts Society's excellent free tour. For the best view of the concourse – as well as the flow of commuters and commerce – climb up to the catwalks that span the sixty-foot-high windows on the Vanderbilt Avenue side. After that, seek out the station's more esoteric reaches, including the Oyster Bar – one of the city's most highly regarded seafood restaurants, deep in the terminal's bowels and jam-packed every lunchtime. Near the restaurant, testing an acoustical fluke, two visitors can stand on opposite sides of any of the vaulted spaces and hold a conversation just by whispering.

Across the street from Grand Central, the former Bowery Savings Bank (now Cipriani 42nd Street) echoes the train station's grandeur, extravagantly lauding the virtues of sound investment and savings. Built in the style of a Roman basilica, it has a floor paved with mosaics, columns (each fashioned from a different kind of marble), and bronze bas-reliefs on the elevator doors. The more famous Chrysler Building, at 405 Lexington Ave, also dates from a time (1930) when architects carried off prestige with grace and style. For a short while, this was the world's tallest building; today, it's one of Manhattan's best-loved structures. The lobby, once a car showroom, with its opulently inlaid elevators, walls covered in African marble, and murals depicting airplanes, machines, and the brawny builders who worked on the tower, is for the moment all you can see of the building.

At the eastern end of 42nd Street, the United Nations complex comprises the glass-curtained Secretariat, the curving sweep of the General Assembly, and, connecting them, the low-rising Conference Wing. Guided tours (daily every 20–30min, weekdays 9.30am–4.45pm, weekends 10am–4.30pm; tours last 45min–1hr, and leave from the General Assembly lobby; $11.50, bring ID; ☎212/963-8687, 🌐www.un.org/MoreInfo/pubsvs.html) take in the UN conference chambers and its constituent parts. Note that tours may vary depending on official room usage.

Times Square and the Theater District

Forty-second Street meets Broadway at the southern margin of Times Square, center of the Theater District and a top tourist attraction. Here, countless monolithic advertisements for Coke, Budweiser, NBC, and the like jostle brightly for attention from the crowds of gawking visitors. It wasn't always this way: traditionally a melting pot of debauchery, depravity, and fun, Times Square was cleaned up in the 1990s and turned into a largely sanitized universe of popular consumption, with refurbished theaters and blinking signage.

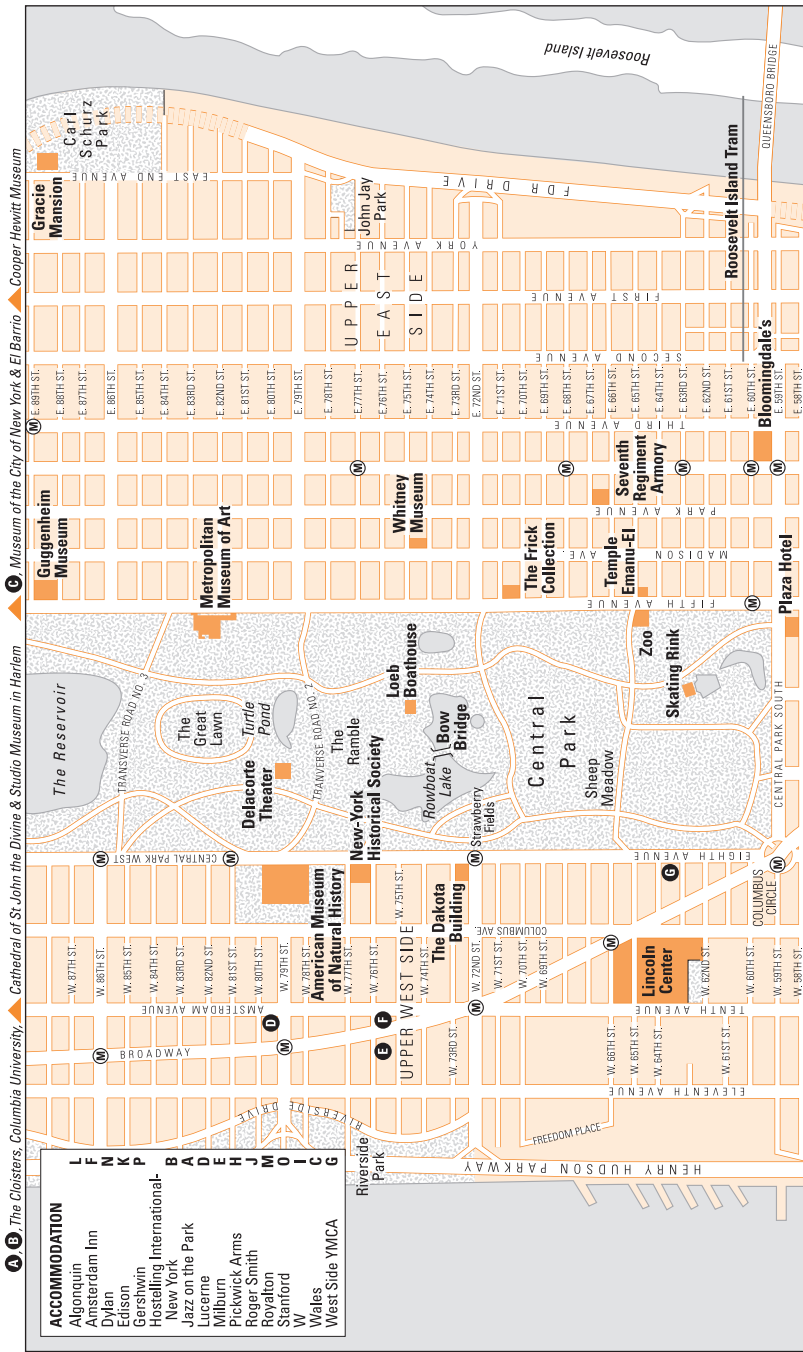

North of Times Square along Seventh Avenue, Carnegie Hall, a warehouse-like venue for opera and concerts at 154 W 57th St, is the thing to see. Tchaikovsky conducted the program on opening night and Mahler, Rachmaninov, Toscanini, Frank Sinatra, and Judy Garland have played here. Carnegie Hall has dropped in status since Lincoln Center opened (see p.121 & the box on p.122), but the superb acoustics still ensure world-class performers and full houses most of the year (Sept–June only, tours available Mon, Tues, Thurs, & Fri at 11.30am, 2pm, & 3pm; $9; general info ☎212/903-9600, tours ☎212/903-9765, tickets ☎212/247-7800, 🌐www.carnegiehall.org).

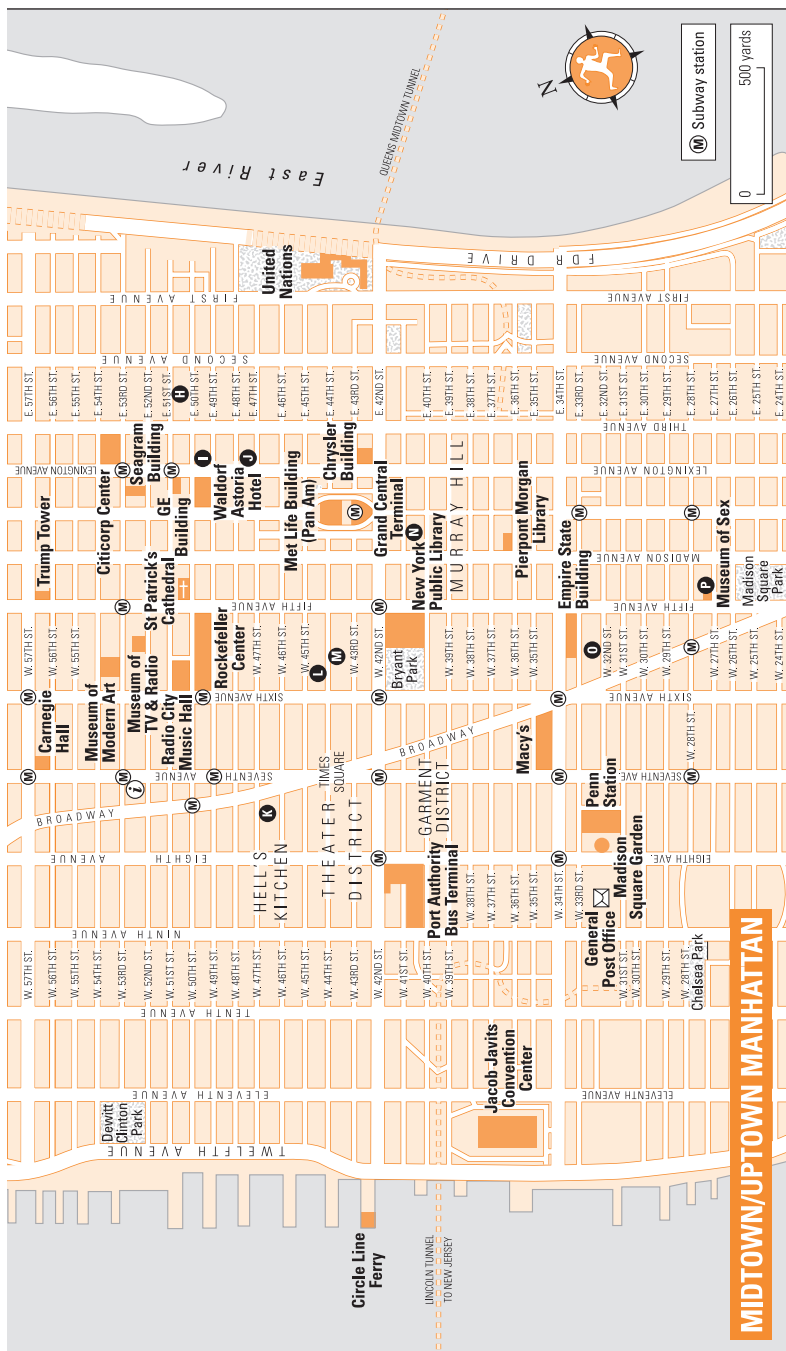

△ Theater District

East of Seventh Avenue, Sixth Avenue is properly named “the Avenue of the Americas,” though no New Yorker ever calls it this and the only manifestation is the flags of Central and South American countries still flying on some blocks. If nothing else, Sixth’s distinction is its width, a result of the Elevated Railway that once ran along here, now replaced by the Sixth Avenue subway underground. In its day the Sixth Avenue “El” marked the borderline between respectability to the east and vice to the west, and the avenue still separates the glamorous strips of Fifth, Madison, and Park avenues from the less salubrious western districts.

At 1260 Sixth Ave, at 50th Street, Radio City Music Hall (1hr tours daily 11.30am–6pm; $17, seniors and students $14; general info ☎212/307-7171, tour info ☎212/247-4777, @www.radiocity.com) is the last word in 1930s luxury. The staircase is regally resplendent, with the world’s largest chandeliers, and the huge auditorium looks like an extravagant scalloped shell. Surely, however, Radio

City is best known for the Rockettes, whose Christmas shows and kicklines have dazzled the masses since 1932.

Fifth Avenue and around

Fifth Avenue has been a great stretch for as long as New York has been a great city, and its very name evokes wealth and opulence. All who consider themselves suave and cosmopolitan end up here, and the stores showcase New York's most conspicuous consumerism. That the shopping is beyond the means of most people needn't put you off, for Fifth Avenue has some of the city's best architecture, too.

At the heart of the glamour is Rockefeller Center, built between 1932 and 1940 by John D. Rockefeller Jr, son of the oil magnate. One of the finest pieces of urban planning anywhere, the Center balances office space with cafés, a theater, underground concourses, and rooftop gardens that work together with a rare intelligence and grace. The GE Building here rises 850ft. At its foot, the Lower Plaza holds a sunken restaurant in summer, linked visually by Paulanship's sparkling Prometheus; in winter, the plaza becomes a small ice rink, allowing skaters to show off their skills to passers-by. Inside, the Center is no less impressive. In the GE lobby, José Maria Sert's murals, American Progress and Time, are a little faded but eagerly in tune with the Thirties Deco ambiance – presumably more so than the original paintings by Diego Rivera, removed by John D.'s son Nelson when the artist refused to scrap a panel glorifying Lenin. A leaflet available from the lobby desk details a self-guided tour of the Center. Among the GE Building's many offices are the NBC Studios (1hr behind-the-scenes tours leave every 30 minutes Mon–Fri, and every 15 minutes on weekends; Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.30pm, Sat & Sun 9.30am–4.30pm; reservations at the NBC Experience Store Tour Desk; $18.50, children $15.50; ☎ 212/664-7174). If you're a TV fan, pick up a free ticket for a show recording from the mezzanine lobby or out on the street. Keep in mind that the most popular tickets evaporate before 9am. The glass-enclosed Today Show studio is at the southwest corner of the plaza at 49th Street, surrounded in the early morning by avid fans waiting to get on TV by way of the cameras that obligingly pan the crowds from time to time. Adjacent is the old Associated Press building, recognizable by the unusual Stalinesque frieze by Japanese-American artist Isamu Noguchi.

Almost opposite Rockefeller Center, on 50th Street and Fifth Avenue, St Patrick's Cathedral, designed by James Renwick and completed in 1888, seems the result of a painstaking academic tour of the Gothic cathedrals of Europe. More striking next door is Olympic Tower, an exclusive apartment block where Jackie Kennedy Onassis once lived. Between Fifth and Sixth avenues at 25 W 52nd St, the Museum of Television and Radio (Tues–Sun noon–6pm, Thurs noon–8pm; $10; ☎ 212/621-6800, 🌐 www.mtr.org) holds an excellent archive of American TV and radio broadcasts.

Continuing north, the Trump Tower at 57th Street is the last word in Fifth Avenue extravagance, with an outrageously over-the-top atrium filled with designer stores. Perfumed air, polished marble paneling, and a five-story waterfall are calculated to knock you senseless with expensive yet somewhat garish taste. But the building is clever: a neat little outdoor garden is squeezed high in a corner, and each of the 230 apartments above the atrium gets views in three directions.

East of Fifth, Madison Avenue makes for pleasant strolling, and is filled with expensive galleries, haute couture shops, and elegantly dressed Eastsiders. The next avenue east, Park Avenue, was said in 1929 to be the place “where wealth is so swollen that it almost bursts.” Things haven't changed much: corporate headquarters and four-star hotels jostle in triumphal procession, led by the massive New York Central Building (now the Helmsley Building) that literally sits above Park Avenue at 46th Street and boasts a lewdly excessive Rococo lobby. In its day this formed a skillful punctuation mark to the avenue, but its thunder was stolen in 1963 by the MetLife Building, 200 Park Ave at 45th Street, which looms behind it.

Wherever you placed it, the solid mass of the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, on Park between 49th and 50th streets, would hold its own, a resplendent statement of Art Deco elegance. Crouched behind it is St Bartholomew's Church, a striking, low-slung Byzantine hybrid that adds immeasurably to the street and gives the lumbering skyscrapers a much-needed sense of scale. The spiky-topped General Electric Building behind seems like a wild extension of the church, its slender shaft rising to a meshed crown of abstract sparks and lightning bolts that symbolizes the radio waves used by its original owner, RCA. The lobby (entrance at 570 Lexington) is yet another Deco delight.

Among all this, it's difficult at first to see the originality of the Seagram Building, at 375 Park Ave, between 52nd and 53rd streets. Designed by Mies van der Rohe (with Philip Johnson) and built in 1958, this was the seminal curtain-wall skyscraper, the floors supported internally, allowing a skin of smoky glass and whisky-bronze metal (Seagram's is known for distilled liquors), now weathered to a dull black. Every interior detail – from the fixtures to the lettering on the mailboxes – was specially designed. It was the supreme example of Modernist reason, and its opening was met by a wave of approval. The plaza, an open forecourt designed to set the building apart from its neighbors, was such a success as a public space that the city revised the zoning laws to encourage other high-rise builders to supply plazas.

A block east, the chisel-topped Citicorp Center, on Lexington Avenue between 53rd and 54th streets, finished in 1979, is one of Manhattan's most conspicuous landmarks. The slanted roof was designed to house solar panels to provide power for the building. However, the idea was ahead of the technology, and Citicorp had to content itself with adopting the distinctive building-top as a corporate logo.

In 2003, the Museum of Modern Art, at 11 W 53rd St, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, reopened after two years of massive renovating. MoMA is a must see, with highlights including Van Gogh's Starry Night, Cezanne's Foliage, and Munch's Madonna. The temporary exhibits, as may be expected, are cutting-edge (Wed–Mon 10.30am–5.30pm, closes Fri at 8pm; $20, seniors $16, students $12; ☎ 212/708-9400, 🌐 www.moma.org).

Uptown Manhattan

UPTOWN MANHATTAN begins above 59th Street, where the businesslike bustle of Midtown gives way to the comfortable domesticity of the Upper East and West sides. In between, people come to Central Park, the city's giant back yard, to play, jog, and escape Midtown's crowds in a particularly intelligent piece of urban landscaping.

The Upper East Side is at its most opulent in the several blocks just east of Central Park, and at its most distinguished in the Metropolitan and other great museums of "Museum Mile," from 82nd to 104th streets along Fifth Avenue. The predominantly residential Upper West Side is somewhat less refined, though its Lincoln Center hosts New York's most prestigious arts performances, and there are certainly plenty of expensive townhouses and apartment buildings. The northern reaches embrace the monolithic Cathedral of St John the Divine and Columbia University. North and east from here, Harlem, the cultural capital of black America, is experiencing a new renaissance. Still farther north, in the Washington Heights area, you'll find one of the city's most intriguing museums, the medieval arts collection of The Cloisters.

Central Park

"All radiant in the magic atmosphere of art and taste." So enthused Harper's magazine upon the opening of Central Park in 1876, and, to this day, few New Yorkers could imagine life without it. Set just about smack in the middle of Manhattan, extending from 59th to 110th streets, it provides residents (and street-weary tourists) with a much-needed refuge from the harshness of big-city life. Whether you're into jogging, baseball, boating, botany, or just plain strolling, or even if you rarely go near the place, there's no question that Central Park makes New York a better place to live.

The poet and newspaper editor William Cullen Bryant had the idea for an open public space in 1844, and spent seven years trying to persuade City Hall to carry it out. Eventually, 840 desolate and swampy acres north of the city limits, then occupied by a shantytown of squatters, were set aside. The two architects commissioned to design the landscape, Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux, planned to create a rural paradise, a complete illusion of the countryside in the heart of Manhattan – even then growing at a fantastic rate. At its opening, Central Park was declared a "people's park" – though most of the impoverished masses it was allegedly built to serve had neither the time nor the means of transportation to come up from their Downtown slums and enjoy it. But as New York grew and workers' leisure time increased, people started to flood in, and the park began to live up to its mission, sometimes in ways that might have scandalized its original builders. Today, although the skyline has changed greatly, and some of the open space has been turned into asphalted playgrounds, the sense of captured nature that they intended largely survives. For general park information, call ☎ 212/310-6600, or visit 🌐 www.centralparknyc.org; for special events information, call ☎ 1-888/NYPARKS.

One of the best ways to explore the park is to rent a bicycle from either the Loeb Boathouse (between 74th and 75th streets, roughly $9–15 an hour) or Metro Bicycles (Lexington at 88th St; $7 per hour; ☎ 212/427-4450); otherwise, it's easy to get around on foot, along the many paths that crisscross the park. There's little chance of getting lost, but to know exactly where you are, find the nearest lamppost: the first two figures signify the number of the nearest street. After dark, however, you'd be well advised not to enter on foot. If you want to see the buildings illuminated from the park at night, one option is to fork out for a carriage ride; the best place to pick up a hack is along Central Park South, between Fifth and Sixth avenues. It's not cheap, though: a twenty-minute trot costs approximately $35, excluding tip.

Most places of interest in the park lie in its southern reaches. Near Grand Army Plaza, the main entrance at Fifth Avenue and 59th Street, is the Central Park Zoo, which tries to keep caging to a minimum and the animals as close to the viewer as possible (April–Oct Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5.30pm; Nov–March daily 10am–4.30pm; $6, ages 3–12 $1, under 3 free; ☎ 212/439-6500). Beyond here, the Dairy, once a ranch building intended to provide milk for nursing mothers, now houses a visitor's center (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 212/794-6564), which distributes free leaflets and maps, sells books, and puts on exhibitions. Also, weekend walking tours often leave from here; call for times.

Nearby, the Wollman Rink (63rd St at mid-park) is a lovely place to skate in winter, or to practice your in-line skating skills in the warmer months. From the rink, you may wish to swing west past the restored Sheep Meadow, a dust bowl in the 1970s, now emerald green. Then, head north up the formal Mall to the terrace, with the sculptured birds and animals of Bethesda Fountain below, on the shore of the Rowboat Lake. To your left (west) is Strawberry Fields, a tranquil, shady spot dedicated to John Lennon by his widow, Yoko Ono, and the Imagine mosaic – both are near where he was killed in 1980; see p.106 for more. On the eastern bank of the lake, you can rent a rowboat from the Loeb Boathouse (March–Oct daily 10am–6pm, weather permitting; $10 for the first hour, and $2.50 per 15min after; $30 refundable cash deposit required; ☎212/517-2233) or cross the water by the elegant cast-iron Bow Bridge.

▲ The Metropolitan Museum of Art

Beyond the bridge, delve into the wild woods of The Ramble along a maze of paths and bridges; this area is best avoided at night. At 81st Street, near the West Side, stands the mock citadel of Belvedere Castle, another visitor center that has nature exhibits and boasts great views of the park from its terraces. Next to the castle, the Delacorte Theater is home to the thoroughly enjoyable Shakespeare in the Park performances in the summer (tickets are free, though they go very quickly; visit @www.publictheater.org for details), while the immense Great Lawn is the preferred sprawling ground for many sun-loving New Yorkers. Beginning at 86th Street, the Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis Reservoir (originally designed in 1862) spans 107 acres. A favored place for active New Yorkers, the raised 1.58-mile track is a great place to get 360° views of the skyline – but just be sure not to block any jogger's path.

Near the north end of the park is the beautifully terraced and landscaped Conservatory Garden, at 103rd Street off Fifth Avenue, encompassing three distinct garden styles: English, Italian, and French.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art

One of the world's great art museums, the Metropolitan Museum of Art (usually referred to as just "the Met") juts into the park at Fifth Avenue and 82nd Street (Tues–Thurs & Sun 9.30am–5.30pm, Fri & Sat 9.30am–9pm; suggested donation $15, seniors and students $7; includes same-day admission to The Cloisters; ☎ 212/535-7710, @www.metmuseum.org). Its all-embracing collection amounts to more than two million works of art, spanning America and Europe as well as China, Africa, the Far East, and the classical and Islamic worlds. You could spend weeks here and not see everything.

If you can make just one visit, head for the European Painting galleries. Of the early (fifteenth- and sixteenth-century) Flemish and Dutch paintings, the best are by Jan van Eyck, who is generally credited with having started the tradition of North European realism, and Rogier van der Weyden, whose Christ Appearing to His Mother is one of his most beautiful works.

The Italian Renaissance is less spectacularly represented here, but a worthy selection includes an early Madonna and Child Enthroned with Saints by Raphael, a late Botticelli, and Filippo Lippi's Madonna and Child Enthroned with Two Angels. The nineteenth-century galleries house a startling array of Impressionist and Post-Impressionist art, showcasing Manet and Monet among others, and the compact twentieth-century collection features paintings such as Picasso's portrait of Gertrude Stein and The Blind Man's Meal, alongside works by Klee, Hopper, and Matisse. The Medieval Galleries are no less exhaustive, with displays of sumptuous Byzantine metalwork and jewelry donated by J.P. Morgan, while the Asian Art galleries house plenty of murals, sculptures, and textile art from Japan, China, Southeast and Central Asia, and Korea. Don't miss the exquisite and lovingly assembled Chinese Garden Court.

The Upper East Side

A two-square-mile grid, the Upper East Side has wealth as its defining characteristic, as you'll appreciate if you've seen any of the many Woody Allen movies set here. The area's stretch of Fifth Avenue has been the patrician face of Manhattan since the opening of Central Park attracted the Carnegies, Astors, and Whitneys to migrate north and build fashionable residences. Grand Army Plaza, at Central Park South and Fifth Avenue, flanked by the extended chateau of the swanky Plaza Hotel, and glowing with the gold statue of the Civil War's General William Tecumseh Sherman, serves as the introduction.

On the corner of Fifth Avenue and 65th Street, America's largest reform synagogue, the Temple Emanu-El, strikes a sober tone (Sun–Thurs 10am–4.30pm, Fri 10am–3.30pm, Sat noon–5pm; free; ☎ 212/744-1400). The brooding Romanesque-Byzantine cavern manages to be bigger inside than it seems from outside, and, as you enter, the interior appears to melt away into darkness, making you feel very small indeed. Just east from the temple, on Park Avenue between 66th and 67th streets, the 1870s Seventh Regiment Armory is the only surviving building from the era before the New York Central's railroad tracks were roofed over and Park Avenue became an upscale residential neighborhood.

Back on Fifth, at 70th Street, you'll find Henry Clay Frick's house, a handsome spread and now the tranquil home of the Frick Collection (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $15; ☎ 212/288-0700). One of many prestigious museums in the area, the Frick is perhaps the most enjoyable of the big New York galleries; it is made up of the art treasures hoarded by Frick during his years as probably the most ruthless of New York's robber barons. The collection includes paintings by Rembrandt, Reynolds, Hogarth, Gainsborough (St James's Park), and Bellini, whose St Francis suggests his vision of Christ by means of pervading light, a bent tree, and an enraptured stare. Above the fireplace, El Greco's St Jerome reproachfully surveys the riches all around, looking out to the South Hall, where one of Boucher's intimate depictions of his wife hangs near an early Vermeer, Officer and Laughing Girl.

Just a few blocks north, over on Madison Avenue at 75th Street, the Whitney Museum of American Art (Wed, Thurs, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm, Fri 1–9pm; $15; ☎ 212/570-3676, 🌐 www.whitney.org) boasts a pre-eminent collection of twentieth-century American art and a superb exhibition locale. Every other year the museum mounts the Whitney Biennial show of contemporary American art – an event that has become a lightning rod for critical abuse since the 1995 show, when a giant mound of cooking fat presented as sculpture set right-wing aesthetes into a frenzy. When that’s not on, check out the somewhat arbitrary Highlights of the Permanent Collection, arranged both by chronology and theme. Enjoy the prominent Abstract Expressionists collection, with great works by high priests Pollock and De Kooning, leading on to Rothko and the Color Field painters and the later Pop Art works of Warhol, Johns, and Oldenburg. The museum is especially strong on Hopper, O’Keeffe, and Calder, with galleries concentrating on each.

A ten-minute walk north from the Whitney, the Guggenheim Museum, Fifth Avenue at 89th Street (Sat–Wed 10am–5.45pm, Fri 10am–8pm, closed Thurs; $18, seniors & students $15, Fri 6–8pm pay what you wish; ☎ 212/423-3500, 🌐 www.guggenheim.org), is better known for the building than its collection. Designed by Frank Lloyd Wright, this unique structure caused a storm of controversy when it was unveiled in 1959. Its centripetal spiral ramp, which wends you continuously all the way to its top floor (affording a vertiginous view of the lobby at the center) or, alternatively, from the top to the bottom, is still thought by some to favor Wright’s talents over those of the exhibited artists. One of the newer additions is the Mapplethorpe Gallery, which houses some of the museum’s odder pieces, including Louise Bourgeois’ wood-chip sculpture Femme Volage, as well as several Calder mobiles. Much of the building is still given over to temporary exhibitions, but the permanent collection includes work by Chagall, Léger, the major Cubists and, most completely, Kandinsky. Additionally, there are some late nineteenth-century paintings, not least the exquisite Degas’ Dancers, Modigliani’s Jeanne Hébuterne with Yellow Sweater, and some sensitive early Picassos.

Two blocks up, at Fifth Avenue and 91st Street, lies the Smithsonian-run Cooper Hewitt National Design Museum (Tues–Thurs 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–9pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; $12; ☎ 212/849-8400, 🌐 www.ndm.si.edu). This wonderful institution is the only museum in the US devoted exclusively to historic and contemporary design. Founded in 1897, it’s housed in the magnificent mansion once owned by Andrew Carnegie and functions as a research center as well as museum. If you’re a history buff, the Museum of the City of New York, Fifth Avenue at 103rd Street (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; suggested donation $9; ☎ 212/534-1672, 🌐 www.mcny.org), might also grab your interest, with an informative rundown on the history of the city from Dutch times to the present day.

About a thirty-minute walk away, at the far eastern end of 88th Street overlooking the East River, Gracie Mansion is one of the best-preserved colonial buildings in the city. Built in 1799 on the site of a Revolutionary fort as a country manor house, it is roughly contemporary with the Morris–Jumel Mansion (see p.108). Gracie Mansion has been the official residence of the mayor of New York City since 1942, when Fiorello LaGuardia, “man of the people” that he was, reluctantly set up house here – though “mansion” is a bit overblown for what’s a rather cramped clapboard cottage.

The Upper West Side

Above 59th Street, Manhattan’s West Side becomes less commercial, fading north of Lincoln Center into a residential area of mixed charms. This is the Upper West Side, now one of the city’s more desirable addresses, though in truth an area long favored by artists and intellectuals. Streets have been rechristened in honor of erstwhile residents like Isaac Bashevis Singer and Edgar Allan Poe. However, gentrification during the 1990s saw it become a bit yuppified and noticeably less funky than it once was.

Broadway shears north from Columbus Circle to the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, a marble assembly of buildings put up in the early 1960s on the site of some of the city's worst slums. Home to the Metropolitan Opera, the New York Philharmonic, and a host of other smaller companies (see p.121), the center is worth seeing even if you don't catch a performance (tours daily 10am–4.30pm, leaving from the main concourse under the Center; $12.50; call ☎212/875-5350 to reserve). At the center of the complex, behind a large fountain, the Metropolitan Opera House is an impressive marble and glass structure, with murals by Marc Chagall behind each of its high front windows.

The most famous of the monumental apartment buildings of Central Park West is the Dakota, a grandiose Renaissance-style mansion on 72nd Street, built in the late nineteenth century to persuade wealthy New Yorkers that life in an apartment could be just as luxurious as in a private home. Over the years, big-time tenants have included Lauren Bacall and Leonard Bernstein, and in the late 1960s the building was used as the setting for Roman Polanski's film Rosemary's Baby. Now, though, most people know it as the former home of John Lennon – and (still) of his wife Yoko Ono, who owns a number of the apartments. Outside the Dakota, on the night of December 8, 1980, Lennon was murdered – shot to death by a man who professed to be one of his greatest admirers (see p.103 to read about the nearby Lennon memorial in Central Park).

North up Central Park West, at 77th Street, the often-overlooked New York Historical Society (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; suggested donation $10, students $5, children under 12 free; ☎212/873-3400, @ www.nyhistory.org) is more a museum of American than of New York history. Its collection includes paintings by James Audubon, the Harlem naturalist who specialized in lovingly detailed watercolors of birds; a broad sweep of nineteenth-century American portraiture (including the picture of Alexander Hamilton that found its way onto the $10 bill); Hudson River School landscapes (among them Thomas Cole's fantastically pompous Course of Empire series); and a glittering display of Tiffany glass, providing an excellent all-around view of Louis Tiffany's attempts “to provide good art for American homes.”

Up the street looms the American Museum of Natural History, Central Park West at 79th Street (daily 10am–5.45pm; suggested donation $14, students $10.50, children $8; IMAX films, Hayden Planetarium & special exhibits extra; for tickets call ☎212/769-5200; for general info call ☎212/769-5100 or visit @ www.amnh.org). This, the largest such museum in the world, is a strange architectural melange of heavy Neoclassical and rustic Romanesque styles covering four city blocks. The museum boasts superb nature dioramas and anthropological collections, interactive and multimedia displays, lively signage, and an awesome assemblage of bones, fossils, and models.

Top attractions range from the Dinosaur Halls to the Hall of Biodiversity. Other delights include the massive totems in the Hall of African Peoples, the taxidermic marvels in North American Mammals (including a vividly staged bull moose fight), and the two thousand gems in the Hall of Meteorites, among them a dazzling two-ton hunk of raw copper. The Hall of Ocean Life features a replica of, among other aquatic beings, a blue whale, thought to be the largest animal ever to grace planet Earth, and whose weight equals that of 24 elephants, or 400,000 pounds.

The Rose Center for Earth and Space, comprising the Hall of the Universe and the Hayden Planetarium (contained in a huge central sphere), opened in 2000. The center boasts all the latest technology and a truly innovative design, with open construction, spiral ramps, and dramatic glass walls on three sides of the facility. The Planetarium screens a visually impressive 40-minute 3D film “Passport to the Universe,” in addition to the ponderous film entitled “The Search for Life: Are We Alone?” (both are screened throughout the day; $22, students $16.50, $13 children). For a head-trip of a different sort, check out SonicVision (Fri & Sat 7.30, 8.30, 9.30 & 10.30pm; $15), a “digitally animated alternative music show” featuring groovy overhead graphics and songs by bands such as Radiohead and Coldplay mixed by spinmaster Moby. Additionally, on the first Friday of every month, the Rose Center for Earth and Space brings in esteemed jazz musicians for “Starry Nights,” complete with drinks and tapas; admission is included in the cost of your museum ticket.

After Central Park West, the Upper West Side’s second-best address is Riverside Drive, which weaves its way from 72nd Street up the western edge of Manhattan, flanked by palatial townhouses put up in the early twentieth century and by Riverside Park, landscaped in 1873 by Frederick Law Olmsted, of Central Park fame. Riverside Drive makes the most pleasant route up to prestigious Columbia University, whose campus fills seven blocks between 114th and 121st streets and Amsterdam Avenue and Morningside Drive. The campus plazas were designed by McKim, Mead & White in grand Beaux Arts style. Regular guided tours start from the information office at 116th Street and Broadway.

At Amsterdam Avenue and 112th Street, one of New York’s tourist gems, the Cathedral Church of St John the Divine, rises up with a solid kind of majesty. A curious, somewhat eerie mix of Romanesque and Gothic styles, the church was begun in 1892, though building stopped with the outbreak of war in 1939 and only sporadically resumed in the early 1990s; today, it’s still barely two-thirds finished. On completion (which is unlikely before 2050), it will be the largest cathedral structure in the world, its floor space – 600ft long, and 320ft wide at the transepts – big enough to swallow both the cathedrals of Notre Dame and Chartres whole.

Harlem

Home to a culturally and historically – if not economically – rich black community, Harlem is still a focus of black activism and culture, and well worth seeing. Up until recently, because of a near-total lack of support from federal and municipal funds, Harlem formed a self-reliant and inward-looking community. For many downtown Manhattanites, white and black, 125th Street was a physical and mental border not willingly crossed. Today, the fruits of a cooperative effort involving businesses, residents, and City Hall are manifest in new housing, retail, and community projects, and much has been made of former president Bill Clinton’s new offices here as well. But while brownstones triple in value and Harlem’s physical proximity to the Upper West Side is touted, poverty and unemployment are still evident in large patches. The safest areas are 125th Street, 145th Street, Convent Avenue, and Malcolm X Boulevard; at night, stick to the clubs and restaurants.

Harlem’s sights are very spread out; it’s not a bad idea to get acquainted with the area via a guided tour (see p.78), and follow that up with further trips. Harlem’s working center is 125th Street between Broadway and Fifth Avenue, a flattened expanse spiked with the occasional skyscraper. At 253 W 125th is the famous Apollo Theatre – for many years the center of black entertainment in the Northeast. Almost all the great figures of jazz and the blues played here – James Brown recorded his seminal Live at the Apollo album here in 1962 – though a larger attraction today is the Wednesday Amateur Night, open to all; call ☎212/531-5300 for information. At 144 W 125th, the Studio Museum in Harlem (Wed–Fri & Sun noon–6pm, Sat 10am–6pm; $7, free on the first Sat of every month; ☎ 212/864-4500, 🌐 www.studiomuseum.org) is a small but vibrant collection of African and African-American art from all eras.

Close by, Adam Clayton Powell Jr Boulevard pushes north, a broad and busy thoroughfare named after a beloved 1930s minister who became New York's first black representative in the US House. One avenue block east, the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture, 515 Malcolm X Blvd at 135th Street (Mon–Wed noon–8pm, Thurs & Fri noon–6pm; free; ☎ 212/491-2200, 🌐 www.nypl.org/research/sc), has displays on black history, and literally millions of artifacts, manuscripts, artwork, and photographs in its archives. Meanwhile, just north, at 132 W 138th St, is the Abyssinian Baptist Church where Powell preached. The church is also famed for its revival-style Sunday morning services and a gospel choir of gut-busting vivacity. Cross over west to 138th Street between Powell and Eighth, and you're in what many consider the finest block of rowhouses in Manhattan – Strivers' Row – commissioned during the 1890s housing boom and taking in designs by three sets of architects. Within the burgeoning black community at the turn of the last century this came to be the desirable place for ambitious professionals to reside – hence its nickname.

From Park Avenue to the East River, Spanish Harlem, or El Barrio, dips down as far as East 96th Street to collide head-on with the affluence of the Upper East Side. The center of a large Puerto Rican community, El Barrio is quite different from Harlem in look and feel. The area was originally a working-class Italian neighborhood (a small pocket of Italian families survives around 116th St and First Ave) and the quality of the architecture here is nowhere as good as that immediately to the west. The result is a shabbier and more intimidating atmosphere. Cultural roots are in evidence, however, at La Marqueta, on Park Avenue between 111th and 116th streets, a five-block street market of tropical produce, sinister-looking meats, and much shouting, and the Museo del Barrio, 1230 Fifth Avenue at 104th Street (Wed–Sun 11am–5pm; suggested donation $6; ☎ 212/831-7272, 🌐 www.elmuseo.org), which showcases Latin American and Caribbean art and culture, and features summertime concerts.

Washington Heights and the Cloisters

North of Harlem, starting from West 145th Street or so, is the neighborhood of Washington Heights, an area that evolved from poor farmland to highly sought-after real estate in the early part of the twentieth century; the wealthiest New Yorkers competed for estate plots with views of the Hudson River. In 1965, Washington Heights grabbed the world's attention when black activist Malcolm X was assassinated in the Audubon Ballroom here. Today, the area is home to the largest Dominican population in the US, as well as one of New York City's most dangerous and crime-ridden neighborhoods. And while its points of interest are safely accessed during the daylight hours, it's advisable to stay clear of Washington Heights after dark.

At Broadway and West 155th Street, Audubon Terrace is a complex of nineteenth-century Beaux Arts buildings that house an odd array of museums. The adjacent Hispanic Museum (Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun 1–4pm; free; ☎ 212/690-0743) holds one of the largest collections of Hispanic art outside Spain. The three thousand paintings include works by Goya, El Greco, and Velázquez, and more than six thousand decorative works of art.

Another uptown surprise, on 160th Street between Amsterdam and Edgecombe avenues, is the Morris–Jumel Mansion, the oldest house in Manhattan (Wed–Sun 10am–4pm; $4; ☎ 212/923-8008). The house, with its proud Georgian outlines, faced by a later Federal portico, was built as a rural retreat in 1765 by Colonel Roger Morris, and served briefly as George Washington's headquarters, before it fell to the British. Later, wine merchant Stephen Jumel bought the mansion and refurbished it for his wife Eliza, formerly a prostitute and his mistress. When Jumel died in 1832, Eliza married ex-vice president Aaron Burr, twenty years her senior. The marriage lasted six months before old Burr took off, to die on the day of their divorce. Eliza battled on to the age of 91, and on the top floor of the house you'll find her obituary, a magnificently fictionalized account of a "scandalous" life.

From most western stretches of Washington Heights you get a glimpse of the George Washington Bridge, a dazzling concoction of metalwork and graceful lines that links Manhattan to New Jersey. Even better views are available from the Cloisters in Fort Tryon Park. This reconstructed monastic complex houses the pick of the Metropolitan Museum's (see p.103) medieval collection (take subway #A to 190th St–Ft Washington Ave; Tues–Sun 9.30am–5.15pm, closes 4.45pm Nov–Feb; suggested donation $20, students $10, includes admission to Metropolitan Museum on same day; ☎ 212/923-3700, 🌐 www.metmuseum.org). The collection is the handiwork of collectors George Barnard and John D. Rockefeller, who spent the early twentieth century shipping over all they could buy of medieval Europe. Among its larger artifacts are a monumental Romanesque Hall made up of French remnants and a frescoed Spanish Fuentiduena Chapel, both thirteenth-century.

The outer boroughs

Many visitors to New York don't stray off Manhattan. But if you're staying a while, choose to investigate the outer boroughs and you'll be well rewarded. Brooklyn is certainly worth a trip, primarily for Brooklyn Heights just across the East River, bucolic Prospect Park and the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, and the Brooklyn Museum. For inveterate nostalgics, Coney Island and its Russian neighbor, Brighton Beach, lie at the far end of the subway line. Few indeed make it to Queens, though the borough holds the bustling Greek community of Astoria and the Museum of the Moving Image. Staten Island has a couple of unusual museums, and the free ferry ride out is fun in and of itself. The Bronx, renowned for the desolate and bleak environs of its southern reaches, which are in fact slowly improving, has the city's largest zoo, Yankee Stadium, and another glorious botanical garden.

Brooklyn

If it were still a separate city, Brooklyn would be the fourth largest in the US – but until the early 1800s it was no more than a group of autonomous towns and villages distinct from the already thriving Manhattan. Robert Fulton's steamship service across the water first changed the shape of Brooklyn, starting with the establishment of a leafy retreat at Brooklyn Heights. What really transformed things, though, was the opening of the Brooklyn Bridge on May 24, 1883. Thereafter, development spread deeper inland, as housing was needed to service a more commercialized Manhattan. By 1900, Brooklyn was fully established as part of the newly incorporated New York City, and its fate as Manhattan's perennial kid brother was sealed.

Brooklyn Heights (#2, #3, #4, #5, #M, #N, #R, or #W to Court St–Borough Hall, or simply walk from Manhattan over the Brooklyn Bridge), one of New York City's most beautiful neighborhoods, has little in common with the rest of the borough. The peaceful, tree-lined enclave was settled by financiers from Wall Street and remains exclusive. Such noted literary figures as Truman Capote, Tennessee Williams, and Norman Mailer have lived here. Although there isn't much to see as you wander its perfectly preserved terraces and breathe in the air of civilized calm, students of urban architecture can have a field day. Begin your tour at the Esplanade – more commonly known as the Promenade – with its fine Manhattan views across the water. Pierrepoint and Montague streets, the Heights' main arteries, are studded with delightful brownstones, restaurants, bars, and shops.

Farther into Brooklyn, Flatbush Avenue leads to Grand Army Plaza (#2 or #3 train to the eponymous subway station), a grandiose junction laid out by Calvert Vaux late in the nineteenth century as a dramatic approach to their new Prospect Park just beyond. The triumphal Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Arch was added thirty years later, topped with a fiery sculpture of Victory – Frederick William MacMonnies' rider, chariot, four horses, and two heralds – in tribute to the Union triumph in the Civil War.

The enormous swath of green that rolls forth from behind the arch is Prospect Park. Landscaped in the early 1890s, the park remains remarkably bucolic, providing an ideal place for exercise, picnics, and family gatherings. During the day it's perfectly safe, but it's best to stay clear of the park at night. The adjacent Brooklyn Botanic Garden (April–Sept Tues–Fri 8am–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; Oct–March Tues–Fri 8am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4.30pm; $5, students $3, free Tues & Sat before noon; ☎ 718/623-7200, 🌐 www.bbg.org), one of the city's most enticing park and garden spaces, is smaller and more immediately likeable than its more celebrated cousin in the Bronx (see p.112). Sumptuous but not overplanted, its 52 acres comprise a Rose Garden, Japanese Garden, Shakespeare Garden, and delightful lawns draped with weeping willows and beds of flowering shrubs.

Though doomed to stand perpetually in the shadow of the Met, the Brooklyn Museum of Art, 200 Eastern Parkway (#2 or #3 train to Eastern Parkway; Wed–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm, first Sat of every month 11am–11pm; $8, students $4; ☎ 718/638-5000, 🌐 www.brooklynart.org), is a major museum and a good reason to forsake Manhattan for an afternoon. Highlights include the ethnographic department on the ground floor, the arts and applied arts from Oceania and the Americas and the classical and Egyptian antiquities on the second floor, and the evocative American period rooms on the fourth floor. Look in on the top-story American and European Painting and Sculpture Galleries, where the eighteenth-century portraits include one of George Washington by Gilbert Stuart (Stuart painted the portrait of Washington on the dollar bill). Pastoral canvases by William Sidney Mount, alongside the heavily romantic Hudson River School and paintings by Eastman Johnson (such as the curious Not at Home) and John Singer Sargent lead up to twentieth-century work by Charles Sheeler and Georgia O'Keeffe. European artists on display include Degas, Cézanne, Toulouse-Lautrec, Monet, Dufy, and Rodin.

Generations of working-class New Yorkers came to relax at one of Brooklyn's farthest points, Coney Island (🌐 www.coneyislandusa.com), reachable from Manhattan on the #Q, #W, #F, or #N subway lines; allow 45min to 1hr for the ride. At its height, one hundred thousand people came here daily; now, however, it's one of the city's poorest districts, and the Astroland amusement park is peeling and run-down. The boardwalk, though, has undergone extensive and successful renovation of late, and, if you like down-at-the-heel seaside resorts, there's no better place on earth on a summer weekend. An undeniable highlight is the nearly eighty-year-old wooden roller coaster, the Cyclone – it's way more thrilling than many modern rides. The beach, a broad swath of golden sand, is beautiful, although it is often crowded on hot days and the water might be less than clean. In late June, catch the Mermaid Parade, one of the country's oddest and glitziest small-town fancy dress parades, which culminates here. Meanwhile, the New York Aquarium on the boardwalk opened in 1896 and is still going strong, displaying fish and invertebrates from the world over in its darkened halls, along with frequent open-air shows of marine mammals (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat, Sun & holidays 10am–5.30pm; $12, students $8; ☎ 718/265-3474, 🌐 www.nyacquarium.com).

Farther east along the boardwalk, Brighton Beach, or “Little Odessa,” is home to the country's largest community of Russian émigrés – around twenty thousand, who arrived in the 1970s – and a long-established and now largely elderly Jewish population who, much to the surprise of visiting Russians, still live as if they were in a 1970s Soviet republic. Livelier than Coney Island, it's also more prosperous, especially along its main drag, Brighton Beach Avenue, which runs underneath the #Q subway line in a hodgepodge of food shops and appetizing restaurants. In the evening, the restaurants really heat up, becoming a near-parody of a rowdy Russian night out, with loud live music, much glass-clinking, and the frenzied knocking back of vodka. It's definitely worth a visit.

Queens

Named in honor of the wife of Charles II of England, Queens was one of the rare places where postwar immigrants could buy their own homes and establish their own communities. (Astoria, for example, holds the world's largest concentration of Greeks outside Greece.) It also has a long filmmaking tradition: Paramount had its studios here until the company was lured away by Hollywood's more desirable weather. The area was then left empty and disused by all except the US Army, until Hollywood's stranglehold on the industry finally weakened. The new studios here – not open to the public – now rank as the country's fourth largest, and are set for a major expansion. The American Museum of the Moving Image, in the old Paramount complex at 35th Avenue at 36th Street (#R or #V train to Steinway; Wed–Fri 11am–8pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm; $10; ☎ 718/784-0077, 🌐 www.ammi.org), is devoted to the history of film, video, and TV. In addition to viewing posters and kitsch movie souvenirs from the 1930s and 1940s you can listen in on directors explaining sequences from famous movies; watch fun short films made up of well-known clips; add your own sound effects to movies; and see some original sets and costumes. A wonderful, mock-Egyptian pastiche of a 1920s movie theater shows kids' movies and TV classics.

Now affiliated with MoMA, P.S. 1 Contemporary Art Center, 22-25 Jackson Ave at 46th St (Thurs–Mon noon–6pm; $5; ☎ 718/784-2084, 🌐 www.ps1.org), is one of the oldest and biggest organizations in the US devoted exclusively to contemporary art and showing leading emerging artists. Founded in 1971, the public school-turned-funky exhibition space also hosts lively evening club events.

The Isamu Noguchi Garden Museum, 32-37 Vernon Blvd (Mon, Thurs & Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm; suggested donation $10; ☎ 718/204-7088, 🌐 www.noguchi.org), has also moved to a temporary 6000-square-foot home. The museum administrators have done a wonderful job of paring down the permanent collection of this prolific and dynamic Japanese-American artist's works. Noguchi's “organic” sculptures, drawings, modern dance costumes, and well-known Akari Light Sculptures are all on display.

Lastly, where Broadway and Vernon Boulevard intersect on the shores of the East River, Socrates Sculpture Park (daily 10am–sunset; free; ☎ 718/956-1819, 🌐 www.socratessculpturepark.org) has been transformed from an illegal dumpsite into one of the city's most distinctive places to view and experience art, namely large-scale sculptures.

The Bronx

1

NEW YORK CITY

The outer boroughs

The city's northernmost and only mainland borough, The Bronx was for a long time believed to be its toughest and most crime-ridden district, and presented as such in films like Fort Apache and The Bronx, as well as books like Bonfire of the Vanities, even after urban renewal was under way. In fact, it's not much different from the other outer boroughs, though geographically it has more in common with Westchester County to the north than it does with the island regions of New York City: steep hills, deep valleys, and rocky outcroppings to the west, and marshy flatlands along Long Island Sound to the east. Settled in the seventeenth century by the Swede Jonas Bronck, it became, like Brooklyn, part of New York proper around the end of the nineteenth century, and soon became one of the most sought-after residential areas of the city. Its main thoroughfare, Grand Concourse, became lined with luxurious Art Deco apartment houses; many, though greatly run-down, still stand.

The Bronx Zoo (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5.30pm; $12, kids $9, free every Wed; ☎ 718/220-5100, 🌐 www.bronxzoo.com) is accessible either by its main gate on Fordham Road or by a second entrance on Bronx Park South. The latter is the entrance to use if you come directly here by subway (#2 or the #5 to E Tremont Ave). With over four thousand animals, it's the largest urban zoo in the US, and is better than most; it was one of the first institutions of its kind to realize that animals both looked and felt better out in the open. The “Wild Asia” exhibit is an almost forty-acre wilderness through which tigers, elephants, and deer roam relatively free, visible from a monorail (May–Oct; $3). Look in also on the “World of Darkness,” which holds nocturnal species, the “Himalayan Highlands,” with endangered species such as the red panda and snow leopard, and the new “Tiger Mountain” exhibit, which allows visitors the opportunity to get up close and personal with six Siberian tigers.

Across the road from the zoo's main entrance is the back turnstile of the New York Botanical Gardens (April–Oct Tues–Sun 10am–6pm, Nov–March 10am–5pm; $13, free Wed & Sat 10am–noon; ☎ 718/817-8700, 🌐 www.nybg.org), which in parts is as wild as anything you're likely to see upstate. Don't miss its Enid A. Haupt Conservatory, a landmark, turn-of-the-century crystal palace featuring a stunning 90ft dome, beautiful reflecting pool, lots of tropical plants, and seasonal displays among other things.

Yankee Stadium, at 161st St and River Ave (☎ 718/293-6000, 🌐 www.yankees.com), is home to the most winning team in professional sports – the 26-time World Series champions called the New York Yankees. A new stadium is currently being built across the street and is scheduled to open in 2009. All the more reason to see a game now and get a feel for the marvelous sports history here.

Staten Island

Until 1964, Staten Island was isolated from the rest of the city – getting here meant a ferry trip or a long ride through New Jersey, and commuting into Manhattan was a bit of a haul. The opening of the Verrazano Narrows Bridge changed things: upwardly mobile Brooklynites found inexpensive property on the island and swarmed over the bridge to buy their parcel of suburbia. Today, Staten Island has swollen to accommodate dense residential neighborhoods amid the rambling greenery and endless backwaters of neat homes.

Without a car, the best way to reach the fifth borough is via the Staten Island Ferry (☎ 718/815-BOAT, 🌐 www.siferry.com), which sails from Battery Park around the clock, with departures every 15–20min during rush hours (between 7–9am and 5–7pm), every 30min midday and evenings, and once an hour late at night; on weekend, service is less frequent. Truly New York's best bargain, the ferry gives great wide-angled views of Lower Manhattan and the Statue of Liberty absolutely free.

△ Staten Island Ferry

Once you get to the island, the ferry terminal in which you arrive quickly dispels any romance – though it's easy to escape to the adjoining bus station and catch the #S74 bus to the Jacques Marchais Center of Tibetan Art, 338 Lighthouse Ave (Wed–Sun 1–5pm; $5; ☎718/987-3500, 🌐www.tibetanmuseum.com). Jacques Marchais was the alias of Jacqueline Kleber, a New York art dealer who reckoned she'd get on better with a French name. In the 1920s and 1930s, she assembled the largest collection of Tibetan art in the Western world and housed it in a hillside “Buddhist temple.” The exhibition is small enough to be accessible, with magnificent bronze Bodhisattvas, fearsome deities in union with each other, musical instruments, costumes, and decorations from Tibet. During the first or second week of October the museum hosts a harvest festival, where Tibetan monks in maroon robes perform the traditional ceremonies, and Tibetan food and crafts are sold.

From Richmond Road, one of Staten Island's main drags, it's just a short walk to Historic Richmond Town (June–Aug Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Sept–May Wed–Sun 1–5pm; $4; ☎718/351-1611, 🌐www.historicrichmondtown.org), where a dozen or so old buildings have been transplanted from their original sites in other areas of Staten Island and grafted onto the village of Richmond, which dates from 1695–1880. Half-hourly tours negotiate the best of these – including the oldest elementary school in the country, a picture-book general store, and the atmospheric Guyon-Lake-Tysen House of 1740. It's all carried off to picturesque effect in rustic surroundings, a mere twelve miles from Downtown Manhattan.

Eating

There isn't anything you can't eat in New York, and New Yorkers take their food very seriously, obsessed with new cuisines, new dishes, and new restaurants. Certain areas are pockets of ethnic restaurants – Chinatown (including Malaysian, Thai, and Vietnamese) below Canal Street; Little Italy just to the north; and Indian Row, on Sixth Street between First and Second avenues – but you can generally find whatever you want, wherever (and whenever) you want. The outer boroughs of Brooklyn, the Bronx, and Queens all have excellent dining opportunities worth seeking out, in neighbourhoods such as Jackson Heights, Astoria, Williamsburg, and Park Slope.

Downtown Manhattan (below 14th St)

Blue Hill 75 Washington Place, between 6th Ave and Washington Square Park ☎212/539-1776. Tucked into a brownstone just steps from the park, this restaurant has earned countless accolades in recent years for its superb seasonal menu of American dishes served with flair.

Café de Bruxelles 118 Greenwich Ave, at W 13th St ☎212/206-1830. Taste the city's most delicious frites (served with homemade mayo) and mussels at this Belgian family-run restaurant. Its zinc bar is the oldest around, and there's a nice selection of Belgian beers, too.

Café Le Figaro 184 Bleecker St, at MacDougal ☎212/677-1100. Discover the ersatz Left Bank at its finest at this 1950s Beat hangout. On the menu: good people-watching and first-rate burgers and soups.

Cendrillon 45 Mercer St, between Broome and Grand ☎212/343-9012. This fine pan-Asian restaurant serves consistently exceptional food, not to mention creative cocktails. The prices are decent, and the desserts will make you swoon.

Corner Bistro 331 W 4th St, at Jane ☎212/242-9502. This down-home tavern serves some of the best burgers and fries in town. An excellent place to unwind and refuel in a friendly neighborhood atmosphere, it's also a longstanding literary haunt; can get quite crowded.

Ear Inn 326 Spring St, between Washington and Greenwich ☎212/226-9060. This cozy pub serves basic, reasonably priced American food (the cowboy chili and the burgers are excellent) and has a good mix of beers on tap. It claims to be the second-oldest bar in the city (after McSorley's; see p.118). It may also be one of the best.

Florent 69 Gansevoort St, between Washington and Greenwich ☎212/989-5779. In the heart of the Meatpacking District, see and be seen at this almost-always-open, fashionable eatery, serving great moderate-to-pricey French bistro fare.

Grange Hall 50 Commerce St, at Barrow ☎212/924-5246. Hiding on a dead-end picturesque street, and inspired by community suppers in Maine, this feel-good restaurant features healthful, seasonal dishes at reasonable prices. It's popular, so make a reservation.

'ino 21 Bedford St, between Downing St and 6th Ave ☎212/989-5769. Duck in here for a satisfying snack; choose from a list of bruschette, tramezzine (a hearty cousin of the tea sandwich), and Italian wines.

Joe's Shanghai 9 Pell St, between Bowery and Mott ☎212/233-8888. Probably Chinatown's most famous restaurant, this place is always packed, for good reason. Try the soup dumplings and the seafood main courses at its communal tables, or visit its newer, less crowded sister, Joe's Ginger, at 113 Mott St, between Hester and Canal.

Katz's Delicatessen 205 E Houston St, at Ludlow ☎212/254-2246. Venerable Lower East Side Jewish deli serving archetypal overstuffed pastrami and corned-beef sandwiches. Best known as the site of the orgasm scene in When Harry Met Sally.

Lavagna 545 E 5th St, between aves A and B ☎212/979-1005. This red-hued hideaway seduces East Villagers with potato cheese gratin, pasta with sausage, and succulent pork dishes. The prices are relatively reasonable, to boot.

Lombardi's 32 Spring St, between Mott and Mulberry ☎212/941-7994. The oldest pizzeria in Manhattan serves some of the best pie in town, including an amazing clam pizza; no slices, though. Ask for roasted garlic on the side.

Mary's Fish Camp 64 Charles St, at W 4th St ☎646/486-2185. Lobster rolls, bouillabaisse, and seasonal veggies adorn the menu at this intimate West Village spot, where you can almost smell the salt air. Go early, as the reservation line lasts into the night.

Moustache 90 Bedford St, between Grove and Barrow ☎212/229-2220; also 265 E 10th St, between 1st Ave and Ave A ☎212/228-2022. A small, cheap Middle Eastern spot with a "pizta" specialty (pizzas of pita bread and eclectic toppings); also great hummus, chickpea and spinach salad, and bargain lamb chops.

Otto Enoteca and Pizzeria 1 5th Ave, at Washington Square N ☎212/995-9559. The cheapest addition to Italian chef Mario Batali's restaurant empire is a popular pizza and antipasti joint with a superb wine list and a beautiful crowd. The acoustics aren't great, but the atmosphere is festive and you can't beat the lardo (bacon) and vongole (clam) pizza.

Paradou 8 Little W 12th St, between Greenwich and Washington ☎212/463-8345. Sure to transport you to Provence, this underrated French bistro is a far better (and more authentic) option than overexposed Pastis around the corner. Great wines by the glass.

Pearl Oyster Bar 18 Cornelia St, between Bleecker and W 4th sts ☎212/691-8211. You may have to fight for a table here, but it's worth it for the thoughtfully executed seafood dishes and primo lobster rolls.

Podunk Café 231 E 5th St, between 2nd Ave and Cooper Square ☎212/677-7722. The desserts at this homey bakery/café are unbeatable; the chewy, delicious coconut bars can't miss.

Prune 54 E 1st St, between 1st and 2nd aves ☎212/677-6221. Adventurous and full of surprises, this East Village Mediterranean restaurant boasts dishes such as sweetbreads wrapped in bacon, seared sea bass with Berber spices, and buttermilk ice cream with pistachio puff pastry. It's cramped, but this makes for a festive atmosphere.

Raoul's 180 Prince St, between Sullivan and Thompson ☎212/966-3518. This sexy French bistro is comfortable, authentic, and entertaining for its people-watching into the night. A beloved New York standby, if at a price.

Sammy's Roumanian Steakhouse 157 Chrystie St at Delancy ☎212/673-0330. This basement Jewish steakhouse gives diners more than they bargained for: schmaltzy songs, delicious-but-heartburn-inducing food (topped off by homemade rugelach and egg creams for dessert), and chilled vodka in blocks of ice. Keep track of your tab, if you can.

Veselka 144 2nd Ave, at 9th St ☎212/228-9682. The terrific grilled kielbasa, vegetarian stuffed cabbage, and Ukrainian pierogi at Eastern European Veselka are all great for sopping up alcohol and killing hunger pangs at 4am.

Wallse 344 W 11th St, at Washington ☎212/352-2300. New-fangled (and lighter) Austrian fare takes center stage here. Chef Kurt Gutenbrunner has crafted a unique menu that abounds with surprises – the light-as-air schnitzel, frothy riesling sauces, and strudels are good enough to make an Austrian grandma sing with pride. The dining room resonates sophistication, and the wine list tempts with some hard-to-find Austrian vintages.

Xunta 174 1st Ave, between 10th and 11th sts ☎212/614-0620. This East Village gem buzzes with hordes of young people perched on rum barrels, downing pitchers of sangria and choosing from the dizzying tapas menu – try the mussels in fresh tomato sauce, or shrimp with garlic. You can eat (and drink) very well for around $20.

Midtown Manhattan

(14th St to 59th St)

Artisanal 2 Park Ave, at 32nd St ☎212/725-8585. Cheese is the name of the game here – there's a cave with 700 varieties. If you don't want the full experience, grab a small table at the bar and try the gougere (gryere puffs) with one of the excellent wines on offer.

Carmine's 200 W 44th St, between Broadway and 8th Ave ☎212/221-3800; also 2450 Broadway, between W 90th and W 91st sts ☎212/362-2200. Mountainous portions of tasty homestyle Southern Italian food are made to share at this large, loud favorite. Be prepared to wait; only parties of six or more can make reservations after 6pm.

City Bakery 3 W 18th St, between 5th and 6th aves ☎212/366-1414. A smart stop for a satisfying lunch or a sweet-tooth craving. The vast array of pastries is head-and-shoulders above most in the city.

Empire Diner 210 10th Ave, at 22nd St ☎212/243-2736. Spangled in silver, this all-night diner charms with its festive vibe and good, moderately priced food.

Emporio Brasil 15 W 46th St, between 5th and 6th aves ☎212/764-4646. Check out the great Brazilian food and atmosphere at Emporio Brasil, with reasonable prices for Midtown. On Saturday afternoon, from noon to 5pm only, try Brazil's national dish, the tasty feijoada (a stew of meaty pork and black beans, with rice).

F&B 269 W 23rd St, between 7th and 8th aves ☎646/486-4441. Terrific European-style street food (namely hot dogs) at digestible prices. Other items include salmon dogs, bratwursts, and mouth-watering Swedish meatballs; there's also a selection of vegetarian offerings.

Gramercy Tavern 42 E 20th St, between Broadway and Park ☎212/477-0777. By many accounts, NYC's best and most-beloved restaurant; its neo-Colonial decor, exquisite New American cuisine, and perfect service make for a memorable meal. The lively front room is a great place to drop in for a drink, or a more casual (and cheaper) meal.

Guastavino's 409 E 59th St, between 1st and York aves ☎212/980-2455. This magnificent, soaring space underneath the Queensboro Bridge is a hot spot for beautiful people who come to drink flirtinis and choose from a dizzying array of seafood dishes. Book upstairs for a quieter – and super expensive – meal.

Hallo Berlin 402 W 51st St, between 9th and 10th aves ☎212/541-6248. All manner of tasty wursts, served by an owner who once sold them from a pushcart and now vends in this pleasant bench-and-table beer-garden setting.

Joe Allen's 326 W 46th St, between 8th and 9th aves ☎212/581-6464. The tried-and-true formula of checkered tablecloths, old-fashioned barroom feel, and reliable American food at moderate prices works excellently at this popular pre-theater spot. Make a reservation, unless you plan to arrive after 8pm.

Oyster Bar lower level, Grand Central Station ☎212/490-6650. This wonderfully atmospheric old place, down in the vaulted dungeons of Grand Central, draws Midtown office workers for lunch, who come to choose from a staggering menu featuring daily catches – she-crab bisque, steamed Maine lobster, and sweet Kumamoto oysters. Prices are moderate to expensive; you can eat more cheaply at the bar.

Rosa Mexicano 1063 1st Ave, at 58th St ☎212/753-7407; also 61 Columbus Ave, at 62nd St ☎212/977-7700. Festive decor, authentic dishes such as *bisteca al hongo*s (beef with creamy mushroom sauce) and pomegranate margaritas make this the best Mexican restaurant in NYC. Not surprisingly, it's pricey.

Sugiyama 251 W 55th St, between Broadway and 8th Ave ☎212/956-0670. You may want to take out a loan before dining at this superb Japanese restaurant, where you're guaranteed an exquisite experience, from its enchanting kaiseki (chef's choice) dinners (vegetarian or non) to its royal service.

Vatan 409 3rd Ave, at 29th St ☎212/689-5666. Nab a table here for a vegetarian Indian feast amid garish decor.

Uptown Manhattan (60th St and above)

Amy Ruth's 113 W 116th St, between Lenox and 7th aves ☎212/280-8779. The honey-dipped fried chicken is reason enough to travel to this casual, family restaurant in Harlem. The place gets especially busy after church on Sundays.

Barking Dog Luncheonette 1678 3rd Ave, at E 94th St ☎212/831-1800; also 1453 York Ave, at 77th St ☎212/861-3600. This diner-like place offers outstanding, cheap American food (like mashed potatoes and gravy). Very kid-friendly.

Big Nick's Burger Joint 2175 Broadway, between 76th and 77th sts ☎212/362-9238. This welcoming greasy spoon with gargantuan portions is heaven for hungry diners, be it after-hours or early in the morning.

Boat House in Central Park (enter from 72nd St), at Central Park Drive N ☎212/517-2233. While the New American cuisine here is fine, it's the picturesque setting that makes the pumped-up prices worth every penny, especially at sunset. If you don't feel like splurging, go for a drink at the water's edge.

El Pollo 1746 1st Ave, between E 90th and E 91st sts ☎212/996-7810. Come here for a tasty and cheap meal of Peruvian-style rotisserie chicken, dusted with spices and cooked over a spit. Bring your own wine.

Gabriela's 685 Amsterdam Ave, at 93rd St ☎212/961-0574; also 311 Amsterdam, at 73rd St ☎212/875-8532. Count on good, inexpensive, authentic Mexican – not just your usual enchiladas and burritos, but also a wide array of regional chicken and seafood dishes in a large, crowded room. Noisy, lively, and thoroughly enjoyable. Expect to wait.

Gray's Papaya 2090 Broadway, at 72nd St ☎212/799-0243. Open 24/7, this insanely popular hot-dog joint is an NYC institution, now famous for its "Recession Special": 2 dogs and a drink for $2.45. Call for several other locations around the city.

Heidelberg 1648 2nd Ave, between E 85th and 86th sts ☎212/628-2332. At one of the last Yorkville German joints, the food is the real deal, with excellent liver dumpling soup, Bauernfruestuck omelettes and pancakes (both sweet and potato). Have a huge, boot-shaped glass of Weissbeer with anything.

Jean Georges in the Trump International Hotel, 1 Central Park West, between 60th and 61st sts ☎212/299-3900. This contemporary French restaurant drips with elegance; its celebrity chef, Jean Georges Vongerichten, has been known to make such inventive dishes as asparagus with frothy truffle vinaigrette, or dill-stuffed shrimp with baked lemon. The staff here is polished, and the prices are steep. If you aren't up for the full-blown gastronomic experience, try the prix fixe lunch menu ($20) in the more casual Nougatine Room.

La Caridad 78 2199 Broadway, at W 78th St ☎212/874-2780. Plentiful and inexpensive Cuban-Chinese food (the Cuban is better) is doled out at this neighborhood institution. Bring your own beer and expect to wait.

Mughlai 320 Columbus Ave, at 75th St ☎212/724-6363. This upscale Indian spot is surprisingly affordable. Entrees, which include batter-light samosas and comforting curries, run $11–16.

Ouest 2315 Broadway, between 83rd and 84th sts ☎212/580-8700. Exceptional gourmet comfort food, such as bacon-wrapped meatloaf with wild mushroom gravy, and numerous celeb spottings have earned this New American restaurant a loyal following. There's a $26 three-course pre-theater menu served Mon–Fri 5–6.30pm.

Sarabeth's 423 Amsterdam Ave, between 80th and 81st sts ☎212/496-6280; also in the Hotel Wales, 1295 Madison Ave, between 92nd and 93rd sts ☎212/410-7335. Best for brunch, this country-style restaurant serves delectable baked goods and impressive omelettes – a fact reflected by the long lines outside.

Serendipity 3 225 E 60th St, between 2nd and 3rd aves ☎212/838-3531. The long-established eatery/ice cream parlor serves out-of-this-world frozen hot chocolate; the wealth of ice cream offerings are a real treat, too.

Terrace in the Sky 400 W 119th St, between Amsterdam Ave and Morningside Drive ☎212/666-9490. Enjoy harp music, marvelous Mediterranean fare, and great views of Morningside Heights in this romantic Uptown spot.

Vinnie's Pizza 285 Amsterdam Ave, at W 73rd St ☎212/874-4382. For those who prefer their pizza thick, doughy, loaded with cheese, and cheap, this Upper West Side place is for you. You can sit, or order a slice to go.

The outer boroughs

360 360 Van Brunt St, at Wolcott St, Red Hook, Brooklyn ☎718/246-0360. Seasonal ingredients, bohemian ambiance, and a passionate chef make this hands-on French restaurant worth the adventure of finding it. The menu here changes every day, but there's always a fine selection of unusual wines.

Diner 85 Broadway, at Berry St, Williamsburg, Brooklyn ☎718/486-3077. A fave with artists and hipsters, this groovy eatery (in a Pullman diner car) serves tasty American bistro grub (hangar steaks, roasted chicken, fantastic fries) at good prices. Stays open late, with an occasional DJ spinning tunes.

Elias Corner 24-02 31st St, at 24th Ave, Astoria, Queens ☎718/932-1510. Pay close attention to the seafood on display as you enter, because this Astoria institution doesn't have menus and meals are prepared based on availability. Serves some of the best and freshest fish you'll find; try the marinated grilled octopus, if on offer.

Grocery 195 Smith St, Carroll Gardens, Brooklyn ☎718/596-3335. Smith Street has become a Brooklyn dining destination, and this tiny eatery, featuring a seasonal menu full of unique, New American dishes, is the best of the bunch. Entrees $20 and up; call well in advance for reservations.

Jackson Diner 37-47 74th St, between 37th and Roosevelt aves, Jackson Heights, Queens ☎718/672-1232. Come here hungry and stuff yourself silly with amazingly light and reasonably priced Indian fare. The samosas and mango lassies are not to be missed.

Mario's 2342 Arthur Ave, between 184th and 186th sts, Bronx ☎718/584-1188. Pricy but impressive Italian cooking, from pizzas to pastas and beyond, enticing even die-hard Manhattanites to the Belmont section of the Bronx.

Nathan's 1310 Surf Ave at Schweiker's Walk, Coney Island, Brooklyn ☎718/946-2202. Home of the "famous Coney Island hot dog," served since 1916, Nathan's is not to be missed (unless you are a vegetarian). Its annual Hot Dog Eating Contest is held on July 4.

Peter Luger's Steak House 178 Broadway, at Driggs Ave, Williamsburg, Brooklyn ☎718/387-7400. Catering to carnivores since 1873, Peter Luger's may just be the city's finest steakhouse. The service is surly and the decor plain, but the porterhouse steak – the only cut served – is divine. Cash only, and very expensive; expect to pay at least $60 a head.

Primorski 282 Brighton Beach Ave, between 2nd and 3rd sts, Brighton Beach, Brooklyn ☎718/891-3111. Perhaps the best of Brighton Beach's Russian hangouts, with a huge menu of authentic Russian dishes, including blintzes and stuffed cabbage, at absurdly cheap prices. Live music in the evening.

Drinking

New York's best bars are in Downtown Manhattan – the West and East villages, SoHo, and the Lower East Side. The Midtown places tend to be geared to an after-hours office crowd and (with a few exceptions) are pricey and rather dull. Uptown, the Upper West Side at least, between 60th and 85th streets along Amsterdam and Columbus avenues, has several good places to drink. Most of the bars listed below serve food of some kind and have happy hours sometime between 4pm and 8pm during the week. See also the bars listed in "Gay New York," p.124.

Downtown Manhattan (to 14th St)

Barramundi 67 Clinton St, between Stanton and Rivington ☎212/529-6900. The magical, fairy-lit garden makes this bar a blessed sanctuary from the painfully hip Lower East Side.

Chumley's 86 Bedford St, between Grove and Barrow ☎212/675-4449. As much fun to find (there's no sign) as it is to drink in, this atmospheric former speakeasy has a great selection of beers and good American pub food.

Decibel 240 E 9th St, between 2nd and 3rd aves ☎212/979-2733. A rocking atmosphere (with good tunes) envelops this beautifully decorated underground sake bar. The inevitable wait for a wooden table is worth it.

Double Happiness 173 Mott St, between Broome and Grand ☎212/941-1282. Low ceilings, dark lighting, nooks, crannies, and the superlative green-tea martinis make this Asian-themed bar a decadently seductive place to be.

Grassroots Tavern 20 St Mark's Place, between 2nd and 3rd aves ☎212/475-9443. This roomy, wooden, and wonderful underground den has Brooklyn beers for $3, an extended happy hour, and at least three animals roaming around at any hour of the day or night.

Hogs & Heifers 859 Washington St, at W 13th St ☎212/929-0655. It's honky-tonk cheesy but fun; this raucous Meatpacking District watering hole has inspired thousands of women to dance on the bar, as well as donate their bras to the growing collection that adorns the joint.

McSorley's Old Ale House 15 E 7th St, between 2nd and 3rd aves, ☎212/472-9148. Yes, it's touristy and often full of local frat boys, but you'll be drinking in history at this landmark bar that served its first beer in 1854.

Other Room 143 Perry St, between Washington and Greenwich ☎212/645-9758. The cozy-cool atmosphere, excellent drink menu, and "way-West" location of this wine and beer bar has guaranteed it a special place in locals' hearts.

St Dymphna's 118 St Marks Place, between 1st Ave and Ave A ☎212/254-6636. With a tempting pub menu and some of the city's best Guinness, Dymphna's is great place to warm up on a cold winter's night.

Temple Bar 332 Lafayette St, between Bleeker and Houston sts ☎212/925-4242. One of the most discreet and romantic spots for a drink Downtown, this sumptuous, dark lounge evokes the 1940s and is ideal for a tryst. They take their martinis very seriously here.

West West Side Highway, at W 11th St ☎212/242-4375. Design-forward cement floors, Moderne furniture, and exceptional bartenders make this monochromatic bar/cocktail lounge a happening place to watch the sun set over the Hudson River.

White Horse Tavern 567 Hudson St, at W 11th St ☎212/989-3956. Dylan Thomas drank up at this convivial, inexpensive, old-time Village institution before his last trip to the hospital.

Midtown Manhattan (14th St to 59th St)

21 Club 21 W 52nd St, between 5th and 6th aves ☎212/582-7200. Simply one of New York's most enduring institutions, this is where the Old Boys meet, surrounded by dark wood paneling and sublime service. There's a dress code, so wear a jacket and tie.

Campbell Apartment southwest balcony, Grand Central Terminal ☎212/953-0409. Once the home of businessman John W. Campbell, who oversaw the construction of Grand Central, this majestic space – built to look like a thirteenth-century Florentine palace – was sealed up for years. Now it's one of New York's most distinctive bars. Go early and don't wear sneakers (you won't be allowed in if you do).

Enoteca I Trulli 124 E 27th St, between Lexington and Park ☎212/481-7372. Adjacent to a lovely Italian restaurant by the same name, this wine bar serves a jaw-dropping selection from Italy only, available by the glass, flight, or bottle. Servers are happy to give you a wine lesson as they pour. Ask for bread with ricotta spread or a plate of Italian cheeses to accompany your tipple.

Lever House 390 Park Ave, at 53rd St ☎212/888-2700. NYC's newest power-drink scene is also a 1950s landmark, in a building that revolutionized skyscraper design. The new interior strikes a balance between retro and futuristic; it's worth a look and a cocktail, or two.

Old Town Bar & Restaurant 45 E 18th St, between Broadway and Park ☎212/529-6732. This atmospheric old-world bar is popular with publishing types, models, and photogs in the Flatiron district. Has a good pub menu, too.

Park 118 10th Ave, between 17th and 18th sts ☎212/352-3313. It's easy to get lost in this vast warren of rooms filled with fireplaces, geodes, and even a Canadian redwood. The large garden is a treat, and the place is filled on weekend nights with only the most beautiful people.

Pen-Top Bar & Terrace in the Peninsula Hotel, 700 5th Ave, at 55th St ☎212/903-3097. High above the city, this rooftop bar delivers stunning views of the skyline (on a clear day) and a good selection of beefy drinks.

Pete's Tavern 129 E 18th St, at Irving Place ☎212/473-7676. This former speakeasy, which opened in 1864, has hosted such illustrious patrons as John F. Kennedy Jr and O. Henry, who allegedly wrote "Gift of the Magi" in his regular booth here. A fun and often raucous spot to grab a pint near Gramercy Park.

Uptown Manhattan (60th St and above)

Abbey Pub 237 W 105th St, between Broadway and Amsterdam ☎212/222-8713. Half a century old, the Abbey still brings in locals and students for learned conversations in wooden booths and cheap beer.

 Dead Poet 450 Amsterdam Ave, between 81st and 82nd sts ☎212/595-5670. You'll be waxing poetical and then dropping down dead if you stay for the duration of this sweet little bar's happy hour: it lasts from 4 to 8pm and offers draft beer at $3 a pint. The backroom has armchairs, books, and a pool table.

Dublin House Tap Room 225 W 79th St, between Broadway and Amsterdam ☎212/874-9528. This lively Upper West Side Irish pub, pouring a very nice Black & Tan, is dominated at night by the young, inebriated, and rowdy.

Metropolitan Museum of Art 1000 5th Ave at 82nd St ☎212/535-7710. It's hard to imagine a more romantic spot to sip a glass of wine, whether on the Cantor Roof Garden (open only in warm weather), enjoying one of the best views in the city, or on the Great Hall Balcony listening to live chamber music (year-round Fri and Sat 5–8.30pm).

Prohibition 503 Columbus Ave, between 84th and 85th sts ☎212/579-3100. A pool table, live jazz, and outdoor tables combine to make Prohibition one of the liveliest singles scenes on the Upper West Side.

Shark Bar 307 Amsterdam Ave, between W 74th and 75th sts ☎212/874-8500. Ultra-elegant lounge with great soul food and a beat to go with it.

Subway Inn 143 E 60th St, at Lexington ☎212/223-8929. This downscale neighborhood dive bar, across from Bloomingdale's, is great for a late-afternoon beer.

The outer boroughs

Bohemian Hall and Beer Garden 29-19 24th Ave, at 29th St, Astoria, Queens ☎718/721-4226. This old Czech bar is the real deal, catering to old-timers and serving a good selection of pilsners, hard-to-find brews, and burgers and sausages. In back, there's a very large beer garden, complete with picnic tables, trees, and a bandshell for polka and non-polka groups alike.

Boogaloo Bar 168 Marcy Ave, between S 5th and Broadway, Williamsburg, Brooklyn ☎718/599-8900. This funkadelic lounge serves as a meeting-ground for experimental artists, DJs, and thirsty patrons, who can choose, among other drinks, from a selection of over 30 rums from around the world.

Brooklyn Inn 148 Hoyt St, at Bergen St, Boerum Hill, Brooklyn ☎718/625-9741. Locals – and their dogs – gather at this convivial favorite with high ceilings and a friendly bar staff. Great place for a daytime buzz or shooting pool in the back room.

Frank's Cocktail Lounge 660 Fulton St, between Hudson Ave and Rockwell Place, Fort Greene, Brooklyn ☎718/625-9339. A stone's throw from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, this mellow bar with a classic-to-modern R&B jukebox comes alive at night when DJs spin hip-hop and the party spreads upstairs.

Galapagos 70 N 6th St, between Wythe and Kent aves, Williamsburg, Brooklyn ☎718/782-5188, @ www.galapagosartspace.com. A gorgeous design – featuring placid pools of water and elegant candelabras – as well as excellent avant-garde movies on Sunday nights makes this converted factory a popular spot. Live music, literary readings, or some odd-ball event is on offer most other nights of the week.

Pete's Candy Store 709 Lorimer, between Frost and Richardson, Williamsburg, Brooklyn ☎718/302-3770, @ www.petescandystore.com. This terrific little spot to drink was once a real candy store. There's free live music every night, poetry on Mondays, Scrabble and Bingo nights, and even an organized "Stitch and Bitch" knitting group.

Nightlife and entertainment

You'll never be at a loss for something fun or culturally enriching to do while in New York. The live music scene, in particular, well reflects New York's diversity: on any night of the week, you can hear pretty much any type of music, from thumping hip-hop to pogoing punk, and, of course, plenty of jazz. There are also quite a few dance clubs, where you can move to hard-hitting drum'n'bass or cheesy tunes from the 1970s and 80s.

Home to Broadway and 42nd Street (as well as off-Broadway and the Fringe Festival), New York is also one of the world's great theater centers, with productions that range from lavish, over-the-top musicals to experimental productions in converted garages. Classical music, opera, and dance are all very well-represented, too, at venues such as the dignified Lincoln Center and the more funky Brooklyn Academy of Music. As for film, you couldn't hope for better pickings: the city has several large indie theaters, numerous revival and art-house cinemas, and countless Hollywood-blockbuster multiplexes. Last but not least, NYC has many excellent comedy clubs, as well as a healthy spoken-word and poetry slam scene.

For listings of what's on during any particular week, check out Time Out New York ($3; available from newsstands citywide) or The Village Voice (free; available in newspaper boxes and many other spots around town).

Clubs and live music

New York has plenty of great live music venues, from the cutting-edge Knitting Factory to S.O.B.'s and Joe's Pub, which cater to world music and more eclectic fare. Numerous jazz clubs, ranging in quality from passable to sublime, keep the black-clad, turtleneck-wearing set happy. Cover charges at any of these smaller places will run you from $8 to $25 or so. There are also many larger music venues, which attract touring bands from around the world; here, a ticket can cost anywhere from $25 to $100. If the show's not sold out, tickets are usually available from the door. For advance tickets, go to the venue's box office, or visit Ticketmaster or Ticketweb (see box, below).

As for club life in the city, it's a very amorphous creature. Parties change at a rapid pace, so be sure to check the listings in The Village Voice or Time Out New York before you make any plans. Musically, drum 'n' bass, electronica, 1980s nostalgia, and house hold sway at the moment, though Latin freestyle, dancehall reggae, funk, and hip-hop all get their due. Nothing gets going much before midnight, so there's no point turning up earlier (unless to avoid cover charges, which are sometimes waived before 10 or 11pm). During the week is the best time to go out – prices are cheaper, crowds are smaller, and service is better. All venues tend to be strict about ID. Cover charges range from $15 to $50, though most average out at around $20. Oftentimes, you can check out a club's website and get on the guestlist, which will bring you reduced or free admission.

Theater

Even if you're not normally a theater buff, going to see a play or a musical while in New York is virtually de rigueur. The various theater venues are referred to as Broadway, Off-Broadway, or Off-Off Broadway, representing a descending order of ticket price, production polish, elegance, and comfort. Broadway offerings consist primarily of large-scale musicals, comedies, and dramas with big-name actors, while Off-Broadway theaters tend to combine high production qualities with a greater willingness to experiment. Off-Off Broadway is the fringe – drama

Ticketmaster and Ticketweb

Two of the most useful ticket-selling companies in New York are Ticketmaster (☎212/307-4100 or 1-800/755-4000 outside NY, 🌐www.ticketmaster.com), which sells tickets to higher-profile concerts and cultural events, and Ticketweb (🌐www.ticketweb.com), which mostly deals in smaller to mid-sized music venues and museums. Contact information for other, more specialized ticket agencies is listed, where appropriate, in the text opposite.

on a shoestring, perhaps with sensitive or uncommercial subjects. As for location, most Broadway theaters are just east or west of Broadway, between 40th and 52nd streets; the rest are sprinkled throughout Manhattan, with a concentration in the East and West villages, Union Square, Chelsea, and the 40s and 50s west of the Theater District. Specific Broadway listings appear in the free, widely available Official Broadway Theater Guide; for other productions, check out Time Out New York or The Village Voice.

On Broadway, ticket prices run $50–100; Off-Broadway, expect to pay $25–50; Off-Off will run you around $15. The prices of Broadway and Off-Broadway shows can be cut considerably if you can wait in line on the day of the performance at the red-and-white TKTS booth in Times Square (Mon–Sat 3–8pm, Sun 11am–7pm, also Wed & Sat 10am–2pm for 2pm matinees). The booth has tickets for many Broadway and Off-Broadway shows, at 25- to 50-percent off (plus a $3 per ticket service charge), payable in cash or traveler's checks only. Keep in mind that you may have to wait in line for a couple of hours, and that the show you want to see may be sold out by the time you get to the front of the line.

If you're prepared to pay full price, you can go directly to the theater box office, or use Tele-charge (☎ 212/239-6200 or 1-800/432-7250 outside NY, 🌐 www.telecharge.com) or Ticketmaster. For these ticket agencies, you will need a credit card and should expect to pay a $3–9 surcharge per ticket. Make sure to ask the operator to explain where your seats will be – if you are unhappy with the seating arrangements, now's the only time to say something. For Off-Broadway shows, Tickets Central (☎ 212/279-4200, 🌐 www.ticketscentral.com) sells tickets to many of these from noon to 8pm daily. For Off-Off Broadway productions, check out SmartTix (☎ 212/868-4444, 🌐 www.smarttix.com) or TheaterMania (🌐 www.theatermania.com, ☎ 212/352-0255).

Classical music, opera, and dance

New Yorkers take classical music seriously. Long queues form for anything popular, many concerts sell out, and on summer evenings a quarter of a million people may turn up in Central Park for free performances by the New York Philharmonic. Besides Lincoln Center (see box, p.122), the most important venue is Carnegie Hall, 154 W 57th St, at Seventh Ave (☎ 212/247-7800, 🌐 www.carnegiehall.org), where the greatest names from all schools of music have performed. The acoustics are superb, and a renovation has amended years of structural neglect, restoring the place to its former glory.

The 120-year-old Metropolitan Opera, in Lincoln Center, is New York City's premier venue for opera. The soaring theatre has pitch-perfect acoustics and regularly draws big crowds who come to hear sopranos, baritones, and tenors from around the world sing some of the greatest operatic works ever to have been scored. Contact Met Ticket Service at ☎ 212/362-6000 for ticket information; the nosebleed seats are surprisingly reasonable. The New York State Theater, also in Lincoln Center, hosts performances, too; they typically perform famous works with a modern interpretation, and their performance of The Nutcracker is renowned. Tickets are often half of what they are at the Met; see the box on p.122 for contact information.

When it comes to dance, Lincoln Center once again serves as a showcase, though a number of other venues regularly host events. The Brooklyn Academy of Music (or BAM), at 30 Lafayette St in Brooklyn, between Ashland Place and St Felix Street (☎ 718/636-4100, 🌐 www.bam.org), is America's oldest performing arts academy and one of the most daring producers in New York – definitely worth crossing the river for. Meanwhile, back in Manhattan, six dance troupes are in residence at the Lincoln Center, located on Broadway between W 62nd and W 66th streets (☎212/875-5456, 🌐www.lincolncenter.org), is New York's powerhouse of performing art. Each major venue is in active use through the year, and there are some twenty venues in all. Listed below are four of the most renowned; all are located in Lincoln Center Plaza.

Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts

Alice Tully Hall ☎212/875-5050. This smaller venue is used by chamber orchestras, string quartets, and instrumentalists. Tickets run $20–115, and are available from Centercharge (☎212/721-6500).

Avery Fisher Hall ☎212/875-5656. The permanent base of the New York Philharmonic is also a temporary home for visiting orchestras and soloists. Ticket prices are similar to those at Alice Tully Hall, and are available online at 🌐www.newyorkphilharmonic.org, or in person at the box office (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm).

Metropolitan Opera House ☎212/362-6000, 🌐www.metopera.org. Holds the Metropolitan Opera Company from Sept to April, as well as the American Ballet Theater from May to June. Tickets are outrageously expensive and difficult to get, though 175 standing-room tickets ($12–16) go on sale every Saturday morning at 10am (the line has been known to form at dawn).

New York State Theater ☎212/870-5570. During six months of the year, this theater is home to the New York City Ballet, considered by many to be the greatest dance company in existence. This accessible venue is also where the New York City Opera plays David to the Met's Goliath. Seats go for less than half the Met's prices, and standing-room tickets are available if a performance sells out. Tickets must be purchased through the company's website (🌐www.nycballet.com), or through Ticketmaster.

City Center, 131 W 55th St, between Sixth and Seventh avenues (☎212/581-1212, 🌐www.citycenter.org), including America's two undisputed choreographic giants, the Merce Cunningham Dance Company and the Paul Taylor Dance Company. In spring, City Center also hosts the American Ballet Theater. For small and mid-sized companies, the most important space in Manhattan is the Joyce Theater, 175 8th Ave, at 19th St (☎212/242-0800, 🌐www.joyce.org). The Joyce hosts companies from around the world, and also has a small Downtown satellite – Joyce SoHo – at 155 Mercer St, between Houston and Prince (☎212/431-9233).

Rock and pop venues

Arlene's Grocery 95 Stanton St, between Ludlow and Orchard ☎212/358-1633, 🌐www.arlene-grocery.com. This intimate, erstwhile bodega hosts free gigs by local indie talent during the week. Monday is "Punk/Heavy Metal Karaoke" night, where you can wall along (with a live band, no less) to your favorite Led Zeppelin songs.

The Bowery Ballroom 6 Delancey St, at Bowery ☎212/533-2111, 🌐www.boweryballroom.com. A minimum of attitude, great sound, and even better sightlines make this a local favorite to see well-known indie-rock bands. Shows $12–25. Pay in cash at the Mercury Lounge box office (see below), at the door, or by credit card through Ticketweb.

Irving Plaza 17 Irving Place, between E 15th and E 16th sts ☎212/777-6800, 🌐www.irvingplaza.com. Once home to Off-Broadway musicals, this venue now hosts an impressive array of rock, electronic music, and techno acts – a good place to see popular bands in a manageable setting. $15–30.

The Mercury Lounge 217 E Houston St, between Ludlow and Essex ☎212/260-4700, 🌐www.mercurylounge.nyc. The dark, medium-sized, innocuous space showcases a mix of local, national, and international pop and rock acts. It's owned by the same crew as Bowery Ballroom, which usually gets the better-known bands. Purchase tickets (around $8–15) in cash at the box office, at the door, or via Ticketweb.

Northsix 66 N 6th St, Williamsburg ☎718/599-5103, 🌐www.northsix.com. In the heart of hipster Williamsburg, this unassuming Brooklyn rock club has become one of the number one places to play – outside of Manhattan – for touring indie acts.

Eclectic venues

Groove 125 MacDougal St, at W 3rd St
 ☎ 212/254-9393, 🌐 www.clubgroove.com. This hopping Downtown joint features rhythm & blues and soul music; it's one of the best bargains around. Happy hour from 6–9pm. Music starts at 9.30pm. No cover.

Joe's Pub at the Public Theater, 425 Lafayette St, between Astor Place and E 4th St ☎ 212/539-8770, 🌐 www.publictheater.org. The word “pub” is a misnomer for this swanky nightspot, which features a vast array of musical, cabaret, and dramatic performances. Star spottings abound. Shows nightly at 7 or 7.30pm, 9.30pm, and 11pm. Covers range from $7 to $50 depending on the performer.

Knitting Factory 74 Leonard St, between Church and Broadway ☎ 212/219-3006, 🌐 www.knitting-factory.com. At this intimate Downtown space, you can hear all kinds of aural experimentation, from art-rock and avant-garde jazz to electronica and indie-rock. Highly recommended. Cover prices vary wildly, so call ahead.

S.O.B.'s 204 Varick St, at W Houston
 ☎ 212/243-4940. Short for “Sounds of Brazil,” this lively club/restaurant, with regular Caribbean, salsa, and world music acts, puts on two performances a night. Admission is $10–20 for standing room with a $10–15 minimum cover at tables. No cover, however for those with dinner reservations. Be sure to check out Samba Saturday, the venue's hottest night.

Tonic 107 Norfolk St, between Rivington and Delancey ☎ 212/358-7503, 🌐 www.tonicnyc.com. This hip Lower East Side home to “avant-garde, creative & experimental music” flourishes on two levels, with no cover charge to the lower lounge. Occasional movies and Klezmer-accompanied brunch on Sundays. Cover $8–12.

Jazz venues

Arthur's Tavern 57 Grove St, between Bleecker and 7th Ave ☎ 212/675-6879, 🌐 www.arthurstavernnyc.com. This low-key 50-year-old club is housed in a landmark building and features the Grove Street Stompers, who've been playing every Monday for the past 40 years. Jazz 7–9.30pm, blues and funk 10pm–3.30am. No cover; one-drink minimum.

Birdland 315 W 44th St, between 8th and 9th aves ☎ 212/581-3080, 🌐 www.birdlandjazz.com. Celebrated alto saxophonist Charlie “Bird” Parker has served as the inspiration for this important jazz venue for 50 years. Sets are at 9pm & 11pm nightly. Cover $20–40, with a $10 food and drink minimum.

Lenox Lounge 288 Lenox Ave, at 125th St
 ☎ 212/427-0253, 🌐 www.lenoxlounge.com. Entertaining Harlem since the 1930s, this historic jazz lounge has an over-the-top Art Deco interior (check out the Zebra Room). Three sets nightly at 9pm, 10.45pm & 12.30am. Cover $15, with a one-drink minimum.

Smoke 2751 Broadway, at 106th St ☎ 212/864-6662, 🌐 www.smokejazz.com. This Upper West Side joint is a real neighborhood treat. Sets start at 9pm, 11pm & 12.30am; there's a retro happy hour with $4 cocktails and $2 beers, Mon–Sat 5–8pm. Cover $16–25 Fri & Sat.

Village Vanguard 178 7th Ave S, between W 11th and Perry sts ☎ 212/255-4037, 🌐 www.villagevanguard.com. This jazz landmark still lays on a regular diet of big names. Cover is $15–20, with a $10 drink minimum. Cash only.

Zinc Bar 90 W Houston, at La Guardia Place
 ☎ 212/477-8337, 🌐 www.zincbar.com. New talent, as well as established greats such as Max Roach and Grant Green, perform at this great jazz venue with strong drinks and loyal regulars. The Ron Affit Trio plays four sets on Mondays, and throughout the week there's a mélange of Brazilian and African jazz. Cover is $5 with a one- or two-drink minimum.

Larger music venues

Beacon Theater 2124 Broadway, at W 74th St
 ☎ 212/496-7070. This beautiful restored theater caters to a more mature rock crowd, hosting everything from Tori Amos to Radiohead. Tickets are $25–100, and are sold through Ticketmaster.

Madison Square Garden W 31st–33rd sts, between 7th and 8th aves ☎ 212/465-6741, 🌐 www.madisonsquaregarden.com. New York's principal large stage plays host to big rock acts. However, it's not the most atmospheric place to see a band, with seating for yourself and 20,000 of your closest friends. Tickets are sold through Ticketmaster.

Radio City Music Hall 1260 6th Ave, at 50th St
 ☎ 212/247-4777, 🌐 www.radiocity.com. Although not as prestigious a venue as it once was, the building is a star in its own right. Here, you can see everyone from rock stars to the famous high-kicking Rockettes. Tickets are sold at the box office or through Ticketmaster.

Roseland Ballroom 239 W 52nd St, between Broadway and 8th Ave ☎ 212/247-0200, 🌐 www.roselandballroom.com. This venue has retained the grand ballroom feel of its heyday and is a good place to catch big names before they hit the arena/stadium circuit. The box office only sells tickets the day of the show, otherwise tickets can be purchased through Ticketmaster.

Clubs and discos

Avalon 37 W 20th St, at 6th Ave ☎212/807-7780.

Formerly the infamously wild Limelight, this is one of the most dramatic party spaces in New York, housed in a vast church designed by Trinity Church—builder Richard Upjohn. Cover $25.

Cielo 18 Little W 12th St, between 9th Ave and Washington St ☎212/645-5700. Plan for a night of glam-meets-underground here, where the main attractions are the sunken dance floor and audio system, which pumps house, global, and nu jazz beats. Wednesdays are popular nights.

Frying Pan Pier 63, Chelsea Piers, at 23rd St ☎212/989-6363. One of the coolest club venues in the city, housed in an old lightship. With great views, consistently rockin' parties, and a relaxed door policy. $12.

Pyramid Club 101 Ave A, between 6th and 7th sts ☎212/228-4888. This small, colorful club has been an East Village standby for years. Wednesdays feature an open-mike music competition, and Thursdays are New Wave—but it's the insanely popular 1984 Dance Party on Fridays that's not to be missed. $8 on Friday; otherwise, cover averages $5.

Film

American Museum of the Moving Image 35th Ave, at 36th St, Queens ☎718/784-0077, @ammi.org. Shows an array of avant-garde films.

Angelika Film Center 18 W Houston St, at Mercer ☎212/995-2000, @www.angelikafilmmcenter.com. The latest indie offerings, as well as European art-house movies.

Anthology Film Archives 32-34 2nd Ave, at Bond ☎212/505-5181, @www.anthologyfilmarchives.org. Expect any and every kind of indie film here, from animated shorts to riveting documentaries.

Film Forum 209 W Houston St, between Varick and 6th Ave ☎212/727-8110, @www.filmforum.com. Offers the best in independent film and documentary, as well as themed revivals.

Landmark's Sunshine Cinema 143 E Houston St, between Forsyth and Eldridge sts ☎212/358-7709. This former synagogue and vaudeville theater is now one of the plushest indie art-house movie theaters in town.

Museum of Modern Art 11 W 53rd St, between Fifth and Sixth aves ☎212/708-9400, @www.

moma.org. A vast collection of well-chosen films, from Sundance selections to abstract moving images to hand-painted Super 8; entry is free with museum admission (see p.101).

Poetry slams and literary readings

Bowery Poetry Club 308 Bowery, at Bleecker St ☎212/614-0505, @www.bowerypoetry.com. Terrifically welcoming joint featuring the Urbana Poetry Slam every Thursday night at 7pm ($5). This event is dedicated to showcasing the city's most innovative voices in poetry.

NuYorican Poet's Café 236 E 3rd St, between aves B and C ☎212/505-8183, @www.nuyorican.org. The godfather of all slam venues often features stars of the poetry world who pop in unannounced. SlamOpen on Wednesdays (except the first Wed of every month) and the Friday Night Slam both cost $5 and come highly recommended.

Poetry Project at St Mark's Church, 131 E 10th St, at 2nd Ave ☎212/674-0910, @www.poetryproject.com. The late Allen Ginsberg, a Poetry Project protégé, said, "The poetry project burns like red hot coal in New York's snow." Make of that what you will, the twice-weekly reading series (Mon and Wed at 8pm) features some truly, ahem, hot stuff. Closed July & Aug.

Comedy clubs

Caroline's 1626 Broadway, between W 49th and 50th sts ☎212/757-4100, @www.carolines.com. Some of the best acts in town (and Hollywood) appear at this glitzy spot. $12–22 cover, with a two-drink minimum; more expensive on weekends.

Chicago City Limits 1105 1st Ave, at 61st St ☎212/888-5233, @www.chicagocitylimits.com. New York's oldest improv theater puts on one show nightly and attracts decent national talent. Closed Tues. Admission is $20, $8 on Sun.

Comic Strip Live 1568 2nd Ave, between E 81st and E 82nd sts ☎212/861-9386, @www.comicstriplive.com. This famed showcase draws stand-up comics going for the big time. Three shows Fri & Sat. Cover $12–17, with $12 drink minimum.

Gay New York

There are few places in America where gay culture thrives as it does in New York. Chelsea (centered on Eighth Ave between 14th and 23rd streets) and the East Village have replaced the West Village as the hubs of gay New York, although a strong presence still lingers around Christopher Street. The other haven is Brooklyn's Park Slope, though perhaps more for women than for men. Up-to-the-minute news can be found in HomoXtra (HX) or Blade, free, provocative weekly listings magazines.

Resources

Bluestockings 172 Allen St, between Stanton and Rivington ☎212/777-6028. Collectively run feminist bookstore on the Lower East Side. Daily 1–10pm.

Creative Visions 548 Hudson St, between Perry and Charles ☎212/645-7573 or 1-800/997-9899, www.creativevisions.citysearch.com. Well-stocked gay bookstore.

Gay Men's Health Crisis (GMHC) 119 W 24th St, between 6th and 7th aves ☎212/807-6655 or 1-800/AIDS-NYC, www.gmhc.org. Despite the name, this organization – the oldest and largest not-for-profit AIDS organization in the world – provides information and referrals to everyone, no matter their sex or sexual orientation.

Gayyellow Pages www.gayyellowpages.com. Available for $12 from the bookstores listed above and below, this is a good all-in-one resource; New York is in the East & South edition.

The Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual & Transgender Community Center 208 W 13th St, at 7th Ave ☎212/620-7310, www.gaycenter.org. The LGBT Community Center, which houses countless organizations (including ACT UP, the Center for Mental Health and Social Services, and even the Metro Gay Wrestling Alliance), also sponsors workshops, dances, movie nights, guest speakers, youth services, programs for parents and kids, an archive and library, the annual Center Garden Party, and lots more.

The Oscar Wilde Memorial Bookshop 15 Christopher St, between 6th and 7th aves ☎212/255-

8097, www.oscarwildebooks.com. The first gay bookstore in the US. Unbeatable.

Bars and clubs

Barracuda 275 W 22nd St, between 8th and 9th aves ☎212/645-8613. A favorite spot in New York's gay scene, though as un-sceney as you'll find in Chelsea. Check out the two-for-one happy hour 4–9pm during the week, crazy drag shows, and the sweet hideaway lounge out back.

Duplex 61 Christopher St, at 7th Ave ☎212/255-5438. This Village cabaret is popular with a gay crowd but entertaining for all, and features occasional bitchy barb routines from Joan Rivers, among others. Two-drink minimum. Cover $5–15.

Ginger's 363 5th Ave, between 5th and 6th sts, Park Slope, Brooklyn ☎718/788-0924. A dark and moody addition to Park Slope's sapphic scene, with a great happy hour from 5 to 8pm.

Henrietta Hudson 438 Hudson St, at Morton ☎212/924-3347. This lesbian hangout serves food and gets fairly brimming at night. The lounge, pool, and dancing areas are all separate, and guys are welcome, too.

Rubyfruit Bar & Grill 531 Hudson St, between Charles and W 10th ☎212/929-3343. A cozy, friendly place for grown-up dykes, Rubyfruit is all about couches, cheap drinks, and good company.

Stonewall 53 Christopher St, between Waverly Place and 7th Ave ☎212/463-0950. The site of the seminal 1969 riot is mostly refurbished and flies the pride flag like they own it – which, one supposes, they do.

Shopping

When it comes to consumerism, New York leaves all other cities behind. You can shop for every possible taste, preference, creed, or quirk, in any combination (and often at any time of day or night). Shopping can be extraordinarily cheap, like in the markets of the East and West villages, but move further uptown and it can also be phenomenally expensive. Midtown Manhattan is mainstream territory, with the department stores, big-name clothes designers, and branches of the larger chains. Downtown plays host to a wide variety of more offbeat stores – SoHo is perhaps the most popular shopping neighborhood in these parts, and generally the most expensive, although with some affordable alternatives for the young and trendy. The Upper East Side is uncompromisingly upmarket, while the funkier Upper West Side has an array of off-the-wall stores to compare with anything SoHo or the Village can offer.

Department stores

Barney's 660 Madison Ave, at 61st St ☎212/826-8900, @www.barneys.com. The hippest and most fashion-forward of the big NYC department stores. Check the website for dates of its famous semi-annual warehouse sales, where couture bargains (and catfights) abound.

Bergdorf Goodman 754 5th Ave, at 58th St ☎212/753-7300, @www.bergdorfgoodman.com. Housed in what used to be a Vanderbilt mansion, this venerable department store caters to the city's wealthiest clientele. Even if you can't afford to shop, it's still fun to browse and dream.

Bloomingdale's 1000 3rd Ave, between 59th and 60th sts ☎212/705-2000, @www.bloomingdales.com. Perhaps Manhattan's most beloved department store, Bloomingdale's is packed with designer clothiers, perfume concessions, and the like.

Henri Bendel 712 5th Ave, at 55th St ☎212/247-1100, @www.henribendel.com. One of the best stores in town for cosmetics and designer labels. There's a superb salon, and its public powder room is worth a peek.

Macy's 151 W 34th St, at Broadway ☎212/695-4400, @www.macys.com. The world's largest department store embraces two buildings, two million square feet of floor space, and ten floors; check out the excellent Cellar housewares department downstairs.

Saks Fifth Avenue 611 5th Ave, at W 50th St ☎212/753-4000, @www.saks5thavenue.com. Saks remains virtually synonymous with style and quality; it carries all the big designers.

Bookstores

Asian American Writers' Workshop suite 10A, 16 W 32nd St, at 5th Ave ☎212/494-0061, @www.aaww.org. In addition to its list of classes, speakers, and readings, the adjacent bookstore carries the nation's largest selection of literary works by Asian-American authors, both established and on-the-rise.

Barnes & Noble @www.bn.com. The main location is at 105 5th Ave, at 18th St (☎212/807-0099), with twelve others scattered around the city. These megasized bookstores offer generous selections, late hours, comfortable chairs, and coffee bars.

Biography Bookshop 400 Bleecker St, at W 11th St ☎212/807-8655. The city's most comprehensive collection of biographies and autobiographies.

Complete Traveler 199 Madison Ave, at W 35th St ☎212/685-9007. Manhattan's premier travel bookshop, well stocked with both secondhand and new titles.

Drama Book Shop 250 W 40th St, between 7th and 8th aves ☎1-800/322-0595. The best theater and film bookstore around, with more than 50,000 titles and a very knowledgeable staff.

Housing Works Used Books Café 126 Crosby St, between Houston and Prince ☎212/334-3324. Very cheap books in a spacious and comfy environment. Proceeds benefit AIDS charities.

Partners & Crime 44 Greenwich Ave, at Charles ☎212/243-0440, @www.crimepays.com. Superb, informed shop with 4000 mystery titles, with a generous selection of hardboiled and British titles. Author signings, a lending library, authoritative staff recommendations, and radio play re-enactments the first Sat of every month ($5) make it a find for devout mystery fans.

St Mark's Bookshop 31 3rd Ave, between 8th and 9th sts ☎212/260-7853. Wonderfully eclectic selection of new titles from mainstream to alternative. Open late.

Strand Bookstore 828 Broadway, at 12th St ☎212/473-1452, @www.strandbooks.com. With about eight miles of books and a stock of more than 2.5 million, this is the largest book operation in the city. Recent review copies and new books show up at half price; older books are from 50¢ up.

Universal News & Café 484 Broadway, between Broome and Grand ☎212/965-9042; also 2873 Broadway, at 72nd St ☎212/875-8824; and 105 W 42nd St, between 6th Ave and Broadway ☎212/398-0558. By far the city's best selection of magazines and periodicals, including plenty of foreign publications.

Record stores

Breakbeat Science 181 Orchard St, between Houston and Stanton ☎212/995-2592. The first drum'n'bass-only store to open in the US is still going strong. Closed Fri and Sat.

Etherea 66 Ave A, between 4th and 5th sts ☎212/358-1126. Specializing in indie rock and electronica, both domestic and import, CD and vinyl, this is one of the best shops in the city. Good used selection.

Generation Records 210 Thompson St, between Bleecker and W 3rd sts ☎212/254-1100. The focus here is on hardcore, metal, and punk, with some indie thrown in. New CDs and vinyl are upstairs, while the used records are downstairs.

Kim's 6 St Mark's Place, between 2nd and 3rd aces ☎212/598-9985; also 144 Bleecker, at La Guardia Place ☎212/260-1010; 85 Ave A, between 5th and 6th sts ☎212/529-3410; 2906 Broadway, at 114th St ☎212/864-5321. Extensive selection of new and used indie obscurities on CD and vinyl,

Sports in New York

Seeing either of New York's two baseball teams involves a trip across the East River to the outer boroughs. The Yankees play in the Bronx, at Yankee Stadium, 161st St and River Ave (☎718/293-6000, @www.yankees.com). Get there on the #B, #D, or #4 subway lines direct to the 161st Street station. The Mets are based in Queens, at Shea Stadium, 123-01 Roosevelt Ave, at 126th St (☎718/507-METS, @www.mets.com). Take the #7 train to the Willets Point/Shea Stadium station. Tickets are priced between $8 and $115, depending on the team (Yankee tickets are generally more expensive) and where you sit. For an unbelievably raucous New York experience, show up on game day for bleacher seats at Yankee Stadium: the hooligan regulars and the bouncers who keep an eye on them are often more fun to watch than the game.

New York's football teams – the Jets and the Giants – play at the New Jersey Meadowlands Sports Complex, East Rutherford, New Jersey (☎201/935-3900, @www.meadowlands.com). Buses from the Port Authority Bus Terminal, 42nd Street, at 8th Ave (☎212/564-8484, @www.meadowlands.com) serve the stadium. Call ahead before you travel out there, though; tickets are hard to come by, and range from $100 to $550.

Basketball's two New York pro teams are the NBA's Knicks (@www.nba.com/knicks) and the WNBA's Liberty (@www.wnba.com/liberty). Both play at Madison Square Garden, W 33rd St, at 7th Ave (☎212/465-6741, @www.thegarden.com), which is served by the #1, #2, #3, #A, #C, and #E trains. Tickets for the Knicks are very expensive, and, due to impossibly high demand, available in only limited numbers, if at all. The women's games are fairly exciting and cheaper at $10–65. Another area team, the New Jersey Nets, plays in an arena at the Meadowlands Complex; tickets range from $35 to $95, and are relatively easy to procure. New York's hockey team, the Rangers (@www.newyorkrangers.com), also plays at Madison Square Garden; tickets range from $30 to $155.

some real cheap. Esoteric videos upstairs. Be warned: a serious attitude problem comes with the job description here.

Other Music 15 E 4th St, between Broadway and Lafayette ☎212/477-8150. This excellent small shop has perhaps the most engaging and curious indie-rock and avant-garde collection in the city. Records here are divided into categories like “In,” “Out,” and “Then.” Definitely worth a visit. Great used selection.

Vinyl Mania 60 Carmine St, between Bedford St and 7th Ave ☎212/924-7223. First port of call for DJs seeking the newest, rarest releases and imports.

Food

Chelsea Market 75 9th Ave, between 15th and 16th sts. A wonderful array of food shops line this former Nabisco factory warehouse's ground floor; go for pad Thai, fresh produce, lobster rolls, panini, chewy breads, sinful brownies, kitchenware, or simply to browse.

Citarella 2135 Broadway, at 75th St ☎212/874-0383; also 1313 3rd Ave, at 75th St ☎212/874-0383; 1250 6th Ave, at 49th St ☎212/874-0383 (take-out prepared foods only); 424 6th Ave, at 9th St ☎212/874-0383; and 461 W 125th St, between Amsterdam and Morningside aves, Harlem

☎212/874-0383. Originally a neighborhood fish shop in Harlem's Sugar Hill, this gourmet store still prides itself on its fine products from the sea, and everything else under the sun.

Murray's Cheese Shop 254 Bleecker St, between 6th and 7th aves ☎212/243-3289 or 1-888/692-4339. The city's number-one stop for cheese lovers; go to learn about the cheese-making process, sample the wares, or pick up a pungent sandwich.

Russ & Daughters 179 E Houston St, between Allen and Orchard ☎212/475-4880. This small family-run shop has been serving fine Jewish edibles such as smoked whitefish, chopped liver, and hering soaked in schmaltz since 1914. A must-visit.

Union Square Green Market in Union Square, at 16th St. A bit of country in the city, this delightful open-air market (open Mon, Wed, Fri & Sat) offers local seasonal produce and natural goods sold by regional farmers and purveyors. You'll find hand-carded wools, wildflowers, and infused honeys, too.

Zabar's 2245 Broadway, at 80th St ☎212/787-2000. Beloved family store offers a quintessential taste of New York: bagels, lox, all manner of schmears, not to mention a dizzying selection of gourmet goods at reasonable prices. Fine kitchenware is sold upstairs.

The Mid-Atlantic

CHAPTER 2

Highlights

* The Adirondacks, NY

A vast and rugged alpine wilderness offering superb hiking, skiing, fishing, and mountain-climbing opportunities.

See p.144

- * Ithaca, NY This lovely Finger Lakes' town has a solar-powered library, its own legal tender, more restaurants per capita than New York City, waterfalls, gorges, local vineyards and an Ivy-League university. See p.148

- * Niagara Falls, NY Take the memorable Maid of the Mist boat trip, or visit the Cave of the Winds and stand close enough to feel the spray from these majestic falls. See p.154

* History in Philadelphia, PA

See the Liberty Bell and trace the steps of Benjamin Franklin in the city of brotherly love, where the Declaration of Independence was signed. See p.158

- * Art and architecture, Pittsburgh, PA The Warhol Museum, Cathedral of Learning, and two outlying Frank Lloyd Wright houses lend a surprising cultural flair to the so-called Steel City. See p.177

- * Cape May, NJ The cultured end of the Jersey shore is exemplified by the Victorian architecture, quaint B&Bs, and swish restaurants of this pleasant resort town. See p.194

△ Princeton University

The Mid-Atlantic

The three MID-ATLANTIC states – New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey – stand at the heart of the most populated and industrialized corner of the US. Although dominated in the popular imagination by the gray smokestacks of New Jersey and steel factories of Pennsylvania, these states actually encompass beaches, mountains, islands, lakes, forests, rolling green countryside, and many worthwhile small cities and towns.

European settlement here was characterized by considerable shifts and turns: the Dutch, who arrived in the 1620s, were methodically squeezed out by the English, who in turn fought off the French challenge to secure control of the region by the mid-eighteenth century. The Native American population, including the Iroquois Confederacy and Lenni Lenape Indians, had sided with the French against the English, and were soon confined to reservations or pushed north into Canada. At first, the economy depended on the fur trade, though by the 1730s English Quakers, along with Amish and Mennonites from Germany, plus a few Presbyterian Irish, had made farming a significant force, their holdings extending to the western limits of Pennsylvania and New York.

All three states were important during the Revolution: over half the battles were fought here, including major American victories at Trenton and Princeton, in New Jersey. Upstate New York was geographically crucial, as the British forces knew that control of the Hudson River would effectively divide New England from the other colonies; and the long winter spent by the rag-tag Continental Army at Valley Forge outside Philadelphia turned it into a well-organized force.

After the Revolution, industry became the region's prime economic force, with mill towns springing up along the numerous rivers. By the mid-1850s the large coalfields of northeast Pennsylvania were powering the smoky steel mills of Pittsburgh, and the discovery of high-grade crude oil in 1859 marked the beginning of the automobile age. Though still significant, especially in the regions near New York City, heavy industry has now largely been replaced by tourism as the economic engine.

Although many travelers to the East Coast may not consider venturing much further than New York City itself, the region is much more than just an overspill of the Big Apple. Each region has a distinct identity. Just thirty minutes outside of Manhattan, Long Island offers both the crashing surf of the Atlantic Ocean and the cool calm of the Long Island Sound. Upstate New York is for outdoors enthusiasts: the wooded Catskill Mountains line the Hudson River, the imposing Adirondack Mountains spread over a quarter of the state, and the Finger Lakes region offers a cultured and pastoral break from the industrial and post-industrial Erie Canal cities along I-90. In the northwest corner of the state, on the Canadian border, are the awesome Niagara Falls and artsy post-industrial Buffalo. Pennsylvania is best

The entire region is well covered by public transportation, with New York's JFK and New Jersey's Newark airports acting as major international gateways, New York's LaGuardia Airport serving domestic flights and busy air terminals at both Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Amtrak trains run routes up and down the Northeast Corridor through New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, while the New Jersey Transit rail and bus network serves all of New Jersey, extending from Atlantic City west to Philadelphia and north to Manhattan. Metro-North and the Long Island Railroad connect New York City to Long Island and points north. Greyhound buses follow the major interstates, with a few subsidiary lines running to more out-of-the-way places.

New York State

2

THE MID-ATLANTIC

Long Island

However much exists to attract visitors, the vast state of NEW YORK stands inevitably in the shadow of America's most celebrated city. The words "New York" bring to mind soaring skyscrapers and congested streets, not the 50,000 square miles of rolling dairy farmland, Colonial villages, workaday towns, lakes, waterfalls, and towering mountains that fan out north and west from New York City and constitute upstate New York. Just an hour's drive north of Manhattan, the valley of the Hudson River, with the moody Catskill Mountains rising stealthily from the west bank, offers a respite from the intensity of the city. Much wilder and more rugged are the peaks of the vast Adirondack Mountains further north, which hold some of eastern America's most enticing scenery. To the west, the slender Finger Lakes and endless miles of dairy farms and vineyards occupy the central portion of the state. Of the larger cities, only Buffalo and Rochester hold much of interest, but some of the smaller towns, like Ivy-League Ithaca, can be quite captivating, while the venerable spa town of Saratoga Springs attracts thousands of gamblers during the August horse-racing season.

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, as nation-molding political and military battles were taking place, semi-feudal Dutch landowning dynasties such as the Van Rensselaers held sway upstate. Their control over tens of thousands of tenant farmers was barely affected by the transfer of colonial power from Holland to Britain, or even by American independence. Only with the completion of the Erie Canal in 1825, linking New York City with the Great Lakes, did the interior start to open up; improved opportunities for trade enabled canal-side cities like Syracuse, Rochester, and especially Buffalo to undergo massive expansion. Nonetheless, the region's fortunes have never fully escaped domination by the Wall Street capitalists, despite some efforts by the government in Albany to redress the imbalance.

Getting around New York State

From New York City, the Long Island Railroad (leaving from Penn Station) and Metro North (leaving from Grand Central Station) shuttle commuters to and from the suburbs of Long Island and Westchester, Putnam, and Dutchess counties, respectively. For journeys further north, Amtrak operates a train service along a beautiful route through the Hudson Valley to the state capital, Albany; from there, trains continue north to Montréal, via the Adirondacks, and west along the Erie Canal to Buffalo and Niagara Falls. Greyhound and Adirondack Trailways buses also run to all the major towns.

Car rental in and around New York City is expensive; lower rates can be found by taking public transportation away from the metropolitan area. Be aware as well that the New York State Thruway (I-87) is a toll road, around $18 end-to-end. Cycling is best enjoyed as a means of exploring areas such as the Finger Lakes or Catskills.

Long Island

Just east of New York City, Long Island unfurls for 125 miles of lush farmland and broad sandy beaches, and is most often explored as an excursion of a few days from the metropolis. Its western end abuts the urban boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens, and for a good while continues as a suburban sprawl of strip malls and fast-food outlets; but further east, the settlements begin to thin out and the countryside can get surprisingly remote. The north and south shores differ greatly – the former more immediately beautiful, its cliffs topped with luxurious mansions and estates, while the South Shore is fringed by almost continuous sand, interspersed with vacation spots such as Jones Beach and Fire Island. At its far end, Long Island splits in two, the North Fork retaining a marked rural aspect while the South Fork, much of which is known as the Hamptons, sets itself apart as an enclave of New York's richest and most famous.

The quickest way to reach Long Island is via the reliable if rather worn Long Island Railroad from Penn Station (Ⓣ 718/217-LIRR in NYC, Ⓣ 718/558-3022 from elsewhere, 🌐 www.mta.nyc.ny.us/lirr), which runs ten routes to over a hundred destinations on Long Island. You can also arrive via ferry from New England: Cross Sound Ferry makes the trip from New London, CT to Orient Point, Long Island (see p.253; Ⓣ 860/443-5281 in New England, Ⓣ 631/323-2525 on Long Island, 🌐 www.longislandferry.com). Numerous bus services (operated by the usual major companies, as well as Hampton Jitney; Ⓣ 1-800/936-0440, 🌐 www.hamptonjitney.com) cover most destinations. Parking permits for most of Long Island's beaches are issued only to local residents, so on the whole it works out to be less expensive to head to the beach on public transport. If you are driving to Long Island, you'll take the Brooklyn–Queens Expressway (the BQE) to I-495 East.

There's plenty of accommodation, listed in the text below; A Reasonable Alternative (117 Spring St, Port Jefferson, NY 11777; Ⓣ 631/928-4034, 🌐 www.areasonablealternative.com) offers a good range of B&B lodging throughout Long Island.

The South Shore and Fire Island

Long Island's South Shore merges gently with the wild Atlantic, with shallow, creamy sand beaches and rolling dunes – two of the most popular options are Long Beach and Jones Beach, which together run along fifty miles of seashore. These get less crowded the further east you go; once you get as far as Gilgo or Oak Beach, or cross the water to Robert Moses State Park, on the western tip of Fire Island, you can find solitude. Long Beach has a die-hard surfer contingent, while just east, Ocean Parkway leads along the narrow offshore strand from Jones Beach to Captree, a good base for fishing expeditions organized by the Captree Boatmen's Association (Ⓣ 631/669-6464, 🌐 www.captreefleet.com), before crossing back to Bay Shore, a dull town that serves as a ferry terminal for Fire Island. This way you bypass the sprawling mess of Amityville, famous for its 1974 “horror”. The house on the hill, in which a mysterious supernatural force is said to have victimized the occupants, still stands as a private residence.

Fire Island

A slim spit of land parallel to the South Shore, Fire Island is in many ways a microcosm of New York City. The season is rigidly demarcated by Memorial and Labor days, and on the summer weekends half of Manhattan seems to be holed up in its tiny settlements. Certain parts of the island, such as Cherry Grove and The Pines, are primarily known as gay resorts, while Ocean Beach offers the liveliest straight nightlife. Point O'Woods is the most exclusive hangout and Sunken Forest (aka Sailor's Haven), so-called because it's the only part of the island that lies below sea level, attracts a mixed crowd.

Ferries dock at Ocean Beach and other harbours, where trippers pile up groceries on trolleys (cars are forbidden) and set off for their vacation pads. Ferry schedules are subject to change; Fire Island Ferries (30–45min; $7.25 one way; ☎ 631/665-3600, 🌐 www.fireislandferries.com) run from Bay Shore, the Sayville Ferry Service (25–45min; $6.50–12 one way; ☎ 631/589-0810, 🌐 www.sayvilleferry.com) from Sayville, and the Davis Park Ferries (25–35min; $6 one way; ☎ 631/475-1665, 🌐 www.pagelinx.com/dpferry) from Patchogue.

All accommodation should be booked well in advance during summer, when rates can be ten times more than off-season; options include the hopping Grove Hotel, Bayview Walk and Holly Walk, Cherry Grove (☎ 631/597-6600, 🌐 www.grovehotel.com; ③); Cleggs Hotel, 478 Bayberry Walk, Ocean Beach (open May–Oct only; ☎ 631/583-5399, 🌐 www.cleggs-hotel.com; ⑤), which, along with regular rooms, offers garden apartments with full kitchens and baths; and the Fire Island Hotel & Resort, at 25 Cayuga Walk, in nearby Ocean Bay Park (☎ 631/583-8000, 🌐 www.fireislandhotel.com; ⑥–⑧), which used to be a Coast Guard station. If you'd like to splash out on a meal, try nearby Matthew's, 935 Bay Walk (☎ 631/583-8016), for its terrific fish specials for around $30. At weekends, the Ice Palace, at the Grove Hotel, and Flynn's, at 1 Cayuga St in Ocean Beach (☎ 631/583-5000), are good for riotous boozing and dancing. Pick up the Fire Island News (🌐 www.fireislandnews.com) or the gay and lesbian Fire Island Q News (🌐 www.fireislandqnews.com) at a newsstand to find out what's happening while you're here.

The North Shore and North Fork

Along the rugged North Shore, Long Island drops to the sea in a series of bluffs, coves, and wooded headlands. The expressway beyond Queens leads straight onto the Gold Coast, where Great Neck was F. Scott Fitzgerald's West Egg in The Great Gatsby, home of Gatsby himself. Some of this real estate is so expensive that only the richest of the rich can afford to live here. The motley French Norman-style buildings at Falaise in Sands Point, on the sharp tip of the next peninsula, were once owned by the Guggenheims; they now house a self-celebratory museum (May–Oct Wed–Sun tours hourly noon–3pm; $6; ☎ 516/571-7900, 🌐 www.sandspointpreserve.org). The 209 acres of unkempt parkland also act as a nature preserve. In Old Westbury, at 71 Old Westbury Rd, Old Westbury Gardens is a classier attraction: a Georgian mansion with beautiful, well-tended gardens and some pleasant works of art, including a few Gainsboroughs (late April–Oct Wed–Mon 10am–5pm; $10; ☎ 516/333-0048, 🌐 www.oldwestburygardens.org).

Sagamore Hill, on the coast road in Oyster Bay, twelve miles north of Old Westbury, is the heavily touristed former country retreat where Teddy Roosevelt lived for thirty-odd years (May–Sept daily, rest of year Wed–Sun 10am–4pm; hourly tours $5; ☎ 516/922-4788, 🌐 www.nps.gov/sahi). Its 23 rooms are adorned everywhere with the great man's hunting trophies, sprouting horns from walls or grinning toothily up from the firesides. Within the site, near the parking lot, the Old Orchard Museum (same days 9am–5pm; free) recounts Teddy's political and personal life – but the real reason to come is to stroll the gorgeous grounds, open daily dawn to dusk at no charge, where green lawns drop to Oyster Bay and the sea.

Nearby COLD SPRING HARBOR grew up as a whaling port, and retains some of its looks. A fully equipped whaleboat and a 400-piece assembly of scrimshaw work help its Whaling Museum (daily 11am–5pm; $5; ☎ 631/367-3418, 🌐 www.cshwhalingmuseum.org) to recapture that era.

After fifty more miles of bluffs and parks, the less touristed North Fork – once an independent colony – boasts typical wild Atlantic coastal scenery. In GREENPORT, its most picturesque town, a spacious wooden boardwalk encloses a harbor pierced by the masts of visiting yachts. At one end there's the small East End Seaport Museum and Marine Foundation (June–Sept daily Wed–Mon 11am–5pm; weekends starting May 14 11am–5pm; ☎ 631/477-2100, 🌐 www.eastendseaport.org; free). Plentiful accommodation includes Victorian B&Bs like the ten-room Bartlett House Inn, 503 Front St (☎ 631/477-0371, 🌐 www.bartletthouseinn.com; Ⓢ) and you can get a decent seafood meal at the Chowder Pot Pub, 102 3rd St (☎ 631/477-1345), opposite the ferry terminal. Regular ferries connect the North Fork (pedestrians $1 each way, cars $9 one-way, $13 round-trip; ☎ 631/749-0139, 🌐 www.northferry.com) with pleasant Shelter Island (🌐 www.shelter-island.org) and on to the South Fork (pedestrians $1 each way, cars $10 one-way, $12 round-trip; ☎ 631/749-1200, 🌐 www.southferry.com).

The South Fork

The US holds few wealthier quarters than the small towns of Long Island's South Fork, where huge mansions lurk among the trees or stand boldly on the flats behind the dunes. Nowhere is consumption as deliberately conspicuous as in the Hamptons – among the oldest communities in the state, settled by restless New Englanders in the mid-1650s, but relatively isolated until the rich began to turn up in their motor cars. Nightlife venues are expensive and notoriously changeable; pick up Dan's Papers (🌐 www.danspapers.com) or the East Hampton Star (🌐 www.easthamptonstar.com) to find out what's happening.

Southampton

Long association with the smart set has left SOUTHAMPTON unashamedly upper class. Its streets are lined with galleries and clothing and jewelry stores, but the nearby beaches are superb. The visitor center at 76 Main St (Mon–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat & Sun 11am–4pm; ☎ 631/283-0402, 🌐 www.southamptonchamber.com) has lists of B&Bs like the charming, slightly out-of-the-way Mainstay, 579 Hill St (☎ 631/283-4375, 🌐 www.themainstay.com; 🍷). You can get marvelous fresh seafood in a number of restaurants, notably Barrister's, at 36 Main St (☎ 631/283-6206), and the venerable brewpub-restaurant Southampton Publick House, at 40 Bowden Square (☎ 631/283-2800). Relatively casual nightspots like Southampton Tavern at 125 Tuckahoe Rd (☎ 631/287-2125) nestle down the road from impossibly upscale clubs, like Jet East, 1181 North Sea Road (☎ 631/283-0808), where super-rich regulars shell out megabucks to reserve Saturday-night tables.

Sag Harbor

Historic SAG HARBOR, in its heyday a port second only to that of New York, was designated first Port of Entry to the New Country by George Washington; the Old Custom House (May–June & Sept–Oct Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; July–Aug daily 10am–5pm; $5; ☎ 631/692-4664) dates from this era. The Whaling Museum on Main Street (May–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Nov–Dec Sat & Sun noon–4pm; $5; ☎ 631/725-0770, 🌐 www.sagharborwhalingmuseum.org) commemorates the town's brief whaling days with guns and scrimshaw. Nearby, the First Presbyterian "Old Whalers" Church is crenellated with jutting rows of whale-blubber spades, and beautiful memorials in Oakland Cemetery commemorate deceased young whalers.

The windmill where John Steinbeck once lived serves as a visitor center (June–Sept daily 10am–5pm, Fri & Sat until 8pm; rest of year Sat & Sun only 10am–5pm; ☎ 631/725-0011, 🌐 www.sagharborchamber.com). You can get a nice room at the Baron's Cove Inn, at 31 W Water St (☎ 631/725-2100, 🌐 www.baronscove.com; 🍷), but at the well-heeled American Hotel on Main Street (☎ 631/725-3535, 🌐 www.theamericanhotel.com; 🍷) you can also get a splendid French meal and a good cigar from the hotel's humidor. There are several good, less expensive restaurants along Main Street, such as the superb sushi bar Sen at no. 23 (☎ 631/725-1774).

East Hampton and Amagansett

EAST HAMPTON is the trendiest of the Hamptons, filled with the mansions of celebrities like Renée Zellweger, Jerry Seinfeld, and Steven Spielberg – as well as obnoxiously chic shops and restaurants. A bike ride or drive round some of the spectacular homes is quite an eye-opener. Amagansett, a village within East Hampton, tends to be more down-to-earth than the rest of town. Note the old shingle homes along quiet leafy side streets and enjoy the lively weekend scene at the Farmer's Market on Main Street. Don't miss the partying at Stephen Talkhouse, 161 Main St, a terrific bar and music joint that draws well-known folk, jazz, and rock performers year-round (☎ 631/267-3117, 🌐 www.stephentalkhouse.com).

Montauk

Blustery, wind-battered MONTAUK, beyond Amagansett on the farthest tip of Long Island, never quite made it as a resort; plans to develop it were shattered by the Wall Street Crash of 1929. The town isn't chic or quaint – but real people actually live here, and it provides access to the rocky wilds of Montauk Point, whose rare beauty figures in all the tourist brochures. A lighthouse – New York State's oldest, dating from 1796 – forms an almost symbolic finale to this stretch of the American coast.

Motels in the town center, such as Sands Motel, as you enter on Rte-27 (☎ 631/668-5100, 🌐 www.montauksands.com; 🍷), offer refreshingly reasonable room prices; for something fancier, try Gurney's Inn on Old Montauk Highway (☎ 631/668-2345, 🌐 www.gurneysinns.com; 🍷). The ultimate Montauk din- ing experience is The Lobster Roll, halfway back towards Amagansett on Rte-27 (☎631/267-3740), which serves excellent fresh seafood. Other good options include the moderately priced Shagwong on Main Street (☎631/668-3050) and the delicious sushi at West Lake Clam & Chowder House (☎631/668-6252).

The Hudson Valley and the Catskills

You only need to travel a few miles north of Manhattan before the Hudson River Valley takes on a Rhine-like charm, with prodigious historic homes, such as those of the Roosevelt, Vanderbilt, and van Cortland families, rising from its steep and thickly wooded banks. A little further on come the forests of the Catskill Mountains, whose brilliant fall colors rival anything to be seen in New England. Few of the cities along the Hudson, including the large but lackluster state capital of Albany, hold much to attract the visitor, though many of the small towns are worth checking out, such as regional historic and culinary mecca Hyde Park.

The lower Hudson Valley

A mere 25 miles north of central New York City, the leafy town of TARRY-TOWN and village of IRVINGTON were the original settings for Washington Irving's tales of Rip Van Winkle and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow. In 1835 the author rebuilt a farm cottage on West Sunnyside Lane (off Broadway/US-9) and renamed it Sunnyside: "a little old-fashioned stone mansion, all made up of gable ends, and as full of angles and corners as an old cocked hat." Tours squeeze through its cozy rooms, and are enjoyable even if you've never read a word of Irving (Apr–Nov Wed–Mon, Dec Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $10; ☎914/591-8763).

It's also worth looking around the spikily crenellated Lyndhurst Castle on Broadway, as dapper a piece of nineteenth-century Gothic Revivalism as you're likely to find, with grounds to match (mid Apr–Oct Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; Nov–mid Apr Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; $4 grounds, $10 tour; ☎914/631-4481, 🌐www.lyndhurst.org). Also of interest here is Kykuit (pronounced "Kigh-cut"), the old Rockefeller Estate. The mansion is filled with modern artwork, particularly sculpture, and the collection in the gardens and grounds is just as impressive, with works by Picasso, Calder, Noguchi, Henry Moore, and many others – although the pretentious guided tour detracts somewhat from the masterpieces (mid-May to early Nov Mon–Fri 10am–3pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; various tours $19–36; ☎914/631-9491, 🌐www.hudsonvalley.org/kykuit/index.htm).

The charming Main Streets of Irvington and Tarrytown have a range of good food options, from cheap, delicious Irvington Pizza, 106 Main St (☎914/591-7050), to upscale Italian, Spanish, and American restaurants. Irvington's brand-new Hudson Park makes for a scenic riverside picnic or after-dinner stroll.

About ten miles north of Tarrytown along US-9, the town of OSSINING holds two impressive mid-Victorian creations: one is a huge bridge carrying the Old Croton Aqueduct, New York City's first water supply; the other, just south of town, is Sing Sing Prison, which for over 150 years has been the place where New York City criminals get sent "up the river." Slightly north in CROTON-ON-HUDSON is Croton Point Park, a 508-acre peninsula that hosts major summer festivals and, occasionally, the sloop Clearwater (for docking and sailing times and venues consult ☎845/454-7673, 🌐www.clearwater.org).

The west bank and Catskill Mountains

Rising above the west bank of the Hudson River, the magnificent crests of the Catskills, cloaked with maple and beech that turn orange, ochre, and gold each fall, have a rich and absorbing beauty. This dislocated branch of the Appalachians is inspiring country, filled with amenities – campgrounds, hiking, fishing, and, especially, skiing. To enjoy it to the fullest, venture onto the trails; the mountains are so tightly packed that good roadside overlooks are rare.

West Point

Arguably the first place of interest on the west bank of the Hudson, almost fifty miles out of New York City, is the United States Military Academy at WEST POINT, which Congress established in 1802 to cultivate homegrown warfaring after realizing that the ragged troops who had won the Revolutionary War had been trained almost exclusively by European officers. Since then, West Point has produced US Army generals Grant, Lee, MacArthur, Eisenhower, Patton, and Schwarzkopf, to name but a famous few. Today, four-thousand-odd candidates on a tough four-year course fill the smart showpiece campus, which overlooks the Hudson from a wide, strategic bluff. What draws most people are the patriotic parade-ground drills, most frequent during spring and late summer/early fall; West Point's visitor center (daily 9am–4.45pm; ☎845/938-2638, @www.usma.edu) provides a full schedule as well as tours. The free West Point Museum (daily 10.30am–4.15pm) shows trophies of war, including pistols that belonged to George Washington, Napoleon Bonaparte, and Adolf Hitler and, disturbingly, the pin from the Nagasaki atomic bomb.

Woodstock

Around fifty miles further north, Hwy-28 meanders into the Catskills, looping past the lovely Ashokan Reservoir where Hwy-375 branches off to WOODSTOCK. The village, carved out of the lush deciduous woodlands and cut by fast-rushing creeks, was not actually the venue of the famed psychedelic picnic of August 1969. That was some sixty miles southwest in Bethel, where a monument at Herd and West Shore roads marks the site on the farm owned by Max Yasgur where the first festival was held. However, Woodstock has enjoyed a bohemian reputation since the foundation in 1902 of the Byrdcliffe Arts Colony (which runs summer residency courses; ☎845/679-2079, @www.woodstockguild.org), and during the 1960s it was a favorite stomping ground for the likes of Dylan, Hendrix, and Van Morrison.

Woodstock still bears signs of its hippie past: shops sell crystals and tie-dyed T-shirts, and there's even the odd commune out in the woods, although it's also a spot where wealthy Manhattanites own second homes. Woodstock's galleries and craft shops command a regional reputation and the village is also a hub for the performing arts: the Maverick Concert series (late June–Aug; $20 per concert/$5 students; ☎845/679-8217, @www.maverickconcerts.org) has played host to some of the world's finest chamber musicians since 1906.

Woodstock is a great base for exploring the Catskills, and the best option for accommodation is the cozy Twin Gables Guest House, 73 Tinker St (☎845/679-9479, @www.twingableswoodstockny.com; 📍). If this is full, try the equally central Getaway-on-the-Fall at 5 Waterfall Way (☎845/679-2568, @www.tinker.villagewoodstock.com; 📍). Between Woodstock and Saugerties, which offers a string of chain motels ten miles northeast, are Bed by the Stream (☎845/246-2979, @www.bedbythestream.com; 📍), a lovely rustic B & B, and Rip Van Winkle campgrounds (May–Oct; $30 per tentsite; ☎845/246-8334), both signposted off

Rte-212. Apart from the town's favorite café, Joshua's, at 51 Tinker St (☎845/679-5533), the best places to eat are a little way out of the village: the menu at the 🍷 New World Home Cooking Company, towards Saugerties at 1411 Rte-212 (April–Oct; ☎845/246-0900), has Caribbean and Creole-influenced dishes for under $20, while two miles west on Rte-212 in tiny Bearsville, the Bear Café (☎845/679-5555) serves excellent French bistro cuisine.

Several daily buses take two and a half hours to reach Woodstock from New York City's Port Authority Bus Terminal (Adirondack Trailways; ☎1-800/858-8555, 🌐www.trailwaysny.com). Sturdy bikes can be rented from Overlook Mountain Bikes, 93 Tinker St (☎845/679-2122, 🌐www.overlookmountainbikes.com). For more information, visit the Chamber of Commerce booth on Rock City Road, just off the village green (☎845/679-6234, 🌐www.woodstockchamber.com).

On through Catskill Park

Seven miles west of Woodstock, in the hamlet of MOUNT TREMPER, the Emerson Place Kaleidoscope (Sun–Thurs 10am–5pm, Fri & Sat 10am–7pm; $7) claims to be the world's largest, created by a local hippie artist in a 60ft-high converted grain silo. It plays ten-minute sound and light shows on request throughout the day and is part of the constantly expanding upscale Emerson Place Lodge & Spa, 146 Mt Pleasant Rd (☎845/688-2828 or 1-877/688-2828, 🌐www.emersonplace.com; 7). As you continue along Hwy-28, the picturesque village of PHOENICIA, in a hollow to the right of the road, is an ideal resting place and a great base for hiking trails in the area. You can catch the circular Catskill Mountain Railroad (late May–late Oct Sat, Sun & holidays 11.15am, 1.15pm & 3.15pm; $14 roundtrip; ☎845/688-7400, 🌐www.catskillmtnrailroad.com) through scenic Esopus Creek. The Phoenicia Belle, 73 Main St (☎845/688-7226, 🌐www.phoeniciabelle.com; 4), is a very reasonable lodge with optional breakfast. A few doors along is the ever-popular café Sweet Sue's (☎845/688-7852), while the Phoenicia Diner is another good option back on Hwy-28 (☎845/688-9957).

A few miles further west, Hwy-49A affords a good vista of the rambling Catskills from the parking lot of the Belleayre ski resort. The Belleayre Lodge & Cabins, just above Main St, Pine Hill (☎845/254-4200, 🌐www.belleayrelodge.com; 4), has newly renovated rooms and log cabins, while on Main St itself the large, Victorian-style Colonial Inn (☎845/254-5577, 🌐www.colonialinn.com; 2) offers some basic bargain rooms.

The return route to I-90, along Hwy-23A, includes a breathtaking view of the dramatic gorge between the villages of Hunter and Catskill, along with the area's premier ski runs on Hunter Mountain (☎518/263-4223, 🌐www.huntermtn.com). The resort's Skyride chair lifts also operate after the snow has melted (late June–Oct Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $8). Accommodation rates rise significantly during the ski season: Scribner Hollow Lodge, half a mile from the mountain on Hwy-23A (☎518/263-4211, 🌐www.scribnerhollow.com; 3), boasts 37 deluxe rooms, a fine-dining restaurant with great views, and a multi-pool swimming grotto. Rooms in the hamlet of Catskill, such as in the Red Ranch Motel at 4555 Rte-32 (Apr–Dec; ☎518/678-3380 or 1-800/962-4560, 🌐www.redranchmotel.com; 2), are much more basic, but more affordable.

The east bank

Interest on the east bank of the Hudson River starts in little BEACON, some sixty miles north of Manhattan, at the excellent Dia:Beacon, 3 Beekman St (mid-April to mid-Oct Thurs–Mon 11am–6pm; mid-Oct to mid-April Fri–Mon 11am–4pm; Ⓣ845/440-0100, 🌐www.diabeacon.org; $10). The contemporary art museum, a project of New York City's Dia Art Foundation, showcases large, primarily abstract exhibits by single artists, in a converted factory.

Hyde Park and around

HYDE PARK, set on a peaceful plateau on the east bank of the Hudson twenty miles north of Beacon, is worth a stop for the homes of Franklin D. and Eleanor Roosevelt. Well-signposted off US-9, the homes, a Vanderbilt mansion (see below) and a couple of minor attractions all come under the aegis of the new Henry A. Wallace Visitor and Education Center (Apr–Oct daily 8.45am–6.30pm, Nov–Mar 8.45am–5.30pm). The house where the “New Deal” president was born and spent much of his adult life is preserved here along with a library and a good museum (daily 9am–5pm; museum and guided house tour $14; Ⓣ845/486-7770, 🌐www.nps.gov/hofr). The museum contains extensive photos and artifacts, including the intriguing specially adapted car FDR drove after being struck down by polio in 1921, and the letter from Einstein that led to the development of the atomic bomb. FDR lies buried in the Rose Garden, beside his wife (and distant cousin) Eleanor, one of the first women to play a prominent role in politics, especially those regarding women's and workers' rights. After FDR's death in 1945, Eleanor moved to Val-Kill (May–Oct daily 9am–5pm; Nov–April Thurs–Mon 9am–5pm; tours $8; 🌐www.nps.gov/elro), the nearby cottage retreat where she carried on her work as chair of the United Nations Human Rights Commission until her death in 1962. The grounds to both homes are open from dawn to dusk and there is no charge.

A three-mile-long cliff-top path along the Hudson from the Roosevelt complex winds up at the Beaux Arts Vanderbilt Mansion (daily 9am–5pm; $8; 🌐www.nps.gov/vama). This virtual palace is, believe it or not, the smallest of the family's residences, built for Frederick, a grandson of railroad baron Cornelius. The furnishings are quite garish, but the formal gardens are very pretty and offer a fine view of the Hudson River. The grounds are open year-round from 7am to dusk, at no charge.

Apart from these historic homes, Hyde Park has one other huge tourist draw: the excellent restaurants and fascinating campus of the Culinary Institute of America, the most prestigious cooking school in the country, which stands along US-9, south of Hyde Park at 1946 Campus Drive. The outstanding restaurants here (lunch and dinner Mon–Sat; Ⓣ845/471-6608 or 🌐www.ciachef.edu for reservations) have trained some of America's best chefs. Frequent dining events, “boot camps,” and classes are held for food and wine enthusiasts (Ⓣ1-800/285-4627); campus tours (Mon 10am & 4pm, Wed 4pm & Thurs 4pm; $5) require reservations.

Bargain accommodation in Hyde Park is available at the Golden Manor Motel (Ⓣ845/229-2157, 🌐www.goldenmanorhydepark.com; 2), located on US-9 almost opposite the Roosevelt complex.

Rhinebeck and Olana

Beyond Hyde Park, US-9 cuts slightly inland from the Hudson, passing through a number of sleepy towns on its way north toward Albany. RHINEBECK, six miles north of Hyde Park, is the first and most worthwhile of these, holding a number of good restaurants as well as America's oldest hotel. The lovely, white Colonial  Beekman Arms on Rte-9 has been hosting and feeding travelers in its warm, wood-paneled rooms since 1766 (Ⓣ845/876-7077, 🌐www.beekmanarms.com; 5). Two good places to eat are the Calico Restaurant & Patisserie, 6384 Mill St (Ⓣ845/876-2749; closed Mon & Tues), which has a menu featuring Italian and French influences, and the all-American Foster's Coachhouse Tavern, 6411 Montgomery St (☎845/876-8052). Rhinebeck is also home to the New Agey Omega Institute for Holistic Studies, which runs a spa and a wide range of health and wellness workshops at a large campus east of town on Lake Drive (☎1-800/944-1001, @www.eomega.org).

The other good stop on the east bank of the Hudson is Olana, the hilltop home of Frederic Church (1826–1900), one of the foremost artists of the Hudson River School. High above a bend in the river, across the bridge from the town of Catskill, the quirky but attractive house rises in an odd blend of Persian and Moorish motifs. Obligatory guided tours (hours vary; ☎518/828-0135, @www.olana.org) take in the bric-a-brac clogged rooms, as well as a number of Church's picturesque paintings. The grounds are also open daily from 8am until sunset.

Albany

Founded by Dutch fur-trappers in the early seventeenth century, ALBANY made its money by controlling trade along the Erie Canal, and its reputation by being capital of the state. It's not an unpleasant town, just rather boring, with its contemporary character almost exclusively shaped by political and bureaucratic affairs – though there are a few livelier areas on the fringes.

A good place to start a tour is the Quackenbush House, the city's oldest building, built along the river in 1736 and now serving as part of the Albany Urban Culture Park. The modern visitor center, next door at Broadway and Clinton (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; ☎518/434-0405, @www.albany.org), has free maps and can provide details of tours of the imposing neoclassical Capitol and the downtown area, where a number of Revolutionary-era homes survive. The visitor center also has engaging displays tracing Albany's history, with a special emphasis on the impact of the Erie Canal and the impressive industrial legacy of Troy, across the Hudson via I-787 N.

Uphill from the waterfront, a controversial replacement for the old heart of the city, Nelson A. Rockefeller's Empire State Plaza is a rather ugly complex that includes a subterranean retail arcade lined with impressive modern art. The view from the Corning Tower's 42nd-floor observation deck (daily 10am–2.30pm; free) looks out far across the state, beyond the twisting Hudson River to the Adirondack foothills, the Catskills, and the Berkshires in Massachusetts. It also peers down on the neighboring Performing Arts Center, known locally as “The Egg” (☎518/478-1845, @www.theegg.org) – which adds the only curves to the Plaza's harsh angularity.

The New York State Museum (daily 9.30am–5pm; ☎518/474-5877, @www.nysm.nysed.gov; suggested donation $2), one level down at the south end of the plaza, reveals everything you could want to know about New York State in imaginative, if static, tableaux. The excellent section on New York City history is better than anything like it in Manhattan itself, with absorbing exhibits and the original set of Sesame Street.

The most engaging part of Albany is the few blocks west of the plaza, stretching between Washington and Madison avenues to the open green spaces of Washington Park, laid out by Frederick Law Olmsted, the father of American landscape architecture. The recently renovated Albany Institute of History and Art, 125 Washington Ave (Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7; ☎518/463-4478, @www.albanyinstitute.org), has a good range of Hudson River School paintings, and the neighborhood is full of the same sort of nineteenth-century brick-built homes Rockefeller had pulled down to build his Empire State Plaza.

Practicalities

Arrive by Greyhound or Adirondack Trailways (☎1-800/858-8555, 🌐www.trailwaysny.com) and it's a short, hilly walk to the heart of downtown; come in via Amtrak and you face a two-mile bus ride across the river in Rensselaer. If you intend to stay the night, bear in mind that downtown lodging is not particularly cheap. Suburban chain motels start at $50 a night, while downtown options amount to the Ramada Inn, 300 Broadway (☎518/434-4111, 🌐www.ramada.com; ④), the more comfortable Albany Crowne Plaza, at State and Lodge streets (☎518/462-6611 or 1-877/227-6963, 🌐www.cpalbany.com; ⑤), and the exceptionally nice Mansion Hill Inn, 115 Philip St (☎518/465-2038 or 1-888/299-0455, 🌐www.mansionhill.com; ⑥), a B&B in a restored home just down the hill from the state governor's mansion; it also has a fine restaurant.

Other good places to eat are located on or near Lark Street, a few blocks west of the plaza; which is also the hub of the local gay scene. Justin's, at no. 301 (☎518/436-7008), and Café Hollywood, at no. 275 (☎518/472-9043), serve good, progressive American food at moderate prices, while the welcoming Mamoun's, 206 Washington Ave (☎518/434-3901), has great inexpensive lamb, chicken, and vegetarian dishes. Two of the most popular nightlife haunts are Jillian's, 59 N Pearl St (☎518/432-1997), which has live music and DJs, and the Lark Tavern, 453 Madison Ave (☎518/463-7875), an Irish bar. The college town of Troy, across the river, also has a number of lively spots.

North through the Adirondacks

Mountaineers, skiers, and dedicated hikers form the majority of visitors to the vast northern region between Albany and the Canadian border. Outdoor pursuits are certainly the main attractions in the rugged wilderness of the Adirondack Mountains, though a few small resorts, especially the former Winter Olympic venue of Lake Placid, offer creature comforts in addition to breathtaking scenery; and the elegant spa town of Saratoga Springs nestles invitingly in the delicate countryside of the southern foothills.

Saratoga Springs

Saratoga was fast, man, it was real fast. It was up all night long.

Hattie Gray, founder of Hattie's

For well over a century, SARATOGA SPRINGS, just 42 miles north of Albany on I-87, was very much the place to be seen for the Northeast's richest and most glittering names (such as the Morgans, Vanderbilts, and Whitneys). At first, the town's curative waters were the main attraction; then John Morrissey, an Irish boxer, transformed things by opening a racetrack and casino here during the 1860s. During the August horse-racing season, Saratoga Springs retains the feel of an exclusive vintage resort – but for the rest of the summer it is accessible, affordable, and fun.

Broadway, the main axis, takes in just about every aspect of the modern town, from lurid motel signs to the Gothic and Renaissance residential palaces on the northern tip of downtown; most of Saratoga Springs' many good bars are here or in the few blocks just east. The carefully cultivated Congress Park, off South Broadway, laid out for the original spa-goers, remains a shady retreat from town-center traffic. Three of the original mineral springs still flow up to the surface here, funneled out into drinking fountains (the water is tepid and salty, but some people swear by it). Also here is the original casino, which when built formed part of a whole city block. The racetrack (season runs late July–early September, post time 1pm; $3–5; ☎518/584-6200, www.nyracing.com/saratoga) still functions in a rather grand, old-fashioned manner, though there is no longer a strict dress code for the grandstand or the clubhouse except no shorts or tank tops. There's no such pretension at the harness track, aka the Equine Sports Center, on nearby Crescent Avenue (evening races several times a week May–Nov; $2; ☎518/584-2110). If you can't get to either, visit the array of paintings, trophies, and audiovisual displays at the National Museum of Racing and Hall of Fame, on Union Avenue at Ludlow Street (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm, during race meet open daily 9am–5pm; $7; ☎518/584-0400, www.racingmuseum.org).

On the southern edge of town, green Saratoga Spa State Park (daily 8am–dusk; $6 per car; ☎518/584-2535) presents opportunities to swim in great old Victorian pools, picnic, hike, or even “take the waters,” ie, take a hot bath in the tingly, naturally carbonated stuff and receive a variety of spa treatments. Try the historic Lincoln Bath House, just past the park entrance at 65 S Broadway (☎518/583-2880), where advance reservations are required for a relaxing 20min bath and sheet wrap treatment ($20). The Saratoga Performing Arts Center (June to early Sept; ☎518/587-3330, www.spac.org) – or SPAC – was built during the 1960s in a successful attempt to revive the town's fortunes. As well as being home to the New York City Ballet in July, and the Philadelphia Orchestra in August, it also hosts Freihofer's (formerly Newport) Jazz Festival among other quality festivals.

Practicalities

Central Saratoga Springs is easily explored on foot. Accommodation is only a problem during August's race season, or if there's a big gig on at SPAC, when prices can more than double. One good central motel is the Turf and Spa, 140 Broadway (April–Oct; ☎518/584-2550 or 1-800/972-1229, www.saratogaturfandspa.com; ②). Both the lavishly restored landmark Adelphi Hotel, 365 Broadway (May–Oct; ☎518/587-4688, www.adelphihotel.com; ⑤), and the grand Gideon Putnam Hotel, located right in Saratoga Spa State Park (☎518/584-3000, www.gideonputnam.com; ⑦–⑧), have more character. The Chamber of Commerce, 28 Clinton St (☎518/584-3255, www.saratoga.org), has full lists of accommodations.

Eating is also easy. One longtime favorite is the soul food at Hattie's, 45 Phila St (☎518/584-4790), where huge entrees cost under $15; another good bet is Wheat Fields, 440 Broadway (☎518/587-0534), with good salads and pasta served on an outdoor patio. Beverly's, 47 Phila St (☎518/583-2755), serves great but pricey breakfasts. There's usually good Irish music at the Parting Glass Pub, 40 Lake Ave (☎518/583-1916). 9 Maple Avenue, logically enough at 9 Maple Ave (☎518/583-2582), offers live jazz and blues until the early hours, while folksy Caffè Lena, 47 Phila St (Thurs–Sun; ☎518/583-0022, www.caffelena.com) is where Don McLean first inflicted “American Pie” on the world.

The Adirondacks

The Adirondacks, which cover an area larger than Connecticut and Rhode Island combined, are said by locals to be named after an Iroquois insult for enemies they'd driven into the forests and left to become “bark eaters.” Until recent decades the area was almost the exclusive preserve of loggers, fur trappers, and a few select New York millionaires. For sheer grandeur, the region is hard to beat: 46 peaks reach to over 4000ft; in summer the purple-green mountains span far into the distance in shaggy tiers, in fall the trees form a russet-red kaleidoscope.

△ The Adirondacks

Though Adirondack Trailways buses serve the area, you'll find it hard-going without a car. General information and some special deals can be had from the Adirondack Region tourist office (☎ 1-800/487-6867, 🌐 www.visitadirondacks.com). The Adirondack Mountain Club (ADK), 814 Goggins Road, Lake George (☎ 518/668-4447, 🌐 www.adk.org), or the Adirondack Park Visitor Interpretive Centers, based in Paul Smiths, north of Saranac Lake (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 518/327-3000, 🌐 www.northnet.org/adirondackvic), can provide details on hiking and camping.

Blue Mountain Lake

It is better to press on past over-commercialized Lake George and the eastern fringes of the Adirondacks and drive the extra hour northwest along Hwy-28 to where the headwaters of the Hudson River announce the tiny resort of BLUE MOUNTAIN LAKE. A handful of motels and lakeside cabins provide accommodation, and you can swim at the pretty little beach that fronts the village center.

Just north of Blue Mountain Lake on Hwy-30, the otherwise rather bland twenty-building Adirondack Museum (late May to mid-Oct daily 10am–5pm; $14; www.adirondackmuseum.org) is perhaps most memorable for its grand views out over the lake and surrounding mountains.

Sagamore Great Camp, about fifteen miles west, in the woods above Raquette Lake, is the only one of the many “Great Camps” that wealthy Easterners constructed in the Adirondacks around the end of the nineteenth century that is open to the public. It was a summer home of the Vanderbilts, basically a huge and luxurious log cabin in which they entertained illustrious guests. The still-intact house and grounds are now used as a conference and educational center, and for cross-country skiing in winter; call for details of summer art and photography classes, or to reserve a place on a guided two-hour tour (May–June Sat & Sun 1.30pm; July–Aug daily 10am & 1.30pm; Sept–Oct daily 1.30pm; $12; 315/354-5311, www.sagamore.org).

Lake Placid

The winter sports center of LAKE PLACID, twice the proud host of the Winter Olympics, lies thirty miles west of I-87 on Hwy-73. In winter there’s thrilling alpine skiing at imposing Whiteface Mountain and all manner of Nordic disciplines at Mount Van Hoevenberg; in summer you can watch luge athletes practice on refrigerated runs, freestyle skiers somersaulting off dry slopes into swimming pools, and top amateur ice hockey games. The mountain slopes also provide challenging terrain for hikers and cyclists; good mountain bikes, maps of local trails, and guided tours are available from High Peaks Cyclery, 2733 Main St (518/523-3764). The Kodak Summer Passport (June–Oct; $25; 518/523-1655, www.orda.org) allows you on the chair lift to the top of the 393ft ski jump and eight miles up the sheer Whiteface Mountain toll road and back again, on the Whiteface gondola, and into the Olympic museum (see below). A similar winter passport is also available. At the Verizon Sports Complex on Mount Van Hoevenburg (518/523-4436), you can do a blood-curdling bobsled run ($35) or hike the extensive trail network ($25 bike rental; $6 trail fee).

The town itself is set on two lakes: Mirror Lake, which you can sail on in summer and skate on in winter, and larger Lake Placid, just to the west, on which you can take a narrated cruise in summer ($8.50; 518/523-9704). Other attractions include the Olympic Center on Main Street (self-guided audio tour including museum $5; 518/523-1655), which houses four ice rinks and the informative 1932 and 1980 Lake Placid Winter Olympic Museum ($4).

Outside the village on Hwy-73, the John Brown Farm State Historic Site was where the famous abolitionist brought his family in 1849 to aid a small colony of black farmers and where he conceived his ill-fated raid on Harper’s Ferry in an attempt to end slavery. The house is less interesting than his story (see p.1302; late May to late Oct Wed–Sun 10am–5pm; $2; 518/523-3900); the grounds, which include Brown’s grave, are open year-round.

Practicalities

Lake Placid’s information center is in the Olympic Center, 2610 Main St (518/523-2445 or 1-800/447-5224, www.lakeplacid.com), and offers 15 minutes of free online access. Accommodation in town ranges from the somewhat economical to the opulent. The casually elegant Mirror Lake Inn Resort &

Spa, 77 Mirror Lake Drive (☎518/523-2544, 🌐www.mirrorlakeinn.com; 📍), has over 120 rooms, the best of them palatial, and an array of facilities, while the nearby Interlaken Inn, 39 Interlaken Ave (☎518/523-3180, 🌐www.theinterlakeninn.com; 📍), is a slightly cheaper but equally upscale B&B, with an excellent restaurant. Edelweiss Motel, on the east side of town at 2806 Wilington Rd, has clean if somewhat dated rooms (☎518/523-3821; 📍). The Keene Valley Hostel, in nearby Keene Valley (☎518/576-2030; dorm beds $18; 📍-📍), is a great base to be within walking distance of all the best hiking trails.

It's possible to eat well, with a view, for relatively little here. Blues Berry Bakery, 2436 Main St (☎518/523-4539), is much-loved for its apple strudel, while Nicola's (☎518/523-4430), nearby at no. 2617, does Greek and Italian dinners, including good wood-fired pizza. On the east side of town, the 🍷 Station Street Bar & Grille, 1 Station St (☎518/523-9963), is undoubtedly the friendliest place for a night out with the locals and serves delicious ribs and other dishes, occasionally accompanied by acoustic strumming. Main Street's buzzing Zig Zag's Pub (☎518/523-8221) is the main place for live music on the weekends.

Saranac Lake

SARANAC LAKE, ten miles northwest of Lake Placid, is a smaller, more laid-back and cheaper base for the region. The tranquil lakeshore is lined with lovely gingerbread cottages, most of them built during the late 1800s, when this was a popular middle-class retreat and spa. Robert Louis Stevenson spent the winter of 1888 in a small cottage on the east side of town at 44 Stevenson Lane; it's now preserved as a museum (July–Sept Tues–Sun 9.30am–noon & 1pm–4.30pm; rest of year by appointment; $5; ☎518/891-1462, 🌐www.pennypiper.org). Among the many motels on Lake Flower Avenue, friendly Sara-Placid Motor Inn, no. 120 (☎518/891-2729 or 1-800/794-2729, 🌐www.sara-placid.com; 📍), has rooms and suites to suit most budgets. Downtown the Hotel Saranac, 100 Main St (☎1-800/937-0211; 📍), also has a friendly bar. Surprisingly good, if not fully authentic Mexican food can be had at the boisterous Casa del Sol, 154 Lake Flower Ave (☎518/891-0977).

The Thousand Islands

Beyond the Adirondacks, on the broad St Lawrence River (which forms the border with Canada), there are 1800 barely populated hunks of earth known as the Thousand Islands. The reason they gave their name to a salad dressing is because one c.1900 visitor, George Boldt, president of New York's Waldorf-Astoria hotel, is said to have asked the steward on his yacht to concoct something different for a special luncheon. The resultant brightly colored goo is now famous the world over.

For information about the area, contact the Thousand Islands International Tourism Council (☎1-800/847-5263, 🌐www.visit1000islands.com). From both Alexandria Bay and the smaller fishing port of Clayton, boat excursions set out to explore the waterway; the tiny craft are all but swamped by the huge passing cargo ships, larger than many of the islands. For departure times, contact Uncle Sam Boat Tours (May–Oct daily; prices vary; ☎315/686-3511 or 1-800/253-9229).

The Finger Lakes

At the heart of the state, southwest of Syracuse on the far side of the Catskills from New York City, are the eleven Finger Lakes, narrow channels gouged out by glaciers that have left tell-tale signs in the form of drumlins, steep gorges, and a number of waterfalls. With the exception of progressive, well-to-do Ithaca and tiny Skaneateles, few towns compete with the lakeshore scenery. That said, the area as a whole is a relaxing place to spend some time, particularly if you enjoy sampling wine: the Finger Lakes region – and much of upstate New York – produces a number of good vintages.

Skaneateles and Seneca Falls

SKANEATELES (pronounced “Skinny-Atlas”), crouching at the neck of Skaneateles Lake, is perhaps the prettiest Finger Lakes town. It’s also the best place to go swimming in the region: just a block from the town center, and lined by huge resort homes, the appealing bay sports a beach (summer daily; $3) and the Skaneateles Marina, where you can rent watersports equipment (☎315/685-5095) and take boat trips, from Mid-Lakes Navigation ($10 for 1hr; ☎315/685-8500). Accommodation options include the Colonial Motel, one mile west on Hwy-20 (☎315/685-5751, 🌐www.colonialmotelonline.com; 📍), and, overlooking the lake, the elegant 🏠1899 Lady of the Lake B&B, 2 W Lake St (☎1-888/685-7997, 🌐www.ladyofthelake.net; 📍), and the Sherwood Inn, 26 W Genesee St (☎315/685-3405, 🌐www.thesherwoodinn.com; 📍), featuring a good dining room and tavern. Cheaper but still scrumptious meals can be had at the ever-popular Doug’s Fish Fry, 8 Jordan St (☎315/685-3288) or more upmarket Bluewater Grill, 11 W Genesee St (☎315/685-6600).

At SENECA FALLS, just west of the northern tip of Cayuga Lake, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and a few colleagues planned and held the first Women’s Rights Convention in 1848 – 72 years before the 19th amendment gave all women in the US the right to vote. On the site of the Wesleyan Chapel, 136 Fall St, where the first campaign meeting was held, is the terrific Women’s Rights National Historical Park (daily 9am–5pm; $3; ☎315/568-2991, 🌐www.nps.gov/wori), which sets the early and contemporary women’s movements in their historical contexts, with a strong emphasis on the connection with the African-American civil rights movements. The center, featuring exhibits and a neat little gift and book shop, also offers a walking tour that takes in the small museum at the Cady Stanton house and passes the (privately owned) former home of Amelia Bloomer, whose crusade to urge women out of their cumbersome undergarments won her a place in the dictionary. A block east of the visitor center, at 76 Fall St, the National Women’s Hall of Fame (May–Sept Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; Oct–April Wed–Sat 11am–5pm; $3; ☎315/568-8060, 🌐www.greatwomen.org), honors about two hundred women, including Emily Dickinson and Sojourner Truth, for their efforts in various fields.

The town itself is a blend of old mills and homes of various architectural styles, tucked away among the mature trees. If you want to stop over, the best place to stay is the Hubbell House B&B, at 42 Cayuga St (☎315/568-9690, 🌐www.hubbellhousebb.com; 📍). There are several reasonable cafés along Fall Street. Hwy-89, between Seneca Falls and Ithaca, has been dubbed the Cayuga Wine Trail, with dozens of small wineries operating along the west shore of the largest of the Finger Lakes, such as Sheldrake Point and Thirsty Owl; both offer tastings for $1.

Ithaca

Cayuga Lake comes to a halt at its southern end at picturesque ITHACA, piled like a diminutive San Francisco above the lakeshore and culminating in the towers, sweeping lawns, and shaded parks of Ivy-League Cornell University. On campus, which is cut by striking gorges, creeks, and lakes, the sleek, I.M. Pei–designed Herbert F. Johnson Museum of Art (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; free; ☎ 607/255-6464, 🌐 www.museum.cornell.edu), across the street from the gorge-straddling suspension bridge, merits a visit more for its fifth-floor view of the town and lake than for the (on the whole) unspectacular collection of Asian and contemporary art. Adjacent to campus lie the Cornell Plantations (daily: dawn to dusk; free; ☎ 607/255-2400, 🌐 www.plantations.cornell.edu), the extensive botanical gardens and arboretum run by the university.

The pick of the countless waterfalls within a few miles of town are the slender Taughannock Falls, which are taller than Niagara at a height of 215ft and lie ten miles north of town just off Hwy-89, with a swimming beach close at hand. Buttermilk Falls State Park, two miles south of town on Rte-13, is a delightful spot, and the dangerous-looking Lucifer Falls, at lush Robert H. Treman State Park, three miles further south, should not be missed. Parking is $7 for the day, which covers all three parks. Cayuga Lake provides excellent boating and windsurfing opportunities; boards and boats can be rented from several places, including Cayuga Boat Rentals (☎ 607/277-5072), next to the Visitors Bureau.

Practicalities

Greyhound and other buses operate out of the terminal at W State and N Fulton. Free Internet access is available at the huge, partially solar-powered library on Cayuga Avenue next to the Ithaca Commons. The helpful visitor center is at 904 East Shore Drive, off Hwy-34 N (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm, longer in summer; ☎ 607/272-1313 or 1-800/284-8422, 🌐 www.visitithaca.com).

Accommodation is, on the whole, reasonably priced. Try the Cottage Garden Inn, a cosy B&B at 107 Crescent Place (☎ 607/277-7561, 🌐 www.cottagegardeninn.com; 4), or the Best Western University Inn, 1020 Ellis Hollow Rd, on the east edge of campus (☎ 800/528-1234, 🌐 www.bestwestern.com; 4). The Statler Hotel, on East Avenue within the campus proper (☎ 1-800/541-2501, 🌐 www.statlerhotel.cornell.edu; 5), is the teaching hotel of the Cornell School of Hotel Administration and makes a pleasant option, particularly out of term.

Ithaca boasts two dining and entertainment zones. Downtown, centered on the vehicle-free Commons, is the larger and better of the two. Here DeWitt Mall, on the corner of Cayuga and Seneca streets, features the top-rated vegetarian restaurant of cookbook fame, Moosewood (☎ 607/273-9610), as well as the Café DeWitt (☎ 607/273-3473), which offers healthy and filling salads at lunchtime. A block away, Just a Taste, 116 N Aurora St (☎ 607/277-9463), is a lively wine and tapas bar. Numerous cheap student-oriented places to eat line the streets of Collegietown; check out The Nines, 311 College Ave (☎ 607/272-1888), which serves up the best deep-dish pizza around and has live music. Common Ground (☎ 607/273-1505) is a gay-friendly bar down Route 96B with ping-pong, billiards, and a gorgeous patio.

The Kitchen Theatre produces new and avant-garde plays in its intimate auditorium (☎ 607/272-0403, 🌐 www.kitchentheatre.com); for news of the lively music scene, pick up the free Ithaca Times.

Corning

Forty miles southwest of Ithaca, world-famous Steuben glass has been manufactured in the otherwise undistinguished town of CORNING since Frederick Carder started making his characteristic Art Nouveau pieces in 1903. The excellent Museum of Glass in the Corning Glass Center traces the history of glass from ancient heads and amulets to modern sculptures and paperweights, and allows you to watch glassmaking in action (daily summer 9am–8pm; Sept–May 9am–5pm; $12.50; ☎ 1-800/732-6845, 🌐 www.cmog.org). The Rockwell Museum of Western Art, ten minutes' stroll away at 111 Cedar St (same hours; $6.50, both museums $16.50; ☎ 607/937-5386, 🌐 www.stny.com/rockwellmuseum), has more than two thousand pieces of Steuben glass, plus antique toys and a strong, historically informed collection of Western American art. For further information on these attractions and for help in finding accommodation, contact the visitors bureau at 5 W Market St (☎ 607/936-6544 or 1-866/946-3386, 🌐 www.corningsteuben.com).

Toward Niagara Falls: the Erie Canal towns

The fertile farming country stretching from Albany at the head of the Hudson to Buffalo on Lake Erie, along the route of the Erie Canal, comprises the agricultural heartland of New York State. The eastern parts – also known as Central Leath-erstocking, after the protective leggings worn by the area's first settlers – are well off the conventional tourist trails. Unless you want to check out one of the specialist sports museums or visit the lovely village of Cooperstown, this is not a high-priority destination.

With the captivating exceptions of Niagara Falls, one of the continent's biggest crowd-pullers, and the emerging tourist destination of Buffalo, there's little to see in the northwest reaches of New York State. Standing out from the mostly flat farmland, the industrial towns of Rochester and Syracuse also possess some worthy attractions and restaurants.

Cooperstown

Seventy miles west of Albany, sitting gracefully on the wooded banks of tranquil Otsego Lake, is pleasant COOPERSTOWN, christened “Glimmerglass” by novelist James Fenimore Cooper, son of the town's founder. The birth of baseball, said to have originated here on Doubleday Field, is commemorated by the inspired and spacious National Baseball Hall of Fame, on Main Street (daily 9am–5pm; $14.50; ☎ 607/547-7200, 🌐 www.baseballhalloffame.org). Everything is displayed in such an attention-grabbing manner that even complete novices will be absorbed. The delightful Fenimore Art Museum, just north of town on Lake Road/Rte-80 (April–mid-May & mid-Oct–Dec Tues–Sun 10am–4pm; mid-May–mid-Oct daily 10am–5pm; $11; ☎ 1-888/547-1450, 🌐 www.fenimoreartmuseum.org), has innovative special exhibits and a fine collection of folk and North American Indian art. In summer, Cooperstown hosts classical concerts and the Glimmerglass Opera at Alice Busch Opera Theater, north on Hwy-80 by the lake (☎ 607/547-5704, 🌐 www.glimmerglass.org).

The local chamber of commerce runs a small but helpful visitor center at 31 Chestnut St (summer daily 9am–7pm, shorter winter hours; ☎ 607/547-9983, 🌐 www.cooperstownchamber.org); the website is an excellent way to arrange accommodation. If you drive here in summer, park in one of the free lots on the edge of town and take the trolley around the various sights (8am–9pm: late June–Labor Day daily, Memorial Day to late June and Labor Day through Oct weekends only; $2 all-day pass). Accommodation in the town itself is expensive, but there's a cluster of clean motels right on pretty Otsego Lake, a few miles north on Rte-80; the Lake 'N Pines (☎ 607/547-2790 or 1-800/615-5253, 🌐 www.cooperstown).

net/lake-n-pines; ③; closed Dec–March) offers superb value. Further north on Rte-80, the gorgeous lakeside Blue Mingo Inn (☎607/547-9414, 🌐www.bluemingoinn.com; ③) maintains one of the area's best and most creative restaurants, the Blue Mingo Grill (☎607/547-7496), where fusion and New American dishes change nightly. Clete Boyer's, three miles south on Hwy-28 (☎607/544-1112), serves gimmicky but tasty American food. For a bite in town away from the crowds, try the Cooperstown Diner, 136 1/2 Main St (☎607/547-9201), open until 2pm for breakfast and burgers.

Syracuse

A lively but largely unattractive modern city, busy SYRACUSE made its name first for the production of salt and, more importantly, for its central position on the Erie Canal. There's little to see, though the presence of Syracuse University gives downtown an active and youthful feel. The redevelopment of Armory Square, around Franklin and Fayette streets, as an area of specialty shops, galleries, and cafés has also added some character to the city center.

The Erie Canal Museum (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 10am–3pm; suggested donation $3; ☎315/471-0593, 🌐www.eriecanalmuseum.org), housed in one of the few surviving canal-era buildings, an 1850s weighing station at 318 E Erie Blvd, tells the story of the long battle between politicians and taxpayers before work on the canal began in 1810. The waterway was designed to link the Great Lakes with New York City via the Hudson, thereby cutting hefty transportation costs. This it did by an average of ninety percent, but at the cost of more than one thousand lives and three million dollars over budget. When it opened in 1825 after fifteen years of construction, prosperous towns quickly sprung up alongside the canal.

Excellent rooms can be found in the lakeside Ancestors Inn, just outside of town in Liverpool (☎315/461-1226 or 1-888/866-8591, 🌐www.ancestorsinn.com; ④). The fairly central HI-Downing International Hostel, 535 Oak St (☎315/472-5788; ②), has $14–17 dorm beds. For food, Pastabilities, 311 S Franklin St (☎315/474-1153), is popular for its delicious pasta, while Lemon Grass, 238 W Jefferson St (☎315/475-1111), is a great but pricey Thai place. Student numbers ensure a lively music scene (consult the resourceful and free Syracuse New Times at 🌐www.syracusenewtimes.com for goings-on) and good hangouts include the loud, bluesy Dinosaur BBQ, 246 W Willow St (☎315/476-1662). The city's small visitor center is in the Erie Canal Museum (same hours and contact).

Rochester

In contrast to its sprawling suburbs, downtown ROCHESTER is a salubrious place, with its central office-block area bordered by well-heeled mansions on spacious boulevards. High-tech companies such as Bausch & Lomb, Xerox, and Kodak have created a thriving local economy throughout the years, despite national and regional economic downturns. Kodak's (and its founder, George Eastman's) legacies throughout the metropolitan area include Kodak Park, the Eastman Theater, and above all the International Museum of Photography at George Eastman House, two miles from downtown at 900 East Ave (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm, Sun 1–5pm; $8; ☎585/271-3361, 🌐www.eastmanhouse.org). In the modern annex, a first-rate exhibition of photographic history ranges from high-quality Civil War prints to modern experimental works. There's also a space for temporary exhibitions and an arthouse cinema. The house itself, fussily restored to its early twentieth-century glory, is mildly interesting. Fittingly, given Eastman's passion for horticulture, the gardens have been superbly maintained and are worth a visit in themselves. Nearby at 500 University Ave, the Memorial Art Gallery (Tues, Wed & Fri noon–5pm, Thurs noon–9pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $7; ☎ 585/473-7720, 🌐 www.mag.rochester.edu) houses a surprisingly extensive collection that includes three Monets and a Rembrandt.

An obsessive collector of anything and everything, local bigwig Margaret Woodbury Strong (1897–1969) bequeathed her estate to the city and today it is the Strong National Museum of Play on Manhattan Square (Mon–Thurs & Sat 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $9, kids $7; ☎ 585/263-2700, 🌐 www.strongmuseum.org). Half devoted to a history of the American family, and half obsessed with a history of American children’s pop culture, it features interactive kid-oriented exhibits such as a history of Sesame Street, a fully working 1920s carousel, and a 1950s Pennsylvania diner. There’s also a stunning indoor butterfly garden.

The theme of celebrating former Rochester residents continues at the Susan B. Anthony House at 17 Madison St, where this renowned suffragist lived from 1866 to 1906 (Summer Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; winter Wed–Sun 11am–4pm; $6; ☎ 585/235-6124, 🌐 www.susanbanthonyhouse.org).

Practicalities

Greyhound drops off at Broad and Chestnut streets downtown. The Amtrak station, 320 Central Ave, is on the north side beyond the I-490 inner loop road; it’s served by Regional Transit Service (RTS) public buses (☎ 585/288-1700, 🌐 www.rgrta.com). Rochester’s visitor center is at 45 East Ave between Chestnut and Main (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/677-7282, 🌐 www.visitrochester.com). Accommodation is somewhat expensive downtown, where choices include the excellent 428 Mt Vernon B&B (☎ 716/271-0792 or 1-800/836-3159, 🌐 www.428mtvernon.com; Ⓜ), at the entrance to lush Highland Park, with private baths in all rooms. Among budget options in the south of the city is the Red Roof Inn, 4820 W Henrietta Rd, off I-90 exit 46 (☎ 585/359-1100, 🌐 www.redroof.com; Ⓜ).

Popular places to eat downtown include Aladdin’s Natural Eatery, 646 Monroe Ave (☎ 585/442-5000), serving inexpensive Middle Eastern food, and the pub-style Old Toad, 277 Alexander St (☎ 585/232-2626), where British staff serve beer and cheap meals. If you want to sample a “Garbage Plate” – the local delicacy of all sorts deep-fried – head over to Nick Tahou Hots at 320 W Main St (☎ 585/436-0184). In the university area, Jine’s Restaurant, 658 Park Ave (☎ 585/461-1280), is good-value for breakfast, and Esan, 696 Park Ave (☎ 585/271-2271), is the place for authentically spicy and inexpensive Thai food.

Out from Rochester

The Lake Ontario State Parkway is a quiet, scenic way of driving to Niagara Falls from Rochester, taking about an hour longer than the standard route along I-90 via Buffalo. The parkway starts eight miles from downtown at the end of Lake Avenue, near the popular but posey Ontario Beach Park. If big crowds and the churning noise of speedboats are not your thing, head twenty miles along the parkway to the more secluded Hamlin Beach State Park ($7 per car).

Buffalo

As I-90 sweeps down into the state’s second largest city, BUFFALO, downtown looms up in a cluster of Art Deco spires and glass-box skyscrapers – Manhattan in miniature on Lake Erie. The city’s early twentieth-century prosperity, which busted while many other American cities were booming, and thus exempted Buffalo's historic buildings from destruction and replacement, is reflected in such architecturally significant structures as the towering 1928 City Hall (the tallest in the country; free observation deck on the top floor); the deep red terracotta relief of Louis Sullivan's Guaranty Building on Church Street; and major buildings by H.H. Richardson and Eliel Saarinen. The massive abandoned grain elevators, which rise proudly along the Erie waterfront like wonders of the industrial world, provide an interesting architectural counterpoint. Because of its proximity to the Canadian border, Buffalo also has numerous Underground Railroad sites.

That Buffalo's wealthy merchants were a cultured lot is also apparent in the excellent Albright-Knox Art Gallery, 1285 Elmwood Ave (Wed–Sat 11am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10; ☎ 716/882-8700, 🌐 www.albrightknox.org), two miles north of downtown amid the green spaces of the Frederick Law Olmsted–designed Delaware Park. Not a gallery at all, but a museum with one of the top modern collections in the world, it's especially strong on recent American and European art with Pollock, Rothko, Warhol, and Rauschenberg among the names. Other highlights are a Surrealism collection and pieces by earlier artists such as Matisse, Picasso, and Monet. There's also a chic restaurant, open for lunch Tuesday through Sunday and also for dinner on Friday.

The area around Delaware Park is Buffalo's choicest neighborhood; it features several homes designed by Frank Lloyd Wright, most notably the Darwin D. Martin House Complex ($12; tours only, reservations required; ☎ 716/947-9217, 🌐 www.darwinmartinhouse.org). Between here and downtown is Allentown, a National Historic District and Buffalo's most bohemian quarter. Its leafy streets are lined with lovely Victorian homes and numerous good cafés, bars, restaurants – as well as most of Buffalo's gay and lesbian venues. On the border of Allentown, the slightly more upscale Elmwood Avenue nonetheless has great food and shopping at prices that will seem low to many out-of-towners.

As a traditionally blue-collar city, Buffalo loves its professional sports teams: football's Bills (☎ 1-877/228-4257), ice hockey's Sabres (☎ 1-888/467-2273), and minor-league baseball's Bisons (☎ 1-888/223-6000), who, as the top farm team for the Cleveland Indians, attract huge crowds to downtown's pleasant ballpark.

West of Buffalo, the Lake Erie shoreline is lined by numerous beaches where windsurfers skim across the water and do flips in the waves, while the Miss Buffalo boat tours ($12.50; ☎ 716/856-6696, 🌐 www.missbuffalo.com), which leave from 79 Marine Drive next to the Naval and Servicemen's Park, provide a good view of the city skyline. Minutes from the grain elevators, the 264-acre Tifft Nature Preserve holds a fresh marsh, untamed urban wildlife, and five miles of trails. To the south, in the town of Orchard Park, the friendly, engaging Pedaling History Bicycle Museum (Mon–Sat 11am–5pm, Sun 1.30–5pm; $6; ☎ 716/662-3853, 🌐 www.pedalinghistory.com) holds over four hundred antique bikes and myriad pieces of cycling memorabilia.

Arrival and information

Greyhound, Metro Bus, and Metro Rail, the city's tramway (both Metros ☎ 716/855-7211, 🌐 www.nfta.com/metro), all operate from the downtown depot at Ellicott and Church streets. Several routes go to Niagara Falls (see p.154). Amtrak trains stop some six blocks away, at Exchange Street, as well as in the eastern suburb of Depew, eight miles from town but close to the airport (☎ 716/630-6020, 🌐 www.nfta.com/airport). There's a helpful visitor center at 617 Main St (Mon–Thurs 9am–5pm, Fri 9am–4pm, Sat 10am–2pm; ☎ 716/852-0511 or 1-800/283-3256, 🌐 www.visitbuffaloniagara.com), which suggests numerous themed driving tours and has plenty of other information.

Accommodation

Beau Fleuve 242 Linwood Ave ☎ 716/882-6116 or 1-800/278-0245, www.beaufleuve.com. Extremely comfortable, well-appointed B&B with great breakfasts. ⑤

Hampton Inn & Suites 220 Delaware Ave ☎ 716/855-2223, www.hamptoninnbuffalo.com. A safe bet in the heart of the nightlife district downtown, with free breakfasts. ④

HI-Buffalo Hostel 667 Main St ☎ 716/852-5222, www.hostelbuffalo.com. Very central hostel with beds for $20. Nothing special, but the cheapest option by far. ①

The Mansion on Delaware Avenue 414 Delaware Ave ☎ 716/886-3300, www.mansionondelaware.com. Centrally located luxury inn. ⑥

Roycroft Inn 40 S Grove St, East Aurora ☎ 716/652-5222 or 1-877/652-5552, www.roycroftinn.com. Immaculately refurbished inn located a half-hour drive east of Buffalo. The on-site restaurant serves tasty meals. ⑤

Eating, drinking, and nightlife

The heart of Buffalo's downtown centers on Chippewa and Main; plenty of restaurants are within easy reach and there's ample parking. For a quick snack, the cheap food stalls and tiny Polish cafés of ancient Broadway Market, 999 Broadway, are well worth perusing. The main nightlife drag, along Chippewa from Delaware Avenue to Main Street, has plenty of sports bars and nightclubs. The majority of theaters and venues that house the city's burgeoning arts scene are handily grouped nearby along Main between Chippewa and Tupper streets. For further information, pick up the free weekly Art Voice (www.artvoice.com), or the gay and lesbian Outcome (www.outcomebuffalo.com).

Anchor Bar 1047 Main St ☎ 716/886-8920, www.anchorbar.com. The city's specialty of buffalo (spicy chicken) wings with blue cheese and celery dressing is said to have been invented here.

Bacchus Wine Bar & Restaurant 54 W Chippewa St ☎ 716/854-9463. A good late-night bar and restaurant, with jazz, blues, folk, and world music.

Colter Bay 561 Delaware Ave, Allentown ☎ 716/882-1330. Western-themed restaurant with great, inexpensive lunches for a variety of tastes.

India Gate 1116 Elmwood Ave ☎ 716/886-4000. Good, inexpensive Indian restaurant with generous lunch buffet.

Nietzsche's 248 Allen St ☎ 716/886-8539, www.nietzsches.com. Bar with friendly staff and cheap drinks, hosting a wide variety of live acts seven days a week; there's room for dancing in the back.

Osake 235 Delaware Ave ☎ 716/842-6261. This casual café serves cheap sushi and noodles; not a place to linger, but good value.

Spot Coffee 227 Delaware Ave ☎ 716/856-BREW; 765 Elmwood Ave ☎ 716/332-LATTE, www.spotcoffee.com. Lively, happening neighborhood institution serving basic food and good drinks. The location on Elmwood is connected to New World Records, one of the best music stores in Buffalo.

Niagara Falls

Every second, almost three quarters of a million gallons of water explode over the knife-edge NIAGARA FALLS, right on the border with Canada some twenty miles north of Buffalo on I-190. This awesome spectacle is made even more impressive by the variety of methods laid on to help you get closer to it: boats, catwalks, observation towers, and helicopters all push as near to the curtains of gushing water as they dare. At night, the falls are lit up, and the colored waters tumble dramatically into blackness, while in winter the whole scene changes as the falls freeze to form gigantic razor-tipped icicles.

Some visitors will, no doubt, find the whole experience a bit too gimmicky; corporate big-hitters like the Hard Rock Café and various casinos on both sides have pushed the place closer to an aquatic Vegas, although the green fringes of the state park provide some bucolic getaways. Don't expect too much from the touristy small city of Niagara Falls, New York, or the more developed tinseltown of Niagara Falls, Ontario. Once you've seen the falls, from as many different angles as you can manage, and traced the Niagara Gorge, you'll have a better time heading back to Buffalo.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Amtrak trains, en route between New York City and Toronto, stop a long two miles from downtown Niagara Falls at 27th Street and Lockwood Road. Buses stop downtown at 303 Rainbow Boulevard, ten minutes' walk from the falls. Arriving by car, follow the signs to the main parking lot, which is right next to the falls and costs $6 – avoid being steered into privately owned, high-priced lots outside the park. Information is available at the Niagara Tourism & Convention Corporation, 345 3rd St (☎ 716/282-8992 ext 310 or 1-800/338-7890, @ www.visitbuffaloniagara.com) and from the Niagara Falls State Park Visitors Center (☎ 716/278-1796) near the falls. As for getting around, local Metro Transit System buses ($1.50 base fare, plus 25¢/zone; ☎ 716/285-9319, @ www.nfta.com) run to all areas of the city and to Buffalo (see p.152).

Accommodation

Places to stay in central Niagara can be quite expensive if you don't plan ahead, but huge competition keeps rates down overall. US-62 (Niagara Falls Blvd), east of I-190, is lined with dozens of inexpensive motels, some being rather tacky honeymoon spots. The closest place to camp is seven miles from downtown at Niagara Falls Campground & Lodging, 2405 Niagara Falls Blvd in Wheatfield (☎716/731-3434, 🌐www.nfcampground.com); campsites start at $24 a night for two people.

HI-Niagara Falls 1101 Ferry Ave ☎716/282-3700. Friendly, well-run hostel with dorm beds for $20–25. Preference is given to HI members and reservations are necessary in summer.

Holiday Inn Select 300 3rd St ☎716/285-3361 or 1-800/953-2557, 🌐www.hiselect.com/niagarafalls. Typical of the chain hotels that dominate downtown and overcharge at peak times. 4

Park Place B&B 740 Park Place ☎716/282-4626, 🌐www.parkplacebb.com. Comfortable spot

near downtown, with full breakfast and afternoon pastries. 4

Red Coach Inn 2 Buffalo Ave ☎716/282-1459, 🌐www.redcoach.com. Popular, well-appointed B&B with views of the falls. 5

Seneca Niagara Casino & Hotel 310 4th St ☎716/299-1100 or 1-877/873-6322. The town's newest luxury pad, whose interiors are about as garish as the flashy neon entrance. Rates vary considerably – look out for online promotions. 6

The Falls

Niagara Falls comprises three distinct cataracts. The tallest are the American and Bridal Veil falls on the American side, separated by tiny Luna Island and plunging over jagged rocks in a 180ft drop; the broad Horseshoe Falls which curve their way over to Canada are probably the most impressive. Together, they date back a mere twelve thousand years, when the retreat of melting glaciers allowed water trapped in Lake Erie to gush north to Lake Ontario. Back then the falls were seven miles downriver, but constant erosion has cut them back to their present site.

Getting around Niagara Falls State Park is easy, thanks to the convenient but twee Niagara Scenic Trolley ($1) which connects all parking lots and the major sightseeing points. The best views on the American side are from the Observation Tower (daily 10am–5pm; 50c), and from the area at its base where the water rushes past. In the middle of the river, Terrapin Point on Goat Island has similar views of Horseshoe Falls. Near here, the nineteenth-century tightrope-walker Blondin crossed the Niagara repeatedly, and even carried passengers across on his back. Other suicidal fools over the years have taken the plunge in barrels – or less (see box, opposite). The reason such craziness has long been banned becomes self-evident when you approach the towering cascade on the not-to-be-missed Maid of the Mist boat trip, which leaves from the foot of the observation tower (April–Oct daily 9.15am–7.30pm every 15 mins; $11.50, kids $6.75; ☎716/284-4233, 🌐www.maidofthemist.com). Another excellent way to see the falls is the Cave of the Winds tour (mid-May to late Oct daily 8am–10pm; $10; ☎716/278-1730), which leads from Goat Island by elevator down to the base of the falls. Bringing you to within almost touching distance of the water, the tour can provide a magical nighttime view, as it runs well into the evening. A “Passport to the Falls” for these and other attractions costs $24.50 for adults, or $17.50 for children at the Visitor Center.

Rainbow Air Inc helicopter tours, 454 Main St (9am–dusk; prices vary; ☎716/284-2800) are a more expensive proposition, somewhat less so the Flight of Angels helium balloon ascents, at 310 S Rainbow Blvd (every 15min 9am–midnight June–Sept, 9am–9pm May & Oct; $20, kids $10; ☎716/278-0824).

To check out the view from Niagara, Ontario, it's a twenty-minute walk across the Rainbow Bridge to the Canadian side (50¢ to Canada, free to US; bring ID and check with the US immigration officials before heading across), where you get an arguably better view, bigger crowds, and even more tawdry commercialism. Driving across is inadvisable: the toll for a car is just $2.50, but parking on the other side can cost more than $15.

As you look on in awe, reflect that you're seeing only about half the volume of water – the rest is diverted to hydroelectric power stations. The full story of this

Maniacs and miracles

Fifteen people have taken the plunge over Niagara's 170-foot Horseshoe Falls – and, remarkably, ten of them survived the fall. The first daredevil was 63-year-old Annie Taylor in 1901, who rode in a wooden barrel and suffered only minor bruises from her journey. Since then, thrillseekers have followed her lead, using everything from giant rubber balls to water tanks as craft. The last successful navigation of the falls was in 2003, by a man who claimed he was trying to commit suicide; after surviving the plunge, the man decided life was worth living. Those less lucky include Red Hill, killed in 1945 while using a vessel he called “The Thing,” built of little more than inner tubes and netting. Other deaths have been equally pointless: from a would-be stuntman in a kayak, who refused a helmet for fear it would obscure his face on film, to a jet-skier whose parachute, improperly packed, failed to open when he overshot the falls.

The most miraculous survival story, though, is that of Roger Woodward, a seven-year-old on a boat trip with his teenage sister in the upper Niagara River in the summer of 1960. When the boat developed motor trouble and capsized, they were thrown into the river. His sister was plucked from the water, but Roger and the captain, James Honeycutt, went over the falls wearing nothing but swimsuits and life preservers. Honeycutt was killed, but the boy surfaced near a tour boat at the base of the falls, bruised and concussed but alive, making him the only person ever to survive an unprotected trip over the falls.

engineering feat is related at the free Niagara Power Project Visitors Center in nearby Lewiston (daily 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 716/286-6661 🌐 www.nypa.gov/vc/nvcdir.htm). With your own transportation it's also possible to trace the inhospitable Niagara Gorge two miles along the dramatic Robert Moses Parkway to the Whirlpool Rapids, a violent maelstrom swollen by broken trees and other flotsam, and to hike down into striking Whirlpool State Park. Ten miles east of Niagara Falls, the town of Lockport takes its name from the series of locks that raise and lower boats some 65ft at the western end of the Erie Canal. You can see the impressive flight of locks from the Pine Street Bridge, or up close on canal boat cruises (May–Oct daily at 12.30pm & 3pm, also 10am on Sat; June–Aug additional daily tours at 10am & 5.30pm; $13.50; ☎ 1-800/378-0352, 🌐 www.lockportlocks.com).

Eating and drinking

Though most of the eating options in Niagara Falls are fast-food joints of indifferent quality, there are a few decent local bars and restaurants – with some better places over in Canada.

Como Restaurant 2200 Pine Ave ☎ 716/285-9341. A good, posh option with huge portions of Italian cuisine and a reasonably priced deli.

Hard Rock Café 333 Prospect St ☎ 716/282-0007. Although a bit clichéd and expensive, this branch of the rock-homage American-food chain restaurant has a lively, dependable bar.

The Orchard Grill 1217 Main St ☎ 716/282-8079. Large portions of all-American classics are served at this unpretentious spot.

Provenzo's 1300 Buffalo Ave ☎ 716/278-1264. Italian restaurant serving popular seafood and veal dishes, as well as meat, chicken, and pasta.

Sadar Sahib 431 Third Street ☎ 716/282-0444. Authentic and inexpensive curry house with an emphasis on Punjabi dishes.

Pennsylvania

2

THE MID-ATLANTIC | Philadelphia

PENNSYLVANIA, which but for a small stretch on Lake Erie is the only landlocked state in the Northeast, was explored by the Dutch in the early 1600s, settled by the Swedes forty years later, and claimed by the British in 1664. Charles II of England, who owed a debt to the Penn family, rid himself of the potentially troublesome young William Penn, an enthusiastic advocate of religious freedom, by granting him land in the colony in 1682. Penn Jr. immediately established a “holy experiment” of “brotherly love” and tolerance, naming the state for his father and setting a good example by signing a peaceful cohabitation treaty with the Native Americans. Most of the early agricultural settlers were religious refugees, Quakers like Penn himself and Mennonites from Germany and Switzerland, to be joined by Irish Catholics during the potato famines of the nineteenth century.

“The Keystone State” was crucial in the development of the United States. Politicians and thinkers like Benjamin Franklin congregated in Philadelphia – home of both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution – and were prominent in articulating the ideas behind the Revolution. Later, the battle in Gettysburg, in south Pennsylvania – best remembered for Abraham Lincoln’s immortal Gettysburg Address – marked a turning point in the Civil War. Pennsylvania was also vital industrially: Pittsburgh, in the west, was the world’s leading steel producer in the nineteenth century, and nearly all the nation’s anthracite coal is still mined here.

The two great urban centers of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, both lively and vibrant tourist destinations, are at opposite ends of the state. The three hundred miles between them, though predominantly agricultural, are topographically diverse. There are over one hundred state parks, with green rolling countryside in the east, brooding forests in the west, and in the northeast, the rivers, lakes, and valleys of the Poconos. Lancaster County, home to traditional Amish farmers, and the Gettysburg battlefield both heave with busloads of day-trippers, while the Hershey chocolate factory, minutes away from Harrisburg, the capital, draws thousands of sweet-toothed visitors each year.

Getting around Pennsylvania

If you organize your trip carefully, public transportation is adequate to navigate Pennsylvania – although it’s best to have a car. Both I-76 (the Pennsylvania Turnpike) and I-80 sweep all the way across to Ohio, nearly five hundred miles east to west. US-30 (the Lincoln Highway) also runs east–west between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, past Lancaster City, York, and Gettysburg. The prettiest north–south route is US-15, from Maryland to New York State, which follows the Susquehanna River for about fifty miles. Amtrak crosses daily from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, stopping at Lancaster City, Harrisburg, and other smaller towns. Greyhound covers all the major cities and some small towns not served by rail.

Philadelphia

The original capital of the nation, PHILADELPHIA was laid out by William Penn Jr. in 1682, on a grid system that was to provide the pattern for most American cities. It was envisaged as a “greene countrie towne,” and today, for all its historical and cultural significance, it still manages to retain a certain quaintness.

Just a few blocks away from the noise and crowds of downtown, shady cobbled alleys stand lined with red-brick colonial houses, while the peace and quiet of huge Fairmount Park make it easy to forget you're in a major metropolis.

Settled by Quakers, Philadelphia prospered swiftly on the back of trade and commerce, and by the 1750s had become the second largest city in the British Empire. Economic power fueled strong revolutionary feeling, and the city was the capital during the War of Independence (except for nine months under British occupation in 1777–1778) and the US capital until 1800, while Washington, DC, was being built. The Declaration of Independence was written, signed, and first publicly read here in 1776, as was the US Constitution ten years later. Philadelphia was also a hotbed of new ideas in the arts and sciences, as epitomized by the scientist, philosopher, statesman, inventor, and printer Benjamin Franklin.

Philadelphia, which translated from Greek means “City of Brotherly Love,” is in fact one of the most ethnically mixed US cities, with substantial communities of Italians, Irish, Eastern Europeans, and Asians living side-by-side among the large African-American population. Many of the city's black residents are descendants of the migrants who flocked here after the Civil War when, like Chicago, Philadelphia was seen as a place of tolerance and liberalism. A century later it voted in the nation's first black mayor, and erected the country's best museum of African-American history and culture. Philly also retains its Quaker heritage, with large “meetings” or congregations of The Society of Friends. On the downside, Philadelphia is also the place where in 1985, as part of a huge police effort to dislodge the black separatist group MOVE, a bomb dropped from a helicopter set fire to entire city blocks, killing men, women, and children, and leaving many hundreds homeless.

Once known as “Filthydelphia,” and the butt of endless derision in the 1930s by W.C. Fields, whose epitaph read: “On the whole, I'd rather be in Philadelphia”, the city underwent a remarkable resurgence preparing for the nation's bicentennial celebrations in 1976. Philadelphia's strength today is its great energy – fueled by history, strong cultural institutions, and grounded in its many staunchly traditional neighborhoods, especially Italian South Philadelphia.

Arrival and information

Philadelphia's International Airport (☎ 215/937-6800, 🌐 www.phl.org) is seven miles southwest of the city off I-95. Taxis into town cost around $30 (try Yellow Cab; ☎ 215/829-4222), and the South East Pennsylvania Transit Authority (SEPTA) runs trains from the airport every thirty minutes (4.30am–11.30pm; $5.50; see “City transportation,” opposite) to five downtown destinations: Eastwick Station, University City, 30th Street near the university, Suburban Station near City Hall, and Market East, adjacent to the Greyhound terminal at 11th and Filbert streets. The very grand 30th Street Amtrak station, one of the busiest in the US, is just across the Schuylkill River in the university area (free transfer downtown on SEPTA). SEPTA connects to NJ Transit, and between the two commuter rail systems you can travel to the Jersey shore, Princeton, suburban Pennsylvania, and New York City for a fraction of the price of Amtrak.

The excellent new Independence Visitor Center, at 6th and Market streets (daily: late June–Aug 8.30am–5pm; rest of year 8.30am–7pm; ☎ 215/965-7676 or 1-800/537-7676; 🌐 www.independencevisitorcenter.com), contains a staggering wealth of information, and should be the first stop on any downtown or Independence Hall National Park itinerary. It is also an outlet for the good-value Philadelphia Pass, which allows entry to over thirty city attractions (valid 1–5 days; $39–105; 🌐 www.philadelphiapass.com).

City transportation

SEPTA (☎ 215/580-7800, 🌐 www.septa.org) runs an extensive bus system and a subway. The most useful subway lines cross the city east–west (Market–Frankford line) and north–south (Broad Street line); the handiest bus route is #76, which runs from Penn’s Landing and the Independence Hall area out along Market Street past City Hall to the museums and Fairmount Park. Bus and subway services require exact fares of $2 (tokens, purchased in batches of two or more, cost only $1.30); day passes, also good for the airport, go for $5.50. Bright purple PHLASH buses run a handy downtown loop in summer (June–Sept daily 10am–8pm; $1, exact change required; day pass $4; seniors free; ☎ 215/474-5274, 🌐 www.phillyplash.com).

City tours

Philadelphia offers a wealth of tours focusing on a wide range of subjects. For general orientation, the Big Bus Company (☎ 215/389-8687, 🌐 www.phillytour.com; 24hr pass $27) runs a hop-on, hop-off tour aboard open-topped double deckers with commentary of the major sites. Poor Richard’s Walking Tours (☎ 215/206-1682, 🌐 www.phillywalks.com; prices vary) are run by University of Pennsylvania graduate students and are for serious history buffs. Philadelphia Neighborhood Tours lead three-hour excursions through different ethnic neighborhoods each week (May–Oct Sat 10am; $27; ☎ 215/389-8687, 🌐 www.gophila.com/neighborhoodtours), and the Mural Arts Program conducts two-hour trolley tours of the city’s extensive neighborhood murals (Apr–Oct Sat 11am; $20; ☎ 215/685-0750, 🌐 www.muralarts.org). Centipede Tours offer a variety of customized tours and regular candlelit walks through the hidden gardens and courtyards of Society Hill, complete with a costumed guide (hours and prices vary; ☎ 215/735-3123, 🌐 www.centipedeinc.com), while Ghosts of Philadelphia leads morbid historical tours every evening from next to Independence Hall (April–Nov, hours vary; $15, kids $8; ☎ 215/413-1997, 🌐 www.ghosttour.com).

Accommodation

Philadelphia’s luxury downtown hotels are prohibitively expensive, though on weekends there’s a chance of getting a reduced rate. Parking is expensive always. The visitor center is a great resource for accommodation discounts; B&Bs are a good option here, but usually need to be booked in advance.

Comfort Inn 100 N Columbus Blvd ☎ 215/627-7900, 🌐 www.comfortinn.com. High-rise hotel in a good location near Penn’s Landing; rates include continental breakfast. Cheaper rates are available online. 4

Crowne Plaza Philadelphia Center City 1800 Market St ☎ 215/561-7500 or 1-877/227-6963, 🌐 www.crowneplaza.com. One of the best downtown business-oriented hotels, with lush furnishings. A British-style pub is attached to the lobby. 8

Gaskill House B&B 312 Gaskill St ☎ 215/413-0669, 🌐 www.gaskillhouse.com. Luxury three-room B&B with full kitchen. Reservations required; discounts available for frequent and business travelers. 5 hostel wedged between Independence Hall National Park and Old City, with bunk beds from $20 and free tea and coffee. Closed 11am–4.30pm; curfew 12.30am weekdays, 1am Fri & Sat.

Hi-Bank Street Hostel 32 S Bank St ☎ 215/922-0222, 🌐 www.bankstreethostel.com. Friendly

Hi-Chamounix Mansion Philadelphia 3250 Chamounix Dr ☎ 215/878-3676 or 1-800/379-0017, 🌐 www.philahostel.org. Quaker country estate in gorgeous W Fairmount Park, but a fair trek from downtown (take bus #38 from Market St to Ford and Cranston, then walk 1 mile). Midnight curfew, closed 11am–4.30pm and mid-Dec to mid-Jan; beds from $20, kids $8. Free bikes.

 La Reserve Center City B&B 1804 Pine St ☎ 215/735-1137 or 215/735-0582, 🌐 www.centercitybed.com. Lovely rooms and excellent if not overly filling breakfast. The welcoming owner dispenses loads of information. 4

Penn's View Hotel Front & Market sts ☎215/922-7600 or 1-800/331-7634, 🌐www.pennsviewhotel.com. Exceptional service and clean, comfortable rooms in Old City, with a very fine wine bar next to the lobby. Continental breakfast included. 🍷

Shippen Way Inn 418 Bainbridge St ☎215/627-7266 or 1-800/245-4873, 🌐www.shippenway.com.

Nicely renovated, family-run B&B with nine cozy rooms a block from South St. 🍷

Thomas Bond House 129 S 2nd St ☎1-800/845-2663, 🌐www.winston-salem-inn.com/philadelphia. Twelve-room restored 1769 B&B near Independence Hall National Park. Slightly marred by an ugly parking lot at the rear. 🍷

The City

Central Philadelphia stretches for about two miles from the Schuylkill (pronounced “school-kill”) River on the west to the Delaware River on the east; the metropolitan area extends for many miles in all directions, but everything you’re likely to want to see is right in the central swath. The city’s central districts are compact, walkable, and readily accessible from each other; Penn’s sensibly planned grid system makes for easy sightseeing.

△ The Liberty Bell

Independence Hall National Park

Any tour of Philadelphia should start with Independence National Historic Park, or INHP (☎ 215/597-8974 or ☎ 215/965-2305, 🌐 www.nps.gov/inde), “America’s most historic square mile.” Though the park covers a mere four blocks just west of the Delaware River, between Walnut and Arch streets, it can take more than a day to explore in full. The solid redbrick buildings here, not all of which are open to the public, epitomize the Georgian (and after the Revolution, Federalist) obsession with balance and symmetry.

All INHP sites (unless otherwise specified) are open 365 days a year and admission is free; hours are usually 9am to 5pm, sometimes longer in summer. Free tours set off from the rear of the east wing of Independence Hall, the single most important site. Throughout the day, costumed actors perform patchy but informative skits in various locations across the site – pick up a free copy of The Gazette newsheet for listings and a useful map.

It’s best to reach Independence Hall early, to avoid the hordes of tourists and school parties. In peak season, free tickets must be obtained at the Independence Visitor Center. Built in 1732 as the Pennsylvania State House, this was where the Declaration of Independence was prepared, signed, and, after the pealing of the Liberty Bell, given its first public reading on July 8, 1776. Today, in the room in which Jefferson et al drafted and signed the United States Constitution, you can see George Washington’s high-backed chair with the half-sun on the back – Franklin, in optimistic spirit, called it “the rising sun.”

The Liberty Bell itself hung in Independence Hall from 1753, ringing to herald vital announcements such as victories and defeats in the Revolutionary War. Stories as to how it received its famous crack vary but one thing’s for sure; it rang publicly for the very last time on George Washington’s birthday in 1846. Later in the century, the bell’s inscription from Leviticus, advocating liberty “throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants,” made it an anti-slavery symbol for the New England abolitionists – the first to call it the Liberty Bell. After the Civil War, the silent bell was adopted as a symbol of reconciliation and embarked on a national rail tour. The well-traveled and somewhat lumpen icon now rests in a shrine-like space in the new multimedia Liberty Bell Center in INHP.

Next door to Independence Hall, on 6th and Chestnut streets, Congress Hall, built in 1787 as Philadelphia County Courthouse, is where members of the new United States Congress first took their places, and where all the patterns for today’s US government were established. The First Bank of the United States, at 3rd and Chestnut streets, was established in 1797 to formalize the new union’s currency – a vital task given that even Rhode Island, the smallest state, had, at the time, three different types of currency in use.

In 1774, delegates of the first Continental Congress – predecessor of the US Congress – chose defiantly to meet at Carpenter’s Hall, 320 Chestnut St, rather than the more commodious State House, to air their grievances against the English king. Today the building exhibits early tools and furniture (Tues–Sun 10am–4pm). Directly north, Franklin Court, 313 Market St, is a tribute, on the site of his home, to Benjamin Franklin. The house no longer stands, but steel frames outline the original structure. An underground museum has hilarious dial-a-quote recordings of his pithy sayings and the musings of his contemporaries, as well as a working printshop. The B Free Franklin Post Office, 316 Market St, sells stamps and includes a small postal museum.

Other buildings in the park include the original Free Quaker Meeting House, two blocks north of Market at 5th and Arch, built in 1783 by the small group of Quakers who actually fought in the Revolutionary War. There’s also the Philosophical Hall, 104 S 5th St, still used today by the nation’s first philosophical debating society, also founded by Franklin. Although most of the building is closed to the public, exhibitions such as “Stuffing Birds, Pressing Plants, Shaping Knowledge: Natural History in North America 1730–1860” (March–Sept Wed–Sun 10am–4pm; rest of year Thurs–Sun 10am–4pm; free) provide insights into the history of American science. The must-see National Constitution Center, 525 Arch St (Sun–Fri 9.30am–5pm, Sat 9.30am–6pm; $9; ☎ 1-866/917-1787 or ☎ 215/409-6600, www.constitutioncenter.org), a modern, interactive, and provocative museum dedicated to the nation’s best-known document, offers a wealth of information and a number of understated but delicious jabs at the current presidential administration.

Old City

INHP runs north into Old City, Philadelphia’s earliest commercial area, above Market Street near the riverfront. Washington, Franklin, and Betsy Ross all worshiped at Christ Church, on 2nd Street just north of Market. Dating from 1727, it is surrounded by the gravestones of signatories to the Declaration of Independence (tour times vary; ☎ 215/922-1695, www.christchurchphila.org). The church’s official burial ground, two blocks west at 5th and Arch, includes Benjamin Franklin’s grave. At 239 Arch St, the Betsy Ross House (April–Oct daily 10am–5pm; Nov–March Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; $3; ☎ 215/686-1252, www.betsyrosshouse.org), by means of unimpressive wax dummies, salutes the woman credited with making the first American flag. The story is probably apocryphal, as it wasn’t until the centennial celebrations in 1876 that a man claiming to be Ross’s grandson came forward to stake his grandmother’s claim. Inside the house, there’s a gift shop and shady garden, an oasis away from the busy streets outside.

The claim of Elfreth’s Alley – a pretty little cobbled way off 2nd Street between Arch and Race streets – to be the “oldest street in the United States” is somewhat dubious, though it has been in continuous residential use since 1727; its thirty houses, notable for their wrought-iron gates, water pumps, wooden shutters, and attic rooms, date from the eighteenth century. At no. 126 is the Mantua Maker’s Museum (March–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; Nov–Feb Thurs–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $2; ☎ 215/574-0560, www.elfrethsalley.org), where furniture was made for Philadelphia’s elite in the eighteenth century.

The area north of Market Street also holds two excellent museums: the National Museum of American Jewish History, 55 N 5th St (Mon–Thurs 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–3pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎ 215/923-3811, www.nmajh.org), which is dedicated to the experiences of Jews in the States and includes a synagogue and a Statue of Religious Liberty; and the emotive and politically informed African American Museum in Philadelphia, 7th and Arch streets (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8; ☎ 215/574-0380, aampmuseum.org). The latter tells the stories of the thousands of blacks who migrated north to Philadelphia after Reconstruction and in the early twentieth century. As well as lectures, films, and concerts, there are photos, personal memorabilia, poems by black poet Langston Hughes, and a piped-in Billie Holiday soundtrack. The Edgar Allan Poe National Historic Site, 532 N 7th St, just north of Spring Garden Street (Wed–Sun 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 215/597-8780, www.nps.gov/edal), is the only one of Poe’s five Philadelphia residences that survives but is sadly lacking in atmosphere; however, the staff in the small adjacent museum are extremely knowledgeable. If you’re keen on literary pilgrimages, you might also want to visit the grave of another key figure of American letters, Walt Whitman; he’s buried in the Harleigh Cemetery, on Haddon Avenue across the river in Camden, New Jersey (see below for ferry information). The Old City is also home to a number of art galleries, clustered around N 2nd and 3rd streets, and to September's annual Philadelphia Fringe Festival, a popular experimental theater series (☎ 215/413-9006, 🌐 www.pafringe.org).

Penn's Landing

Just east of Old City along the Delaware River, where William Penn stepped off in 1682, spreads the huge and heavily industrialized port of Philadelphia. Along the port's southern reaches, on the river side of the I-95 freeway, the old docklands have been renovated as part of the Penn's Landing development, which includes the Independence Seaport Museum (daily 10am–5pm; $9, free Sun 10am–noon; ☎ 215/925-5439, 🌐 www.phillyseaport.org) and a variety of historical ships, including the flagship USS Olympia and the World War II submarine Becuna (both daily 10am–5pm; $8), and the three-masted Portuguese Tall Ship Gazela, built in 1883 (hours vary; donation; 🌐 www.gazela.org). All along the riverfront promenade are food stalls, landscaped pools, and fountains, and regular outdoor concerts and festivals are held here.

The seasonal Riverlink ferry crosses the Delaware (May–Sept hourly 10am–6pm; $6 roundtrip; ☎ 215/925-5465, 🌐 www.riverlinkferry.org) to the down-at-heel town of Camden, where the main attraction is the Adventure Aquarium (daily 9.30am–5pm; $16.95; ☎ 856/365-3300, 🌐 www.adventureaquarium.com) – good for kids but otherwise eminently missable. A $29.95 River Pass covers the museum, ships, aquarium, and a roundtrip on the ferry.

Society Hill

Society Hill, an elegant residential area west of the Delaware and directly south of INHP, spreads between Walnut and Lombard streets. Though it is indeed Philadelphia's high society that lives here now, the area was named for its first inhabitants, the Free Society of Traders – a rather more fun-loving bunch than the strict Quakers who lived to the north. After falling into disrepair, the Hill itself was flattened in the early 1970s to provide a building site for I.M. Pei's twin skyscrapers, Society Hill Towers. Luckily, the rest of the neighborhood has been restored to form one of the city's most picturesque districts: cobbled gas-lit streets are lined with immaculately kept Colonial, Federal, and Georgian homes, often featuring the state's namesake keystones on their window frames, and markers everywhere point out the area's rich history. One of the few buildings open to the public is the Physick House, 321 S 4th St, home to Dr Philip Syng Physick, “the Father of American Surgery,” and filled with eighteenth- and nineteenth-century decorative arts (Thurs–Sat noon–5pm; $5; ☎ 215/925-7866, 🌐 www.philalandmarks.org).

Center City

Center City, Philadelphia's main business and commercial area, stretches from 8th Street west to the Schuylkill River, dominated by the endearing Baroque wedding cake of City Hall and its 37ft bronze statue of Penn. Before ascending thirty stories to the observation deck at Penn's feet, check out the quirky sculptures and carvings around the building, including the cats and mice at the south entrance.

A couple of blocks north at Broad and Cherry streets, the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $7; ☎ 215/972-7600, 🌐 www.pafa.org), housed in an elaborate, multicolored Victorian pile, exhibits three hundred years of American art, including works by Mary Cassatt, Thomas Eakins, and Winslow Homer.

Beginning at 8th Street, Chinatown, marked by the gorgeous 40ft Friendship Gate at 10th and Arch, has some of the best inexpensive food in the city. A block over on 12th Street is the century-old Reading Terminal Market (daily 9am–4pm; ☎ 215/922-2317, 🌐 www.readingterminalmarket.org), where many Amish farmers come to the city to sell their produce. It's always good for a lively time and makes a great lunch spot. Next door, the decade-old Convention Center helped usher in flashy hotels, coffeehouses, and restaurants, to replace the previously derelict shops and offices.

Rittenhouse Square

Grassy Rittenhouse Square, one of Penn's original city squares, is in a very fashionable part of town. On one side it borders chic Walnut Street, on the other a residential area of solid brownstones with beautifully carved doors and windows. The redbrick Rosenbach Museum, 2010 Delancey Place, holds over thirty thousand rare books, as well as James Joyce's original hand-scrawled manuscripts of Ulysses (Tues, Thurs, Fri–Sun 10am–5pm, Wed 10am–8pm; $8, including house tour; ☎ 215/732-1600, 🌐 www.rosenbach.org). On summer evenings there are free outdoor jazz and R&B concerts in the square.

Three blocks northwest from the square, the Mütter Museum, 19 S 22nd St in the College of Physicians (daily 10am–5pm; $12; ☎ 215/563-3737, 🌐 www.collphysphil.org), is not for the squeamish. Filled with weird pathological and medical oddities – including sickeningly lifelike wax models of tumors and skin infections, alongside closets full of skeletons, syphilitic skulls, pickled internal organs, and the death cast of a pair of Siamese twins – it's unique to say the least.

Museum Row

The mile-long Benjamin Franklin Parkway, known as Museum Row – or, less convincingly, as “America's Champs-Élysées” – sweeps northwest from City Hall to the colossal Museum of Art in Fairmount Park, an area of countryside annexed by the city in the nineteenth century. Spanning nine hundred scenic acres on both sides of the Schuylkill River, this is one of the world's largest landscaped city parks, with jogging, biking, and hiking trails, early American homes, an all-wars memorial to the state's black soldiers, and a zoo – the country's first – at 3400 W Girard Ave (Mar–Nov 9.30am–5pm; $16.95; Dec–Feb 9.30am–4pm; $12.95; ☎ 215/243-1100, 🌐 www.phillyzoo.org). In the late 1960s, local resident Joe Frazier and Muhammad Ali all but brought the city to a standstill with the announcement one afternoon that they were heading to Fairmount for an informal slug-out.

Sylvester Stallone later immortalized the steps of the Philadelphia Museum of Art, 26th St and Franklin Pkwy (Tues–Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–8.45pm; $12, Sun donation; ☎ 215/763-8100, 🌐 www.philamuseum.org), by running up them in the film Rocky, but he missed out on a real treat inside: one of the finest collections in the US, with a twelfth-century French cloister, Renaissance art, a complete Robert Adam interior from a 1765 house in London's Berkeley Square, Rubens tapestries, Pennsylvania Dutch crafts and Shaker furniture, a strong Impressionist collection, and the world's most extensive collection of the works of Marcel Duchamp. Exhibits are displayed in an easy-to-follow chronological order.

A few blocks away, at Franklin Parkway and 22nd Street, the exquisite Rodin Museum (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; $3 suggested donation; ☎ 215/763-8100, 🌐 www.rodinmuseum.org), marble-walled and set in a shady garden with a green pool, holds the largest collection of Rodin's Impressionistic sculptures and casts outside of Paris, including The Burghers of Calais, The Thinker, and The Gates of Hell. Among the rare books at the Free Library of Philadelphia, 19th and Vine streets (Mon–Thurs 9am–9pm, Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–5pm, tours at 11am; free; ☎ 215/686-5322, 🌐 www.library.phila.gov), are cuneiform tablets from 3000 BC, medieval manuscripts, first editions of Dickens and Poe, and such intriguing titles as the 1807 Inquiry into the Conduct of the Princess of Wales.

Over the road, in the vast Franklin Institute Science Museum, N 20th St and Benjamin Franklin Pkwy (daily 9.30am–5pm; $13.75; ☎215/448-1200, 🌐sln.fi.edu), are a Planetarium, the Tuttleman IMAX Theater ($9), and the Mandell Futures Center. A combination ticket ($18.75) covers general admission and a film. Continuing the educational theme, the nearby Academy of Natural Sciences exhibits dinosaurs, mummies, and gems (Mon–Fri 10am–4.30pm, Sat, Sun & holidays 10am–5pm; $10; ☎215/299-1000, 🌐www.acnatsci.org), while the Please Touch Museum, 210 N 21st St (daily 9am–4.30pm; $9.95; ☎215/963-0667, 🌐www.pleasetouchmuseum.org), is a hands-on adventureland aimed at youngsters.

Eastern State Penitentiary

One of Philadelphia's most significant historic sites stands, all but forgotten, just a short walk from the Fairmount Park museums. The Eastern State Penitentiary, whose gloomy Gothic fortifications fill an entire block of the residential neighborhood along Fairmount Ave at 22nd St, embodies an almost complete history of attitudes toward crime and punishment in the US. Since it opened in 1829, the Quaker-inspired prison's radical efforts to rehabilitate inmates via isolation, rather than use physical abuse and capital punishment, attracted curious social commentators from around the world; when Charles Dickens came to America in 1842, he wanted to see two things, this prison and Niagara Falls. Despite substantial changes over the years and gradual decay since it closed in 1970, the bulk of the Panopticon-style radial prison survives, and a restoration program was recently completed. Guided tours leave on the hour (daily 10am–5pm, last entry 4pm; $10; ☎215/236-3300, 🌐www.easternstate.org) and point out the prison's many novel architectural features, as well as its old synagogue, the cell where Al Capone cooled his heels, and the block where Tina Turner filmed a music video.

West Philadelphia

Across the Schuylkill River, West Philadelphia is home to the Ivy-League University of Pennsylvania, where Franklin established the country's first medical school. The compact but extremely pleasant campus blends into fairly gritty urban areas, but has some great museums: the small Institute of Contemporary Art, 118 S 36th St (Wed–Fri noon–8pm, Sat & Sun 11am–5pm; $6, free Sun 11am–1pm; ☎215/898-5911, 🌐www.icaphila.org), which displays cutting-edge traveling exhibitions in an airy space, complete with a very comfortable bean-bag chair lobby; and the intriguing Arthur Ross Gallery, 220 S 34th St (Tues–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎215/898-2083, 🌐www.upenn.edu/ARG), which features changing exhibits, particularly of international and innovative work, many of which have a strong emphasis on the use of color. The superlative Museum of Archeology and Anthropology, 33rd and Spruce streets (Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm; Sept–May also Sun 1–5pm; $8, free Sun; ☎215/898-4000, 🌐www.museum.upenn.edu), is the university's top draw. Regarded by experts as one of the world's finest science museums, its exhibits span all the continents and their major epochs – from Nigerian Benin bronzes to Chinese crystal balls. Most astonishing is the priceless twelve-ton granite Sphinx of Rameses II, c.1293–1185 BC, in the Lower Egyptian Gallery. The Meso-American and Greco-Roman Galleries also hold plenty of highlights.

South Philadelphia

Staunchly blue-collar South Philadelphia, center of Philadelphia's black community since the Civil War, is also home to many of the city's Italians; opera singer

Mario Lanza (who has his own museum at 712 Montrose St) and pop stars Fabian and Chubby Checker grew up here. It's also where to come for an authentic – and very messy – Philly cheesesteak (see “Eating,” below), and to rummage through the wonderful Italian Market (another Rocky location) which runs along 9th Street south from Christian Street. One of the last surviving urban markets in the US, the wooden market stalls that have stood here for generations are packed to overflowing with bric-a-brac, produce, secondhand Levis, live seafood, and, most famously, mozzarella.

South Street, the original boundary of the city, is now Philadelphia's main nightlife district, with dozens of cafés, bars, restaurants, and nightclubs lined up along the few blocks west from Front Street. During the day you can wander amongst the many good book, record, and clothing shops. At night, it makes for a lively, if highly commercial, evening out but beware, as it gets overwhelmingly crowded on summer weekends.

Eating

Eating out in Philadelphia is a real treat: the ubiquitous street stands sell soft pretzels with mustard for 50¢, Chinatown and the Italian Market are good for ethnic food, and Reading Terminal Market makes a bargain lunch stop in Center City. South Street has plenty of good, if well-touristed, eateries, while pricier, trendier restaurants cluster along S 2nd Street in the Old City. The South Philly cheesesteak, a sandwich of wafer-thin roast beef topped with melted cheese (aka Cheez Whiz), varies from place to place around town; some of the best are to be found around 9th and Passyunk in South Philadelphia (see Pat's, below). Bear in mind that a cheesesteak is hot, while a hoagie is not.

Amada 217 Chestnut St ☎ 215/625-2450. A dash of Spanish inspiration in Old City, with over 60 tapas dishes, great paella, and fine red or white sangria, all at reasonable prices.

Buddakan 325 Chestnut St ☎ 215/574-9440. Delicious pan-Asian fusion food and a family atmosphere make this a firm Philly favorite. Admire the 10ft gilded Buddha while dining.

City Tavern 138 S 2nd St ☎ 215/413-1443. Reconstructed 1773 tavern in INHP, familiar to the city's founders, and called by John Adams “the most genteel tavern in America.” Chef Walter Staib cooks and costumed staff serve “olde style” food (pasties, turkey rarebit) to a harpsichord accompaniment – dinner entrees are mostly $20 and up.

Delilah's Reading Terminal Market, 12th and Spruce sts ☎ 215/574-0929. Superb, extremely cheap soul food with scatty service. Oprah Winfrey nominated their mac and cheese as the best in the nation.

Ocean City 234-6 N 9th St ☎ 215/829-0688. Huge Chinatown space specialising in fresh seafood, which is on display in tanks; also excellent dim sum before 3pm.

 Pat's King of Steaks 1237 E Passyunk Ave ☎ 215/468-1546. At this delightfully decrepit, outdoor-seating-only cheesesteak joint, take care to order correctly (there's a sign to help “rookies”) or prepare yourself to be sent to the back of the line. The cheesesteaks here are the real deal. Open 24hr, 361 days a year.

Rangoon 112 N 9th St ☎ 215/829-8939. Friendly and intimate Burmese joint, serving an authentic selection of curries and rice and noodle dishes at around $10; try the cheap lunch specials.

San Carlo 214 South Street ☎ 215/592-9777. Excellent fresh pasta dishes, nice atmosphere, and attentive – if pushy – service at reasonable prices.

Serrano 20 S 2nd St ☎ 215/928-0770. Intimate Old City café serving creative international fusion cooking, with good fresh seafood. Try the appetizer tasting menu. Diners get preferential seating at the Tin Angel folk club upstairs (see opposite).

Sonoma 4411 Main St, Manayunk ☎ 215/483-9400. Pleasant, reasonably priced California-style Italian restaurant.

South Street Diner 140 South St ☎ 215/627-5258. Huge menu with Greek and Italian specialties from $6.95. Open daily 7am–3am.

Tre Scalini 1533 S 11th St ☎ 215/551-3870. A taste of traditional South Philly Italian, with reasonably priced dishes and a low-key atmosphere.

White Dog Café 3420 Sansom St ☎ 215/386-9224, @ www.whitedog.com. Delicious, creative food in three Victorian brownstones near the universities. Artsy, student crowd; lunch entrees $7–12; happy hour Sun–Thurs 10pm–midnight.

Drinking

The most popular place for bar-hopping is South Street and around 2nd Street in the Old City, although the Northern Liberties area, about eight blocks north, beyond the flyovers, is rapidly up-and-coming for trendy bars and clubs. Local brews are popular and inexpensive; try any ale by Yards or Yuengling if you prefer lager. Philly's growing number of cafés are spread around the city; South Street, 2nd Street, and Center City have the densest concentrations.

Dark Horse 421 S 2nd St ☎215/928-9307.

Unpretentious British-style boozier with a fine range of beer and the added bonus of soccer on TV for visitors from the old continent.

Dirty Frank's 347 S 13th St ☎215/732-5010.

Popular with a very mixed crowd, this Philly institution touts itself as "one of the few places in the world where you can drink a $2.50 pint of Yuengling underneath oil paintings by nationally recognized artists."

The Mean Bean Co. 1112 Locust St ☎215/925-2010. Coffeeshop serving a mixed gay and straight crowd, with outdoor seating next to the lovely Sartin St private community garden.

Skinner's Dry Goods 226 Market St ☎215/922-0522. Friendly Old City bar with decent ale, good music, and screens to keep an eye on important sports events.

Society Hill 301 Chestnut St ☎215/925-1919.

Swanky bar a stone's throw from the Bank Street Hostel. Live jazz piano music Tuesday evenings.

Sugar Mom's Church Street Lounge 225 Church St ☎215/925-8219. Popular basement bar where the jukebox ranges from Tony Bennett to Sonic Youth, with a dozen international beers on tap.

Tangier Café 1801 Lombard St ☎215/732-5006. Cozy, attractive local bar with inexpensive bottles of Yuengling, friendly bar staff, and a low-key atmosphere.

Woody's Bar and Restaurant 202 S 13th St ☎215/545-1893. Large, friendly downtown beer bar popular with Philly's gay community.

Nightlife and entertainment

Few reminders are left of the 1970s "Philly Sound". Instead, in recent times the city has produced the likes of pop starlet Pink, while its active underground scene features psych bands like Bardo Pond and The Asteroid #4. Philadelphia is also a good place to see rock bands, as most of the names that play New York come here too, and tickets are half the price or even less. The world-famous Philadelphia Orchestra performs at the grand new Kimmel Center for the Performing Arts (☎215/893-1999, ☞www.kimmelcenter.org). Philadelphia's other great strength is its theater scene, where small venues abound. Check the listings in the free City Paper or Philadelphia Weekly newspapers, or visit the Theatre Alliance website at ☞www.theatrealliance.org, which also features the StageTix discount ticket program. Discount offers to various events are also available on the GoPhila website at ☞www.gophila.com/events.

The Five Spot 5 South Bank St ☎215/574-0070, ☞www.thefivespot.com. Old City club with live acts upstairs and DJs spinning mostly hip-hop and electronica in the downstairs dancing space.

The Khyber 56 S 2nd St ☎215/238-5888, ☞www.thekhyber.com. Small rock venue with a gargyle-lined bar, bluesy jukebox, and casual young clientele. Cover around $8–10 when bands are on. A bar with no cover is upstairs.

Painted Bride Art Center 230 Vine St ☎215/925-9914, ☞www.paintedbride.org. Art gallery with live jazz, dance, and theater performances after dark.

Silk City Lounge 5th and Spring Garden sts ☎215/592-8838, ☞www.silkcitylounge.com.

Very mixed musical bag – funk, hip-hop, acid jazz, indie, dance, and soul – in this ultratrendy but unflashy Northern Liberties club. Local bands play on weekends.

Theater of Living Arts 334 South St ☎215/922-1011, ☞www.thetla.com. Converted movie palace that's the best place to catch rock bands.

Tin Angel 20 S 2nd St ☎215/928-0770, ☞www.tinangel.com. Intimate upstairs bar and coffee-house, featuring top local and nationally known folk and acoustic acts.

Trocadero 1003 Arch St ☎215/922-5483, ☞www.thetroc.com. Trendy downtown music venue, sometimes featuring big-name alternative bands. Cover varies, and ID is essential.

Zanzibar Blue 200 S Broad St in the Bellevue

Central Pennsylvania

Central Pennsylvania, cut north to south by the broad Susquehanna River, has no major cities – though the state capital, Harrisburg, is an excellent base from which to explore sights that include the Hershey chocolate empire and the rolling Amish farmlands of Lancaster County to the east, and the Civil War site of Gettysburg on the state's southern border. To the north, the mighty forests of the “Grand Canyon of Pennsylvania,” around Williamsport, reveal the legacy of its great nineteenth-century lumber wealth in mansion-lined streets. Johnstown, beyond the dramatic Allegheny Mountains in the west, and Scranton, whose dullness got it chosen as the setting for the US version of The Office, are industrial towns with little of interest for the casual visitor.

Lancaster County – Pennsylvania Dutch Country

Lancaster County, fifty miles west of Philadelphia, stretches for about 45 miles from Churchtown in the east to the Susquehanna River in the west. Although tiny, uncosmopolitan Lancaster City, ten miles east of the river, was US capital for a day in September 1777, the region is famed more for its preponderance of agricultural religious communities, known collectively as the Pennsylvania Dutch. They actually have no connection to the Netherlands; the name is a mistaken derivation of Deutsch (German).

An extremely touristy place even before it was brought to international fame by the movie Witness, Lancaster County has maintained its natural beauty in the face of encroaching commercialization. It is a region of gentle countryside and fertile farmlands, mule-drawn ploughs, tiny roadside bakeries crammed with jams and pies, Amish children wending on old-fashioned scooters between their flower-filled, immaculate farmhouses and one-room schoolhouses. Tragically, the innocence of this idyll was shattered on October 2, 2006, when a non-Amish gunman entered a schoolhouse in Nickel Mines and shot ten girls, killing half of them.

Indeed, attempting to live a simple life away from the pressures of the outside world has proved too much for many Pennsylvania Dutch. A few (mainly Mennonites) have succumbed to commercial need by offering rides in their buggies and meals in their homes. Members of the stricter orders in particular have moved away from the ceaseless intrusions of privacy – as well as soaring land prices – to less touristed Ohio, Indiana, Minnesota, and Iowa. When visiting, remember that Sunday is a day of rest for the Amish, so many attractions, restaurants, and other amenities will be closed.

Arrival and information

The best route through the concentrated Amish communities is US-30, which runs east–west. Amtrak arrives at the train station at 53 McGovern Ave, Lancaster City, as do buses from Capital Trailways (☎ 717/397-4861) and Greyhound. The bustling Pennsylvania Dutch Convention and Visitors Bureau, just off US-30 at 501 Greenfield Rd (daily 8.30am–5pm, longer hours in summer; ☎ 717/299-8901 or 1-800/PADUTCH, 🌐 www.padutchcountry.com), does an excellent job of providing orientation and advice on accommodation. Visitors keen to learn

The Pennsylvania Dutch

The people now known as the Pennsylvania Dutch originated as Anabaptists in sixteenth-century Switzerland, under the leadership of Menno Simons. His unorthodox advocacy of adult baptism and literal interpretation of the Bible led to the order's persecution; they were invited by William Penn to settle in Lancaster County in the 1720s. Today the twenty or so orders of Pennsylvania Dutch include the "plain" Old Order Amish (a strict order that originally broke away from Simons in 1693) and freer-living Mennonites, as well as the "fancy" Lutheran groups (distinguished by the colorful circular "hex" signs on their barns). Living by an unwritten set of rules called Amish Ordnung, which includes absolute pacifism, the Amish are the strictest and best-known: the men with their wide-brimmed straw hats and beards (but no "military" mustaches), the women in bonnets, plain dresses (with no fripperies like buttons), and aprons. Shunning electricity and any exposure to the corrupting influence of the outside world, the Amish power their farms with generators, and travel (at roughly ten miles per hour) in handmade horse-drawn buggies. For all their insularity, the Amish are very friendly and helpful; resist the temptation to photograph them, however, as the making of "graven images" offends their beliefs.

about Pennsylvania Dutch culture should head to the Mennonite Information Center (April–Oct Mon–Sat 8am–5pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 8.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 717/299-0954 or 1-800/858-8320, 🌐 www.mennoniteinfoctr.com), off US-30 at 2209 Millstream Rd, which shows a short film entitled Who Are the Amish? and also organizes lodging with Mennonite families. If you call at least two hours ahead, a guide can take you on a two-hour, $36 tour in your car.

Getting around and tours

Winding country lanes weave through Pennsylvania Dutch Country, passing small villages with eccentric-sounding names such as Intercourse (source of many droll postcards, but supposedly named for its location on the junction of two main roads). Although a car will get you to the quieter back roads that the tour buses miss, it's more fun to ride a bike. Only then can you feel the benefits of all that fresh air – and it shows more consideration for the horse-drawn buggies with which you share the road. For self-guided bike tours, contact Lancaster Bicycle Club in Lancaster City (🌐 www.lancasterbikeclub.org).

The Amish Experience, on US-30 at Plain & Fancy Farm (☎ 717/768-3600 ext 210, 🌐 www.amishexperience.com), runs two-hour farmlands tours (Mon–Sat 10.30am & 2pm, Sun 11.30am only) for $25.95, though some accommodations (see the Village Inn, below) offer a similar service for free. AAA Buggy Rides offer lolling three-mile countryside excursions for $10 (☎ 717/989-2829) from the Red Caboose Inn in Paradise and Kitchen Kettle Village in Intercourse.

Accommodation

Accommodation options in Pennsylvania Dutch Country range from reasonably priced hotels and B&Bs, which can be arranged through a central agency (☎ 1-800/552-2632, 🌐 www.authenticbandb.com), to farm vacations (ask at the Pennsylvania Dutch Visitors Bureau; see opposite) to campgrounds. White Oak Campground, 372 White Oak Rd, Quarryville, four miles north of Strasburg (☎ 717/687-6207, 🌐 www.whiteoakcampground.com; sites from $22), overlooks the heart of the Dutch farmlands.

Cameron Estate Inn & Restaurant 1855
Mansion Lane, Mount Joy ☎ 717/492-0111 or

☎ 1-800/422-6376, 🌐 www.cameronestateinn.com. Out-of-the-way gay-friendly inn on fifteen acres with sparkling, comfortable rooms (one with Jacuzzi), free full breakfast and a restaurant. ⑤

Countryside Motel 134 Hartman Bridge Rd
 ⑦17/687-8431. Clean and simple place six miles east of Lancaster City on Hwy-896. ③
Netherlands Inn & Spa Rte-896, Strasburg
 ⑦17/687-7691 or 1-800/872-0201, ⑩www.netherlandsinn.com. One hundred luxury rooms and a spa tucked away on sixty rolling acres. ⑥
O'Flaherty's Dingeldein House 1105 E King St, Lancaster City ⑦17/293-1723 or 1-800/779-

7765, ⑩www.dingeldeinhouse.com. Friendly seven-room B&B. Rates include a large country breakfast. ④

Village Inn 2695 Old Philadelphia Pike, Bird-in-Hand ⑦1-800/665-8780, ⑩www.bird-in-hand.com/villageinn. Excellent old inn with modern amenities, large breakfast, deck, lawn, and back pasture. Price includes 2hr tour of Amish Country and use of the adjacent motel's pool. Book ahead. ⑤

Touring Pennsylvania Dutch Country

Though useful for a general overview and historical insight, the attractions that interpret Amish culture tend toward overkill. It's far more satisfying just to explore the countryside for yourself. Here, among the streams with their covered bridges and fields striped with corn, alfalfa, and tobacco, the reality hits you – these aren't actors recreating an ancient lifestyle, but real people, part of a living, working community. There's no guarantee as to what you'll see: on Sunday, for example, there are no quilt sales or bake shops, and the farmers don't work the fields, but there may well be a large gathering of buggies outside one of the farms, indicating an Amish church service (in High German) or a "visiting day," when families gather socially. Church services and visiting days take place on alternating Sundays; visits sometimes occur during the week as well.

Among the widely spread formal attractions, the Ephrata Cloister, 632 W Main St, Ephrata (on US-272 and 322), recreates the eighteenth-century settlement of German Protestant celibates that acted, amongst other things, as an early publishing and printing center (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, Jan & Feb closed Mon; $7; ⑦17/733-6600, ⑩www.ephratacloister.org). Further south, about three miles northeast of Lancaster City, the Landis Valley Museum, 2451 Kissell Hill Rd (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $9; ⑦17/569-0401, ⑩www.landisvalleymuseum.org), is a living history museum of rural life, with demonstrations of local crafts.

In Lancaster City itself, a stolid redbrick town with tree-lined avenues, the Lancaster Cultural History Museum, in Penn Square (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ⑦17/299-6440, ⑩www.lancasterheritage.com), exhibits Lancaster master crafts, including wagons and rifles, ancient Amish calligraphy known as fraktur, clocks, wooden toys, weathervanes, and quilts. At Strasburg, a mixture of tourist kitsch and historical authenticity southeast of Lancaster City on US-896, the Strasburg Railroad gives 45-minute roundtrip rides in original steam trains through patchwork farmland to Paradise (daily, hours vary; from $12, kids $7; ⑦17/687-7522, ⑩www.strasburgrailroad.com). Disappointingly, Paradise holds no heavenly delights, but there are some good views on the way and the train makes regular picnic stops. The oldest building in the county, the Hans Herr House, 1849 Hans Herr Drive, five miles south of downtown Lancaster City off US-222 (April–Nov Mon–Sat 9am–4pm; $5; ⑦17/464-4438, ⑩www.hansherr.org), is a 1719 Mennonite church with a pretty garden and orchard, a medieval German facade, and exhibits on early farm life.

Eating, drinking, and entertainment

Lancaster County food is delicious, Germanic, and served in vast quantities. There are no Amish-owned restaurants, but Amish roadside stalls sell fresh homemade root beer, jams, pickles, breads, and pies. The huge "all-you-care-to-eat" tourist restaurants on US-30 and US-340 may look off-putting, all pseudo-rusticism with costumed waitresses, but most serve good meals, for around $15, "family-style” – you share long tables and mountains of fried chicken, sauerkraut, noodles, pickles, cottage cheese and apple butter, corn, hickory-smoked ham, schnitz and knepp (apple, ham, and dumpling stew), shoo-fly pie and the like with crowds of other out-of-towners. None stays open later than 8pm. A few other restaurants, particularly diners in busy areas, are open later at night. Rural Lancaster County is, unsurprisingly, not known for its nightlife – though there are a couple of very friendly bars in downtown Lancaster City worth checking out. The Fulton Opera House, 12 N Prince St (☎ 717/394-7133, 🌐 www.fultontheatre.org), is a plush red-and-gold restored Victorian theater, hosting dance, plays, and special events.

Central Market Penn Square, Lancaster City. Covered market selling fresh local farm produce and lunch to loyal Lancasterians and tourists alike. Tues & Fri 6am–4pm, Sat 6am–2pm.

Good 'n' Plenty East Brook Rd, US-896, Smoke-town ☎ 717/394-7111. Not Amish-owned, though Amish women cook and serve food in this, the best of the family-style restaurants. Open early Feb to mid-Dec Mon–Sat.

Lancaster Brewing Co. 302 N Plum St, Lancaster City ☎ 717/391-6258, 🌐 www.lancasterbrewing.com. Brewpub serving good bar food and five different microbrews. Tours given Fri & Sat by appointment. Open on Sun.

Lancaster Dispensing Co. 33-35 N Market St, Lancaster City ☎ 717/299-4602. Downtown Lancaster's trendiest, friendliest bar, with live weekend jazz and blues, plus overstuffed sandwiches for around $6.

Lapp's 2270 Lincoln Hwy E (US-30), near Lancaster City ☎ 717/394-1606. A solid diner with the family atmosphere and ample Germanic food typical of Lancaster County, open daily.

Molly's Pub 253 E Chestnut St, Lancaster City ☎ 717/396-0225. Neighborhood bar with lively atmosphere and good burgers. Closed Sun.

Plain and Fancy 3121 Old Philadelphia Pike (Rte-340), Bird-in-Hand ☎ 717/768-4400. Standard family-style restaurant; only one in the area open on Sundays.

Harrisburg and Hershey

HARRISBURG, Pennsylvania's capital, lies on the Susquehanna River thirty or so miles northwest of Lancaster City. It's a surprisingly attractive small city, its lush waterfront lined with shuttered colonial buildings, and is well-complemented by its kitschy Chocolatetown neighbor Hershey. Harrisburg is also known as the site of the Three Mile Island nuclear facility, which suffered a famous meltdown in the 1970s and stands along the river on the east side of town.

The ornate, attractive Italian Renaissance capitol at Third and State streets has a dome modeled after St Peter's in Rome (tours Mon–Fri 8.30am–4pm; Sat, Sun & holidays at 9am, 11am, 1pm & 3pm; free; ☎ 1-800/868-7672). The complex includes the archeological and military artifacts, decorative arts, tools and machinery exhibited in the four-floor State Museum of Pennsylvania, a cylindrical building that holds a planetarium, at Third and North (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎ 717/787-4980, 🌐 www.statemuseumpa.org). But undoubtedly the real attraction here is the excellent National Civil War Museum, roughly two miles east of downtown at the summit of hilly Reservoir Park (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8; ☎ 717/260-1861 or 1-866/258-4729, 🌐 www.nationalcivilwarmuseum.org). Almost 730,000 Americans were killed in the Civil War – more than in all other conflicts since the Revolution combined – and the museum offers an intelligent analysis of the reasons for, and results of, the war. Especially evocative are the fictionalized monologues, playing on video screens in every gallery, which focus on the human cost of the conflict. There's also a good terrace café with great views across the city.

One of the best ways to spend a Harrisburg afternoon is to stroll along the gorgeous east bank of the Susquehanna, then cross the river along the Walnut Street footbridge and walk through City Island, a waterfront development with vast facilities, including a kite-flying area, a tourist railroad, a family-filled concrete beach, and paddlewheeler rides (May–Aug, groups Sept–Oct; rides $5; ☎ 717/234-6500).

HERSHEY, ten miles east, was built in 1903 by candy magnate Milton S. Hershey for his chocolate factory – so it has streets named Chocolate and Cocoa avenues and streetlamps in the shape of Hershey’s Chocolate Kisses. Hershey’s Chocolate World (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; longer hours in summer; ☎ 717/534-4900, 🌐 www.hersheyschocolateworld.com) offers a free mini-train ride through a romanticized simulated chocolate factory, a 3-D chocolate show ($5.95), and a cheesy musical/historical trolley ride around town ($10.75). Those not content with the free samples given out at various points on the rides can gorge themselves in the vast gift shops and cafés.

Hersheypark, which began in 1907 as a picnic ground for Hershey factory workers, is now a hugely popular amusement park, with stomach-churning roller coasters and various other rides (mid-May to Sept, hours vary; $43.95; ☎ 717/534-3090 or 1-800/437-7439). Cheaper special events take place for Halloween and Christmas. The adjacent Hershey Museum (June–Aug daily 10am–6pm; Sept–May daily 10am–5pm; $7; ☎ 717/534-3439, 🌐 www.hersheymuseum.org) has exhibits on the Pennsylvania Dutch and tells the Milton S. Hershey story.

Thirty-five miles south of Hershey, via Harrisburg, the blue-collar town of York is home to the largest assembly plant of motorcycle legend Harley-Davidson. The company has a visitor center with exhibitions and runs free hour-long tours from the Vaughn L Beals Tour Center (Mon–Fri factory tours 9am–2pm, tour center 8am–4pm; ☎ 1-877/883-1450); closed-toed shoes are required.

Practicalities

Amtrak trains share the central station at Fourth and Chestnut streets with Greyhound, whose buses also stop in Hershey at 337 W Chocolate St. Harrisburg’s visitor center (☎ 717/231-7788, 🌐 www.visitthhc.com) is not open to walk-ins, but can be contacted for good local and regional information.

In leafy Camp Hill, just across the river from Harrisburg, the Radisson Penn Harris (☎ 717/763-7117, 🌐 www.radisson.com; 4) has good-value rooms in relaxing surroundings. Options in Hershey include the standard Spinners Inn, 845 E Chocolate Ave (☎ 717/533-9157, 🌐 www.spinnersinn.com; 3), which has a very good restaurant, and the standard Chocolatetown Motel, a mile further on at no. 1806 (☎ 717/533-2330, 🌐 www.chocolatetownmotel.com; 3). Upscale lodging is available at the palatial Hotel Hershey, Hotel Road (☎ 717/533-2171, 🌐 www.hotelhershey.com; 3), complete with an onsite spa offering chocolate-based beauty treatments. Weekend spa appointments must be made far in advance. The best campsite in the region is Hershey Highmeadow Campground, 1200 Matlack Rd, Hummelstown, on the Harrisburg side of Hershey (☎ 717/534-8999 or 1-800/437-7439, 🌐 www.hersheycamping.com), which has sites from around $25 off-season to $35 in summer.

Budget restaurants line Second Street in downtown Harrisburg, the best being Fisaga’s, at Locust and N Second streets (☎ 717/441-1556), which serves good basic sandwiches and pasta. Scott’s, 212 Locust St (☎ 717/234-7599), is a popular bar and grill, with live music some nights.

Gettysburg

The small town of GETTYSBURG, thirty miles south of Harrisburg near the Maryland border, gained tragic notoriety in July 1863 for the cataclysmic Civil War battle in which fifty thousand men died. There were more casualties during these three days than in any American battle before or since – a full third of those who fought were killed or wounded – and entire regiments were wiped out when the tide finally turned against the South.

Four months later, on November 19, Abraham Lincoln delivered his Gettysburg Address at the dedication of the National Cemetery. His two-minute speech, in memory of all the soldiers who died, is acknowledged as one of the most powerful orations in American history, though Lincoln himself opened with the words “the world will little note nor long remember what we say here . . .”; on the contrary, you’ll be muttering it in your sleep by the time you leave.

Gettysburg, by far the most baldly commercialized of all the Civil War sites, is overwhelmingly geared toward tourism, relentlessly replaying the most minute details of the battle. Fortunately, it is perfectly feasible to avoid the crowds and commercial overkill and explore for yourself the rolling hills of the battlefield (now a national park) and the tidy town streets with their shuttered historic houses.

Information and getting around

Gettysburg Travel Council, 102 Carlisle St (daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎717/334-6274, 🌐www.gettysburg.travel), is housed next door to the tiny historic train depot where Lincoln disembarked in November 1863 and should be the first stop on any visit. Though the town is compact and easy to walk around, there is no public transportation, and a car helps when touring the huge battlefield. Two-hour double decker Battlefield Bus Tours, running through the town and making numerous stops, depart from 778 Baltimore St (up to 8 tours daily; $19.95 for audio, $23.95 for live guide; ☎717/334-6296, 🌐www.gettysburgbattlefieldtours.com).

Accommodation

There is plenty of lodging in and around Gettysburg, including many B&Bs. The most central place to camp is at Artillery Ridge Resort, 610 Taneytown Rd (☎717/334-1288, 🌐www.artilleryridge.com; sites from $29.50; open April–Oct).

Baladerry Inn 40 Hospital Rd ☎717/337-1342, 🌐www.baladerryinn.com. Historic hospital turned B&B, with nine en suite rooms. 6

 Doubleday Inn 104 Doubleday Ave ☎717/334-9119, 🌐www.doubledayinn.com. A memorabilia-packed luxury B&B, and the only one within the battlefield itself. 5

Gettysburg Travelodge 613 Baltimore St ☎717/334-9281, 🌐www.travelodge.com. Standard motel between downtown and the battlefield. 4

Hi-Gardners 1212 Pine Grove Rd, Gardners ☎717/486-7575, 🌐www.hiayh.org. Located on the Appalachian Trail in remote Pine Grove Furnace State Park, over 20 miles away. Busiest during ski season. Beds from $15.

Historic Farnsworth House Inn 401 Baltimore St ☎717/334-8838, 🌐www.farnsworthhouseinn.com. An 1810 townhouse, used as Union HQ in the war and still riddled with bullet holes. Includes 10 rooms, a tavern, and a theater. 5

The Town

For a sense of Gettysburg’s history, you should check out just a couple of the numerous museums in town, and follow the Travel Council’s fourteen-block downtown walking tour. The American Civil War Museum, 297 Steinwehr Ave (Jan & Feb Sat, Sun & holidays; March–Dec daily; $5.50; ☎717/334-6245), uses dreadful dummies in its displays on the lead-up to the Civil War, the Underground Railroad for escaped slaves, abolitionist John Brown, and the famous Southern belle spies Rose Greenhow and Belle Boyd. Across the National Cemetery in the battlefield, there are yet more mannequins in the Hall of Presidents and First Ladies, 504 Baltimore St (daily: June–Aug 9am–9pm; Sept 9am–7pm; Oct, Nov & March–May 9am–5pm; $6.95; ☎717/334-5717), complete with pearls of presidential wisdom and stirring patriotic music.

Next to the Gettysburg Tour Center, on Baltimore Street, the Jennie Wade House (same hours and price as Hall of Presidents; ☎717/334-4100) is the former home of the only civilian to die in the battle; Wade was killed by a stray bullet as she made bread for the Union troops in her sister's kitchen. Today, the residence looks more or less as it did on July 3, 1863, with bullet holes in the front door and on the bedpost, an artillery shell hole ripped through a wall, and a macabre model of Jennie's corpse lying under a sheet in the cellar.

To the west of the park, President Eisenhower, who retired to Gettysburg, is commemorated at the Eisenhower National Historic Site (daily 9am–4pm; $5.50; ☎717/338-9114, 🌐www.nps.gov/eise), where his Georgian-style mansion holds an array of memorabilia. The site is accessible only on shuttle-bus tours from the National Park Visitor Center (see below).

The battleground

It takes most of a day to see the 3500-acre Gettysburg National Military Park, which surrounds the town (daily 6am–10pm; free; 🌐www.nps.gov/gett). The visitor center, due to move in 2007 from Taneytown Road to nearby Baltimore St, a mile south of downtown (daily: summer 8am–6pm, rest of year 8am–5pm; ☎717/334-1124) doubles as the best museum, with guns, uniforms, surgical and musical instruments, tents and flags, as well as touching photos of the 1938 Joint Soldiers Reunion. The new premises will contain the exhibits currently in the Cyclorama Center, including a 356ft circular painting of Pickett's Charge, the suicidal Confederate thrust across open wheatfields in broad daylight; this is accompanied by a recitation of the Gettysburg Address, the earliest existing draft of which is on display here. A thirty-minute, painstakingly thorough electric map show ($3) plots the intricacies of the Gettysburg battle and you can pick up details of a self-guided driving route, or a guide will join you in your car for a personalized two-hour tour ($45). The guides are available on a first-come, first-served basis, so arrive early if you want one.

Not far from the visitor center, the Gettysburg National Cemetery contains thousands of graves arranged in a semicircle around the Soldiers' National Monument, on the site where Lincoln gave the Gettysburg Address. Most stirring of all are the hundreds of small marble gravestones marked only with numbers. A short walk away, the battlegrounds themselves, golden fields reminiscent of an English country landscape, are peaceful now except for their names: Valley of Death, Bloody Run, Cemetery Hill. Uncanny statues of key figures stand at appropriate points, while heavy stone monuments honor different regiments.

Eating and entertainment

Evenings in Gettysburg tend to be quiet once the tour buses have gone home. However, there are some good restaurants, many in historically important buildings.

Blue Parrot Bistro 35 Chambersburg St
☎717/337-3739. Pasta and steaks with a good choice of sauces. Like most restaurants in town, things wind down soon after 8.30pm.

Dobbin House Tavern 89 Steinwehr Ave
☎717/334-2100. The oldest house in the city, dating from 1776 and once a hideout for former slaves on the Underground Railroad. Lunch from around $10; candlelit dinners are more expensive.

Food veers between Pennsylvania Dutch, early American, and contemporary.

Gettysbrew Restaurant & Brewery 248 Hunterstown Rd ☎717/337-1001. Also a pub and historic site. Brews five beers, plus its own root beer and soda.

Mayflowers 533 Steinwehr Ave ☎717/337-3377. Huge modern Chinese restaurant that does a high-quality evening buffet for $9.99 and à la carte sushi.

Western Pennsylvania

Western Pennsylvania, a key point for frontier trade and an important thoroughfare to the West, was the focus of the fighting between the English and the French in the seven-year French and Indian War for Colonial and maritime power (1756–1763). This region grew to industrial prominence in the nineteenth century, with the exploitation of its coal resources gathering pace after the Civil War, and the opening of the world's first oil well at Titusville (now Drake Well Memorial Park) in northwestern Pennsylvania in 1859.

Today, tourism in western Pennsylvania is concentrated around the surprisingly appealing city of Pittsburgh. To the south of the city, the Laurel Highlands features Frank Lloyd Wright's not-to-be-missed architectural masterpiece, Fallingwater, as well as nearby Ohioyle State Park and the Youghiogheny River, which offer plenty of outdoor activities. In the overwhelming rural northwest corner of the state, another great wilderness area to explore is the lush Allegheny National Forest, which begins twenty miles north of I-80. The region's only major conurbation, Erie, is located on the eponymous great lake. Presque Isle State Park is also worth a visit for its sandy lake beaches and wooded hiking trails.

Pittsburgh

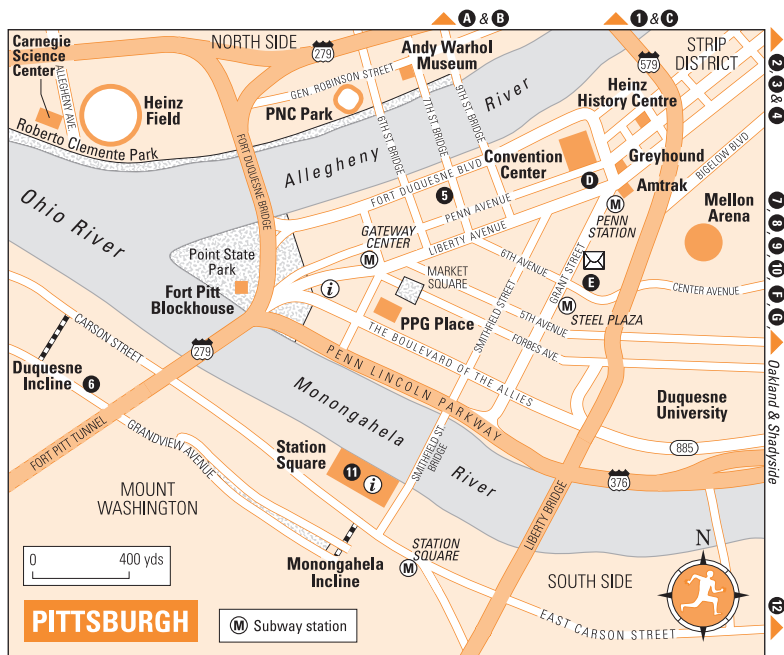

The appealing ten-block district known as the Golden Triangle, at the heart of downtown PITTSBURGH, stands at the confluence of the Monongahela, Allegheny, and Ohio rivers; this area was once bitterly fought over as the gateway to the West. The French built Fort Duquesne on the site in 1754, only for it to be destroyed four years later by the British, who replaced it with Fort Pitt. Industry began with the development of iron foundries in the early 1800s, and by the time of the Civil War, Pittsburgh was producing half of the iron and one third of the glass in the US. Soon after, the city became the world's leading producer of steel, thanks to the vigorous expansion programs of Andrew Carnegie, who by 1870 was the richest man in the world. Present-day Pittsburgh is dotted with his cultural bequests, along with those of other wealthy forefathers, including the Mellon bankers, the Frick coal merchants, and the Heinz food producers.

The city has gradually ditched its Victorian reputation for dirt and pollution since its transformation began in the 1960s. The face-lift involved large-scale demolition of abandoned steel mills, which freed up much of the downtown waterfront. That said, all-out sanitization has been kept in check by the student population, the small-town feel of the older ethnic neighborhoods to the north and south, and the effects of economic downturn. Pittsburgh today is one of America's most attractive and most liveable cities, where sleek architecture and green parks have supplanted smokestacks and slums. Indeed, since the mid-1990s, and the opening of the popular Andy Warhol Museum, Pittsburgh has established itself as a destination to be reckoned with.

Each of Pittsburgh's close-knit neighborhoods – the South Side and Mount Washington, across the Monongahela River from the Golden Triangle, the North Side across the Allegheny River, and the East End, especially Oakland, the university area in the east – has an individual feel and attests in its own way to the city's history and its resurgence.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Greyhound pulls in beside the Monongahela River at 990 2nd Ave, a good fifteen-minute walk from downtown, whereas the Amtrak station is far more central, at

ACCOMMODATION

Appletree Bed & Breakfast
 Doubletree Hotel Pittsburgh City Center
 Hampton Inn University Center
 The Inn on the Mexican War Streets
 The Priory-A City Inn
 Valley Motel
 The Westin Convention Center Pittsburgh

F
 E
 G
 B A
 C
 D

RESTAURANTS

The Church Brew Works	4	La Feria	8
Grand Concourse	11	Mallorca	12
Grandview Saloon	6	Penn Brewery	1
Gullity's	7	Seventh Street Grille	5
India Garden	9	Thai Gourmet	3
Kaya	2	Yumwok/Lulu's Noodles	10

1100 Liberty Ave. From the modern, efficient Pittsburgh International Airport, fifteen miles west (☎ 412/472-3525, 🌐 www.pitairport.com), several shuttle services run to Pittsburgh. Almost as quick, more frequent, and significantly cheaper, the excellent PAT bus #2⁸ runs roughly every 20mins between the airport and twelve Pittsburgh stops, including downtown, Oakland, and the universities (daily 5am–midnight; $2.25).

Pittsburgh's main Welcome Center is downtown on Liberty Avenue, adjacent to the Gateway Center (Mon–Fri 8am–4pm, Sat 9am–5pm & Sun 10am–3pm; ☎ 412/281-7711 or 1-800/366-0093, 🌐 www.visitpittsburgh.com), with subsidiary branches at the airport and at the Senator John Heinz Pittsburgh Regional History Center. The main post office is at Seventh and Grant (Mon–Fri 7am–6pm, Sat 8am–2.30pm).

Though Pittsburgh is a city of distinct districts, transportation between them is simple. Buses through town (free–$2.75), the Monongahela and Duquesne Heights trolley inclines ($1.75), and a small “T” subway system (free downtown; further out the fare runs up to $3.25 at rush hour) are all excellent transportation options; PAT, the area transit authority (☎ 412/442-2000, 🌐 www.portauthority.org), has a downtown service center at 534 Smithfield St (Mon–Thurs 7.30am–5.30pm, Fri 7.30am–5pm), where you can pick up timetables. Fifty-cent transfers, which must be bought simultaneously with your fare if needed, allow you to connect with any of the system's vehicles within three hours. For taxis, call Yellow Cab (☎ 412/665-8100).

Accommodation

Pittsburgh's hotels and few B&Bs are generally pricey, although weekend packages at luxury downtown hotels can bring rates down to below $100. Oakland has a couple of reasonably priced business hotels, and you can check out all of the Pittsburgh area's B&Bs at ☞ www.pittsburghbnb.com.

Appletree Bed & Breakfast 703 S Negley Ave ☎ 412/661-0631, ☞ www.theinnsonnegley.com. Friendly, upmarket establishment with 16 rooms and suites, several with Jacuzzi, in Shadyside. A sister establishment, The Inn at 714 Negley, is opposite. 6

Doubletree Hotel Pittsburgh City Center One Bigelow Square ☎ 412/281-5800, 1-800/225-5858, ☞ www.doubletree.hilton.com. Convenient downtown chain hotel offering suites with kitchens. 7

Hampton Inn University Center 3315 Hamlet St ☎ 412/681-1000 or 1-800/426-7866, ☞ www.hamptoninn.com. Welcoming branch of chain in Oakland offering a generous self-service continental breakfast bar, plus free shuttle to downtown and surrounding areas. 6

The Inn on the Mexican War Streets 604 W North Ave ☎ 412/231-6544, ☞ www.innonthe

mexicanwarstreets.com. Eight tastefully refurbished rooms in one of the North Side's trendiest areas.

The less expensive rooms are great value. 4

The Priory—A City Inn 614 Pressley St ☎ 412/231-3338, ☞ www.thepriory.com. Restored 1880s inn, originally built to house traveling Benedictine monks; now, it's the North Side's nicest B&B. Room rates include continental breakfast, evening wine, weekday limo service, and use of fitness room. 5

Valley Motel 2571 Freeport Rd, Harmerville ☎ 412/828-7100, ☞ www.valleymotel.net. Basic motel with low rates, located 11 miles northeast of downtown. A fair option if you have a car. 2

The Westin Convention Center Pittsburgh 1000 Penn Ave ☎ 412/281-3700 or 1-800/937-8461, ☞ www.westin.com. Flashy downtown tower with pool and gym. 7

Downtown: the Golden Triangle

The New York Times once described Pittsburgh as “the only city with an entrance” — and, true enough, the view of the Golden Triangle skyline on emerging from the tunnel on the Fort Pitt Bridge is undeniably breathtaking. Surrounded by water and fronted with a huge fountain, Pittsburgh's downtown pays tribute to both its coal-grimed past and sunny future. In the core of the original city, the Triangle's imaginative contemporary architecture stands next to Gothic churches and redbrick warehouses. Philip Johnson's magnificent postmodern concoction, the black-glass Gothic PPG Place complex, looms incongruously over the old Market Square, lined with historic restaurants and shops and a venue for frequent free live lunchtime entertainment in summer. History is also apparent on the faded buildings along Liberty Avenue, with 1940s and 1950s fronts left in place during successive face-lifts. At the flat end of the triangle, the spaceship-like dome of Mellon Arena looms above the transport stations — it hosts large concerts and exhibitions, and is home to the Pittsburgh Penguins ice hockey team (for tickets, call ☎ 412/642-7367, or visit ☞ www.pittsburghpenguins.com).

Point State Park, at the peak of the Triangle, is where it all began. The site of five different forts during the French and Indian War, it still contains the 1764 Fort Pitt Blockhouse, the city's oldest structure, a lookout of sandstone and rough brick. The park itself is now a popular gathering area, with a 150ft fountain with a pool, as well as great views of port activity and across to the colorful old buildings on verdant Mount Washington. It's a great place to view sunsets and an excellent venue for the city's free outdoor festivals.

Northeast of downtown, along Penn Avenue past the vast new Convention Center, the characterful Strip District has a bustling early-morning market with wholesale outlets and fresh produce stalls, popular with bargain hunters and good for cheap breakfasts; it's also a good place to head to at night. Down by the river is an entertainment complex, with restaurants, bars, a marina, and a floating boardwalk. The seven-floor Senator John Heinz Pittsburgh Regional History Center, at 1212 Smallman St (daily 10am–5pm; $7.50; ☎412/454-6000, 🌐www.pghhistory.org), does a good job of telling the city's story, paying particular attention to immigrants of various eras.

The South Side

In the nineteenth century, 400ft Mount Washington, across the Monongahela River, was the site of most of the city's coal mines. No longer dominated by belching steel mills and industry, the South Side, banked by the green "mountain," is an area of many churches, colorful houses nestled on steep hills, and old neighborhoods. These days, only two survive of the twelve cable cars which, at the height of steel production, used to carry both freight and passengers up the trolley inclines. The 1877 Duquesne Incline, from 1197 W Carson St to 1220 Grandview Ave, is a working cable-car station containing a museum of Pittsburgh history ($1.75 one-way; ☎412/381-1665, 🌐www.incline.cc) in the waiting room at the top: old photos of the city show workers struggling blindly through the streets in pitch-black midday smog. The outdoor observation platform is a prime spot for views over the Golden Triangle to the hills on the horizon, which are especially awesome after dark. Not surprisingly, many (expensive) bars and restaurants here take advantage of the vista.

The best way to get to the South Side is across the 1883 blue-and-cream Smithfield Street Bridge, the oldest of fifteen downtown bridges and the most unusual-looking, thanks to its elliptical "fisheye" truss. Just to the west of the bridge stands redbrick Station Square, a complex of renovated railroad warehouses filled with restaurants and shops. Its showpiece is the beautiful stained glass and marble of the Grand Concourse seafood restaurant (for a review, see "Eating," p.183), which fills the huge waiting room of the old Pittsburgh and Lake Erie train station. This is also the jetty for the enjoyable hour-long narrated Just Ducky Tours river cruises (April–Oct daily, Nov Sat & Sun 10.30am–6pm, earlier in Oct & Nov; $19, kids $15; tours every 90mins; ☎412/402-3825, 🌐www.justdukytours.com).

Along the banks of the Monongahela, East Carson Street is the main drag of the lively mixed residential and commercial South Side, where a longstanding community of Polish and Ukrainian steelworkers has gradually absorbed an off-beat mix of artsy residents, along with the attendant cafés, bars, and bookstores. Onion-domed churches stand alongside thrift stores and galleries, and the narrow backstreets are lined with brick rowhouses. This is also Pittsburgh's most extensive and varied nightlife center (see "Nightlife and entertainment," p.183).

The North Side

The star attraction on the North Side, annexed by Pittsburgh only in 1907, is undoubtedly the Andy Warhol Museum, 117 Sandusky St, just over the Seventh Street Bridge from downtown (Tues–Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–10pm; $10, Fri 5–10pm $5; ☎412/237-8300, 🌐www.warhol.org). The museum documents the life and work of Pittsburgh's most celebrated son over eight floors of a spacious Victorian warehouse; it claims to be the largest museum in the world devoted to a single artist.

Born in Pittsburgh in 1928, Andy Warhol (born Andrew Warhola, the youngest son of working-class Carpatho-Rusyn, or Eastern Slovakian, immigrants) moved to New York City at the age of 21, after graduating from Carnegie-Mellon University. By the end of the 1950s, he was one of the most successful commercial artists in the nation, before turning his attention to fine and pop art. During the early 1960s he started shooting 16mm films – Empire, Chelsea Girls, and Lonesome Cowboys – and developed the “Exploding Plastic Inevitable” multimedia show, featuring erotic dancers and music by The Velvet Underground, whom he managed. After founding Interview magazine in 1969, Warhol became transfixed with the rich and famous and, up until his death in 1987, was perhaps best known for his celebrity portraits and his appearances at society events.

Although the majority of Warhol’s most famous pieces are in the hands of private collectors, the museum boasts an impressive and ever-changing selection of exhibits, with over five hundred items on display at any one time, including pop art (Campbell’s soup cans) and portraiture (Elvis, Marilyn Monroe, Jackie Kennedy). It pays equal attention to archival material, and chronological self-guided tours give a good idea of Warhol’s artistic development and his eventful lifestyle. At any given time, two or three non-Warhol exhibits show work related in some way to Warhol themes. A cinema shows two films or videos daily, both usually Warhol productions. There’s an excellent, informative Archives Study Department and a popular Weekend Factory (Sat & Sun noon–4pm; free with admission), where Warhol’s techniques are explained and visitors can have a go themselves. During “Good Fridays” (5–10pm) there is free entrance to the lobby, which has a cash bar, and often buzzes with live bands or other performance arts. The museum also has a well-stocked gift shop and a café.

Elsewhere on the North Side, revitalization centers around the intriguingly named Mexican War Streets, on the northern edge of Allegheny Commons. In this unevenly restored, tree-lined area of nineteenth-century gray-brick and limestone terraces, old families, descendants of German and Scandinavian immigrants, live in an uneasy truce alongside young professionals. The excellent and highly unusual Mattress Factory, 500 Sampsonia Way (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm, closed Aug; $8, kids free, Thurs $4; ☎ 412/231-3169, @ www.mattress.org), has contemporary installations by top mixed-media artists, and is a must on any visit to the city. The National Aviary, Allegheny Commons West (daily 9am–5pm; $8; ☎ 412/323-7235, @ www.aviary.org), is a huge indoor bird sanctuary with over two hundred species, including foul-mouthed parrots, in free flight under a showpiece 30-foot glass dome. Nearby, The Children’s Museum of Pittsburgh, 10 Children’s Way, Allegheny Square (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $9, kids $8, Thurs $6 for all; ☎ 412/322-5058, @ www.pittsburghkids.org), offers a plethora of games, events, and special exhibitions.

Heading northwest along the river, the huge, state-of-the-art Carnegie Science Center, 1 Allegheny Ave (Sun–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat 10am–7pm; $14, kids $10; ☎ 412/237-3400, @ www.carnegiesciencecenter.org), is also predominantly aimed at children, with, among other exhibits, an interactive engineering playspace, a miniature railroad, and a planetarium. The center contains an impressive OMNIMAX theater ($8–10 for one show, $13–15 for two); various combination tickets are available. Outside (and included in admission), the USS Requin, a 1945 submarine, bobs on the shores of the Allegheny River; the kid-friendly tour focuses on submarine engineering, but also explores day-to-day life underwater.

Next door from the Science Center, Heinz Field, one of two new sports venues that opened in 2001 to replace the shared Three Rivers Stadium, is home to football’s Pittsburgh Steelers (☎ 412/323-1200, @ www.steelers.com), winners of the 2006 Superbowl XL. The other, further along the river toward the Sixth Street Bridge, is PNC Park, the home of the Pittsburgh Pirates baseball team (☎ 1-800/289-2827, @ www.pirates.com). Beautifully constructed so that from most seats you get a sweeping view of the Allegheny and downtown, it’s a real treat to watch a game here on a balmy summer night.

Oakland and the East End

Oakland, Pittsburgh's university area, is dotted with the mansions of wealthy industrialists, as well as university-related sights, concentrated around the campuses of Carnegie-Mellon University, the University of Pittsburgh (always known as "Pitt"), and several other colleges. At Fifth Ave and Bigelow Blvd, the 42-story, 2529-window Gothic Revival Cathedral of Learning is a university building with a difference: over twenty classrooms are furnished with antiques and specially crafted items donated by the city's different ethnic groups, from Lithuanian to Chinese to Irish. These rooms have been used by students since the 1930s, and all are open to the public except the exotic Syria-Lebanon room and the Early American room, complete with trap door and secret passage; these are shown only on ninety-minute guided tours (Mon–Sat 9am–2.30pm, Sun 11am–2.30pm; $3; ☎ 412/624-6000). Alternatively, you can do your own tape-recorded tour on weekends (also $3) or follow the useful booklet ($1.25). On the grounds behind the Cathedral of Learning is the French Gothic Heinz Memorial Chapel (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free), notable for its long, narrow, stained-glass windows depicting political, literary, and religious figures.

Across from the cathedral at 4400 Forbes Ave, the Carnegie cultural complex holds two great museums – the Museum of Natural History, famed for its extensive dinosaur relics and sparkling gems, and the Museum of Art, with Impressionist, Post-Impressionist and American regional art, as well as an excellent modern collection (both museums Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10, or $6 for students, seniors, and children; ☎ 412/622-3131, 🌐 www.carnegiemuseums.org). Nearby, Schenley Park includes the colorful flower gardens of Phipps Conservatory (Sat–Thurs 9.30am–5pm, Fri 9am–9pm; $7.50, kids $4; ☎ 412/622-6814 🌐 www.phippsconservatory.org) and wild wooded areas beyond.

If you're coming to the East Side from downtown on foot, it is better to avoid the area along Center Avenue known as The Hill District, one of Pittsburgh's toughest areas, especially after dark. Either walk along slightly less dodgy Forbes Avenue or take the longer route along Liberty Avenue via the predominantly Italian neighborhood of Bloomfield, a busy area of shops, restaurants, and quaint rowhouses.

The stretch of Fifth Avenue from around the Cathedral of Learning up to Shadyside is lined with important and architecturally beautiful academic buildings, places of worship, and early private mansions. The imposing Soldiers and Sailors Memorial, 4141 Fifth Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; tours $5; ☎ 412/621-4253), also serves as a museum, and is filled with military paraphernalia and historic exhibits. Further on, opposite the exquisite external mural of the Byzantine Catholic Church of the Holy Spirit, is the humble broadcasting complex of WQED, notable for being the first publicly-funded TV station when it opened in April 1954 and home to the long-running kids' show Mr Rogers' Neighborhood.

Shadyside, on the eastern fringes of Oakland, is an upmarket, trendy neighborhood containing the particularly chic commercial section of Walnut Street. There are several art galleries here, and the Pittsburgh Center for the Arts, at 6300 Fifth Ave in Mellon Park, showcases innovative Pittsburgh art in various media (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; suggested donation $5; ☎ 412/361-0873, 🌐 www.pittsburgharts.org). A short way to the southeast, Squirrel Hill is another lively area, housing a mixture of students and the city's largest Jewish community, with a fine selection of shops and restaurants lining Murray and Forbes avenues.

Further east, the small Frick Art Museum, in the Frick Art and Historical Center, 7227 Reynolds St (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; free; ☎ 412/371-0600, 🌐 frick.art.org), shows Italian, Flemish, and French art from the fifteenth to the nineteenth centuries; its collection of decorative arts includes two of Marie Antoinette's chairs.

The Clayton mansion, at the center of the Frick complex, is furnished exactly as it was when industrial magnate Henry Clay Frick lived here. Obligatory guided tours ($10) walk you around the house, pointing out the various late-Victorian decorative touches, as well as the bed where Frick recovered after being stabbed by an anarchist during the bitter Homestead Steel Strike. Frick and most of his family are buried, under tons of protective concrete and steel, just south of the family home, on the highest hill in Homewood Cemetery, which also holds the tombs of H.J. Heinz (of the ketchup and baked beans fortune) and sundry Mellons. Three miles north, bordering the Allegheny River, the green expanse of Highland Park contains the nicely landscaped and enjoyable Pittsburgh Zoo and PPG Aquarium (daily summer 10am–6pm, spring & fall 9am–5pm, winter 9am–4pm; April–Nov $9, Dec–March $7; ☎412/665-3640, @zoo.pgh.pa.us), which has the distinction of owning a Komodo dragon and, in recent years, has successfully bred two baby elephants.

Eating

Eating in downtown Pittsburgh can prove expensive, and the area is rather deserted at night. There's a growing range of places in the adjacent Strip District and along and around East Carson Street on the South Side. Station Square and Mount Washington cater to a more upmarket crowd, while Oakland is, as you might expect, home to an array of cheap student hangouts clustered around S Craig Street – look out for the ultra-cheap mobile ethnic food vans at lunchtime. Also in the East End, Bloomfield, Shadyside and Squirrel Hill have a number of good inexpensive and mid-priced places.

The Church Brew Works 3525 Liberty Ave ☎412/688-8200. Vast establishment located between downtown and Bloomfield, serving American cuisine and fine ales brewed on-site. Housed in a grand, converted old church where vats have replaced the organ.

Grand Concourse 1 Station Square ☎412/261-1717. Pricy, plush seafood restaurant in a gorgeous setting inside the Station Square complex.

Grandview Saloon 1212 Grandview Ave ☎412/431-1400. Relaxed Mount Washington restaurant, usually packed with a young crowd enjoying huge plates of pasta. Arrive early for a deck table with a view.

Gullifty's 1922 Murray Ave ☎412/521-8222. Squirrel Hill establishment serving fine pasta, meat dishes, and sumptuous sweets. Look out for the twice-yearly Garlic Festival (usually held in April and October).

India Garden 328 Atwood St ☎412/682-3000. North Indian restaurant and bar in Oakland, serving tasty curries and creamy lassi. Good-value buffet during lunch and on Sunday evenings. Catch a cricket game on the TV.

Kaya 2000 Smallman St ☎412/261-6565. Stylish Caribbean restaurant in the Strip District with a varied vegetarian selection, as well as a huge range of beers, rums, and cocktails.

La Feria 5527 Walnut St ☎412/682-4501. Colorful upstairs Peruvian shop-cum-restaurant offering a limited but tasty selection of inexpensive specials from the Andes. BYOB.

Mallorca 2228 E Carson St ☎412/488-1818. In a smart setting on the South Side, this restaurant serves excellent paella and Mediterranean dishes, as well as fine sangría. Try the delicious goat in red-wine sauce for $22.95, enough for two.

Penn Brewery 800 Vinial St ☎412/237-9402. On the North Side, this is Pittsburgh's longest-established brewpub, serving up decent German food and festivities.

Seventh Street Grille 130 7th St, Century Building ☎412/338-0303. Excellent Californian- and Italian-influenced menus strong on pasta and seafood. Very popular despite being a little pricey.

Thai Gourmet 4505 Liberty Ave ☎412/681-4373. Intimate and friendly Bloomfield spot with unbeatably authentic and inexpensive Southeast Asian fare, such as their wonderful Penang curry. BYOB.

Yumwok/Lulu's Noodles 400 S Craig St ☎412/687-7777. Combined Oakland establishment serving filling noodles and good standard pan-Asian cuisine at bargain prices. Justifiably popular with students. BYOB.

Nightlife and entertainment

Pittsburgh's nightlife offers rich pickings in everything from the classics to jazz and alternative rock. The nationally regarded City Theatre, 57 S 13th St (☎ 412/431-4400, 🌐 www.citytheatrecompany.org), puts on groundbreaking productions in a converted South Side church. The widely traveled Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra plays at the Heinz Hall, 600 Penn Ave (☎ 412/392-4900, 🌐 www.pittsburghsymphony.org), and the city's ballet, dance, and opera companies perform at the downtown Benedum Center for the Performing Arts, 719 Liberty Ave (☎ 412/456-6666, 🌐 www.pgharts.org/venues/benedum.aspx). City Paper, a free weekly newspaper published on Wednesdays (🌐 www.pghcitypaper.com), has extensive listings.

31st St Pub 3101 Penn Ave ☎ 412/391-8334, 🌐 www.31stpub.com. It won't win any prizes for decor, but this place draws a crowd to hear up-and-coming local indie and hardcore bands, plus the odd underground celebrity act from out of town.

Brillobox 4104 Penn Ave ☎ 412/621-4900. Two prodigal Pittsburghers returning from New York have created a unique bar that's both chic and a fun local spot for watching sports. There's a good jukebox downstairs and a performance space for mostly obscure acts above.

Club Café 56–58 S 12th St ☎ 412/431-4950, 🌐 www.clubcafeivie.com. Laid-back South Side club with regular live music, including rock, folk, and salsa.

Dee's 1314 E Carson St ☎ 412/431-5400. This South Side institution has a great jukebox, pool, darts, and a lively crowd.

Kelly's 6012 Penn Circle S, E Liberty ☎ 412/363-6012. Just east of Shadyside, this popular bar offers good beer such as East End Big Hop and eclectic recorded music. Check out punk night on alternate Wednesdays.

Mr Small's Theatre 400 Lincoln Ave, Millvale ☎ 1-800/594-8499, 🌐 www.mrsmalls.com. Several miles northeast off US-28, this converted church hosts most of the mid-sized US and foreign indie rock acts.

Nick's Fat City 1601–1605 E Carson St ☎ 412/481-6880, 🌐 www.nicksfatcity.com. Popular, gay-friendly South Side pool bar with occasional good live rock bands. Karaoke some nights. Closed Sun & Mon.

Piper's Pub 1828 E Carson St ☎ 412/431-6757, 🌐 www.piperspub.com. One of the South Side's most convivial bars and the place for soccer, rugby, and Gaelic football on TV. Imported and US beers are available and the food is decent, especially the breakfasts.

Rex Theatre 1602 E Carson St ☎ 412/381-6811, 🌐 www.ticketmaster.com/venue/180366. This former cinema hosts mainly rock shows.

Around Pittsburgh: Fallingwater and Ohiopyle

Just over an hour southeast of Pittsburgh, the Laurel Highlands takes in seventy miles of rolling hills and valleys. The main reasons to come this way down Hwy-381 are to see one of Frank Lloyd Wright's most unique creations and to take advantage of some prime outdoor opportunities around the small town of Ohiopyle.

You do not need to be an architecture buff to appreciate Wright's Fallingwater (mid-March to late Nov Tues–Sun 10am–4pm; Dec & early March Sat & Sun 11am–3pm; $16; ☎ 724/329-8501, 🌐 www.paconserve.org/fallingwaterhome.htm), which was built in the late 1930s for the Kaufmann family, owners of Pittsburgh's premier department store. Signposted off Hwy-381, some twenty miles south of I-70, it is set on Bear Run Creek in the midst of the gorgeous deciduous forest that constitutes the 5000-acre Bear Run Nature Reserve. It is the only one of Wright's buildings to be on display exactly as it was designed, and for good reason – it's built right into a set of cliffside waterfalls. Wright used a cantilever system to make the multi-tiered structure “cascade down the hill like the water down the falls”; the house's almost precarious position is truly stunning, and it is remarkable how well its predominantly rectangular shapes blend in with nature's less uniform lines. The slow, well-presented hour-long tour, included in admission (more extensive and expensive tours are available), takes visitors up through the different levels of the building, allowing plenty of time to admire the setting from the various terraces as well as the beauty of the interior design. Among the house's pioneering features is a lack of load-bearing walls, which gives an extra sense of space, and natural skylights. When Edgar Kaufmann Jr entrusted the house to the Western Pennsylvania Conservancy in 1963, he donated all the furnishings and artwork with it. Objects on display include some fine East Asian sculpture of buddhas and Indian deities. Tours begin and end a few hundred yards from the house in the wooden reception pavilion, where there is a café and shop.

Ohiopyle and around

Five miles south of Fallingwater, tiny OHIOPYLE is the most convenient base from which to enjoy the wilds of Ohiopyle State Park or activities like whitewater rafting on the Youghiogheny River. The park fans out around the town and river, offering a maze of trails for hiking or biking, and natural delights such as Cucumber Falls and the unique habitat of the Ferncliff Peninsula, known for its wildflowers. At the built-up end of a massive steel and wooden footbridge high above the river, a small visitor center dispenses local information (daily 10am–4.30pm; ☎ 724/329-8591). Just beyond it the Ohiopyle House Café, 144 Grant St (☎ 724/329-1122), serves up tasty dishes like lobster ravioli and caramel pudding, while a couple of seasonal canteens and a general store sell basic snacks and provisions. The Yough Plaza Motel on Sherman Street (☎ 1-800/992-7238; 📍) has reasonable standard units and efficiency apartments; even better for budget travelers is camping or renting a cabin in the park itself (☎ 1-888/727-2757). For rafting, White Water Adventurers at 6 Negley St (☎ 1-800/992-7238, 🌐 www.wwaraft.com) is one of several outfits that rent equipment and give instruction.

Three miles southwest of Ohiopyle, there is another Frank Lloyd Wright house, Kentuck Knob (Mar–Nov daily 10am–4pm; $15; ☎ 724/329-1901, 🌐 www.kentuckknob.com), also known as the I.N. Hagan House. A hexagonal structure of fieldstone and cypress, it sits on a hilltop, giving wonderful views of the surrounding countryside. Further down the Youghiogheny, in the village of Confluence, the cozy River's Edge Café (☎ 814/395-5059) serves good meat and pasta dishes at moderate prices, right on the banks of the river.

Allegheny National Forest

Occupying over half a million acres and a sizeable portion of four counties, the pristine Allegheny National Forest (☎ 814/723-5150, 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/r9/Allegheny) affords a bounty of opportunities for engaging in outdoor pursuits like hiking, fishing, snowmobiling, and, best of all, admiring the fall foliage, which rivals any in New England.

In the north, there are several points of interest within easy access of Hwy-6, the major route through the forest. Just north of the highway, it is worth a stop to admire the Kinzua Viaduct railroad bridge, the highest and longest in the world when constructed in 1882, which is accessible by foot and allows tremendous views of the creek below.

The dominant feature of the forest's northern section is the huge Kinzua Reservoir, created by a dam at the southern end. Swimming is possible at Kinzua and Kiasutha beaches or you can enjoy a picnic at Rimrock Overlook or at Willow Bay in the very north. The summer-only Kinzua Point Information Center on Hwy-59 (☎ 814/726-1291) has details on trails and private campgrounds, or you can camp in any of the forest's twenty state-run campsites (☎ 1-877/444-6777, 🌐 www.reserveusa.com). Fees range from $18 to $45 a night for a cabin at Willow Bay.

△ Allegheny National Forest

Erie

The focal point of Pennsylvania's forty-mile slice of Lake Erie waterfront is the pleasant city of ERIE itself. It bears no resemblance to the major urban centers of Pittsburgh or Philadelphia, being entirely low-rise and extremely leafy; indeed you hardly realize you are downtown until you find yourself in the shady park-like town square, on 6th Street between the main thoroughfares of Peach and State streets. There are several places of cultural interest in the city, all within walking distance of the square, including the Neo-classical Court House and several museums devoted to history, art, and science. Better than these, the Erie Maritime Museum at 150 E Front St in the Bayfront Historical District (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $6.50, $4 if brig is absent; ☎ 814/452-2744, 🌐 www.brigniagara.org) has a fascinating display on the geological and ecological development of the Great Lakes and also focuses on warships of different periods; the elegant US Brig Niagara, usually moored outside, is part of the museum.

Undoubtedly, Erie's main attraction is the elongated comma-shaped peninsula of Presque Isle State Park, which bends east from its narrow neck three miles west of downtown until it almost touches the city's northernmost tip. The park is maintained as a nature preserve and has wide sandy beaches good for swimming, backed by thick woods offering a series of trails. Rangers at the Park Office (daily 8am–4pm; ☎ 814/833-7424, 🌐 www.presqueisle.org) provide general information and a map, but the main visitors center is the Stall Interpretive Center and Nature Shop (spring & fall 10am–4pm; summer 10am–5pm; ☎ 814/836-9107). Those without a vehicle can hop on the Port of Erie water taxi (Mon noon–6pm, Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; $4 one-way, $6 roundtrip; ☎ 814/881-2502), which leaves on the hour from Dobbins Landing on the Erie Bayfront.

Practicalities

Erie has frequent Greyhound bus connections to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, and Buffalo; the station is at 5759 Peach St (☎ 814/864-5949), some three miles out of downtown, and is served by local bus #9 to Mill Creek Mall. The CVB, downtown at 208 E Bayfront Drive (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 814/454-7191 or 1-800/524-3743, 🌐 www.tourerie.com), is the place to go for information.

Accommodation is often twice as expensive in the summer as in the off-season. The centrally located Holiday Inn Erie-Downtown, 18 W 18th St (☎ 814/456-2961 or 1-800/832-9101, 🌐 www.holiday-inn.com; 4), provides the usual amenities, but the elegant Boothby Inn B&B, at 311 W 6th St (☎ 814/456-1888 or 1-866/266-8429, 🌐 www.theboothbyinn.com; 5), makes for a far more pleasant stay. Numerous functional motels also line Peninsula Drive. The well-sited Sara's Campground, 50 Peninsula Drive (☎ 814/833-4560, 🌐 www.saracampground.com; from $20), is just before the entrance to Presque Isle. Nearby in Sara Coyne Plaza, Sally's Diner (☎ 814/833-1957) serves up hearty breakfasts and meals; downtown, try the Marketplace Grill, 319 State St (☎ 814/455-7272), for steaks and a filling pizza-and-pasta lunchtime buffet, or the cheap Chinese Happy Garden, 418 State St (☎ 814/452-4488).

New Jersey

The skinny coastal state of NEW JERSEY has been at the heart of US history since the Revolution, when a battle was fought at Princeton, and George Washington spent two bleak winters at Morristown. As the Civil War came, the state's commitment to an industrial future ensured that, despite its border location along the Mason–Dixon Line, it fought with the Union.

That commitment to industry has doomed New Jersey in modern times. Most travelers only see “the Garden State” (so called for the rich market garden territory at the state's heart) from the stupendously ugly New Jersey Turnpike toll road which, heavy with truck traffic, cuts through a landscape of gray smokestacks and industrial estates. Even the songs of Bruce Springsteen, Asbury Park's golden boy, paint his home state as a gritty urban wasteland of empty lots, gray highways, lost dreams, and blue-collar heartache. The majority of the refineries and factories hug only a mere fifteen-mile-wide swath along the turnpike, but bleak cities like Newark, home to the major airport, and Trenton, the capital, do little to improve the look of the place. Suffice it to say, the state suffers from a major image problem. But there is more to New Jersey than factories and pollution – indeed, Thomas Paine and Walt Whitman both wrote nostalgically of the happy years they spent here. Alongside its revolutionary history, the northwest corner near the Delaware Water Gap is traced with picturesque lakes, streams, and woodlands while, in the south, the town of Princeton (home to the Ivy League university), adds architectural elegance to the interior. Best of all perhaps, the Atlantic shore offers many bustling resorts, from the compelling tattered glitz of Atlantic City to the Old World charm of Cape May.

Getting around New Jersey

With a car, New Jersey is easily accessible from New York City, via I-95, while the New Jersey Turnpike (a $6.45 toll end-to-end) sweeps from the northeast down to Philadelphia. The Garden State Parkway runs parallel to the Atlantic from New York to Cape May (with a 35–70¢ toll every twenty miles), and gives easy access to the shoreline resorts.

Newark Liberty International Airport (☎ 973/961-6000, 🌐 www.newarkairport.com) is served by all the major international carriers and is most renowned for its convenient access to Manhattan (a 15–30min bus ride away on Newark Liberty Airport Express; $14; ☎ 908/354-3330 or 1-877/894-9155, 🌐 www.coachusa.com/olympia; or a 20min train ride via AirTrain and New Jersey Transit; $14; ☎ 1-800/247-7433, 🌐 www.airtrainnewark.com). PATH trains connect northern New Jersey to New York City (☎ 1-800/234-7284, 🌐 www.panynj.gov/path), while New Jersey Transit (☎ 973/762-5100 or 1-800/772-2222, 🌐 www.njtransit.com) provides good, inexpensive train and bus service from New Jersey hubs to Philadelphia, New York, and the coast. Numerous Amtrak trains pass through Newark, Princeton, and Trenton, en route between Philadelphia, New York, and Washington DC. Greyhound covers most of the state, while New Jersey's south coast is connected to Delaware by the Cape May–Lewes ferry (see p.195).

Inland New Jersey

Visitors most often travel from New York to northern New Jersey for the great shopping: from huge malls and designer outlet stores to ethnic emporiums like Mitsuwa Marketplace, the Japanese shopping center in Edgewater (☎ 201/941-9113, 🌐 www.mitsuwa.com), both prices and taxes are lower than across the Hudson River. The well-off towns along the river also contain some fine Italian and Asian restaurants, while Hoboken offers a spillover of Manhattan subculture. Traveling west on the interstates from the shore or from New York City, however, visitors see the New Jersey of popular imagination: a heavily industrialized cultural desert peppered with run-down cities like Trenton and Paterson. Newark, the state's largest city, is perhaps the nation's drabest, redeemed only by its marvelously efficient airport, new performing arts center, and views over the Hudson to the Statue of Liberty. The one place that holds interest in inland New Jersey is Princeton, an Ivy-League town that makes a pretty afternoon stopoff.

Princeton

Self-satisfied PRINCETON, on US-206 eleven miles north of Trenton, is home to Princeton University – the nation's fourth oldest, after having broken away from the overly religious Yale in 1756. It began its days inauspiciously as Stony Brook in the late 1600s and then in 1724 became known as Princes Town, a coach stop between New York and Philadelphia. In January 1777, a week after Washington's triumph against the British at Trenton, the Battle of Princeton occurred southwest of town. This victory, a turning point in the Revolutionary effort, bolstered the morale of Washington's troops before their long winter encampment at Morristown to the north. After the war, in 1783, the Continental Congress, fearful of potential attack from incensed unpaid veterans in Philadelphia, met here for four months; the leafy, well-kept town was then left in peace to follow its academic pursuits. Alumni of Princeton University include actor James Stewart, Jazz-Age writer F. Scott Fitzgerald, actress Brooke Shields, and presidents Wilson and Madison. Today, there is little to do here other than tour the university and see the historic sites.

Arrival, information, and getting around

A shuttle bus, the Princeton Airporter, makes the run from Newark airport to town (daily every hour 7.15am–8.15pm; 1hr 30mins trip; $28, students $19; ☎ 609/587-6600, 🌐 www.goairporter.com). On their New York–Philadelphia runs, Amtrak and NJ Transit stop at Princeton Junction, three miles south of Princeton. From there, you can take a SEPTA shuttle (☎ 215/580-7800, 🌐 www.septa.com) to Princeton's train terminal, on-campus at University Place, a block north of Alexander Road. You must buy a ticket for the shuttle ahead of time, preferably as a connecting ticket from your point of origin. Suburban Transit buses from New York's Port Authority bus station (☎ 1-800/222-0492, 🌐 www.suburbantransit.com) stop every thirty minutes from 6am to 11pm at Palmer Square.

Information is available from the Frist Campus Center at the university (☎ 609/258-1766, 🌐 www.princeton.edu/frist) or from the Chamber of Commerce at 9 Vandeventer Ave (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 609/924-1776, 🌐 www.princetonchamber.org). The Historical Society museum, 158 Nassau St (Tues–Sun noon–4pm; ☎ 609/921-6748, 🌐 www.princetonhistory.org), organizes walking tours through town (Sun 2pm; $7) and also provides maps so you can do it yourself. Central Princeton is easily navigable on foot, but weather extremes in the winter and summer, as well as the distance of accommodation options from downtown, may make you glad to have a car.

The Town and the university

Mercer Street, the long road that sweeps southwest past the university campus to Nassau Street, is lined with elegant Colonial houses, graced with shutters, columns, and wrought-iron fences. The Princeton Battlefield State Park, a mile and a half out, includes the Thomas Clarke House, 500 Mercer St, a Quaker farmhouse that served as a hospital during the battle. The simple house at 112 Mercer, back toward town, is where Albert Einstein lived while teaching at the Institute of Advanced Study. Unfortunately, the house is not open to the public.

Princeton University's tranquil and shaded campus is a beautiful place for a stroll. Just inside the main gates on Nassau Street, Nassau Hall, a vault-like historic building containing numerous portraits of famous graduates and one of King George II, was, when constructed in 1756, the largest stone building in the nation; its 26-inch-thick walls (now patterned with plaques and patches of ivy placed by graduating classes) withstood American and British fire during the Revolution. It was also the seat of government during Princeton's brief spell as national capital in 1783. The 1925 chapel, based on one at Kings College, Cambridge University, in England, has stained-glass windows showing scenes from works by Dante, Shakespeare, and Milton, as well as the Bible. Across campus, the Prospect Gardens, a flowerbed in the shape of the university emblem, are a blaze of orange in summer. There are student-led tours that take you around to all of these sights, though they're somewhat complacent, and on summer afternoons they can be painfully crowded. That said, they are free; tours leave from the Frist Campus Center, which faces Washington Road (during term Mon–Sat 10am, 11am, 1.30pm & 3.30pm, Sun 1.30pm & 3.30pm; hours vary slightly during vacations; ☎ 609/258-1766).

In the middle of the campus, fronted by the Picasso sculpture Head of a Woman, the University Art Museum, not included on the standard tours, is well worth a look for its collection from the Renaissance to the present, including works by Modigliani, Van Gogh, and Warhol, as well as Asian and pre-Columbian art (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; ☎ 609/258-3788, 🌐 www.princetonartmuseum.org).

Accommodation, eating, and drinking

The only hotels in the center of Princeton are the ersatz-Colonial Nassau Inn on Palmer Square (☎ 609/921-7500 or 1-800/862-7728, 🌐 www.nassauinn.com; Ⓜ) and the Peacock Inn (☎ 609/924-1707, 🌐 www.peacockinn.com; Ⓜ), tucked in a quieter spot at 20 Bayard Lane. Budget motels can be found along US-1 and in the suburb of Lawrenceville a few miles south of town; one such is the functional Red Roof Inn, 3203 US-1 (☎ 609/896-3388, 🌐 www.redroof.com; 📍).

Despite its affluence, Princeton is by no means the culinary capital of New Jersey. There's cheap diner-type food along Witherspoon Street; Teresa's, 19–23 Palmer Square E (☎ 609/921-1974), serves creative, good-value Italian food; and Mediterra, at 29 Hulfish St (☎ 609/252-9680), is an upscale Mediterranean restaurant with a welcoming atmosphere and well-prepared food. Nightlife is limited, especially when school is out, but the Triumph Brewery, 138 Triumph St (☎ 609/942-7855), has good, home-brewed beers and is popular with a mixed crowd; meanwhile, the old Yankee Doodle Tap Room bar, downstairs at the Nassau Inn, is usually full of ancient revelers drinking, reminiscing, and enjoying live jazz.

The New Jersey shore

New Jersey's Atlantic coast, a 130-mile stretch of almost uninterrupted resorts – some rowdy, some run-down, some undeveloped and peaceful – has long been reliant on farming and tourism. No profitable ports were established, nor did short-lived attempts at whaling come to anything. In the late 1980s, the whole coastline suffered severe and well-publicized pollution from ocean dumping. But today, the beaches, if occasionally somewhat crowded, are safe and clean: sandy, broad, and lined by characteristic wooden boardwalks, some of which, in an attempt to maintain their condition, charge admission during the summer. The rowdy, sleazy glitz of Atlantic City is perhaps the shore's best-known attraction, though there are also quieter resorts like Spring Lake and Victorian Cape May.

Spring Lake and Asbury Park

SPRING LAKE, about twenty miles down the Jersey coast, is one of the smallest, most uncommercial communities on the shore, a gentle respite on the road south to Atlantic City. Tourism in this elegant Victorian resort evolved slowly, without the booms, crises, resurgences, and depressions of other seaside towns – partly due to the strict zoning laws prohibiting new building. You can walk the undeveloped two-mile boardwalk and watch the crashing ocean from battered gazebos, swim and bask on the white beaches (in summer, compulsory beach tags, badges that provide admission to the beach, cost a fee), or sit in the shade by the town's namesake, Spring Lake itself. Wooden footbridges, swans, geese, and the grand St Catharine Roman Catholic Church on the banks of the lake give it the feel of a country village. What little activity there is centers on the upmarket shops of Third Avenue.

Bruce Springsteen fans can use the town as a base for visiting nearby ASBURY PARK, a decaying old seaside town where The Boss lived for many years and played his first gigs. Almost nothing remains of the carousels and seaside arcades that Springsteen wrote about on early albums such as his debut, Greetings from Asbury Park; the sole survivor is Madam Marie's now-defunct fortune-telling salon, which stands amid the rubble and half-completed condominium developments that line the boardwalk. The 🐎 Stone Pony, 913 Ocean Ave (☎ 732/502-0600, 🌐 www.stoneponyonline.com), where Springsteen played dozens of times in the mid-1970s and to which he has returned intermittently over the years, is the one obligatory stop for devotees.

Practicalities

Spring Lake is accessible by US-34 from the New Jersey Turnpike, and served by New Jersey Transit from New York. The Chamber of Commerce (☎ 732/449-

0577, (www.springlake.org) keeps erratic hours but the Spring Lake Hotel and B&B Association (☎ 732/449-6685) can help find lodging, especially on summer weekends. There are no cheap motels, and B&Bs can be expensive; the Chateau Inn, 500 Warren Ave (☎ 732/974-2000 or 1-877/974-5253, www.chateauinn.com; 7), is typical. Adjacent to Asbury Park, in the much more attractive Victorian resort of Ocean Grove, friendly Lillagaard B&B, 5 Abbot Ave (☎ 732/988-1216, www.lillagaard.com; 6), is right on the beach. Most of Spring Lake's restaurants are in the elegant Victorian hotels along the seafront and can be pricey. Who's On Third, 1300 Third Ave (☎ 732/449-4233), is a no-nonsense café serving breakfast and lunch. For a blowout, The Sandpiper, 7 Atlantic Ave (BYOB; ☎ 732/449-4700), serves superb fresh fish and seafood in elegant, candlelit surroundings. In Asbury Park, Red Fusion (☎ 732/775-1008), at 660 Cookman Ave, serves excellent Asian/American fusion food in a unique space that is part art gallery, part sports bar.

Atlantic City

What they wanted was Monte Carlo. They didn't want Las Vegas. What they got was Las Vegas. We always knew that they would get Las Vegas.

Stuart Mendelson, Philadelphia Journal

ATLANTIC CITY, on Absecon Island just off the midpoint of the Jersey shoreline, has been a tourist magnet since 1854, when Philadelphia speculators created it as a rail terminal resort. In 1909, at the peak of the seaside town's popularity, Baedeker wrote "there is something colossal about its vulgarity" – a glitzy, slightly monstrous quality that it sustains today. The real-life model for the modern version of the board game Monopoly, it has an impressive popular history, boasting the nation's first boardwalk (1870), the world's first Ferris wheel (1892), the first color postcards (1893), and the first Miss America Beauty Pageant (cunningly devised in 1921 to extend the tourist season, and held here every year until it moved to Las Vegas in 2006). During Prohibition and the Depression, Atlantic City was a center for rum-running, packed with speakeasies and illegal gambling dens. Thereafter, in the face of increasing competition from Florida, it slipped into a steep decline, until desperate city officials decided in 1976 to open up the decrepit resort to legal gambling.

△ The Atlantic City boardwalk

Arrival, information, and getting around

The bus terminal at Atlantic and Michigan is served by NJ Transit and Greyhound. NJ Transit trains stop at the train station next to the Convention Center, at 1 Miss America Way, and are connected by free shuttle service to all casinos. Atlantic City International Airport in Pomona (☎ 609/645-7895, 🌐 www.acairport.com) has direct flights to Philadelphia, as well as some flights further afield; from the airport, cabs cost around $30 to Downtown. For maps and information, head for the Atlantic City Convention & Visitors Authority's helpful boardwalk information center outside of Boardwalk Hall (daily 9.30am–5.30pm, summer Fri–Sun 9.30am–8pm; ☎ 609/449-7130 or 1-888/228-5758, 🌐 www.atlanticcitynj.com). Atlantic City is easy to walk around, though it's unwise to stray further from the five-mile boardwalk along the ocean than the parallel Pacific, Atlantic, and Arctic avenues, as other parts of the city can be dangerous at night. Ventnor and Margate, to the south on Absecon Island, are served by buses along Atlantic Avenue. Pale blue Jitneys ($1.50, exact change required; ☎ 609/344-8642, 🌐 www.jitneys.net) offer a 24-hour minibus service the length of Pacific Avenue. Along the boardwalk, various bike rental stands and rickshaw-like rolling chairs (☎ 609/347-7148) provide alternative means of transportation.

Accommodation

Atlantic City is not Vegas – there's no chance of getting a $40 room at one of the casinos. The already high accommodation rates rise on weekends and in summer, though rates plunge off-season; if you book ahead online and business is slow, many places will offer discounted package deals, with $200 suites going for under half-price. Otherwise, room prices at the casinos are astronomical, though reasonably priced motels line Pacific and Atlantic avenues behind the boardwalk, and things are cheaper in quiet Ocean City, a family resort to the south.

Bally's Atlantic City Park Place and Boardwalk ☎ 609/340-2000, 🌐 www.harrahs.com/ballys. This is as close as it gets to the way-out theme casinos of Vegas. The Bally's megalopolis, with full-service spa and more than 20 restaurants, encompasses Showboat, Caesar's, and Harrahs casino hotels, each with its own feel but all more or less under one roof. ⑤

EconoLodge Boardwalk 117 S Kentucky Ave ☎ 609/344-9093, 🌐 www.choicehotels.com. Standard chain motel next to the boardwalk and the Sands Casino. ③

The Irish Pub Inn 164 St James Place ☎ 609/344-9063, 🌐 www.theirishpub.com/irish-pubinn2.htm. Basic, cheap rooms above one of the town's best bars. Great single rates. ①–②

Quality Inn Beach Block 119 S South Carolina

Ave ☎ 609/345-7070, 🌐 www.choicehotels.com. Chain motel housed in a converted school. The lobby and shared areas are rather shabby, but the clean, newly refurbished rooms make up for it. Prices double on weekends. ③

Resorts Atlantic City Casino Hotel 1133 Boardwalk ☎ 1-800/336-6378, 🌐 www.resortscac.com. The most pleasant of the huge casino hotels, with pool and spa. ⑤–⑥

Rodeway Inn 124 S North Carolina Ave ☎ 609/345-0155, 🌐 www.choicehotels.com. Clean, basic, reasonably priced rooms close to the boardwalk. ③

Surfside Resort Hotel 18 S Mount Vernon Ave ☎ 609/347-7873, 🌐 www.surfsideresorthotel.com. Refurbished gay-friendly hotel with standard rooms and a lively club attached. ⑤

The Town

Arriving by train, you'll be confronted by the monstrous Convention Center, which houses a massive food court and standard mall shops along with its meeting spaces and countless hotel rooms. Most of the hopeful new arrivals, however, head straight for the casinos, with an ample overspill flooding the boardwalk and beach. Beyond the boardwalk there is little to see in Atlantic City, as the eerily quiet slums of the South Inlet district make a chilling contrast to the manic jollity a mere block away. This is not an area in which to linger for any length of time, or indeed at all at night – the danger for tourists is very real, though crime has decreased over the past few years.

Atlantic City's wooden boardwalk was originally built as a temporary walkway, raised above the beach so that vacationers could take a seaside stroll without treading sand into the grand hotels. Alongside the brash 99¢ shops and exotically named palm-readers, a few beautiful Victorian buildings that survived the wrecking ball invoke past elegance, despite the fact that many now house fast-food joints. Early in the morning, when the breezes from the ocean are at their most pleasant, the boardwalk is peaceful, peopled only by keen cyclists and a few lost souls down on their luck. The Central Pier offers all the fun of a fair, with rides, games, and old-fashioned “guess your weight” challenges. A few blocks south, another pier has been remodeled into an ocean-liner-shaped shopping center. The small and faded Atlantic City Arts Center (daily 10am–4pm; ☎ 609/347-5837, 🌐 www.acartcenter.org), on the Garden Pier at the quiet northern end of the boardwalk, has a free collection of seaside memorabilia, postcards, photos, and a special exhibit on Miss America, as well as traveling art shows. A block off the boardwalk, where Pacific and Rhode Island avenues meet, and at the heart of some of the city's worst deprivation, stands the Absecon Lighthouse. Active until 1933, it's now fully restored and offers a terrific view from its 167ft tower (July–Aug daily 10am–5pm; rest of year Thurs–Mon 11am–4pm; $5; ☎ 609/449-1360, 🌐 www.abseconlighthouse.org). Atlantic City's beach is free, family-filled, and surprisingly clean, considering its proximity to the boardwalk. Beaches at well-to-do Ventnor, a Jitney ride away, are quieter, while three miles south of Atlantic City, New Jersey's beautiful people pose on the beaches of Margate (both beaches charge a nominal fee), watched over by Lucy the Margate Elephant at 9200 Atlantic Ave. A 65ft wood-and-tin Victorian oddity, Lucy was built as a seaside attraction in 1881 and used variously as a tavern and a hotel. Today, her huge belly contains a museum (June–early Sep Mon–Sat 10am–8pm, Sun 10am–5pm; $5; ☎ 609/823-6473, 🌐 www.lucytheelephant.org) filled with Atlantic City memorabilia, as well as photos and artifacts from her own history.

The casinos of Atlantic City

Each of Atlantic City's dozen casinos, which also act as luxury hotels, conference centers, and concert halls, has a slightly different image, though you might not guess it among the apparent uniformity of vast, richly ornamented halls, slot machines, relentless flashing lights and incessant noise, chandeliers, mirrors, and a disorienting absence of clocks or windows.

The most outwardly ostentatious (and “The Donald” wouldn't have it any other way) is Donald Trump's Taj Mahal. Occupying nearly twenty acres and over forty stories high, dotted with glittering minarets and onion domes, this gigantic but oddly anticlimactic piece of Far Eastern kitsch stands opposite the arcade-packed Steel Pier at the north end of the boardwalk. It is one of the largest gambling casinos on earth, precariously tottering on the edge of bankruptcy. Bally's charmingly garish Wild West Casino is much more outlandish and fun, and also offers complete access to the games and memberships of Roman-themed Caesar's, smaller, “friendly” Showboat, and the Hilton. Sands, next door at South Indiana Ave, is a noisy and popular venue with a vaguely circus-related theme. Resorts, on the northern end of the boardwalk, is grand without being flashy. All casinos are open 24 hours, including holidays, and have a strict minimum age requirement, so be prepared to show ID that proves you're 21 or older.

Eating

One effect of Atlantic City's rabid commercialization is an abundance of fast food. The boardwalk is lined with pizza, burger, and sandwich joints, while the diners on Atlantic and Pacific avenues serve soul food and cheap breakfasts. All the large casinos boast several restaurants, ranging in price and menu but all of average quality, as well as all-you-can-eat buffets – most cost around $15 for lunch, and under $20 for dinner. Some of the casinos offer half-price buffets to “members” or “VIPs” – all you have to do to join is fill out a form and give some proof of address. If money's running low after too many days in the casino, there are bargain buffets on the boardwalk for around $5 – but inevitably, you get what you pay for.

Dune 9510 Ventnor Ave, Margate ☎609/487-7450. Specialising in tasty and fresh, if a little pricey, seafood. The three-course prix fixe is a decent deal at $24.50.

Hunan Chinese Restaurant 2323 Atlantic Ave ☎609/348-5946. Reasonably priced Chinese food two blocks from the boardwalk. Combination plates run $7–11.

Los Amigos 1926 Atlantic Ave ☎609/344-2293. Great for cheap, late-night food, this pleasant but average Mexican restaurant and bar across from the bus station is open until 3am Friday and Saturday.

Pappa T's Pizza 445 Boardwalk ☎609/348-5030. One of the better cheap boardwalk joints, with pizza and breakfast from $4.

White House Sub Shop 2301 Arctic Ave ☎609/345-1564. This bright and super-efficient Atlantic City institution is where the submarine sandwich was born; definitely worth a visit.

Entertainment and nightlife

Atlantic City sells itself as the fun nighttime city, but the nightlife centers on the casinos and boardwalk amusements. Once you get bored with slot machines there is little else to do. Big-name entertainers perform regularly at the casinos, but you'll be lucky to find tickets much under $100 – the free weekly Whoot (@www.whoontnews.com) has listings. For cheaper informal fun, try the friendly, dark-paneled Irish Pub, 164 St James Place (☎609/344-9063, @www.theirishpub.com), which serves extremely cheap food and often has live Irish music. Club Tru, 12 S Mt Vernon Ave (☎609/344-2222, @www.clubtru.com) offers frequent go-go dancing and includes the longstanding gay club night Studio Six.

Cape May

CAPE MAY was founded in 1620 by the Dutch Captain Mey, on the small hook at the very southern tip of the Jersey coast, jutting out into the Atlantic and washed by the Delaware Bay on the west. After being briefly settled by New England whalers in the late 1600s, it turned in the eighteenth century to more profitable farming and, soon after, to tourism. In 1745 the first advertisement for Cape May's restorative air and fine accommodation appeared in the Philadelphia press, heralding a period of great prosperity, when Southern plantation owners, desiring cool sea breezes without having to venture into Yankee land, flocked to the fashionable boarding houses of this genteel “resort of Presidents.”

The Victorian era was Cape May's finest; nearly all its gingerbread architecture dates from a mass rebuilding after a severe fire in 1878. However, the increase in car travel after World War I meant that vacationers could go further, more quickly and more cheaply, and the little town found itself something of an anachronism, while the gaudier charms of Atlantic City became the brightest stars on the Jersey coast. During the 1950s, Cape May began to dust off its most valuable commodity: its history. Today, the whole town is a National Historic Landmark, with over six hundred Victorian buildings, tree-lined streets and beautifully kept gardens, and a lucrative B&B industry. It teeters dangerously on self-parody at times, thanks to its glut of cutesy “olde shoppes,” but if you avoid the main drags and wander through the backstreets, you'll enjoy the historical authenticity. The town also boasts good beaches.

Arrival, information, and getting around

New Jersey Transit runs an express bus to Cape May from Philadelphia and the south Jersey coast, as well as services from New York and Atlantic City. Greyhound also stops at the terminal, opposite the corner of Lafayette and Ocean St. Ferries connect the town to Lewes, Delaware ($7–9.50 per person, $23–34 per car; schedules on ☎ 1-800/643-3779, 🌐 www.capemaylewesferry.com). Maps, information and help with accommodation are available from the Welcome Center (daily 9am–4.30pm; ☎ 609/884-9562, 🌐 www.capemaynj.com), attached to the bus terminal.

Though Cape May itself is best enjoyed on foot, to venture out a bit further rent a bike from the Village Bike Shop near the bus terminal, at 609 Lafayette (summer 8am–6pm, call for off-season hours; $5 per hour, $12 per day; ☎ 609/884-8500). The Cape May Whale Watcher, at Second Avenue and Wilson Drive (☎ 609/884-5445 or 1-800/786-5445, 🌐 www.capemaywhalewatcher.com), offers three trips (daily March to Dec) around Cape May Point: two dolphin-watches (2hrs; 10am & 6.30pm; $25) and a whale & dolphins voyage (3hrs; 1pm; $35).

Accommodation

Many of Cape May's pastel Victorian homes have been converted to pricey B&Bs or guesthouses, and the resort is so popular that choice plummets on summer weekends. During July and August even old motor inns can command over $100 a night; June and September rates are often around half that. Standard hotels front the ocean on Beach Drive, and you can camp at the expensive Seashore Campsites, 720 Seashore Road (basic campsite $37, with electric and water $40, with full hookup $44; ☎ 609/884-4010 or 1-800/313-2267, 🌐 www.seashorecampsites.com).

Cape Harbor Motor inn 715 Pittsburgh Ave ☎ 609/884-3352, 🌐 www.seabreezemotel.com. Comfortable motel, situated in a residential street seven blocks from the beach; cheaper than most places but rates soar in summer. 4–6

The Chalfonte 301 Howards St ☎ 609/884-8409, 🌐 www.chalfonte.com. Classy and spacious 1876 mansion with wraparound verandas, three blocks from the beach. 6

Inn of Cape May 7 Ocean St ☎ 1-800/582-5933, 🌐 www.innofcapemay.com. This once-fashionable Victorian shorefront hotel now has a small adjoining modern motel wing. The cheapest rooms are those with shared baths in the main building. Open daily April–Oct, weekends only late Oct–Dec. 6–8

Manor House 612 Hughes St ☎ 609/884-4710, 🌐 www.manorhouse.net. Great breakfasts and a relaxing porch in the heart of the historic district. 6

Queen Victoria 102 Ocean St ☎ 609/884-8702, 🌐 www.queenvictoria.com. Twenty-one rooms in four buildings, including a cottage and a carriage house. Rates include bicycle loans, beach chairs, breakfast (in bed, if desired), and afternoon tea. 8

Summer Cottage Inn 613 Columbia Ave ☎ 609/884-4948, 🌐 www.summercottageinn.com. 1867 inn with verandas and a cupola. Wide ranging of rates include good-value deals. 6–8

The Town and the beaches

Cape May's brightly colored houses were built by nouveaux riches Victorians with a healthy disrespect for subtlety. Cluttered with cupolas, gazebos, balconies, and “widow's walks,” the houses follow no architectural rules except excess. They were known as “patternbook homes,” with designs and features chosen from catalogs and thrown together in accordance with the owner's taste. The Victorian obsession with the Near East is everywhere: Moorish arches and onion domes sit comfortably next to gingerbread- and Queen Anne-style turrets. The Emlen Physick Estate, 1048 Washington St (tour hours vary; $10; ☎ 609/884-5404, 🌐 www.capemaymac.org), now a part of the Mid-Atlantic Center for the Arts, was built by the popular Philadelphia architect Frank Furness. It has been restored to its 1879 glory, with whimsical “upside-down” chimneys, a mock Tudor half-timbered facade, and much original furniture. West of town, where the Delaware Bay and the ocean meet, the

Wildwood

The traditionally blue-collar resort of nearby Wildwood, on a barrier island east of Rte-47, offers a counterpoint to the old-world fakery (pretty though it may be) of Cape May. Its 1950s architecture, left lovingly intact, includes dozens of gaudy and fun-looking hotels with names like Pink Orchid, Waikiki, and The Shalimar, all still featuring plastic palm trees, kidney-shaped swimming pools, and plenty of aqua, orange, and pink paint. To best appreciate the town's brash charm, take a stroll along the boardwalk and stop along the wide, throbbing, free beaches. Additionally, check out the local amusement rides and waterparks, such as Morey's Piers, Raging Waters, and Splash Zone.

1859 Cape May Lighthouse, visible from 25 miles out at sea, offers great views from a gallery below the lantern (199 steps up) and a small exhibit on its history at ground level (daily April–Nov, winter weekends, hours vary; $5; ☎609/884-8656, @www.capemaymac.org). Three miles north of town on US-9, Historic Cold Spring Village, 720 Rte-9 (late May through mid-June & Sept Sat & Sun 10am–4.30pm; June–Aug Tues–Sun 10am–4.30pm; $8; ☎609/898-2300, @www.hcsv.org), depicts a typical nineteenth-century south Jersey farming community. Restored buildings from the region house a jail, school, inn, and shops, and there are various craft shows and special events. Cape May's excellent beaches literally sparkle with quartz pebbles. Beach tags ($4 per day, $13 per week, $25 for a seasonal pass purchased before Memorial Day) must be worn from 10am until 6pm in the summer, and are available at the beach, from official vendors, and from City Hall, 643 Washington St (☎609/884-9525, @www.capemaycity.com).

Eating

Cape May lacks the usual boardwalk snack bars, but it has plenty of cheap lunch places. Dinner, however, is far more expensive. Cape May's liquor laws are stringent, which means that many restaurants are BYO – call to check.

Bellevue Tavern 7 S Main St ☎609/463-1738.

Functional early twentieth-century bar serving crab cakes and inexpensive hot sandwiches; dinners of steak, veal, and seafood average nearly $20.

Depot Market Café 409 Elmira St ☎609/884-8030.

Opposite the bus terminal, offering filling sandwiches, salads and hoagies; dinners around $10.

Gecko's Carpenter's Lane ☎609/898-7750. A good lunch stop with a tasty Southwestern menu and great desserts. Patio seating available.

The Lemon Tree 101 Liberty Way ☎609/884-2704. The cheesesteaks at this cheap, cheerful deli are Philly-quality; a nice antidote to the coffeeshops along the street.

Mad Batter 19 Jackson St ☎609/884-5970.

Splash out on meat and fresh fish dishes, served by candlelight in the garden. Lunch is $8–15, dinner $15–30.

Nightlife and entertainment

Cape May is a friendly and laid-back place to be after dark; the day-trippers have gone home and the bars and music venues are enjoyed by locals and tourists alike. If you're after something a bit more lively, head a few miles north to the raucous nightclubs of Wildwood, such as H2O. Again, because of the liquor laws, remember that you may have to travel a little farther than you expect to find a drink.

Cabana's 429 Beach Ave ☎609/884-4800. Two-level bar that often hosts live music downstairs; upstairs is a low-key cocktail lounge.

Carney's 401 Beach Ave ☎609/884-4424. Spacious and relaxed Irish bar, with raucous live music.

Ugly Mug Washington St Mall and Decatur St ☎609/884-3459. This friendly bar is a local favorite and serves chowder, sandwiches, and seafood.

New England

- * Boston, MA Revolutionary history comes to life around every charming corner, in one of America's most storied, walkable cities. See p.203
- * Provincetown, MA Wild beaches, lovely flower-filled streets, and an alternative vibe on the outer reaches of Cape Cod. See p.227
- * Historic "summer cottages," Newport, RI Conspicuous consumption gone crazy in this yachtie WASP resort. See p.246
- * Grand resort hotels, NH At the opulent hotels of Mount Washington and Balsams you'll understand why vacationing in the White Mountains was once the preserve of the extremely well-off. See p.265
- * Montpelier, VT Relaxed, friendly, and relatively tourist-free, pretty Montpelier is bounded by rivers and a forest of tall trees. See p.274
- * Acadia National Park, ME Remote mountains and lakes, stunning beaches, and the chance to catch the sunrise before anyone else in the US. See p.293

△ Bar Harbor Inn

New England

The six NEW ENGLAND states of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Maine like to view themselves as the repository of all that is intrinsically American. In this version of history, the tangled streets of old Boston, the farms of Connecticut, and the village greens of Vermont are the cradle of the nation. Certainly, nostalgia is at the root of the region's tourist trade. While the real business of making a living happens in cities for the most part well off the tourist trail, innumerable small towns have been dolled-up to recapture a past that is at best wishful, and at times purely fictional. Picturesque though they may be, with white-spired churches beside immaculate rolling greens, towns, despite appearances, are not frozen in time: there's little to distinguish a clapboard house built last year from another, two hundred years old, which has just had its annual coat of white paint.

The genteel seaside towns of modern Cape Cod and Rhode Island are a far cry from the first European settlements in New England. While the Pilgrims congregated in neat, pristine communities, later arrivals, with so much land to choose from, felt no need to reconstruct the compact little villages they had left behind in Europe. Instead, they fanned out across the Native American fields, or straggled their farmhouses in endless strips along the newly built roadways (thus establishing a more genuinely American style of development). As the wealth of industry magnates soared in the mid-nineteenth century, the coastline came increasingly to be viewed as prime real estate, to be lined with grand patrician homes, from the Vanderbilt mansions of Newport to the presidential compounds of the Bush and Kennedy families.

The Ivy League colleges – Harvard, Yale, Brown, Dartmouth, et al – still embody New England's strong sense of its own superiority, though in fact the region's traditional role as home to the WASP elite is due more to the vagaries of history and ideology than to economic or cultural realities. Its thin soil and harsh climate made it difficult for the first pioneers to sustain an agricultural way of life, while the industrial prosperity of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries is now for the most part a distant memory. Despite recent diversification, and the development of some high-tech industries, New England has pockets, mostly in rural Vermont and New Hampshire, that are as poor as any in the US.

New England can be a rather pricey place to visit, especially in late September and October, when visitors flock to see the magnificent fall foliage. Its tourist facilities are aimed at weekenders from the big cities as much as outsiders; places like Cape Cod and the Berkshires make convenient short breaks for locals. Connecticut and Rhode Island form part of the great East Coast megalopolis, but off I-95 you'll find plenty of tranquil pockets. Boston is a vibrant and stimulating city from which to set off north, where population is thin on the ground (and the seafood gets even better). Inland, too, the lakes and mountains of New Hampshire and particularly Maine offer rural wildernesses to rival any in the nation. Vermont is slightly less diverse, but its country roads offer pleasant wandering through tiny villages and serene forests.

Some history

The Algonquin, Native Americans who first inhabited the northeast shoreline, were composed of several tribes and subgroups with different dialects. They shared a lifestyle of farming and fishing along the coast in summer, retreating with their animals to the relative warmth of the inland valleys in winter.

Six years after Columbus's first voyage, John Cabot nosed by in 1498, in search of the Northwest Passage. Over the next century, European fishermen began to return each year, though it was not until the early 1600s that the French and English attempted to found permanent colonies, in what is now Maine. The name – New England – was given in 1614 by surveyor-cum-explorer John Smith, who particularly appreciated the plentiful lobsters. Epidemics killed three-fourths of the native population by 1619.

Even for the new arrivals, this was not promising land: without precious metals to be mined, or the potential to grow lucrative crops, the first major impetus for emigration was religion. Refugees from intolerance – notably the Puritans, beginning with the Pilgrims in 1620 – made the arduous voyage to search for the freedom to build their own communities. The Pilgrims only survived at first thanks to the Indians: they were aided by a certain Squanto, who had been kidnapped, sold as a slave in Spain, and returned home via England. In thanks, the Pilgrims forced the natives from the terraces they had farmed for generations.

The possibility of a serious Native American threat was eliminated in King Philip's War of 1675–76, in which a leader of the Narragansett Indians (known as Philip) persuaded feuding native groups to bury their differences in one last, and ultimately hopeless, stand against the settlers. By then, though, white colonization had gathered an unstoppable momentum. The Salem witch trials of 1692 provided a salutary lesson on the potential dangers of fanaticism, and as immigration became less English-based, with influxes of Huguenots after 1680 and Irish in 1708, Puritan domination decreased and a definite class structure began to emerge.

While the strand of history that began with the Pilgrims is just one among many in the colonization of America – the Spanish were in Santa Fe before the Pilgrims ever left England – the metropolis of Boston deserves to be celebrated as the place where the great project of American independence first captured the popular imagination. This leading port of colonial America was always the likeliest focus of resentment against the latest impositions of the British government, and was ready to take up the challenge thrown down by British Chancellor Townshend in 1767: “I dare tax America.” So many of the seminal moments of the Revolutionary War took place here: the Boston Massacre of 1770, the Boston Tea Party of 1773, and the first shots in nearby Lexington and Concord in 1775.

Once nationhood was secured by the signing of the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776, New England's prosperity was ironically hit hard by the loss of trade with England, and Boston was slowly eclipsed by Philadelphia, New York, and the new capital, Washington. The Triangular Trade in slaves, sugar, and rum provided one substitute source of income, the brief heyday of whaling another. New England was also momentarily at the forefront of the Industrial Revolution, when water-powered mills created a booming textile industry, most of which quickly moved south where wages were scandalously cheaper. The attempt to farm the north, however, foundered: careless techniques served to exhaust the land, and as the vast spaces of the western US opened to settlement, many of the inland towns fell silent.

Massachusetts

To the first colonists of the Massachusetts Bay Company, their arrival near the site of modern Salem in 1629 marked a crucial moment in history. Puritans who had decided to leave England before it was engulfed by civil war saw their purpose, in the words of Governor John Winthrop, as the establishment of a utopian “City upon a hill.” Their new colony of MASSACHUSETTS was to be a beacon to the rest of humanity, an exemplar of sober government along sound spiritual principles. Not all those who followed, however, shared the same motivation; the story is often told of the preacher who told his congregation that they had come to New England to build a new kingdom of God, only to be challenged by a vociferous parishioner who said he had come to fish.

In their own terms, the Puritans were not successful: as waves of immigration brought all kinds of dissenters and free-thinkers from Europe, society in New England inevitably became secular. However, their influence remained. A clarity of thought and forcefulness of purpose can be traced from the foundation of Harvard College in 1636, through the intellectual impetus behind the Revolution and the crusade against slavery, to the nineteenth-century achievements of writers such as Melville, Emerson, Hawthorne, and Thoreau.

Other traditions, too, have helped shape the state – migrants from Ireland and Italy, freed and escaped slaves from the Southern states, Portuguese seamen – even if they have not always been welcome. The anti-immigrant “Know-Nothing” party of the 1850s acquired considerable public support; in 1927, the Italian anarchists Sacco and Vanzetti came up against conservative old Massachusetts, and were framed and executed on murder charges. Despite a strong history of abolitionism and progressive thought, Boston shocked the nation with its violent displays of racial conflict in the 1970s, prompted by public school busing and court-ordered desegregation. The city has since made concerted, largely successful efforts to heal race relations, most notably with the strengthening of business centers in African-American neighborhoods.

Spending a few days in Boston is strongly recommended. While its history is often visible, there’s a great deal of modern life and energy besides, thanks in part to the presence of Cambridge, the home of Harvard University and MIT (Massachusetts Institute of Technology), just across the river. Several historic towns are within easy reach – Salem to the north, Concord and Lexington just inland, and Plymouth to the south. Provincetown, a ninety-minute ferry ride across the bay at the tip of Cape Cod, is great fun to visit, and the rest of the Cape offers old towns and lovely beaches – with the requisite huge crowds. Except for a handful of college towns such as Amherst, western Massachusetts is much quieter; its settlements are naturally concentrated where the land is fertile, such as along the Connecticut River Valley and in the Berkshires to the west.

Getting around Massachusetts

Massachusetts is an easy state to tour on public transportation: planes, trains, and buses all radiate out from Boston; connections to Cape Cod in particular are legion. The Amtrak line that connects Boston with New York, Philadelphia, and Washington DC is the best regional train service in the nation, while the Vermonter gives access to Vermont and Connecticut and (via Springfield) Chicago and Toronto, ON. The affable Downeaster service follows a scenic route that links Boston to Portland, Maine. Buses from Boston are also plentiful. The main east–west artery across the state is I-90 (or “MassPike”); the major north–south route is I-95, which circumnavigates the greater Boston area and affords entry points for its many suburbs.

Boston

Although the metropolitan area of BOSTON has long since expanded to fill the shoreline of Massachusetts Bay, and stretches for miles inland as well, the seventeenth-century port at its heart is still discernible. The tangled roads (former cow paths) clustered around Boston Common are a reminder of how the nation started out, and the city is enjoyably walkable in scale.

Boston was, until 1755, the biggest city in America; as the one most directly affected by the latest whims of the British Crown, it was the natural birthplace for the opposition that culminated in the Revolutionary War. Numerous evocative sites from that era are preserved along the downtown Freedom Trail. Since then, however, Boston has in effect turned its back on the sea. As the third busiest port in the British Empire (after London and Bristol), it stood on a narrow peninsula. What is now Washington Street provided the only access by land, and when the British set off to Lexington in 1775 they embarked in ships from the Common itself. During the nineteenth century, the Charles River marshlands were filled in to create the posh Back Bay residential area. Central Boston is now slightly set back from the water, and until recently, was divided by the hideous John Fitzgerald Expressway that carried I-93 across downtown. In 2006 the city successfully routed the traffic underground and disposed of this eyesore – a project more than a decade in the making, known as “the Big Dig.” While technically complete, The Big Dig remains rife with complications, most notably with the leaks and defaults that continue to plague the tunnels; in 2006 a female passenger was killed when several concrete slabs fell onto her vehicle, closing the Ted Williams Tunnel temporarily.

There is a certain truth in the charge leveled by other Americans that Boston likes to live in the past; echoes of the “Brahmins” of a century ago can be heard in the upper-class drawl of the posher districts. But this is by no means just a city of WASPs: the Irish who began to arrive in large numbers after the Great Famine had produced their first mayor as early as 1885, and the president of the entire nation within a hundred years. The liberal tradition that spawned the Kennedys remains alive, fed in part by the presence in the city of more than one hundred universities and colleges, the most famous of which – Harvard University – is actually in the contiguous city of Cambridge, just across the Charles River.

The slump of the Depression seemed to linger in Boston for years – in the 1950s, the population was actually dwindling – but these days the place has a bright, rejuvenated feel. Quincy Market has served as a blueprint for urban redevelopment worldwide, and the aesthetic effects of the Big Dig have completely reshaped the city – most notably with the elegant, skyline-boosting Zakim Bridge, the newly-christened Rose Kennedy Greenway, and the beautification of the HarborWalk. With its busy street life, imaginative museums and galleries, eminent architecture, and palpable history, Boston is one destination in New England there’s no excuse for missing.

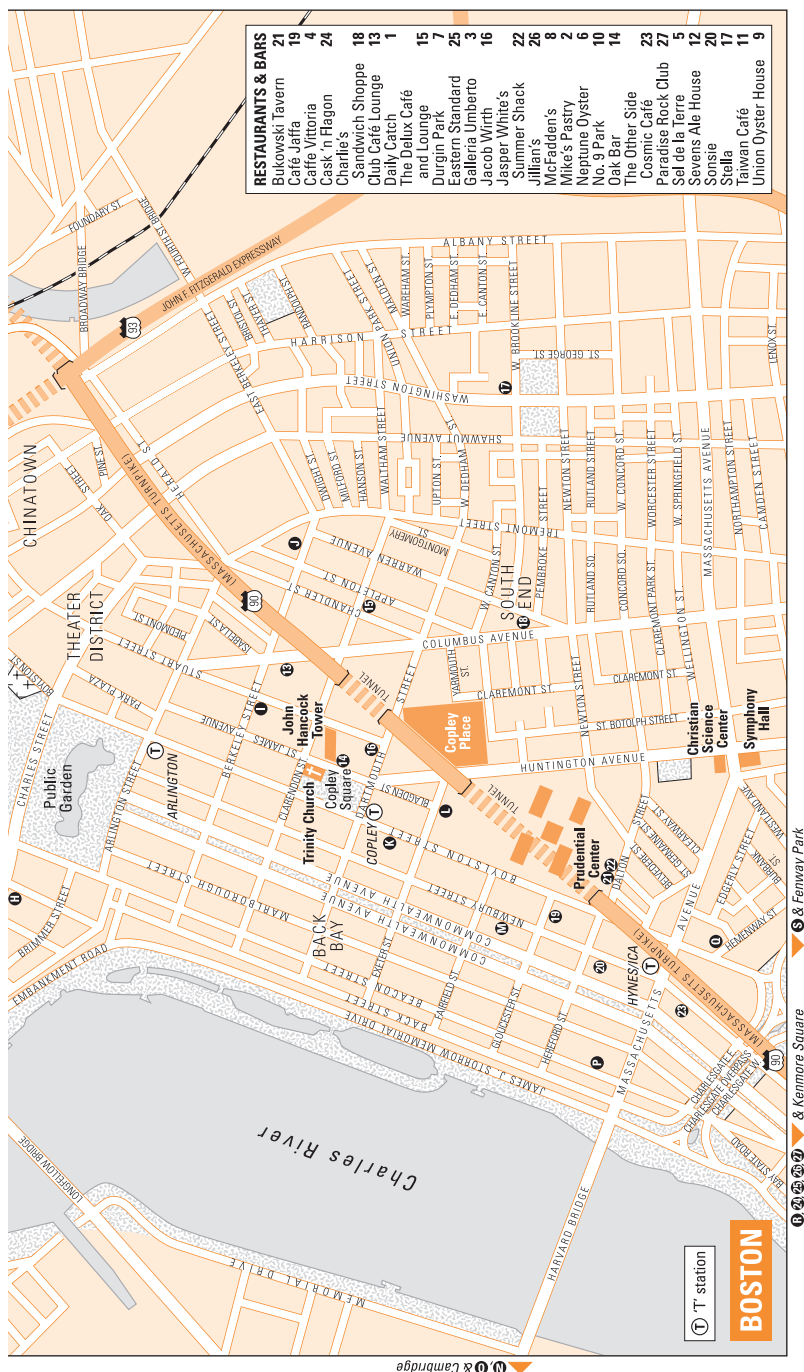

Arrival and information

Boston is the center of New England’s transportation networks. An increasing number of direct flights from Europe means that it provides many visitors with their first taste of America, while efficient rail and bus services from New York, Chicago, and further afield make this an obvious starting point.

By air

Logan Airport (☎617/561-1800 or 1-800/23-LOGAN), busy with both international and domestic services, is a mere three miles from downtown Boston. A taxi into town costs $15–20, plus an extra $6.50 in fees and tolls; the trip should take twenty minutes at its best. Between 4am and 1am, free shuttle buses run every few minutes from all airport terminals to the airport subway station on the MBTA Blue line (see “City transportation and tours,” opposite), from where it’s an easy ten-minute ride to the city center.

By train

Amtrak (☎ 1-800/USA-RAIL, 🌐 www.amtrak.com) trains along the Northeast Corridor from Providence, Washington DC, and New York, and from Chicago and Canada via Springfield, arrive a short walk from downtown Boston near the waterfront at South Station, Summer Street and Atlantic Avenue. The renovated station houses information booths, newsstands, restaurants, and a fantastic old clock, though no currency exchange. The Red subway line inside the station can whisk you to the center of town or out to Cambridge. Some Amtrak services also make an extra stop at Back Bay Station, 145 Dartmouth St, on the Orange subway line near Copley Square. North Station is used by MBTA commuter trains as well the amiable Downeaster, which connects Boston to Portland, Maine, with a number of Maine and New Hampshire stops along the way.

By bus

Several bus companies provide direct links between Boston and the rest of New England. Vermont Transit (☎ 1-800/552-8737, 🌐 www.vermonttransit.com) covers western Massachusetts, New Hampshire’s White Mountains, Vermont, and Montréal; while Concord Trailways (☎ 1-800/639-3317, 🌐 www.concordtrailways.com) runs to southern New Hampshire and up the Maine coast. Heading south, Peter Pan Bus Lines (☎ 1-800/343-9999, 🌐 www.peterpanbus.com) connects Providence and Newport, Cape Cod, and New York City, as well as western Massachusetts. The popular Fung Wah bus offers hourly service to Canal St in New York City (☎ 617/345-8000, 🌐 www.fungwahbus.com) for a mere $15 dollars each way. Greyhound (☎ 1-800/231-2222, 🌐 www.greyhound.com), with its many connections, offers nationwide service. Plymouth and Brockton Bus Co. (☎ 508/746-0378, 🌐 www.p-b.com), serves Cape Cod as well as access to Martha’s Vineyard and Nantucket and has buses that leave from Logan Airport as well as South Station; all other buses leave from South Station (see “By train,” above).

Information

The most convenient place to get advice and maps is the Visitor Information Center (Mon–Sat 8.30am–5pm, Sun 10am–6pm; ☎ 617/536-4100 or 1-888/SEE-BOSTON, 🌐 www.bostonusa.com) near the Park Street subway stop on the Tremont Street side of Boston Common. Across the street from the Old State House, at 15 State St, is an excellent information center maintained by the Boston National Historical Park (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 617/242-5642), as well as bathrooms and a bookstore. There are also information kiosks in Quincy Market, the John Hancock Tower at Copley Square in Back Bay, and in the Prudential Center (also in Back Bay). For advance information, the Boston By Phone service (☎ 1-888/SEE-BOSTON) allows visitors anywhere in North America to connect directly with a wide range of hotels and services. The city’s main post office is located behind South Station (25 Dorchester Ave) and is open twenty-four hours a day (☎ 617/654-5302).

City transportation and tours

Much of the pleasure of visiting Boston comes from being in a city that was built long before cars were invented. Walking around town can be a joy; conversely, driving is an absolute nightmare. The freeways won't take you where you want to go, the one-way traffic systems can have you circling for hours, and if you ever do arrive, parking lots can be very expensive. There's no point renting a car in Boston until the day you leave, especially since the city's public transportation is so good and the local drivers so notoriously bad.

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority (MBTA, known as the “T”) is responsible for Boston's subway system and trolleys. The subway, which opened in 1897, is the oldest in the US; its first station, Park Street, remains its center (any train marked “inbound” is headed here). Four lines – Red, Green, Blue, and Orange – operate daily from 5am until 12.30am, although certain routes begin to shut down earlier. The four lines are supplemented by a bus rapid transit (BRT) route, the Silver Line, which runs aboveground along Washington Street and cuts through the heart of the South End. While maps are posted at each station, it's a good idea to pick up the widely available Rapid Transit maps for reference. Trains are fast and safe; only some parts of the Orange line might be said to be unsafe after dark.

Within the city, the standard fare is $1.25, normally paid with tokens inserted into turnstiles; on some incoming aboveground routes you have to pay extra, up to $3.00 (conversely, some outbound aboveground routes are free). Unfortunately, the city is currently in a very disorganized stage of phasing out the token system in favor of stored value cards (or “CharlieTickets”). Don't be misled – many subway stops still aren't set up to accept a CharlieTicket; during the interim period, it's best to stick with tokens. Your safest bet is the Boston Visitor Pass which seamlessly covers all subway and local bus journeys (as well as the ferry to Charlestown) at a cost of $7.50 for a day, $18 for three days, or $35 for a week. For MBTA information call ☎ 617/222-5215 or 1-800/392-6100, or visit 🌐 www.mbta.com.

The normal fare on MBTA's local buses is 90¢, but longer distances, such as out to Salem or Marblehead, cost up to $3.45. MBTA also runs commuter rail lines, extending as far as Salem, Concord, and Providence, RI; destinations north leave from North Station (☎ 617/222-3200) on Causeway Street, under the TDBanknorth Garden; destinations south leave from (you guessed it) South Station (☎ 617/222-3200) on Summer Street and Atlantic Avenue, by the waterfront.

In and around Boston are some eighty miles of bike trails. Bicycles can be rented from Boston Bicycle, 842 Beacon St (☎ 617/236-0752; 🌐 www.cambridgebicycle.com) or at their sister location, Cambridge Bicycle, in Cambridge (259 Massachusetts Avenue; near MIT; ☎ 617/876-6555; 🌐 www.cambridgebicycle.com), and from Boston Bike Tours and Rentals, near the Visitor Information Center on Boston Common (☎ 617/308-5902; 🌐 www.bostonbiketours.com). Rentals are around $25 per day.

City tours

It's easy enough to get to know Boston by following the Freedom Trail on foot (see p.209). If you prefer to be guided, though, narrated trips run throughout the day aboard the hundred-minute Old Town Trolley Tours (☎ 617/269-7150; 🌐 www.trolleytours.com; $29, kids aged 4–12, $5) or the similarly priced Discover Boston Trolley Tours (☎ 617/742-1440, 🌐 www.discoverbostontours.com), which specializes in narrated audio tours in multiple languages. But nothing is as popular (or as novel) as a Boston Duck Tour (adults $26, kids 3–11 $17; ☎ 617/267-DUCK, 🌐 www.bostonducktours.com), an entertaining romp by land and by sea aboard a real WWII amphibious landing vehicle. Tours depart from the Prudential Center as well as the Museum of Science, March through November. The Boston National Historical Park, 15 State St (☎ 617/242-5642; 🌐 www.nps.gov/bost), conducts free, ranger-led tours centering on a number of Freedom Trail hotspots. Also useful are the bus excursions further afield to Lexington, Concord, Salem, and Plymouth with Brush Hill Tours/Gray Line (☎1-800/343-1328, 🌐www.brushhilltours.com or www.grayline.com). Boston Bike Tours (☎617/308-5902, 🌐www.bostonbiketours.com) can take you around for a couple of gentle hours by bike. Tours begin from the Boston Common at 11am on Saturdays and Sundays and cost about $25 ($20 if you have your own bike).

Accommodation

Good-quality, inexpensive accommodation is hard to find in Boston – any hotel room within walking distance of downtown for under $200 has to be considered a bargain. One enjoyable and affordable way of staying in the Boston area is to use a B&B agency. The excellent B&B Agency of Boston (☎617/720-3540 or 1-800/248-9262; in the UK ☎0800/895128, 🌐www.boston-bnbagency.com), offers hundreds of properties across the city for $70–160 a night. Host Homes of Boston (☎617/244-1308 or 1-800/600-1308, 🌐www.hosthomeshofboston.com) provides a similar service; Boston Reservations (☎781/547-5427, 🌐www.bostonreservations.com) also makes hotel reservations at reduced rates.

Hotels, motels, and B&Bs

463 Beacon Street Guest House 463 Beacon St ☎617/536-1302, 🌐www.463beacon.com; Hynes T. Good-sized rooms available by the night, week, or month; many come with kitchenettes. There are some less expensive rooms with shared baths. Ask for the top-floor room. 4–7

Beacon Hill Hotel 25 Charles St ☎617/723-7575 or 1-888/959-BHHB, 🌐www.beaconhillhotel.com; Charles T. Pampered luxury in the heart of Beacon Hill; the thirteen sleek chambers come with flat-screen televisions, high-speed internet access, and balconies. They also house a fantastic bistro and fireplace bar. 9

Charles Hotel 1 Bennett St ☎617/864-1200 or 1-800/882-1818, 🌐www.charleshotel.com; Copley T. Clean, bright rooms in the heart of Harvard Square, with a good array of modern amenities. They also house an excellent jazz club, Regattabar, as well as the iconic restaurant Henrietta's Table. 7–9

Charlesmark Hotel 655 Boylston St ☎617/247-1212, 🌐www.thecharlesmark.com; Copley T. 33 smallish, contemporary rooms with cozy beechwood furnishings, and modern accoutrements like in-room CD players and wireless internet. They also have a great staff and some of the best rates for the area. 7–9

Courtyard Boston Copley Square 88 Exeter St ☎1-800/321-2211, 🌐www.courtyardboston.com; Copley T. Luxurious rooms, modern accents, great service, and a nice location in Back Bay make this a Boston standout. 8–9

Harborside Inn 185 State St ☎617/723-7500, 🌐www.hagopianhotels.com; State T. Cozy hotel featuring exposed brick, hardwood floors, and cherry furniture in a renovated 1890s mercantile warehouse; across from Quincy Market and the

Custom House. Rates drop some $30 a night Dec–March. 7

Irving House 24 Irving St, Cambridge ☎617/547-4600, 🌐www.irvinghouse.com; Harvard T. Excellent, friendly option near Harvard Square with laundry facilities and breakfast included; both shared and private baths. Birthday specials, too. 9–7

The John Jeffries House 14 David G. Mugar Way ☎617/367-1866, 🌐www.johnjeffrieshouse.com; Charles T. Mid-scale hotel at the foot of Beacon Hill, with a cozy lounge and Victorian-style rooms; single-occupancy studios include kitchenettes. 9–7

Jurys Boston Hotel 64 Arlington St ☎617/266-7200, 🌐www.jurysdoyle.com; Back Bay T. A modern hotel with an historic (it's housed in the former Boston police headquarters), Irish bent, Jurys features stylish rooms equipped with wireless internet, a fitness center, and the swanky Stanhope Grille. 8–9

 Marriott's Custom House 3 McKinley Square ☎617/310-6300, 🌐www.marriott.com; Aquarium T. While it's no longer the tallest skyscraper in New England (a title it held in the nineteenth century), it continues to have gorgeous, jaw-dropping views of the harbor, historic, elegantly appointed rooms, high-speed internet, great service, and a fantastic location. 8–9

Newbury Guest House 261 Newbury St ☎617/437-7666, 🌐www.newburyguesthouse.com; Copley T. Well-located, big, 32-room Victorian brownstone house, with rates at the lower end of Boston's price range. Continental breakfast included. Rates go down substantially Dec–Feb. 9–7

Nine Zero 90 Tremont St, ☎617/772-5800, 🌐www.ninezero.com; Park T. Probably Boston's trendiest accommodation, with hip, modern furnishings, a fancy cheese plate to welcome you, and beds so lovely they had to start selling them retail.

⑦—⑨

Omni Parker House 60 School St ☎617/227-8600 or 1-800/843-6664, www.omniparkerhouse.com; Park T. The oldest continuously running hotel in the US (as well as the originators of Boston cream pie), the Omni Parker House features a gorgeous, gilded lobby, modern renovations (including high-speed internet), and some of downtown's better room rates. ③

Hostels

Berkeley Residence YWCA 40 Berkeley St ☎617/375-2524, www.ywca-boston.org /berkeley; Back Bay T. Clean and simple rooms next door to a police station. All rates include breakfast; dinner is an additional $7.50. Singles are ($60), doubles ($90), and triples ($105) in a convenient South End location. Stays for longer than two weeks are only available to women.

Boston Backpackers Hostel 234 Friend St ☎617/723-0800, www.bostonbackpackers.com; North Station T. Dorm beds for $30 (includes linens). Be forewarned – the hostel is adjacent to Hooters – however it's above the more appealing Bulfinch Yacht Club, which provides (limited) free food for hostellers. Hostel is about 5 minutes' walk north of Faneuil Hall.

Hi-Boston 12 Hemenway St ☎617/536-9455, www.bostonhostel.org; Hynes T. Located in the Fenway area, close to the hip end of Newbury St and the Lansdowne St clubs, this is one of Boston's better hostel options. Free internet access and a safe, clean environment. Dorm beds are $35–38 a night. In summer, book ahead, or check in at 8am, to be sure of a place.

Hi-Fenway Summer Hostel 575 Commonwealth Ave ☎617/267-8599, www.bostonhostel.org; Kenmore T. A summer-only hostel (June 1–Aug 18) that functions as a BU dorm in winter months; it's perhaps the best hostel in Boston. Spacious rooms and a great location within walking distance of nightclubs and Fenway Park. Members $35, nonmembers $38.

Prescott International Hotel and Hostel 36 Church St, Everett ☎617/389-1990, www.theprescotthotel.com; Sullivan Square T. It's a few minutes away on the T, but the Prescott hotel offers clean, affordable digs (dorm beds $30). Plus John Lennon was once a guest.

YMCA of Greater Boston 316 Huntington Ave ☎617/937-8040 www.ymca-boston.org; North-eastern T. Good budget rooms, and access to the Y's health facilities (pool, weight room, etc). Singles are $46–66, but you can get a four-person room for $96. Co-ed June–Sept, otherwise men-only.

The City

Boston has grown up around Boston Common, a utilitarian chunk of green established for public use and “the feeding of cattell” in 1634. A good starting point for a tour of the city, it is also one of the links in the string of nine parks (six of which were designed by Frederick Law Olmsted, America's foremost landscape architect) known as Boston's Emerald Necklace. Another piece is the lovely Public Garden, across Charles Street from the Common, where Boston's iconic swan boats (☎617/522-9666, www.swanboats.com; $2.75), paddle the main pond amidst tulip-strewn greenery.

The visitor center, which marks the start of the Freedom Trail, is near the tapering east end of the Common. As you stand here, facing up Tremont Street with the State House away to your left, the main shopping district, Quincy Market, and the waterfront are slightly ahead and down to the right. The modern concrete wasteland of Government Center is straight up Tremont Street, with the beloved North End beyond – first Irish, then Jewish, and now a very Italian enclave. A short way behind you on the left rises lofty Beacon Hill, every bit as elegant as when Henry James called Mount Vernon Street “the most prestigious address in America” (far removed from its eighteenth-century nickname of “Mount Whoredom”). Heading away from the center down Tremont Street brings you to Chinatown and the Theater District, while grand boulevards such as Commonwealth Avenue lead west from the Public Garden into the Back Bay, where Harvard Bridge runs across the Charles River into Cambridge.

The Freedom Trail

Probably the best way to orient yourself in downtown Boston – and to appreciate the city's role in American history – is to walk some or all of the Freedom Trail.

△ Public Garden

You can pick up or leave this easy self-guided route anywhere – a line of red bricks (or red paint) marking the trail is embedded in the pavement – but technically it begins on Boston Common at the Visitor Information Center.

From here, head for the golden dome of the Massachusetts State House (free tours Mon–Fri 10am–3.30pm); a Charles Bulfinch design completed in 1798. It remains the seat of Massachusetts’ government; its most famous feature, a carved fish dubbed the “Sacred Cod,” symbolizes the wealth Boston accrued from maritime trade. Politicos take this symbol so seriously that when Harvard pranksters stole it in the 1930s the House didn’t reconvene until it was recovered.

Though Park Street Church (July & Aug Tues–Sat 8.30am–3.30pm; rest of year by appointment; free) is by no means “the most interesting mass of bricks and mortar in America,” as Henry James once claimed, its ornate white steeple is undeniably impressive. It was here, on July 4, 1829, that orator William Lloyd Garrison delivered his first public address calling for the nationwide abolition of slavery. Just around the corner, the atmospheric Old Granary Burying Ground (daily 9am–5pm; free) includes the Revolutionary remains of Paul Revere, Samuel Adams, and John Hancock, as well as those of the so-called Mother Goose, née Elizabeth Vergoose (or Vertigoose), said to have collected nursery rhymes for her grandchildren. A block or so north on Tremont is the ethereal King’s Chapel Burying Ground (daily 9.30am–5pm; free) final resting place for seventeenth-century luminaries such as Mary Chilton, woman of the Mayflower, and Boston’s first governor, John Winthrop. Nearby on School Street, a statue of Benjamin Franklin marks the site of Boston Latin School, America’s first public school, attended by Franklin (who later dropped out) and Samuel Adams. Malcolm X and Ho Chi Minh are both former employs of the Omni Parker House Hotel (not officially on the Trail) the longest continuously operating luxury hotel in the nation and home of the first-ever Boston cream pie.

Next come two of the Trail's more striking and significant buildings. The Old South Meeting House (daily: April–Oct 9.30am–5pm; Nov–March 10am–4pm; $5) is where Samuel Adams pronounced “this meeting can do nothing more to save the country” – the signal that triggered the Boston Tea Party on December 16, 1773. Considered to be the first major act of rebellion preceding the Revolutionary War, it was a carefully-planned event wherein one hundred men, mostly dressed in Indian garb, solemnly threw enough British tea into the harbor to make 24 million cuppas. The elegant Old State House, built in 1712, was the seat of Colonial government, and from its balcony the Declaration of Independence was first publicly-read in Boston on July 18, 1776; two hundred years later Queen Elizabeth II stepped out onto that same balcony. Inside is a decent museum of Boston history (daily 9am–5pm; $5). Outside, a circle of cobblestones set on a traffic island at the intersection of Devonshire and State streets marks the site of the Boston Massacre on March 5, 1770, when British soldiers fired on a crowd that was pelting them with stone-filled snowballs, and killed five, including Crispus Attucks, a former slave.

Lively Quincy Market and Faneuil Hall Marketplace (a ten-minute walk northeast from here; daily 10am–8pm; free) is where to refuel at restaurants and takeaway food stalls or shop for souvenirs. The market is a pioneer example of successful urban renewal (by the same developer who transformed London's Covent Garden). Faneuil Hall (daily 9am–5pm; free) was, however, once known as the “Cradle of Liberty,” a meeting place for Revolutionaries and, later, abolitionists. Nearby on Union Street, step off the Freedom Trail to visit The New England Holocaust Memorial – lofty, hollow glass pillars etched with six million numbers recalling the tattoos the Nazis gave its victims. Its smokestack design is particularly striking at night, when the steam that rises from the pillars is lit up from within.

Passing over Surface Street (formerly a massive, aboveground expressway) and into the North End, you reach Paul Revere House, Boston's last surviving seventeenth-century house (daily: mid-April–Oct 9.30am–5.15pm; Nov–mid-April Tues–Sun 9.30am–4.15pm; $3), built after the Great Fire of 1676, and home to Paul Revere – patriot, silversmith, Freemason, and father of sixteen children – from 1770 until 1800. When Revere embarked upon his famous ride of April 18, 1775, to warn Samuel Adams and John Hancock (as well as the residents of Lexington, MA) that the British were assembling for an attack, two lanterns were hung from the belfry of Old North Church, 193 Salem St (daily: June–Oct 9am–6pm; Nov–May 9am–5pm; free), to alert Charlestown in case he got caught. Up the hill on Hull Street, from Copp's Hill Burial Ground (daily 9am–5pm; free), you can see across the harbor to Charlestown; as indeed could the British, who planted their artillery here for the Battle of Bunker Hill.

Next, the Freedom Trail crosses the Charlestown Bridge, a fairly long walk. Its final two sites are better reached by the frequent ferries from Long Wharf to Charlestown Navy Yard (Mon–Fri every 15–30mins 6.30am–8pm, Sat & Sun every 30mins 10am–6pm; $1.50 each way).

The celebrated USS Constitution, also known as “Old Ironsides,” is the oldest commissioned warship still afloat in the world. Launched in Boston in 1797, she earned her nickname during the War of 1812, when advancing cannonballs bounced off her hull; she subsequently saw 33 battles without ever losing one. Free tours of the ship are led every half-hour (daily 10am–5.50pm, last tour at 3.30pm; @www.usconstitution.navy.mil). Across the way, the USS Constitution Museum (daily: summer 9am–6pm; rest of year 10am–5pm; free) houses

The Black Heritage Trail

Massachusetts was the first state to declare slavery illegal, in 1783 – partly as a result of black participation in the Revolutionary War – and a large community of free blacks and escaped slaves swiftly grew in the North End and on Beacon Hill. Very few blacks live in either place today, but the Black Heritage Trail traces Beacon Hill's key role in local and national black history – perhaps the most important historical site in America devoted to pre-Civil War African-American history and culture.

Pick up the Trail either at 46 Joy St, where the Abiel Smith School contains a Museum of Afro-American History (summer daily 10am–4pm; rest of year Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; free), and rotates a number of well-tailored exhibits centered on abolitionism and African-American history, or at the African Meeting House at 8 Smith Court (off Joy St), for displays and talks from well-informed rangers. Built in 1806 as the country's first African-American church, this became known as “Black Faneuil Hall” during the abolitionist campaign; Frederick Douglass issued his call here for all blacks to take up arms in the Civil War. Among those who responded were the volunteers of the Massachusetts 54th Regiment, commemorated by a monument at the edge of Boston Common, opposite the State House, which depicts their farewell march down Beacon Street. Robert Lowell won a Pulitzer Prize for his poem, “For the Union Dead,” about this monument, and the regiment's tragic end at Fort Wagner was depicted in the movie Glory.

From the monument, the Trail winds around Beacon Hill, and includes a stop at the imposing Lewis and Harriet Hayden House. Once a stop on the famous “Underground Railroad,” the Haydens sheltered hundreds of runaway slaves from bounty-hunters in pursuit.

While it's easy enough to traverse it on your own, the best way to experience the Trail is by taking a National Park Service walking tour (Mon–Sat 10am, noon, & 2pm; call to reserve; free; ☎617/742-5415, @www.nps.gov/boaf).

well-tailored displays on the history of the ship; upstairs is more fun-oriented, with hands-on sailorly exhibits testing your ability to balance on a footrope and helping to pinpoint whether your comrades have scurvy or gout. Beyond the museum, the Bunker Hill Monument sits on Breed's Hill, the actual site of the battle fought on June 17, 1775, which, while technically won by the British, invigorated the patriots, whose strong showing felled nearly half the British troops. A spiral staircase of 294 steps leads to sweeping views at the top; a small museum (daily 9am–4.30pm; free) at the base has dated but informative exhibits on the battle.

The waterfront

Boston's waterfront has recently seen major revitalization efforts – inviting fountains, well-maintained green spaces, and historic signage have all started popping up – making it a great spot for a warm weather stroll. Wisteria-laden Columbus Park, next to the centrally-located Marriott Long Wharf Hotel, is a pretty place to lounge and picnic. Faneuil Hall originally stood at the head of Long Wharf, which stuck out nearly two thousand feet into the harbor; it also served as the site of the final British evacuation on March 17, 1776. Later, a thousand-foot expanse of the waterfront was filled in, and the Custom House Tower, once the tallest skyscraper in New England, was erected to mark the end of the wharf. It too now finds itself inland; although its observation deck offers terrific harbor views (3 McKinley Square; ☎617/310-6300; free).

Close by on Central Wharf, the New England Aquarium (July & Aug Mon–Thurs 9am–6pm, Fri–Sun 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–6pm; $17.95, kids $9.95) has an outdoor pool of basking sea otters. Inside, a colossal, three-story glass cylindrical tank is packed with giant sea turtles, moray eels, and sharks as well as a range of other ocean exotica that swim by in unsettling proximity. Scuba divers hand-feed the fish five times a day, and sea lion shows are held in a floating amphitheater alongside.

It's hard to miss the Children's Museum, 300 Congress St (Mon–Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–9pm; $9, kids $7; Fri 5–9pm $1) marked as it is by a whimsical Boston icon: a forty-foot tall Hood milk bottle (it doubles as an ice-cream parlor and hot-dog stand). The museum's four floors of educational exhibits are craftily designed to trick kids into learning about a huge array of topics, from musicology to the engineering of a humongous bubble. Before leaving, check out the Recycle Shop where industrial leftovers are transformed into appealing craft-fodder.

The Museum of Science

At the northern end of the waterfront, clear across the Boston peninsula from the Children's Museum, the beloved Museum of Science (July to early Sept Mon–Thurs, Sat & Sun 9am–7pm, Fri 9am–9pm; Sept–June Mon–Thurs, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm, Fri 9am–9pm; $16, kids $13; Science Park T) has several floors of interactive exhibits illustrating basic principles of natural and physical science. An impressive IMAX cinema takes up the full height of one end of the building, and the Hayden Planetarium pays its way with semi-rocking laser shows including the infamous “Laser Floyd: Dark Side of the Moon.” ($9; call ☎617/723-2500 for showtimes).

Back Bay and beyond

Beginning in 1857, the spacious boulevards and elegant houses of Back Bay were fashioned along gradually filled-in portions of former Charles River marshland. Thus a walk through the area from east to west provides an impressive visual timeline of Victorian architecture. One of the most architecturally significant of its buildings is the Romanesque Trinity Church, 206 Clarendon St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5.30pm; $5), whose stunning interior was built to feel like “walking into a living painting.” Towering over the church is Boston's signature skyscraper, the John Hancock Tower, an elegant wedge designed by I.M. Pei. Nearby Newbury Street is an atmospheric and inviting stretch of swanky boutiques, cafés, and art galleries.

The Christian Science Center at Huntington and Massachusetts avenues is the “Mother Church” of the First Church of Christ Scientist, and the home of the Christian Science Monitor newspaper; Nelson Mandela made a point of paying a personal visit in 1990 to thank the paper for its support of his release from prison. The complex houses the marvelous Mapparium (Tues–Sun 10am–4pm; $6), a curious, 30-ft stained-glass globe through which you can walk on a footbridge. The globe's best feature is its lack of sound absorption, which enables a tiny whisper spoken at one end of the bridge to be easily heard by someone at the other.

Further south, beyond the boundaries of Back Bay and a long enough walk to warrant taking the “T’s” green line (take the train marked “E” to the “Museum” stop), is the Museum of Fine Arts at 465 Huntington Ave (Mon & Tues 10am–4.45pm, Wed–Fri 10am–9.45pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4.45pm; $15, which includes a free repeat visit within 30 days; Wed after 4pm suggested donation only; ☎617/267-9300, 🌐www.mfa.org). From its magnificent collections of Asian and ancient Egyptian art onwards, the MFA (as it's known) holds sufficient marvels to detain you all day. High points include Edward Hopper's tranquil, hopeful Room in Brooklyn (American Modern room); Degas' The Little Dancer; Gauguin's sumptuous display of existential angst Where do we come from, What are we, Where are we going? (Impressionists room); Millet's The Sower (English and French room); and Botero's voluptuous Venus, bold sentinel of the West Wing lobby. Don't miss the American Decorative Arts, either: a gloriously nostalgic jamboree of coffee urns, speak-your-weight machines, and reconstructed living rooms. The I.M. Pei-designed West Wing holds special exhibits and the contemporary art collection.

Less broad in its collection, but more distinctive and idiosyncratic than the MFA, is the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, down the road at 280 The Fenway (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm; $12; free admission for those named “Isabella”; ☎617/566-1401, @www.gardnermuseum.org). Styled after a fifteenth-century Venetian villa, the Gardner brims with a dazzling hodgepodge of works meant to “fire the imagination.” While it's best known for its spectacular central courtyard, the museum's greatest successes are its show-stopping pieces by John Singer Sargent, including a stunning portrait of Isabella herself. Weekend concerts are held on select Friday nights as well as on Sunday afternoons; tickets cost an additional $13.

Cambridge

The excursion across the Charles River to Cambridge merits at least half a day, and begins with a fifteen-minute ride on the Red T line to Harvard Square. This is not so much a square as a number of interlocking streets, filled with small shopping malls and bookstores, at the point where Massachusetts Avenue runs into JFK and Brattle streets. It's an exceptionally lively area, filled with students from nearby Harvard University and MIT, and in the summer, street musicians are a common sight. The Cambridge Visitor Information Booth here (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎617/441-2884) sporadically organizes walking tours in summer, and sells local maps and guides. Additional info (as well as free internet access) is available from the Harvard Events & Information Center, Holyoke Center, 1350 Massachusetts Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎617/495-1573, @www.hno.harvard.edu), which also arranges student-led tours of the campus.

Feel free to wander into Harvard Yard and around the core of the university, founded in 1636; its enormous Widener Library (named for a victim of the Titanic) boasts a Gutenberg Bible and a first folio of Shakespeare. Five minutes' walk west along Brattle Street (at no. 105) is the best known of the Brattle Street mansions, the Longfellow House (June–Oct Wed–Sun 10am–4.30pm, tours hourly 10.30am–11.30am & 1–4pm; ☎617/876-4491; $3), named after the author of Hiawatha, who lived here until 1882. Its halls and walls are festooned with Longfellow's furniture and art collection, best of which are the stunning pieces culled from the Far East. Dexter Pratt, immortalized in Longfellow's “Under the spreading chestnut tree, the village smithy stands,” lived at 56 Brattle St; a marker on the corner of Brattle and Story streets commemorates the exalted tree.

Cambridge has several first-class art museums, along with more specialized science museums, with a few engaging exhibits of note. The Harvard University Art Museums (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $7.50, free on Sat before noon; ☎617/495-9400) encompass over 150,000 works of art, spread across three museums. Highlights of Harvard's substantial collection of Western art are showcased in the Fogg Art Museum, 32 Quincy St, while the Busch-Reisinger Museum (on the second floor) has a small yet excellent selection which focuses on German Expressionists and Bauhaus works. Just steps away at 485 Broadway, the Arthur M. Sackler Museum is devoted to classical, Asian, and Islamic art. The stellar Harvard Museum of Natural History, 26 Oxford St (daily 9am–5pm; $7.50), features a number of freakishly huge dinosaur fossils as well as a visually stunning collection of flower models constructed entirely from glass.

Also on the Harvard campus, the Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts, 34 Quincy St, houses a more or less impressive student art gallery, as well as the Harvard Film Archive, which screens a diverse selection of foreign and independent films, seven nights a week ($8 general public, $6 for students; ☎617/495-4700, @www.harvardfilmarchive.org).

A couple of miles southeast of Harvard Square is the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), whose List Visual Arts Center, 20 Ames St (Tues–Thurs, Sat & Sun noon–6pm, Fri noon–8pm; ☎617/253-4680), exhibits contemporary art in all media, including photography and video, and often has accompanying lectures.

Lexington and Concord

On the night of April 18, 1775, Paul Revere rode down what is now Massachusetts Avenue from Boston, racing through Cambridge and Arlington on his way to warn the American patriots gathered at Lexington (eleven miles to the west) of an impending British attack. Close behind him was a force of more than seven hundred British soldiers, intent on seizing the supplies that they knew the “rebels” had hoarded at Concord further north.

Although much of Revere’s route has been turned into major freeways, the various settings of the first military confrontation of the Revolutionary War – “the shot heard ‘round the world” – remain much as they were then. The triangular Town Common at Lexington was where the British encountered the opposition. Captain John Parker ordered his 77 American “Minutemen” to “stand your ground. Don’t fire unless fired upon, but if they mean to have a war let it begin here.” No one knows who fired the first shot, but the eight soldiers that died are buried beneath a surprisingly affecting memorial at the southeast end of the park. One wounded soldier crawled across the road to his home, only to die at his wife’s feet (the still-standing house, on the corner of Harrington and Bedford streets, displays a commemorative plaque). Guides in period costume lead tours of the Buckman Tavern, where the Minutemen waited for the British to arrive; the Hancock-Clarke House, a quarter of a mile north, where Samuel Adams and John Hancock were awakened by Paul Revere, is now a museum; and one mile east of the Town Common, the Munroe Tavern was occupied by the British as a makeshift hospital and headquarters (all three Mon–Sat 10.30am–4.30pm, Sun 1pm–5pm; $5 each, $12 to visit all).

By the time the British soldiers marched on Concord, on the morning after the encounter in Lexington, the surrounding countryside was up in arms, and the Revolutionary War was in full swing. In running battles in the town itself, and along the still-evocative Battle Road leading back toward Boston, 73 British soldiers and 49 colonials were killed over the next two days. The relevant sites now form the Minuteman National Historic Park, with visitor centers at the scenic North Bridge, 174 Liberty St, in Concord, and at Battle Road in Lexington. Paul Revere’s ride and the Battle of Lexington are re-enacted annually on Patriots’ Day, a city holiday on the third Monday in April.

After a morning spent denouncing eighteenth-century British rule, it’s customary to indulge in a quintessential British activity – high tea – at the historic Concord Inn (Fri–Sun 3pm–5pm; ☎978/369-2372; reservations recommended; $9.50–$22).

South of Concord, Walden Pond was where Henry David Thoreau conducted the experiment in solitude and self-sufficiency described in his 1854 book Walden. “I did not feel crowded or confined in the least,” he wrote of life in his simple log cabin. The site where it stood is marked with stones, and at dawn you can still watch the pond “throwing off its nightly clothing of mist” (at midday, it’s a great spot for swimming and hiking). Thoreau is interred, along with Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorne, and Louisa May Alcott, atop a hill in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, just east of the center of Concord.

△ Minute Man statue in Lexington's Battle Green

As well as guided bus tours from Boston (see p.207), buses (25min) run to Lexington from Alewife Station, at the northern end of the Red T line, and trains to Concord run from North Station (40min; $5 one way).

Eating

Boston is brimming with a hearty range of culinary options. Above all, there's seafood, especially lobsters, scrod (a generic term for young, white-fleshed fish), clams (served steamed and dipped in butter, or as creamy chowder), and oysters (some of the world's best come fresh daily from Wellfleet and other Cape Cod spots). You could base a day's tour of the different neighborhoods around the foods on offer: breakfast in the cafés of Beacon Hill; lunch in the food plazas of Quincy Market or The Garage on JFK Street in Cambridge, or dim sum in Chinatown; for dinner, a budget Indian restaurant in Cambridge, an Italian place around Hanover Street in the North End, or expensive seafood overlooking the Harbor.

The central aisle of Quincy Market, lined with restaurants and brasseries, is superb for all kinds of takeout, including fresh clams and lobster, ethnic dishes, fruit cocktails, and cookies, which you can buy from different vendors and eat in the central seating area.

Chinatown, where restaurants stay open until 2 or 3am, is the best place for late-night dining.

Boston

Café Jaffa 48 Gloucester St ☎617/536-0230;

Copley T. One of Back Bay's best inexpensive dining options, with great Middle Eastern fare served up in an inviting space. They're known for their falafel and locally-famous lamb chops, but you can't really go wrong here.

Charlie's Sandwich Shoppe 429 Columbus Ave ☎617/536-7669; Back Bay T. The long lines out front should tell you – Charlie's is widely regarded as the best breakfast in Boston, with greasy spoon fare (and famous turkey hash) served up in delightful vintage diner environs. Closed Sundays, cash only.

Daily Catch 323 Hanover St ☎617/523-8567 and 261 Northern Ave ☎617/338-3093; Haymarket T and South Station T. Ocean-fresh seafood, notably calamari and shellfish – Sicilian-style, with megadoses of garlic – draws big lines to this tiny storefront restaurant.

The Delux Café and Lounge 100 Chandler St ☎617/338-5258; Back Bay T. This retro hideaway has all the fixings of a great dive: fantastic kitschy décor, constant cartoon viewing, and a Christmas-lit Elvis shrine. The menu is funky American fusion with old standbys like grilled cheese sandwiches and split pea soup. Cash only.

Durgin Park 340 N Market St, Faneuil Hall Marketplace ☎617/227-2038; Government Center T. A Boston landmark in operation since 1827, Durgin Park has a waitstaff known for their surly charm as well as iconic New England foods like roast beef, baked beans, and warm Indian pudding. The downstairs bar is cheaper and livelier.

Eastern Standard 528 Commonwealth Ave ☎617/532-9100; Kenmore T. Loosely French bistro serving up fairly fancy, pre-Red Sox game fare. The menu can be a bit hit or miss – go for the spaghetti carbonara and veal schnitzel – or just to watch the game in their atmospheric bar.

 Galleria Umberto 289 Hanover St ☎617/227-5709; Haymarket T. North End nirvana. There are fewer than a dozen items on the menu, but the lines are consistently to the door for Umberto's perfect pizza slices and arancini. Lunch only, and get there early – they always sell out. Cash only; very inexpensive.

Jacob Wirth 31 Stuart St ☎617/338-8586; Boylston T. A German-themed Boston landmark, around since 1868; even if you don't like bratwurst washed down with a hearty lager, something is sure to please. There are sing-alongs on Fridays.

Jasper White's Summer Shack 50 Dalton St ☎617/867-9955; Hynes T. Spacious seafood locale with kitschy maritime décor and lots of seating. The raw bar is tops, and the grilled fish fare is also quite good. Plus they have corn dogs.

Mike's Pastry 300 Hanover St ☎617/742-3050; Haymarket T. Simply breathing in the aromas at this lively Italian pastry shop is an exercise in indulgence. Endless, fantastic arrays of cannolis, éclairs, and rum cakes.

Neptune Oyster 63 Salem St ☎617/742-3474; Haymarket T. Snazzy little raw bar filled with devoted fans who swoon over the fantastic shucked shellfish. Closed Mon and Tues.

No. 9 Park 9 Park St ☎617/742-9991; Park St T. Highly recommended restaurant with affable green walls and plates busy with French and Italian entrées. A seven-course tasting menu ($85; with wine $135) allows you to try almost everything.

The Other Side Cosmic Café 407 Newbury St ☎617/536-9477; Hynes T. This ultracausal hipster hangout on "the other side" of Newbury Street offers gourmet sandwiches, tasty salads, and fresh juices. They also have pitchers of good beer. Open late.

Sel de la Terre 255 State St ☎617/720-1300; Aquarium T. Sel de la Terre serves up rustic Provençal fare like hearty bouillabaisse and roasted lamb and eggplant. Conveniently, you can acquire the fixings for a waterfront picnic here, too, by calling ahead to order ($11/person) and picking it up on your way to the ferry.

Sonsie 327 Newbury St ☎617/351-2500, Hynes T. This Newbury Street staple is good for contemporary bistro fare, particularly the swanky sandwiches, pastries, and chocolate bread pudding.

Stella 1525 Washington St ☎617/247-7747; Back Bay T. Fantastic, fancy-pants Italian fare in a beautiful white interior. Nice outdoor seating in the summer. Open late.

Taiwan Café 34 Oxford St ☎617/426-8181; Chinatown T. Locals swoon over this busy, authentic Taiwanese eatery which serves up mustard greens with edamame (soybean) and steamed pork buns done just right. Open late. Cash only.

Union Oyster House 41 Union St ☎617/227-2750; Government Center T. The oldest continuously operating restaurant in the nation features fresh, well-prepared seafood, if a bit overpriced.

Cambridge

 Mr Bartley's Burger Cottage 1246 Massachusetts Ave, ☎617/354-6559; Harvard T. A Cambridge must-visit. Perhaps the best burgers on the planet washed down with raspberry lime rickies amongst Americana-festooned environs. Good veggie burgers, too. Cash only.

Bob's Southern Bistro 604 Columbus Ave, Roxbury ☎617/536-6204; Mass Ave T. The best soul food in New England, with good chitlins, black-eyed peas, and collard greens; don't miss the "glori-fried chicken." There's also a wonderful, waist-expanding Sunday brunch buffet accompanied by live jazz.

Central Kitchen 567 Massachusetts Ave, ☎617/491-5599; Central T. Hip Central Square bistro with a delightful chalkboard menu offering European classics (moules frites) and contemporary American twists (mushroom ragout with ricotta dumplings) in a stylish, intimate setting.

Charlie's Kitchen 10 Eliot St ☎617/492-9646;

Harvard T. Marvelously atmospheric local hangout in the heart of Harvard Square, with red vinyl booths and great cheeseburger specials. The bar upstairs is equally cool, particularly during Tuesday's karaoke nights.

Chez Henri 1 Shepard St ☎617/354-8980; Harvard or Porter T. Fantastic French fare with a strong Cuban accent, and some of Cambridge's best cuisine. If you're looking to spend less cash, head to the adjacent bar for the Cuban pressed sandwich – amazing.

Darwin's Ltd 148 Mt Auburn St ☎617/354-5233; 1629 Cambridge St ☎617/491-2999; both Harvard T. Two locations, both housing fantastic delis with wonderfully inventive sandwich combinations. Cash only.

East Coast Grill 1271 Cambridge St, Inman Square ☎617/491-6568; Harvard or Central T. A festive and funky atmosphere – think shades of Miami Vice – in which to enjoy fresh seafood and Caribbean side dishes. The Sunday serve-yourself Bloody Mary bar is reason enough to visit.

Felipe's Taqueria 83 Mt Auburn St ☎617/354-9944; Harvard T. There are only a handful of things on the menu, but the place is always packed for regulars hankering after their super burritos and good-looking guacamole.

Tamarind Bay 75 Winthrop St ☎617/491-4552; Harvard T. This bright basement eatery serves up what is perhaps Boston's best Indian food. The banana dumplings and lallal mussal dal (black lentils simmered in spices) will make you want to stand up and clap.

Bars, clubs, and live music

Boston has a lively nightlife scene that offers the best of both old and new, from tried-and-true neighborhood taverns to young, trendy lounges. The live music circuit in Boston and Cambridge is dominated by the very best local and touring indie bands. The free weeklies Boston Phoenix (@www.thephoenix.com) and Boston's Weekly Dig (@www.weeklydig.com) are the best source for up-to-date listings. Key nightlife zones include Lansdowne Street, an entire block of nightclubs next to Fenway Park; Boylston Street, on the south side of Boston Common; and Cambridge's Central Square district. Note that most establishments are unusually officious in demanding ID.

Boston

Bukowski Tavern 50 Dalton St ☎617/437-9999; Hynes T. A great hipster spot, this parking garage watering hole has views over the MassPike and a beer selection so vast it prompted a homemade "wheel of indecision" – spun by the waitstaff for indecisive patrons.

Caffe Vittoria 296 Hanover St ☎617/227-7607; Haymarket T. A Boston institution, the Vittoria's atmospheric original section, with its dark wood panelling, pressed-tin ceilings, and Sinatra-blaring Wurlitzer, is vintage North End.

Cask 'n Flagon 62 Brookline Ave ☎617/536-4840; Kenmore T. An iconic neighborhood bar located right by Fenway Park, the Cask 'n Flagon is a popular place for the Red Sox faithful to warm up before games and drown their sorrows after.

Club Café Lounge 209 Columbus Ave ☎617/536-0966; Back Bay T. Popular combination restaurant/video gay bar with a back lounge, Moonshine, showing the latest videos amidst dancing and DJs.

Jillian's 145 Ipswich St ☎617/437-0300; Kenmore T. Massive entertainment club complex housing an arcade, a raucous, spacious dance club, and a Lucky Strike bowling alley.

McFadden's 148 State St ☎617/227-5100; Government Center T. Fun Irish pub with well-loved regulars, stylish newcomers, and plenty of Guinness.

Oak Bar in the Fairmount Copley Plaza, 138 St James Ave ☎617/267-5300; Copley T. Rich wood panelling, high ceilings, and excellent martinis are the highlights of this swanky Back Bay drinkery.

Paradise Rock Club 967-969 Commonwealth Ave, Brookline ☎617/562-8800; Pleasant Street T. One of Boston's classic rocking venues (many, many greats have played here), and it's still happening after 25 years.

Sevens Ale House 77 Charles St, Beacon Hill ☎617/523-9074; Charles T. This unpolished gem of a neighborhood pub provides local flavor in the midst of upscale Beacon Hill; far more authentic than the nearby Bull and Finch Pub.

Cambridge

B-Side Lounge 92 Hampshire St ☎617/354-0766; Kendall T. It's a hipster bar, but not in an alienating way. Lots of live tunes, a great drinks menu, and tasty and creative bar food.

Club Passim 47 Palmer St ☎617/492-5300; Harvard T. A four-decades-old, intimate "coffeehouse" that has been a noted folk/blues venue since Joan Baez performed here as an unknown 17-year-old.

Enormous Room 577 Massachusetts Ave ☎617/491-5550; Central T. Walking into this comfy, tiny lounge is tantamount to entering a swanky slumber party – the clientele lounges along myriad couches, and sways to the tune of a local DJ.

Lizard Lounge 1667 Massachusetts Ave ☎617/547-0759; Harvard or Porter T. An intimate rock and jazz venue, and one of Boston's best. Fairly nominal cover charges.

Middle East 472 Massachusetts Ave ☎617/492-9181; Central T. Local and regional progressive rock acts regularly stop in at this Cambridge institution. Downstairs hosts bigger bands; smaller ones ply their stuff in a tiny upstairs space.

Miracle of Science 321 Massachusetts Ave ☎617/868-ATOM; Central T. Surprisingly hip despite its status as an MIT hangout. There's a Table of Elements-minded décor and a laidback, unpretentious crowd. The bar stools will conjure up memories of high school chemistry class.

Regattabar in the Charles Hotel, 1 Bennett St ☎617/661-5000; Harvard T. The Regattabar draws top national jazz acts, although, as its location in the swish Charles Hotel might suggest, the atmosphere is a bit sedate. Dress nicely and prepare to pay at least a $10 cover.

River Gods 125 Cambridge St ☎617/576-1881; Central T. A bit of an underground spot, but worth the trip out. An Irish bar with a twist, they serve good cocktails and Guinness on tap alongside fantastic food. Patrons lounge in throne-like chairs and ogle the suits of armor.

T.T. the Bear's 10 Brookline St, ☎617/492-BEAR; Central T. Highly esteemed, intimate venue, showcasing cutting-edge live music seven nights a week.

Western Front 343 Western Ave ☎617/492-7772; Central T. This former jazz and blues club is now dedicated to reggae, with live music Friday and Saturday nights, cheap drinks, and delectably authentic Jamaican food served up on the weekends.

Performing arts

Mainstream Boston's pride and joy, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is based at Symphony Hall, 301 Massachusetts Ave ☎617/266-1200, www.bso.org, which Stravinsky called the best auditorium in the world. The orchestra's winter season is supplemented by the Boston Pops concerts in May, June, and on July 4.

The city's theater scene divides into the safe productions of the Theater District (often Broadway cast-offs) and more experimental companies in Cambridge. The BosTix ticket kiosks ☎617/482-BTIX, www.artsboston.org/bostix.cfm at Faneuil Hall and in Copley Square sell tickets for all major events – as well as tours, T passes, and so on – with some half-price same-day tickets (cash only). They're open Tuesday through Saturday 10am to 6pm and Sunday 11am to 4pm; the Copley Square location is also open on Monday 10am to 6pm.

Sports

Baseball is treated with reverence in Boston, so it's fitting that the Red Sox play at storied Fenway Park (Kenmore subway stop on the Green T line; tickets $12–275; information ☎ 1-877/REDSOX9, tickets ☎ 617/482-4769, 🌐 www.redsox.com). Built in 1912 and squeezed into an odd-shaped plot just off Brookline Avenue, the stadium is famed for its crazy caroms and awkward quirks, particularly the 37-foot wall in left field known as the “Green Monster”.

Basketball’s Celtics and hockey’s Bruins both play at the TDBanknorth Garden, 150 Causeway St near North Station; Celts tickets will run you $10–700, Bruins tickets $10–99 (box office open daily 11am–7pm; call Ticketmaster for tickets by phone ☎ 617/931-2000, 🌐 www.tdbanknorthgarden.com).

The 26.2-mile Boston Marathon, first run in 1897, is held on the third Monday in April, and finishes on Boylston Street at Copley Square (☎ 617/236-1652, 🌐 www.bostonmarathon.org).

Every October features the annual Head of the Charles river regatta crew races (☎ 617/868-6200, 🌐 www.hocr.org) that draw collegiate fans to the shorelines.

The north shore

As you head northward out of Boston, you pass through a succession of rich little ports that have been all but swallowed up by the suburbs. One good day-trip from Boston is the half-hour ride out to Salem and neighboring Marblehead. If you have the time, the atmospheric old fishing ports of Gloucester and Rockport, further out on Cape Ann, are also worth a look. Here you will find strong artistic and literary connections – T.S. Eliot used to come here for his family vacations, and his poem “The Dry Salvages” is titled after a small group of rocks glimpsed from the Cape Ann coast. This area is also the best place on the East Coast for whale-watching trips. Cape Ann Whale Watch (☎ 978/283-5110 or 1-800/877-5110, 🌐 www.seethewhales.com) offers three- to four-hour trips from Gloucester for $43 between April and October.

Salem

SALEM is remembered less as the site where the colony of Massachusetts was first established than as the place where, sixty years later, Puritan self-righteousness reached its apogee in the horrific witch trials of 1692. While the town itself prospered as a port – as evidenced by its fine old buildings – the witch scare did much to discredit the idea that the New World conducted its affairs on a different moral plane than the Old. Nineteen Salem women were hanged as witches (and one man, Giles Corry, was pressed to death with a boulder), thanks to a group of impressionable teenage girls who reported as truth a garbled mixture of fireside tales told by a West Indian slave, Tituba, and half-digested scare stories published by Cotton Mather, a pillar of the Puritan community.

That this unpleasant history is now the basis of a child-oriented tourist industry – all black hats and broomsticks – is a bit unsettling. However, if you can overlook the contrived, witchy vibe (and the shops selling corsets and fairy clothing) this pretty, historic town proves to be a most enjoyable visit.

The Salem Witch Museum in Washington Square (daily: July & Aug 10am–7pm; rest of year 10am–5pm; $6.50) draws parallels with modern racism and political persecution, but is at its heart a rather tacky show of illuminated dioramas and pre-recorded commentary. Innumerable other witch-related attractions in town are best ignored. Salem’s crown jewel is the Peabody Essex Museum in East India Square (☎ 978/748-9500; daily 10am–5pm; $13), whose vast, modern space incorporates more than thirty galleries filled with remarkable objets brought home by voyaging New Englanders. Founded by a ship captain in 1799, the museum boasts stellar Asian and Oceanic displays, most notably the Yin Yu Tang, a stunning sixteen-room Qing dynasty merchants' house reassembled here in Salem.

Little of Salem's original waterfront remains, though the long Derby Wharf is still standing, together with the imposing Custom House at its head, where Nathaniel Hawthorne once worked as a surveyor. The House of Seven Gables at 115 Derby St, the star of Hawthorne's eponymous novel, is a rambling old mansion beside the sea (summer daily 10am–7pm; rest of year 10am–5pm; $12). Hour-long guided tours of the complex also take in the author's birthplace, moved here from its original site on Union Street.

Practicalities

Regular MBTA buses run to Salem from Boston's Haymarket and Wonderland stations (every half-hour; $3.45 each way). Frequent trains also leave from North Station (weekdays 2–3 an hour, weekends hourly; $3.75 each way). For accommodation, the well-run Hawthorne Hotel, 18 Washington Sq W (☎ 978/744-4080; 🌐 www.hawthornehotel.com; 📍) is right in the heart of things, while Morning Glory Bed and Breakfast, 22 Hardy St (☎ 978/741-1703 or 1-800/446-2995, 🌐 www.morningglorybb.com; 📍) has homemade goodies in the morning and great views of the water. The atmospheric Red's Restaurant, 15 Central St (☎ 978/745-3527), features cheap and hearty breakfast fare, while the Witch's Brew Café, 156 Derby St (☎ 978/745-8717), has more upscale digs that are augmented by tasty New American cuisine. Out on the water, Finz, 76 Wharf St (☎ 978/744-0000) is a snazzy, well-loved seafood spot.

Marblehead

Five miles south and east along the bay from Salem is MARBLEHEAD, a lovely waterfront village whose historic homes date back as far as the mid-1700s, and which is known as the birthplace of the US Navy – George Washington's first five vessels were built here. Free walking-tour maps are available from the information booth in the center (June–Oct; ☎ 781/639-8469, 🌐 www.visitmarblehead.com), while 250-year-old Fort Sewall, jutting into the harbor, gives pretty views. The Seagull Inn, 106 Harbor Ave (☎ 781/631-1893, 🌐 www.seagullinn.com; 📍), has comfortable B&B rooms overlooking the water, and the gorgeous Fox Pond B&B, 31 Arthur Ave (☎ 781/631-1370, 🌐 www.foxpondbnb.com; 📍), is a romantic hideaway out in the oaks. Flynnie's, 28 Atlantic Ave (☎ 781/639-2100), serves fresh, inexpensive seafood, as does its outpost at Devereux Beach (May–Oct only).

The south shore

Heading south, it can take a while to get clear of Boston, especially on summer weekends, when the traffic down to Cape Cod can be horrendous. Two historic towns, one north and one west of the Cape, are worth exploring: Plymouth and New Bedford.

Plymouth

"America's Hometown," little PLYMOUTH, on the south shore of Massachusetts Bay, forty miles south of Boston, is given over to commemorating, in various degrees of taste, the landing of the 102 Pilgrims in December of 1620. By the sea, a solemn pseudo-Greek temple encloses the nondescript Plymouth Rock, where the Pilgrims are said to have first touched land. However, as the Pilgrims had already spent two months on Cape Cod before settling at Plymouth, and there are no historic references to the rock until one hundred years after their arrival, it is of symbolic importance only.

Two worthier memorials make no claim to authenticity, but meticulously reproduce the experience of the Pilgrims. Both the replica of the Mayflower in town (the Mayflower II), and Plimoth Plantation three miles south, are staffed by costumed “interpreters,” each of whom acts out the part of a specific Pilgrim, Indian, or sailor (both attractions April–Nov daily 9am–5pm; Mayflower II alone $8, Plantation alone $21, together $24; ☎ 508/746-1622, 🌐 www.plimoth.org). The charade visitors are obliged to perform – pretending to have stepped back into the seventeenth century – can be a little tiresome, but ultimately the sheer depth of detail in both endeavors makes them fascinating. At the Plantation, everything you see in the Pilgrim Village of 1627, and the Wampanoag Indian Settlement, has been created using traditional techniques.

Practicalities

Plymouth’s Visitor Information Center is on the waterfront at no. 130 (☎ 508/747-7525 or 1-800/USA-1620, 🌐 www.visit-plymouth.com). Plymouth & Brockton provides a regular bus service to and from Boston ($12 one way, $22 round trip; ☎ 508/746-0378, 🌐 www.p-b.com). There are also express ferries from Plymouth to Provincetown (June–Sept daily 10am; $35; ☎ 508/747-2400 or 1-800/242-2469, 🌐 www.provincetownferry.com; reservations recommended). A good standard motel option is the clean and comfortable Best Western Cold Spring, 188 Court St (open April–Dec only; ☎ 508/746-2222 or 1-800/678-8667; Ⓢ). By The Sea, 22 Winslow St (☎ 508/830-9643, 🌐 www.bytheseabedandbreakfast.com; Ⓢ) is a harborview B&B with two spacious suites and private bath. America’s hometown has a few favorable food options. Just north of downtown the wonderful 3A Café & Bakery, 295 Court St (☎ 508/747-3730) serves tasty Greek treats for breakfast and lunch. On the waterfront, East Bay Grill (☎ 508/746-9751) is the best of the seafood spots; while the Hearth ‘n’ Kettle, in the John Carver Inn, 25 Summer St, has well-priced New England specialties (☎ 508/746-7100).

New Bedford

The famous old whaling port of NEW BEDFORD, 45 miles due south of Boston, is still home to one of the nation’s most prosperous fishing fleets: every year, they haul in the largest catch on the East Coast. New Bedford has aged well, too – recent efforts at preservation and restoration, with an eye to the town’s whaling heritage, have only served to heighten its aesthetic appeal. Chief among the city’s pretty features are the fine old houses on County Street, which like the whole of the town, was described in Herman Melville’s Moby Dick.

The New Bedford Whaling Museum at 18 Johnny Cake Hill (daily 9am–5pm, Thurs until 9pm; $10), features a 66-foot blue whale skeleton, collections of scrimshaw and harpoons, and an evocative half-sized whaling vessel replica. More affecting is the Seamen’s Bethel directly opposite the museum; it really does have the ship-shaped pulpit described in Moby Dick, but this one was rebuilt after a fire in 1866. Before leaving town, be sure to check out the bustling working waterfront, now a National Historical Park (maps available from the Visitor Center at 33 William St; ☎ 508/996-4095).

One good choice for accommodation is The Orchard Street Manor, 139 Orchard St (☎ 508/984-3475; Ⓢ–🍷), an atmospheric B&B built in 1845. A favorite local place to eat is the Portuguese Antonio’s, 267 Coggeshall St (☎ 508/990-3636), where long lines often form outside the door. Right by the museum, Freestone’s, 41 Williams

St (☎508/993-7477), serves excellent chowder and microbrews in a restored 1877 bank.

For information on ferries to Martha's Vineyard, see the box on p.232.

Cape Cod and the islands

Here a man may stand, and put all America behind him.

Henry David Thoreau

These days, the trouble with standing on Cape Cod is that “all America” tends to be a lot closer behind you than you might prefer. The Cape's main haunts are packed in the summer, its roads circled by a grim procession of crawling vehicles, searching in vain for some solitude. Unless you have your own, preferably very secluded, place to stay, it's barely worth turning up on weekends, especially between June and August, and putting yourself through the hassle of trying to find what little available (and premium-priced) accommodation there is. However, the place is undeniably beautiful; if you find yourself in the region midweek in May or September – when hotel prices are much lower, the crowds have thinned, and the weather usually very pleasant – the Cape is certainly worth a visit.

Cape Cod was named by Bartholomew Gosnold in 1602, on account of the prodigious quantities of cod caught by his crew off Provincetown. Less than twenty years later the Pilgrims landed nearby; in the few months before moving on to Plymouth, they began the process, continued by generations of Europeans, of stripping the interior of the Cape bare of its original covering of thick woods. Today, much of the land on the Cape, from its salt marshes to its ever-eroding dunes, is considered a fragile and endangered ecosystem – though this designation hasn't especially dampened the persistence of developers.

If you imagine the Cape as an arm, its upper section, the thirty-mile eastward stretch closest to mainland Massachusetts, is the biceps. Much of the worst beachfront development lies along the southern shore, and Hwy-28, running from Falmouth via Hyannis to Chatham, gets especially clogged. Only once you get beyond the “elbow” and head north to the Outer Cape or, anatomically speaking, the forearm, past the spectacular dunes of Cape Cod National Seashore, do you get a feeling for why the Cape still has a reputation as a seaside wilderness. Provincetown, right at the end, is the one town on the Cape that can be unreservedly recommended.

The islands of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, off the Cape to the south, are largely dependent on summer tourism for their livelihood. At the same time, they remain highly committed to preserving their unique heritage and natural environment. A trip out to Nantucket in particular still evokes proud seafaring days. The off-season has a charm all its own, when you can sink into the rhythms of life on the islands without the distraction of hordes of day-trippers.

Getting to the Cape

It was the Pilgrims who first suggested the construction of a canal between Cape Cod Bay and Buzzards Bay, so that coastal shipping could avoid the dangers of the open ocean. When the waterway was finally completed at the start of the twentieth century, it left the Cape Cod peninsula as an island. Now all traffic to the Cape bottlenecks at two enormous bridges across the canal – Bourne on Hwy-28 and Sagamore on Hwy-6 – and you may regret trying to drive there on a summer

One way to dodge the traffic is to fly. US Airways affiliate Colgan Air (☎1-800/428-4322, 🌐www.colganair.com) serves Hyannis, Martha's Vineyard, and Nantucket from Washington, DC, New York City, Boston, and points further north, such as Augusta, Maine. Cape Air (☎1-800/352-0714, 🌐www.flycapeair.com) flies several times daily from Boston, New Bedford, and Providence, Rhode Island, to Hyannis, Provincetown, and the islands. Peter Pan buses run regularly from New York City and Boston (☎1-800/343-9999, 🌐www.peterpanbus.com), and the Plymouth & Brockton (☎508/746-0378, 🌐www.p-b.com) runs daily to a number of Cape towns (culminating in Provincetown) via Boston and Plymouth. Ferries from Boston (see p.227) take 90 minutes to cross to Provincetown; for boats to the various islands, see the box on p.232.

The Upper Cape

The Upper Cape, just across the bridges, was the first part of the peninsula to attract visitors in any numbers – and it sometimes shows. Upon approaching the various communities of the south coast, you might easily be taken aback by the degree of commercialization that surrounds them. But just beyond the thickets of malls, motels, and fast-food joints there remains a measure of quaintness in some of the small coastal towns, each arranged around a prim central green and decorated with old-fashioned Main Streets and waterfront seafood joints.

Falmouth and Woods Hole

One obvious base for catching a ferry to the islands is FALMOUTH, where cozy accommodation includes the deluxe Scallop Shell Inn, 16 Massachusetts Ave (☎ 508/495-4900 or 1-800/249-4587, 🌐 www.shorewayacresinn.com; 📍 9–9), with views of the islands and several rooms outfitted with fireplaces and whirlpool baths, or the Woods Hole Passage, at 186 Woods Hole Rd (☎ 508/548-9575, 🌐 www.woodsholepassage.com; 📍 9), brightly-painted chambers equipped with wireless internet. The Sippewissett Campground & Cabins, a couple of miles out at 836 Palmer Ave (☎ 508/548-2542, 🌐 www.sippewissett.com; peak season $27, plus $8 each additional camper; off-season $23, plus $5 each additional camper), offers a free shuttle service to the ferries and beaches.

Restaurants abound in Falmouth, though with the possible exception of Betsy's Diner, 457 Main St (☎ 508/540-0060), an authentic 1950s diner beckoning you to “eat heavy,” the best meals are to be found in the assorted moderately priced seafood places along the waterfront at WOODS HOLE, four miles southwest. The Fishmonger's Café, 56 Water St (☎ 508/540-5376), is a natural-foods restaurant that serves eggs, granola, and the like at breakfast, with seafood specials at lunch and dinner. As for sights, the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution's exhibit center, at 15 School St, near Little Harbor (May–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; Nov–Dec Tues–Fri 10am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; April Fri & Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; ☎ 508/457-2034; $2), focuses on the Institution's underwater research, including their sensational finding of the Titanic in 1986. If you're looking to get out on the water, Ocean Quest runs informative, hands-on ocean cruises in summer (reservations recommended; $20; ☎ 1-800/37-OCEAN, 🌐 www.oceanquestonline.org).

Hyannis

It stands to reason that HYANNIS – the largest port on the Cape, and its main commercial hub – would be a little less charming than Falmouth and Woods Hole. Nevertheless, it still clings to the glamour it earned when the Kennedy compound at Hyannis Port placed it at the center of world affairs. Hence the existence of the John F. Kennedy Museum, 397 Main St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Thurs 9am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5), which shows photographs, newspaper clippings, and film footage of the days JFK spent on the Cape. The Kennedys are still here, though their property can only be glimpsed, at a considerable distance, from the sea: Hy-Line Cruises, Ocean Street Dock ($14; ☎ 508/778-2600, 🌐 www.hy-linecruises.com), runs one-hour harbor cruises that peak in at the compound.

If you have a boat to catch and need to stay in Hyannis, options include the friendly, neat, and affordable Sea Beach Inn, 388 Sea St (☎ 508/775-4612, 🌐 www.seabeachinn.com).

capecodtravel.com/seabeach; ⑤). A great B&B in Hyannis Port is the Simmons Homestead Inn, 288 Scudder Ave (☎ 508/778-4999 or 1-800/637-1649, @ www.simmonshomesteadinn.com; ⑦–⑧). On Main Street, be sure to indulge in the full rodizio at the Brazilian Grill, no. 680 (☎ 508/771-0109), with mouth-watering meats delivered straight from the skewer and onto to your plate; The Egg & I, at no. 521 (☎ 508/771-1596), is a great spot for big breakfasts, while Alberto's, no. 360 (☎ 508/778-1770), offers tasty Italian meals (with better deals if you get there before 6pm).

See p.232 for ferry information.

The Mid-Cape

The middle stretch of Cape Cod holds some of its prettiest, most unspoiled places. Time-worn old fishing communities like Wellfleet and Chatham, along with dozens of carefully maintained, mildly touristy hamlets along the many winding roads, are what most people hope to find when they come to the Cape. Cutting across the middle, the Cape Cod Rail Trail follows a paved-over railroad track from Dennis to Eastham, through forests and cranberry bogs – the saturated bodies of peat in which the fruit is cultivated. It makes a good cycling trip; bikes can be rented in all the main towns.

One desirable destination is the whitewashed old town of CHATHAM, tucked away in a protected harbor between Nantucket Sound and the open Atlantic Ocean. Hang out at the Fish Pier on Shore Road and wait for the fleet to come in during the mid-afternoon, or head a mile south on Hwy-28 to Chatham Light, one of many lighthouses built to protect mariners from the treacherous shoals. Tour maps are available from the booth at 533 Main St. Good seafood abounds at the Chatham Squire, 487 Main St (☎ 508/945-0945), a low-key, local institution. Also, be sure to stop by 🍷 Marion's Pie Shop 2022 Rte-28 (☎ 508/432-9439), for a life-changing bumbleberry pie. If you're going to stay in chic Chatham, you might as well indulge; the fantastic Carriage House Inn, 407 Old Harbor Rd (☎ 508/945-0127, @ www.captainshouseinn.com; ⑧–⑨), is a gorgeous old whaling captain's home with rambling gardens and afternoon tea; the Pleasant Bay Village Resort, 1191 Orleans Rd (☎ 508/945-1133, @ www.pleasantbayvillage.com; ⑦–⑧) has lovely grounds and more affordable digs.

The place to stay in EASTHAM is the romantic Whalewalk Inn, at 220 Bridge Rd (☎ 508/255-0617 or 1-800/440-1281, @ www.whalewalkinn.com; ⑦–⑧). Rates for the secluded B&B rooms and a converted barn include use of their brand-new spa facilities. Right around the corner is the HI-Mid Cape hostel, 75 Goody Halet Drive, $22 to $25 (☎ 508/255-2785; open May–Sept), a collection of woody cabins.

People are obsessed with the onion rings at Arnold's Lobster and Clam Bar, 3580 Rte-6 (☎ 508/255-2575), a popular seafood restaurant and beer garden. Box Lunch, 4205 Rte-6 (☎ 508/255-0799), as its name suggests, is the place to go for packed pita sandwiches to take to the beach.

Cape Cod National Seashore

After the bustle of Cape Cod's towns, the Cape Cod National Seashore really does come as a proverbial breath of fresh air. These protected lands, spared by President Kennedy from the rampant development further south, take up virtually the entire Atlantic side of the Cape, from Chatham north to Provincetown. Most of the way you can park by the road, sometimes for a fee, and strike off across the dunes to windswept, seemingly endless beaches – though in places parking is limited to local residents. A program of grass-planting helps to hold the whole place together: three feet of the sands south of the National Seashore are washed away each year, much of it carried south to Chatham and Orleans.

It was on these shifting sands that the Pilgrims made their first home. They obtained their water from Pilgrim Spring, near Truro, and at Corn Hill Beach they uncovered the freshly buried cache of Indian corn that kept them alive. After a couple of months, which they survived with the help of the Wampanoag Indians, they moved on to Plymouth. (The reconstructed Indian village at Plimoth Plantation is based on one found at Eastham; see opposite.)

Displays and movies at the main Salt Pond Visitor Center, on US-6 just north of Eastham (daily 9am–4.30pm, extended summer hours; ☎ 508/255-3421), trace the geology and history of the Cape. A road and a hiking/cycling trail head east to the sands of Coast Guard Beach and Nauset Light Beach, both of which offer excellent swimming. Another fine beach is the Head of the Meadow, halfway between Truro and Provincetown on the northeast shore (beach parking is $15). The fantastic HI-Truro hostel, on 111 North Pamet Rd in Truro (☎ 508/349-3889, @ www.capecodhostels.org; mid-June to early Sept), has beds from $25 to $32 in a breezy former Coast Guard station, offering spectacular views of the seashore and the dunes.

Provincetown

The compact fishing village of PROVINCETOWN (or, as it's popularly known, "P-Town") is right on the knuckle of what would be Cape Cod's clenched fist. It's a gorgeous place, with silvery clapboard houses and gloriously unruly gardens lining the town's tiny winding streets. Self-professed bohemians and artists have long flocked here for the dazzling light and vast beaches; in 1914 Eugene O'Neill established the Provincetown Playhouse in a small hut. The town has also become renowned, since the Beatnik 1950s, as a gay center, and today its population of five thousand rises tenfold in the summer. Commercialism, though rampant, tends to be countercultural: gay, environmentalist, and feminist gift shops join arty galleries, restaurants, and bars on the aptly named Commercial Street. Provincetown also retains a firm grip on its past. Strict zoning ensures that there are few new buildings in town, and there is barely a sign of ugly development. Albeit crowded and raucous from July through September, P-Town remains a place where history, natural beauty, and, above all, difference, are respected and celebrated.

Arrival and information

Provincetown lies 120 miles from Boston by land, but less than fifty miles by sea, nestled in the New England coast's largest natural harbour. By far the nicest way to arrive is on one of the passenger ferries. Boston Harbor Cruises (daily May to mid-June, additional departures on weekends in early June through early Oct; $45 one way, $70 roundtrip; ☎ 617/227-4321 or 1-877/SEE-WHALE, @ www.bostonharborcruises.com) leave Long Wharf Ferry Terminal in Boston at 9am and 2pm, arriving at MacMillan Wharf in Provincetown ninety minutes later; ferries return at 11am and 4pm; the Bay State Cruise Company ☎ 617/748-1428, @ www.baystatecruises.com) runs a similar venture; and Capt. John Boats runs an express ferry from Plymouth (daily June to Sept; $20 one way, $35 roundtrip; ☎ 508/747-2400, @ www.provincetownferry.com). A slower option is the Plymouth & Brockton bus, which runs to Provincetown four times daily ($27 one way from Boston; $10 one way from Hyannis; ☎ 508/746-0378, @ www.p-b.com).

The tiny visitor center, in the Chamber of Commerce at the end of the wharf, 307 Commercial St (summer daily 9am–5pm; rest of year Mon–Sat

ATLANTIC OCEAN

CAPE COD NATIONAL SEASHORE

PROVINCE LANDS

Province Lands
Visitor Center

ACCOMMODATION

Carpe Diem	D
Carriage House	F
Crowne Ponte Historic Inn & Spa	C
Dune's Edge Campground	A
Inn at Cook Street	E
Outermost Hostel	B
Oxford Guest House	G
White Horse Inn	H

RESTAURANTS

Bubala's by the Bay	2
Café Edwidge	10
Ciro & Sal's	13
Karoo Kafe	12
Lobster Pot	8
Napi's	9
Portuguese Bakery	6
Tofu a Go-Go	11

BARS & CLUBS

Atlantic House	3
Boatslip	1
Club Euro	5
Crown and Anchor	4
Governor Bradford	7
The Vixen	11

Herring Cove Beach

HI-Truro

Pilgrims' Landing Place

Breakwater

Coast Guard Station

Fishermen's Wharf

MacMillan Wharf

Whydah — Museum

C a p e C o d B a y

Provincetown
Art Association
& Museum

0 500 yds

9.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 508/487-3424, 🌐 www.ptownchamber.com), has a wealth of information on area attractions, and distributes discount coupons for whale-watching cruises; it also houses the Bay State Cruise desk, where you can purchase ferry tickets.

It couldn't be easier to walk around tiny P-Town, though many visitors prefer to cycle the narrow streets, hills, and the undulating Province Lands Bike Trail, a difficult six-mile route with great vistas. One good bike-rental outlet in town is Arnold's, 329 Commercial St (☎ 508/487-0844); they charge about $21 a day.

If you're in need of transport, the locals rave about their new shuttle bus service; $1 will get you all the way to Truro, plus the accommodating Flex service enables them to pick you up even if it's not a scheduled stop (☎ 800/352-7155, 🌐 www.thebreeze.info). Narrated tours are run by Provincetown Trolley, Inc., from the town hall on Commercial Street (daily every half-hour from 10am–4pm, or until 7pm in season; $10; ☎ 508/487-9483, 🌐 www.provincetowntrolley.com), while the more isolated dunes and moors are accessed by Art's Sand Dune Tours, based at Commercial and Standish streets (April–Oct 10am–dusk; $20 daytime tour and $30 sunset tour ($79 with clambake); ☎ 508/487-1950 or 1-800/894-1951, 🌐 www.artsdunetours.com). Whale-watching cruises leave from MacMillan Wharf between April and October 31; one of the main cruise operators is the Dolphin Fleet Whale Watch (☎ 1-800/826-9300, 🌐 www.whalewatch.com); they have a ticket office within the Chamber of Commerce building and sell tickets for about $30.

Accommodation

Besides the few motels on the outskirts, every second picturesque cottage in town seems to be a guesthouse. Prices are reasonable until mid-June, and during the off-season you can find some real bargains. As for camping, the welcoming Dunes' Edge Campground, on Hwy-6 just east of the central stoplights (☎ 508/487-9815, 🌐 www.dunes-edge.com), charges $35 for its wooded sites; it's only open from May to September.

Carpe Diem 12 Johnson St ☎ 1-800/487-0132, 🌐 www.carpediemoon.com. Friendly, accommodating innkeepers, beautifully-appointed rooms, horseback riding, and a wine and cheese hour in the afternoon. ⑦–③

Carriage House Provincetown 7 Central St ☎ 1-800/309-0248; 🌐 www.thecarriagehouse.com. A gorgeous space with lots of attention to detail, a steam room and Jacuzzi, and fantastic breakfasts. ⑥–⑦

Crowne Pointe Historic Inn & Spa 7 Winthrop St ☎ 508/487-6767 or 1-877/276-9631, 🌐 www.crownepointe.com. Provincetown's most luxurious digs: gorgeous rooms, a fancy restaurant, and unbelievable spa treatments. ③–⑥

Inn at Cook Street 7 Cook St ☎ 508/487-3894, 🌐 www.innatcookstreet.com. A quiet, lovingly-

maintained inn with lots of breezy spaces and freshly-baked brownies. ③

Outermost Hostel 28 Winslow St ☎ 508/487-4378. Hostel with thirty $25 beds in five cramped dorm cabins; a better bet is the HI-Truro, 10 minutes west on Rte-6.

Oxford Guest House 8 Cottage St ☎ 508/487-9103 or 1-888/456-9103, 🌐 www.oxfordguesthouse.com. A welcoming, well-appointed inn with free wireless internet, a wine hour in the evening, and lovely innkeepers. ⑦

White Horse Inn 500 Commercial St ☎ 508/487-1790 A whimsical, colorful, art-strewn space; some rooms have shared baths. There are also family-sized apartments with kitchens. Beach access. ④–⑦

The town and the beaches

Provincetown's tiny core is centered on the three narrow miles of Commercial Street. MacMillan Wharf, always busy with charters, yachts, and fishing boats (which unload their catch each afternoon), splits the town in half. Somewhat out from the center, on Commercial Street, are scores of quaint art galleries, as well as the delightful Provincetown Art Association and Museum, at no. 460 (May–Oct daily noon–5pm, extended summer hours; ☎ 508/487-1750, www.paam.org; $5, free Fridays after 5pm), with displays of local artists.

△ Provincetown

The 252ft granite tower of the Pilgrim Monument and Provincetown Museum on High Pole Hill, smack in the center of P-Town, has an observation deck (only accessible by stairs and narrow ramps) that looks out over the whole of the Cape (daily: April–Nov 9am–5pm; July & Aug 9am–7pm; $7). Behind Town Hall, on Bradford Street, there's a bas-relief monument to the Pilgrims' 1620 Mayflower Compact, in which they agreed to unite as one body to build the first colony. Further from the wharf are restored sea captain's homes and weathered clapboard houses with white picket fences and wildflowers spilling out of every crevice.

A little way beyond the town's narrow strip of sand, undeveloped beaches are marked only by dunes and a few shabby beach huts. You can swim in the clear water from the uneven rocks of the two-mile breakwater, where the sea bed crunches with soft-shell clams, or head through scented wild roses and beach plums to find blissful isolation on undeveloped beaches nearby. West of town, Herring Cove Beach, easily reached by bike or through the dunes, is more crowded, but never unbearably so. In the wild Province Lands, at the Cape's northern tip, vast sweeping moors and bushy dunes are buffeted by Cape Cod's deadly sea, the site of one thousand known shipwrecks. The visitor center (May–Oct daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 508/487-1256), in the middle of the dunes on Race Point Road, has an observation deck from which you might spot a whale.

Eating

Great food options abound in P-town. Portuguese bakeries, relics of early settlement, can be found along Commercial Street; beware the bland family restaurants that are often found nearby.

Bubala's By the Bay 183 Commercial St ☎508/487-0773. Perhaps the freshest seafood in P-town at a fun hangout right on the water; good non-fish fare as well; open all day.

Café Edwige 333 Commercial St ☎508/487-2008. Breakfast's the thing at this popular second-floor spot; try the homemade Danish pastries and fresh fruit pancakes. Creative bistro fare at dinnertime.

Ciro & Sal's 4 Kiley Court ☎508/487-6444. Traditional Northern Italian cooking with plenty of veal and seafood; a bit on the pricey side, but worth it.

Karoo Kafe 338 Commercial St ☎508/487-6630. Tasty, low-key South African fare. Order the Cape Malay stew (curry, coconut milk, and veggies over rice) at the counter and enjoy it amongst sunny, zebra-striped seating.

Lobster Pot 321 Commercial St ☎508/487-0842. Its landmark neon sign is like a beacon for those who come from far and wide for the ultra-fresh crustaceans. Affordable and family-oriented.

Napi's 7 Freeman St ☎508/487-1145. Popular dishes at this art-strewn spot include pastas and seafood items, notably a thick Portuguese fish stew. They have a less expensive menu on week nights.

Portuguese Bakery 299 Commercial St ☎508/487-1803. This old standby is the place to come for cheap baked goods, particularly the tasty fried rabanada, akin to portable French toast.

Tofu a Go-Go 336 Commercial St ☎508/487-6237. Casual upstairs eatery serving exclusively vegetarian fare, like delicious tofu tahini salad.

Nightlife and entertainment

Each weekend, boatloads of revelers from the mainland seek out P-Town's notoriously wild nightlife. From house-music raves to drag cabarets, from torch singing to R&B, the variety is huge.

Atlantic House 6 Masonic Place, behind Commercial St ☎508/487-3821. The "A-House" – a dark drinking hole favored by Tennessee Williams and Eugene O'Neill – is now a trendy gay club and bar.

Boatslip 161 Commercial St ☎508/487-1669. The gay tea dances at this resort are legendary; you can either dance away on a long wooden deck overlooking the water, or cruise inside under a disco ball and flashing lights.

Club Euro 258 Commercial St ☎508/487-2505. Music videos, world-beat sounds, and a good buzz in an 1843 former Congressional Church with a 3D mermaid sculpture emerging from the wall.

Crown and Anchor 247 Commercial St ☎508/487-1430, www.onlyatthecrown.com. A massive complex housing several bars, including The Vault, P-town's only gay leather bar, Wave, a video-karaoke bar, and Paramount, a cabaret with nightly acts.

Governor Bradford 312 Commercial St ☎508/487-2781. A good salty dive bar, with dark leather booths and a nice blend of gay and straight clientele. Rocking karaoke shows nightly at 9.30pm.

The Vixen 336 Commercial St ☎508/487-6424. High-energy, primarily lesbian club, with free pool and a jukebox, lots of live performances, and dancing.

Martha's Vineyard

The largest offshore island in New England, twenty-mile-long MARTHA'S VINEYARD encompasses more physical variety than Nantucket, with hills and pasturelands providing scenic counterpoints to the beaches and wild, windswept moors on the separate island of Chappaquiddick. Roads throughout the Vineyard are framed by knotty oak trees, which lend a romantic aura to an already pretty landscape. The most genteel town on the island is Edgartown, all prim and proper with its freshly-painted, white clapboard Colonial homes and manicured gardens. The other main town, Vineyard Haven, is more commercial and one of the island's ferry ports. Oak Bluffs, in between the two (and the other docking point for ferries), has an array of whimsical wooden gingerbread cottages and inviting eateries. Be aware of island terminology: heading "Up-Island" takes you, improbably, southwest to the cliffs at Aquinnah (formerly known as Gay Head); conversely, "Down-Island" refers to the triumvirate of easterly towns mentioned above.

The three principal island communities are connected by a regular bus service and offer full facilities and shops of every kind. They're quite mellow places to pass a summer's day, and a little exploring can yield some pleasant surprises, such as quiet beaches and bird-filled lagoons. Bringing a car over is expensive and pointless, as the island is jam-packed with cars throughout the summer and you can easily get around by bus or bike; rent one at the rental places lined up by the ferry landing. The best bike ride is along the State Beach Park between Oak Bluffs and Edgartown, with the dunes to one side and marshy Sengekontacket Pond to the other; purpose-built cycle routes continue to the youth hostel at West Tisbury (see opposite).

Trips around the west side of the island are decidedly bucolic, with nary a peep of the water beyond the rolling hills and private estates; however, you do eventually come to the lighthouse at Aquinnah, where the multicolored clay was once the main source of paint for the island's houses – now, anyone caught removing any clay faces a sizeable fine. From Moshup beach below, you can get great views of this spectacular formation.

Ferries to Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket

Unless otherwise specified, all the ferries below run several times daily in midsummer (mid-June to mid-Sept). Most have fewer services from May to mid-June, and between mid-September and October. There is at least a skeleton service to each island, though not on all routes, all year round. To discourage clogging of the roads, roundtrip costs for cars are prohibitively high in the peak season (mid-May to mid-Sept; Woods Hole ferry only), while costs for bikes are just $6 each way. Be sure to call in advance for reservations as rides do sell out.

To Martha's Vineyard

Falmouth to Oak Bluffs (about 35min): pedestrians only; $12 roundtrip; the Island Queen ferry ☎508/548-4800, 🌐www.islandqueen.com.

Falmouth to Edgartown (1hr): pedestrians only; $30 roundtrip; Falmouth Ferry Service ☎508/548-9400, 🌐www.falmouthferry.com.

Woods Hole to Vineyard Haven and Oak Bluffs (45min): pedestrians $11 roundtrip; May–Oct vehicles $120 roundtrip; off-season vehicles $70 roundtrip; Steamship Authority ☎508/477-8600, 🌐www.islandferry.com.

Hyannis to Oak Bluffs (about 1hr40min; fast ferry about 50min): pedestrians only; $31 roundtrip, fast ferry $59 roundtrip; Hy-Line ☎508/778-2600 in Hyannis, ☎508/693-0112 on Martha's Vineyard, 🌐www.hy-linecruises.com.

New Bedford to Oak Bluffs or Vineyard Haven (1hr): pedestrians only; $58 roundtrip; Steamship Authority ☎1-866/453-6800, 🌐www.nefastferry.com.

Montauk, Long Island, to Oak Bluffs (6hr): pedestrians only; summer weekends only; $80 roundtrip; Viking Ferry ☎631/668-5700, 🌐www.vikingfleet.com.

To Nantucket

From Hyannis: pedestrians $28 roundtrip (2hr journey); pedestrians $59 roundtrip (1hr journey); May–Oct vehicles $200 one way; off-season vehicles $115 one way; Steamship Authority ☎508/477-8600 for auto reservations, ☎508/771-4000 on the mainland, ☎508/228-0262 on Nantucket; 🌐www.islandferry.com. Also Hy-Line Cruises, pedestrians only; 2hr journey $33 roundtrip; 1hr journey $64 roundtrip; ☎508/778-2600, 🌐www.hy-linecruises.com.

From Harwich Port (1hr15min): pedestrians only; $54 roundtrip; late May through early Oct only; Freedom Cruise Line ☎508/432-8999, 🌐www.nantucketislandferry.com.

In summer, the Hy-Line ferry company also runs a connecting service between Oak Bluffs, Martha's Vineyard, and Nantucket (one departure daily; pedestrians only; $25 one-way; ☎508/778-2600). The trip takes about an hour.

Martha's Vineyard brims with beautiful beaches. Highlights include the secluded, gorgeous Wasque, at the end of Wasque Road in Chappaquiddick, and South Beach, at the end of Katama Road in Edgartown, known for its "good waves and good bod-ies." The gentle State Beach, along Beach Road between Oak Bluffs and Edgartown, is more family-oriented.

Accommodation

If accommodation is booked up, as is very likely, the main Chamber of Commerce office at Beach Road in Vineyard Haven (☎ 508/693-0085, 🌐 www.mvy.com) may be able to help. There is a campground in Vineyard Haven at 569 Edgartown Rd (☎ 508/693-3772, 🌐 www.campmv.com); tent sites cost $44 per day for two people and include water and electricity hookups.

Crocker House Inn 12 Crocker Ave, Vineyard Haven ☎ 1-800/772-0206, 🌐 www.crockerhouseinn.com. Elegant and accommodating, the Crocker House features pretty rooms, free wifi, good proximity to shops, and lots of homemade goodies. 8

HI-Martha's Vineyard 525 Edgartown–West Tisbury Rd ☎ 508/693-2665, 🌐 www.capecodhostels.org. In an appealing setting at the forest's edge and away from town; near the island's main bike path, and right on the bus route. Free wifi. Open April to mid-November. Dorm beds $25–28 a night.

The Mansion House 9 Main St, Vineyard Haven ☎ 508/693-2200 or 1-800/332-4112, 🌐 www.mvmansionhouse.com. Recently renovated, beautiful rooms; a lovely wraparound porch, and luxurious spa facilities and fitness center. 8–9

Menemsha Inn & Cottages and Beach Plum Inn North Road, Menemsha ☎ 508/645-9454 or 1-800/901-2087, 🌐 www.menemshainn.com and 🌐 www.beachpluminn.com. These adjacent properties are beautifully maintained. Within walking distance of the Menemsha beach, it also includes private beach access. 8–9

Nashua House across from the Post Office, 30 Kennebec Ave, Oak Bluffs ☎ 508/693-0043, 🌐 www.nashuahouse.com. Small, sunny, Victorian-style rooms with shared baths and ocean views, in the heart of Oak Bluffs. 6

Oak Bluffs Inn Circuit Ave, Oak Bluffs ☎ 800/955-6235, 🌐 www.oakbluffsinn.com. Guests rave about the gorgeous wraparound porch, the fantastic innkeepers, and proximity to beaches, ferries, and restaurants. 7–8

The Winnetu Inn & Resort South Beach, Edgartown ☎ 508/627-4747, 🌐 www.winnetu.com. This family-friendly resort hotel is just a short walk from a private stretch of South Beach; very well-appointed rooms, many with kitchenettes. 8

Eating and drinking

It's not at all hard to find something to eat on Martha's Vineyard. The ports in particular have rows of places to tempt tourists just off the ferries. Only in Edgartown and Oak Bluffs can you order alcohol with meals, but you can bring your own elsewhere. Many pubs, too, serve inexpensive food, though the people partaking of it are often of the polo shirt variety.

ArtCliff Diner 39 Beach Rd, Vineyard Haven ☎ 508/693-1224. Perfect for a pre-ferry send-off breakfast with the likes of almond-crusted French toast and chorizo, egg, and pepperjack sandwiches. Closed Wed.

The Bite 29 Basin Road, Menemsha ☎ 508/645-9239. Roadside, seaside nirvana. Fried clams, scallops, and zucchini, served up in a tiny seafood shack. Good chowder, too. Cash only.

The Black Dog Bakery 11 Water St, Vineyard Haven ☎ 508/693-4786. Skip the overrated Black Dog Tavern next door and stock up on delicious muffins and breads for the ferry ride back.

Chilmark Chocolates 19 State Rd, Chilmark ☎ 508/645-3013. People line up and rally for Chilmark's island-grown berries dipped in unbelievably-good organic chocolate. Closed Mon–Wed.

Larsen's Fish Market Mason Road, Menemsha ☎ 508/645-2680. For about $15 you can pick out your very own lobster and then eat it on low-key flats overlooking the harbor. Good steamers, too.

Le Grenier Main Street, Vineyard Haven ☎ 508/693-4906. Don't mind the fussy ambience and weird murals; this fancy French spot serves up some of the tastiest dinner fare on the island.

 Offshore Ale Company 30 Kennebec Ave, Oak Bluffs ☎ 508/693-2626. Local brewpub with wooden booths, toss-on-the-floor peanut shells, and lots of live shows. If you're there at night, be sure to stop by Back Door Donuts (in the Reliable Market parking lot, ☎ 508/693-4786; 9.30–12.28am) for one of their life-changing apple fritters – it's an MV must-do.

Slice of Life 50 Circuit Ave, Oak Bluffs ☎ 508/693-3838. Great New American spot, particularly for lunch. Order the fried green tomato BLT and ogle the tourists from the sunny, enclosed patio.

Nantucket

The thirty-mile, two-hour sea crossing to NANTUCKET may not be an oceangoing odyssey, but it does set the “Little Grey Lady” apart from her larger, shore-hugging sister, Martha. Halfway here from Hyannis, neither mainland nor island is in sight, and once you've landed you can avert your eyes from the smart-money double-deck cruisers with names like Pier Pressure and Loan Star and let the place remind you that it hasn't always been a rich folk's playground. Despite the formidable prowess of its seamen (see box, opposite), survival for early settlers on the island's scrubby soil was always a struggle.

The tiny cobbled carriageways of Nantucket Town itself, once one of the largest cities in Massachusetts, were frozen in time by economic decline 150 years ago. Today, this area of delightful old restored houses – the town has more buildings on the National Register of Historic Places than Boston – is very much the island hub. From the moment you get off the ferry you're besieged by bike rental places and tour companies. Straight Wharf leads directly onto Main Street with its shops and restaurants; the information office – which has a daily list of accommodation vacancies, but doesn't make reservations – is nearby at 25 Federal St (☎ 508/228-0925). The Chamber of Commerce, 48 Main St (☎ 508/228-1700, 🌐 www.nantucketchamber.org), carries the best range of island information.

The excellent, recently-renovated Whaling Museum, 13 Broad St, at the head of Steamboat Wharf (☎ 508/228-1894, 🌐 www.nha.org; $15; $18 site pass includes Oldest House, Old Gaol, and Old Mill), houses an outstanding collection of seafaring exotica, including a gallery of gorgeous scrimshaws delicately-engraved by strong-armed nineteenth-century sailors. There is also a luminous fresnel lens, formerly housed in the Sankaty Head Lighthouse, as well as a gigantic sperm whale skeleton. Look for the rotted tooth on its jaw; officials believe a tooth infection brought on the whale's demise.

After a stroll around Nantucket Town, it's customary to cycle the seven flat miles east to the village of Siaconset (always pronounced 'Sconset), where venerable cottages stand literally encrusted with salt, and then meander back across the heaths and moorland. Bikes can be rented from Young's Bicycle Shop, 6 Broad St (around $25 for a full day; ☎ 508/228-1151). Buses also link Nantucket Town and 'Sconset: NRTA (☎ 508/228-7025) runs shuttles from late May through early October and charges $2 each way.

Accommodation

But for the youth hostel, accommodation on Nantucket is somewhat expensive; the going rate in B&Bs and guesthouses starts at $100 a night.

Hawthorn House 2 Chestnut St ☎ 508/228-1468, 🌐 www.hawthornhouse.com. Central, well-appointed guesthouse with a friendly, helpful staff and ten handsome rooms outfitted with antique furnishings. ③

HI-Nantucket Star of the Sea 31 Western Ave ☎ 508/228-0433, 🌐 www.capecodhostels.org. Dorm beds ($18–32 a night) a stone's throw from Surfside Beach, just over three miles south of town. Lockout

10am–5pm, curfew 11pm. Open mid-May–early-Oct. Martin House Inn 61 Centre St ☎ 508/228-0678, 🌐 www.martinhouseinn.com. Thirteen lovely rooms offer good value in this 1803 seaman's house; close to shops and ferries. ⑦

The Nesbitt Inn 21 Broad St ☎ 508/228-0156. The central location, friendly innkeepers, and affordable rooms, most with original furniture, compensate for the shared baths in this Victorian

The whalers of Nantucket

Scores of anonymous Captains have sailed out of Nantucket, that were as great, and greater than your Cook . . . for in their succorless empty-handedness, they, in the heathenish sharked waters, and by the beaches of unrecorded, javelin islands, battled with virgin wonders and terrors that Cook with all his marines and muskets would not have willingly dared.

from Moby Dick, by Herman Melville

In 1659, a sober group of twenty-seven Quaker and Presbyterian families arrived on Nantucket and set about imposing order on the haphazard business of whaling. Whales had always beached themselves on the treacherous sandy shoals all around – up to a dozen might be washed ashore in a major storm – and the local Indians had become skilled in hunting them in nearby waters. At first, the white settlers began erecting tall masts from which a permanent watch was kept for passing whales. As the years went by, they began sending large ships out to pursue their prey. The Wampanoag Indians played an integral part in the process: the actual kill was effected by two rowboats working in tandem, and at least five of each thirteen-man crew, usually including the crucial harpooneer, would be Indian. The common occurrence when an injured whale would speed away, dragging a boat helter-skelter behind it for endless terrifying hours, was known as a “Nantucket Sleighride.”

The early chronicler Crèvecoeur provides an extensive account of Nantucket as it was in 1782 in his Letters from an American Farmer. Although perturbed by the islanders’ universal habit of taking a dose of opium every morning, he held them up as a model of diligence and good self-government. Whaling was a disciplined profession, and to feed themselves and equip their ships the islanders kept up a shrewd and extensive trade with the mainland. At that time, there were already more than a hundred ships. The whalers were not paid; instead each had a share (a “lay”) of the final proceeds of the voyage. Ambitious Nantucketers even reached the Pacific – see p.1279 in Chapter 16, “Hawaii,” for an account of their experiences there. The great days of Nantucket were immortalized by Herman Melville:

And thus have these naked Nantucketers, these sea hermits, issuing from their ant-hill in the sea, overrun and conquered the watery world like so many Alexanders . . . two thirds of this terra-queous globe are the Nantucketer’s. For the sea is his; he owns it, as Emperors own empires.

By the time Moby Dick was published in 1851, Nantucket’s fortunes had gone into an abrupt decline. Soon after a devastating fire in 1846, reports of the Californian Gold Rush lured young men westwards; the discovery of underground oil in Pennsylvania came as the final blow. A magazine article of 1873 reported, “Let no traveler visit Nantucket with the expectation of witnessing the marks of a flourishing trade . . . of the great fleet of ships which dotted every sea, scarcely a vestige remains.”

inn, built in 1872. ⑤

Sherburne Inn 10 Gay St ☎1-888/577-4425,
 ☎www.sherburneinn.com. A lovely, well-appointed
 B&B with cozy, elegant rooms, free wifi, pretty grounds, and afternoon tea and sherry. ⑦–⑧

Union Street Inn 7 Union St ☎508/228-9222, ☎www.unioninn.com. Luxurious, well-loved B&B with all the trimmings: beautiful rooms, cozy bathrobes and fancy soaps, and fresh afternoon pastries. ⑧–⑨

Eating and drinking

Crèvecoeur (see box, above) reported that on Nantucket, “music, singing, and dancing are holden in equal detestation.” Seafood fortunately is not; the only trouble is that Nantucket’s restaurants, good as they may be, tend to be exceptionally expensive, easily costing $30–40 for an entree.

Black Eyed Susan's 10 India St ☎ 508/325-0308. Beloved little brunch spot with inventive egg scrambles and cheery buttermilk pancakes. Cash only.

The Chicken Box 14 Dave St ☎ 508/228-9717. Every summer night, people of all stripes pack into "the Box" for great live shows and low-key drinking environs. Shuffleboard and pool tables, too. Cash only; an ATM is inside.

Company of the Cauldron 5 India St ☎ 508/228-4016. A romantic, vine-covered, candlelit haven with live harp music thrice weekly. Both seatings of a shifting prix fixe menu ($54) sell out quickly, so make reservations.

Provisions 3 Harbor Sq ☎ 508/228-3258. Great variety of bulging, gourmet sandwiches with names like the "Turkey Terrific" and the "Yacht Club" (smoked salmon, lemon caper cream cheese, and cukes).

Sayle's Seafood 99 Washington St Extension ☎ 508/228-4599. Breezy, very casual seafood shack where you pick your own lobster. There's also a phenomenal, all-encompassing "clam bake" option ($35/person in-store, $60/person at your house).

Straight Wharf Restaurant 6 Harbor Sq ☎ 508/228-4499. Lovely New American spot with smoked bluefish pate and watermelon salad in an airy, art-strewn space overlooking the harbor.

Central and western Massachusetts

The 150 miles of Massachusetts that stretch inland to the west of Boston have always been obliged to play second fiddle to the state capital. Just ten years after the Revolutionary War, the farmers who struggled to make a living from this indifferent soil rose in Shay's Rebellion to prevent eastern creditors from seizing their property to help recover the war debt; their pitchforks were no match for the guns of the new nation.

These days, the west is known best to vacationers for the Berkshires, which host the celebrated Tanglewood summer music festival and boast museum-filled towns such as North Adams and Williamstown – both in the far northwest corner of the state, at the end of the incredibly scenic Mohawk Trail. Amherst and Northampton are stimulating college towns in the verdant Pioneer Valley, with all the cafés, restaurants, and bookstores you could want. The industrial city of Worcester has a good art museum, while culture of a more popular variety is on offer at the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield.

Worcester

Forty miles west of Boston on I-90, WORCESTER is Massachusetts' second largest city, and the only major industrial city in the US not beside a sea, lake, or river. The highlight is the Worcester Art Museum, 55 Salisbury St (Wed, Fri & Sun 11am–5pm, Thurs 11am–8pm, Sat 10am–5pm; $8, or free Saturday from 10am–noon; ☎ 508/799-4406, 🌐 www.worcesterart.org), with its vast collection of paintings, mosaics, photographs, and a Romanesque chapter house from the twelfth century. Also worth a visit are the Higgins Armory Museum, at 100 Barber Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $8; ☎ 508/853-6015, 🌐 www.higgins.org), which is chock-full weapons and armor from all over the world, and the Worcester Historical Museum, 30 Elm St (Tues, Wed, Fri, & Sat 10am–4pm, Thurs 10am–8.30pm; $5; ☎ 508/753-8278, 🌐 www.worcesterhistory.org), where more is revealed about the city than simply being the coincidental birthplace of, among other things, the space suit, the monkey wrench, barbed wire, control pill, the Valentine's Day Card, and the infamous yellow "smiley face."

Among local accommodation, the central Hampton Inn, 110 Summer St (☎ 508/757-0400 or 1-800/426-7866, 🌐 www.hamptoninnworcester.com; 📍), has comfortable rooms. Anthony's, 172 Shrewsbury St (☎ 508/757-6864), is a local landmark for Italian food; Thai Cha-Da, 266 Park Avenue (☎ 508/752-2211), has great Thai. For a good selection of other eateries, head to Shrewsbury Street.

Old Sturbridge Village

Halfway between Worcester and Springfield on US-20, near the junction of I-90 and I-84, the restored and reconstructed Old Sturbridge Village (daily: winter 9.30am–4pm; rest of year 9.30am–5pm; $20; ☎508/347-3362 or 1-800/SEE-1830, 🌐www.osv.org), made up of preserved buildings brought from all over the region, gives a somewhat idealized but engaging portrait of a small New England town of the 1830s. Costumed interpreters act out roles – working in blacksmiths’ shops, planting and harvesting vegetables, tending cows, and the like – but they pull it off in an unusually convincing manner. The 200-acre site itself, with mature trees, ponds, and dirt footpaths, is very pretty, and worth a half-day visit. Nearby Sturbridge Host Hotel, 366 Main St (☎508/347-7993; 🍷), is a pretty place to stay – situated on nine groomed acres with an indoor heated swimming pool and access to beautiful Cedar Lake.

Springfield

SPRINGFIELD, at the point where I-90 crosses I-91 – in an extremely confusing way – ninety miles from Boston at the southern border of the Pioneer Valley, has an odd assortment of claims to fame, including being the home of the Springfield rifle and children’s author Dr Seuss. However, visitors are drawn to this unwieldy and unattractive city, split by the wide Connecticut River, by the 1890s invention of Dr James Naismith – the sport of basketball. Naismith designed the game as a way of providing exercise for athletes at the YMCA, and its popularity spread with amazing speed. First opened in 1959, the Basketball Hall of Fame at 1000 W Columbus Ave, next to the river just south of Memorial Bridge (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10am–5pm; $17; ☎413/781-6500 or 1-877/4HOOPLA, 🌐www.hoopshall.com), was revamped and enlarged in 2002, and includes movies, videos, memorabilia, and interactive gadgets that test your own skills.

Springfield’s Amtrak train station is very central, at 66 Lyman St (☎413/785-4230). Peter Pan Trailways (☎413/781-2900 or 1-800/237-8747, 🌐www.peterpanbus.com) provides daily bus services to and from Boston and New York City, the Pioneer Valley, and the Berkshires from the nearby bus station at 1776 Main St (☎413/781-3320). The Convention & Visitors Bureau is downtown at 1441 Main St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎413/787-1548 or 1-800/723-1548, 🌐www.valleyvisitor.com). Downtown lodging includes the expensive Sheraton Springfield, 1 Monarch Place (☎413/781-1010; 🍷), and the cheaper Super 8 Motel, 1500 Riverdale St (☎413/736-8080; 🍷). A number of budget motels can be found over the river in West Springfield. Tiny Fort Street has been home to the Fort/Student Prince Restaurant (☎413/734-7475) for over sixty years – a local favorite serving Wiener schnitzel, goulash, and sauerbraten.

Amherst and Northampton

North of Springfield, the Pioneer Valley is a verdant corridor created by the Connecticut River, home to the college towns of AMHERST and NORTHAMPTON, both good places to kick back for a few days, hang out in cafés, and browse bookstores in one of New England’s most liberal and progressive areas.

Amtrak trains stop in Amherst at 13 Railroad St, while you can catch Peter Pan Trailways buses at 1 Roundhouse Plaza in Northampton (☎413/586-1030) and 8 Main St in Amherst (☎413/256-1547). Good accommodation is available at Northampton’s historic Hotel Northampton, 36 King St (☎413/584-3100 or 1-800/547-3529, 🌐www.hotelnorthampton.com; 🍷), or the Black Walnut Inn at 1184 North Pleasant St in Amherst (☎413/549-5649 or 1-800/742-0358, 🌐www.blackwalnutinn.com; 🍷), a quintessentially New England inn. Among the numerous places to eat, Paul and Elizabeth's, 150 Main St, Northampton (☎413/584-4832), has good vegetarian choices, while Amherst Chinese Food, 62 Main St, Amherst (☎413/253-7835), serves healthy Oriental specialties made with organic veggies plucked from their own garden.

The Berkshires

A rich cultural history, world-class summer arts festivals, and a bucolic landscape of forests and verdant hills make the Berkshires, at the extreme western edge of Massachusetts, an unusually civilized region, just right for warm weather exploration.

While you're in the area, try to visit the excellent Berkshire Visitors Bureau, on Rte-8 in Adams (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎413/443-9186 or 1-800/237-5747, @www.berkshires.org), the best source for information on the Berkshires.

The Mohawk Trail: North Adams and Williamstown

In the northwest corner of the region, the Mohawk Trail passes through NORTH ADAMS and WILLIAMSTOWN, following the very scenic route the Native Americans used to travel between the valleys of the Connecticut and Hudson rivers. North Adams is home to the glorious Mass MoCA (Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art), 87 Marshall St (July–Sept daily 10am–6pm, Nov–May Mon & Wed–Sun 11am–5pm; $10; ☎413/662-2111, @www.massmoca.org), a sprawling, neo-funhouse collection of modern art installations, contemporary videos, and upside-down trees gathered in a gorgeous old mill site. Williamstown has two worthy art museums: the highlight of the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute, 225 South St (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm, July–Aug daily 10am–5pm; $10 June–Oct, rest of year free; ☎413/458-2303, @www.clarkart.edu), is the thirty-strong collection of Renoir paintings, while the Williams College Museum of Art, 15 Lawrence Hall Drive (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; ☎413/597-2429, @www.wcma.org), has good exhibits of ancient Middle Eastern and modern American art in a beautiful Neoclassical space. The ultra-modern Porches Inn, 231 River St, right around the corner from Mass MoCA (☎413/664-0400, @www.porches.com; 📍), is the place to stay in the area, featuring high-speed internet, DVD players, and contemporary, fun décor. For food, head to hip Café Latino, at Mass MoCA (☎413/662-2004) for crispy calamari and caipirinhas, or to their sister restaurant, Mezze, at 16 Water St in Williamstown (☎413/458-0123) for outstanding New American flavors in a gracious, airy space.

Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, just south of I-90 fifty miles west of Springfield, started out as “Indian Town,” because the Mahican Indians had several villages in the area. The Reverend John Sergeant built the simple wooden Mission House, now located on Main Street, in 1739 in an attempt to live in close proximity with the Mahicans and convert them to Christianity.

That Stockbridge today looks like the archetypal New England small town – most of all when there's snow on the ground – is due largely to the artist Norman Rockwell, who lived here for 25 years until his death in 1978. Many of his Saturday Evening Post covers, whose sentimentality was made palatable by his sharp wit, featured the town; a collection of covers can be seen at the museum on Rte-183 (daily: May–Oct 10am–5pm; Nov–April Mon–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $12.50; ☎413/298-4100 ext 220, @www.nrm.org). Some of the tour guides modelled for Rockwell as children and recall that for every few minutes they managed to hold still he'd slip them a coin from his large pile of nickels.

Magnificent houses in the hills around Stockbridge include Chesterwood, half a mile south of the Norman Rockwell Museum at 4 Williamsville Rd (May–Oct daily 10am–5pm; $10, grounds only $5; ☎413/298-3579, 🌐www.chesterwood.org), the luxurious home and studio of Daniel Chester French, sculptor of the Lincoln Memorial, and Naumkeag, on Prospect Hill Road (late May to mid-Oct daily 10am–5pm; $10, gardens only $8; ☎413/298-3239), which was the first modernist garden estate in the country, and belonged to Joseph Choate, US ambassador to Queen Victoria. Stockbridge was also the setting for Arlo Guthrie's song, and movie, Alice's Restaurant.

The slightly frou-frou Red Lion Inn is one of the grander edifices on Main Street (☎413/298-5545, 🌐www.redlioninn.com; 🍷); their restaurant has big portions of reliable Yankee fare, with standout burgers and steaks. In Becket, The Dream Away Lodge (1342 County Road, ☎413/623-8725) offers fanciful dinner fare amongst funky environs and live music.

Lenox and around

Roughly five miles north of Stockbridge on US-7, well-heeled tourists flock to LENOX each year for the summer season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, 297 West St (for ticket info, call ☎413/637-1666 or visit 🌐www.bso.org). Open-air orchestral concerts are held on weekends from July to late August, with chamber music and recitals given on other days; covered seats are pricey and often hard to get, but you can sit and picnic on the lush lawns for an admission fee of around $18. Some midweek rehearsals are also open to the public, and there's a jazz festival on Labor Day weekend (the first weekend of September). On Rte-20 between Becket and Lee, Jacob's Pillow (☎413/243-0745 or visit 🌐www.jacobspillow.org; June to Aug) hosts one of the most famous contemporary dance festivals in the country.

Further north on US-7, Arrowhead (late May–Oct daily 9.30am–5pm; $8; ☎413/442-1793, 🌐www.mobydick.org), in Pittsfield, was Herman Melville's home while he wrote Moby Dick; declining sales of his books eventually forced him to sell his house and move to New York. The Hancock Shaker Village, five miles west of Pittsfield (daily: April–Nov 9.30am–5pm; rest of year 10am–4pm; summer and fall $15, rest of year $12; ☎413/443-0188, 🌐www.hancockshakervillage.org), was a going concern from 1783 to 1960. Its legacy includes the large dwelling-place, in which almost one hundred people slept and ate, and a round stone barn for their cattle. A more important, and much less commercialized, Shaker village, Mount Lebanon, is another five miles west on US-20, just over the New York State border; much has been dismantled and moved to museums, but a visit still gives a sense of the Shaker way of life ($6; ☎518/794-9500). You can stay in total luxury at Blantyre, Blantyre Road; ☎413/637-3556, 🌐www.blantyre.com; 🍷), one of the country's most plush resorts. For food, head over to Church Street Café, 69 Church St in Lenox (☎413/637-2745) for standout New England fare, or linger over a martini at the atmospheric Bistro Zinc, around the corner at 56 Church St (☎413/637-8800). Chocolate Springs Café, 55 Pittsfield/Lenox Rd (☎413/637-9820) is the place to indulge in outstanding chocolate and espresso.

Rhode Island

3

NEW ENGLAND

Providence

A mere 48 miles long by 37 miles wide, RHODE ISLAND is the smallest state in the Union, and tends to be overlooked as a tourist destination, even if it is home to more than twenty percent of the nation's historical landmarks. It was established by Roger Williams in 1636 as a "lively experiment" in religious freedom. He had been expelled from Salem for his radical ideas (including the notion that Indians should be paid for their land and that there should be a total separation of church from state), and the Massachusetts Puritans liked to call the state he settled in "Rogues Island."

Despite its size, Rhode Island has over four hundred miles of coastline, hacked out of the Narragansett Bay, which includes over thirty tiny islands, including Hope and Despair. The "Ocean State" developed through sea trade, whaling, and smuggling. Partly due to this commercial interest, Rhode Islanders were in the front rank of the Revolutionary groundswell. However, no battles were fought on Rhode Island soil, and the state, apprehensive at the prospect of yielding power to the newly-formed Federal government, turned out to be the last state to ratify the Constitution. Between the Revolution and the Civil War, Rhode Island shifted from a maritime economy to lead the Industrial Revolution in manufacturing. Samuel Slater created the nation's first water-powered textile mill in Pawtucket, just outside Providence.

The state's principal destinations are its two original ports: well-heeled Newport, yachting capital of the world, with good beaches and outrageously louche mansions, and the Colonial college town of Providence.

Getting around Rhode Island

Rhode Island is tiny enough to make getting around ridiculously easy. Major interstate I-95 runs through Providence on its way from Massachusetts to Connecticut. The more scenic US-1 follows the coast of Narragansett Bay into Connecticut. Newport is accessible from Hwy-138, which connects the small islands in Narragansett Bay to the mainland. Public transportation is good: local buses as well as ferries connect Providence and Newport cheaply, and Amtrak stops regularly in Providence.

Providence

Splayed across seven hills on the Providence and Seekonk rivers, PROVIDENCE was Rhode Island's first settlement, founded "in commemoration of God's providence" on land given to Roger Williams by the Narragansett Indians (his insistence that Indians should be paid for their land being waived in his own case). Despite its roots in celebrating freedom, the city flourished as one of the most important ports of call in the notorious "triangle trade," where New England rum was exchanged for African slaves, who were then sold for West Indian molasses. With Slater's invention of the textile mill, industry along with port trade became the mainstays of Providence's economy.

The state's capital since 1901, Providence is today one of New England's three largest cities. Ivy League Brown University and the Rhode Island School of Design (RISD, or "Rizdee") give the place a certain cultural verve, and the many original Colonial homes on Benefit Street emphasize a historical importance largely absent from the downtown area across the river, which sparkles with new office buildings and a massive modern shopping mall. The city's ethnic diversity is showcased west of downtown by the large Italian community on Federal Hill, with bustling restaurants and traditional appeal.

Arrival, information, and getting around

T.F. Green Airport in Warwick, nine miles south of Providence, connects to all major US cities. The Amtrak station (daily 5am–11.30pm; ☎1-800/USA-RAIL) is at 100 Gaspee St, in a domed building a short walk southeast of the capitol. Greyhound (☎1-800/231-2222) and Peter Pan (☎1-888/751-8800) buses stop downtown at the city's transportation center, Kennedy Plaza.

The well-stocked Visitors' Center in the rotunda lobby of the Rhode Island Convention Center, One Sabin St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎401/751-1177 or 1-800/233-1636, www.pwcvb.com), provides maps and brochures, while the Providence Preservation Society, 21 Meeting St (Mon–Fri 8:30am–5pm; ☎401/831-7440, www.ppsri.org), sells pamphlets about the city's various neighbourhoods (which include suggested self-guided walking tours) for $3. There's another information center in the Roger Williams National Memorial Park, 282 N Main St (daily 9am–4.30pm; ☎401/521-7266).

Sightseeing around Providence is best done on foot, though there is good bus transportation within the city (as well as around the state), provided by RIPTA (ticket window Mon–Fri 7am–6pm, Sat 9am–noon & 1–5pm; $1.50/trip; ☎401/781-9400, 🌐www.ripta.com), which has a hub at Kennedy Plaza. RIPTA also runs daily ferries between Providence and Newport (through New England Fast Ferry; May–Oct; $16 roundtrip; 🌐www.nefastferry.com).

Accommodation

Downtown Providence is largely geared to the business traveler and has few budget rooms, but B&Bs are a viable option. Motorists can take advantage of the mid-priced motels along I-95 north towards Pawtucket, and south near the airport at Warwick.

Annie Brownell House B&B 400 Angell St ☎401/454-2934, 🌐www.anniebrownellhouse.com. Lovely, spacious 1899 Colonial Revival house with bright, airy rooms decorated in period style. Shared bath is slightly less expensive than private bath. Excellent full breakfasts, and a friendly owner to boot. ⑤

Comfort Inn 2 George St, Pawtucket ☎401/723-6700 and 1940 Post Rd, Warwick ☎401/732-0470, 🌐www.comfortinns.com. Decent rooms with included continental breakfast near exit 27 off I-95 and Slater Mill, or by the airport. ⑤

Hotel Providence 311 Westminster St ☎401/861-8000 or 1-800/861-8990, 🌐www.thehotelprovidence.com. Just a year old, this hotel is already earning rave reviews with its plush rooms, sophisticated artwork and excellent service. ⑤

The Old Court 144 Benefit St ☎401/751-2002, 🌐www.oldcourt.com. Appealing ten-room Victorian B&B in an old rectory near RISD. ⑤

The Providence Biltmore 11 Dorrance St ☎401/421-0700 or 1-800/294-7709, 🌐www.providencebiltmore.com. A landmark since 1922, the grand dame of the city's hotels is centrally located, with luxury rooms, great views, and pampering at an Elizabeth Arden Spa. ⑦

State House Inn 43 Jewett St ☎401/351-6111, 🌐www.providence-inn.com. Pleasant B&B rooms with antique furnishings in a restored old home near the Capitol building. ⑤

The Westin 1 W Exchange St ☎401/598-8000 or 1-800/937-8461, 🌐www.westin.com. Deluxe modern accommodations in the heart of Downcity; 200 additional rooms expected to open in 2007. ⑨

The City

The center of downtown is Kennedy Plaza, a large public square that houses the city's transportation center. While much of the surrounding area is modern, the 1878 City Hall, at the western end of the plaza, is a notable exception, with its striking mansard roof and grand interior staircase. Though no longer used as a train terminal, the nearby 1898 Beaux Arts Union Station is another fine example of the historic restoration at which the rest of the city excels. To the south of the plaza, the 1828 Westminster Arcade, the oldest enclosed shopping mall in the nation, features specialty shops and a food court in a small, bright, sky-lit hall.

North of the center, Roger Williams National Memorial, at N Main and Smith streets, is the site of city-founder Williams' original settlement (daily 9am–4.30pm; free), while to its west at the top of Constitution Hill, the white-marble Rhode Island State House boasts a huge self-supported dome, purportedly the fourth-largest in the world. The dome is topped with a statue called Independent Man, an 11ft bronze figure created by George Brewster as a symbol of freedom and independence. A handsome full-length Gilbert Stuart portrait of George Washington adorns the Reception Room (Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.30pm, with guided tours at 9am, 10am, & 11am, appointment requested; free; ☎401/222-3983).

College Hill and Federal Hill

Laid-back College Hill, eastward across the river, is an attractive district of Colonial buildings and museums. Part of Williams' holy experiment was the establishment of the first American Baptist Church in 1638. The white clapboard First Baptist Meet- ing House, at the foot of the hill at 75 N Main St, dates from 1775, and is remarkable for its 185ft steeple. This street logically leads into South Main Street, once bustling with waterfront activity, but now a small stretch of upmarket restaurants, bookstores, and pottery shops. Benefit Street, a block up the hill, is Providence's "mile of history," lined with the ice-cream-colored clapboard former homes of merchants and sea captains. Now beautifully restored, the street was once just a dirt path leading to graveyards until it was improved in the nineteenth century for the "benefit of the people of Providence" – hence its name. One of the few homes open to the public, the elegant John Brown House, 52 Power St, at Benefit St (April–Dec Tues–Fri guided tours at 1:30pm & 3pm, Sat guided tours at 10:30am, noon, 1:30pm, & 3pm; Jan–March Fri & Sat only, tours at 10:30am, noon, 1:30pm, & 3pm; $8; ☎401/273-7507), was home to the patriot and entrepreneur (also uncle to the man the University is named after) who made his fortune trading in slaves and with China. The first house built on the hill, it retains its original furnishings and holds displays on the formidable Brown family and the city itself.

Ivy League Brown University sets the tone for this three-centuries-old district; for free tours, contact the admissions office, 45 Prospect St (call ahead for tour schedule ☎401/863-2378, @www.brown.edu). East and south of College Hill, Thayer and Wickenden Streets buzz with an assortment of bookstores, cafés, and funky thrift stores.

On another campus a few blocks away, the small but excellent collection of the RISD Museum of Art, 224 Benefit St (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; $8; ☎401/454-6500, @www.risd.edu), is indeed one of the best art-school museums in the country, and includes ancient Roman and Asian works, Impressionist and Post-Impressionist American art, and one of Rodin's statues of Balzac.

Across the road, the Greek Revival Providence Athenaeum, 251 Benefit St (Mon–Thurs 9am–7pm, Fri & Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm, closed Sat afternoon and Sun in summer; free; ☎401/421-6970, @www.providenceathenaeum.org), is a library where Edgar Allan Poe failed to woo fellow poet Sarah Whitman. Its small reading nooks give the place a cozy living room feel.

Federal Hill, west of the center and informally considered Providence's Little Italy, is entered through a large arch topped by a bronze pinecone at Atwells Avenue. Long a powerful Mafia stronghold, this area is one of the friendliest and safest in the city – alive with cafés, delis, bakeries, and bars, and with a large Italianate fountain in DePasquale Square.

Slater Mill Historic Site

A ten-minute drive north of Providence, Pawtucket is home to the Slater Mill Historic Site, 67 Roosevelt Ave, exit 28 off I-95 (May–June daily 11am–3pm, July–Sept daily 10am–5pm; ☎401/725-8638, @www.slatermill.org), which illustrates the move to the industrial age led by Samuel Slater, who imported the technology from England in 1790. The site features the landmark Old Slater Mill, which contains a spinning frame as well as some rare textile machines that date from 1838, all for transforming raw cotton to yarn. Also found here is the 1810 Wilkinson Mill, where a machine shop still operates, and the Sylvanus Brown House, a worker's home with replica early-1800s furnishings, and interpreters performing (and explaining) their nineteenth-century chores.

Eating

Providence boasts many varied and excellent food options. Popular with students, Thayer Street is lined with inexpensive eateries, almost all of which remain open until late. Nearby Wickenden Street is more mature, and more expensive. The lively family-run Italian restaurants on Federal Hill serve good food at reasonable prices.

Al Forno 577 S Main St ☎401/273-9760.

Widely touted as one of the best restaurants in the country, with wood-grilled pizzas, pastas, and more. Tues–Sat dinner.

Angelo's 141 Atwells Ave ☎401/621-8171. Family-style Federal Hill institution, offering inexpensive (and no-frills) Italian standards. Cash only.

Café Nuovo 1 Citizens Plaza ☎401/421-2525. Perfectly situated for an excellent and romantic, albeit expensive, meal overlooking WaterFire (see below). Dinner only Mon–Sat.

CAV Restaurant 14 Imperial Place ☎401/751-9164. An excellent contemporary, mid-priced menu in an atmospheric historic loft; live jazz after 9:30pm Fri & Sat (cover around $5 for non-diners).

Citron 5 Memorial Blvd ☎401/621-9463. Opened in late summer 2006, Citron serves excellent and innovative organic dishes in the $20 range. An extensive wine list comes with color-coded tips to help you choose; if you're still floundering you can also order tasting "flights," or selections, of groups of wines for a reasonable price.

Coffee Exchange 207 Wickenden St ☎401/273-1198. Fair trade, shade-grown, organic coffees at a popular meeting place for would-be intellectuals.

Kabob 'n' Curry 261 Thayer St ☎401/273-8844. On trendy Thayer Street, above-average Indian meals for less-than-average prices.

Nightlife and entertainment

As Providence's nightlife is largely student-oriented, things can get quiet during the breaks, though Thayer Street is always lively. For film, the Avon Rep Cinema at 260 Thayer St (☎401/421-3315) shows independent and art flicks, and the Cable Car Cinema at 204 S Main St (☎401/272-3970) has comfy sofas as well as seats. The Providence Performing Arts Center, in DOWNCITY at 220 Weybosset St (☎401/421-2787, www.ppacri.org), hosts musicals and the occasional concert in a grand old Art Deco movie house. In the warmer months, the unusual event known as WaterFire (several times a month, May–Oct; www.waterfire.org) enraptures visitors and locals alike with nearly one hundred small bonfires set at sunset in the center of the Providence River starting at Waterplace Park, tended by gondoliers and accompanied by rousing music. Complete entertainment listings can be found in the free weekly Providence Phoenix and the Providence Journal's Thursday edition.

AS220 115 Empire St ☎401/831-9327. Unabashedly artsy café/bar hangout for locals and students that hosts nightly performances featuring everything from mellow jazz to circus acts. Cover $2–10.

Lili Marlene's 422 Atwells Ave ☎401/751-4996.

Small low-key locals' hangout with red leather booth, a pool table, and late-night snacks.

Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel 79 Washington St ☎401/272-5876. This is the spot in town to see nationally recognized bands rock out. Tickets $12–50, advance sales are cheapest.

Snookers 145 Clifford St ☎401/351-7665. Lively pool hall with fourteen tables for play, as well as a comfy outdoor deck for those just along for a drink. DJs five nights a week; $5 cover Fri & Sat after 10pm.

Trinity Brewhouse 186 Fountain St ☎401/453-2337. Hang out here after a Providence Bruins (minor league hockey) or Friars (college basketball) game to quaff in celebration or despair. Everything on tap is brewed in-house; full menu as well.

Newport

Thirty miles south of Providence, NEWPORT stands at the southern tip of the largest island in Narragansett Bay, Aquidneck Island. It was established as a colony by William Coddington, also seeking religious freedom from Massachusetts, in 1639. Due to its excellent harbor, it grew rapidly as a port for the "triangle trade” (see p.240) and as a privateering center. Contrary to the injustice inherent in those activities, religious tolerance led to an influx of Jews, Quakers, and Baptists, who formed lucrative international trade links. This great prosperity was severely curtailed by the British occupation of 1776–79, when half the population fled and much of the town was destroyed. Fortunately, enough of its original eighteenth-century homes have survived to rival Boston’s collection.

In the 1850s, Newport became fashionable again as a resort for wealthy New York merchants, and very soon nouveau riche industrialists such as the Astors and Vanderbilts were building “summer cottages” – better described as mansions – along the rocky coastline. The obscene ostentation of this era (now known by Mark Twain’s disparaging phrase as the Gilded Age) shocked Massachusetts’ old wealth to the core.

The Great Depression killed off the decadence, but Newport remained a naval town through the 1970s. Today, the town feeds off tourism: much of it caters to the tennis and yachting set, but there are as many people looking at – and envying – the wealth as enjoying it. Despite an array of kitschy boutiques throughout, the rough old port still rears its boozy head, with beer and R&B clubs as evident as cocktails and cruises, making Newport an essential stop, especially during the summer festival season.

Arrival and information

There are actually three towns on Aquidneck Island: Portsmouth is at the northern edge, with the appropriately named Middletown, then Newport, below it. The mainland (and I-95) is connected to the island by US-138, which passes over the Jamestown Bridge to Conanicut Island, and from there by the Newport (or Claiborne Pell) Bridge ($2 each way).

Newport is easy to walk around. Thames (pronounced “Thaymz”) Street is the main road; its northern end is separated from the harbor by the unattractive, modern America’s Cup Avenue. It’s here, at no. 23, that you will find the large Gateway Visitor Center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 401/845-9123 or 1-800/976-5122, 🌐 www.gonewport.com), which can provide plenty of maps and advice. Also a transportation hub, the Gateway Center has ample (but not free) parking and is a base for mass transit. Peter Pan buses (☎ 1-888/751-8800) pull in here, as well as RIPTA buses ($1.50/trip; ☎ 401/781-9400, 🌐 www.ripta.com), which run regularly through town and to the beaches. Up the street at Ten Speed Spokes, 18 Elm St (Mar–Sept Mon–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, Oct–Feb closed Sun & Mon; ☎ 401/847-5609), rental bikes cost $5 per hour (or $25 a day) and are handy for getting to the quieter beaches.

Through the summer, the Newport Historical Society (☎ 401/846-0813, 🌐 www.newporthistorical.org), at 82 Touro St, organizes various themed walking tours through Colonial Newport (from $8; information at ☎ 401/841-8770), while Viking Tours runs bus and harbor excursions from the Gateway Center ($12.50–48; may include admission to one or more mansions; ☎ 401/847-6921, 🌐 www.vikingtoursnewport.com). But the most relaxing way of getting a good look at the mansions and the town is a schooner cruise on the beautiful Madeleine (☎ 401/847-0298, 🌐 www.cruisewnewport.com). The ship leaves several times daily from Bannister’s Wharf, off America’s Cup Avenue. The $27 price for a ninety-minute tour (or $35 for the sunset tour, which includes complimentary champagne, beer, or soda) is ultimately better value than a cheaper motorboat tour.

Accommodation

Though there are plenty of reasonably priced guesthouses in Newport, it’s still a good idea to make reservations in advance, especially on summer weekends, when prices jump. The visitor center (see p.245) has free phone links to inns and motels in all price ranges. B&Bs are by far the most prevalent form of lodging. Two established agencies are Newport Reservations (☎ 401/842-0102 or 1-800/842-0102, 🌐 www.newportreservations.com), which can find rooms from as low as $125 in-season, and Bed & Breakfast Newport (☎ 401/846-5408 or 1-800/800-8765, 🌐 www.bbnewport.com), which specializes in smaller B&Bs you might otherwise find difficult to locate.

1855 Marshall Slocum Guest House 29 Kay St ☎ 401/841-5120 or 1-800/372-5120, 🌐 www.marshallslocuminn.com. Five unique rooms in an unpretentious B&B with a beautiful backyard garden. Friendly owners and gourmet breakfasts are a bonus. Ⓔ

 Admiral Fitzroy Inn 398 Thames St ☎ 401/848-8000 or 1-866/848-8780, 🌐 www.admiralfitzroy.com. Cheerfully decorated B&B in the heart of town, with a roof deck overlooking the harbor. Ⓔ

Cliffside Inn 2 Seaview Ave ☎ 401/847-1811 or 1-800/845-1811, 🌐 www.cliffsideinn.com. Gorgeous Victorian manor house where guests are well-pampered, one minute from the Cliff Walk and First Beach. Ⓔ

Hotel Viking One Bellevue Ave ☎ 401/847-3300, 🌐 www.hotelviking.com. This Newport Institution was built in 1926 to house guests of the nearby mansion-owners and is still fit for the jet-setting crowd. Ⓔ

Howard Johnson Inn 351 W Main Rd, Middletown ☎ 401/849-2000 or 1-800/446-4656, 🌐 www.newporthoj.com. Just two miles from downtown Newport, a fairly standard budget chain, with well equipped rooms and an indoor pool. Ⓔ

William Gyles Guesthouse 16 Howard St ☎ 401/369-0243, 🌐 www.newporthostel.com. Designed for the backpacker, this hostel is not only clean, comfortable, and welcoming, but in the center of town. In summer weekends $59/night, weekdays $29, in winter $16/night and up.

The Town

Newport's main tourist draw is its magnificent mansions. Strolling around the predominantly Colonial downtown is a nice way to spend an afternoon, too, though the ever-growing profusion of souvenir shops is somewhat off-putting. When you tire of the opulence and the kitsch, head to the shoreline, to enjoy Newport's attractive beaches.

The mansions

The phrase "conspicuous consumption" was coined by sociologist Thorstein Veblen, who visited Newport circa 1900 and witnessed the desperate need of new, entrepreneurial millionaires to flaunt their wealth. More than just a summer resort, Newport became an arena in which families competed to outdo each other – though the "season" of wild and decadent parties lasted only a few weeks, and many of the multi-million-dollar mansions lay empty for months at a time. It's difficult to grasp the sheer wealth while gawking at the mansions' facades, but after being herded in and rushed through three or four of them, the opulence rapidly begins to pall. Unless you're especially interested, visiting one or two should suffice.

Of the dozen or so properties open for viewing, the most decadent stand on Bellevue Avenue. Both Marble House, with its golden ballroom and adjacent Chinese teahouse, and Rosecliff, with its colorful rose garden and heart-shaped staircase, were used as sets during the filming of The Great Gatsby. Kingscote is a quirky Gothic Revival cottage with a lovely interior, while the biggest and best of the lot, Cornelius Vanderbilt's The Breakers, on Ochre Point Avenue, just off Bellevue, is a sumptuous Italian Renaissance palace overlooking the ocean. All four mansions are run by the Preservation Society of Newport County, 424 Bellevue Ave ☎ 401/847-1000, 🌐 www.newportmansions.org), whose combination tickets slightly help to beat the hefty individual admission prices (June–Aug daily 10am–5pm, Breakers opens at 9am; rest of year schedules vary; Breakers costs $15, all others $10; any five Society properties $31; some discounts available).

△ Newport's mansions

Independent from the Preservation Society mansions, the Astors' Beechwood, 580 Bellevue Ave (Feb to mid-May Thurs 3–4pm, Fri–Sun 10am–4pm, mid-May to Oct daily 10am–4pm, Nov–Dec schedule varies, closed Jan; $18; ☎401/846-3772; @www.astorsbeechwood.com), is an entertaining antidote to the drier historical drills given on other tours. Costumed actors welcome visitors as house guests who have arrived for a party held by Mrs Astor, the self-proclaimed queen of American society (she devised the notion of the Four Hundred, an elite group of New York's long-standing well-to-do). Anecdotes, bitchy asides, and a constant stream of activity make it all great fun.

One way to see the Bellevue Avenue mansions on the cheap is to peer in the back gardens from the Cliff Walk, which begins on Memorial Boulevard where it meets First (Easton) Beach. This three-and-a-half-mile oceanside path alternates from pretty stretches lined by jasmine and wild roses to unappealing concrete underpasses through perilous rocks. For those with a car, Bellevue Avenue turns into Ocean Drive where the Cliff Walk ends, following the coast westwards. After it joins Ridge Road, you'll pass Hammersmith Farm, John and Jackie Kennedy's 28-room summer home (though it's closed to the public). The First Couple's wedding reception was held here in 1953.

Downtown Newport

Colonial Newport's political and business center, Washington Square, lies just south of the Gateway Center, beginning where Thames Street meets the Brick Market. The 1762 market, off Long Wharf (the most important of Newport's Colonial wharves), has been reconstructed to house galleries and pricey gift shops. Among them, the Museum of Newport History (mid-April to mid-June & Sept–Dec Thurs–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; mid-June to Aug daily 10am–4pm; donation; ☎401/841-8770) gives a good overview of the evolution of maritime Newport, displayed through photographs, artifacts, and interactive exhibits.

The oldest religious building in town is the 1699 Quaker Great Friends Meeting House, at Marlborough and Farewell streets, restored to its nineteenth-century appearance and completely free of adornment (June 15–Labor Day tours depart from the Museum of Newport History, call for hours; $5; ☎401/841-8770). The Quakers, like other religious sects, received a warm welcome in Rhode Island. Indeed, the state's penchant for religious tolerance is echoed by the presence of the elegant Touro Synagogue, 85 Touro St (call for hours; $5; ☎401/847-4794, 🌐www.tourosynagogue.org). Built in 1763 and extensively restored, this oldest house of Jewish worship in America was modeled on Sephardic Jewish temples in Portugal and Holland. In 1790, Newport's Jewish community wrote to George Washington expressing their hopes for his new government; you can see his enthusiastic reply advocating religious liberty exhibited here.

Washington himself worshiped at the 1726 Trinity Church on Queen Anne Square, based on the Old North Church in Boston and the designs of Sir Christopher Wren ($2 donation; ☎401/846-0660). A few blocks south, St Mary's Church, Spring St and Memorial Blvd, is the oldest Catholic Church in Rhode Island, and the place where Jacqueline Bouvier married John Kennedy in 1953 (Mon–Fri 7.30–11am; free; ☎401/847-0475).

Apart from the mansions, Bellevue Avenue also has two museums of note. The Newport Art Museum, at no. 76, is housed in the 1864 mock-medieval Griswold House, and exhibits New England art from the last two centuries (late-May to early-Sept Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; closes at 4pm rest of year; $6; ☎401/848-8200, 🌐www.newportartmuseum.com). At no. 194, the grand Newport Casino was an early country club, which held the first national tennis championship in 1881. It now houses the International Tennis Hall of Fame Museum, and still keeps its grass, clay and hard courts open to the public. The museum includes exhibits on tennis fashion – or what has passed for it – and trophies (daily 9.30am–5pm; $9; ☎401/849-3990 or 1-800/457-1144, 🌐www.tennisfame.com).

The beaches

The attraction of Newport's shoreline, with its many coves and gently sloping sands, is slightly marred by the fact that several beaches are strictly private. Of those that are public, Gooseberry Beach, at the south, is surrounded by grand houses, while the lively town beach, First (or Newport, or Easton's) Beach, is at the east end of Memorial Boulevard; quieter Second and Third beaches are further along the same route toward Middletown. The visitor center (see p.245) provides info on all of these (most of which have parking fees of $8–15 per car).

Eating

Many of Newport's restaurants are geared to tourists and overpriced, though with a little hunting you can find some gems, even along touristy Thames Street. The seafood here is well worth the blowout if you have the extra cash.

Asterisk 599 Thames St ☎401/841-8833. Happening eatery in a former garage, with abstract paintings on the walls. Eclectic entrées ($21–36) include Crispy Duck and Chateaubriand. Dinner daily.

The Black Pearl Bannisters Wharf ☎401/846-5264. A Newport institution famous for its chunky clam chowder; get rowdy on the busy patio or repair to the Commodore Room for more formal dining.

Brick Alley Pub & Restaurant 140 Thames St ☎401/849-6334. Attracts a good mix of locals and tourists for moderately priced lunches, dinners, and cocktails; Sunday brunch is a feast.

Firehouse Pizza 595 Thames St ☎401/846-1199. Twelve-inch pan pizzas (thin crust on request if it's quiet) eaten at kooky handpainted booths.

Flo's Clam Shack 4 Wave Ave ☎401/847-8141.

A casual joint across from First Beach that hits the spot for cheap local seafood; chowder ("chowda") is the specialty. Closed Jan & Feb.

The Red Parrot 348 Thames St ☎401/847-3800.

Chicken, seafood, and steaks with a Caribbean flare, as well as top-notch hot and frozen cocktails.

Salvation Café 140 Broadway ☎401/847-2620. A fun, funky spot off the beaten tourist track. International dishes like chicken tikka with coconut rice and Portuguese shellfish over orzo, at reasonable prices. Dinner daily summer, Thurs–Sun winter.

Smokehouse Cafe America's Cup Ave ☎401/848-9800. The Smokehouse – an oddity in Newport's world of seafood – has great barbeque for under $20 and a lively crowd. Closed Nov–Apr.

White Horse Tavern 26 Marlborough St ☎401/849-3600. Intensely atmospheric restaurant (the tavern first opened in 1687) serving hearty American fare, such as beef tenderloin, New England lobster stew, and Atlantic salmon. More affordably priced at lunchtime.

Festivals and nightlife

There is always something afoot in Newport, which is especially famed for its Folk Festival (☎www.newportfolk.com) held in late July or early August, and the JVC Jazz Festival (☎www.festivalproductions.net) that follows in mid-August. Most performances for both of these are held in Fort Adams State Park (information at ☎401/847-3700). The lesser-known but arguably more memorable Newport Music Festival, with a focus on classical music, unfolds over two weeks in July (☎401/846-1133, ☎www.newportmusic.org) at the mansions, while the Irish Waterfront Festival, held on Labor Day weekend with music, folk art, and step-dancing, is great fun (☎401/646-1600, ☎www.newportfestivals.com).

Otherwise, there is plenty of shamelessly unrefined nightlife around town. Noisy bars abound near the waterfront, and among the live music venues in town, two of the best are the Newport Blues Cafe, 286 Thames St (☎401/841-5510), for live jazz and blues nightly, and One Pelham East, at Thames and Pelham streets (☎401/847-9460), which has been hosting bands for over twenty years. At the safari-themed Rhino Bar & Grille, 337 Thames St (☎401/846-0707), original live bands (in the bar) and the best area DJs (playing dance, hip-hop, and techno in the Mamba Room) keep things hopping.

Connecticut

CONNECTICUT was named Quinnehtukqut by the Native Americans for the "great tidal river" that splits it in two before spilling out into the Long Island Sound, washing the old whaling ports of the coast. This small and densely populated state is a sort of conservative, high-rent suburb of New York City, where commuters earn Big Apple salaries while avoiding some New York state and city taxes. Its first white settlers arrived in the 1630s: refugees from Massachusetts seeking liberty, good farmland, and trading opportunities. Connecticut soon became a center for "Yankee ingenuity," prospering through the invention and marketing (often by notorious Yankee peddlers) of many a useful little household object. Although hit badly by English raids in the Revolutionary War, its role in providing the war effort with crucial supplies made it known as "the provisions state." After the war, the original charter of Connecticut's colonists was used as a model for the American Constitution, which gave rise to another nickname: “the Constitution state.”

Connecticut continued to prosper during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, with steady industrialization and lucrative whaling along the coast. Today, much of the old industry has withered away, leaving areas of green countryside untroubled by noisy interstates, many verdant forests, and the idyllic rural villages that typify New England’s quaint image. Unemployment and poverty plagues its larger cities, in particular, the rather dull capital city, Hartford, now host to the linchpins of Connecticut’s economy – insurance companies, medical research, and military bases. New Haven, home to Yale University, has addressed (and significantly eased) the distinctly urban problems like drugs, homelessness, and crime, while nurturing a green and a buzzing culture.

Getting around Connecticut

Except for a few isolated areas in the north, Connecticut is well-connected with major roads: I-95 is the main interstate, running from New York to Rhode Island along the shore of the Long Island Sound. I-91 travels north from I-95 at New Haven, weaving its way along the Connecticut River to Vermont. It’s a shame to miss out on the quiet countryside scenery along the side roads, so it’s worth getting off the interstates if you can.

Greyhound and Peter Pan Trailways (☎ 1-800/343-9999, @ www.peterpanbus.com) run buses to most of the main towns. Connecticut Transit buses (☎ 860/522-8101) serve the inland area around Hartford. Metro North (☎ 1-800/638-7646) trains carry passengers between New Haven and New York City, with connecting services to numerous other towns; Amtrak’s line runs between New York City and Boston, with various stops along the shore and a connection to Hartford.

Southeastern Connecticut

The much-visited southeastern coast of Connecticut spans 25 miles from Stonington in the east to Niantic in the west, bisected by the Thames (pronounced “Thaymz”) River. Each of the handful of tiny, picturesque Colonial communities and old whaling villages along the Long Island Sound is a mere stone’s throw from the next. No longer are they the iniquitous ports that so inspired Melville, but they’re still keen to preserve a sense of their history. The restored nineteenth-century Mystic Seaport justifies at least a day’s visit, while nearby are the less lovely US Naval Submarine Base at Groton and the pretty fishing harbor of Stonington Borough.

Mystic

As purists will tell you, the town of MYSTIC, right on I-95, does not in fact exist; it is an area governed partly by Groton and partly by Stonington. Nonetheless, the old whaling port and shipbuilding center does have a small, well-kept, and somewhat touristy downtown, lined with typical New England–quaint clapboard galleries and antique shops. The old bridge across the bustling Mystic River that divides the town still opens hourly, and self-guided walking tours take in the many old houses built by well-off sea captains. The Olde Mistick Village, at the intersection of I-95 and US-27, is a pleasant enough outdoor mall, with over sixty upmarket shops in Colonial-style buildings. For a scenic walk or bike ride away from the tourists, take the four-mile River Road, winding along the western bank of the river, protected from cars and development (the road passes by Downes Marsh, an osprey sanctuary).

What brings the tourists to Mystic is the impeccably reconstructed seventeen-acre waterfront village of Mystic Seaport, where more than sixty weathered buildings house old-style workshops, an apothecary, stores, and a printing press (daily: April–Oct 9am–5pm; rest of year 10am–4pm; $17.50, children $12; ☎1-888/9SEA-PORT, @www.visitmysticseaport.com). Exhibits include exquisitely carved scrimshaw and a vast amount of products made from whales' wax-like spermaceti, and a film of a bloody whale capture. There are demonstrations of shanty-singing, fish-splitting, and sail-setting, among other salty pastimes, as well as storytelling and theater. Meanwhile, in the shipyard, you can watch the building, restoration, and maintenance of wooden ships. The pièce de résistance is the restored Charles W. Morgan, a three-masted wooden Yankee whaling ship built in 1841. The last of its kind, the Morgan is a remnant of an age of exploration and arrogant expansion. Done up ready to embark on a hypothetical two-year voyage, the ship is filled with whaling items; below deck, via perilously narrow stairs, the blubber room is crowded with huge iron try-pots (used to melt down the stinking blubber).

Over six thousand weird and wonderful sea creatures glug about the Mystic Aquarium, at exit 90 off I-95 (daily: March–Nov 9am–6pm; rest of year 10am–5pm; $17.50, children $12.50, good for three consecutive days; ☎860/572-5955, @www.mysticaquarium.org). Exhibits showcase African penguins, seals, rays, sea lions, and a beluga whale, and the explanations of the various creatures' behavior make this a step up from standard aquarium fare. For those interested in underwater exploration, there's the high-tech "Challenge of the Deep" and "Return to Titanic", hosted by Dr Robert Ballard, one of the team that found the sunken vessel.

Practicalities

Mystic has an information office in the Olde Mistick Village shopping mall (daily 9am–4.30pm; ☎ 860/536-1641 or 1-800/863-6569, 🌐 www.mysticinfo.com). The office lists current rates and books accommodation. Options include the Comfort Inn (☎ 860/572-8531 or 1-800/228-5150; 📍), Days Inn (☎ 860/572-0574 or 1-800/572-3993; 📍), and the Best Western Sovereign Hotel (☎ 860/536-4281 or 1-800/528-1234; 📍); all of these are on Whitehall Avenue (just off exit 90 on I-95), and all are handy for the Seaport. Two posher options are the grand 🏡 Inn at Mystic, a Colonial Revival mansion hidden away at the junction of routes 1 and 27 (☎ 860/536-9604 or 1-800/237-2415, 🌐 www.innatmystic.com; 📍), and the Whitehall Mansion, 42 Whitehall Ave (☎ 860/572-7280; 📍), a painstakingly restored 1771 manor house, furnished with antiques and queen-sized canopy beds. The Seaport campground is on US-184 in Old Mystic, three miles from the Seaport (April–Oct; ☎ 860/536-4044, 🌐 www.seaportcampground.com; $29–36 per night for up to two adults and two children).

Without a doubt the best-known restaurant is Mystic Pizza, at 56 W Main St (☎ 860/536-3700), a small, family-run pizza place that continues to serve huge, inexpensive, and fresh “pies,” unruffled by its movie-title status. The Sea View Snack Bar, on Hwy-27 between the visitor center and downtown (☎ 860/572-0096), serves seafood and sandwiches in a covered picnic area overlooking the Mystic River; The Green Marble, 8 Steamboat Wharf (☎ 860/572-0012), roasts its own coffee; and Kitchen Little, 81 1/2 Greenmanville Ave (6am–2pm; ☎ 860/536-2122), serves a mean breakfast along the riverfront.

Ten minutes’ drive south, in the small fishing port of NOANK, the casual Abbott’s Lobster in the Rough, 117 Pearl St (May–Aug daily noon–9pm; Sept to mid–Oct Fri–Sun noon–7pm; ☎ 860/536-7719), serves superb fresh steamed lobster, seafood, and traditional giant New England dinners at outdoor picnic tables.

Stonington Borough

STONINGTON BOROUGH, five miles east of Mystic, is a district within the town of Stonington. It’s an overwhelmingly pretty old fishing village, originally Portuguese but now very New England, characterized by appealing whitewashed cottages, picket fences, and colorful flower gardens. Stonington Borough’s main street, Water Street, is chock-a-block with antique shops and upmarket thrift stores, crowded with well-heeled bargain-hunters on the weekend.

The Lighthouse Museum, 7 Water St, dates from 1823, and is full of local memorabilia, maps, and drawings; fresh flowers everywhere add a nice touch. You can climb the stone steps and iron staircase for views over the water and to Connecticut’s neighboring states (May–Oct daily 10am–5pm; $5; ☎ 860/535-1440). The waterfront itself is a great place to pass a few sunny hours, peaceful and quiet with a few bobbing fishing boats and clean water for swimming.

The most central place to stay, though not cheap, is The Inn at Stonington, 60 Water St (☎ 860/535-2000, 🌐 www.innatstonington.com; 📍), where sunny harbor views are available from the cozy rooms with large baths and some modern amenities. Authentic New England clam chowder, and full meals, can be had at Noah’s, 113 Water St (☎ 860/535-3925), an old Portuguese restaurant with a friendly, trendy atmosphere and delicious home-baked cakes. Two seafood restaurants – Water Street Café, 142 Water St (☎ 860/535-2122), and Skipper’s Dock, 66 Water St (☎ 860/535-0111) – are worth a visit; the former is elegant, the latter less expensive and noisier, with an open deck sporting fabulous ocean views.

Groton

Seven miles west of Mystic Seaport, GROTON is a suitably unpleasant name for the hometown of the US Naval Submarine Base, headquarters for the North Atlantic fleet. The USS Nautilus, the country's first nuclear-powered submarine, was built here in 1954, and four years later it became the first vessel to sail under the polar icecap. It's now moored on the Thames, and self-guided tours allow access to its terrifyingly claustrophobic corridors, one-person-wide in many places. The sub looks pretty much as it did in the 1950s, complete with pin-ups of Marilyn Monroe. The Submarine Force Museum next door has exhibits on the history of submersibles from the minuscule American Turtle, built in 1775, to the powerful Trident (hours vary; free; ☎ 860/694-3174 or 1-800/343-0079, 🌐 www.ussnautilus.org).

New London

NEW LONDON, opposite Groton on the west side of the Thames, is the closest thing southeastern Connecticut has to a city, although it spreads over only six square miles. Originally settled in 1646, New London was a wealthy whaling port in the nineteenth century. Today, it's home to the US Coast Guard Academy, off I-95 at 31 Mohegan Ave, where visitors can visit the training ship USS Eagle when it's in port, and wander around a museum of Coast Guard history (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; free; ☎ 860/444-8511). Overlooking the academy is the Lyman Allyn Art Museum, part of Connecticut College at 625 Williams St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $5; ☎ 860/443-2545); it specializes in American Impressionist works and local decorative arts. From the Southeastern Connecticut CVB at 32 Huntington St (☎ 860/444-2206), you can pick up a self-guided walking tour map of downtown, and continue down the formerly prosperous Huntington Street, past the four adjacent Greek Revival mansions known as Whale Oil Row.

New London was the birthplace of boozy playwright Eugene O'Neill. His childhood home, the Monte Cristo Cottage, 325 Pequot Ave (call for hours at ☎ 860/443-0051; $7), is open for tours, complete with juicy details of his trauma-ridden early life – some alluded to in his autobiographical play Long Day's Journey into Night. The Eugene O'Neill Theater Center, 305 Great Neck Rd (exit 82 off I-95) in nearby WATERFORD, is an acclaimed testing ground for playwrights and actors where audiences can watch new, often experimental, shows in rehearsal (performances held sporadically May–Aug; ☎ 860/443-5378, 🌐 www.theoneill.org).

Ocean Beach Park, at 1225 Ocean Ave, has a sugar-sand beach and huge salt-water pool, as well as a wooden boardwalk, mini-golf and arcade (summer daily 9am–midnight; $12–16 per carload, or $5 for pedestrians).

Groton and New London practicalities

You can arrive in New London by ferry from Orient Point on Long Island (via Cross Sound Ferry, 2 Ferry St, ☎ 860/443-5281 in New England, ☎ 631/323-2525 on Long Island, 🌐 www.longislandferry.com). Reservations are strongly recommended. Greyhound serves New London, which is also the center of the far from comprehensive local bus system run by Southeast Area Transit ($1.25; ☎ 860/886-2631).

In New London, at the corner of Golden Street and Eugene O'Neill Drive, the Trolley Info Station has brochures and a helpful staff (June–Sept daily 10am–4pm; May & Oct Fri–Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 860/444-7264). Mystic Country Information, 32 Huntington St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 860/444-2206), can provide details on restaurants and local events. New London has reasonably priced motels along I-95, including the Holiday Inn, I-95 and Frontage Rd (☎ 860/442-0631 or 1-800/HOLIDAY, 🌐 www.holiday-inn.com; Ⓢ), and the Red Roof Inn, 707 Colman St (☎ 860/444-0001 or 1-800/RED-ROOF, 🌐 www.redroof.com; Ⓢ). In Groton there are plenty of budget motels off I-95 exit 86, including a Super 8 (☎ 860/448-2818 or 1-800/800-8000; Ⓢ).

New London has a few good restaurants worth stopping into, including Timothy's, 6 Guthrie Place (☎ 860/443-8411), for Continental cuisine overlooking Long Island Sound, or, on the cheaper side, the Recovery Room, 445 Ocean Ave (☎ 860/443-2619), an award-winning pizzeria.

Hartford

The unattractive modern capital of Connecticut, HARTFORD, in the center of the state on the Connecticut River, is also the insurance center of the United States. You can visit its High Victorian Gothic, gold-domed state capitol, sitting on a Bushnell Park hilltop, on one of the free tours (Mon–Fri, hourly from 9.15am–1.15pm, July and Aug until 2.15pm; April–Oct, also Sat 10.15am–2.15pm). Marginally more thrilling is the antique merry-go-round in the park, which gives jangling rides for $1 (May to mid-Oct, Tues–Sun, 11am–5pm). Housed in the Connecticut State Library, across the street at 231 Capitol Ave, the Museum of Connecticut History (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm, Sat 9am–3pm; free; ☎ 860/757-6535) holds Colt rifles and revolvers, and the desk at which Abraham Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation.

Hartford's pride and joy is the Greek Revival Wadsworth Atheneum, at 600 Main St (Wed–Fri 11am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $10; ☎ 860/278-2670). As the nation's oldest continuously operating public art museum, it holds some 45,000 pieces, among which are many fine and decorative arts. Residing here are Old Masters including Rubens' The Return of the Holy Family from Egypt and, in the French Impressionists collection, Renoir's Monet Painting in His Garden at Argenteuil. Lectures and films are put on at the Atheneum Theater; there's also an excellent café.

About a mile west of downtown Hartford on Hwy-4, a hilltop community known as Nook Farm was home in the 1880s to next-door neighbors Mark Twain and Harriet Beecher Stowe. Their Victorian homes, furnished much

Native American casinos

Connecticut has become home to two major Native American casinos, over objections from environmentalists, anti-gambling agencies, and residents. The massive Foxwoods Casino and Resort, Rte-2, Ledyard (☎ 1-800/FOXWOODS, 🌐 www.foxwoods.com), built by the Mashantucket-Pequot Indians, rises dramatically above the virgin pine forests north of New London and draws millions of visitors annually. The resort has three huge hotels, as well as all manner of slots, gaming tables, and bingo. Just a few miles away, the Mohegan Sun Casino, Rte-2A, Uncasville (☎ 1-888/226-7771, 🌐 www.mohegansun.com), opened its doors in 1996, as Foxwood's much smaller and quieter competitor. But after a $1 billion expansion effort, the Mohegan Sun, with its traditional Indian reverence for nature readily apparent in the planetarium ceiling and the crystal mountain installed on one of the casino walls, is more of a draw. That said, both casinos have plenty of restaurants and shops to pull even more of your cash away.

as they were then, are both open for tours. Twain lived at 351 Farmington Ave from 1874 until 1891, writing many of his classic works, including Huckleberry Finn. He spent a fair portion of his publishing royalties building and redecorating this outrageously ornate home, with its unusual black-and-orange brickwork and luxurious Tiffany stained-glass interior (daily Mon–Sat 9.30am–5.30pm, Sun noon–5.30pm, closed Tues Jan–April; $13; ☎ 860/247-0998).

At 77 Forest St, the home of Harriet Beecher Stowe reflects her Southern sensibility (Tues–Sat 9.30am–4.30pm, Sun noon–4.30pm; June to mid-Oct & Dec also open Mon 9.30am–4pm; $8; ☎ 860/522-9258). An ardent abolitionist, Stowe was the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin, one of the most important American literary works of the nineteenth century. She also found time to write about housekeeping ideals in the book she penned with her sister, The American Woman's Home. Inside her house you can see Stowe's writing table and some of her paintings.

Practicalities

Hartford, which lies at the junction of I-91 and I-84, is easily accessible by car. Greyhound, Peter Pan, and Bonanza buses, and Amtrak trains, all pull into Union Station, near the north side of Bushnell Park. For information, visit Hartford's Convention & Visitors Bureau, 31 Pratt St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 860/728-6789 or 1-800/446-7811, @ www.enjoyhartford.com), or pick up a copy of the free local weekly, The Hartford Advocate.

There are budget motels along I-91, including the Super 8 (☎ 860/246-8888 or 1-800/800-8000, @ www.super8motel.com; Ⓜ) and the Motel 6 (☎ 860/724-0222 or 1-800/843-7663; Ⓜ), both of which are off exit 33. Hotels in Hartford proper cater mainly to business visitors and are correspondingly pricey, though they are more reasonable on the weekends – try the central Crowne Plaza Downtown, 50 Morgan St (☎ 860/549-2400; Ⓜ). The HI-affiliated Mark Twain Hostel, 131 Tremont St (☎ 860/523-7255), charges $24. A popular restaurant is Black Eyed Sally's, 350 Asylum St (☎ 860/278-7427), which serves barbecue and hearty Cajun cooking, plus live blues Wednesday, Friday and Saturday. Trumbull Kitchen, 150 Trumbull St (☎ 860/493-7417), brings a bit of style to otherwise sedate Hartford, with a cross-cultural menu on offer in a modern, eclectic room. For something tasty and inexpensive, check out Timothy's, 243 Zion St (☎ 860/728-9822), popular with local artists (bring your own booze).

New Haven

I-91 leads south from Hartford to NEW HAVEN, on a large natural harbor at the mouth of the Quinnipiac River. Founded in 1638 by a group of wealthy Puritans from London, New Haven developed a solid economy based on shipping and, later, industry. In 1716 it became the seat of Yale University, the third oldest college in the States – but it was hardware, Winchester rifles, and other types of manufacturing (tools, carriages, and corsets) in the nineteenth century that really brought the city into its own. Eli Whitney, inventor of the revolutionary cotton gin, discovered in his workshop here a method of mass production that eliminated expensive skilled labor. Little manufacturing remains in New Haven, and the city has struggled for decades to revitalize and redevelop.

The resultant friction between the town's two sides (tension-ridden urbanity and Ivy League idyll) once made New Haven a somewhat uneasy place; however, town-versus-gown conflicts have now been minimized. New Haven is certainly less smug than many other Ivy League towns, and its ethnic diversity, alongside the undeniable vitality provided by the much-maligned Yalies, make it a stimulating place to visit.

Arrival, information, and getting around

New Haven lies where interstates I-91 and I-95 fork, and is on the main train line servicing Washington, New York, and Boston. The Amtrak terminal is in the colossal and nicely renovated Union Station, on Union Avenue six blocks southeast of the Yale campus downtown. To or from New York, the Metro-North Commuter Railroad (☎ 1-800/638-7646) is a better deal than Amtrak. Greyhound, Bonanza, and Peter Pan buses from Boston arrive at 45 George St (☎ 203/772-2470). On arrival, it's advisable to catch a cab to your hotel, as the bus and train terminals are in potentially dodgy areas. One reputable firm is Metro Taxi (☎ 203/777-7777).

The Greater New Haven CVB is at 169 Orange St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 203/777-8550 or 1-800/332-STAY, 🌐 www.newhavencvb.org). Public transportation to areas outside downtown is provided by Connecticut Transit, 470 James St ($1.25; ☎ 203/624-0151, 🌐 www.cttransit.com), though service is poor after 6pm or so. Info New Haven, at 1000 Chapel St, two blocks east of the Green (the town's park), has bus schedules and route maps for the free downtown trolley.

Accommodation

For a college town, New Haven has surprisingly few hotels. Because of this, be sure to make reservations in advance if you're visiting during graduation in late May, start of term in late August, or October's Parents' Weekend. The few hotels that are downtown, although slightly overpriced, are worth it for their convenient location and safety.

Colony Inn 1157 Chapel St ☎ 203/776-1234, 🌐 www.colonyat Yale.com. Downtown luxury hotel furnished in Colonial style, with modern amenities. ⑤

Courtyard New Haven 30 Whalley Ave ☎ 203/777-6221. Recently renovated rooms in a good central location. ⑤

Historic Mansion Inn 600 Chapel St ☎ 203/865-8324 or 1-888/512-6278, 🌐 www.thehistoricmansioninn.com. Cheery, high-ceilinged, comfy rooms in a restored 1842 home. Near Wooster Square. ⑤

Hotel Duncan 1151 Chapel St ☎ 203/787-1273. Comfortable rooms in an old-fashioned hotel, a few steps away from Yale, with singles available for around $45. ④

New Haven Hotel 229 George St ☎ 203/498-3100, 🌐 www.newhavenhotel.com. Small quiet hotel with nice standard rooms and a health club with pool. ⑤

The City

New Haven's downtown, centering on the Green, remains both attractive and walkable, despite a succession of remarkably ugly buildings built during the 1950s that rather blighted New Haven. This area, laid out in 1638, was the site of the city's original settlement; around the Green are three churches, a grand library, and a number of stately government buildings. The park itself, used year-round for festivals like the annual JazzFest, is home to a handful of homeless residents. It also borders the student-filled district centered around College and Chapel streets, a genuinely lively place filled with bookstores, cafés, clubs, and hip clothing stores. There are some rough pockets, but in general New Haven is reasonably safe to walk around, even at night, and especially during term.

New Haven's prime attraction, Yale University, stands proudly right in the center of things. You can wander at will, though free, hour-long, student-led tours set off daily from the Yale Visitor Information Center at 149 Elm St, across from the north side of the Green (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm, Sat & Sun 11am–4pm; tours Mon–Fri 10.30am & 2pm, Sat & Sun 1.30pm; ☎203/432-2300); the Information Center also supplies maps for self-guided tours. The tours will have you trooping to and fro quite a bit, starting with the beautiful old spires and ivy-strewn cobbled courtyards of the old campus (mostly built in the 1930s, but painstakingly distressed to look suitably ancient). For student and visitor alike, foremost among campus buildings is the remarkable Sterling Memorial Library, 120 High St (daily, call for hours; free; ☎203/432-2798). Designed by alum James Gamble in modern Gothic style with fifteen buttresses, it has the symbolic appearance – inside and out – of a cathedral. Inside, leaded-glass windows illustrate the history of the Library, Yale, New Haven, and the history of books and printing; the would-be altar is the Circulation Desk, crowned with a fifteenth-century Italian-style mural. Also impressive, the Beinecke Rare Books Library, 121 Wall St, is where venerable manuscripts and delicate hand-printed books are viewed with the aid of natural light seeping through the translucent marble walls (Mon–Thurs 8.30am–8pm, Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm; free). Other buildings of interest include the modernist, Louis Kahn–designed Center for British Art, 1080 Chapel St, where British paintings range from Elizabethan portraits to modern works by Peter Blake and Francis Bacon (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎203/432-2800). The impressive Yale University Art Gallery, just across the road at 1111 Chapel St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–6pm; closed mid-July to Aug; free; ☎203/432-0600), is the nation’s oldest university art collection, and holds American decorative arts, regional design and furniture, and African and pre-Columbian works. A quirky Collection of Musical Instruments is at 15 Hillhouse Ave (limited hours, phone ahead ☎203/432-0822), and the Peabody Museum of Natural History, 170 Whitney Ave (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7; ☎203/432-5050), is a solid nineteenth-century collection of fossils, ancient culture artifacts, and skeletons.

Another source of New Haven affection and pride is its close-knit Italian District, based since 1900 among the well-kept brownstones and colorful window boxes of Wooster Square (just beyond Crown Street southeast of the Green). This was where the city’s original Italian immigrants settled when they came to work on the railroad. There’s little to see here, but there are some incredibly popular restaurants, and it’s well worth stopping by when there’s a festival on.

Eating

You can’t leave New Haven without trying the local pizza (known here as tomato pies). The New York Times discovered New Haven’s pizzas years ago, and since then queues are standard at all the family pizza places on Wooster Street; note that most of these don’t open until late afternoon. Also check out the many fairly priced, innovative restaurants around the Green, on College and Chapel streets.

Atticus Bookstore Café 1082 Chapel St
☎203/776-4040. Salads, soups, sandwiches, brioches, and good coffee, in a relaxed bookstore open until midnight.

Claire’s Corner Copia 1000 Chapel St
☎203/562-3888. Eclectic and casual Mexican and Middle Eastern food, including vegetarian dishes.

Frank Pepe’s Pizzeria 157 Wooster St
☎203/865-5762. Most popular of the Wooster Street restaurants; plain, functional, and friendly, with huge “combination pies” baked in coal-fired ovens.

Ibiza 39 High St ☎203/865-1933. A bright, mural-filled place with diverse tapas, meals, and wines from Spain.

Louis’ Lunch 263 Crown St ☎203/562-5507. Small, dark, and ancient burger house that claims to have served the first hamburger in the US, and presents the meat between two slices of toast. Highly popular and worth the inevitable wait. Closed Sun and Mon.

Moka 141 Orange St ☎203/752-0052. Friendly, earthy coffee-and-hot-chocolate bar frequented by hip intellectuals and fashionable locals. Drinks, desserts, and light meals (crepes, yogurt, sandwiches) served until 6pm daily.

Roomba 1044 Chapel St, Sherman's Alley
 ☎203/562-7666. Innovative Nuevo Latino cuisine, with mojitos, in a stylish room. Trendy and loud.

Yankee Doodle 260 Elm St ☎203/865-1074.

Yalies' favorite coffee shop, with original Fifties fittings and shop sign, serving greasy-spoon favorites such as burgers and cherry Cokes.

Performing arts and nightlife

New Haven has an undeniably rich cultural scene, and is especially strong on theater. The Yale Rep Company, 1120 Chapel St (☎203/432-1234), which boasts among its eminent past members Jodie Foster and Meryl Streep, turns out consistently good shows during the school year. The Long Wharf Theater, 222 Sargent Drive, just off I-95 (☎203/787-4282), has a nationwide reputation for quality performances, as does the refurbished Shubert Theater, 247 College St (☎203/562-5666).

There are several good bars and clubs, mostly concentrated on College, Chapel and Crown streets. The New Haven Advocate, a free news and arts weekly, has comprehensive listings.

Bar 254 Crown St ☎203/495-8924. Plain name and decor, but look out – this is where New Haven comes to drink home-brewed beer in quantity (brick-oven pizzas also available). Serves the gay community on Alternative Night on Tuesdays.

Café Nine 250 State St ☎203/789-8281. Decades-old intimate, divey club with live music every night, be it jazz jams, blues, or alt-country. Cover $4–10.

Gotham Citi 130 Crown St ☎203/498-2484. Large, steamy club where revelers head for a late night of drinking, dancing, and simply looking good. Open Wed–Sun.

The Playwright 144 Temple St

☎203/752-0450. Five bars, ranging from rowdy pub to dance club, inside a church bought in Ireland, dismantled, and reassembled here. An unusual must-see.

Toad's Place 300 York St ☎203/624-8623.

Mid-sized nationally renowned live music venue, where the likes of Springsteen and the Stones used to “pop in” occasionally to play impromptu gigs. Tickets $10–25.

New Hampshire

Long after sailors, fishermen, and agricultural colonists had domesticated the entire coastline of New England, the harsh, glacier-scarred interior of NEW HAMPSHIRE, with its dense forests and forbidding mountains, remained the exclusive preserve of the Abenaki Indians. Only the few miles of seashore held sizeable seventeenth-century communities of European settlers, such as the one at Portsmouth.

Even when the Indians were finally driven back, following the defeat of their French allies in Canada, the settlers could make little agricultural impact on the rocky terrain of this “granite state.” Towns such as Nashua, Manchester, and Concord grew up in the fertile Merrimack Valley, but not until the Industrial Revolution made possible the development of water-powered textile mills did the economy take off. For a while, ruthless timber companies looked set to strip all northern New Hampshire bare, but they were brought under control when the state recognized that the pristine landscape of the White Mountains might turn out to be its greatest asset. Large-scale tourism began towards the end of nineteenth century; at one time fifty trains daily brought travelers up to Mount Washington.

Ever since becoming the first American state to declare independence, in January 1776, New Hampshire has been proud to go its own idiosyncratic way. The absence of a sales tax, or even a personal income tax, is seen as a fulfillment of the state motto, “Live Free or Die.” The state has long gained inordinate political clout as the venue of the first primary election of each presidential campaign, with its villages well used to playing host to would-be world leaders.

The state’s hiking, climbing, cycling, and skiing opportunities are enjoyed both by energetic locals and by the many visitors who drive up from Boston and New York. The major destinations are Lake Winnepesaukee, and Conway, Lincoln, and Franconia in the mountains further north. Some of these have grown rather too large and commercial for their own good, but the lakes, islands, and snowcapped peaks themselves remain spectacular. To see the bucolic rural scenery more usually associated with New England, take a detour off the main roads up the Merrimack Valley – to Canterbury Shaker Village near Concord or the Robert Frost Farm close to Nashua.

Getting around New Hampshire

Three Interstate highways run through New Hampshire: I-89 connects the state capital, Concord, with Vermont; I-95 runs along the short stretch of New Hampshire coastline that separates Massachusetts and Maine; and I-93 is the main north–south road, giving southern New England access to the White Mountains. In the mountains themselves, the 35-mile Kancamagus Highway between Lincoln and Conway is the most traveled of a number of scenic routes found across the state.

Concord Trailways (☎ 1-800/639-3317, 🌐 www.concordtrailways.com), C&J Trailways (☎ 603/430-1100 or 1-800/258-7111, 🌐 www.cjtrailways.com), and Vermont Transit Lines (☎ 1-800/642-3133 in Vermont, or 1-800/451-3292 elsewhere, 🌐 www.vermonttransit.com) all run from Boston to either the Nashua–Concord corridor or the coast. Only a few services on Concord Trailways continue north to the Lakes Region and stops in the White Mountains. Train service is limited to Amtrak’s Downeaster, which links Boston to Portland, Maine, stopping in New Hampshire at the sleepy towns of Exeter, Durham, and Dover.

The coast

Of all the US states with ocean access, New Hampshire has the shortest coastline – just eighteen miles. Driving north from Boston along either I-95 or the quieter Rte-1, you enter New Hampshire after roughly forty miles, to be confronted almost immediately by the Seabrook Station nuclear power plant, which opened in 1990 after years of determined opposition, not least from neighboring Massachusetts.

HAMPTON BEACH, a little further on, is a traditional family-oriented, if somewhat tacky, seaside resort (its free information line has the optimistic number ☎ 1-800/GET-A-TAN). The usual assortment of motels and fast-food places lines the approaches to the boardwalk and crowded beaches, but in a place this close to Boston, summer accommodation rates can be high. The Breakers by the Sea Motel, 409 Ocean Blvd (☎ 603/926-7702, 🌐 www.breakersbythesea.com; 📍), is one of the least expensive options, offering spacious one- or two-bedroom apartments along with its regular rooms.

Portsmouth

New Hampshire's oldest community, PORTSMOUTH, might look like a major city on the map, but once there, you'll find a small-town accessibility blended with the enthusiasm of a rejuvenated city. This quality places it well above some of the more tourist-focused communities along the coast. Its position at the mouth of the Piscataqua River has always made it an important port – it was the state capital until 1808 – but it has barely grown, and the spire of North Church in the central Market Square, dating from 1854, remains the tallest structure in town.

Of a striking selection of grand Colonial homes, the 1761 gambrel-roofed, boxy, yellow John Paul Jones House, 43 Middle St, at State (mid-May to mid-Oct daily 11am–5pm; $8; ☎ 603/436-8420), is the most distinctive. In Prescott Park along the waterfront, the Sheafe Warehouse Museum (summer only; free; ☎ 603/436-2848) has a fascinating collection of mostly nautical paraphernalia.

Indeed Portsmouth's fortunes have long rested with its naval shipyard, visible across the bay (in Kittery, Maine; see p.280). Founded in 1800 by John Paul Jones as the US government's first shipyard, it has remained active ever since – it launched 31 submarines in 1944 alone, and built its first Polaris nuclear submarine in 1961.

Strawbery Banke

The lack of any great pressure on space has made it possible to preserve ten acres of Portsmouth's original site as Strawbery Banke, 64 Marcy St (May–Oct daily 10am–5pm $15; Nov–April Sat 10am–2pm, Sun noon–2pm $10; tickets good for two consecutive days; ☎ 603/433-1100, 🌐 www.strawberybanke.org). The area serves as a living museum full of buildings from Portsmouth's past, most of which you can explore either on a guided tour (Nov–April) or on your own (several of the houses have well-informed attendants). The area began life as the residence of wealthy shipbuilders, and was successively the lair of privateers and a red-light district before turning into respectable – and, in the 1950s, ultimately decaying – suburbia. It was then decided to recreate its former appearance, mainly by clearing away the newer buildings.

Each building is shown in its most interesting former incarnation, whether that be 1695 or 1955. The 1766 Pitt Tavern holds most historic significance, having served as a meeting place during the Revolution for patriots and loyalists. Officially an educational institution, Strawberry Banke offers year-round lectures and courses on traditional crafts. Some of these can be viewed in the Dinsmore Shop, where an infinitely patient cooper manufactures barrels with the tools and methods of 1800, as well as the Mills Zoldak pottery shop, which produces attractive low-priced ceramics.

Practicalities

Vermont Transit Lines buses (☎ 1-800/552-8737) stop in Market Square, en route between Boston and Portland, Maine. You can pick up information from the visitor center at 500 Market St, about a 10-minute walk from Market Square (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; June–Sept also Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 603/436-1118, 🌐 www.portsmouthchamber.org), or, during summer only, from the kiosk in Market Square (daily 9am–5pm). Portsmouth Harbor Cruises (☎ 603/436-8084 or 1-800/776-0915, 🌐 www.portsmouthharbor.com) is one of several operators offering boat trips, from $11.

Accommodation in the town center is restricted to expensive places such as the grand Sise Inn, 40 Court St (☎ 603/433-1200 or 1-877/747-3466, 🌐 www.siseinn.com; Ⓜ), a nicely preserved Queen Anne–style house with large rooms; the peaceful, rambling seven-room Inn at Strawberry Banke, 314 Court St (☎ 603/436-7242 or 1-800/428-3933, 🌐 www.innatstrawberrybanke.com; 5); and the waterfront Bow Street Inn, 121 Bow St (☎ 603/431-7760, 🌐 www.bowstreetinn.com; 5). Cheaper motels near the traffic circle where I-95 and Rte-1 bypass include the good-value Port Inn, Rte-1 Bypass South (☎ 1-800/282-PORT, 🌐 www.theportinn.com; 4).

Portsmouth likes to bill itself, with some justification, as the “food capital of New England.” Of the in-town restaurants, The Oar House, 55 Ceres St (☎ 603/436-4025), has excellent, moderately-priced seafood, along with great river views and an outdoor seating area; Anthony Alberto’s, 59 Penhallow St (☎ 603/436-4000), is a gourmet Italian restaurant with a strong wine list; and funky Friendly Toast, 121 Congress St (☎ 603/430-2154), makes for an inexpensive breakfast and lunch spot, with generous portions.

At night, the Portsmouth Brewery, 56 Market St (☎ 603/431-1115), serves up exceptional microbrews and occasional live music, while The Press Room, 77 Daniel St (☎ 603/431-5186), has jazz, blues, folk, or bluegrass performances every night. Those searching for caffeine rather than alcohol will be happy at Breaking New Grounds (☎ 603/436-9555) in Market Square.

Odiorne Point State Park

The one brief patch of semi-wilderness along the New Hampshire coast is, ironically, where the first white settlers landed in 1623. Some of the scattered ruins in the marshy duneland of Odiorne Point State Park ($3; ☎ 603/436-7406) date from those early days; others, far more modern, were World War II defenses. The two park entrances are on Hwy-1A near Rye, four miles southeast of Portsmouth. The offshore Isles of Shoals, a supposed haunt of Blackbeard the pirate, can be visited by taking a boat trip from Portsmouth Harbor ($24; ☎ 603/431-5500 or 1-800/441-4620, 🌐 www.islesofshoals.com).

The Merrimack Valley

The financial and political heartland of New Hampshire is the Merrimack Valley, which – first by water and now by road – has always been the main thoroughfare north to the White Mountains and Québec. None of its towns is of any great interest to tourists, though all are equipped with relatively inexpensive motels.

MANCHESTER, like its namesake in England, was a major nineteenth-century cotton producer. Its massive Amoskeag Mills closed in the 1930 and the city is now notable mainly for the paintings in the Currier Museum of Art, 201 Myrtle Way (currently closed for expansion through early 2008; ☎ 603/669-6144, 🌐 www.currier.org), and the museum-affiliated, Frank Lloyd Wright-designed Zimmerman House (call ☎ 603/668-0256 for schedule, closed Jan–Apr; $11). The focal point of CONCORD is the gold dome of the State House on Main Street (Mon–Fri 8am–4.15pm; ☎ 603/271-2154), the seat of New Hampshire’s state legislature – the largest in the country, with some four hundred members. Local schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe, a victim of the Challenger shuttle tragedy, is commemorated by a planetarium, at 3 Institute Drive, off I-93, exit 15E (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8; ☎ 603/271-7827, 🌐 www.starhop.com).

About twenty miles north of Concord, off I-95, exit 18, 288 Shaker Rd, Canterbury Shaker Village (daily: May–Oct 10am–5pm; Nov weekends 10am–4pm, call other times; $15, good two consecutive days; ☎ 603/783-9511, 🌐 www.shakers.org) was the sixth Shaker community to be founded by Ann Lee (in 1774), and was 300-strong by 1860. Three different hour-long tours explain the Shaker way of life. There are craft demonstrations (such as basket-making) and even frequent all-day craft workshops if you're so inclined. The 🦋 Shaker Table restaurant near the village entry serves delicious and imaginative Shaker-inspired food. South of Concord, outside Derry just off Rte-28 (take exit 4 from I-93), the Robert Frost Farm (mid-June to early Sept Wed-Sat 10am-5pm, Sun noon-5pm; mid-May through mid-June Sat & Sun 10am-5pm; entry free, tour $7; ☎ 603/432-3091) has been evocatively restored to its condition when New England's poet laureate lived here from 1900 to 1911. Displays in the barn highlight his work, and a half-mile "poetry nature trail" leads past the sites that inspired many of his best-known poems.

The Lakes Region

Of the literally hundreds of lakes created by snowmelt flowing south from the White Mountains and occupying the state's central corridor, the biggest by far is Lake Winnepesaukee, which forms the center of the vacation-oriented Lakes Region. Long segments of its 300-mile shoreline, especially in the east, consist of thick forests sweeping down to waters dotted with little islands, which are disturbed only by pleasure craft. The most sophisticated of the towns along the shoreline is Wolfeboro; the most fun has to be Weirs Beach.

Ideally, you would bring your own small boat here and get thoroughly lost in the maze of small channels and islets. Failing that, the cruise ship Mount Washington, a 230-foot monster of a boat, departs from the dock in the center of Weirs Beach several times a day to sail to Wolfeboro, on the western side of the lake (mid-May to Oct; from $20; ☎ 603/366-5531 or 1-888/843-6686, 🌐 www.cruisenh.com). The ship also sets sail for dinner and dance cruises several times per week (from $39). Other day-cruises are available on the smaller MV Doris E ($10) and the US mail boat, MV Sophie C ($20), from which you can view some of the lake's many islands as the boat delivers the mail.

Wolfeboro

Because Governor Wentworth of New Hampshire built his summer home nearby in 1768, tiny WOLFEBORO claims to be "the oldest summer resort in America." Sandwiched between lakes Winnepesaukee and Wentworth, it has little to show for that history, but it's a relaxing place to spend a few hours, especially along the short but bustling main street, next to the quay where the Mount Washington (see above) comes in.

For accommodation, the 1812 Wolfeboro Inn, 90 N Main St (☎ 603/569-3016 or 1-800/451-2389, 🌐 www.wolfeboroinn.com; 📍), stands in a dignified waterfront position just a few yards from the town proper. The Tuc' Me Inn B&B, 118 N Main St (☎ 603/569-5702, 🌐 www.tucmeinn.com; 📍), is a homey place with tastefully furnished rooms, close to both the town and lake. Wolfeboro Campground is on Haines Hill Road (☎ 603/569-9881; $16), and is open mid-May to mid-October. For food, Wolfe's Tavern, at the Wolfeboro Inn, serves good-value steaks, seafood, burgers, and sandwiches, as does Garwoods, 6 N Main St (☎ 603/569-7788), with its dining room overlooking the bay. Lydia's Café, 33 N Main St (☎ 603/569-3991), is an excellent, veggie-oriented place for breakfast, lunch, or smoothies (open daily until 3pm).

The eastern shore of Lake Winnepesaukee makes for great walking. One fascinating stopoff, a few miles north of Wolfeboro on Hwy-109, is the curious Libby Museum (June to mid-Sept Tues-Sat 10am-4pm, Sun noon-4pm; $2; Ⓣ603/569-1035), where dentist Henry Forrest Libby's obsession with evolution is illustrated by various ineptly stuffed animals, and the skeletons of bears, orangutans, and humans. There's also a mastodon's tooth, and a fingernail supposedly pulled out by its Chinese owner to demonstrate his new Christian faith. The front steps of the museum command a superb view over the lake.

Weirs Beach and Loudon

The short boardwalk at WEIRS BEACH, the very essence of seaside tackiness (even if it is fifty miles inland), is in summer the social center of the Lakes Region. Its little wooden jetty throngs with vacationers, the amusement arcades jingle with cash, and there's even a neat little crescent of sandy beach, suitable for family swimming. The better of its two water parks is Surf Coaster (daily: mid-June to early Sept 10am–6pm; $27; Ⓣ603/366-5600) on Hwy-11B south of town, which offers dramatic rides and a powerful wave machine. A quieter diversion here is the Winnepesaukee Railroad (early June & Sept–Oct weekends; daily mid-June to early Sep; $10 for 1hr, $11 for 2hrs; Ⓣ603/279-5253, 🌐www.hoborr.com), which operates scenic trips along the lakeshore between Weirs Beach and Meredith.

In LOUDON, about eight miles south of Laconia on Hwy-106, the New Hampshire International Raceway (Ⓣ603/783-4931, 🌐www.nhis.com) hosts NASCAR races on a regular basis, May through October. Even at quieter times, room rates in nearby Laconia are high; the best choice is the Landmark Inn of the Lakes Region, 480 Main St, Laconia (Ⓣ603/524-8000; Ⓢ), though other motel options are abundant along Rte-3 between Weirs Beach and Meredith (see below). The heartiest place to eat is Water Street Café, 141 Water St, Laconia (Ⓣ603/524-4144), which serves healthy helpings of old-fashioned food for breakfast, lunch, and dinner. The nearest campground is Gunstock, just past Gilford on Rte-11A (Ⓣ1-800/486-7862, 🌐www.gunstock.com; $25 a night for up to two adults and three children).

Meredith

Four miles north of Weirs Beach, MEREDITH, the last of Lake Winnepesaukee's resorts, enjoys a peaceful location and has an upscale character, making it the best place to stay on the lake's western shore. The Inns at Mill Falls, which is actually four separate hotels (Ⓣ1-800/622-6455, 🌐www.millfalls.com; Ⓢ), are the best choice for accommodation. Choose from the Inn at Mill Falls and the Chase House, both on the hill overlooking the lake, or the Inn at Bay Point or the new Church Landing, directly on the water and offering unrivalled lake views. Mame's, 8 Plymouth St (Ⓣ603/279-4631), serves gargantuan servings of seafood, chicken, and steak dinners in an old village home.

North to the mountains

Hwy-25 northeast from Meredith leads eventually to Conway in the White Mountains; US-3 northwest, on the other hand, keeps you in the Lakes Region a little longer, leading past Squam Lake, where portions of the movie On Golden Pond were filmed. Educational tours of the Squam Lake Natural Science Center at Holderness (daily: May–Oct 9.30am–4.30pm; $13; Ⓣ603/968-7194, 🌐www.nhnature.org) lead through a largely natural landscape, in which animals such as deer, bobcat, otters, bears, and foxes are kept in enclosures. Squam Lake Tours (May–Oct, three tours daily; $15; Ⓣ603/968-7577, 🌐www.squamlaketours.com) offers two-hour boat tours of the lake, where the focus is on observing endangered loons.

The White Mountains

Thanks to their accessibility from both Montréal to the north and Boston to the south, the White Mountains have become a year-round tourist destination, popular with summer hikers on the Appalachian Trail and winter skiers on the slopes. Commercialized they may be, with considerable tourist development flanking some of the highways, but the great granite massifs retain most of their majesty and power. Mount Washington, the highest peak in the Northeast, can claim some of the most severe weather in the world, and conditions are harsh enough for the timberline to lie at four thousand feet (compared to the Rockies' norm of ten thousand).

Just a few high passes – here called “notches” – pierce the range, and the roads through these gaps, such as the Kancamagus Highway between Lincoln and Conway, make for enjoyable driving (compulsory parking permits are $3 for one day, or $5 for seven consecutive days). However, you won't really have made the most of the White Mountains unless you also set off, on foot or on skis, across the long expanses of thick evergreen forest that separate them, with snowcapped peaks poking out in all directions. The best sources of information in the region are the White Mountains Visitor Center, at I-93 exit 32 in North Woodstock (daily 8.30am–5.30pm; ☎603/745-8720 or 1-800/FIND-MTS, 🌐www.visitwhitemountains.com) and the Appalachian Mountain Club's info center at Pinkham Notch, Rte-16 (daily 6.30am–10pm; ☎603/466-2721, 🌐www.outdoors.org).

White Mountains accommodation

Thanks to the influx of young hikers and skiers to the White Mountains, there's a relative abundance of budget accommodation in the area. From the hostel-esque lodges at Crawford and Pinkham notches, to reasonably priced inns and B&Bs – where bargaining at quiet times often pays off – there's sure to be an option to

Hiking, skiing, and cycling in the White Mountains

Hiking in the White Mountains is coordinated by the Appalachian Mountain Club (AMC), whose chain of information centers, hostels, and huts along the Appalachian Trail, traversing the region from northeast to southwest, is detailed below. Call ☎603/466-2725 for trail and weather information, and pick up a copy of the AMC White Mountain Guide ($23) before you attempt any serious expedition.

Downhill and cross-country skiers can choose from several resorts that double up as summertime activity centers. Both the Waterville Valley Resort (☎603/236-8311 or 1-800/468-2553, 🌐www.waterville.com) and Loon Mountain (☎603/745-8111 or 1-800/229-LOON, 🌐www.loonmtn.com), both just east of I-93, are good for downhill, while Jackson (☎603/383-9355, 🌐www.jacksonxc.org), about fifteen miles north of Conway on Rte-19, has some of the finest cross-country skiing trails in the Northeast. General information on the skiing centers is available from Ski NH, PO Box 10, North Woodstock, NH 03262; ☎603/745-9396 or 1-800/88SKI-NH, 🌐www.skinh.com.

Though obviously the hills can make for strenuous biking, there are easier ways of enjoying the White Mountains from the saddle, such as taking lifts up the slopes (at the resorts mentioned above) and riding back down. In summer, many of the cross-country skiing trails are taken over by bikers, and provide relatively flat, scenic terrain. Bikes can be rented from All Seasons Adventures in Lincoln ☎603/745-8600 and from Joe Jones Sports on Main Street in North Conway (☎603/356-9411, 🌐www.joejonessports.com).

In a country where a deli sandwich can make a meal for two, where all-you-can-eat buffets are destinations in themselves, and where restaurants dish up 72oz steaks, food is clearly something to be taken seriously. Even in this fast-food nation, however, it's not always about quantity – dining out in the USA can be an absolute delight. Anyone setting off on a road trip will find something irresistibly evocative about sitting in a vintage diner and chewing on a simple grilled-cheese sandwich while a gum-snapping waitress with big hair pours endless free refills of coffee and calls you darlin'. Fortunately, such quintessentially American experiences are always there for the taking, along with a host of other intriguing regional dining opportunities, and – all-you-can-eat buffets notwithstanding – some of the finest restaurants in the world.

American food

From burgers to barbecue

No one knows exactly who invented the burger (you'll find scores of diners claiming it as their own), but it's a staple that's set to stay. Fans of the Golden Arches may not recognize the homemade, fresh, and tasty versions served up in a number of regional restaurants, but once they've tasted the real thing, a Happy Meal will never seem the same again. Another all-American staple, the hot dog, is for many the street food of choice – and comes in a variety of forms. Famous hot dog spots include New York City, where every July 4 Nathan's in Coney Island holds a world-famous hot-dog-eating contest, and Chicago, where the dog is served in a poppy-seed bun and never with ketchup. Over on the west coast, the frankfurter gives the traditional dog a Tex-Mex twist, wrapping it in a tortilla and smothering it with cheese and chili sauce. Other simple meaty takeout treats include the Philly cheesesteak, a dripping sandwich of hot sliced beef and rich melted cheese born on the streets of south Philadelphia, and New Orleans's muffuletta, in which a stack of spicy Italian cured meats is combined with piquant chopped olives and cheese and crammed into a huge round bun.

Emotions run high when it comes to barbecue – smoked pork or beef shredded and drenched in tangy, spicy sauces – with locals from all the southern states and the cities of Memphis, Kansas City, and Chicago hotly claiming to serve the best in the world. Texas is where you'll find the best chili – and scores of hugely popular chili cookoffs, in which amateurs and professional restaurateurs alike battle for the coveted first place.

Though Chicago and Kansas City have some iconic steakhouses, when the really big guys fancy a really big steak they head straight for Texas or Western states like Montana and Wyoming. This is cattle-rearing country, so the slab of beef on your plate couldn't be fresher – or any more huge.

A Texas barbecue

New England clam chowder

Seafood

When it comes to seafood, America's coastline offers some of the world's best pickings.

Crab is king all along the Mid-Atlantic shore, with steamed blue crabs and spicy soft-shell crabs a particular treat around Chesapeake Bay, and stone-crab claws abounding in Florida. In New England you can feast on giant Maine lobsters and steamers (clams), often cooked up in a creamy chowder, while any trip to Louisiana should see you slurping back salty fresh raw oysters and a mound of juicy mudbugs (crawfish) boiled with spices. Florida offers conch, a meaty mollusc, while catfish, a firm-fleshed, tasty fish (which, unlike most white fish, is particularly good when breaded and fried), is a staple in the Best of...

Best all-you-can-eat buffet

The Bellagio, Las Vegas, NV

Best diner

Arcade, Memphis, TN

Best hot dog

Nathan's, Brooklyn, NY

Best sausage

Salumi, Seattle, WA

Best BBQ

Fresh Air, Jackson, GA

Best steak

Cattleman's Steak House, Fort Worth, TX

Best lobster

Two Lights Lobster Shack, Cape Elizabeth, ME

Best crab

Obrycki's, Baltimore, MD

Best Cajun

Prejean's, Lafayette, LA

Best Creole

Galatoire's, New Orleans, LA

Best Southern

Mrs Wilkes' Boarding House, Savannah, GA

Best soul food

Four Way Grill, Memphis, TN

Best Southwestern

Turquoise Room, Winslow, AZ

Best Tex-Mex

Boudro's, San Antonio, TX

Best Pacific Rim

Roy's Poipu Bar & Grill, Poipu, HI

Best California cuisine

The French Laundry, Yountville, CA

Best New American

Per Se, New York, NY

Best tamales

Doe's Eat Place, Greenville, MS

Best vegetarian

Greens, San Francisco, CA

south. Although they consume more than half the Spam eaten in the entire nation, the Hawaiian islands also offer some of the finest Pacific Rim restaurants on earth, their light, healthy cuisine fusing Asian, Pacific, and Californian staples and using lots of tasty local fish like mahi mahi (dorado), opah (moonfish, similar to swordfish), and ono (which translates as “delicious”).

A lobster shack in Maine

Regional cuisine

The complex pattern of immigration in the US is writ large in its restaurant scene. San Francisco has its Chinatown, New York its Jewish delis, Boston its Italian restaurants, Miami its Cuban coffeeshops. Meanwhile, a number of regions have developed their own cuisines, combining local ingredients with dishes and techniques of local ethnic groups. In the soggy swamplands of southern Louisiana, for example, the French-speaking population cooks up a spicy stew called gumbo – made with okra, garlic, and bell peppers, and filled out with anything from chicken or pork sausage to crawfish – that was heavily influenced by the cooking of West African slaves. This Cajun cooking, as rustic as it is, has similarities with Creole cuisine, its more urban cousin. Thus you'll often find fragrant gumbos served up in grand, old-guard New Orleans restaurants, alongside delicate shrimp étouffé (“smothered” in a flavorful sauce) and oysters en brochette.

Soul food

Rich, filling, and irresistible – crispy Southern fried chicken is a taste sensation that bears no relation to the stuff churned out by Colonel Sanders – Southern cuisine, or soul food, makes the perfect comfort food. Simple home cooking this may be, but some of its staple dishes can sound baffling to newcomers. Take the unappetizing sounding grits, for example. Far from gritty, these are in fact a rather tasty gloop of ground corn cooked with butter and salt and served steaming hot. Commonly eaten with breakfast, they're also delicious with shrimp or spicy pork sausage. Collard greens is a cabbage dish, chitlins pork sweetmeats, and a hush puppy a deep-fried ball of corn flavored with onion. Ordering hoppin' john will get you a wholesome mix of black-eyed beans and rice, traditionally served on New Year's Day. Though most plates will come with a hunk of warm, crumbly cornbread, finished off with a dollop of melting butter, you might also come across Johnny cakes, smaller patties of cornflour, or hoecakes, a kind of corn pancake. Oh, and be sure to have a biscuit, a crumbly scone perfect for mopping up all that delicious gravy.

You can get authentic Mexican food all over the US, but Tex Mex is probably more familiar. A little spicier than Mexican, it adds guacamole (freshly made tableside at the best places), melted cheese, and chopped tomatoes with cilantro to the staple refried pinto beans (boiled, mashed, and fried into a filling sludge) and tortillas (thin corn or flour pancakes). Originally Mexican, tamales, wads of soft crumbly corn dough filled with shredded pork and chicken, cheese, and vegetables steamed in a corn husk, have spread throughout the southern states.

In the health-conscious 1980s, California created its own take on nouvelle cuisine, producing tiny plates of highly designed food made from fresh, local ingredients. This fad for so-called "Californian cuisine" soon spread nationwide, and evolved into New American Cuisine – a style of cooking that can be applied to any regional dish, usually giving it a healthy, modern edge. In New Mexico, Santa Fe also became nationally famous as a culinary capital in the 1980s, using Southwestern ingredients – chili peppers, ajicama, piñons – to give a creative twist to Tex-Mex staples. Bizarrely, given the territory, Southwestern cuisine bases many of its dishes around fresh fish; it also manages to be both healthy and robust. Another, far less fancy Southwestern staple is Navajo frybread, which is similar to a taco, dished up with minced beef and chili, or, in New Mexico, with honey butter.

Greens, San Francisco, CA

suit every traveler. Keep in mind, too, that rates vary dramatically between seasons, and even from weekday to weekend.

Along the Appalachian Trail itself, there are eight Appalachian Mountain Club huts, which can only be reached on foot. In summer, each hut provides meals and bedding for between forty and ninety people. Prices range from $28 to $87 a night, according to the amount of privacy, luxury, and food you're after (and depending on whether or not you're an AMC member; individual membership is $40; see the website, @ www.outdoors.org, for details). Reservations are strongly recommended (call ☎ 603/466-2727, or visit the website, above), and you'll be expected to pay in full when you book the accommodation.

Campers can pitch their tents anywhere below the treeline and away from the roads in the White Mountains National Forest, provided they show consideration for the environment. There are also numerous official campgrounds ($16–20 per night), particularly along the Kancamagus Highway.

The AMC runs a scheduled shuttle van service for hikers between major trailheads and the lodges daily from June to mid-September ($12), with weekend service through mid-October.

AMC lodges

Highland Lodge US-302, Crawford Notch ☎ 603/466-2727, @ www.outdoors.org. Opened in late 2003, this innovatively designed and environmentally friendly building offers beds in a shared room for $36–59 or double rooms for $75–96, breakfast and dinner included. Private bath considerably more. Open year-round.

Joe Dodge Lodge Hwy-16, Pinkham Notch ☎ 603/466-2727, @ www.outdoors.org. Filled with hikers, this second AMC lodge-cum-hostel has bunks for $43–54 or double rooms with meals for $65–76. Near the Mount Washington Auto Road. Open year-round.

Motels, hotels, and B&Bs

Adair Country Inn 80 Guider Lane, Bethlehem ☎ 603/444-2600 or 1-888/444-2600, @ www.adairinn.com. Deluxe antique-furnished rooms, with sweeping views of the landscaped grounds, and an impeccable staff, all reflected in the steep prices. 7

Balsams Dixville Notch ☎ 1-800/255-0800 in NH or 1-800/255-0600 outside NH, @ www.thebalsams.com. Like the Mount Washington (see right), Balsams is another of the last grand White Mountains red-roofed resort hotels. Opened in the 1860s (under a different name and since expanded in 1918), the hotel has year-round activities (skiing, golf, tennis, boating), light and airy rooms, and delicious meals (cooking classes are available). 6

Boulder Motor Court junction of routes 3 and 302, Twin Mountain ☎ 603/846-5437, @ www.bouldermotorcourt.com. One- and two-bedroom cottages with kitchens, fireplaces, and other amenities. Vouchers for lift tickets available. 3

Eagle Mountain House 2 Carter Notch Rd, Jackson ☎ 603/383-9111 or 1-800/966-5779, @ www.eaglemt.com. Highly atmospheric inn with a roaring fireplace in the lobby and a wraparound porch filled with rocking chairs, far above the bustle of North Conway. Has its own nine-hole golf course. 3

Glen Oaks Inn Rte-16A, Intervale ☎ 603/356-9772 or 1-877/854-6535, @ www.glenoaksinn.com. Welcoming B&B between North Conway and Jackson, where many of the rooms include a fireplace. Organizes inn-to-inn cross-country skiing and biking holidays in conjunction with other B&Bs. 5

Franconia Inn Easton Valley Rd/Hwy-116, Franconia ☎ 603/823-5542 or 1-800/473-5299, @ www.franconiainn.com. Comfortable 32-room inn two miles south of town, with great views. Makes for a good cross-country ski base. 5

Hillwinds Lodge Dow Ave/Hwy-18, Franconia ☎ 603/823-5551 or 1-866/906-5292, @ www.hillwinds-lodge.com. Standard, well-priced rooms, plus a riverside location and outdoor pool. 3

Indian Head Resort US-3, Lincoln ☎ 1-800/343-8000, @ www.indianheadresort.com. An unpretentious resort motel with plenty of facilities and outdoor activities. Climb the motel's observation tower for fine views of the surrounding hills. 4

 Mount Washington Hotel Rte-302, Bretton Woods ☎ 603/278-1000 or 1-800/314-1752, @ www.mtwashington.com. Beautiful hotel dating from 1902, with a quarter-mile terrace, stellar views, indoor pool, and a complete range of activities (including golf, horseback riding, and skiing) and pricing packages. Also runs the less-fancy Bretton Arms, on the same property, which is much cheaper (5), though rooms are still spacious. 8

Thayer's Inn 111 Main St, Littleton ☎ 603/444-6469 or 1-800/634-8179, @ www.thayersinn.com. Creaky but comfortable and classy old inn, which has hosted guests such as U.S. Grant and Richard Nixon. 3

Franconia Notch

I-93, speeding up towards northern Vermont, and the more leisurely US-3 merge briefly about ten miles beyond Lincoln to pass through Franconia Notch State Park. From a roadside pullout you used to be able to look back and upwards to the Old Man of the Mountain, a natural rock formation resembling an old man's profile. However, in May 2003, this fragile formation, New Hampshire's ubiquitous state symbol, came tumbling down in high winds and heavy rain.

Franconia Notch itself is a slender valley crammed between two great walls of stone. From the park visitor center (May to late Oct daily 9am–5pm; ☎603/745-8391), you can, for $10, walk along a two-mile boardwalk-cum-nature trail to the Flume and look down at the Pemigewasset River as it rages through the narrow, rock-filled gorge. Alternatively, take an $11 cable-car ride up the sheer granite face of Cannon Mountain (mid-May to mid-Oct daily 9am–5pm; ☎603/823-8800, @www.cannonmt.com), or hike the various, well-marked trails up to panoramic views for free.

Further on, one mile south of the friendly village of FRANCONIA, the Frost Place on Ridge Road (June Sat & Sun 1–5pm; July to mid-Oct Wed–Mon 1–5pm; $4; ☎603/823-5510, @www.frostplace.org) is another former home of poet Robert Frost, memorable largely for an inspiring panorama of unspoiled mountains. Each summer the poet-in-residence will often give poetry readings during visiting hours; Frost's farm outside Concord (see p.262) is a better destination to get a sense of the poet's life and works.

Bretton Woods

The ease with which US-302 now crosses the middle of the mountains belies the effort that went into cutting a road through Crawford Notch, halfway between Franconia and Conway. Just north, the magnificent Mount Washington Hotel (see p.265) stands in splendid isolation in the wide mountain valley of BRETTON WOODS. The hotel's glistening white facade, capped by red cupolas and framed by the western slopes of Mount Washington rising behind, has barely changed since the place opened in 1902. In its heyday, a stream of horse-drawn carriages brought families (and their servants) up from the train station, deliberately located at a distance to enhance the sense of grandeur. Displays in the grand lobby commemorate the Bretton Woods Conference of 1944, which laid the groundwork for the postwar financial structure of the capitalist world, by setting the gold standard at $35 an ounce (it's now about $600) and creating the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Restoration has ensured that the hotel remains marvelously evocative, with its quarter-mile terrace and white wicker furniture; the place is worth checking out even if you're not staying here.

Mount Washington

The 6288ft Mount Washington was named for George Washington before he became president – but over the years, other mountains in this “Presidential Range” have taken the names of Madison, Jefferson, and even Eisenhower. (Mount Nancy had its name long before the Reagans were in the White House; and Mount Deception just happens to be close by.)

From the top of Mount Washington you can, on a clear day, see all the way to the Atlantic and into Canada – but the real interest in making the ascent lies in the extraordinary severity of the weather up here, which results from the summit lying right in the path of the principal storm tracks and air-mass routes affecting the northeastern US. The wind here exceeds hurricane strength on more than a hundred days of the year, and in 1934 it reached the highest speed ever recorded anywhere in the world – 231mph. At the top, you'll see the remarkable spectacle of buildings actually held down with great chains; many have been blown away over the years, including the old observatory, said to be the strongest wooden building ever constructed. There's now a viewing platform, with a weatherproof museum (free) and café just below. Be sure to check the weather conditions before attempting any ascent, and be aware that a fine day can turn bad very quickly in these parts. Among the roll call of the 124 victims to have died on the mountain are two who attempted to slide down on "improvised boards."

On the way to the top, you pass through four distinct climatic zones, starting with century-old fir and ash trees so stunted as to be below waist-height and ending with Arctic tundra. The drive up the Mount Washington Auto Road (early May to late Oct, weather permitting, at least 8am–4pm; call ☎ 603/466-3988 to check weather conditions, @ www.mtwashingtonautoroad.com) isn't as hair-raising as you might expect, though the hairpin bends and lack of guardrails certainly keep you alert. There is a $20 toll for cars and driver (plus $7 for each additional adult and $5 for kids), which comes with an audio tape or CD detailing the road's history. Or you can take a narrated tour in a specially-adapted minibus, called a "stage," after the horse-drawn carriages that first used the road (daily 8.30am–5pm; $26). Driving takes thirty or forty minutes under sane conditions, though rally-drivers have done it in less than ten. The record for the annual running race (up the mountain, of course) now stands at an incredible 58 minutes 20 seconds.

Last but far from least, you can also ride to the top on the coal-fired steam train of the Mount Washington Cog Railway, which noisily climbs the exposed flank of the mountain, ascending grades of up to 38 degrees on a track completed in 1869. It's truly a unique experience, as you inch up the steep wooden trestles while trying to avoid descending showers of coal smut. The three-hour roundtrip costs $57 ($37 for kids), and trains leave hourly (daily, weather permitting: mid-June to late Oct, call for other dates and times, and to reserve; ☎ 603/278-5404 or 1-800/922-8825, @ www.thecog.com) from a station off Rte-302 six miles northeast of Bretton Woods. The Cog also runs uphill in the winter season (Nov–Apr) to access one-mile-long groomed downhill ski trails ($40 for three runs).

North Conway

A few miles south of Mount Washington, US-302 and Hwy-16 nears NORTH CONWAY by first passing through a hodgepodge of shopping malls, fast-food joints, and kiddie theme parks such as Heritage New Hampshire and Story Land (either at ☎ 603/383-4186). More useful is the White Mountain National Forest Saco Ranger Station, 33 Kancamagus Hwy near Rte-16 in Conway (daily 8am–5.30pm; ☎ 603/447-5448), which sells books, maps, and the mandatory National Forest parking permits ($3 for one day, $5 for seven consecutive days). It also provides a ton of resources for area planning and handles backcountry cabin rentals. If you're traveling through the North Conway area in high season, be warned that roads can get extremely congested.

The Kancamagus Highway

The Kancamagus Highway (Hwy-112) connecting Conway and Lincoln is the least busy road through the mountains, and makes for a very pleasant 34-mile drive. Several campgrounds are situated in the woods on either side, and various walking trails are signposted. The half-mile hike to Sabbaday Falls, off to the south roughly halfway along the highway, leads up a narrow rocky cleft in the forest to a succession of idyllic waterfalls. If you plan on a picnic, though, take note: there are no food, gas or services available along the highway.

White Mountains eating and drinking

Family restaurants and fast-food joints line the main drags of major centers such as North Woodstock and North Conway. The best places are in less conspicuous areas and worth rooting out. Some of the hotels and B&Bs recommended on p.265 also serve food.

1785 Inn & Restaurant 3582 Hwy-16, just north of North Conway ☎603/356-9025 or 1-800/421-1785. Original appetizers, gourmet meals such as boned rabbit in a cream sherry sauce, and fine wines, with prices to match – entrees are $15–30.

Flying Moose Café 2 W Main St, Littleton ☎603/444-2661. Intimate bistro serving a mix of classic cuisines with contemporary flair, such as braised lamb shank over polenta.

Polly's Pancake Parlor I-93 exit 38, Rte-117, Sugar Hill ☎603/823-5575. Yes, it's in the middle of nowhere, but it's a scenic nowhere and well worth the trip if you love pancakes. Summer only.

Red Parka Pub US-302, Glen ☎603/383-4344. Evening-only steakhouse with bar until 12.30am. Live rock music on weekends, and open-mic night Mondays.

Thompson House Eatery Rte-16A, Jackson ☎603/383-9341. Huge portions of very reasonably priced American comfort food, plus homemade root beer.

Truant's Tavern 96 Main St, North Woodstock ☎603/745-2239. Cozy, affordable restaurant, serving well-cooked American grill fare for around $15 a plate.

West to Vermont

Much of the western side of New Hampshire, as you approach the Connecticut River that forms the entire border with Vermont, amounts to a less-developed version of the Lakes Region (see p.262). For a tranquil day or two, the area around Lake Sunapee, the northern tip of which just brushes I-89, can be very appealing. Good bets include The Back Side Inn, behind Mount Sunapee at 1171 Brook Rd in Goshen (☎603/863-5161, www.backsideinn.net; 4), a former farm and now family-run Victorian B&B with ten simple but comfortable rooms and a sumptuous breakfast buffet; and, overlooking the lake, the Inn at Sunapee, 125 Burkehaven Hill Rd (☎603/763-4444 or 1-800/327-2466, www.innatsunapee.com; 5), a converted 1875 farmhouse decorated with a mixture of period items and Asian antiques.

Hanover

HANOVER, near Lebanon and just across from Vermont, is home to the venerable and elegant Dartmouth College, founded in this remote spot in the eighteenth century “for the instruction of the Youth of Indian tribes . . . and others.” The main attraction here is the small Hood Museum of Art on the college green (Tues & Thurs–Sat 10am–5pm, Wed 10am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎603/646-2808, www.hoodmuseum.dartmouth.edu), which has works by Picasso and Monet alongside Assyrian bas-reliefs. In the adjacent Hopkins Center, the Dartmouth Film Society screens international art-house films and classic movies year-round ($7).

Hanover itself is enjoyable to wander around, with lively places to eat and drink, such as Murphy's on the Green, 11 S Main St (☎603/643-4075), the best place for a beer and some healthy food, and the always-busy Lou's Restaurant & Bakery, 30 S Main St (☎603/643-3321), good for breakfast. The finest accommodation is at the expensive and luxurious Hanover Inn, overlooking Dartmouth Green from the corner of Main and Wheelock streets (☎ 603/643-4300 or 1-800/443-7024, 🌐 www.hanoverinn.com; 📍). The Chieftain Motor Inn, at 84 Lyme Rd (☎ 603/643-2550, 🌐 www.chieftaininn.com; 📍), represents the best budget option you'll find in this generally expensive area.

Nearby, one secluded and memorable place to stay is Moose Mountain Lodge (☎ 603/643-3529, 🌐 www.themoosemountainlodge.com; 📍), with at least a 2-night stay required; closed mid-Oct to late Dec and mid-March to mid-June), a steep climb up in the hills above Etna, overlooking Vermont. All year it feels blissfully remote from the world below, but it really comes into its own for cross-country skiing in winter. The friendly owners, who love the country life, charge $110–145 per day per person, which includes a hearty breakfast and dinner.

Vermont

VERMONT comes closer than any other New England state to realizing the quintessential image of small-town Yankee America, with its white churches and red barns, covered bridges and clapboard houses, snowy woods and maple syrup. The largest city, Burlington, approaches a population of just forty thousand and the chief tourist attraction is Ben & Jerry's ice-cream factory in Waterbury. Though rural, the landscape is not all that agricultural, as much is covered by mountainous forests (the state's name comes from the French "vert mont," or green mountain). The people who choose to live here are a mix of hippies and diehard conservationists working together to preserve their environment and lamenting the arrival of yet more ski resorts. One striking feature of Vermont is the absence of billboards – though the cutesy "country stores" which seem to grace every other crossroads can become tedious.

This was the last area of New England to be settled, early in the eighteenth century, with French explorers working their way down from Canada, and American colonists beginning to spread north. The wealthy New York merchants who built fine homes along the Connecticut River Valley thought of themselves as the "River Gods," but the hardy settlers of the lakes and mountains of New Hampshire to the east had little time for their patrician ways. Their leader, the now-legendary Ethan Allen, formed his Green Mountain Boys in 1770, proclaiming that "the gods of the hills are not the gods of the valley." During the Revolutionary War, this all-but-autonomous force captured Fort Ticonderoga from the British and helped to win the decisive Battle of Bennington. By 1777, Vermont was an independent republic, with the first constitution in the world explicitly forbidding slavery and granting universal (male) suffrage, but once its boundaries with New York were agreed upon, it joined the Union in 1791. A more recent example of Vermont's progressive attitude occurred in 1999, when Governor Howard Dean signed the civil union bill into law, making Vermont the first state in the US to sanction same-sex marriage.

With the occasional exception, such as the extraordinary assortment of Americana at the Shelburne Museum near Burlington, there are few specific goals for tourists. Visitors come in great numbers during two well-defined seasons: to see the fall foliage in the first two weeks of October, and to ski in the depths of winter, when the resorts of Killington, and Stowe further north (home of The Sound of Music's Trapp family), spring into life. For the rest of the year, you might just as well explore any of the state's minor roads that take your fancy, confident that some picturesque village will appear around the next corner.

Getting around Vermont

Vermont's main north-south road is I-91, hugging the edge of New Hampshire. I-89 traverses the center of the state, passing Montpelier and Burlington on its way from New Hampshire to Canada. Greyhound-affiliated Vermont Transit buses (☎ 1-800/642-3133 in Vermont, 1-800/451-3292 elsewhere, 🌐 www.vermonttransit.com) connect Montréal with Boston and New York, passing through towns such as Burlington, Montpelier, Rutland, and Brattleboro. Amtrak's Vermonter train (☎ 1-800/872-7245), which runs between Washington, DC, and St Albans, stops at Brattleboro, White River Junction, Montpelier, Waterbury, and Burlington. The main airport is in Burlington.

Bike Vermont (☎ 802/457-3553 or 1-800/257-2226, 🌐 www.bikevt.com) and Adventure Guides of Vermont (☎ 1-800/747-5905, 🌐 www.adventureguidesvt.com) organize cycling tours, including itineraries that take you from one rural inn to another.

Southern Vermont

Of the two low-key towns at either end of Vermont's southern Hwy-9 corridor – a mere forty miles from east to west – Brattleboro has the atmosphere of a college town (due to several small area colleges), while Bennington has a college but not the atmosphere.

Brattleboro

If BRATTLEBORO, in the southeastern corner of the state, is your first taste of Vermont, it may come as a surprise. Not the quaint, 1950s-throwback village you might expect, its style owes more to the central and northern Massachusetts college towns, with numerous little stores catering to the youthful and vaguely “alternative” population that has moved into the surrounding hills over the past few decades. The town's one unlikely claim to fame is that this was where Rudyard Kipling wrote his two Jungle Books.

Trains follow the river into town and stop behind the Old Union Railroad Station, which now displays exhibits by local painters, photographers, sculptors, and the like as the Brattleboro Museum & Art Center (April–Feb Wed–Mon 11am–5pm; $4; ☎ 802/257-0124, 🌐 www.brattleboromuseum.org). Buses pick up and drop off at the junction of US-5 (Putney Road) and I-91, a couple of miles north.

The most popular place to stay is the Art Deco Latchis Hotel, 50 Main St (☎ 802/254-6300, 🌐 www.latchis.com; 🍷) which has an attached cinema. You can't go wrong eating at the Riverview Café, 3 Bridge St (☎ 802/254-9841), which overlooks the Connecticut River. The Latchis serves quality beer in the Flat Street Brew Pub upstairs from the cinema, but the best beer resides at the rough-around-the-edges McNeill's Brewery, 90 Elliot St (☎ 802/254-2553). The nearby Mole's Eye Café, at 4 High St (☎ 802/257-0771), is an established night-spot with live music every night (and a bar menu that includes a smattering of Mexican and Italian items). Homemade baked goods and specialty coffee make Mocha Joe's, 82 Main St (☎ 802/257-7794), a good place for a morning snack or an evening dessert.

Bennington

In the past two hundred years, little has happened in BENNINGTON to match the excitement of the days when Ethan Allen's Green Mountain Boys – known as the “Bennington Mob” – were based here. A 306ft hilltop obelisk (mid-April to late Oct daily 9am–5pm; $2) commemorates the Battle of Bennington of 1777, in which the Boys were a crucial factor in defeating the British under General Burgoyne (though the battle itself was fought just across the border in New York).

The Paradise Motor Inn at no. 141 (☎ 802/442-8351, 🌐 www.theparadisemotorinn.com; ④) is one of a few downtown motels on West Main Street. More stylish digs can be found at the Four Chimneys Inn on Rte-9, called West Rd here (☎ 802/447-3500, 🌐 www.fourchimneys.com; ⑤). Ten miles east of town on Rte-9, by the Prospect Ski Mountain, is the HI-Greenwood Lodge hostel (open mid-May to late Oct; ☎ 802/442-2547), which has beds for $28. As for food, students from the small and exclusive arty Bennington College crowd into the Madison Brewing Company at 428 Main St (☎ 1-800/44BREWS) or the Blue Benn diner, 102 Hunt St (☎ 802/442-5140).

The Green Mountains

The weather in the Green Mountains, which form the backbone of Vermont, is not as harsh as in New Hampshire's White Mountains – though their forests are invariably buried in snow for most of the winter, and the higher roads are liable to be blocked for long periods. Here and there, denuded patches mark where trees have been shaved away to create ski-runs, but for the most part, the usually peaceful Hwy-100 running up from the south offers unspoiled mountain views to either side.

In summer, hikers take up the challenge of the Long Trail along the central ridge, 265 miles from the Massachusetts border to Québec. This trail predates the Appalachian Trail, which now joins its southern portion, and is looked after by the Green Mountain Club (☎ 802/244-7037, 🌐 www.greenmountainclub.org), whose Long Trail Guide ($19) is invaluable.

Hwy-100 Scenic Drive: Weston

One of the prettiest villages along Hwy-100 is WESTON, which spreads out beside a little river and centers on a perfect green, where a somber slab commemorates the seventeen local soldiers killed on the same day during the Civil War, in Alexandria, Virginia. Nearby, the Farrar-Mansur House (July & Aug Wed, Sat & Sun 1–4pm; early Sept to mid-Oct Sat & Sun 1–4pm; $2 donation; ☎ 802/824-5294) is a 1795 house and tavern, which recreates early settler life with collections of clocks, dolls, guns, and weaving equipment.

Stores selling antiques, toys, and fudge are scattered up and down Main Street (Hwy-100). The Vermont Country Store, south of the green, is larger than it looks from its modest facade. For all its seeming quaintness, this Vermont institution is actually part of a chain that has a successful mail-order business. Opposite, the Weston Village Store leans more on the side of kitsch, but is still a fun place to browse.

Weston's best accommodation is the lovely Inn at Weston, Hwy-100, near the village green (☎ 802/824-6789, 🌐 www.innweston.com; ⑦), with homey rooms, an excellent restaurant and a cozy pub. Another nice B&B is the Darling Family Inn (☎ 802/824-3223, 🌐 www.thedarlingfamilyinn.com; ④), north of the green on Hwy-100. A small but magnificent soda fountain dominates the 1885 mahogany bar of the lunch-only Bryant House restaurant, next door to the Vermont Country Store on Main Street (closed Sun; ☎ 802/824-6287), whose menu includes country fare, including “johnny cakes.” The best bet for entertainment is the attractive Weston Playhouse, which offers summer and fall performances (Tues–Sun; $28–47; ☎ 802/824-5288, @ www.westonplayhouse.org).

3

Killington

The ski resort of KILLINGTON (☎ 802/422-6220 for the resort, or 1-800/621-6867 for other area reservations, @ www.killington.com), in the center of the Green Mountains thirty miles north of Weston, has grown out of nothing since 1958. Despite a miniscule permanent population (around fifty), it’s estimated that in season there are enough beds within twenty miles to accommodate some ten thousand people each night. The resort sprawls over seven mountains (Pico Mountain is the best for skiers of mid-range ability; for 24-hour taped skiing information, call ☎802/422-3261), and is notorious for its rowdy nightlife. For hikers, the Long and Appalachian trails meet just north of here. In summer and fall, you can still take the gondola ($9 one way, $13 roundtrip) up to the observation deck and cafeteria on the summit. Choose your way back down: hike or mountain bike (rentals are available at the base).

△ Killington, VT

In winter, the Killington Access Road up from US-4 is humming with crowded bars and restaurants: Wobbly Barn Steakhouse (☎802/422-6171) is good for beef in all forms, and lively entertainment, and the Pickle Barrel (☎802/422-3035) is a rowdy bar that gets crazier on winter weekends. Some places close in summer. The Cortina Inn & Resort (☎802/773-3333 or 1-800/451-6108, 🌐www.cortinainn.com; 🍷) is one of several inns on Hwy-4 offering reduced summer rates; the Inn at Long Trail, Sherburne Pass (☎802/775-7181 or 1-800/325-2540, 🌐www.innatlongtrail.com; 🍷), is perfectly located for Long Trail hikers (see p.271).

Woodstock

Since its settlement in the 1760s, beautiful WOODSTOCK, a few miles west of the Connecticut River up US-4, has been one of Vermont's more refined centers. Its distinguished houses cluster around an oval green, now largely taken over by art galleries and tearooms (don't confuse it with Woodstock, New York, of music festival fame).

Woodstock's main paying attraction is the Billings Farm and Museum, Rte-12, at River Rd (May–Oct daily 10am–5pm; Nov–Dec Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; $10; ☎802/457-2355, 🌐www.billingsfarm.org): part modern dairy farm, part museum of farm life, it puts on demonstrations of antiquated skills and shows an excellent biographical film of the farm's various owners. Hiking trails, accessible from the town center, are great for a leisurely stroll, as are the forest trails of the Marsh-Billings-Rockefeller National Historical Park (daily late May–Oct 10am–5pm; ☎802/457-3368, 🌐www.nps.gov/mabi), which are also groomed for winter skiing and snowshoeing.

The friendly staff of the Woodstock Chamber of Commerce (☎802/457-3555 or 1-888/496-6378, and 🌐www.woodstockvt.com) has extensive information on lodging, dining and other area attractions. The Chamber also runs an information booth on the green (June–Oct 9.30am–5.30pm; ☎802/457-1042), which can help you find accommodation once in town. Options include the well-refurbished Shire Riverview, 46 Pleasant St (☎802/457-2211, 🌐www.shiremotel.com; 🍷), the upscale Woodstock Inn and Resort, 14 The Green (☎802/457-1100 or 1-800/448-7900, 🌐www.woodstockinn.com; 🍷), and the cozy Applebutter Inn, four miles east of town on Hwy-4, in Taftsville (☎802/457-4158, 🌐www.applebutterinn.com; 🍷).

Of the several places to eat in Woodstock, Bentley's, 3 Elm St (☎802/457-3232), has a range of microbrews and upscale versions of traditional bistro food, and the 🍷 Kedron Valley Inn, Rte-106 in South Woodstock (☎802/457-1473), serves more expensive but superb American standards. Comfort food breakfasts and lunches are on offer at Mountain Creamery, 33 Central St (daily, 7am–3pm; ☎802/457-1715). Eagle Café, in the Woodstock Inn, has tasty salads, flatbread pizzas and sandwiches all for under $12. Allechante, 61 Central St (☎802/457-3300), serves the area's best pastries.

Quechee

The grand houses on the hills around QUECHEE, six miles east of Woodstock, have been joined by a proliferation of new condos and second homes. It's all reasonably well landscaped, but a shame nonetheless, and adds nothing to the environs of Quechee Gorge State Park, which preserves the splendors of the Quechee Gorge. A delicate bridge spans the 165ft chasm of the Ottauquechee River, and hiking trails lead down to the park through the fir trees. You can camp at the park at one of Vermont's many state-run campgrounds ($14–23 per night; two-night minimum stay; ☎ 802/295-2990 or 1-888/409-7579). If you'd rather not rough it, the Quality Inn, on Hwy-4 between the gorge and the tourist shops of the Quechee Gorge Village (☎ 802/295-7600 or 1-800/732-4376, @ www.qualityinnquechee.com; 📍), offers the best-value accommodation.

The river spins the turbines of the Simon Pearce Glass Mill (daily 9am–9pm, ☎ 802/295-2711), housed in a former wool mill along Main Street in Quechee. Here, you can watch glass bowls and plates being blown, and then eat from them at the on-site restaurant (overlooking a waterfall) which serves, among other dishes, glazed wild salmon, Mediterranean lamb burgers, and crispy roast duck ($20–28 dinner entrees, about $15 for lunch); reservations are recommended (☎ 802/295-1470).

Montpelier

Some fifty-five miles north up I-89, MONTPELIER is the smallest state capital in the nation, with fewer than ten thousand inhabitants. Surrounded by leafy gardens, the golden domed capitol is well worth a free tour for its marble-floored and mural-lined hallways. Copious information on accommodation, here and throughout the state, is available from the Vermont Division of Travel and Tourism, 134 State St (daily 8am–8pm; ☎ 802/828-5981 or 1-800/VERMONT). Good B&B rooms can be had at the central yet quiet Betsy's Bed & Breakfast, 74 E State St (☎ 802/229-0466, @ www.betsysbnb.com; 📍). For more luxurious digs, try the Capitol Plaza Hotel, 100 State St (☎ 802/223-5252, @ www.capitolplaza.com; 📍).

For food, students from the local New England Culinary Institute run both the Main St Grill & Bar at 118 Main St (☎ 802/223-3188) and the more upmarket Chef's Table, at the same address (☎ 802/229-9202), each one serving excellent, inexpensive, experimental dishes from all over the world. Coffee Corner, on Main Street at State (☎ 802/229-9060), has been serving dirt-cheap diner food for over sixty years. Capitol Grounds, 45 State St (☎ 802/223-7800), is definitely tops for your morning coffee or tea fix.

There are several in-town options for live music; Langdon Street Café, 4 Langdon St (☎ 802/223-8667), has a homey feel, with live music nightly and beer, wine, and coffee drinks, while Black Door Bar, 44 Main St (☎ 802/223-7070), is a bit more posh, with jazz or zydeco ($3 cover).

Waterbury

Few people paid much attention to WATERBURY before 1978; even then, the opening of a homemade ice-cream stand run by a pair of hippies on the forecourt of a gas station excited little interest. However, Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream Factory, one mile north of I-89 on Rte-100 in the center of Waterbury, on the way up to Stowe, has grown so huge, so fast, that it is now the number-one tourist destination in Vermont. Half-hour tours (daily: July & Aug 9am–8pm; Sept & Oct 9am–6pm; Nov–May 10am–5pm; June 9am–5pm; $3, under 12 free; ☎ 802/882-1240 or 1-866/BJ-TOURS, @ www.benjerry.com) include a short film, a view of the workforce from an observation platform, and a free mini-scoop of the stuff that made it all possible – you can buy more at the overpriced gift shop and ice-cream stall outside. The omnipresent black-and-white cow logo, and the reminders to recycle, eat organic, and buy milk from farming co-ops can get to be a bit much; if the summer crowds seem intolerable, bear in mind there are better things to do in Burlington and Stowe.

Stowe

At the foot of Vermont's highest mountain, the 4393ft Mount Mansfield, lies the popular summer- and wintertime resort of STOWE. There is still a beautiful nineteenth-century village at the town's heart – with a white-spired meeting house and a pretty green – though a century's worth of catering to skiers and outdoor enthusiasts has swamped the approach road to the main ski area with equipment stores, resort spas, and sprawling condo complexes. Nevertheless, Stowe's setting remains spectacular.

Stowe's visitor center on Main Street, near the intersection with Mountain Road (Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 9am–5pm; ☎ 802/253-7321 or 1-877/GO-STOWE, 🌐 www.gostowe.com), provides information on skiing conditions and accommodation. Bikes can be rented from the Mountain Sports & Bike Shop, 580 Mountain Rd (☎ 802/253-7919, 🌐 www.skiershop.com) for the Recreation Path, the town's paved trail twisting through 5.3 miles of scenery. For mountain biking options, contact the local bike shops or the Stowe Mountain Bike Club (☎ 802/253-1947) which sponsors group rides. The Vermont Ski Museum, 1 S Main St (Mon & Wed–Sun noon–5pm, closed Nov and mid-April to May; $3 donation; ☎ 802/253-9911), tackles the evolution of the sport.

Hwy-108 – Mountain Road – leads close to the mountain through the dramatic Smugglers' Notch. The resort here (☎ 1-800/451-8752, 🌐 www.smuggs.com) is a less crowded, more family-orientated alternative to Stowe. Weather permitting, you can get to the top of Mount Mansfield either by driving four and a half miles up the Toll Road, which itself starts seven miles up Mountain Road (June to mid-Oct daily 9am–5pm; $19 per car, with up to six people), or by taking the gondola (mid-June to mid-Oct daily 10am–5pm; $12 one way; ☎ 802/253-3000, 🌐 www.stowe.com) up to the Cliff House Restaurant (lunch only), and hiking for another half-hour from there. There's also a luge-type ride on a 2300-foot-long track known as the Alpine Slide ($15 a ride, multi-packs available). What really made Stowe's name as a cross-country ski resort was its connection to the Trapp family, of The Sound of Music fame. After fleeing Austria during World War II, they established the 🏠 Trapp Family Lodge at 700 Trapp Hill Rd (☎ 802/253-8511 or 1-800/826-7000, 🌐 www.trappfamily.com; 📍). The original lodge, where Maria von Trapp held her singing camps, has burned down, and she herself died in 1987, but an equally luxurious building has taken its place: its Austrian Tea Room serves incredibly heavy Germanic cakes and pastries (11am–5pm). Almost 150km of back-country and groomed cross-country ski trails lead out from the lodge.

Practicalities

The best of the plentiful accommodation (save the lodge above) includes the sumptuous Stoweflake Mountain Resort & Spa, 1746 Mountain Rd (T 802/253-7355 or 1-800/253-2232, 🌐 www.stoweflake.com; 📍); and the historic Green Mountain Inn, 18 Main St (☎ 802/253-7301 or 1-800/253-7302, 🌐 www.greenmountaininn.com; 📍). Cheaper rooms are available at the Riverside Inn, 1965 Mountain View Rd (☎ 802/253-4217 or 1-800/966-4217, 🌐 www.rivinn.com; 📍). Gold Brook campground is two miles south on Hwy-100 (☎ 802/253-7683; $23).

There are plenty of places to eat in and around Stowe. On Mountain Road, next to the cinema, McCarthy's (☎ 802/253-8626) is best for breakfast; the Shed Restau- rant & Brew Pub, at no. 1859 (☎ 802/253-4364), has moderately-priced American food and good beer; and the always-crowded Pie in the Sky, at no. 492 (☎ 802/253-5100), serves relatively inexpensive pizza and pasta dishes. A more upscale option is the Blue Moon Café, 35 School St (☎ 802/253-7006), which offers an innovative menu including Vermont rabbit and venison, as well as a good wine list.

Lake Champlain

The 150-mile-long Lake Champlain, which forms the boundary between Vermont and New York State, and just nudges its way into Canada, never exceeds twelve miles in width. The first non-native to see the lake, Samuel de Champlain, who named it after himself in 1609, was also the first to claim that it held a sinuous Loch Ness-type monster, which is locally referred to affectionately as “Champ.”

The heart and soul of the valley is the French-influenced city of Burlington, whose longstanding trade connections with Montréal filled it with elegant nineteenth-century architecture. Within just a few miles of the center, US-2 leads north into the supremely rural Champlain Islands, covered in meadows and orchards.

If your travel plans require it, Lake Champlain Ferries (☎ 802/864-9804, 🌐 www ferries.com) crosses the lake from Vermont to New York from Burlington (to Port Kent; $15); Charlotte (to Essex; $8.50); and Grand Isle (to Cumberland Head; $8.50). All these rates are one way for a car and driver; additional passengers, cyclists, and walk-ons pay $3.25–5.25.

Burlington

Lakeside BURLINGTON, Vermont’s largest “city,” with a population near forty thousand, is one of the most enjoyable towns in New England. A hip, relaxed fusion of Montréal, eighty miles to the north, and Boston, over two hundred miles southeast, it’s always looked as much to Canada as to the south; shipping connections with the St Lawrence River were far easier than the land routes across the mountains, and the harbor became a major supply center. The city’s founders included Ethan Allen and family, but far from being some impoverished Robin Hood figure (see opposite), Ethan was a wealthy landowner, and his brother Ira set up the University of Vermont. In 1990 Bernard Saunders, the former “socialist” mayor of Burlington, was elected to the House of Representatives – the first political independent to go to Congress in forty years.

As the home of the university, Burlington is the definitive youthful, outward-looking college town. Downtown is easily strolled by foot, notably around the Church Street Marketplace.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Vermont Transit buses stop in downtown Burlington, four blocks south of Main Street at 345 Pine St. The Amtrak train station is an inconvenient five miles north-east, in the small community of Essex Junction (connecting buses $1.25). The airport, Vermont’s largest, is a few miles east of town along US-2.

Information and help with accommodation is available from the Lake Champlain Regional Chamber of Commerce, 60 Main St (year-round Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, July–Sept also Sat–Sun 11am–5pm; ☎ 802/863-3489 or 1-877/686-5253, 🌐 www.vermont.org), or the kiosk on Church Street.

The local CCTA bus company (☎ 802/864-2282, 🌐 www.cctaride.org) runs a free shuttle (roughly every 15 mins, Mon–Fri 6.15am–7.15pm; extended hours during summer) connecting the university campus, downtown, and the waterfront. Lake Champlain Ferries (see opposite) leave from the jetty at the end of King Street. Lake Champlain Shoreline Cruises ($13 narrated tour; lunch and evening theme and lobster dinner cruises $20–46; ☎ 802/862-8300, 🌐 www.soea.com), on the 140-foot cruiser Spirit of Ethan Allen III, depart from the Boathouse at the end of College Street. North Star Sports, 100 Main St (☎ 802/863-3832), and Skirack, 85 Main St (☎ 802/658-3313), rent bikes.

Accommodation

Burlington has no shortage of moderately priced accommodation, especially along Shelburne Road between Burlington and Shelburne, while for camping the lakeside North Beach Campground (☎ 802/862-0942 or 1-800/571-1198; $18–23) is less than two miles north on Institute Road. The Chamber of Commerce has extensive lodging information available.

Champlain Inn 165 Shelburne St ☎ 802/862-4004. Roadside motel with 33 clean and basic efficiencies, each with microwave and refrigerator. ⑤

Ho-Hum Motel 1660 Williston Rd ☎ 802/863-4551 or 1-800/228-7031. Simple, reasonably priced motel, three miles east of downtown on US-2, near the airport. ③

Inn at Essex 70 Essex Way, Essex Junction ☎ 802/878-1100 or 1-800/727-4295, 🌐 www.innatessex.com. Classy establishment with a good restaurant, near the Amtrak station about eight miles from the town center. ⑦

Sunset House B&B 78 Main St ☎ 802/864-3790, 🌐 www.sunsethousebb.com. Centrally located, homely B&B with shared bathrooms. ⑤

Willard Street Inn 349 S Willard St ☎ 802/651-8710, or 1-800/577-8712, 🌐 www.willardstreetinn.com. A few blocks south of the town center, this gorgeously restored home comes with a relaxing garden, pantry and filling breakfasts. ⑥

The City

The waterfront of Burlington is a surprisingly undeveloped area, though Battery Park at its northern end makes a good place to watch the sun go down over the Adirondacks – especially when there's a band playing, as there often is at weekends.

A better place to explore is the pedestrianized Church Street Marketplace, a few blocks back, which holds Burlington's finest old buildings and its modern cafés and boutiques. The Robert Hull Fleming Museum on Colchester Avenue (May–Aug Tues–Fri noon–4pm, Sat & Sun 1–5pm; Sept to April Tues–Fri 9am–4pm, Sat & Sun 1–5pm; $5; ☎ 802/656-0750, 🌐 www.flemingmuseum.org), at the University of Vermont, has an interesting collection of art and artifacts from all over the world, including pre-Columbian pieces. North on Rte-127, the Ethan Allen Homestead (June–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $5; ☎ 802/865-4556, 🌐 www.ethanallenhomestead.org) offers a multifaceted look at the life and times of Vermont's controversial founding father.

The Shelburne Museum

It takes a whole day, if not more, to appreciate fully the remarkable fifty-acre collection of unalloyed Americana gathered at the Shelburne Museum, on US-7 in Shelburne, three miles south of Burlington (daily: May–Oct 10am–5pm; $18, valid for two successive days; ☎ 802/985-3346, 🌐 www.shelburnemuseum.org). Created in 1947 by heiress Electra Webb, the museum is built around her parents' French Impressionist paintings, including works by Degas and Monet, displayed in a careful reconstruction of their New York City apartment. However, Electra's own interests ranged far wider, and she put together what is probably the nation's finest celebration of its own inventions outside of the Smithsonian Institution.

More than thirty buildings, some original and some constructed specially for the museum, focus on aspects of everyday American life over the past two centuries.

The village includes a general store and an apothecary, a railroad station, and even an enormous steam paddlewheeler from Lake Champlain, the SS Ticonderoga, with its own rock-surrounded lighthouse. Another highlight is the Circus Building, home to parade figures, circus posters, and a miniature three-ring circus of 35,000 wooden pieces, all carved by hand.

Eating, drinking, and entertainment

During term time, the presence of ten thousand students ensures that Burlington has ample choice of inexpensive and good restaurants, as well as some pretty raucous nightspots. Note that this is one of the most vehement anti-smoking towns in the East, and smoking is banned in most restaurants and some bars.

American Flatbread 115 St Paul St ☎802/861-2999. Wildly popular place with all natural and organic pizzas, many with locally-farmed produce.

Club Metronome/Nectar's 188 Main St ☎802/658-4771. Club Metronome's is a very hip club with some live acts, but mainly house and techno music. Downstairs, Nectar's is a retro lounge, which gave birth to the nationally-known jam-band Phish. Cover charge weekends.

Daily Planet 15 Center St, behind Church Street Marketplace ☎802/862-9647. Innovative menu combining Asian and Mediterranean cooking with old-fashioned American comfort food.

Five Spice Café 175 Church St ☎802/864-4045. Excellent southeast Asian food, including a dim sum Sunday brunch and vegetarian dishes.

Muddy Waters 184 Main St ☎802/658-0466. Eclectic woody interior and colorful clientele distinguish this popular coffeehouse. The caffeine beverages pack quite a punch.

Red Onion Café 140 Church St ☎802/865-2563. Inviting bakery with outdoor seating and the best sandwich shop around, with some good vegetarian options.

Shanty on the Shore 181 Battery St ☎802/864-0238. Truly fresh seafood in a laid-back setting, with views of Lake Champlain.

Smokejack's 156 Church St ☎802/658-1119. Creative meat and seafood dishes smoked over an oak-wood grill, all of which go down easier with the spicy Bloody Marys, custom martinis, or beers on tap.

Vermont Pub and Brewery 144 College St ☎802/865-0500. Roomy, convivial brewpub with a good menu of burgers, sandwiches, and other American-style food and occasional live music.

Maine

Celebrated as “the way life should be,” MAINE is as big as the other five New England states combined, yet barely has the population of tiny Rhode Island. In theory, therefore, there’s plenty of room for the massive summer influx of people “from away”; in reality, the majority of these head for the southern stretches of the extravagantly corrugated coast. You only really begin to appreciate the size and space of the state further north, or inland, where vast tracts of mountainous forest are dotted with lakes, and are barely pierced by roads – more like the Alaska interior than the RV-cluttered roads of the Vermont and New Hampshire mountains, and ideal territory for hiking and canoeing (and moose-spotting). Wherever you go in Maine, you’re bound to come across quiet New England towns, wide swaths of remote countryside, and unruly stretches of seashore. None of these areas boasts much in the way of traditional sights, and almost all locals – and tourists – are more than happy to keep it that way.

North America's first agricultural colonies were in Maine: de Champlain's French Protestants near Mount Desert Island in 1604, and an English group that survived one winter at the mouth of the Kennebec three years later. In the face of the unwillingness of subsequent English settlers to let them farm in peace, the local Indians formed a long-term alliance with the French, and until as late as 1700 regularly drove out streams of impoverished English refugees. However, by 1764, the official census could claim that even Maine's African-American population was more numerous than its Native Americans.

Originally part of Massachusetts, Maine became a separate entity only in 1820, when the Missouri Compromise made Maine a free, and Missouri a slave, state. In the nineteenth century, its people had a reputation for conservatism and resistance to immigration, manifested in anti-Irish riots. The state's economy has always been heavily based on the sea. Lobster fishing has defied gloomy predictions and boomed again, as evidenced by the coastline's many thriving lobster pounds.

Maine's climate is famously harsh. In the winter, most of Maine is under snow and the landscape is marked by snowshoes and the peaceful criss-crossing of skis. Summer is short and heralded by sweetcorn and lively lobster shacks; its end is marked by tasty wild blueberry crops – ninety percent of the nation's harvest comes from Maine – and the cheery blue berries turn up in everything from pancakes to grilled chicken dishes. Brilliant Fall colors begin to spread from the north in late September – when, unlike elsewhere in New England, you can find good deals on off-season rates – with temperatures turning frosty by mid-October.

Getting around Maine

The vast majority of visitors to Maine drive. The most enjoyable route to follow is US-1, which runs within a few miles of the coast all the way to Canada, with innumerable turnoffs to hidden seaside villages. If you're in a hurry, I-95, initially the (toll) Maine Turnpike, offers speedy access to Portland and beyond. In the interior, the roads are quiet and the views spectacular; many belong to the lumber companies, who keep track of who you are and where you are going (and charge you for the privilege). At any time of the year, bad weather can render these roads suddenly impassable; be sure to check before setting off (Nov–April call ☎ 207/624-3000, or visit 🌐 www.maine.gov/mdot-stage).

While many touristed spots offer extensive in-town shuttle bus service, public transportation between Maine towns can fall a long way short of meeting travelers' needs. The seven daily Greyhound buses – from Boston to Portland, five of which continue on to Bangor – link the main towns of the southern coast, as does Concord Trailways (which also makes it all the way downeast to Searsport; ☎ 1-800/639-3317, 🌐 www.concordtrailways.com), but that's about all there is. Amtrak has the amiable Downeaster (☎ 1-800/639-3317, 🌐 www.amtrakdowneaster.com), which leaves from Boston's North Station and terminates in Portland (making stops along the way in Wells, Biddeford, and Old Orchard Beach); it's great value at $22 each way.

The Maine coast

Considering that the state has a coastline of three thousand miles, finding access to the sea in Maine can be frustrating. The oceanfront is monopolized by an endless succession of private homes and vacation residences – most famously that of former president George H. W. Bush in Kennebunkport. In fact, only two percent of the shore is publicly owned – and not all of that is beach. Rather than long walks on coastal footpaths, travelers can expect attractive if rather commercial harbor villages, linked mostly by roads set back from the water.

The liveliest destinations are Portland and Bar Harbor (at the edge of Acadia National Park); there's a wide choice of smaller seaside towns, such as Wiscasset and Blue Hill, if you're looking for a more peaceful base. Beaches are more common (and the sea warmer) further south, for example at Ogunquit.

The best way to see the coast itself is by boat: ferries and excursions operate from even the smallest harbors, with major routes including the ferries to Canada from Portland and Bar Harbor, shorter trips to Monhegan island via Port Clyde, Boothbay Harbor, and New Harbor; and Vinalhaven via Rockland.

South of Portland

I-95 crosses from Portsmouth, New Hampshire (see p.260), into an area of Maine so dense with little communities that Mark Twain alleged one couldn't "throw a brick without danger of disabling a postmaster." Three miles over the Maine border, at the intersection with US-1, an information center at Kittery provides copious details on the whole state (daily: summer 8am–6pm; rest of year 9am–5.30pm; ☎ 207/439-1319). For a fantastic fish dinner overlooking the water, stop into the 🦞 Chauncey Creek Lobster Pier (16 Chauncey Creek Road, Kittery Point, ☎ 207/439-1030), while you're here.

If you want to avoid the tolls on the interstate and follow more scenic US-1 instead, you'll soon find yourself in pleasant YORK, which was in 1642 the first English city to be chartered in North America. Its seventeenth-century Old Gaol ("Old Jail") now serves as a museum, commemorating its colorful, criminal past – dating from 1653, it was used as Maine's primary prison until the Revolutionary War. People love to line up for Flo's hot dogs, just north of here in Cape Neddick, US-1 across from Mountain Road (closed Wed), a crowd-pleasing institution since 1959.

Ogunquit

The three-mile spit of sand that shields OGUNQUIT from the open ocean is Maine's finest beach, a long stretch of sugary sand and calm surf that is ideal for leisurely strolls. Even better, the town remains small enough to be a pleasant resort. The summer season at the Ogunquit Playhouse (☎ 207/646-5511) usually attracts a few big-name performers. The late director of the Met in New York called the Ogunquit Museum of American Art (☎ 207/646-4909; $5) "the most beautiful little museum in the world." Its tiny space is blessed with a strong collection of seascapes, further enhanced by the museum's sweeping ocean views.

One great place to stay in Ogunquit is the Terrace by the Sea, 11 Wharf Lane (☎ 207/646-3232, 🌐 www.terracebythesea.com; 🍷) with lovely gardens and a location right on the water's edge. The Scotch Hill Inn, 287 Main St (☎ 207/646-2890, 🌐 www.scotchhillinn.com; 🍷), in the heart of Ogunquit, has cozy, well-appointed rooms and sumptuous breakfasts. The nearest campground, Pinederosa, is north of town at 128 North Village Rd (May–Sept; ☎ 207/646-2492, 🌐 www.pinederosa.com; $23 for two adults); it operates a free shuttle to Ogunquit Beach in July and August. The misnamed Marginal Way, a scenic clifftop path, leads from central Ogunquit to pretty Perkins Cove, a mile south. The Blue Water Inn, 11 Beach St (☎ 207/646-5559) is right on the water and serves up fresh seafood at amazing prices, while Joshua's Restaurant, 1637 US-1 (☎ 207/646-3500) just north in Wells, has the best dinners in the area; many of the dishes use ingredients from his own local farm.

Kennebunkport

Before its worldwide exposure as the home of George H.W. Bush's "summer White House," KENNEBUNKPORT was perfectly happy as a self-contained and exclusive residential district. Although the town does have a bit of a snooty vibe, it has (fortunately) been blessed with beaches as well as bluebloods. Neighboring Kennebunk is home to a lovely trio of beaches: Kennebunk, Mother's, and Gooch's, all located on Beach St, off Rte-9 South; contact the Chamber of Commerce for permits (17 Western Ave, Kennebunk, ☎207/967-0857; $6 per day). The best place to hang out (and eat seafood) is Alisson's, at 8 Dock Square (☎207/967-4841), where dinner is served until 10pm and the bar stays open until 1am.

Portland

The largest city in Maine, PORTLAND was founded in 1632 in a superb position on the Casco Bay Peninsula, and quickly prospered, building ships and exporting great inland pines for use as masts. A long line of wooden wharves stretched along the seafront, with the merchants' houses on the hillside above.

From its earliest days, Portland was a cosmopolitan city, with a large free black population that traditionally worked as longshoremen; great bitterness arose when Irish immigrants began to muscle in on the scene in the 1830s. When the railroads came, the Canada Trunk Line had its terminus right on Portland's quayside, bringing the produce of Canada and the Great Plains one hundred miles closer to Europe than it would have been at any other major US port. Some of the wharves are now taken up by new condo developments, though Custom House Wharf remains much as it must have looked when Anthony Trollope passed through in 1861 and said, "I doubt whether I ever saw a town with more evident signs of prosperity." Most of what he saw of the town was destroyed by an accidental fire in 1866 (Indians in 1675, and the British in 1775, had previously burned Portland deliberately).

Grand Trunk Station was torn down in 1966, and downtown Portland appeared to be in terminal decline – until, that is, a group of committed residents undertook the energetic redevelopment of the area now known as Old Port. Their success has revitalized the city, keeping it at the heart of Maine life – though you shouldn't expect a hive of energy. Portland is quite simply a pleasant, sophisticated, and in places, very attractive town, where one can experience the benefits of a large city at a lesser cost and without the hassle.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Both I-95 and US-1 skirt the promontory of Portland, within a few miles of the city center, while I-295 runs directly through it and offers access to downtown. Portland International Jetport is next to I-95, and is connected with downtown by regular city buses. Congress Street is the main central thoroughfare, while Commercial Street runs along the harbor. Concord Trailways (☎1-800/639-3317, 🌐www.concordtrailways.com) and Greyhound are the principal bus operators along the coast, with frequent service to Boston, as well as north to Bangor (and, in summer, Bar Harbor). Vermont Transit Lines (☎207/772-6587 or 1-800/552-8737, 🌐www.vermonttransit.com) runs to Montréal, New Hampshire, and Vermont, as well as destinations within Maine; the station is at 950 Congress St, on the eastern edge of downtown.

The visitor center is at 245 Commercial St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 10am–3pm; ☎207/772-5800, 🌐www.visitportland.com).

Though served by public buses ($1), downtown Portland is compact enough to stroll or bike around; Cyclemania, at 59 Federal St (☎207/774-2933), rents bicycles for $20 a day. You can also take a trolley tour of the city with the affable Mainely Tours, 163 Commercial St ($15; ☎207/774-0808), or the amphibious Downeast Duck Adventures, at the same address ($22; ☎207/774-DUCK), which whisks you through historical Old Port and then takes you into Casco Bay to view the Calendar Islands.

On weekend mornings between late May and mid-October, the high-speed Cat ferry leaves Portland for Yarmouth in Nova Scotia at 9am; the trip takes about six hours each way. High-season fare is $89 per person one-way, and there are various discount and excursion fares; one-way vehicle fares begin at $149. You can get details by calling ☎1-877/359-3760, or by visiting 🌐www.catferry.com.

Accommodation

Finding a room in Portland is no great problem, although you should book in advance for summer and fall. A number of budget motels cluster around exit 48 off I-95. The closest campground is Wassamki Springs, off Rte-22 towards Westbrook (May to mid-Oct only; ☎207/839-4276; $39).

Hilton Garden Inn 65 Commercial St ☎207/780-0780, 🌐www.hiltongardeninn.com. Fitness center, whirlpool, and wireless internet, all in a snappy location that overlooks the harbor. A bit overpriced, but a good spot. ③

Inn at Park Spring 135 Spring St ☎207/774-1059 or 1-800/437-8511, 🌐www.innatparkspring.com. A charming 1835 B&B in the Arts district and convenient to the restaurant and shops of Old Port. Friendly innkeepers, delicious breakfasts. ⑦

Inn at St John 939 Congress St ☎207/773-6481 or 1-800/636-9127, 🌐www.innatstjohn.com. Located just outside of downtown in a slightly dodgy area, this elegant Victorian mainstay offers reasonably-priced, comfortable rooms, some with shared baths. No elevator.

④-⑥
Morrill Mansion B&B 249 Vaughan St ☎207/774-6900, 🌐www.morrillmansion.com.

Well-appointed, newly-opened B&B with cozy, stylish rooms, refrigerators, DVD players, free internet access, and a great innkeeper. ⑤-⑥

Portland Harbor Hotel 468 Fore St ☎207/775-9090 or 1-888/798-9090, 🌐www.theportlandharborhotel.com. One of the city's newer hotels, in a great location near the waterfront; many rooms overlook the English garden. ⑧

Portland Regency Hotel 20 Milk St ☎207/774-4200, 🌐www.theregency.com. Fancy rooms – some with bay views – in a beautiful renovated brick armory building not far from the Old Port. ⑦-⑧

The City

Thanks to the several fires, not much of old Portland survives, though grand mansions can be seen along Congress and Danforth streets. The Wadsworth-Longfellow House/Maine Historical Society, at 485–489 Congress St (May–Oct & Dec Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; Nov Sat only, 10am–4pm; $7 includes museum, below; 45min tour on the hour), was Portland's first brick house when built in 1785 by Peleg Wadsworth. However, the house owes its fame primarily to Wadsworth's grandson, the poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, who spent his boyhood here. The Historical Society Museum (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $4; ☎207/879-0427) has changing displays of state history and art.

The Portland Museum of Art at 7 Congress Square, was built in 1988 by the renowned I.M. Pei partnership (Tues–Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–9pm; June to mid-Oct Mon 10am–5pm; $10, free Friday 5–9pm; ☎207/775-6148, 🌐www.portlandmuseum.org). It's a stellar exhibition space, brimming with maritime pieces such as Winslow Homer's "Bringing in the Nets" and other affecting seascapes. The lower stories usually hold temporary exhibitions while the second floor displays classic New England scenes. Upstairs is a bit more lively, with a strong collection of fantastic modern works such as Brian White's "mussel dress" – entirely composed of well-worn mussel shells.

The restored Old Port near the quayside, between Exchange and Pearl streets, can be quite entertaining, with all sorts of redbrick antiquarian shops, specialist book and music stores (particularly on Exchange Street), and other esoterica. Several companies operate boat trips from the nearby wharves: the Palawan, a vintage 58ft ocean racer, sails around the harbor and Casco Bay islands and lighthouses from DiMillo's Long Wharf, off Commercial Street (daily in summer; 2hr trip; $25; ☎ 207/773-2163), while Bay View Cruises, 184 Commercial St, offers seal-watching tours (daily May–Oct; $12; ☎ 207/761-0496). Casco Bay Lines runs a twice-daily mail boat all year, and additional cruises in summer, to six of the innumerable Calendar Islands in Casco Bay, from its terminal at 56 Commercial St, at Franklin ($12–18; ☎ 207/774-7871, 🌐 www.cascobaylines.com). Long, Peaks, and Cliff islands all have accommodation or camping facilities. If you follow Portland's waterfront to the end of the peninsula, you'll come to the Eastern Promenade, a remarkably peaceful two-mile harbor trail that connects to East End Beach, below the headland. Above the promenade, at the top of Munjoy Hill, at 138 Congress St, is the eight-sided, shingled 1807 Portland Observatory (June to mid-Oct daily 10am–5pm; $5; ☎ 207/774-5561); you can climb its 103 steps for an exhilarating view of the bay.

Eating

Portland is stuffed with outstanding restaurants, and most of its bars, listed separately under "Nightlife and entertainment," below, serve good food as well. The bountiful Farmer's Market, in Monument Square (open Wed, May–Nov) offers the perfect opportunity to sample local produce.

Asmara 51 Oak St ☎ 207/253-5122. Amazing, low-key Ethiopian and Eritrean food with the likes of tsebhi hamli (collard greens and kale mildly curried and served on injera bread). Closed Mondays.

Aurora Provisions 64 Pine St ☎ 207/871-9060. Upscale market/deli with mouthwatering sandwiches, a full selection of coffee, drinks, pastries, salads, desserts, and a small seating area. Perfect for picnic fare. Closed Sun.

Becky's 390 Commercial St ☎ 207/773-7070. The best breakfast spot in Portland, serving hearty American portions from 4am (for the fisherman) until 9pm. Vintage Maine.

Flatbread Company 72 Commercial St ☎ 207/772-8777. Tasty pizza, made with flatbread dough, their own sauce, and all-natural ingredients, in a hip waterfront location.

Fore Street 288 Fore St ☎ 207/775-2717. One of Portland's foremost restaurants, in a huge old warehouse space, serving the likes of white carrot bisque and panzanella with fresh mozzarella.

Herb's Gully 55 Oak St ☎ 207/774-6404. Tasty, creatively constructed burritos ("hand-rolled fat-ties"), quesadillas, and side dishes. They also mix drinks like the "kind buzz" (banana, honey, vanilla, and bee pollen).

Street and Co. 33 Wharf St ☎ 207/775-0887. A great special-occasion seafood spot where the cuts are grilled, blackened, or broiled to perfection. There are a few good non-fish items as well. Reservations recommended.

 Two Lights Lobster Shack 225 Two Lights Rd, five miles south of Portland in Cape Elizabeth ☎ 207/799-1677. Perhaps the best seafood-eating scenery in all of Maine – lighthouse to the left, unruly ocean to the right. Plus, the seafood is fabulous.

Walter's Cafe 15 Exchange St ☎ 207/871-9258. New American cuisine in a hip, high-ceilinged dining room right on Exchange Street. Entrées are $15–20, lunch is less expensive and just as good.

Nightlife and entertainment

Performing arts in town include chamber music, opera, dance, and touring theater, some as part of PCA Great Performances held at City Hall's Merrill Auditorium (tickets ☎ 207/842-0800, 🌐 www.pcagreatperformances.org); larger productions are put on by the Portland Stage Company at the Portland Performing Arts Center, 25A Forest Ave (☎207/774-0465). Portland Parks and Recreation (☎207/756-8130, 🌐www.ci.portland.me.us) sponsors free outdoor noontime and evening jazz and blues concerts throughout the city during the summer. The free Portland Phoenix has weekly listings of events.

Great Lost Bear 540 Forest Ave ☎207/772-0300. Fifteen state microbrews flow from 53 taps. Also serves good-value burgers, as well as spicy chicken wings and the like.

Gritty McDuff's 396 Fore St ☎207/772-2739. Portland's first brewpub, making Portland Head Pale Ale and Black Fly Stout. Food, folk music, long wooden benches, and a friendly atmosphere, which can get rowdy on Saturday nights.

RiRa 241 Commercial St ☎207/772-3310. Lively Irish pub with great food and a hip waterfront location.

Rivalries 10 Cotton St ☎207/774-6604. Packed with energetic fans, this recent addition to Portland's scene is a clean, hip two-story sports bar.

Top of the East Lounge In the Eastland Park Hotel 157 High St ☎207/775-5411. Sophisticated rooftop lounge, with swanky martinis and great views of the city.

North from Portland: the mid-coast

The coastal towns immediately north of Portland are no less commercialized than those to the south; Freeport, for example, is basically just an outdoor mall (albeit a good one). However, soon after Brunswick, I-95 veers inland toward Augusta, and US-1 is left to run on alone, parallel to the ocean. From here, things become much less frenetic, and prices a whole lot lower; even on the main road you'll find pleasant communities such as Bath and Belfast; the many headlands can be even more peaceful.

Freeport

Much of the current prosperity of FREEPORT, fifteen miles north of Portland, rests on the invention by Leon L. Bean, in 1912, of an unattractive rubber-soled fishing boot. That original boot is still selling, and L.L. Bean has grown into a multi-national clothing conglomerate, with an enormous clothing store on Main Street that literally never closes. Originally, this was so pre-dawn hunting expeditions could stock up; all the relevant equipment is available for rent or sale, and the store runs regular workshops to teach backcountry lore. In practice, though, the late-night hours seem more geared toward high school students, who attempt to fall asleep in the tents without being noticed by store personnel. L.L. Bean is now more of a fashion emporium (it's Maine's most-visited destination) and Freeport has expanded to include a mile-long stretch of top-name factory outlets, most of which do give genuine reductions on the standard retail prices.

Freeport is not an ideal place to stay – everything falls quiet once the shoppers have gone home – but if you need accommodation, the Harraseeket Inn at 162 Main St (☎207/865-9377 or 1-800/342-6423, 🌐www.harraseeketinn.com; Ⓐ) is a wonderful clapboard B&B inn with some eighty rooms. A more affordable option is the sparkling new Holiday Inn Express, 450 US-1 (☎207/865-1920, 🌐www.holidayinn.com; Ⓑ). A few miles north of town, the lovely Maine Idyll Motor Court, at 1411 US-1 N (☎207/865-4201, 🌐www.maineidyll.com; Ⓒ), provides basic but romantic cottages in a pretty, woody setting.

The best food in Freeport is at Conundrum Wine Bistro, 117 US-1 S (☎207/865-4321); most people come for the swanky martinis, then they get hooked on the fresh, eclectic entrées. For a scenic change of pace, head a mile south of Freeport (on Rte-1) to the sea, where the Harraseeket Lunch & Lobster Co (☎207/865-3535), extending on its wooden jetty into the peaceful bay, makes a great outdoor lunch spot. The very green promontory visible just across the water is Wolfe's Neck Woods State Park. In summer, for $1.50, you can follow hiking and nature trails along the unspoiled fringes of the headland (daily 9am–6pm; ☎207/865-4465).

Brunswick

Only a few miles north from Freeport is BRUNSWICK, home since 1794 to Bowdoin College, which counts President Franklin Pierce and author Nathaniel Hawthorne among its alumni. Free tours of the college begin at the Admissions office (tours Mon–Fri 11.30am, 1.30pm & 3.30pm, Sat 11.30am; call ☎ 207/725-3598 for schedule). After decades of disagreement, experts generally agree that former student Admiral Robert Peary was the first man to reach the North Pole in 1909; whatever the truth, the admiral’s assembled equipment and notebooks, found at the Peary-MacMillan Arctic Museum (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; free; ☎ 207/725-3416) are a powerful testament to Arctic exploration, and to his own perseverance.

It was while her husband Calvin was teaching here in the early 1850s that Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote Uncle Tom’s Cabin, a book whose portrait of slavery had such an impact that Lincoln is said to have greeted her with the words “so this is the little lady that started this great war.” The rambling old Harriet Beecher Stowe House at 63 Federal St is now privately owned, but you can visit the pew at First Parish Church where (as the legend goes) she was seized with the vision of a dying slave – an image that later became a crucial scene in her novel (9 Cleaveland St, pew no. 23; ☎ 207/729-7331).

A fun day-trip is the Maine Coast Excursions (☎ 1-866/637-2457; 🌐 www.maineeasternrailroad.com; $40 roundtrip), which provides scenic two-hour coastal trips between Brunswick and Rockland (including stops in Bath and Wiscasset), in its restored Art Deco railcars.

A good place to stay in town is the basic, clean Traveler’s Inn, 130 Pleasant St/US-1 (☎ 207/729-3364 or 1-800/457-3364; 🌐 www.travelersinnme.com 📍), or the brand new Fairfield Inn & Suites, 36 Old Portland Rd (☎ 207/721-0300; 🌐 www.marriott.com 📍). The Brunswick B&B, 165 Park Row (☎ 207/729-4914 or 1-800/299-4914; 🌐 www.brunswickbnb.com; 📍), is a bit frilly, but offers cozy rooms and good hospitality. The Back Street Bistro at 11 Town Hall Place (☎ 207/725-4060) serves excellent New American dinners; Scarlet Begonias, 212B Maine St (☎ 207/721-0430), does creative home-cooking at lunch; and the Little Dog Coffee Shop, 87 Maine St (☎ 207/721-9500), is a pleasant sidewalk café with good coffee. The landmark Fat Boy Drive-In, at 111 Bath Road (☎ 207/729-9431) was built in 1955, and still offers burgers and lobster rolls in a fun, nostalgic setting; just turn your lights on for service.

The ideal time to visit Brunswick is Labor Day Weekend (first weekend in Sept), when the town hosts its Bluegrass Festival (☎ 207/725-6009) a little further on at Thomas Point Beach, reached by following Hwy-24 from Cook’s Corner. The festival, among the best of its kind, attracts some of the biggest bluegrass names from the US and abroad. On the same road, Orrs Island has a well-equipped oceanfront campground (☎ 207/833-5595; $33–37 per day for two adults). Also down this way is the 🐬 Dolphin Marina, 515 Basin Point Road, (☎ 207/833-6000), a tiny, almost hidden restaurant that serves up robust seafood meals overlooking the harbor – don’t miss the fantastic fish chowder.

Bath

Eight miles on, the small town of BATH has an exceptionally long history of shipbuilding: the first vessel to be constructed and launched here was the Virginia in 1607, by Sir George Popham’s short-lived colony. Bath Iron Works, founded in 1833, attracted job-seeking Irishmen in such numbers as to provoke a mob of anti-immigrant “Know-Nothings” to burn down the local Catholic church in July 1854. The works continues to produce ships – during World War II, more destroyers were built here than in all Japan – but only admits visitors for special occasions such as ceremonial launchings. At the stellar Maine Maritime Museum, 243 Washington St, next to the Iron Works two miles south of the town center (daily 9.30am–5pm; $9.75 for two days; ☎ 207/443-1316), you can tour the old Percy & Small shipyard, explore several visiting historic vessels, or browse their collection of ship-related paintings, photographs, and artifacts.

A pretty fourteen-mile drive south along Rte-209 leads to gorgeous Popham Beach ($4; ☎ 207/389-1335) at the end of the Phippsburg Peninsula, where you can explore scenic sands as well as the hulking Fort Popham – a nineteenth-century granite fort.

The Inn at Bath, 969 Washington St (☎ 207/443-4294 or 1-800/423-0964, 🌐 www.innatbath.com; 📍), is a great B&B with beautiful gardens and all the amenities. For a more rural experience, try the Fairhaven Inn, 118 North Bath Road (☎ 207/443-4391 or 1-888/443-4391; 📍–📍), which has shared and private bathrooms, serves an outstanding breakfast, and offers hiking and cross-country skiing in season.

Places to eat include Solo Bistro Bistro, 128 Front St (☎ 207/443-3373), a stranger in these parts – hip, tasty fare in contemporary environs, live jazz some nights; and Beale Street Barbecue & Grill, at 215 Water St (☎ 207/442-9514), offering slow-smoked chicken, pulled pork, and ribs, to stay or to go. The Cabin, 552 Washington St (☎ 207/443-6224) has great pizza. The Sea Basket, US-1 N in Wiscasset (☎ 207/882-6581), has great fried seafood; while eating at Red's Eats (☎ 207/882-6128), just further on US-1 N, is a bit of a culinary rite of passage – people line up and down the block just to get their hands on one of his famous lobster rolls.

Boothbay Harbor

BOOTHBAY HARBOR, at the southern tip of Hwy-27, twelve miles south from US-1, is a crowded, yet undeniably pretty, resort town that's right on the water. The town lays on boat trips of all kinds, including Balmy Days Cruises (☎ 207/633-2284 or 1-800/298-2284), which offers all-day trips to Monhegan Island for $32, and harbor tours for $12. Cap'n Fish's affable "Puffin nature cruises" (☎ 207/633-3244 or 1-800/636-3244; $24 for a two and a half hour tour) offers glimpses of the brightly-beaked birds; bring binoculars. There's no need to stay overnight in Boothbay, but if you do pass by, the Lobstermen's Co-op at 99 Atlantic Ave (☎ 207/633-4900), a working lobster pound, dishes up ultrafresh lobsters at low prices, as well as a range of sandwiches. The Thistle Inn, 55 Oak St, serves up stellar New American and seafood fare at dinnertime and also has lovely rooms (☎ 207/633-3541, 🌐 www.thethistleinn.com; 📍). Back on US-1 N, in Waldoboro, the legendary 🍷 Moody's Diner (☎ 207/832-7785) has been a Maine institution for more than fifty years. Moody's is the real deal, open late and oozing nostalgia, with vinyl booths, inexpensive daily specials, and fourteen types of freshly-made pie – their four-berry is a must-have.

Rockland and Monhegan Island

ROCKLAND, where US-1 reaches Penobscot Bay, has historically been Maine's largest distributor of lobsters, and boasts the busiest working harbor in the state. Though a blue-collar town, in recent years Rockland has grown into one of Maine's hippest, most liveable places. Home to the annual Maine Lobster Festival (held on the first weekend of August; for more info call ☎ 1-800/LOB-CLAW, 🌐 www.maine lobster festival.com) as well as the North Atlantic Blues Festival (held mid-July; for more info call ☎ 207/593-1189, 🌐 www.northatlanticbluesfestival.com), the town's cultural centerpiece is the outstanding Farnsworth Museum, 352 Main St (June to mid-Oct daily 10am–5pm; rest of year Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $10; ☎ 207/596-6457, 🌐 www.farnsworthmuseum.org). The collection spans two centuries of American art, much of it Maine-related, and spreads over several buildings. The Wyeth Center, a beautiful gallery in a converted old church, holds two floors' worth of works by Jamie, and N.C. Wyeth. Rockland's other star attraction is the lush Art Deco Strand Theater, 345 Main St (tickets $8; ☎ 207/594-0700; 🌐 www.rocklandstrand.com), showing classic films like North by Northwest as well as contemporary indie fare.

Rockland is also one terminus of the lovely Maine Coast Excursions (☎ 1-866/637-2457; 🌐 www.maineeasternrailroad.com; $40 roundtrip) see p.285 in Brunswick for details.

For dining, one of the best of the area's traditional lobster pounds is Miller's (☎ 207/594-7406), on the shore of Wheeler's Bay in an isolated cove at Spruce Head on Hwy-73, open from 10am until 7pm in season. The Brass Compass Café, 305 Main St (☎ 207/596-5960), does a standout breakfast and lunch. The best dinners in town can be had at funky and perennially crowded Café Miranda, tucked away at 15 Oak St, just off Main Street (☎ 207/594-2034), with an array of moderately priced international entrees. A great place to stay is the turreted 🐘 LimeRock Inn, 96 Limerock St (☎ 207/594-2257; 🌐 www.limerockinn.com; 🍷-🍷), with fantastic innkeepers, free wifi, and cozy décor; the Navigator Motor Inn, across from the ferry to Vinalhaven, 520 Main St (☎ 207/594-2131; 🌐 www.navigatorinn.com; 🍷) is the cleanest budget motel in the area.

South of Rockland, the pretty St George Peninsula, in particular the village of Tenants Harbor, inspired writer Sarah Orne Jewett's classic Maine novel Country of the Pointed Firs. At the tip of the peninsula, boats leave from the hamlet of Port Clyde for tiny Monhegan Island, eleven miles off the coast and with a year-round population of less than a hundred residents. The island makes a great day-trip away from the tourist bustle of the mainland; you can get there (in about an hour) via Monhegan Boat Lines (May–Oct daily; Nov–April Mon, Wed & Fri; three sailings a day in summer, fewer at other times; $32 roundtrip; ☎ 207/372-8848, 🌐 www.monheganboat.com).

On this rocky outcrop, lobsters are the main business, though the stunning cliffs and isolated coves have long attracted artists as well – including Edward Hopper. Fifteen miles of hiking trails twist through the wilderness and past a magnificent 1824 lighthouse. Accommodation – such as the Island Inn (☎ 207/596-0371, 🌐 www.islandinnmonhegan.com; 🍷) – is generally pricey; you may want to try the simple comfort of The Monhegan House (☎ 207/594-7983 or 1-800/599-7983, 🌐 www.monheganhouse.com; 🍷-🍷).

Camden and Rockport

The adjacent communities of CAMDEN and ROCKPORT split into two separate towns in 1891, in a dispute over who should pay for a new bridge over the Goose River between them. Rockport was at that time a major lime producer, but a fire at the kilns in 1907 not only put an end to that business but also destroyed the ice-houses that were the town's other main source of income. Now it's a quiet working port, among the prettiest on the Maine coast, home to lobster boats, pleasure cruisers, and little else; Camden has clearly won the competition for tourists. The one essential stop in the area is Camden Hills State Park, two miles north of Camden ($3), where you can hike or drive up to a tower that affords one of the best views of the Maine coastline; on a clear day it's possible to see as far as Acadia National Park.

Camden and Rockport specialize in organizing sailing expeditions of up to six days in the large schooners known as windjammers. Expeditions sail from late May into mid-October. Vessels include the Appledore (☎ 207/236-8353), which does two-hour cruises for $30 from Camden. Contact the Maine Windjammer Association (☎207/807-9463) for information and schedules for longer three- to six-day trips out of the area. Maine Sport Outfitters in Rockport (☎1-800/722-0826, 🌐www.mainesport.com) rents kayaks and bikes. Camden's information office is at the Public Landing (☎207/236-4404, 🌐www.camdenme.org).

A great place to stay in town is the beautiful Camden Maine Stay Inn, 22 High St (☎207/236-9636, 🌐www.camdenmainestay.com; 📍7-8), a cozy 1813 white-clapboard inn. The Belmont, 6 Belmont Ave (☎1-800/238-8053, 🌐www.thebelmontinn.com; 📍9), has a lovely porch and grounds and is decked out in conservative elegance. The Ducktrap Motel, just north on Hwy-1 in Lincolnville (☎207/789-5400 or 1-877/977-5400; 📍3), is a cute budget option.

Among busy eating and drinking spots in Camden are the Camden Deli, 37 Main St (☎207/236-8343), with gourmet, bulging sandwiches and harbor views from the upstairs patio. Tea-lit Francine, 55 Chestnut St (☎207/230-0083), serves excellent French bistro fare amidst romantic environs. The Lobster Pound Restaurant, US-1 N in Lincolnville (☎207/789-5550) is a wildly popular seaside restaurant serving heaps of the bright-red crustaceans.

Belfast

Cozy BELFAST feels like one of the most lived-in and liveable towns along the Maine coast. Here, eighteen miles from Camden, the shipbuilding boom is long since over (and the chicken-processing plant that regularly turned the bay blood-red has also gone). In recent years, the town has declared the waterfront a historic district; as you stroll around, look out for any number of whitewashed Greek Revival houses, particularly between Church and Congress Streets. Belfast was a lively center in the 1960s, a fact still reflected in its stores, community theater groups, and festivals. While it's a cute little seaside town, there's not much here in the way of sights, although Searsport, five miles north on US-1, is home to the atmospheric Penobscot Marine Museum, US-1 at Church St (Mon-Sat 10am-5pm, Sun noon-5pm; $8; ☎207/443-1316), which features an outstanding collection of vintage boats, marine artworks, and nautical artifacts that are spread between a number of historic buildings, including a nineteenth-century sea captain's home.

For accommodation, try the Jeweled Turret Inn, 40 Pearl St (☎207/338-2304 or 1-800/696-2304, 🌐www.jeweledturret.com; 📍6-7), a beautiful Victorian house with free wireless internet, or the Londonderry Inn, 133 Belmont Ave (☎207/338-2763 or 1-877/529-9566, 🌐www.londonderry-inn.com; 📍5-6), an old farmhouse that serves tasty breakfasts. Along Hwy-1 across the Passagassawakeag River in East Belfast are several inexpensive motels, including the decent Gull, 196 Searsport Ave (☎207/338-4030; 📍4). There's also an oceanfront campground, Searsport Shores Camping Resort, at 209 W Main St, in Searsport (☎207/548-6059; $35-42 per tentsite).

As for eating, Chase's Daily, 96 Main St (☎207/338-0555), has fresh eats like breakfast burritos and peach smoothies with ginger and lime; across the bay, Young's Lobster Pound (☎207/338-1160) serves $11 fresh-boiled lobster dinners, among the best in the state, along with sunset views. Historic Darby's Restaurant, at 155 High St (☎207/338-2339), serves tasty, inventive lunches and dinners to a congenial mix of locals and visitors.

The Blue Hill Peninsula

It used to be that the Blue Hill Peninsula, reaching south from Bucksport, was a sleepy expanse of land, too far off the primary roads to attract much attention. But word is slowly getting out about this beautiful area, blanketed with fields of wild blueberries and their pinkish-white flowers, and dotted with both dignified old-money towns like Castine and Blue Hill and hardcore fishing villages like Stonington and Deer Isle. Even farther off the established tourist trail, Isle au Haut is a remote outpost accessible only by mailboat. As you might expect, the main draw down here is the quiet tranquility that comes with isolation, and while the area presents ample opportunities for exploration, you might find yourself content with a good book, an afternoon nap, and a night in a posh B&B.

Accommodation

Cheap accommodations on the Blue Hill Peninsula are a little hard to come by, although the Blue Hill Peninsula Chamber of Commerce, at 28 Water St. (☎207/374-3242), can point you in the right direction. Sunshine Campground, way out near the end of Sunshine Road in Deer Isle (☎207/348-2663), has 22 sites from the end of May through mid-October.

Blue Hill Inn Union Street, Blue Hill ☎207/374-2844 or 1-800/826-7415, @www.bluehillinn.com. Romantic 1830 inn with inviting rooms and décor. Guests are treated to outstanding gourmet breakfasts and a tasty evening wine hour. (A small apartment, Cape House, is available in winter for $165 per night, two-night minimum.) May to November only. 7

Boyce's Motel 44 Main Street, Stonington ☎207/367-2421 or 1-800/224-2421. Centrally-located, basic, clean rooms. They also have full apartments, with kitchens and living rooms, for $600 per week. Open all year. 4

Inn on the Harbor Main Street, Stonington ☎207/367-2420. Stonington's fanciest (and priciest) accommodations – there are even spa services. It also has the best location, with a fine view of the harbor. Open all year; breakfast included.

6–8

Pentagoet Inn 26 Main Street, Castine ☎207/326-8616 or 1-800/845-1701, @www.pentagoet.com. A welcoming old 1894 inn with sixteen rooms restored to reflect an earlier era with the help of the antique-buff owners. The inn also has a quiet and sophisticated pub, Passports, a huge porch, and great fine dining (also see “Eating and Drinking” p.290) May to Oct only. 3–7

Pres du Port B&B W Main Street at Highland Avenue, Stonington ☎207/367-5007. Brightly wallpapered, whimsically furnished B&B with a great view from the upstairs deck. Also has one endearing little room for only $40. No credit cards. June to Oct only. 2–7

Blue Hill

There isn't so much to do in wealthy BLUE HILL, at the intersection of routes 172, 176, and 15 adjacent to the Blue Hill Harbor, but plenty of visitors come here simply to relax in the quietude.

It's a 30–45min walk up to the top of Blue Hill Mountain, from which you can see across the Blue Hill Bay to the dramatic ridges of Mount Desert Island. The trailhead is not difficult to find, halfway down Mountain Road between Rte-15 and Rte-172. South on Rte-175, Blue Hill Falls is a good spot to give kayaking a try: the Activity Shop in Blue Hill at no. 61 Rte-172 (☎207/374-3600, @www.theactivityshop.com) has canoe and kayak rentals that they'll even deliver to your door ($25 a day and up; reservations recommended).

Castine

Nearly surrounded by water on the northern edge of the Penobscot Bay, CAS-TINE is one of New England's most quietly majestic towns, with nicely kept gardens, enormous elm trees arching over many of the hilly streets, and a peaceful, subdued sophistication. It's pretty tough to miss the State of Maine, the huge ship that's usually docked at the landing (except in May and June) and used to train the Maine Maritime Academy's students, who give tours in the summer (call ☎207/326-4311 for schedules, or walk up the plank and ask). Take a stroll down Perkins Street to check out the string of enormous mansions looking out over the water; you can also glimpse a number of old historic buildings, such as the 1665 John Perkins House. Castine Kayak Adventures (☎207/326-9045) runs various sea kayaking tours ($55–105, includes equipment and instruction), as well as bike rentals ($24 a day) from Dennett's Wharf.

Stonington and Isle au Haut

Deer Isle is an eclectic mix of seclusion and sophistication. Clear down at the end of Rte-15, it doesn't get much more remote than beautiful STONINGTON, a working fishing village whose residents have long had a reputation for superior seamanship (many pirates and smugglers reputedly made port here in the late nineteenth century). Over the past hundred years, the place has found hard-earned prosperity in the sardine canning and granite quarrying businesses; now it has turned to lobstering. The history of the granite quarries is brought to life at the Deer Isle Granite Museum, on 51 Main Street (June–Aug Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–4.30pm, closed Wed; ☎207/367-6331; donation), which counts as its centerpiece a working model of the quarry as it stood in 1900.

Mailboats headed for ISLE AU HAUT ("I'll ah hoe") depart from the Stonington landing several times daily (☎207/367-5193 or 207/367-6516; $16 one-way). On this lonely island, you can explore the trails of the less-visited part of Acadia National Park – highlighted by the rocky shoreline, bogs, and dense stands of spruce trees.

Eating and drinking

Most of the eateries on the peninsula cater to the expensive tastes (and fat wallets) of wealthy summer residents, but there are tasty bargains to be found.

Castine Variety 1 Main St, Castine ☎207/326-8625. The real draw here is not the food – though it was recently voted "best lobster roll" by Maine residents – but rather the opportunity to sit at the tiny counter and chat with the well-connected proprietor.

Harbor Café Main St, Stonington ☎207/367-5099. A salty ambience – it's where the fishermen come in the morning – with sandwiches, coffee, and muffins; right in the center of town.

Maritime Café 27 Main St, Stonington ☎207/367-2600. Pristine café featuring seafood victuals, crepes, and espresso. Ridiculously good views of the harbor.

Morning Moon Café 1 Bay Rd, at int. of Rte-175 and Naskeag Point Rd, Brooklin ☎207/359-2373. South of Blue Hill and known as "The Moon," this is a popular gathering spot for breakfast and lunch. Closes 2pm; closed Mon.

The Pentagoet Inn Main St, Castine ☎207/326-8616. Lobster bouillabaisse, warm asparagus salad with prosciutto crisps, and pistachio-dusted diver scallops, served in an atmospheric, elegant dining room.

The Wescott Forge 66 Main St, Blue Hill ☎207/374-9909. Closed Sun. The best of both worlds: fabulous fine dining on a sunny deck and a plush lounge that's open late. Lunch is less expensive and just as good. Closed Sun.

Mount Desert Island

Considering that five million visitors come to MOUNT DESERT ISLAND each year; that it contains most of New England's only national park; and that it boasts not only a genuine fjord but also the highest headland on the entire Atlantic coast north of Rio de Janeiro, it is an astonishingly small place, measuring just sixteen miles by thirteen. It is, of course, simply one among innumerable rugged granite islands along the Maine coast; the reason to come here is that it is the most accessible, linked to the mainland by bridge since 1836, and has the best facilities.

The island was named Monts Deserts (bare mountains) by Samuel de Champlain in 1604 and fought over by the French and English for the rest of the century. Although all existing settlements date from long after the final defeat of the French, the name remains, still pronounced in French (more like dessert, actually).

The social center, Bar Harbor, has accommodation and restaurants to suit all pocketbooks, while you'll find lower-key communities all over the island. Acadia National Park, which covers much of the island, offers active travellers plenty of outdoor opportunities, including camping, cycling, canoeing, kayaking, and bird-watching.

Getting there and getting around

Mount Desert is easy to reach by car, traveling along Hwy-3 off US-1. In high summer, though, roads on the island get congested – the horse-drawn tours don't help – and the 55 miles from Belfast seem much longer.

There are a number of ways to get to Mount Desert via public transportation. Before setting out, check out the excellent Island Explorer services (☎ 207/667-5796, www.exploreaacadia.com/guide.html), which include the free shuttle buses that travel through Acadia to Bar Harbor, and even out to the airport. Vermont Transit Lines buses (☎ 1-800/552-8737) run to Bar Harbor from Boston, Bangor, and Portland from mid-June to early September. Concord Trailways has a seasonal shuttle between Bar Harbor and the Bangor airport, with connecting service to Boston's Logan airport – reservations are required (☎ 207/942-8686 or 1-888/741-8686, 🌐 www.concordtrailways.com). Nearby Hancock City/Bar Harbor Airport (☎ 207/667-7432) has a limited service run by Colgan Air (☎ 1-800/272-5488); Bangor International Airport, 45 miles away, is served by Northwest, Delta, and Continental. The Cat high-speed catamaran takes under three hours to link Bar Harbor with Yarmouth, Nova Scotia (June–early Oct $53–63; ferries leave Bar Harbor daily 8am). For reservations, contact Bay Ferries (☎ 1-888/249-7245, 🌐 www.catferry.com).

Accommodation

Hwy-3 into and out of Bar Harbor (which becomes Main Street on the way south) is lined with budget motels to satisfy the enormous demand for accommodation. Many places are open May to October only, and rates increase drastically in July and August; anywhere offering sea views will cost a whole lot more, as well. The quieter places on the island tend to get booked up early.

Bar Harbor Hostel 321 Main St, Bar Harbor
☎ 207/288-5587, 🌐 www.barharborhostel.com.
Clean, safe, brand-new hostel right near the center of town. Dorm beds $25 a night (plus linens), private room $80.

Coach Stop Inn 715 Acadia Highway, Bar Harbor
☎ 207/288-9886 or 1-800/927-3097, 🌐 www.coachstopinn.com. A Bar Harbor standout with lovely innkeepers, great rooms, and lots of outstanding food – including life-changing blueberry fritters. ⑥

Emery's Cottages on the Shore Sand Point Rd, five miles north of Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-3432 or 1-888/240-3432, 🌐 www.emeryscottages.com. Sweet little cottages with kitchenettes (many with wifi) on a private pebble beach just off Hwy-3. Weekly stays in high season cost $540 and up. ④

Hearthside B&B 7 High St, Bar Harbor
☎ 207/288-4533, 🌐 www.hearthsideinn.com. It has a bit of a frilly look, but guests rave about the stellar innkeepers, cozy rooms, great breakfasts, and proximity to shops and restaurants. ⑥

Lindenwood Inn 118 Clark Point Rd, Southwest Harbor ☎ 207/244-5335 or 1-800/307-5335, 🌐 www.lindenwoodinn.com. This first-class inn, built in 1904, offers tastefully decorated rooms and African accents in a stylish former sea captain's home. ⑥–⑨

Mount Desert YWCA 36 Mount Desert St, Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-5008. Centrally-located women-only accommodation. Beds in dorm-style rooms start at $25, and are $70 for the week.

Ullikana B&B 16 The Field, Bar Harbor
☎ 207/288-9552, 🌐 www.ullikana.com. The place to go in town for a romantic splurge; nicely decorated rooms and unbelievably sumptuous breakfasts. ⑦–⑨

Bar Harbor

The town of BAR HARBOR began life as an exclusive resort, summer home to the Vanderbilts and the Astors; the great fire of October 1947 that destroyed their opulent “cottages” changed the direction of the town's growth. It's now firmly geared towards tourists, though it's by no means downmarket. There's not all that much to do in town. Stroll along the Shore Path past the headland of the Bar Harbor Inn and along the coast for views of the ocean and Frenchman Bay, and you've seen most of what Bar Harbor has to offer.

Bar Harbor's main tourist information office is at the ferry terminal (☎ 207/288-5103). In summer, there's another in the Municipal Building at 93 Cottage Street. Both offices offer many free and comprehensive maps of the area. In high season, up to twenty-one different sea trips set off each day, ranging from deep-sea fishing to cocktail cruises. Among the most popular are the whale-watching, puffin, and seal cruises offered by Bar Harbor Whale Watch Company, 1 West St (June–Oct at least twice daily; ☎ 207/288-2386, 🌐 www.barharborwhales.com), and the two-hour cruises on the impressive four-masted schooner Margaret Todd from the Bar Harbor Inn (daily June–Oct; $32; ☎ 207/288-4585, 🌐 www.downeastwindjammer.com).

The native Wapanahki heritage is preserved in the Robert Abbe Museum, 26 Mount Desert St (mid-May to mid-Oct daily 9am–5pm, Thurs–Sat until 9pm; rest of year Thurs–Sun 10am–5pm; $6, admission includes Sieur de Monts location; ☎ 207/288-3519; 🌐 www.abbemuseum.org), which has gorgeously constructed exhibit spaces full of light and pale wood panelling. Although the opening displays on Wapanahki culture are well put together, the Abbe's knockout piece is the “Circle of the Four Directions,” a contemplative, circular space built of cedar panels. The museum even has an original piece from glass wizard Dale Chihuly, his personal gift to the museum. The museum's original location, just off Park Loop Road, relates the history of the institution and is included in the admission price (daily mid-May to mid-Oct 9am–4pm).

Acadia National Park

ACADIA NATIONAL PARK, sprawled out over most of Mount Desert Island, the Schoodic Peninsula to the east, and Isle au Haut to the south, is the most visited natural place in Maine. It's visually stunning, with all you could want in terms of mountains and lakes for secluded rambling, and wildlife such as seals, beavers, and bald eagles. The two main geographical features are the narrow fjord of Somes Sound, which almost splits the island in two, and lovely Cadillac Mountain, 1530ft high, which offers tremendous ocean views. The summit can be reached either by a moderately strenuous climb or by a very leisurely drive, winding up a low-gradient road.

Open all year, the park has the Hulls Cove visitor center near the entrance to the Loop Road north of Bar Harbor (mid-April to Oct daily 8am–4.30pm, open until 6pm July & Aug; ☎ 207/288-3338), and its headquarters at Eagle Lake (daily 8am–4.30pm; same number as above). The entrance fee is $20 per vehicle or $5 per motorcycle or bike; good for seven days. There are two official campgrounds: Blackwoods, five miles south of Bar Harbor, off Rte-3 (reserve through the National Park Service at ☎ 1-800/365-2267 or 🌐 reservations.nps.gov; $20 per tentsite), and Seawall on Hwy-102A, four miles south of Southwest Harbor (☎ 207/288-3338; tentsites $14–20). Both are in woods, near the ocean, and have full facilities in summer; only Blackwoods is open in winter, with minimal facilities.

Once here, the free Island Explorer (📍 www.exploreacadia.com) shuttle buses travel through Acadia to Bar Harbor. However, the most enjoyable way to explore the park is to ride a rented bicycle around the fifty miles of gravel-surfaced “carriage roads,” built by John D. Rockefeller to protest the 1913 vote allowing “infernal combustion engines” onto the island. Three Bar Harbor companies rent mountain bikes at less than $20 a day: Bar Harbor Bicycle Shop, at 141 Cottage St, on the edge of town (☎ 207/288-3886), Acadia Bike & Canoe, across from the post office at 48 Cottage St (☎ 1-800/526-8615), and Southwest Cycle, on Main Street in Southwest Harbor (☎ 207/244-5856). All outlets provide excellent maps. Be sure to carry water, as there are very few refreshment stops inside the park. You can take a 4hr guided kayak tour ($45) from mid-May to mid-October with National Park Sea Kayak Tours, 39 Cottage St (☎ 1-800/347-0940, 📍 www.acadiakayak.com). Another popular tour operator, Coastal Kayaking Tours (📍 www.acadiafun.com), has the same location and phone numbers as Acadia Bike.

The one and only sizeable beach, five miles south of Bar Harbor, is a stunner: called simply Sand Beach, it’s a gorgeous strand bounded by twin headlands, with restrooms, a parking lot, and a few short hiking trails. The water, sadly, is usually arctic.

Eating, drinking, and nightlife

Mount Desert’s most memorable eating experiences are to be found in the many lobster pounds all over the island. For nightlife (such as it is), Bar Harbor is where the people are. Cottage Street is a much more promising area to look for food and evening atmosphere than the surprisingly subdued waterfront. The Art Deco Criterion cinema at 35 Cottage St (☎ 207/288-3441) shows current films.

Café This Way 14 Mt Desert St, Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-4483. Fresh, creative breakfast options like the café monte cristo (a French toast sandwich with eggs, ham, cheddar cheese, and syrup on the side). Very busy in summer. They also serve dinner.

Eden Vegetarian Café 78 West St, Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-4422. A well-loved dinner spot with inventive, international fare and an emphasis on organic, locally-grown produce.

Havana 318 Main St, Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-CUBA. American dining with a Latin sensibility, which translates into lemon and cilantro cured local salmon. Cool modern ambience, sometimes with low-key live music.

Jordan Pond Park Loop Rd, Acadia National Park ☎ 207/276-3316. Light meals, ice cream, and popovers (light, puffy egg muffins). Afternoon tea, a longtime Acadia tradition, is served in the beautiful lakeside garden from 11.30am–5.30pm.

Lompoc Café & Brewpub 36 Rodick St, Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-9392. A healthy Middle Eastern menu for $14–20, with local Bar Harbor Blueberry Ale and other Atlantic Brewing Company beers on draft. Live music every Friday and Saturday night. Open 11.30am–1am.

Mâche Bistro 135 Cottage St, Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-0447. Fantastic, fancypants French bistro fare in a tiny, surprisingly low-key setting. Closed Mondays.

Maggie’s Restaurant 6 Summer Street, Bar Harbor ☎ 207/288-9007. In a little blue house away from downtown, Maggie’s serves locally-fresh, well-composed seafood entrées such as lobster crepes and salmon with cucumber mint salsa. Closed Sundays.

Trenton Bridge Lobster Pound Route 3, Trenton ☎ 207/667-2977. Outstanding lobster on the bridge en-route to Bar Harbor; good steamers, too. BYOB.

Downeast Maine: the coast to Canada

Few travelers venture into the hundred miles of Maine lying east beyond Acadia National Park, mainly because it is unpopulated, windswept, and remote. In summer, though, the weather is no worse than in the rest of Maine, and the coastal drive is exhilarating – it runs next to the Bay of Fundy, home to the highest tides in the nation. Downeast Maine is also marked by its wild blueberry crops – ninety percent of the nation's harvest comes from this corner of the state.

A short way northeast of Acadia, a loop road leads from US-1 to the rocky outcrop of Schoodic Point, which offers good bird-watching, great views, and a splendid sense of solitude. Each village has one or two B&Bs and well-priced restaurants. Machias, almost forty miles further once you rejoin US-1 at Gouldsboro, is quite picturesque, with a little waterfall right in the middle of town. The town was the unlikely scene of the first naval battle of the Revolutionary War, in 1775: the townsfolk commandeered the British schooner Margaretta and proceeded to terrorize all passing British shipping, an attack they planned in the still-standing, gambrel-roofed Burnham Tavern on Rte-192, just off US-1 (mid-June to early Sept Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; $2.50; ☎ 207/255-4432). Perhaps the best place to eat in town is the Artist's Café, 3 Hill St (☎ 207/255-8900), with its moderately priced and frequently changing menu; chicken parmesan and lobster linguini are typical offerings. Meals are also good at the bluesy and fresh Fat Cat Deli, 28 Main St (☎ 207/255-6777). The Riverside Inn, US-1 in East Machias (☎ 207/255-4134; 📧 www.riversideinn-maine.com; 📍), overlooks the Machias River and serves good steak and seafood entrées in their dining room.

West Quoddy Head and around

With a distinctive, candy-striped lighthouse dramatically signaling its endpoint, WEST QUODDY HEAD is the easternmost point of the US, jutting defiantly into the stormy Atlantic. Just beyond the turnoff for Quoddy Head, tiny LUBEC was once home to more than twenty sardine-packing plants. They're all gone now, but the remnants of McCurdy's Fish Company, on Water Street, are enough to evoke visions (and maybe even smells) of more prosperous times. Lubec is also the gateway to Campobello Island, in New Brunswick, Canada, where President Franklin D. Roosevelt summered from 1909 to 1921, and to which he occasionally returned during his presidency. His barn-red cottage (mid-May to mid-Oct daily 9am–5pm; free) is now open to the public, furnished just as the Roosevelts left it. The rest of Roosevelt Campobello International Park (daily sunrise–sunset; free; 📧 www.fdr.net), located on Canadian soil but established jointly with the United States, is good for a couple of hours of wandering – the coastal trails and the drive out to Liberty Point are worth the effort.

The border between the United States and Canada weaves through the center of Passamaquoddy Bay; the towns to either side get on so well that they refused to fight against each other in the War of 1812, and promote themselves jointly to tourists as the Quoddy Loop (📧 www.quoddyloop.com). It's perfectly feasible to take a “two-nation vacation,” but each passage through customs and immigration between Calais (pronounced “callous”) in the States (fifty miles north of Lubec) and St Stephen in Canada does take a little while – and be aware, also, that the towns are in different time zones. The Peacock House, in Lubec, 27 Summer Street (☎ 207/733-2403; 📧 www.peacockhouse.com, 📍–📍) is the best place to stay; it offers friendly B&B accommodations in an atmosphere of casual elegance. Scenic Eastport, some forty miles up the road, has the best eats, particularly at the Eastport Chowderhouse, 167 Water St (☎ 207/853-4451) and La Sardina Loca, 28 Water St (☎ 207/853-2739), which has surprisingly good Mexican food in a wonderfully eclectic interior. Katie's on the Cove (☎ 207/454-3297), a Maine institution north of town on Rte-1, doles out unbelievably good confections from a little canary-yellow house.

Inland and western Maine

The vast expanses of the Maine interior, stretching up into the cold far north, consist mostly of evergreen forests of pine, spruce, and fir, interspersed with the white birches and maples responsible for the spectacular fall colors.

Distances here are large. Once you get away from the two largest cities – Augusta, the state capital, and Bangor – it's roughly two hundred miles by road to the northern border at Fort Kent, while to drive between the two most likely inland bases, Greenville and Rangely, takes three hours or more. Driving (there's no public transportation) through this mountainous scenery can be a great pleasure, but there are few places to stay, and beyond Bangor many roads are tolled access routes belonging to the lumber companies: gravel-surfaced, vulnerable to bad weather, and in any case often not heading anywhere in particular.

This is great territory in which to hike – the Appalachian Trail starts its two thousand-mile course down to Georgia at the top of Mount Katahdin – or raft on the Allagash Wilderness Waterway. Especially around Baxter State Park, the forests are home to deer, beaver, a few bears, some recently introduced caribou – and plenty of moose. These endearingly gawky creatures are virtually blind and tend to be seen at early morning or dusk; you may spot them feeding in shallow water. They can cause major havoc on the roads, particularly at night, and each year significant numbers of drivers (and moose) are killed in collisions.

Augusta

The capital of Maine since 1832, AUGUSTA is much quieter than it was a hundred years ago. The lumber industry here really took off after the technique of making paper from wood was rediscovered in 1844. Augusta also had a lucrative sideline: each winter, hundreds of thousands of tons of ice, cut from the Kennebec River, were shipped out, as far south as the Caribbean, in a trade now all but forgotten by history. There are informative displays on Maine's landscape and industrial past at the lively Maine State Museum, a short way south of the capitol on State Street (Tues–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm; $2; ☎ 207/287-2301).

If you plan to stay in Augusta, the best-value accommodation is the Best Inn, at 65 Whitten Rd, at the Maine Turnpike's Augusta–Winthrop exit (☎ 207/622-3776, 🌐 www.bestinnmaine.com; 📍). Hallowell, two miles south of Augusta, has great eating options. Slates, 167 Water St (☎ 207/622-9575), has a friendly atmosphere and original entrées like shrimp with coconut pie sauce over jasmine rice, while Hattie's Chowder House, 103 Water St (☎ 207/933-2745), has lobster stew so good it gets shipped all over the country.

Bangor

In its prime, BANGOR, 120 miles northeast of Portland, was the undisputed “Lumber Capital of the World.” Every winter its raucous population of “River Drivers” went upstream to brand felled logs, which they then maneuvered down the Penobscot as the thaw came in April, reaching Bangor in time to carouse the summer away in grog shops. Bangor exported ice to the West Indies – and got rum in return. Those days were coming to an end when, in October 1882, Oscar Wilde addressed a large crowd at the new Opera House and spoke diplomatically of “such advancement . . . in so small a city.”

Bangor today is not a place to spend much time, although its plentiful motels and the big Bangor Mall on Hogan Road north of town make it a good last stop before the interior. Its twin claims to fame are that it's the unlikely home of Stephen King, the horror fiction writer (Bett's Bookstore at 584 Hammond St ☎ 207/947-7052 stocks King limited editions and collectibles), and that it possesses what, at 31ft, may well be the largest statue of Paul Bunyan in the world – though it's pretty easy to miss on the way into town.

Practicalities

Bangor is the last sizeable town along I-95, before the interstate finally veers from the coast and heads north up the Penobscot towards Canada. Accommodation possibilities include the Charles Inn, an old, green-brick building with 33 comfortably furnished rooms in an art-strewn space (☎ 207/982-2820; ⑤). Another good option is the Bangor Super 8 Motel, 462 Odlin Rd (☎ 207/945-5681; ④), with free wifi and shuttles to the airport. For the best breakfasts in Bangor, try Bagel Central, 33 Central St (☎ 207/947-1654), the state's only kosher deli. Thistles Restaurant, 175 Exchange St (☎ 207/945-5480), serves grilled swordfish, Maine crab cakes, paella, and the like, for lunch and dinner. Beloved Dysart's (☎ 207/942-9878), a few miles south in Hermon (off I-95), has been a Maine institution for over 35 years. Essentially a 24-hour truck stop, they have a roomy diner with great trucker-style food. The New Moon Café, 49 Park St (☎ 207/990-2233), serves up tasty American food, coffee and espresso, and occasional live music, while the Whig and Courier, 18 Broad St (☎ 207/947-4095), is a pub, with burgers, cheesesteaks, and a wide variety of beers on tap.

Baxter State Park and the far north

Driving through northern Maine can feel as though you're trespassing on the private fiefdoms of the logging companies; only BAXTER STATE PARK is public land. However, you're pretty much free to hike, camp, and explore anywhere you like, so long as you let people know what you're doing. The scenery is more or less the same everywhere, although of course to get the best of it you'll need to leave your car at some point and set off into the backwoods.

About 70 miles from Bangor, MILLINOCKET is a genuine company town, built on a wilderness site by the Great Northern Paper Company in 1899–1900. The hundred-year-old manufacturing facilities still churn out nearly twenty-percent of the newsprint produced in the United States.

Next to Millinocket Lake, ten miles northwest, the splendidly ramshackle old Big Moose Inn (☎ 207/723-8391, ⑩ www.bigmoosecabins.com; ②) makes a great place to stay, with cabins and an inn, and a wide range of activities. There's also an adjacent campground ($10 per person). A more standard place to stay is the clean Gateway Inn, Rte-157 just off I-95 at the Medway exit (☎ 207/746-3193, ⑩ www.medwaygateway.com; ④), many rooms have decks with views of Katahdin. New England Outdoor Center (☎ 1-800/766-7238, ⑩ www.neoc.com) conducts day rafting and canoeing expeditions, as well as “moose safaris” and snowmobile vacations and rentals, according to the season. For food, head over to the Appalachian Trail Café, 210 Penobscot Ave, (☎ 207/723-6720) for a hot meal before heading into the park.

By now you're approaching the southern end of sprawling (200,000 acres) and unspoiled Baxter State Park (☎ 207/723-5140; $12 per car) itself. On a clear day the 5268ft peak of Katahdin (or “greatest mountain,” in the language of the local Penobscot tribe) is visible from afar. The area's chamber of commerce resides in Millinocket at 1029 Central St (☎ 207/723-4443, ⑩ www.katahdinmaine.com); the Baxter State Park Authority is at 64 Balsam Drive (☎ 207/723-5140).

North to Canada

The northernmost tip of Maine is taken up by Aroostook County, which covers an area larger than several individual states. Although its main activity is the large-scale cultivation of potatoes, it is also the location of the Allagash Wilderness Waterway; this is where most of the whitewater rafting companies in this area actually carry out their expeditions.

Britain and the United States all but went to war over Aroostook in 1839; at Fort Kent, the northern terminus of US-1 (which runs all the way from Key West, Florida), the main sight is the solid cedar Fort Kent Blockhouse, built to defend American integrity and looking like a throwback to pioneer days. People come from all around to eat at Eureka Hall (33 miles south, off Rte-161 in Stockholm, ☎207/896-3196), an institution of Aroostook County that serves up homestyle meals and incredible desserts.

Greenville

GREENVILLE, at the southern end of Moosehead Lake, is quite pretty, and quite small, and well positioned for exploring the Maine woods. The main attraction is the restored steamboat Katahdin, which tours the lake and serves as the floating Marine Museum – but watch out ladies, no high heels or smoking on the ship (call for cruise times; $30–35; ☎207/695-2716).

The Chamber of Commerce, just south of town on Rte-6/15 (summer daily 9am–5pm; rest of year Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; ☎207/695-2702, 🌐www.greenville-me.com), has details on accommodation, including the lovely Pleasant Street Inn, on Pleasant St (☎207/695-3400 🌐www.pleasantstinn.com; ⑤), or the almost unbelievably well-appointed Blair Hill Inn, on 351 Lily Bay Road (☎207/695-0224, 🌐www.blairhill.com; ⑨) complete with lavish rooms, fabulous views of the lake, incredible fine dining (lit with original Tiffany lamps), and even an excellent summer concert series. Among local rafting companies, which charge $80–135 for a day in the water, is Wilderness Expeditions (☎1-800/825-WILD), associated with the Birches Resort in North Rockwood (☎207/268-4330), where you can stay in the main lodge (④), a cabin (⑥), or a tent or yurt (②). For food, head to the Rod & Reel (☎207/695-0388) at 77 Pritham Avenue for fresh fish entrées on an outdoor patio, or the Stress Free Moose Pub & Café (☎207/695-3100), at no. 65, for tasty pub grub and good beers on tap.

Moose are indigenous to the area and there is nary a business around here that doesn't somehow incorporate the animal into its name. For several weeks in June, there's even an annual celebration, creatively named MooseMaine (call ☎207/695-2702 for more information). The town is also the largest seaplane base in New England; contact Currier's Flying Service (☎207/695-2778) or Folsom's (☎207/695-2821).

Rangeley

RANGELEY is only just in Maine, a little way east of New Hampshire and an even shorter distance south of the border with Québec. Furthermore, as the sign on Main Street boldly declares, it's equidistant (at 3107.5 miles) from the North Pole and the Equator. That doesn't mean it's on the main road to anywhere, although if you're avoiding the coast altogether you can get here direct from the northern side of the White Mountains (see p.264). It has always been a resort, served in 1900 by two train lines and several steamships (though now you have to get here on your own), with the main attraction then being the fishing in the spectacularly named Mooselookmeguntic Lake.

This small and very cozy one-street town, nestling amid a complex system of lakes and waterways, serves as a base for summer explorations, and in winter as the nearest town to the ski area at Saddleback Mountain. Rangeley also has one unlikely tourist attraction, on Dodge Pond Road, about halfway along the north side of Rangeley Lake, a mile up a side track off Rte-16. The remote Wilhelm Reich Museum (July & Aug Wed–Sun 1–5pm; Sept Sun 1–5pm; $6; ☎ 207/864-3443) is where Wilhelm Reich eventually made his American home after fleeing Germany in 1933. An associate of Sigmund Freud and author of the acclaimed Mass Psychology of Fascism, Reich is best remembered for developing the orgone energy accumulator, which he claimed could concentrate atmospheric energy; skeptical authorities focused on the rather unspecific way in which it was said to collect and harness human sexual energy. He is buried here, amid the neat lawns and darting hummingbirds, and his house remains a museum for the reflection of his work.

Practicalities

The Rangeley Inn, at 343 Main St (☎ 207/864-3341, 🌐 www.rangeleyinn.com; 📍), stands between Rangeley Lake and the smaller bird sanctuary of Haley Pond, so you can stay right in town and have a room that backs onto a scene of utter tranquility; there's also a gorgeous old wooden dining room. North Country Inn B&B, at 2544 Main St (☎ 207/864-2440, 🌐 www.northcountrybb.com; 📍), is a good second choice. For food, try the Red Onion, 2511 Main St (☎ 207/864-5022), which offers steaks, pizza, and some vegetarian options in a casual, friendly setting. The best food in the area is at the Porterhouse Restaurant, in Eustis (take Rte-16E to Rte-27N, it's four miles up on Rte-27N ☎ 207/246-7932). Set in a 1908 farmhouse, they offer exquisitely prepared entrées and an award-winning wine list.

Just south of the Porterhouse, on Eustis Road, is the pretty Cathedral Pines campground ($15–20 per site, ☎ 207/246-3491). Twenty miles north of Rangeley, the peaceful Grant's Kennebec Camps beside Kennebec Lake (☎ 1-800/633-4815) arranges fishing, canoeing, and windsurfing, with accommodation in comfortable cabins, including all meals, costing around $150 per person per day; there are slightly lower weekly rates. Rangeley Lakes' Chamber of Commerce, down by Lakeside Park (☎ 207/864-5364 or 1-800/MT-LAKES, 🌐 www.rangeleymaine.com), has details of various activities, including snowmobiling and dawn moose-watching canoeing expeditions. One really fun thing to do is to take a seaplane trip with the Lake Region Air Service (☎ 207/864-5307) – a fifteen-minute tour, flying low over vast forests and tiny lakes, costs only $35 per person. Boat cruises are also available, and various outfits along Main Street rent out canoes and mountain bikes.

Sugarloaf USA and Kingfield

The road east of Rangeley cuts through prime moose-watching territory – locals call Hwy-16 East “Moose Alley.” After about fifty miles, in the Carrabassett Valley, looms the huge mountain of the Sugarloaf USA ski resort (☎ 1-800/THE-LOAF, 🌐 www.sugarloaf.com). A brilliant place for skiers of all abilities, this condo-studded center would be a more popular destination if it wasn't for the fact that the nearest airport is a two-hour drive away in Portland. In summer, one of the most likely places to spot a gangly moose is behind the check-in building on the resort's approach road. Other summer activities include guided mountain-bike tours with the Sugarloaf Outdoor Center (☎ 207/237-6830) through their extensive trail system.

A good base for Sugarloaf is fifteen miles south in the tiny town of KINGFIELD. The Mountain Village Inn, 164 Main St (☎ 1-866/577-0741; 📍–📍) has welcoming, recently-remodeled rooms and terrific views of Sugarloaf mountain from their sunny dining room; breakfast included. In the center of town, at 246 Main St, the Herbert Grand Hotel (☎ 1-888/656-9922; 📍) has less attractive but functional rooms and a good restaurant. On Rte-142 in Weld, southwest of Kingfield, the Lake Webb House (☎ 207/585-2479; 🍷) offers very affordable accommodations in an old farmhouse with a huge porch; breakfast is included. For food, the groovy Queen Anne's Orange Cat at 329 Main St (☎ 207/265-2860) has fresh wraps, salads, and espresso.

Kingfield was the birthplace of twins Francis and Freelan Stanley, who invented, among other things, the famous Stanley steamer car and the dry-plate photographic process (which they sold to Kodak, amassing a fortune). The Stanley Museum, at 40 School St (May–Oct Tues–Sun 1–4pm; Nov–April Tues–Fri 1–4pm; $4; ☎ 207/265-2729), celebrates their story. Part of the main room is given over to their sister, Chansonetta, a remarkable photographer whose studies of rural and urban workers have been widely published.

The Great Lakes

CHAPTER 4

Highlights

- * Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum, Cleveland, OH From rockabilly to Motown to punk – it's all here inside this striking museum. See p.309
- * The Henry Ford Museum, Detroit, MI Home to such oddities as the car JFK was riding in when he was shot. See p.329
- * Ann Arbor, MI A plethora of bookshops, sidewalk cafés, and cultural activities make this the quintessential college town. See p.333
- * Chicago architecture, IL Superb examples of modern architecture make up the city's distinctive skyline. See p.355
- * Wrigley Field, Chicago, IL Soak in the Old-World ambiance of this ivy-covered ballpark, with a cold beer and a hot dog. See p.363
- * The Mall of America, Bloomington, MN The mall you'll never have to leave: hundreds of stores and an amusement park, plus bars and nightclubs. See p.389
- * Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, MN Canoe, hike, or just marvel at more than one million acres of lakes, rivers, and forest. See p.393

△ Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore

The Great Lakes

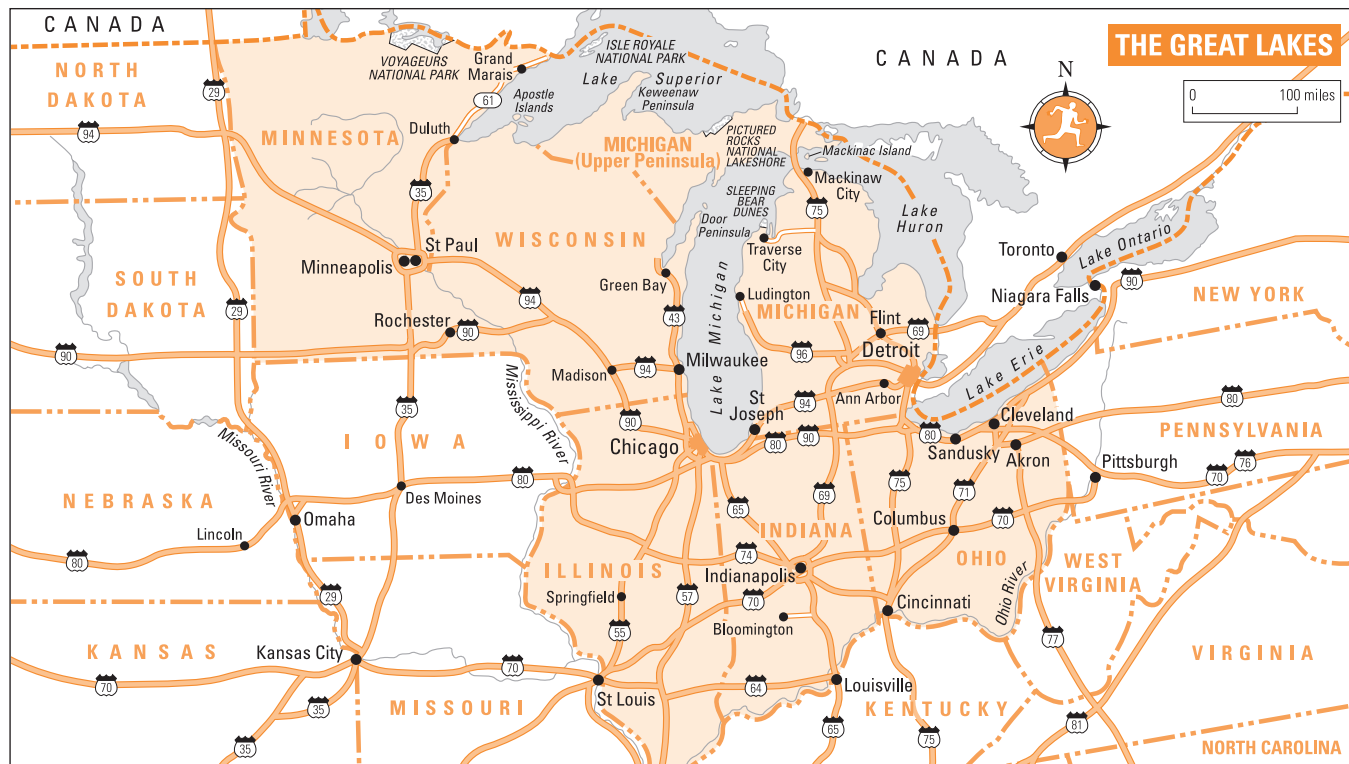

Swepth by tumultuous storms and traversed by fleets of oceangoing tankers, the interconnected Great Lakes form the largest body of fresh water in the world; Lake Superior alone is more than three hundred miles from east to west. Left untouched, the shores of these inland seas can rival any coastline: Superior and the northern reaches of Lake Michigan offer stunning rocky peninsulas, craggy cliffs, tree-covered islands, mammoth dunes, and deserted beaches. However, for lengthy stretches along Lake Erie, and the bottom lips of lakes Michigan and Huron, sluggish waters lap against large cities and decaying ports.

To varying degrees, the principal states that line the American side of the lakes – Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota – share this mixture of natural beauty and aging industry. Cities such as Chicago and Detroit, for all their pros and cons, do not characterize the entire region, although the former’s magnificent architecture, museums, music, and restaurants make it an unmissable destination. Within the first hundred miles or so of the lakeshores, especially in Wisconsin and Minnesota, tens of thousands of smaller lakes and tumbling streams are scattered through a luxuriant rural wilderness; beyond that, you are soon in the heart of the Corn Belt, where you can drive for hours and encounter nothing more than a succession of crossroads communities, grain silos, and giant barns. (Garrison Keillor’s wry stories about the fictional backwater town of Lake Wobegon – where “all the women are strong and all the men are beautiful” – set in Minnesota, carry more than a ring of truth.)

Some history

The first foreigner to reach the Great Lakes, the French explorer Champlain, found the region in 1603 inhabited mostly by tribes of Huron, Iroquois, and Algonquin. France soon established a network of military forts, Jesuit missions, and fur-trading posts here, which entailed treating the native people as allies rather than subjects. Territorial disputes with their colonial rivals, however, culminated in the French and Indian War with Britain from 1754 to 1761. The victorious British felt under no constraints to deal equitably with the Native Americans, and things grew worse with large-scale American settlement after independence. The Black Hawk War of 1832 put a bloody end to traditional Native American life.

Settlers from the east were followed to Wisconsin and Minnesota by waves of Scandinavians and Germans, while the lower halves of Illinois and Indiana attracted Southerners, who attempted to maintain slavery here and resisted Union conscription during the Civil War. These areas still have more in common with neighboring Kentucky and Tennessee than with the industrial cities of their own states.

Great Lakes' climate

During the summer, breezes coming off the Great Lakes keep the temperature down to a comfortable average of 70°F, though heatwaves can push temperatures over 100°F. Even in spring and fall, freezing occurs in the northern reaches of the region, where winter readings of -50°F are not uncommon, and parts of the lakes are frozen solid.

The impetus given to industry by the Civil War was encouraged by abundant supplies of ores and fuel, as well as efficient transportation by water and rail. As lakeshore cities like Chicago, Detroit, and Cleveland grew, their populations swelled with hundreds of thousands of poor blacks who migrated from the Deep South in search of jobs. But a lack of planning, inadequate housing, and mass layoffs at times of low demand bred conditions that led to the riots of the late 1960s and continuing inner-city deprivation. Depression in the 1970s ravaged the economy – especially the automobile industry, on which so much else depended – and brought to the area the unwanted title of “Rust Belt.” Since then, urban centers have battled back, with Cleveland, Ohio, perhaps the most dramatic example of a turnaround in fortunes.

Ohio

OHIO, the easternmost of the Great Lakes states, lies to the south of shallow Lake Erie. This is one of the nation's most industrialized regions, but the industry is largely concentrated in the east, near the Ohio River; to the south the landscape becomes less populated and more forested. Ohio also has the world's largest Amish population, who farm in the northeast and west into mid-Indiana but are much less of a tourist attraction than the Pennsylvania Dutch (see p.171).

Enigmatic traces of Ohio's earliest inhabitants exist at the Great Serpent Mound, a grassy state park sixty miles east of Cincinnati, where a cleared hilltop high above a river was reshaped to look like a giant snake swallowing an egg, possibly by the Adena Indians around 800 BC. When the French claimed the area in 1699, it was inhabited by the Iroquois, in whose language Ohio means “something great.” In the eighteenth century, the territory's prime position between Lake Erie and the Ohio River made it the subject of fierce contention between the French and British. Once the British had acquired control of most French land east of the Mississippi, settlers from New England began to establish communities along both the Ohio River and the Iroquois War Trail paths on the shores of the lake.

During the Civil War, Ohio was at the forefront of the struggle, producing two great Union generals, Ulysses Grant and William Tecumseh Sherman, and sending more than twice its quota of volunteers to fight for the North. Its progress thereafter has followed the classic “Rust Belt” pattern: rapid industrialization, aided by its natural resources and crucial location, which during the 1970s foundered alarmingly and has only recently begun to revitalize.

Although the state is dominated by its triumvirate of “C” towns (Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati), its most visited destinations are the Lake Erie Islands, which have benefited from the recent cleanup of the polluted lake and now attract thousands of partying mainlanders. Cincinnati and Cleveland have both undergone major face-lifts and are surprisingly attractive, as is the comparatively unassuming state capital of Columbus.

Getting around Ohio

Amtrak trains between New York or Washington and Chicago stop at either Cincinnati or Cleveland and Toledo. Ohio is well served by Greyhound buses, and there are major airports at Cleveland and Cincinnati. I-71 is the major interstate linking Cincinnati, Columbus, and Cleveland, while I-70 bisects the state from west to east, passing through Columbus as well. A 325-mile biking trail, following former railroad and canal routes, is also under development; when finished, it will link the three “C” towns.

Cleveland and around

Today, the great industrial port of CLEVELAND – for so long the butt of jokes after the heavily polluted Cuyahoga River caught fire in the early 1970s – is no longer the “Mistake on the Lake.” Although the path back from acute recession is by no means complete on a citywide basis, areas like downtown, the Flats and University Circle are now hubs of energy. Cleveland boasts a sensitive restoration of the Lake Erie/Cuyahoga River waterfront, a superb constellation of museums, glittering city-center malls, and new downtown super-stadiums. Add to that the recent arrival of several major corporate headquarters and classy hotels – as well as the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, of course – and there’s an unmistakable buzz about the place.

Founded in 1796, thirty years later Cleveland profited greatly from the opening of the Ohio Canal between the Ohio River and Lake Erie. During the city’s heyday, which began with the Civil War and lasted until the 1920s, its vast iron and coal supplies made it one of the most important steel and shipbuilding centers in the world. John D. Rockefeller made his billions here, as did the many others whose restored old mansions line “Millionaires’ Row.”

South and west of the city are several spots of interest, including the quaint lake-shore community of Vermilion, the tiny liberal college sanctuary of Oberlin, and the charming hamlet of Peninsula.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Cleveland Hopkins International Airport is ten miles southwest of downtown. The twenty-minute taxi ride into town costs around $20, but the Regional Transit Authority (RTA; ☎ 216/621-9500, www.gcrtta.org) train is only $1.75 and takes just ten minutes longer. Greyhound arrives at 1465 Chester Ave, at the back of Playhouse Square, while the Amtrak station is on the lakefront at 200 Cleveland Memorial Shoreway NE.

Maps and information can be had in advance from the Cleveland CVB (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/321-1001, www.travelcleveland.com). The handiest visitor centers are in the lobby of the Terminal Tower in Public Square (Mon–Fri 10am–7pm, Sun noon–6pm; ☎ 216/621-7981) and on the baggage level of the airport (hours vary).

Cleveland is generally safe, though its size makes getting around easiest by car. The RTA runs an efficient bus service ($1.75 one-way or $3.50 for an unlimited day-pass) and a small train line ($1.75), known locally as “the Rapids,” until about 12.30am. A light rail system – the Waterfront Line – connects Terminal Tower, the Flats, the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and other downtown sights; it costs $1.75 and runs every fifteen minutes between 6.15am and midnight.

City tours, run by Trolley Tours of Cleveland, leave from the Powerhouse on the west bank of the Flats and cover all major sights within a five-mile radius, including University Circle (May–Oct daily; Nov–April Fri & Sat; $10 for 1hr, $15 for 2hr, reservations required; ☎ 216/771-4484 or 1-800/848-0173, @ www.lollytrolley.com).

Accommodation

Travelers without cars in Cleveland tend to stay at the downtown hotels, which include some reasonable deals – most offer packages that include admission to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame or other attractions. B&Bs can be booked through @ www.travelcleveland.com or @ www.bedandbreakfast.com/cleveland.

Cleveland Marriott Downtown at Key Center 127 Public Square ☎ 216/696-9200 or 1-800/228-9290, @ www.clevelandmarriottdowntown.com. Probably the best value of the downtown upscale hotels, the Marriott is clean, bright, and close to the action. ⑤

Comfort Inn Downtown 1800 Euclid Ave ☎ 216/861-0001, @ www.comfortinn.com. This chain hotel is on the edge of downtown, a fair walk from most bars and restaurants. ④

Embassy Suites Hotel 1701 E 12th St ☎ 216/523-8000 or 1-800/362-2779, @ www.clevelanddowntownembassysuites.com. Downtown hotel with spacious rooms near Playhouse Square – look for special deals online. ⑥

Glidden House 1901 Ford Drive ☎ 216/231-8900 or 1-800/759-8358, @ www.gliddenhouse.com.

Sixty rooms are housed in a Gothic mansion situated in University Circle. Large continental breakfast is included. ③

Holiday Inn Select City Center Lakeshore 1111 Lakeside Ave ☎ 216/241-5100 or 1-888/425-3835, @ www.holiday-inn.com. Has great lake views and is near the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. ④

Intercontinental Suites 8800 Euclid Ave, University Circle ☎ 216/707-4300 or 1-877/707-8999, @ www.cleveland.intercontinental.com. This luxury hotel is convenient to Little Italy and Coventry Village. Ask about weekend discounts. ⑥

Wyndham Hotel 1260 Euclid Ave ☎ 216/615-7500 or 1-800/996-3426, @ www.wyndham.com. The best luxury option in the downtown theater district, Playhouse Square. ⑥

The City

The main streets in Cleveland lead to the stately nineteenth-century Beaux Arts Public Square, at the very center of downtown, and dominated in its southwestern corner by the landmark Terminal Tower. Ontario Street, which runs north–south through the Square, divides the city into east and west. Cleveland’s most interesting areas are at two opposite ends of the spectrum: the industrial romance of the Flats in the northwest, and the cultural institutions of University Circle, east of the river.

Downtown and around

Downtown Cleveland is once again a bustling place, and its recent redevelopment has seen the emergence of several distinct subsections. In its traditional heart, among the banks and corporate headquarters, stand a couple of glamorous shopping malls. One, the Avenue at Tower City, is located in the Terminal Tower. Another, the Arcade, is a skylit hall built in 1890. Twelve blocks away, at 1501 Euclid Ave, the Playhouse Square Center (see p.312) is an impressive complex of four renovated old theaters; the small Ohio Theater, with its gorgeous starlit-sky lobby ceiling, is worth a look.

Just to the southwest is the Gateway District, where new restaurants and bars surround Jacobs Field stadium, home of the Indians base-

A & B

Lake Erie

E
F
D
A

C
B
G

✈

Rock and Roll Hall of Fame

Cleveland

Am

Cleveland
Convention Center

Greyhound

Playhouse Square Center 20

Gund

Jacobs Field

THE FLATS—
WEST BANK

OHIO CITY

0 800 yds

University Circle (4 miles)

West of The Q, at the riverfront, one of the nation's busiest waterways shares space with excellent bars, clubs, and restaurants, all strung out along a boardwalk. On the west bank of the Cuyahoga River, the Flats, long known for its nightlife, has an atmospheric, industrial setting. Magnificent grimy old buildings, warehouses, and slag heaps, set among fourteen bridges, appear powerful and romantic rather than depressing, a proud testimony to Cleveland's manufacturing history.

A short but steep walk uphill from the Flats leads to the Historic Warehouse District, a nicely developing stretch of nineteenth-century commercial buildings between West Third and West Ninth streets, given over to shops, galleries, cafés, and trendy new restaurants. North of here, on the other side of the busy Cleveland Memorial Shoreway (Hwy-2), the waters of Lake Erie lap gently into

The Rock and Roll Hall of Fame

Cleveland, not the most obvious candidate, convincingly won a hotly contested bid to host the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame largely because Alan Freed, a local disc jockey, popularized the phrase "rock and roll" here back in 1951. Since then, Cleveland has hardly produced a roll call of rock icons – Joe Walsh, Pere Ubu, and Nine Inch Nails are about the biggest names. Ignoring criticism that it won out simply because it stumped up most cash, the city embraced the idea of the museum with enthusiasm and few now argue that it was not the correct choice.

The idea for a definitive rock museum was first floated in 1983, with the establishment of the Rock Hall of Fame Foundation to honor all those who have made "an exceptional contribution to modern music." The inductees are selected annually by an international panel of rock "experts," but only those performers who have released a record 25 years prior to their nomination are eligible.

The museum's octogenarian architect – I.M. Pei – wanted the building "to echo the energy of rock and roll." One of Pei's trademark tinted-glass pyramids (a smaller version of the one he did at the Louvre), this white concrete, steel, and glass structure strikes a bold pose on the shore of Lake Erie, especially when illuminated at night. The base of the pyramid extends into an impressive entrance plaza shaped like a turntable, complete with a stylus arm attachment.

The museum is much more than an array of mementos and artifacts. Right from the start, with the excellent twelve-minute films Mystery Train and Kick Out the Jams, the emphasis is on the contextualization of rock. The exhibits chart the art form's evolution and progress, acknowledging influences ranging from the blues singers of the Delta to the hillbilly wailers of the Appalachians. Elsewhere in the subterranean main exhibition hall, there's an in-depth look at seven crucial rock genres through the cities that spawned them: rockabilly (Memphis), R&B (New Orleans), Motown (Detroit), psychedelia (San Francisco), punk (London and New York), hip-hop (New York), and grunge (Seattle). Much space is taken up by exhibits on what the museum sees as key artists of all time, including Elvis Presley, the Beatles, Jimi Hendrix, the Rolling Stones, and U2.

Above ground, at entry level, Pei's airy structure feels like a modern art gallery. Several East German Trabant cars, which U2 used during their Zooropa tour, are suspended from the ceiling, while giant guitars give a more direct musical impression. Escalators lead to a level devoted to Freed, studio techniques, and a great archive of rare live recordings, which you can listen to on headphones. The third floor houses the Hall of Fame itself, where an hourly video presentation of all inductees unfolds on three vast screens; the upper stories contain the museum's temporary exhibitions.

The museum is at North Coast Harbor (daily 10am–5.30pm, Wed also until 9pm; summer Sat until 9pm; $20; reservations ☎ 216/781-7625 or 1-800/493-7655, 🌐 www.rockhall.com). As weekends get very crowded, it's much better to go on a weekday. Alternatively, you can plan a visit to coincide with the extensive series of seminars and workshops that feature Hall of Fame inductees and leading rock writers.

△ Rock and Roll Hall of Fame

North Coast Harbor, a showpiece of Midwest regeneration. To see the city from the water, try a two-hour cruise on the Goodtime III ($15; ☎ 216/861-5110) from the dock at East Ninth Street Pier, just beyond the I.M. Pei-designed Rock and Roll Hall of Fame (see box, p.309). Next door to the Rock Hall – as Clevelanders refer to it – is the giant Great Lakes Science Center (daily 9.30am–5.30pm; $8.95, $12.95 OMNIMAX combo-ticket; ☎ 216/696-4941, 🌐 www.greatscience.com), one of America's largest interactive science museums, which cleverly outlines the interdependency of science, technology and the environment, with emphasis on the lakes region. Across the road, the futuristic, 72,000-seat Cleveland Stadium is the home of the Browns pro football team (☎ 440/891-5000, 🌐 www.clevelandbrowns.com).

To the west of the river, Ohio City is one of Cleveland's more hip neighborhoods, with junk stores, Victorian clapboard houses, and the busy West Side Market at Lorain Ave and West 25th St (Mon & Wed 7am–4pm, Fri & Sat 7am–6pm), selling all manner of ethnic foods. It's easily spotted by its redbrick Victorian clock tower.

Out from downtown

Four miles east of downtown, University Circle is a cluster of more than seventy cultural and medical institutions, and is also home to several major performing arts companies (see p.312) as well as Frank Gehry's twisted-steel Weatherhead School of Management building at Case Western University. The eclectic Museum of Art, fronted by a lagoon at 11150 East Blvd (Tues, Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm, Wed & Fri 10am–9pm; free; ☎ 216/421-7340, 🌐 www.clevelandart.org) and currently undergoing major expansion, has a collection that ranges from Renaissance armor to African art, with a good café. Also notable is the Museum of Natural History, Wade Oval (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; summer Tues–Thurs until 7pm; Sept–May Wed until 10pm; $7.50, planetarium $4; ☎ 1-800/317-9155, 🌐 www.cmnh.org), with exhibits on dinosaurs and Native American culture. The Cleveland Botanical Garden, 11030

East Blvd (daily 10am–5pm; $7.50; ☎ 1-888/853-7091, 🌐 www.cbgbgarden.org), has a glasshouse that features a cloud forest, a desert ecosystem, free-roaming chameleons and butterflies, a waterfall, and a treetop walkway. Meanwhile, dotted along East and Martin Luther King Jr boulevards in Rockefeller Park, twenty-four small landscaped cultural gardens are dedicated to and tended by Cleveland's diverse ethnic groups, including Croatians, Estonians, and Finns. Adjacent to University Circle, Murray Hill is Cleveland's Little Italy; beyond this attractive area of brick streets, small delis, and galleries is the trendy neighborhood of Coventry Village.

Five miles southwest of downtown via I-71 (exit at W 25th or Fulton Rd), the Cleveland Metroparks Zoo, 3900 Wildlife Way (summer Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–7pm; rest of year daily 10am–5pm; rainforest also open Wed until 8pm; $9; ☎ 216/661-6500, 🌐 www.clemet zoo.com), features a “Wolf Wilderness,” while the spectacular 164-acre rainforest building is populated by some seven thousand plants and 118 species of animals, including orangutans, American crocodiles, and Madagascan hissing cockroaches. During summer, the RTA runs special buses from downtown to the zoo.

Eating

The city has a range of culinary delights, many of them ethnic. The West Side Market in Ohio City is one of the best places for cheap and unusual picnic food, and there are some excellent fine-dining restaurants downtown. Little Italy and Coventry Village are worth exploring for authentic Italian food and coffee bars, respectively. The Arabica chain also serves up good-quality espresso at several locations around the city; there's one in University Circle at 11300 Juniper Rd (☎ 216/791-0300).

The Blue Point Grille 700 W St Clair Ave
☎ 216/875-7827. Serves the best seafood in town, with specials such as Nagshead grouper with lobster mashed potatoes.

Castaldi's Market & Grille 230 W Huron Rd
☎ 216/241-2232. Homemade pasta and other Italian dishes that, on weekends, are served by singing waiters.

 Cleveland Chophouse and Brewery 824 W St Clair ☎ 216/623-0909. Try the mashed potatoes at this spacious, casual brewery and steakhouse – they're fantastic.

Flat Iron Café 1114 Center St ☎ 216/696-6968. Landmark Irish-American tavern on the east (downtown) bank of the Flats, serving up good sandwiches, salads, and desserts, plus a smooth pint of Guinness.

Hornblower's Barge & Grille 1151 N Marginal Rd
☎ 216/363-1151. Good-value pasta, sandwiches, and seafood are offered in a fine location overlooking Lake Erie, just a short stroll from the Rock Hall.

Mama Santa 12305 Mayfield Rd ☎ 216/231-9567. In Little Italy, unpretentious and inexpensive Southern Italian home-cooking.

Nate's Deli & Restaurant 1923 W 25th St
☎ 216/696-7529. This Middle Eastern café serves great gyros and plenty of vegetarian dishes. The hummus, in particular, has quite a reputation. Open only during the day.

Shooters on the Water 1148 Main St
☎ 216/861-6900. You can watch ships coming and going on the Cuyahoga while eating seafood and other classic American food.

Tommy's 1824 Coventry Rd ☎ 216/321-7757. Great-value food, much of it Middle Eastern vegetarian, is dished up in a trendy, bright setting in lively Coventry Village. Try the famous shakes and check out the adjoining used-book store.

Nightlife and entertainment

The Flats area boasts the greatest conglomeration of drinking, live music, and dancing venues, although they tend to be cheesier than their counterparts in the Warehouse District and the more bohemian Ohio City across the river. Under five miles east, both University Circle and youthful Coventry Village have good bars. Cleveland's rave scene remains strong and mostly underground; if you're interested, look for flyers at Record Revolution 1832 Coventry Rd (Ⓣ 216/321-7661).

For more refined entertainment, the Playhouse Square Center (Ⓣ 216/241-6000, Ⓜ www.playhousesquare.com) is home to the Cleveland Opera and Ballet, as well as drama events like the Great Lakes Theatre Festival and concerts. The well-respected Cleveland Orchestra (Ⓣ 216/231-1111, Ⓜ www.clevelandorchestra.com) is based in University Circle at Severance Hall, 11001 Euclid Ave, close to the leading regional theater of the Cleveland Play House (Ⓣ 216/795-7000, Ⓜ www.clevelandplayhouse.com). For listings information, try one of Cleveland's two free weeklies: the well-written Free Times covers all of the arts, while Scene concentrates mostly on music.

Beachland Ballroom 15711 Waterloo Rd
Ⓣ 216/383-1124, Ⓜ www.beachlandballroom.com. Over ten miles east of downtown, but this buzzing venue often draws the cream of indie and rock bands.

Great Lakes Brewing Co. 2516 Market St, Ohio City Ⓣ 216/771-4404. At this famous old joint, Cleveland's best brewpub, the huge mahogany bar still bears the bullet holes made during a 1920s shootout involving lawman Elliot Ness.

Grog Shop 2785 Euclid Heights Blvd, Cleveland

Heights Ⓣ 216/321-5588. Near Coventry Village, the Grog Shop is a fun, sweaty collegiate punk and alternative venue.

Harbor Inn 1219 Main Ave Ⓣ 216/241-3232.

A great old-fashioned bar amid the hyped chain outfits of the Flats, one with 180 beers, a few video games, and lots of character.

Mercury Lounge 1392 W 6th St Ⓣ 216/566-8840. In the Warehouse District, this hip martini lounge tends to attract Cleveland's fashionable set.

Around Cleveland

Less than an hour outside the city are several small towns and sights well worth exploring. VERMILION, beyond the western suburbs of Cleveland, is also known as Harbor Town, for its attractive lakeside area, which has thrived since 1837. Today it's a quaint old hamlet lined with clapboard houses, cedar trees, and tidy gardens. Old-style galleries and shops hug the small downtown, a stone's throw from the dockside. The Inland Seas Maritime Museum, 480 Main St (daily 10am–5pm; $6; Ⓣ 1-800/893-1485, Ⓜ www.inlandseas.org), does a worthy job of exploring shipping on the Great Lakes, spanning from the late seventeenth century to the wreckage of the Edmund Fitzgerald freighter almost three hundred years later. Vermilion's Chamber of Commerce is at 5495 Liberty Ave (summer Mon–Fri 10am–4pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 10am–3pm, closed Wed; Ⓣ 440/967-4477, Ⓜ www.vermilionohio.com). The best place to stay in town is the comfortable Motel Plaza, 4645 Liberty Ave (Ⓣ 440/967-3191; Ⓢ).

Some twenty miles southeast of Vermilion, the famously liberal college town of OBERLIN clusters around the green acres of Tappan Square. Founded in 1834, Oberlin College, on the square's north and east sides, was America's first co-ed university, and one of the first to enroll black students. From the start, it played a pivotal role in facilitating the movement of black slaves from the Deep South to Canada via the Underground Railroad. A sculpture of railroad tracks emerging from the earth, opposite the Conservatory of Music on South Professor Street, is one of several such commemorative sights detailed in a fascinating walking tour leaflet available from the Chamber of Commerce, inside the Oberlin Inn at 7 N Main St, suite 117 (Mon–Thurs 10am–3pm, Fri 9am–noon; Ⓣ 440/774-6262, Ⓜ www.oberlin.org). Also of interest is the Allen Memorial Art Museum, 87 N Main St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; Ⓜ www.oberlin.edu/allenart). Recognized as one of the best college art museums in the US, it holds more than fourteen thousand objects, from ancient African icons to Japanese scroll paintings, plus a fine array of contemporary art. As for accommodation, try the pleasant Oberlin Inn, 7 N Main St (☎440/775-1111 or 1-800/376-4173, 🌐www.oberlininn.com; 📍). Oberlin also boasts half a dozen hip coffeehouses and bars.

Twenty miles south of Cleveland off US-77, the village of PENINSULA is nestled in the heart of the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area, where the Ohio & Erie Canal Towpath's hiking and biking trail follows the meandering Cuyahoga River for twenty miles. You can rent a bike in town at Century Cycles, 1621 Main St ($7 per hour; ☎330/657-2209). A few miles south of town off Riverview Road, the sprawling Hale Farm and Village (summer Tues–Sat 11am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $14.50; ☎1-877/425-3327, 🌐www.wrhs.org) brings to life the fictional 1848 Ohio township of Wheatfield, complete with good-natured role-playing townsfolk and artisans who demonstrate skills like brick-making and glass-blowing. The best place to stay in the area is HI-Stanford House, 6093 Stanford Rd (☎330/467-8711), a hostel in a lovely old farmhouse where a bed costs $15–18 per night.

A few miles farther south in AKRON (home of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., as well as quirky '70s band Devo), visitors can tour Goodyear co-founder F.A. Seiberling's palatial Stan Hywet Hall and Gardens, 714 N Portage Path (April–Dec daily 10am–4.30pm, gardens 9am–6pm; $12, gardens only $6; ☎330/836-5533, 🌐www.stanhywet.org), a magnificent 65-room Tudor Revival country house finished in 1915, with secret passageways, hand-carved wood paneling, and an indoor swimming pool.

Sixty miles south of Akron, the world's largest Amish community resides in HOLMES COUNTY, a meandering section of hills, farms, and backroads. Berlin is the commercial center of Amish country, a somewhat saccharine arts-and-crafts center. A good dose of Amish simplicity is better found in the surrounding countryside: at Yoder's Amish Home, between the towns of Walnut Creek and Trail on Rte-515 (mid-April–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; $8; ☎330/893-2541, 🌐www.yodersamishhome.com), visitors can tour two Amish homes and a barn, and ride in a horse-drawn carriage.

The Lake Erie Islands

The LAKE ERIE ISLANDS – Kelleys Island and the three Bass Islands further north – were early stepping stones for the Iroquois on the route to what is now Ontario. French attempts to claim the islands in the 1640s met with considerable hostility, and they were left more or less in peace until 1813, when in the Battle of Lake Erie, fought off South Bass Island, the Americans established their control over the Great Lakes by destroying the entire English fleet.

The islands first tasted prosperity in the 1860s, when a boom in wine production meant that nearly every available acre was planted with grapes. Tourism arrived almost simultaneously, as steamboats brought wealthy visitors to spend their summers here in grand hotels. However, the economy was hit hard by Prohibition and the emergence of the California wineries, as well as by the advent of the automobile. In the 1970s, Lake Erie's appalling pollution was the final straw that led to a huge cleanup of the lake and islands. The plan worked; today the islands are again a popular summer destination, with fishing, swimming, and partying the main attractions. Various mainland towns off of Rte-2, such as Sandusky and Port Clinton, act primarily as jump-off points for the islands.

The mainland

The large coal-shipping port of SANDUSKY, fifty miles west of Cleveland on US-2, is probably the most visited of the lakeshore towns, thanks to Cedar Point Amusement Park, five miles southeast of town (early May–Labor day daily, mid-Sep to late Oct hours vary; $39.95, after 4/5pm $24.95; ☎419/627-2350, 🌐www.cedarpoint.com). The largest ride park in the nation – and considered by many to be the best in the world – Cedar Point boasts no less than sixteen roller coasters. The neighboring Soak City water park (June–Aug daily 10am–9pm; $28, after 4/5pm $15.95) provides a good way to cool off, with eighteen acres of water slides and a wave pool.

The smaller resort town of PORT CLINTON, twelve miles west across the Sandusky Bay Bridge, is another departure point for the islands. Its pleasant lake-front is dotted with decent cafés and jet-ski rental outlets. Try not to leave the area without exploring the rest of the peninsula, which has some glorious views, particularly around little Marblehead, fourteen miles east of Port Clinton.

Eight miles south of Sandusky, tiny MILAN (pronounced “MY-lan”) boasts a pleasant, leafy village square and many well-preserved Greek Revival-style homes. Its most famous building is the two-story brick Thomas Edison Birthplace, 9 Edison Drive (summer Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; April, May, Sept & Oct Tues–Sun 1–5pm; Nov–March Wed–Sun 1–4pm; $5; ☎419/499-2135, 🌐www.tomedison.org), with guided tours and an adjacent museum dedicated to the inventor of the light bulb.

Practicalities

Amtrak trains pass through Sandusky once daily en route between Chicago and the east coast. The station, at North Depot and Hayes avenues, is in a dodgy area, and is unstaffed. Greyhound buses stop way out at 6513 Milan Rd (US-250). Sandusky’s visitor center is at 4424 Milan Rd (summer Mon–Fri 8am–8pm, Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 10am–4pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.30pm; ☎419/625-2984 or 1-800/255-3743, 🌐www.sanduskycounty.org).

Accommodation prices in Sandusky shoot up in high season, with simple motel rooms costing $200-plus on peak weekends. Along the main drag of Cleveland Road (US-6), the Best Western Cedar Point, no. 1530 (☎419/625-9234, 🌐www.bestwestern.com; 📍), has a pool. Camping is available at the Bayshore Estates, 2311 Cleveland Rd (☎419/625-7906 or ☎1-800/962-3786, 🌐www.mhdcorp.com; from $21.95), and at the Milan Travel Park, just off US-80 at 11404 US-250 N (☎419/499-4627, 🌐www.staycolonial.com; $22), which has a pool. Also in Milan, the Colonial Inn South, 11211 US-250 (☎419/499-3403 or 1-800/886-9010; ②), is a nice family-owned motel, while Port Clinton has the Sunnyside Tower, 3612 NW Catawba Rd (☎419/797-9315 or 1-888/831-1263, 🌐www.sunnysidetower.com ⑤), a Victorian-style B&B. For a good meal and live music in fun surroundings (there's an on-site waterfall), head for Margaritaville in Sandusky, at the junction of highways 6 and 2 (☎419/627-8903).

Getting to the Islands

Ferries to Kelleys Island are operated by Kelleys Island Ferry Boat Line from Main St in Marblehead year round, when weather permits, as frequently as every half hour at peak times ($13 roundtrip, bikes $6 extra; ☎419/798-9763, 🌐www.kelleysislandferry.com). Jet Express runs summer catamaran services from their dock at 101 West Shoreline Dr, Sandusky (☎1-800/245-1538, 🌐www.jet-express.com) to Kelleys Island ($24 roundtrip) and South Bass Island ($32 roundtrip), and to the latter only from 5 N Jefferson St, Port Clinton ($24 roundtrip). South Bass Island is also served by Miller Ferry ($12 roundtrip, bicycle $4; ☎1-800/500-2421, 🌐www.millerferry.com) from late March to late November. Flights to both Kelleys Island and South Bass Island leave daily from Sandusky and cost $40 one way. Contact Griffing Airlines (☎419/626-5161).

Kelleys Island

About nine miles north of Sandusky, KELLEYS ISLAND (🌐www.kelleysisland.com) lies in the western basin of Lake Erie. Seven miles across at its widest, it's the largest American island on the lake, but it's also one of the most peaceful and picturesque, home to just 175 permanent residents. The whole island – green, sleepy, and with few buildings less than a century old – is a National Historic District. Its seventy-plus archeological sites include Inscription Rock, a limestone slab carved with 400 year-old pictographs; you can find it east of the dock on the southern shore. The Glacial Grooves State Memorial, on the west shore, is a 400-foot trough of solid limestone, scoured with deep ridges by the glacier that carved out the Great Lakes.

Settled in the 1830s, Kelleys was initially a working island, its economy based on lumber, then wine, and later limestone quarrying. All but the last have collapsed, though a steady tourist industry has developed.

Practicalities

The Kelleys Island Chamber of Commerce is on Division Street, straight up from the dock (summer daily 10am–5pm; ☎419/746-2360, 🌐www.kelleysislandchamber.com). Getting around the island is easy; cars are heavily discouraged and most people, when not strolling, use bikes ($3.50 per hour/$15 per day) or golf carts ($15 per hour/$80 per day), available from Caddy Shack Square, also on Division St (☎419/746-2221). One comfortable accommodation option is The Inn on Kelleys Island, 317 W Lakeshore Drive (☎1-866/878-2135, 🌐www.aves.net/the-inn; ④), a restored nineteenth-century Victorian home with a great lake view and a private beach; or ask at the Chamber of Commerce. You can camp for $16 at the first-come, first-served state park on the north bay near the beach. The jovial Village Pump, 103 W Lakeshore Drive (☎419/746-2281), serves good homestyle food and drink until 2am, while the menu at the Kelleys Island Brewery, 504 W Lakeshore Drive (☎419/746-2314), includes several choices for vegetarians.

South Bass Island

SOUTH BASS ISLAND is the largest and southernmost of the Bass Island chain, three miles from the mainland northwest of Kelleys Island; the islands are named for the excellent bass fishing in the surrounding waters. Also referred to as Put-in-Bay (the name of its one and only village), this is the most visited of the American Lake Erie Islands, with its permanent population of 450 swelling to ten times that in summer.

Just a year after its first white settlers arrived, British troops invaded the island during the War of 1812. The Battle of Lake Erie, which took place off the island's southeastern edge, is commemorated by Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial, set in a 25-acre park where the island dramatically nips in at the waist. You can see the battle site, ten miles away, from an observation deck near the top of the 352ft stone Doric column (May–Oct daily 10am–7pm; $3). All this history is well documented at the Lake Erie Islands Historical Society, 441 Catawba Ave (May–Oct daily 10am–6pm; $1; ☎419/285-2804, 🌐www.leihs.org), which features dozens of model ships, exhibits on the shipping and fishing industries, and memorabilia of life on the islands.

After the war, with the lake safe from Canadian invasion, South Bass Island grew both as a port and as a tourist destination. In fact, during the 1890s its Victory Hotel was one of the largest hotels in the world. Wine was also big business, though only one of its twenty-six vineyards survived Prohibition, by producing grape juice.

Practicalities

Put-in-Bay's visitor center is downtown in Harbor Square, just next to the northern dock (summer daily 9am–6pm; rest of year hours vary; ☎ 419/285-2832, 🌐 www.put-in-bay.com). To get around, as on Kelleys Island, most people rent either golf carts from Baycarts Rental, Harbor Square ($10–20 per hour; ☎ 419/285-5785), or bikes from Island Bike Rental, at both docks ($9 per day; ☎ 419/285-2016). A shuttle bus ($1) runs between the northern dock and the state park.

Hotel rooms are heavily booked on weekends and during the summer, and B&Bs often require a two-night minimum stay on weekends. The Stagger Inn B&B, 182 Concord Ave (☎ 419/285-2521, 🌐 www.staggerinn.put-in-bay.com; 📍), and the Commodore Motel, 272 Delaware Ave (☎ 419/285-3101; 📍), which has a pool, offer some of the most competitive rates. You can camp for $16 in the state park or at the Fox's Den Campground on the southern shore ($28 for one or two; ☎ 419/285-5001).

Food on the island is expensive everywhere. The grill meals and seafood sandwiches at The Boardwalk (summer only; ☎ 419/285-3695) are no exception, but this is the only downtown restaurant directly on the water. Just across the street, Frosty's (☎ 419/285-3278) does good pizza. Put-in-Bay's wild nightlife – it really does get raucous here – pulls in revelers from the other islands and the mainland. Numerous live music venues include the Beer Barrel Saloon (☎ 419/285-2337, 🌐 www.beerbarrelpub.com) – said to have the longest uninterrupted bar in the world, complete with 160 bar stools – and the appropriately named Round House (☎ 419/285-4595, 🌐 www.theroundhousebar.com).

Columbus

Ohio's largest city, state capital, and home to the massive Ohio State University, COLUMBUS is a likeable place to visit. Its position in the rural heart of the state also makes it the only center of culture for a good two-hour drive in any direction.

Ohio became a state in 1803, and after trying Zanesville and Chillicothe, legislators designated this former patch of rolling farmland on the high east bank of the Scioto River its capital in 1812. The fledgling city was built from scratch, and its considered town planning is evident today in broad thoroughfares and green spaces. Statuary forms another part of the cityscape, with many of them portraying its namesake, Christopher Columbus; there's even a replica of his ship, the Santa Maria, docked downtown on the Scioto River.

Though Columbus has more people, it always seems to lag behind Cincinnati or Cleveland in terms of public recognition. As such, the place is best enjoyed for what it is – a lively college city with some good museums, gorgeous Germanic architecture, and a particularly vibrant nightlife, including Ohio's most active gay scene. The spacious, orderly, and easygoing downtown area holds several attractions and the new Arena District entertainment zone, while the main nightlife areas – the bohemian Short North Arts District and the more mainstream Brewery District – are on the north and south fringes of the center, respectively.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Port Columbus International Airport is seven miles northeast of downtown. Taxis into the center get away with charging $21, as there is no alternative. Greyhound stops at 111 East Town and Third streets, but Amtrak bypasses it altogether. The most central visitor center is at 90 N High St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 614/221-2489 or 1-800/345-4386, 🌐 www.experiencecolumbus.com), with a larger branch out at Easton Town Center mall, off I-270 (Mon–Sat 10am–9pm, Sun noon–6pm). Central Ohio Transit Authority (COTA; ☎ 614/228-1776, 🌐 www.cota.com) runs a good central bus service connecting downtown with German Village, the Short North, and North Campus; a day-pass costs $3.50.

Accommodation

Compared with other cities in the region, Columbus offers a good choice of convenient mid-range places to stay. Downtown rates are good, while even more savings can be had by staying in the German Village/Brewery District locales.

Best Western Clarmont 650 S High St
☎ 614/228-6511, 🌐 www.bestwestern.com. A 2min walk from the Brewery District and German Village, this remodelled chain motel is particularly good value. ④

German Village Inn 920 S High St ☎ 614/443-6506. This family-run motel, on the south edge of the German Village/Brewery District, is one of the best deals going. ⑤

Harrison House B&B 313 W 5th Ave ☎ 614/421-2202 or 1-800/827-4203, 🌐 www.columbus-bed-breakfast.com. A welcoming, big home in Victorian

Village, an up-and-coming district close to the Short North. ⑤

The Lofts Hotel 55 E Nationwide Blvd
☎ 614/461-2663, 🌐 www.55lofts.com.

Luxury New York-style loft conversions, within easy walking distance of the Arena and the downtown areas. ⑤

The Westin Great Southern 310 S High St
☎ 614/228-3800 or 1-888/627-7088, 🌐 www.greatsouthernhotel.com. Columbus's grand downtown Victorian hotel, with surprisingly moderate rates. ⑤

Downtown

As good a place as any to start a walking tour of downtown is the Ohio Statehouse, pleasantly set in ten acres of park at the intersection of Broad and High streets, the two main downtown arteries (Mon–Fri 7am–7pm, Sat & Sun 11am–4pm; tours Mon–Fri 10am–3pm, Sat & Sun noon–3pm; free; ☎ 1-888/644-6123). Highlights of this 1839 Greek Revival structure – one of the very few state capitols without a dome – are the ornate Senate and House chambers.

From here, most places of interest lie a few blocks east and west along Broad Street. COSI, housed in a streamlined structure across the river at 333 W Broad St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–6pm; adults $12.50, kids $7.50; ☎ 614/228-2674 or 1-877/257-2674, 🌐 www.cosi.org), boasts more than 300,000 square feet of exhibit space, most of it geared toward familiarizing children with science. A mile east of COSI, the Wendy's Original Restaurant, 257 E Broad St (Mon–Fri 10am–8pm, Sat 10am–7pm, Sun 11am–6pm), pays homage to Dave Thomas's enduringly down-home national burger chain, started here in 1969. There's the usual menu, plus pictures of famous patrons and plenty of other memorabilia.

Three blocks east, a giant Henry Moore sculpture stands at the entrance to the inviting Columbus Museum of Art, 480 E Broad St (Tues, Wed, Fri–Sun 10am–5.30pm, Thurs 10am–8.30pm, closed Mon; $6, free Sun; ☎ 614/221-6801, 🌐 www.columbusmuseum.org). Indoors, this airy space holds particularly good collections of Western and modernist art. The museum also hosts touring exhibits, and has a renowned photography gallery and a pleasant sculpture garden.

South of the museum, at the corner of Washington Ave and East Town St, the Topiary Garden, in Old Deaf School Park (open daylight hours; free), provides a quirky photo opportunity. In the center of this verdant little park, a group of locals have recreated in topiary Georges Seurat's famous post-Impressionist work, Sunday Afternoon on the Island of La Grande Jatte. Believed to be the only painting reinterpreted in evergreen shrubbery, it features fifty-four pruned humans, three dogs, a monkey, a cat, and some leafy boats floating in a pond.

In the northwest corner of downtown, the area surrounding the impressive Nationwide Arena, home to NHL's Columbus Blue Jackets (☎ 1-800/645-2637, 🌐 www.bluejackets.com) has attracted a number of restaurants and nightspots and been predictably dubbed the Arena District. Just above it, left off High St, is the restored Victorian warehouse of North Market (see "Eating" p.319), while on the right side the strikingly deconstructivist Greater Columbus Convention Center is a massive pile of angled blocks designed by Peter Eisenman and completed in 1993.

German Village and Brewery District

Just six blocks south of the Statehouse, I-70 separates downtown from the delightful German Village neighborhood. During the mid-nineteenth century, thousands of German immigrants settled in this part of Columbus, building neat redbrick homes, the most lavish of which surround the 23-acre Schiller Park. Their descendants, however, started leaving the area during World War I, and with Prohibition and World War II further depleting their numbers, few were left by the 1950s. The area, then known as the Old South End, soon became increasingly run-down until it won a place on the National Register of Historic Places following the formation of an active preservation society.

Today the eighteen-block village is the biggest privately funded body on that register, a professional residential district with a sizeable gay community. The best way to explore its brick-paved streets, corner bars, old-style restaurants, Catholic churches, and grand homes is to stop in at the German Village Meeting Haus, 588 S 3rd St (Mon–Fri 9am–4pm, Sat 10am–2pm; ☎ 614/221-8888, 🌐 www.germanvillage.com), where popular walking tours run by the German Village Society start with a twelve-minute video presentation. The Society also oversees the immensely popular Haus und Garten Tour on the last Sunday in June, and the Oktoberfest celebrations in late September. The Village caters especially well to book-lovers; the Book Loft, 631 S 3rd St (daily 10am–11pm), crams its books, many of them discounted, into thirty-two rooms of one grand building.

Just across High Street (US-23) are the warehouses of the Brewery District, where, until Prohibition, the German immigrants brewed beer by traditional methods. Many of the original buildings still stand, but today the beer is produced by a handful of microbreweries such as Columbus Brewing Co., 525 Short St, which sometimes sets up free tours of its operation (by appointment only; ☎ 614/224-3626). The brewpub is typical of the area's more mainstream night-life, which includes other restaurants, theme pubs and music venues.

North of downtown

Across Nationwide Boulevard at the top end of downtown is the Short North Arts District, a former red-light district that's now Columbus's most vibrant enclave. Standing on either side of High Street – the main north–south thoroughfare – its entrance is marked by iron gateways of The Cap at Union Station. Thereafter starts the trail of galleries, bars, and restaurants that makes the area so popular with locals. The first Saturday of each month sees the Gallery Hop, when all the local art dealers throw open their doors – complementing the artworks with wine, snacks, and occasional performance pieces – and the socializing goes on well into the evening (📍 www.theshortnorth.com).

Businesses become a little more low-rent for a mile before High Street cuts through the university campus and suddenly sprouts cheap eating places and funky shopping emporia. For bargain vinyl, head to Used Kids Records, 1980 N High St. On the other side of the road, the Wexner Center for the Arts, North High St at 15th Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm; ☎ 614/292-3535, 🌐 www.wexarts.org), is another Eisenman construction, even more extreme than the Convention Center; it's home to cutting-edge contemporary art exhibitions, movies, mixed-media performances, a café, and a bookstore.

Eating

The Short North and German Village neighborhoods are crammed with places to eat, be they bottom-dollar snack bars or stylish and adventurous bistros. For a wide range of ethnic and organic snacks during the day, try the North Market, downtown at 59 Spruce St (Tues–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat 8am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; ☎ 614/463-9664), which also sells fresh produce.

Barcelona 263 E Whittier St, German Village ☎ 614/444-1130. Noted for its Mediterranean cuisine, this stylishly decorated local favorite also does fine desserts.

Cap City Fine Diner 1299 Olentangy River Rd ☎ 614/291-3663. A self-proclaimed “upscale diner,” this big, lively joint, just off downtown, serves up comfort food (meatloaf) with new twists (chili-onion rings and buttermilk mashed potatoes). Huge portions, especially the desserts; lunch entrees around $8, dinner $15.

Cup O' Joe Coffee & Dessert House 627 S 3rd St, German Village ☎ 614/221-1563. One of Columbus's best-loved coffeehouses, it offers great desserts, coffees, and comfy sofas. Another branch at 600 N High St, Short North.

Haiku 800 N High St, Short North ☎ 614/294-8168. Excellent Japanese restaurant with a huge range of sushi, noodle, and rice dishes.

Katzinger's 475 S 3rd St, German Village ☎ 614/228-3354. A mesmerizing range of sandwiches, Jewish munchies, and cheesecakes, though prices are high for a deli.

Schmidt's Restaurant und Sausage Haus 240 E Kossuth St, German Village ☎ 614/444-6808. This Columbus landmark (since 1886) serves schnitzel and strudel in a former slaughterhouse.

Nightlife

This youthful university town has a rich source of local bands, from country revivalists to experimental alternative acts. In addition to German Village, the gay scene is concentrated in the Short North, with a few additional bars and clubs downtown – the weekly Outlook has complete listings. There are frequent free concerts in summer, both downtown and in other areas. The Other Paper and Columbus Alive provide free details of what's happening around town.

Dick's Den 2417 N High St ☎ 614/268-9573. This campus dive bar has good jazz on the weekends.

Little Brother's 1100 N High St, Short North ☎ 614/421-2025, 🌐 www.littlebrothers.com. Underground sounds, from alternative rock to swing and spoken-word.

Oldfield's On High 2590 N High St ☎ 614/784-0477, 🌐 www.oldfieldsonhigh.com. Predominantly collegiate campus bar with eclectic live music tastes.

Short North Tavern 674 N High St, Short North ☎ 614/221-2432. The oldest bar in the neighborhood, with live bands playing on the weekend.

Tommy Keegans Irish Pub 456 S Front St, Brewery District ☎ 614/221-9444. Friendly pub with a decent jukebox and soccer from Europe on TV.

Union Station Video Café 630 N High St, Short North ☎ 614/228-3740. Popular gay video bar with a decent selection of appetizers and sandwiches, plus a pool table and Internet access.

Cincinnati

4

CINCINNATI, just across the Ohio River from Kentucky and roughly three hundred miles from both Detroit and Chicago, is a dynamic commercial metropolis with a definite European flavor and a sense of the South. Its tidy center, rich in architecture and culture, lies within a few minutes' walk of the arty Mount Adams district, the attractive riverfront, and the lively Over-the-Rhine area, in the north end of downtown.

The city was founded in 1788 at the point where a Native American trading route crossed the river. Its name comes from a group of Revolutionary War admirers of the Roman general Cincinnatus, who saved Rome in 458 BC and then returned to his small farm, refusing to accept any reward. Cincinnati quickly became an important supply point for pioneers heading west on flatboats and rafts, and its population skyrocketed with the establishment of a major steamboat riverport in 1811. Tens of thousands of German immigrants poured in during the 1830s.

Loyalties were split by the Civil War. Despite the loss of some important markets, when merchants began to pick up lucrative government contracts the city decided that its future lay with the Union. In the prosperous postwar decade, Cincinnati acquired Fountain Square, the prodigious Music and Exhibition Hall, a zoo, art museum, public library, and the country's first professional baseball team. Sport remains a great source of pride: downtown gift shops are decked out in the colors of the Bengals football team and of baseball's Reds.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Cincinnati–Northern Kentucky International Airport is twelve miles south of downtown, in Covington, Kentucky. Taxis to the city center (☎859/586-5236) cost $25. The Greyhound station is on the eastern fringe of the city center, just off Broadway, at 1005 Gilbert Ave. Amtrak trains arrive a mile northwest of downtown at the Union Terminal museum complex, which is on the daytime citywide SORTA/Metro bus network ($1; ☎513/621-4455, 🌐www.sorta.com). Buses on the Kentucky side are run by TANK ($1; ☎859/331-8265, 🌐www.tankbus.org), including shuttle buses across to Cincinnati. Extraordinarily for a city of its size, there is no walk-in visitors office, though info can be obtained by phone or online from the Northern Cincinnati CVB (☎513/771-5353, 🌐www.cincynorth.com).

Accommodation

Although Cincinnati's quality hotels are reasonable by big-city standards, budget travelers may have problems finding affordable downtown rooms. Uptown motels – about two miles north – are much cheaper, but you'll need a car to get around safely at night.

Budget Host Inn 3356 Central Parkway
☎513/559-1600 or 1-800/283-4678, 🌐www.budgethost.com. Just about the cheapest place in uptown Cincinnati, though doubles vary greatly in price. Three miles from downtown. Ⓜ

Gateway B&B 326 E 6th St, Newport, KY
☎859/581-6447, 🌐www.gatewaybb.com. Comfortable, affordable Victorian place, five minutes from downtown Cincy and Covington, KY. Ⓜ

Grace & Glory B&B 3539 Shaw Ave ☎513/321-2824, 🌐www.graceandglorybb.com. This cosy place in a safe area five miles east of downtown is a good option if you have a car. The extension room is a super bargain. Ⓜ

Marriott at River Center 10 W River Center Blvd, Covington, KY ☎859/261-2900 or 1-800/228-9290, 🌐www.marriotthotels.com. A luxury hotel on the river with spacious rooms and great serv-

Budget Host Inn
Gateway B&B
Grace & Glory B&B
Marriott at River Center
Ramada Inn Downtown
Westin Hotel

D
E
A
F
B
C

ice, plus an on-site pool and spa. ⁶
Ramada Inn Downtown 800 W 8th St
☎ 513/241-8660 or 1-800/272-6232, 🌐 www.ramada.com. Fairly priced, standard downtown

rooms. ⁴
Westin Hotel 21 E 5th St ☎ 513/621-7700,
🌐 www.westin.com. Another top luxury option right downtown. ⁷

Downtown

Downtown Cincinnati rolls back from the Ohio River to fill a flat basin area ringed by a disarray of steep hills. During the city's emergent industrial years, the filth, disease, crime, and general commotion of the so-called Sausage and Rat rows led the middle classes to abandon downtown en masse. Nowadays, however, attractive stores, street vendors, restaurants, cafés, open spaces, and gardens occupy the area. The city's rich blend of architecture is best appreciated on foot. Over, among, and even right through the hotel plazas, office lobbies, and retail areas, the Skywalk network of air-conditioned passages and flyovers spans sixteen city blocks.

At the geographic center of downtown, the Genius of the Waters in Fountain Square sprays a cascade of hundreds of jets, meant to symbolize the city's trading links. Surrounded by a tree-dotted plaza and all but enclosed by soaring facades of glass and steel, the area is a popular lunch spot and venue for daytime concerts. Looming above at Fifth and Vine streets, the 48-story Art Deco Carew Tower has a viewing gallery on its top floor that gives a wonderful panorama of the tight bends of the Ohio River and the surrounding hillsides (Mon–Thurs 9.30am–5.30pm, Fri & Sat 9.30am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $2).

Just east of Fountain Square are the Art Deco headquarters of the detergents and personal hygiene giant Procter & Gamble. The company was formed in 1837 by candlemaker William Procter and soapmaker James Gamble, to exploit the copious supply of animal fat from the slaughterhouses of “Porkopolis,” as Cincinnati was then known. By sponsoring radio's “Puddle Family” in 1932, the company created the world's first soap opera.

Nearby, the left-field multimedia modern art exhibitions at the superb Contemporary Arts Center, housed in a stunning new building at Sixth and Walnut streets (Mon 10am–9pm, Wed–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm; $7.50; free after 5pm Mon; ☎ 513/345-8400, 🌐 www.contemporaryartscenter.org), lead to continual run-ins with Cincy's more conservative citizens. By contrast, the Taft Museum, just east of downtown in an immaculate 1820 Federal-style mansion at 316 Pike St (Tues–Fri 11am–5pm, Thurs until 8pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7; ☎ 513/241-0343, 🌐 www.taftmuseum.org), contains a priceless collection of works by Rembrandt, Goya, Turner, and Gainsborough, plus some staggering Ming porcelain and French enamels. The statue of a weary Abraham Lincoln in Lytle Park, in front of the museum, was criticized as unpatriotic when unveiled in 1917; it's now seen as a great example of sculptural realism.

South across I-71, Paul Brown Stadium, home of the Bengals, and the Reds' Great American Ballpark are giant cement additions on the Cincinnati side of the Ohio River. In between the two stands the new National Underground Railroad Freedom Museum (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm; $12; ☎ 513/333-7500, 🌐 www.freedomcenter.org), whose light and airy space chronicles the city's role in the emancipation of slaves as well as other worldwide struggles for freedom. A mile-long riverside walk begins at Public Landing, at the bottom of Broadway and stretches east past painted showboats and the Bicentennial Commons, a 200th-birthday present from the city to itself in 1988.

North of downtown

Just over a mile northeast from downtown, the land rises suddenly and the streets start to conform to the contours of Mount Adams. Here, century-old townhouses coexist with avant-garde galleries, stylish boutiques, trendy gift shops, and international restaurants. During the late nineteenth century, the elegant dining rooms of Mount Adams entertained the rich and famous eager to escape the squalor and noise of the Basin. Today its lively bars attract revellers from all over the city. From downtown, take a taxi or the #49 bus.

Adjacent to this tightly packed neighborhood are the rolling lawns, verdant copses, and scenic overlooks of Eden Park, its features reflected in the new Mirror Lake, a man-made pool installed as part of the city's Millennium Project. A loop road at the western end of the park leads to the Cincinnati Art Museum, on Art Museum Drive (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm, Wed until 9pm; free; ☎ 513/721-2787; 🌐 www.cincinnatiartmuseum.org). Its one hundred labyrinthine galleries span five thousand years, taking in an excellent Islamic collection as well as a solid selection of European and American paintings by the likes of Matisse, Monet, Picasso, Edward Hopper, and Grant Wood.

Meanwhile, northwest from downtown, Cincinnati's Museum Center is housed in the magnificent Art Deco Union Terminal, approached via a stately driveway off Ezzard Charles Drive (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–6pm; museums $7.25 each, any two $10.25, all three $13.25, with OMNIMAX $16.25 or $19.25 for two shows; ☎ 513/287-7000, 🌐 www.cincymuseum.org). Highlights of the Museum of Natural History are dioramas of Ice Age Cincinnati and “The Cavern,” which houses a living bat colony. The Historical Society holds a succession of well-presented, short-term exhibitions, and the Cinergy Children's Museum has a two-story treehouse and eight other interactive exhibit areas.

Covington and Newport, Kentucky

Covington, directly across the Ohio River on the Kentucky side, is very much a part of the Cincinnati hinterland. It can be reached from downtown Cincinnati by walking over the bright-blue 355-yard 1867 John A. Roebling Suspension Bridge, at the bottom of Walnut Street, which served as a prototype for the Brooklyn Bridge. Ten minutes' walk southwest of the bridge brings you to the attractive, narrow, tree-lined streets and nineteenth-century houses of MainStrasse Village. It's a Germanic neighborhood of antique shops, bars, and restaurants that plays host to the lively Maifest on the third weekend of each May, and is the centerpiece of the citywide Oktoberfest on the weekend after Labor Day. At 6th and Philadelphia streets, 21 mechanical figures accompanied by glockenspiel music toll the hour on the German Gothic Carroll Chimes Bell Tower. Just beyond Covington at I-75 exit 186 is the Oldenberg Brewery, crammed with boozing memorabilia; tours of the microbrewery and its museum cost $3 (daily 10am–5pm).

Across the Licking River from Covington, the subdued town of Newport has gotten a lot livelier since the opening of a large shopping complex and the impressive Newport Aquarium, One Aquarium Way (daily: summer 10am–7pm, Sat until 9pm; rest of year 10am–6pm; $17.95; ☎ 859/491-3467 or 1-800/406-3474, 🌐 www.newportaquarium.com). Clear underwater tunnels and see-through floors allow visitors to be literally surrounded by sharks and snapping gators.

Eating

Cincinnati boasts excellent home-grown gourmet and continental restaurants and is also famous for fast-food Cincinnati chili, a combination of spaghetti noodles, meat, cheese, onions, and kidney beans, with chains such as Skyline Chili, open all day at more than forty locations, including Vine and 7th streets downtown.

Aralia 815 Elm St ☎513/723-1217. Excellent Sri Lankan curries in a handy downtown location.

Courtyard Café 1211 Main St, Over-the-Rhine ☎513/723-1119. Good grill food, burgers, and desserts, at value-for-money prices.

Dee Felice 529 Main St, Covington, KY ☎859/261-2365. This small and atmospheric restaurant/jazz venue specializes in Cajun cuisine, with lots of fresh seafood dishes.

Longworth's 1108 St Gregory St, Mount Adams ☎513/651-2253. Good hamburgers, sandwiches, salads, and pizzas at attractive prices in a delightful garden setting. Food is served all day until midnight, with music until 2.30am.

Mullane's Parkside Café 723 Race St ☎513/381-1331. This friendly joint, bedecked with local art, has an excellent choice of vegetarian options.

Nicholson's Tavern & Pub 625 Walnut St ☎513/564-9111. Scottish and other European fare, as well as decent ale, can be enjoyed amid the attractive wooden decor.

Porkopolis 1077 Celestial St, Mount Adams ☎513/721-5456. Steaks and sandwiches are served inside the former kilns of Cincinnati's celebrated pottery.

Tucker's 1637 Vine St ☎513/721-7123; also 18 E 13th St, Over-the-Rhine ☎513/241-3354. Get a perfect start on your day with traditional and gourmet breakfasts in a 1950s setting.

Nightlife and entertainment

After dark, the hottest area with the widest appeal is the Over-the-Rhine district, which fans out from Main Street around 12th and 14th streets, and buzzes every night – though be careful where you park or walk, as it backs onto some dodgy areas. The bars, restaurants, and cafés of scenic Mount Adams offer a good choice of music, food, and atmosphere, while the Corryville neighborhood, a five-minute drive northwest from downtown, has a lively undergraduate edge. A proliferation of brewpubs has sprung up all over town in the past few years, always dependable for a good drink in friendly surroundings. Entertainment listings for the whole city can be found in the free Cincinnati CityBeat.

For more cultured entertainment, Music Hall, 1243 Elm St (☎513/744-3344, 🌐www.cincinnatiarts.org), an 1870s conglomeration of spires, arched windows, and cornices, is said to have near-perfect acoustics. Home to Cincinnati's Opera and Symphony Orchestra, it also hosts the May Festival of choral music. The Cincinnati Playhouse in the Park, in Eden Park (☎513/421-3888, 🌐www.cincyplay.com), puts on drama, musicals, and comedies, with performances throughout the year.

Arnold's 210 E 8th St ☎513/421-6234. A fun and funky downtown spot, it's a favorite with jazz fans, though it also puts on roots and acoustic acts. Good restaurant upstairs.

Blind Lemon 936 Hatch St, Mount Adams ☎513/241-3885. Beyond the intimate, low-ceilinged bar, you'll find a relaxed patio crowd. Music (mostly acoustic) nightly at 9.30.

Bogart's 2621 Vine St, Corryville ☎513/281-8400, 🌐www.bogarts.com. Established indie acts play this mid-sized venue directly opposite Sudsy Malone's.

The Pavilion 949 Pavilion St, Mount Adams ☎513/744-9200. From its terraced outdoor deck, you'll have great views of the city and the Ohio River. Rhythm & Blues Café 1142 Main St, Over-the-Rhine ☎513/684-0080. Good food and great atmosphere. Live rock, blues, and various genres Wed through Sat nights.

Michigan

4

Mention MICHIGAN and most people think of cars, heavy industry, and inner-city Detroit. Midwesterners prefer to focus on the state's magnificent scenery. The beaches, dunes, and cliffs along the 3200-mile shoreline of its two vividly contrasting peninsulas – bordering four of the five Great Lakes – rival many an oceanfront state.

The mitten-shaped Lower Peninsula is dominated from its southeastern corner by the industrial giant of Detroit, surrounded by satellite cities heavily devoted to the automotive industry. In the west, the scenic 350-mile Lake Michigan shoreline drive passes through likeable little ports before reaching the stunning Sleeping Bear Dunes and resort towns such as Traverse City, in the peninsula's balmy northwest corner. The desolate, dramatic, and thinly populated Upper Peninsula, reaching out from Wisconsin like a claw to separate lakes Superior and Michigan, is a far cry indeed from the cosmopolitan south.

In the mid-seventeenth century, French explorers forged a successful trading relationship with the Chippewa, Ontario, and other Native American tribes. The British, who acquired control after 1763, were far more brutal. Governor Henry Hamilton, the "Hair Buyer of Detroit," advocated taking scalps rather than prisoners. Ever since, Michigan's economy has developed in waves, the eighteenth-century fur, timber, and copper booms culminating in the state establishing itself at the forefront of the nation's manufacturing capacity, thanks to its abundant raw materials, good transportation links, and the genius of innovators such as Henry Ford. Despite the slumps of the Seventies and Eighties, automobile production remains the major source of Michigan income – though tourism is now a four-season money-spinner, too.

Getting around Michigan

Greyhound buses run regularly throughout Michigan's south, but services elsewhere are less frequent, and the few buses that serve the remote Upper Peninsula do so at night. Amtrak trains between New York and Chicago stop at Detroit, Dearborn, and Ann Arbor. Michigan's principal airport is just outside Detroit. Cycling is both feasible and rewarding, particularly with the abundance of bike paths in and around Traverse City; the League of Michigan Bicyclists in Lansing (☎ 1-888/642-4537, @ www.lmb.org) organizes tours and provides info.

Detroit

DETROIT, the birthplace of the mass-production car industry and the Motown sound, has long had an image problem. The city boasts a billion-dollar downtown development, ultramodern motor-manufacturing plants, some excellent museums, and one of the nation's biggest art galleries – but since the 1960s, media attention has dwelt instead on its huge tracts of urban wasteland, where for block after block there's nothing but the occasional heavily fortified loan shop or grocery store. This characterization incurs the wrath of many Detroiters, and, though their city has unarguably suffered and continues to face tremendous challenges, their claims of exaggeration or exploitation by the media do carry weight.

Founded in 1701 by Antoine de Mothe Cadillac, as a trading post for the French to do business with the Chippewa, Detroit was no more than a medium-sized port two hundred years later. Then Henry Ford, Ransom Eli Olds, the Chevrolets, and the Dodge brothers began to build their automobile empires. Thanks to the introduction of the mass assembly line, Detroit boomed in the 1920s, but the auto barons sponsored the construction of segregated neighbor-

Founded in 1701 by Antoine de Mothe Cadillac, as a trading post for the French to do business with the Chippewa, Detroit was no more than a medium-sized port two hundred years later. Then Henry Ford, Ransom Eli Olds, the Chevrolets, and the Dodge brothers began to build their automobile empires. Thanks to the introduction of the mass assembly line, Detroit boomed in the 1920s, but the auto barons sponsored the construction of segregated neighborhoods and unceremoniously dispensed with workers during times of low demand. Such policies created huge ghettos, resulting, in July 1967, in the bloodiest riot in the US in fifty years. More than forty people died and thirteen hundred buildings were destroyed. The inner city was left to fend for itself, while the all-important motor industry was rocked by the oil crises and Japanese competition.

Today, though scarred and bruised, Detroit is not the mess some would have it, and suburban residents have started to return to the city's festivals, theaters, clubs, and restaurants. As for orientation, it makes sense to think of Detroit as a region rather than a concentrated city – and, with some planning and wheels, it holds plenty to see and do. For the moment, downtown is not so much the heart of the giant as just another segment. Other interesting areas include the huge Cultural Center, freewheeling Royal Oak, posh Birmingham, the Ford-town of Dearborn, nearby Windsor, Ontario, and the college town of Ann Arbor, a short drive west.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Flights come into Detroit Metropolitan Wayne County Airport in Romulus, eighteen miles southwest of downtown and a hefty $40-plus taxi ride, though SMART ($1.50; ☎ 313/962-5515, 🌐 www.smartbus.org) bus #125 goes downtown from Smith terminal.

The main Greyhound (1001 Howard Ave) and Amtrak (2601 Rose St) terminals are in areas where it's inadvisable to walk around at night. Amtrak also stops ten miles out at 16121 Michigan Ave, Dearborn, near the Henry Ford Museum and several mid-range motels, and at unstaffed suburban stations at Birmingham, Pontiac, and Royal Oak.

Detroit's main visitor center is downtown at 211 W Fort St, on the tenth floor (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 313/202-1800 or 1-800/338-7648, 🌐 www.visitdetroit.com). The main post office is at 1401 W Fort St, at Eighth St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 8am–noon).

Downtown, the People Mover elevated railway loops around thirteen art-adorned stations (Mon–Thurs 7am–11pm, Fri 7am–midnight, Sat 9am–midnight, Sun noon–8pm; 50¢). Further out, public transportation is just about adequate. SMART serves the entire metro region, while DDOT buses ($1.50; ☎ 313/933-1300, 🌐 www.detroitmi.gov/ddot) run a patchier inner-city service. Getting around in the Motor City, however, remains geared firmly toward the car.

Accommodation

Downtown Detroit caters well for expense-account travelers – its top-range hotels are as secure as any city's – but if your budget is restricted it's harder to find lodging that is both cheap and safe at night. A fifteen-percent tax comes tacked onto room bills.

The Atheneum 1000 Brush St ☎ 313/962-2323 or 1-800/772-2323, 🌐 www.atheneumsuites.com. At this swish all-suite hotel in Greektown, some units fetch more than $300 a night; others are a third of that price. Ⓜ

Detroit Marriott Renaissance Center Renaissance Center ☎ 313/568-8000 or 1-800/228-9290, 🌐 www.marriott-hotels.com. A fun place to stay, it towers over the city by the river – ask for a room on the upper floors. Ⓜ

Fairfield Inn – Auburn Hills 1294 Opdyke Rd ☎ 248/373-2228, 🌐 www.fairfieldinn.com. On the north edge of town, this clean motel is close to the Pontiac Silverdome. Ⓜ

Holiday Inn Express 34952 Woodward Ave, Birmingham ☎ 248/646-7300, 🌐 www.holidayinn.com. Recently renovated, this Holiday Inn is reasonably well-placed for Birmingham and Royal Oak restaurants and bars. Ⓜ

Holiday Inn Express Downtown 1020 Washington Blvd ③313/887-7000, ④www.holidayinn.com. A mid-range hotel with a pool, athletic room, and complimentary continental breakfast. ⑤

Hotel St Regis 3071 W Grand Blvd ③313/873-3000 or 1-800/848-4810, ④www.hotelstregis-detroit.com. Nice old hotel about four miles from downtown. Near the Motown Museum and well-placed for those with a car. Cheaper weekend rates. ⑥

Howard Johnson Metro Airport 7600 Merriman Rd, Romulus ③734/728-2430, ④www.hojo.com. The pick of the budget motels near the airport. ③

Hyatt Regency Dearborn Fairlane Town Center, Dearborn ③313/593-1234 or 1-800/233-1234, ④www.hyatt.com. This candy-brown colossus has every imaginable amenity. Though not cheap, it does have special deals. ③

Red Roof Inn 24130 Michigan Ave, Dearborn ③313/278-9732 or 1-800/843-7663, ④www.redroof.com. Clean budget lodgings near the Henry Ford Museum. ③

Royal Oak Travel Lodge 30776 N Woodward Ave ③248/549-1600, ④www.travelodge.com. A recently renovated motel close to trendy Royal Oak and about 8 miles north of downtown. ③

Shorecrest Motor Inn 1316 E Jefferson Ave ③313/568-3000 or 1-800/992-9616, ④www.shorecrestmi.com. Friendly, family-run place in lively Rivertown, with clean, good-value rooms and specials for Greyhound passengers. ④

Downtown

Futuristic glass-box office buildings and a tastefully revamped park overlook the deodorant-green Detroit River, but for the most part downtown seems rather empty – even in the middle of the day, its streets are quiet and uncrowded. One reason is that most offices and stores are squeezed into the six gleaming towers of the Renaissance Center, a virtual city within a city. Zooming up 73 stories from the riverbank, the towers offer a great view of the metropolis from their free observation deck. This giant business, convention, and retail center, known locally as the RenCen, was one of many complexes developed by Detroit Renaissance (a joint public/private sector project) to rejuvenate downtown in the aftermath of the 1967 riot, although it was criticized for forcing out small businesses. Nevertheless, it's an attractive public space and the soaring glass atrium known as the "Winter Garden" is particularly impressive.

Rare greenspace is found among the fountains and sculptures of Hart Plaza, which rolls down to the river in the shade of the RenCen. The plaza hosts free lunchtime concerts and lively weekend ethnic festivals all summer long. The US leg of the annual Ford-Detroit International Jazz Festival, the largest free jazz festival in the world, takes place here over Labor Day weekend and now spreads up to the Campus Martius square. Across the plaza from the RenCen is the Cobo Convention Center; next to this is Joe Louis Arena, home of the beloved Red Wings hockey team (see p.333).

Ten blocks north of the RenCen up Woodward Avenue is the Theater District, downtown's prime nightlife spot. Highlights are the magnificently restored Siamese-Byzantine Fox Theatre (see p.333) a huge old movie palace that is the city's top concert, drama, and film venue, and the grand Italian Renaissance State Theatre next door. This area is at the center of the city's massive Columbia Street redevelopment project, home to the new baseball and football stadiums (see p.333), as well as microbreweries, coffeehouses, and the inevitable themed restaurants, including a Hard Rock Café.

Three miles east of the RenCen, Belle Isle Park is an inner-city island retreat with twenty miles of walkways, sports facilities, a marina, and free attractions including an aquarium, a Great Lakes Museum, and elaborate gardens. It is quiet during the week but can attract crowds on the weekend. Belle Isle Park is also home to the annual Detroit Grand Prix Indy car race. To see the island, use Diamond Jack's River Tours (early June to early Sept; $14; ③313/843-9376, ④www.diamondjack.com), which depart from Hart Plaza downtown, last two hours, and loop round Belle Isle, or just take DOT bus #25 and transfer at MacArthur Bridge to the #12.

The Detroit Cultural Center

Three miles northwest of downtown, next to Wayne State University, the top-class museums of the Detroit Cultural Center are clustered within easy walking distance of one another; you can easily spend a whole day here.

One of America's most prestigious art museums and newly refurbished, the colossal Detroit Institute of Arts, 5200 Woodward Ave (Wed & Thurs 10am–4pm, Fri 10am–9pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; $6; ☎ 313/833-7900, 🌐 www.dia.org), traces the history of civilization through one hundred galleries, most notably Chinese, Persian, Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Dutch, and American collections – not to mention the largest Italian collection outside of Italy. The museum has masterpieces such as a Van Gogh self-portrait and Joos Van Cleve's Adoration of the Magi, as well as Diego Rivera's enormous, show-stealing, 1933 Detroit Industry mural.

The impressive Charles H. Wright Museum of African American History, 315 E Warren St (Wed & Thurs 9.30am–3pm, Fri & Sat 9.30am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $8; ☎ 313/494-5800, 🌐 www.maah-detroit.org), is the largest African-American museum in the world. Its massive core exhibit covers six hundred years of history in eight distinct segments, starting with a chilling sculpture of a slave boat, before moving through the Civil War, the Depression, and the work of Dr Martin Luther King Jr and Malcolm X, finally settling on contemporary African-American society.

Also in the Cultural Center, the Detroit Historical Museum, 5401 Woodward Ave (Tues–Fri 9.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $5; ☎ 313/833-1805, 🌐 www.detroithistorical.org), interprets the city's past through its “Streets of Old Detroit” display of reconstructed shops dating from the 1840s to the 1900s. The most interesting exhibit, not surprisingly, examines the automobile, with an automated display of the “body drop” process on an assembly line, in which a car's frame is lowered onto its chassis.

The Motown Museum

Unlike cities such as Memphis, Nashville, and New Orleans, Detroit is devoid of the bars, clubs, and homes of its musical heroes. The golden age of Motown was very much confined to a specific time and a place, and, disappointingly, only at the Motown Museum, 2648 W Grand Blvd (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm; $8; ☎ 313/875-2264, 🌐 www.motownmuseum.com), can Tamla fans pay homage to one of the world's most celebrated record labels. The museum, run as a not-for-profit organization, is housed in the small white-and-blue clapboard house, Hitsville USA, which served as Motown's recording studio from 1959 to 1972. On the ground floor, Studio A remains just as it was left: battered instruments stand piled up against the nicotine-stained acoustic wall-tiles, and a well-scuffed Steinway piano all but fills the room. Upstairs are the former living quarters of label founder Berry Gordy, while in the adjoining record sleeves, gold and platinum discs, and other memorabilia are displayed. The enthusiastic and knowledgeable staff will quite happily give one person the full tour.

The Henry Ford Museum, Greenfield Village, and the Automotive Hall of Fame

The enormous Henry Ford Museum, ten miles from downtown at 20900 Oakwood Blvd, Dearborn (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $14, or $26 with Greenfield Village, see p.330; ☎ 313/271-1620 or 1-800/835-5237, 🌐 www.thehenryford.org; accessible on SMART bus routes #200 and #250), pays fulsome tribute to its founder, an inveterate collector of Americana, as a brilliant industrialist and do-gooder. The former is certainly true. The hero of the “second industrial revolution” and inventor

The Motown sound

The legend that is Tamla Motown started in 1959 when Ford worker and part-time songwriter Berry Gordy Jr borrowed $800 to set up a studio. From his first hit onward – the prophetic “Money (That’s What I Want)” – he set out to create a cross-over style, targeting his records at white and black consumers alike.

Early Motown hits were pure formula. Gordy softened the blue notes of most –contemporary black music in favor of a more danceable, poppy beat, with gospel-influenced singing and clapping. Prime examples of the early approach featured all-female groups like the Marvelettes (“Needle in a Haystack”), the Supremes (“Baby Love”), and Martha Reeves and the Vandellas (“Nowhere to Run”), as well as the all-male Miracles (“Tracks of My Tears”), featuring the sophisticated love lyrics of lead singer Smokey Robinson. Gordy’s “Quality Control Department” scrutinized every beat, playing all recordings through speakers modeled on cheap transistor radios before the final mix.

The Motown organization was an intense, close-knit community: Marvin Gaye married Gordy’s sister, while “Little” Stevie Wonder was the baby of the family. The label did, however, move with the times, utilizing such innovations as the wah-wah pedal and synthesizer. By the late 1960s its output had acquired a harder sound, crowned by the acid soul productions of Norman Whitfield with the versatile Temp-tations. In 1968 the organization outgrew its premises on Grand Avenue; four years later it abandoned Detroit altogether for LA. Befitting the MOR tastes of the 1970s, the top sellers were then the high-society soul of Diana Ross and the ballads of the Commodores. This saw many top artists, dissatisfied with Gordy’s constant intervention, leave the label, although the crack songwriting team of Holland-Dozier-Holland, responsible for most of the Four Tops’ hits, stayed in Detroit to produce the seminal Chairmen of the Board (“Gimme Just A Little More Time”), along with Aretha Franklin and Jackie Wilson. Today, Motown is owned by the giant PolyGram corporation. Artists on the label include Boyz II Men, Queen Latifah, and, to this day, Stevie Wonder.

of the assembly line didn’t succeed by being a philanthropist. His Service Department of 3500 private policemen prompted the New York Times in 1928 to call him “an industrialist fascist – the Mussolini of Detroit.” Despite considering unions “the worst things that ever struck the earth,” Ford was forced to let the United Auto Workers (UAW) into his factories in 1943, after only 34 out of 78,000 workers voted against joining. Ford also bowed to the economic necessity of employing blacks, though he banned them from the model communities he built for his white workers. Instead, the company constructed a separate town, which he sardonically named Inkster.

In addition to the massive “The Automobile in American Life” exhibit ranging from early Ford models and postal carriages to NASCAR vehicles and electric cars, the twelve-acre museum amounts to a giant curiosity shop, holding planes, trains, and rows upon rows of domestic inventions and non-technological collectibles. Real oddities include the chair Lincoln was sitting in and the car Kennedy was riding in when each was shot, the bus Rosa Parks was riding when she refused to give up her seat, and even a test tube holding Edison’s last breath. One pertinent item not on view is the Iron Cross that Hitler presented to Ford (a notorious anti-Semite) in 1938. You can also take the Ford Rouge Factory Tour (summer daily 9.30am–5pm, mid-Apr to early Sept closed Sun; $14) through the car manufacturing process at a historic Ford plant, using multiple-screen films, interactive displays, and demonstrations.

Down the street from the main museum complex, Greenfield Village is a collection of homes owned by famous Americans, relocated from across the country to this site by Ford (same hours as museum; $20, or $26 with Ford Museum). Among the 240 buildings, you'll find Ford's own birthplace, the Wright Brothers' cycle shop, Edison's laboratory, and Firestone's farm. Costumed hosts demonstrate everything from weaving to puncture-repairing.

Directly next door to the Ford sprawl, the Automotive Hall of Fame, 21400 Oakwood Blvd (daily 10am–5pm; $6; ☎ 313/240-4000, 🌐 www.automotivehalloffame.org), is more interesting than it might at first sound. In paying homage to the innovators and inventors of the global (not just the Detroit) auto industry, the interactive exhibits let visitors see how they would have handled problems encountered by Buick, Honda, and the like. It's not just for mechanical types, either – there's a chance to pit your wits against the dealmakers who set up General Motors.

Windsor, Ontario

The riverside cafés of the easygoing Canadian city of WINDSOR, due south of Detroit across the Detroit River, offer pleasant views of their larger neighbor's skyline. Like Detroit, Windsor's main industry is auto manufacturing, but it's much smaller and more relaxed, and makes a good place simply to hang out. Apart from one downtown casino, the most interesting attraction is booze-oriented: the Hiram Walker Distillery, where Canadian Club whiskey is distilled, stands just a short stroll from downtown at Riverside and Walker (free tours and samplings daily 11am–6pm; ☎ 519/561-5499).

Transit Windsor buses (☎ 519/944-4111) connect the downtowns of Detroit and Windsor for $2.75 each way. Bring proper identification for customs and immigration officials. To drive, take the Windsor Tunnel ($3.50 toll) or the less claustrophobic Ambassador Bridge ($3.25 toll). Windsor has two visitor centers, one across the Ambassador Bridge at 1235 Huron Church Rd, and one at 110 Park St E in the city center (both open daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 519/973-1338 or 1-800/265-3633, 🌐 www.infowindsor.com).

Eating

Detroit's ethnic restaurants dish up the best (and least expensive) food in the city. Greektown, basically one block of Monroe Avenue between Beaubien and St Antoine streets, is crammed with authentic Greek places; it also contains Trappers Alley, a small mall brimming with good stalls and shops. Less commercial, but offering just as high a standard, are the bakeries, bars, and cantinas of Mexican Town, five minutes from downtown. Royal Oak, ten miles north, has a wide range of vaguely alternative wholefood places and is the liveliest suburban hangout in this sprawling metropolis.

Atwater Block Brewery 237 Joseph Campau St ☎313/393-2073. This spacious Rivertown brewpub serves up excellent beer-battered fish, mushrooms, mussels, wings, and whatever else the chefs can think of.

Fishbone's Rhythm Kitchen Café 400 Monroe Ave, Greektown ☎313/965-4600.

Noisy, fun, and often-packed authentic New Orleans Cajun joint with whiskey ribs, crawfish, gumbo, sushi and lots more.

Fuddrucker's 2630 E Jefferson St ☎313/568-1000. Lively place for top-notch burgers in Rivertown.

La-Shish 12918 Michigan Ave, Dearborn ☎313/584-4477. This is one in a local chain of Lebanese restaurants serving traditional Middle Eastern tabbouleh, falafel, kebabs and shawarma. New Hellas Café 583 Monroe St, Greektown ☎313/961-5544. Known as "The One on the Corner in Greektown," this popular hangout serves saganaki (flaming cheese), moussaka, and lamb dishes, all at reasonable prices.

Original Pancake House 33703 Woodward Ave, Birmingham ☎248/642-5775. This top breakfast spot offers a huge variety of superb crêpes, waffles, omelets, and pancakes.

Pronto! 608 S Washington, Royal Oak ☎248/544-0123. Big salads and a huge selection of sandwiches are the specialties in this soothing pastel space.

Rattlesnake Club 300 River Place ☎313/567-4400. Owned by creative Detroit master chef Jimmy Schmidt, the Rattlesnake Club has a setting in Rivertown to match the exquisite food. Dinner will set you back $30–40 per main course, lunch a lot less. Closed Sun.

Xochimilco 3409 Bagley Ave ☎313/843-0179. The cornerstone restaurant of Detroit's authentic Mexican Town, Xochimilco delivers on huge portions, great service, and superb value. Open till 2am. If it's full, try El Zocalo across the street.

Nightlife

There's a lot to do at night in Detroit – the city where the techno beat originated and is still going strong. The bars and clubs of the Theater District are ever popular, while the Rivertown area is renowned for its chic bistros and funky jazz and blues bars. The suburbs of upmarket Birmingham and youthful Royal Oak are good places to hang out, while there are a couple of fun establishments in the blue-collar neighborhood of Hamtramck. Way up on the northern fringe, once-deserted Pontiac now has a range of well-attended rock venues, dance clubs, and lounges. Canadian Windsor also has some good nightlife, with a drinking age of 19 as opposed to Michigan's 21. For event listings in Detroit, Ann Arbor, and Windsor, pick up the free weekly Metro Times.

Baker's Keyboard Lounge 20510 Livernois Ave, Royal Oak ☎313/345-6300. Mostly local big-band and jazz musicians jam in what claims to be the world's oldest jazz club. Closed Sun.

Gusoline Alley 309 S Center St, Royal Oak ☎248/545-2235. Cramped and dark with a loaded jukebox, this is a legend among Detroit bars. Go early for a seat; the wildly mixed crowd is a people-watcher's dream.

Magic Bag 22920 Woodward Ave, Ferndale

☎248/544-3030, @www.themagicbag.com. About two miles south of Royal Oak, this popular club boasts a huge range of beers, top jazz and blues artists, and regular roots acts.

Magic Stick 4120 Woodward Ave ☎313/833-9700, @www.majesticdetroit.com/stick.asp. This great venue incorporates billiards, bands, and, of course, alcoholic beverages. It's part of the Majestic Theater complex, a venue for big rock shows and huge techno nights.

Moto 3515 Caniff St, Hamtramck (T 313/369-0090). The place to see, be seen, and dance to techno and funk. Also books occasional live acts.

Saint Andrew's Hall/Shelter 431 E Congress St (T 313/961-6358). This cramped downtown club promotes top bands on the alternative circuit. It only holds 800 people, so get a ticket in advance.

Downstairs is the Shelter club, with lesser-known touring bands followed by dance music.

Tonic 29 S Saginaw St, Pontiac (T 248/334-7411, W www.tonicdetroit.com). Open Thursday through Sunday until 2am. Tonic bills itself as the premiere concert after-party: three levels of dancing and all the DJ vibe you can handle.

The performing arts

Most of Detroit's major arts venues are handily grouped together in the northwest section of downtown. A sweeping staircase and giant chandeliers are part of the splendor at the Detroit Opera House, 1526 Broadway (T 313/237-SING, W www.detroitoperahouse.com). Close by, the Music Hall Center for Performing Arts, 350 Madison Ave (T 313/963-2366, W www.musichall.org), is the primary venue for dance in the city; it also hosts rock concerts, youth theater, and Broadway shows. In the Theater District, the gorgeous Fox Theatre, 2211 Woodward Ave (T 313/983-6611, W www.olympiaentertainment.com), is the biggest draw, hosting big Broadway shows, while the cozy 450-seater Gem Theatre, 333 Madison Ave (T 313/963-9800, W www.gemtheatre.com), and the Masonic Temple Theatre, nearby at 500 Temple St (T 313/832-2232, W www.themasonic.com), a hall with near-perfect acoustics, are also worth a visit. A little further on toward the Cultural Center, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra performs at the Max M Fisher Music Center, 3711 Woodward Ave (T 313/576-5100, W www.detroitssymphony.com).

Sports

Detroit is one of the few cities with franchises competing at the professional level in all four major team sports. Hockey's Red Wings are arguably the town favorites, and tickets are hard to get; they play downtown at the Joe Louis Arena (T 313/983-6859, W www.detroitredwings.com). Baseball's Tigers (T 313/962-4000, W detroit.tigers.mlb.com) call the snazzy Comerica Park, or COPA, home, while the Lions play football at adjacent Ford Field (T 313/262-2003, W www.detroitlions.com). Lastly, the Pistons (T 248/377-0100, W www.nba.com/pistons) play basketball in the Palace of Auburn Hills, twenty-five miles north.

Around Detroit: Ann Arbor

Although its population just tops 114,000, ANN ARBOR, 45 minutes' drive west of Detroit along I-94, offers a greater choice of restaurants, live music venues, and cultural activities than most towns ten times its size. The University of Michigan has shaped the economy and character of the town ever since it was moved here from Detroit in 1837, providing the city with a very conspicuous radical edge.

The best thing to do in Ann Arbor is to stroll around downtown and the campus, which meet at South State and Liberty streets. Downtown's twelve blocks of brightly painted shops and sidewalk cafés offer all you would expect from a college town, with forty bookshops and more than a dozen record stores. Don't miss the huge flagship store of Borders Books at 612 E Liberty St, or the extensive vinyl and CD selection at Encore Recordings, 417 E Liberty St.

Though the huge university campus doesn't look particularly appealing, it does engender a sense of excitement, especially around the central meeting place of the Diag (or Diagonal Walkway). Worth a look are the Exhibit Museum of Natural History, 1109 Geddes Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎ 734/764-0478, 🌐 www.lsa.umich.edu/exhibitmuseum), packed with huge dinosaur skeletons, rare Native American artifacts, and a planetarium, and the eclectic Museum of Art (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs until 9pm, Sun noon–5pm; suggested donation $5; ☎ 734/764-0395, 🌐 www.umma.umich.edu), temporarily housed at 1301 S University St until it returns to an expanded space at 525 S State St in August 2008.

Practicalities

Frequent Greyhound services from Detroit stop at 116 W Huron St; Amtrak is on the north edge of downtown at 325 Depot St; and the visitor center is at 120 W Huron St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 734/995-7281 or 1-800/888-9487, 🌐 www.annarbor.org).

The Lamp Post Inn, 2424 E Stadium Blvd (☎ 734/971-8000, 🌐 www.lamppostinn.com; Ⓢ), is a good-value motel about a mile from campus, though the choice place to stay is the Campus Inn, right downtown at 615 E Huron St (☎ 734/769-2200 or 1-800/666-8693, 🌐 www.campusinn.com; Ⓢ). Two good central B&Bs are the Burnt Toast Inn, 415 W William St (☎ 734/761-8517, 🌐 www.burnttoastinn.com; Ⓢ) and bargain ⚡ Eighth Street Trekkers' Lodge, 120 Eighth St (☎ 734/369-3107, 🌐 www.ofglobalinterest.net; Ⓢ), run by an inveterate trekker.

Restaurants worth trying include the good-value Indian Raja Rani, 400 S Division St (☎ 734/995-1545), and the vegetarian Seva, 314 E Liberty Ave (☎ 734/662-1111). Jerusalem Garden, 307 S Fifth Ave (☎ 734/995-5060), serves the best falafel in town, while Zingerman's, 422 Detroit St (☎ 734/663-DELI), is an excellent (if expensive) deli. A pair of popular brewpubs – the Arbor Brewing Co, 114 E Washington St (☎ 734/213-1393), and the Grizzly Peak Brewing Co, 120 W Washington St (☎ 734/741-7325) – are within a couple of blocks of each other.

Ann Arbor's live music scene has enjoyed a nationwide reputation ever since the Stooges, MC5, and Bob Seger made their names here. Unlike many college towns, the place doesn't go to sleep during the summer, either. For news of gigs, grab a copy of Current, a free monthly. Likely venues include the Blind Pig, 208 S First St (☎ 734/996-8555, 🌐 www.blindpigmusic.com), the best place to watch live rock, alternative, and blues, while The Ark, 316 S Main St (☎ 734/761-1451, 🌐 www.a2ark.org), is an important venue for folk, acoustic, and roots music. The Heidelberg, 215 N Main St (☎ 734/663-7758, 🌐 www.theheidelberg.net), has live bands on Saturdays and features different club styles, including Latino, on other nights. From time to time there are also live bands at the beautiful Art Deco Michigan Theater, 603 E Liberty St (☎ 734/668-8480, 🌐 www.michtheater.org), otherwise a great place to watch movies on the cheap.

Festivals are also a key part of Ann Arbor life. In June, the orchestral Summer Festival kicks off activities with music and film; July sees the hectic Ann Arbor Art Fairs with hundreds of stalls; and mid-September brings the recently revived Ann Arbor Blues and Jazz Festival.

The rest of the Lower Peninsula

Between Ann Arbor and the Lake Michigan coast, a little over 150 miles west along I-94, there's not a whole lot worth stopping for, though Kellogg's Cereal City USA, 171 W Michigan Ave, in Battle Creek (summer Mon–Fri 9.30am–5pm, Sat 9.30am–6pm, Sun 11am–5pm; winter hours vary; $7.95; ☎ 616/962-6230, 🌐 www.kelloggscerealcityusa.org), is a fun diversion that traces the history of cereal – and, of course, magnate Kellogg’s impact on it. Once you reach Lake Michigan, quaint St Joseph is just the first of many small ports along the lake’s 350-mile eastern shoreline.

North from St Joseph along Hwy-31, the northwest reaches of the lower peninsula attract sportspeople and tourists from all over the Midwest. Here, out on the unspoiled Leelanau Peninsula you’ll find the beautiful Sleeping Bear Dunes, as well as the charming towns of Charlevoix and Petoskey; all three are within striking distance of larger Traverse City. At the northern tip of the lower peninsula, revitalized Mackinaw City is the departure point for the state’s major tour-bus attraction, Old-World Mackinac Island.

Along Lake Michigan

Less than thirty miles north of Indiana, ST JOSEPH lies just north of “Harbor Country” – a string of small towns offering good swimming, boating, and fishing opportunities. St Joseph’s neat, ice-cream parlor-riddled downtown perches on a high bluff, from which steep steps lead down to sandy Silver Beach and two light-houses atop two piers. You can enjoy great food such as nachos, steak salad, and pasta at Clementine’s Too, 1235 Broad St (☎ 269/983-0990), or gumbo and ostrich burgers at a sidewalk table at Schu’s, 501 Pleasant St (☎ 269/983-7248). Places to stay include the classy lakeside Boulevard Inn, 521 Lake Blvd (☎ 269/983-6600; 📍), where all the rooms are suites, and the good-value Econolodge, two miles from downtown at 2723 Niles Ave (☎ 269/983-6321; 📍). For general information on the area, stop in at the visitor center, just off I-94 exit 29 (summer Mon–Sat 8.30am–5pm; rest of year closed Sat; ☎ 269/925-6301).

Fifty miles north, HOLLAND was settled in 1847 by Dutch religious dissidents. Today’s residents lose no opportunity to let visitors know of their roots: tens of thousands of tulips brighten the town in early summer, while the Holland museum, a Dutch village, a clog factory, and the inevitable windmill all attract tourist dollars. You can stay in the swish Haworth Inn (☎ 616/395-7200 or 1-800/903-9142, 🌐 www.haworthinn.com; 📍), 225 College Ave, and literally go for a jar of fine ale at New Holland Brewing Co (☎ 616/355-6422), 66 E 8th St, which also serves bar food. Twenty miles farther up the shoreline, GRAND HAVEN boasts one of the largest and most appealing sandy beaches on the Great Lakes, best seen on a leisurely stroll along the one-and-a-half-mile largely concrete boardwalk.

Just under one hundred miles farther north, a string of pleasant small villages starts with LUDINGTON, where a long stretch of public beach precedes Ludington State Park, eight miles north on Hwy-116, which offers great hiking and sightseeing amid sweeping sand dunes and virgin pine forests; admission is $8 per car. Camping in some beautiful sites costs $29 a night, though sites for the summer tend to fill up a year in advance (☎ 800/447-2757). The visitor center is on the east side of town at 5827 US-10 (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 231/845-0324 or 1-800/542-4600, 🌐 www.visitludington.com). From downtown, the Lake Michigan Car Ferry departs for Manitowoc, Wisconsin ($55 per adult, $58 per car, not including driver; ☎ 231/845-5555 or 1-800/841-4243, 🌐 www.ssbadger.com) – worth it to avoid Chicago traffic. The best place to stay overnight is Snyder’s Shoreline Inn, 903 W Ludington Ave (May–Oct ☎ 231/845-1261 or 1-800/843-2177, 🌐 www.snydersshoreinn.com; 📍), the only downtown property with uninterrupted views of the lakeshore. House of Flavors, 402 W Ludington Ave (☎ 231/845-5785), is a chrome-heavy diner with breakfasts, burgers, and a huge range of ice cream. The Old Hamlin Restaurant, 122 W Ludington Ave (☎ 231/843-4251), serves breakfast, lunch, and dinner, featuring steaks, seafood, and especially good Greek dishes.

Surrounded by forest, MANISTEE, 32 miles north, boasts an attractive Victorian downtown and a mile-long boardwalk that runs alongside the Manistee River onto Lake Michigan. One of several pretty lakeside areas is Douglas Park – with a good sandy beach, small marina, and picnic area – next to the Lake Shore Motel, 669 First St (☎ 231/723-2667; 📍). The Tuscan Grille at 312 River Street is a good spot for waterside Italian dining. The Chamber of Commerce is at 11 Cypress St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 231/723-2575, 🌐 www.manistee.com).

Thirty miles north, tiny FRANKFORT nestles under bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan. With a grassy park and a small beach at either end of its main street, the town is at once charming and offers cheaper accommodation than the Leelanau Peninsula settlements to the north. The Harbor Lights Resort, 15 Second St (☎ 231/352-9614 or 1-800/346-9614, 🌐 www.harborlightsresort.net; 📍), stands right on the beach, while The Summer Place, 402 Leelanau Ave (☎ 231/352-3933, 🌐 www.oursummerplace.com; 📍), is an attractive B&B. Along the main drag, the Frankfort Deli, 327 Main St (☎ 231/352-3354), has good sandwiches; directly across the street, the Coho Café (☎ 231/352-6053) serves up well-priced contemporary American cuisine. A few doors down, the Chamber of Commerce is at 400 Main St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, summer Sat 10am–2pm; ☎ 231/352-7251, 🌐 www.frankfort-elberta.com).

The Leelanau Peninsula

The southwestern edge of the heavily wooded Leelanau Peninsula is occupied by the Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore, a constantly resculptured area of towering dunes and precipitous 400ft drops; admission is $10 per car. The area was named by the Chippewa, who saw the mist-shrouded North and South Manitou islands as the graves of two drowned bear cubs, and the massive mainland dune, covered with dark trees, as their grieving mother. Fierce winds off Lake Michigan cause the dunes to edge inland, burying trees that reappear years later stripped of foliage, while the continual attack of high water undercuts the massive sand banks, occasionally sending huge chunks into the lake. Stunning overlooks can be had along the hilly, nine-mile loop of the Pierce Stocking Scenic Drive, off Hwy-109. You can also clamber up the strenuous but enjoyable Dune Climb, four miles farther north on Hwy-109.

The visitor center, south of the dunes at 9922 Front St (Hwy-72) in Empire (daily: summer 8am–6pm; rest of year 8am–4pm; ☎ 231/326-5134, 🌐 www.nps.gov/slbe), provides details on trails, campgrounds, and beaches. To the northeast, the village of GLEN ARBOR, dotted with some interesting galleries, is the closest community to the dunes. Decent places to eat here include Le Bear, 5707 Lake St (☎ 231/334-4640), where costly seafood dinners are served on a waterfront deck, and Art's Tavern, 6487 Western Ave (☎ 231/334-3754), a pleasant inn delivering great hamburgers and inexpensive fried fish.

Fifteen miles north, LELAND makes a great base to visit the dunes. Its harbor holds a quaint collection of well-weathered sheds, known as Fishtown, where the day's catch was once hauled in for gutting and smoking; most are now touristy knick-knack shops. The Falling Waters Lodge, 200 W Cedar St (☎ 231/256-9832, 🌐 www.fallingwaterslodge.com; 📍) has some of the cheaper rooms in the whole peninsula, while The Cove, 111 River St (☎ 231/256-9834), serves up tasty local fish dishes and a superb Key Lime Pie. Ferries from Leland ($29 roundtrip; ☎ 231/256-9061, 🌐 www.leelanau.com/manitou) go to the uninhabited North and South Manitou islands.

At the tip of the peninsula, NORTHPORT is another relaxing fishing village with a disproportionate number of art galleries. Eleven miles south on the peninsula's east coast, SUTTONS BAY may not be as pretty, but it has some of the area's best places to eat, such as 🍷 Hatties, 111 St Joseph Avenue (☎ 231/271-6222), which serves fine meals like chicken with cherry sauce and Thai scallops.

Traverse City

Smooth beaches and striking bay views help make lively TRAVERSE CITY, roughly twenty miles south of Suttons Bay, the favorite in-state resort for Michigan natives. A town of fifteen thousand year-round residents, it was saved from the stagnation that overtook many communities when their lumber mills closed down, because the stripped fields proved to be ideal for fruit-growing. Today, the area's claim to be "Cherry Capital of the World" is no idle boast. Thousands of acres of cherry orchards envelop the town, their wispy, pink blossoms bringing a delicate beauty each May. At the National Cherry Festival, held during the first full week in July, visitors can watch parades, fireworks, and concerts, while sampling every imaginable cherry product.

Traverse City's neat downtown rests along the bottom of the west arm of Grand Traverse Bay, below the Old Mission Peninsula. This slender seventeen-mile strip of land, which divides the bay into two inlets, makes for a pleasant short driving tour along narrow roads with tremendous simultaneous views of the bay on either side. Five sandy public beaches and a small harbor can be found around the town itself. Various companies offer boat, windsurfer, jet-ski, and mountain bike rental. There are 36 golf courses in the immediate area, as well – some of them among the most beautiful in the country.

Practicalities

Greyhound stops near downtown at 3233 Cass Rd. The visitor center, downtown at 101 Grandview Parkway (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–3pm; ☎ 231/947-1120 or 1-800/872-8377, 🌐 www.tcvisitors.com), can help with finding accommodation, though prices anywhere near downtown soar in summer. The attractive little Bayshore Resort, near downtown at 833 E Front St (☎ 231/935-4400, 🌐 www.bayshore-resort.com; 📍), has a private beach and nice rooms. The very central Park Place Hotel, 300 E State St (☎ 231/946-5000 or 1-800/748-0133, 🌐 www.park-place-hotel.com; 📍), is reliable, as are the well-maintained Days Inn & Suites, 420 Munson Ave (☎ 231/941-0208, 🌐 www.tcdaysinn.com; 📍), and the basic but clean Sierra Motel, 230 Munson Ave (☎ 231/946-7720; 📍), both a couple of miles southeast. There's camping at Traverse City State Park, just outside town at 1132 US-31 N (☎ 231/922-5270; $27/night).

Affordable places to eat in Traverse City are easy to find. Big breakfasts with home-baked bread are served at Mabel's, 472 Munson Ave (☎ 231/947-0252), while Mod's Bum Steer, 125 E State St (☎ 231/947-9832), is a ribs joint. The best bet for a meal, though, particularly in the evening, is to drive north onto the Old Mission Peninsula where the Boathouse, 14039 Peninsula Drive (☎ 231/223-4030), dishes up fresh seafood, pasta, and vegetarian food right by the lake. The U & I Lounge, 214 E Front St (☎ 231/946-8932), is the best bar in town; it also serves up great gyros, burgers, and salads. Union Street Station, 117 S Union St (☎ 231/941-1930), has pool tables and live music of all sorts most nights.

North to Mackinaw City

On its way north from Traverse City, scenic Hwy-31 skims along Lake Michigan through Charlevoix and other pretty lakeside towns. The northern tip of the peninsula is occupied by Mackinaw City, where ferries take excursionists to much-hyped Mackinac Island – billboards advertise its attractions for fifty miles before you arrive.

Charlevoix, Petoskey, and Harbor Springs

CHARLEVOIX boasts a positively idyllic setting, fronting onto three separate lakes: Michigan, Charlevoix, and the beautiful, bowl-shaped Round Lake. Petunia-lined Bridge Street, the two-block downtown, looks over a picturesque, almost landlocked harbor on Round Lake, hemmed in on the other sides by terraced ridges. Though an undeniably beautiful place, in recent years the town has become a bit too fancy. Beaver Island Boat Company, 103 Bridge Park Drive, runs ferries to Beaver Island, the most remote inhabited island in the Great Lakes (April–Dec; $38 roundtrip; 2hr crossing; ☎ 231/547-2311 or 1-888/446-4095, @ www.bibco.com).

Charlevoix's helpful visitor center is at 408 E Bridge St (☎ 231/547-2101 or 1-800/367-8557, @ www.charlevoixlodging.com). Lakeside hotels, such as the turreted Weathervane Terrace, 111 Pine River Lane (☎ 231/547-9955, @ www.weathervane-chx.com; 7), charge over $300 a night on peak weekends. One of the best-value B&Bs, the MacDougall House, 109 Petoskey Ave (☎ 231/547-5788 or 1-800/753-5788 @ www.michiganbandb.com; 3), has a garden and huge breakfasts. As for food, Whitney's Oyster Bar, 305 Bridge St (☎ 231/547-0818), serves fresh seafood and snacks until 2am.

In bigger and busier PETOSKEY, high above Lake Michigan sixteen miles north along US-31, grand Victorian houses encircle the downtown's nicely restored Gaslight District. Ernest Hemingway spent many of his teenage summers here and alludes to the town in his novel The Torrents of Spring. The visitor center is at 401 E Mitchell St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm, summer Sun noon–4pm; ☎ 1-800/845-2828, @ www.boynecountry.com). For a place to stay, try the Serenity B&B, 504 Rush St (☎ 231/347-1338 or 1-877/347-6171, @ www.serenitybb.com; 5), a big Victorian house serving superb full breakfasts, or the venerable Stafford's Perry Hotel, centrally located at Bay and Lewis streets (☎ 231/347-4000 or 1-800/737-1899, @ www.staffords.com; 4); its Noggin Room Pub has good snacks and pizza. Other options for something to eat include a Hemingway favorite, Jespersen's, 312 Howard St (☎ 231/347-3601), which still does great pies and sandwiches, and the popular Mitchell Street Pub, 426 E Mitchell St (☎ 231/347-1801), which has decent snacks.

Twelve miles up Hwy-119, HARBOR SPRINGS is a favorite with the Midwestern elite. The charming Main Street and small shaded beach of this “Cornbelt Riviera” resort are certainly captivating. The comfy Colonial Inn, at 210 Artesian Ave (☎ 231/526-2111; 4), has the only reasonably affordable rooms in town. From Harbor Springs, the “Tunnel of Trees” scenic drive follows a section of Hwy-119 to Mackinaw City. Along this narrow winding road, occasional breaks in the overhanging trees afford views of Lake Michigan and Beaver Island.

Mackinaw City

Forty miles northeast of Petoskey, MACKINAW CITY has long enjoyed a steady tourist trade as the major embarkation point for Mackinac Island and, though the streets have been landscaped and visitors flock to Mackinaw Crossings, a mall-cum-entertainment zone on South Huron Street, that remains its real raison d'être, as well as being the last stop en route to the Upper Peninsula.

The visitor center is located at 10800 S US-23 (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 231/436-5991 or 1-800/666-0160, @ www.mackinawcity.com). Several mid-priced hotels have been built alongside the shore, among them the Best Western Dockside Waterfront (☎ 231/436-5001, @ www.bestwestern.com; 5). Cheaper rooms can be found inland at the Capri Motel, 801 S Nicolet St (☎ 231/436-5498, 🌐 www.caprimotel.info; 📍). You can get a good grilled meal outdoors at the Depo, 250 S Huron St (☎ 231/436-7060), a refurbished train station, while listening to the free evening concerts and watching laser light shows in the adjacent amphitheater.

To reach Mackinac Island, contact Arnold Transit (May–Oct, schedule varies; $20 for pedestrians, $7.50 for bikes; ☎ 906/847-3351 or 1-800/542-8528, 🌐 www.arnoldline.com) or Shepler's Ferry (late Apr to mid-Oct, schedule varies; same prices; ☎ 231/436-5023 or 1-800/828-6157, 🌐 www.sheplersferry.com); both companies offer high-speed catamaran crossings from the Ferry Terminal in Mackinaw City, and do not require reservations.

Mackinac Island

Viewed from an approaching boat, the tree-blanketed rocky limestone outcrop of MACKINAC ISLAND (pronounced “Mackinaw”), suddenly thrusting out from the swirling waters, is an unforgettable sight. As you near the harbor, large Victorian houses come into view, dappling the hillsides with white and pastel. The most conspicuous is the imposing, $300-a-night Grand Hotel (☎ 906/847-3331 or 1-800/334-4726, 🌐 www.grandhotel.com; 📍), where just to enter the foyer costs $5. On disembarking, you'll see rows of horses and buggies (all motorized transportation is banned from the island, except for emergency vehicles) and inhale the omnipresent smell of fresh manure. Also ubiquitous on the island is fudge, relentlessly marketed as a Mackinac “delicacy.”

Mackinac's crowded Main Street and contrived nostalgia can get irritating, but the island is still worth visiting, not least for the ferry ride over and the chance to cycle along the hilly back roads. Underneath the tourist trimmings is a rich history. French priests established a mission to the Huron Indians here during the winter of 1670–71. The French built a fort here in 1715, but within fifty years had lost control of the island to the British. The government acknowledged the island's beauty by designating it as the country's second national park, two years after Yellowstone in 1875, though it was handed over to the state of Michigan twenty years later. To get a feel for the history, hike or cycle up to the whitewashed stone Fort Mackinac, a US Army outpost until 1890. Its ramparts afford a great view of the village and lake below, though admission is a steep $8 (May to mid-Oct 9.30am–6.30pm).

On Main Street, an information kiosk (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 906/847-3783, 🌐 www.mackinac.com) provides full details of accommodation and other facilities. The least costly hotel is Murray Hotel (☎ 906/847-3360 or 1-800/462-2546, 🌐 www.4mackinac.com; 📍), which serves a large continental breakfast buffet. Unpretentious B&Bs such as the Bogan Lane Inn (☎ 906/847-3439, 🌐 www.boganlaneinn.com; 📍) and the secluded Small Point (☎ 906/847-3758; 📍) are more affordable. Places to eat on Main Street include The Pilot House Pub (☎ 906/847-0270) in the Lakeview Hotel, which has American fare and live entertainment nightly, and Patrick Sinclair's (☎ 906/847-6454), an Irish pub serving sandwiches, seafood, and salads.

The Upper Peninsula

From the map, it would seem logical for Michigan's Upper Peninsula, separated from the rest of the state by the Mackinac Straits, to be part of Wisconsin. However, when Michigan entered the Union in 1837, its legislators, eyeing the peninsula's huge mineral wealth, incorporated it into their new state before Wisconsin existed.

Previously UP, as it's commonly known, figured prominently in French plans to create an empire in North America. Father Jacques Marquette and other missionaries made peace with the native people and established settlements, including the port of Sault Ste Marie in 1688. The French hoped to press further south, but before they could get much past Detroit, the British inflicted a severe military defeat in 1763.

Vast, lonesome, and wild, the Upper Peninsula is full of stunning landmarks, exemplified by the Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore. Most of the eastern section is marked by low-lying, sometimes swampy land between softly undulating limestone hills. Infamous for its bitter winters (1997 saw 272 inches of snow), the northwest corner is the most desolate, especially the rough and broken Keweenaw Peninsula and Isle Royale National Park, fifty miles offshore. The UP's only real city is Marquette, a college town with a quiet buzz and a good base for exploration. Until 1957 you could get to the UP from lower Michigan only by ferry. Today, the five-mile Mackinac Bridge ($2.50 toll), lit up beautifully at night, stretches elegantly across the bottleneck Mackinac Straits.

Sault Ste Marie

Perched at the northeast corner of the UP, SAULT STE MARIE (pronounced "Soo Saint Marie" and known locally as "The Soo") stands across St Mary's Rapids from the Canadian town bearing the same name. It's one of the oldest settlements in the US – not that you'd guess that from the industrial sprawl of the waterfront. The Soo owes most of its trade and industry to the St Mary's Locks, the only water connection between Superior and the other Great Lakes, built in 1855 and later expanded to handle oceangoing vessels. Four giant reservoirs raise upbound boats 21 feet to the level of Lake Superior. To see this impressive operation, which accounts for more tonnage than the Suez and Panama canals combined, take one of the Soo Locks boat tours ($19; ☎ 906/632-6301 or 1-800/432-6301, 🌐 www.soolocks.com) from Dock #1 or Dock #2 on East Portage Avenue, or watch for free from the visitor center on the upper grounds of the St Mary's Falls canal (April–Nov daily 7am–11pm; ☎ 906/632-2394). Near dock #1, the other main attraction is the vast Museum Ship Valley Camp (mid-May to mid-Oct 10am–5pm, later in Jul & Aug; $9.50; ☎ 1-888/744-7867, 🌐 www.thevalleycamp.com), full of maritime memorabilia and aquariums, which doubles with the History Tower, a couple of blocks inland at 326 E Portage Ave (same hours; $5.50, combo $13), whose best feature is its observation deck.

Despite efforts to increase its tourist trade, the Soo is not a place where you'd want to spend much time. The Crestview Inn, 1200 Ashmun St (☎ 906/635-5213 or 1-800/955-5213, 🌐 www.crestviewinn.com; 🍷), has clean, comfortable rooms, while the Seaway Motel, further along at no. 1800 (☎ 906/632-8201 or 1-800/782-0466, 🌐 www.seawayseewhy.com; 🍷), is plainer and cheaper. Antler's, 804 E Portage Ave (☎ 906/632-3571), looks like a dive bar but is in fact a historic Prohibition-era pub, where you can also get decent steaks and fish.

Paradise

Native Americans who lived in the area sixty miles west and north of the Soo called it Tahquamenon ("Marsh of the Blueberries"). Now it's called PARADISE, and in summer this elongated lakeside village can live up to its name, cut as it is out of thick, dark green forests and surrounded by small, reed-cluttered ultramarine lakes. Life is slow and easy here, but the choppy waters of Superior deny absolute calm to the beach. Ten miles west on Hwy-123, one of the most popular spots on the UP for hiking, boating, and camping ($10–33/night) is the gorgeous Tahquamenon Falls State Park ($8 per car; ☎ 906/492-3415), made famous in Longfellow's epic "The Song of Hiawatha," where "by the rushing Tahquamenon" Hiawatha built his canoe. The waters, dyed a translucent brown by tannic acid, spill over two sets of cataracts.

Whitefish Road winds eleven miles north of town to where the sand and shingle of Whitefish Point nudges into the harsh waters of Lake Superior. Raging northwesterly winds, which build up over almost four hundred miles of open lake funneling into this narrower section, have contributed to more than five hundred shipwrecks along the eighty-mile stretch of lakeshore westward to Munising. The story of these wrecks is told at the Great Lakes Shipwreck Historical Museum, located at the dead end of Whitefish Point Road (mid-May to mid-Oct daily 10am–6pm; $10; ☎ 906/635-1742, 🌐 www.shipwreckmuseum.com), with the help of subtle lighting and atmospheric background music. It's not all ancient history, either; on November 10, 1975, the cargo ship Edmund Fitzgerald foundered in 96mph gusts, losing all of its 29-person crew.

Curley's Motel & Cabins on M-123 in Paradise (☎ 906/492-3445 or 1-800/236-7386, 🌐 www.superiorsights.com/curleys; 📍) is your best bet for accommodation. The Yukon Inn opposite (☎ 906/492-3264) is a restaurant and bar with stuffed trophy animals for decor, and serving burgers and sandwiches; DJs spin on Saturday nights.

Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore

The 42 miles between the attractive fishing villages of Grand Marais and Munising form the Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore, a splendid array of multicolored cliffs, rolling dunes, and secluded sandy beaches. Rain, wind, ice, and sun have carved and gouged arches, columns, and caves into the face of the lakeshore, all stained different hues. Hiking trails run along the clifftops, and Hwy-58 takes you close to the water, but the best way to see the cliffs is by boat. Pictured Rocks Cruises offers a three-hour narrated tour that leaves from the City Pier in Munising (late May to early Oct 2–8 trips daily; $30; ☎ 906/387-2379, 🌐 www.picturedocks.com). Less than a mile farther along the lake, at 1204 Commercial St, Shipwreck Tours gives two-hour narrated cruises in a glass-bottomed boat, with surprisingly clear views of three shipwrecks – one intact (June to early Oct 2–3 trips daily; $27; ☎ 906/387-4477, 🌐 www.shipwrecktours.com). Those in a hurry can get a glimpse of the cliffs by visiting the Miners Castle Overlook, twelve miles east of Munising, or Munising Falls, one of a half-dozen nearby waterfalls, near the village’s well-signposted visitors bureau (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 906/387-2138, 🌐 www.munising.org). In Munising, Scotty’s Motel, 415 Cedar St (☎ 906/387-2449; 📍), and the Munising Motel, 332 E Onota St (☎ 906/387-3187; 📍), are fairly comfortable places to stay. At 101 E Munising Ave, The Navigator (☎ 906/387-1555) is the only restaurant in Munising with a view of Lake Superior, and serves breakfast any time along with steaks, seafood, pizza, and burgers.

Marquette

Forty miles west of Munising is the unofficial capital of the UP, the low-key college town of MARQUETTE, also the center of the area’s massive ore industry. The helpful state welcome center, just south of town at 2201 US-41 S (daily: summer 9am–6pm; rest of year 9am–5pm; ☎ 906/249-9066, 🌐 www.marquettecountry.org), has vouchers for local hotel discounts and lots of information about Marquette’s sights. Premier among them is rugged Presque Isle Park, north of town on Lakeshore Boulevard, almost completely surrounded by Lake Superior and with stunning views of the lake. Back in town, at East Ridge St and Lakeshore, the Marquette Maritime Museum (mid-May to late Oct daily 10am–5pm; $4; ☎ 906/226-2006, 🌐 www.mqt-maritimemuseum.com) has exhibits on the fishing and freighting industries, as well as a video about the fabled Superior wrecking of the Edmund Fitzgerald (see p.341). The area’s most curious sight is the Superior Dome, on Northern Michigan University’s campus at 1401 Presque Isle Ave, the largest wooden dome in the world.

Ten miles west of Marquette on Hwy-41 in Ishpeming, the birthplace of ski-jumping, is the National Ski Hall of Fame (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; free; ☎ 906/485-6323, 🌐 www.skihall.com). Housed in a cone-shaped building with a ski jump running down the roof, this low-tech museum chronicles the history of skiing via photos and artifacts from the 10th Mountain Division, the first chairlift from Sun Valley, Idaho, and lots of ski-jumping memorabilia.

By far the nicest place to stay is the grand Landmark Inn, 230 N Front St (☎ 906/228-2580, 🌐 www.thelandmarkinn.com; 📍), which has rooms overlooking the lake, although a host of cheaper motels cluster west of town on US-41. You can camp at the Tourist Park Campground on Sugarloaf Avenue (☎ 906/228-0465; $15). JJ’s Shamrock, downtown at 113 S Front St (☎ 906/226-6734), serves basic bar food along with occasional live music. For a more formal dining experience, locals favor the Northwoods Supper Club, just west of town off US-41 (☎ 906/228-4343), with a meat-and-potatoes menu in a rustic setting. One popular watering hole is Remie’s Bar, 111 Third St (☎ 906/226-9133), with a rowdy local crowd and live music on Wednesdays.

The Keweenaw Peninsula

Beyond Marquette, along US-41, the landscape becomes progressively more rough-hewn, culminating in the Keweenaw Peninsula, which juts like a dorsal fin eighty miles out into Lake Superior. Encircled by a dramatic shoreline and enriched by crags and precipices, it's a great place for a short driving tour, with roads winding through forests, past old copper workings, and up and down steep hills.

Halfway up the peninsula, in the small college town of HOUGHTON on Portage Lake, the College Motel, next to the Michigan Tech campus at 1308 College Ave (☎ 906/482-2202; ②), is good value. The luxury option is the 100-year-old Charleston House Inn B&B, downtown by the water at 918 College Ave (☎ 906/482-7790, 🌐 www.charlestonhouseinn.com; ⑤). The Suomi Home Bakery and Restaurant, at 54 N Huron St (☎ 906/482-3220), serves cheap pastries and Finnish food, while locals and students enjoy good, cheap beer and food at the lively Downtowner Lounge, 100 Shelden Ave (☎ 906/482-7305). Another classy accommodation option is 🏡 Laurium Manor (☎ 906/337-2549, 🌐 www.laurium.info; ④), around ten miles north at 320 Tamarack St, in Laurium – whose twin town of CALUMET was once a huge mining center and boasts a fine historical downtown.

At the northern tip of Keweenaw, most scenically reached along Hwy-26 from Eagle River, handsome little COPPER HARBOR was once so rich in minerals that early miners could pick up chunks of pure copper from the lake-shore; today you can tour the Delaware Mine, ten miles west on US-41 (daily Jun–Aug 10am–6pm, Sept to mid-Oct 10am–5pm; $9.50; ☎ 906/289-4688). Reasonable accommodation is available at the waterfront King Copper Motel (☎ 906/289-4212 or 1-800/833-2470, 🌐 www.kingcoppermotel.com; ④), 445 E Brockway Ave, and you can try a local pasty or fish dish at the nearby Tamarack Inn Restaurant (☎ 906/289-4522), 512 Gratiot St.

Isle Royale National Park

Much closer to Canada than the US, the 45-mile sliver of Isle Royale National Park, fifty miles out in Lake Superior, is in a double sense as far as you can get in Michigan from Detroit. All cars are banned and, instead of freeways, 166 miles of hiking trails lead past windswept trees, swampy lakes, and grazing moose. Aside from other outdoors types, the only traces of human life you're likely to see are ancient mineworks, possibly two millennia old, shacks left behind by commercial fishermen in the 1940s, and a few lighthouses and park buildings. Hiking, canoeing, fishing, and scuba-diving among shipwrecks are the principal leisure activities.

The park is open from mid-May until the end of September. Camping is free, though you should visit the park headquarters at 800 E Lakeshore Drive in Houghton (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 906/482-0984, 🌐 www.nps.gov/isro) before you leave the mainland, for advice on water purity, mosquitoes, and temperatures that can drop well below freezing even in summer. Aside from camping, you can stay in a self-catering cottage or a luxury lodge room at the Rock Harbor Lodge (☎ 906/337-4993, Oct–April ☎ 270/773-2191, 🌐 www.isleroyalesort.com; ⑥–⑨). The lodge rents canoes and motorboats for $30 and $64 per day, respectively, and offers cruises for $30.

Ferries to Isle Royale leave from Copper Harbor ($52–60 one way; ☎ 906/289-4437, 🌐 www.isleroyale.com), Houghton ($54 one way; ☎ 906/482-0984, 🌐 www.nps.gov/isro), and Grand Portage, Minnesota ($40–55 one way; ☎ 715/392-2100, 🌐 www.grand-isle-royale.com). If you are in a hurry, you can hop over by plane with the Isle Royale Seaplane Service in Houghton ($250 roundtrip; ☎ 906/482-8850, @ www.royaleairservice.com).

4

THE GREAT LAKES | Indianapolis

Indiana

Thanks to an influx of northward migrants early in the nineteenth century – including the family of Abraham Lincoln, who lived for fourteen years near the present village of Santa Claus before moving to Illinois – much of INDIANA still bears the influence of the easygoing South. Unlike the abolitionist Lincolns, many former Southerners brought slaves to this new territory, and thousands rioted against being drafted into the Union army when the Civil War broke out. However, massive industrialization since the 1870s has firmly integrated Indiana into the regional economy. On a national level, this sports-happy state is best known these days for automobile racing and high-school basketball.

Despite some beautiful dunes and beaches, the most lasting memories provided by Indiana's fifty-mile lakeshore (by far the shortest of the Great Lakes states) are of the grimy steel mills and poverty-stricken neighborhoods of towns like Gary and East Chicago. In northern Indiana, the area in and around Elkhart and Goshen contains one of the nation's largest Amish settlements. The central plains are characterized by small market towns, except for the sprawling capital, Indianapolis, which makes a nice enough stopover. Hilly southern Indiana, at its most appealing in the fall, is a welcome contrast to the central cornbelt, boasting several quaint towns such as Nashville, while thriving Columbus exhibits a great array of contemporary architecture for such a small city.

As to why residents of the state are called "Hoosiers," dozens of explanations have been offered; the most believable is that it originated during the construction of the Ohio Falls Canal in the 1820s, when contractor Samuel Hoosier gave employment preference to those living on the Indiana side of the Ohio River.

Getting around Indiana

Nine interstates, five of which slice through Indianapolis, provide boring but fast ways to traverse Indiana. Greyhound runs frequent services, particularly on I-65 between Chicago and Louisville, and I-70 between the Eastern US and St Louis, while Indianapolis, Michigan City, and South Bend are the major stops on the state's three different Amtrak routes. Flights from most Midwestern and Eastern cities land at Indianapolis International Airport.

Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS began life in 1821, when a tract of barely inhabited marshes was designated the state capital. While its location in the middle of Indiana's rich farmland bore immense commercial advantages, the absence of a navigable river prohibited the transportation of bulky materials such as coal and iron to sustain heavy industry. Though home to more than sixty car manufacturers by 1910, the city never seriously threatened Detroit's supremacy. Nevertheless, it's now one of the biggest cities in the world that's not accessible by water, having attracted food, paper, and pharmaceutical industries, including the giant Eli Lilly Corporation.

Today the city has shaken off such nicknames as Naptown, India-no-place, and Brickhouse in the Cornfield in favor of its chosen designation as the country's unofficial amateur sports capital – “amateur” events like the Pan-American Games and national Olympic trials being worth big money these days. (Major league pro teams include the basketball Pacers and the football Colts.) In recent years, it has constructed several world-class sports arenas – including the retro-styled Conseco Fieldhouse downtown – along with new hotels, a gaggle of top-class museums, and a zoo – and its old downtown landmarks have become cultural, shopping, and dining complexes. No longer is it (quite) true that nothing happens here except for the glamorous Indianapolis 500 car race each May – “the most televised annual event in the world.”

Arrival and information

Indianapolis International Airport is ten miles southwest of downtown, on the #8 IndyGo bus route ($1.25; ☎317/635-3344). A taxi into the center costs around $30; try Yellow Cabs (☎317/487-7777). Both Greyhound buses and Amtrak trains arrive at 350 S Illinois St (☎317/267-3071), next to the fairly central Union Station complex. Useful visitor centers can be found at 201 S Capitol St, beside the RCA Dome (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.30pm; ☎317/237-5200 or 1-800/323-4639, 🌐www.indy.org), and in the glass pavilion at 100 W Washington St (Mon–Sat 10am–9pm, Sun noon–6pm; ☎317/624-2563).

Accommodation

Indianapolis has plenty of quality places to stay, but few real budget downtown options, and prices can double during the race months of May, August, and September.

Canterbury Hotel 123 S Illinois St ☎317/634-3000 or 1-800/538-8186, 🌐www.canterburyhotel.com. Much the classiest downtown option, this landmark hotel was rebuilt in 1928 and offers a hundred opulent and expensive rooms. ⑦

Crowne Plaza Union Station 123 W Louisiana St ☎317/631-2221, 🌐www.crowneplaza.com/ind-downtown. Regular hotel rooms plus some much more exciting suites in converted railway carriages. ⑥

Days Inn Downtown 401 E Washington St ☎317/637-6464 or 1-800/329-7466, 🌐www.daysinn.com. Centrally located lodgings in a reliable chain motel. ④

Indy Hostel 4903 Winthrop Ave ☎317/727-1696, 🌐www.indyhostel.us. Appealing small-scale hostel in a former family home, in a friendly neighborhood six miles from downtown. Dorm beds for $22 weekdays, $25 weekends, plus basic private rooms. Bike hire available ①–②

The Villa Inn 1456 N Delaware St ☎317/916-8500 or 1-866/626-8500, 🌐www.thevillainn.com. Castellated six-room luxury B&B inn with the feel of a hotel, two miles north of downtown, and offering a spa and restaurant. The same owners run two other local B&Bs. ③

Downtown

The nerve center of Indianapolis' spacious, relaxed downtown is the reasonably tasteful Circle Centre shopping and entertainment complex. Suspended over the busy Washington and Illinois intersection, the spectacular Indianapolis Artsgarden is an eight-story glass rotunda illuminated with twinkling lights. A performance and exhibition space, it doubles as a walkway to Circle Centre and several downtown hotels. One block north, streets radiate from Monument Circle, the starting point for a lengthy series of memorials and plazas dedicated to war veterans. Many visitors climb the 330 steps of the renovated 284ft Soldiers and Sailors Monument (daily 10am–7pm; free) – the tiny elevator can seldom cope with the demand – but in truth the view of the city from the top is nothing special.

△ Indianapolis 500

Five blocks east, starting at New York and East streets, the serene tree-shaded Lockerbie Square Historic District is a small enclave of picturesque residences that were home to nineteenth-century artisans and business leaders. Small wood-frame cottages line the cobblestone streets, many of them painted in bright pinks, blues, and yellows, and fronted by ornately carved porches.

Several blocks west of Monument Circle, the Indiana State Museum, 650 W Washington St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $7; ☎ 317/232-1637, www.indianamuseum.org), gives a useful insight into the state's history through exhibits on everything from geology to sport. The Eiteljorg Museum of American Indians and Western Art is nearby at 500 W Washington St, on the western edge of downtown (late May to Aug Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; Sept to late May Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; tours at 1pm; $8; ☎ 317/636-9378, www.eiteljorg.org). Harrison Eiteljorg, an industrialist who went West in the 1940s to speculate in minerals, fell so deeply in love with the art of the region that he brought as much of it back with him as possible, especially from Taos, New Mexico. On display are works by Frederic Remington, Charles M. Russell, and Georgia O'Keeffe, as well as tribal artifacts from all over North America and a 38ft Haida totem pole on the grounds. There are also superb touring exhibits and a gorgeous gift shop. The Eiteljorg stands amid the rolling greenery of White River State Park, which is also home to the sizeable Indianapolis Zoo (summer Mon–Thurs 9am–5pm, Fri–Sun 9am–6pm; rest of year daily 9am–4pm; $13.50; ☎ 317/630-2001, www.indyzoo.com), whose proudest boast is its underwater dolphin-viewing dome. In the park's southeast corner stands the superb Victory Field, home of the Indianapolis Indians (☎ 317/269-3545), the farm team for baseball's Cincinnati Reds.

The Indianapolis 500

Seven miles northwest of downtown, the Indianapolis Motor Speedway stages only two events each year; one is the legendary Indianapolis 500, held on the last Sunday in May, the other is August's prestigious NASCAR Brickyard 400.

The Indy 500 is preceded by two weeks of qualification runs that whittle the hopeful entrants down to a final field of 33 drivers, one of whom will scoop the million-dollar first prize. The two-and-a-half-mile circuit was built as a test track for the city's motor manufacturers. The first 500-mile race – held in 1911 and won in a time of 6hr 42min, at an average speed of 74.6mph – was a huge success, vindicating the organizers' belief that the distance was the optimum length for spectators' enjoyment. Cars now hit 235mph, though the official times of the winners are reduced by delays caused by accidents. While the technology is marvelous, the true legends in the eyes of their fans are such championship drivers as A.J. Foyt, Mario Andretti, and members of the Unser dynasty. The 90th race, in 2006, was won by a margin of a mere 0.0635 seconds.

The big race crowns one of the nation's largest festivals, attended by almost half a million spectators. At first, the city's conservative hierarchy saw it as interfering with the observance of Memorial Day weekend. However, it brings so much money into the city, with thousands of "Indy" racing fanatics staying for up to two weeks, that it is now exploited to the full, with civic events such as the crowning of the Speedway Queen, a Mayor's Ball, and a street parade. Seats for the race usually sell out well in advance ($40–90; ☎ 1-800/822-4639; 🌐 www.imstix.com), but you may gain admittance to the infield, where the giddy and boozy atmosphere makes up for the poor view.

Adjoining the track, the impressive display of race-car history at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway Hall of Fame Museum, 4790 W 16th St (daily 9am–5pm, extended hours around race time; $3; ☎ 317/492-6784, 🌐 www.indy500.com), provides a good background to the hysteria. To an irregular schedule, it's also possible to join a 90min behind-the-scenes Grounds Tour ($25 inc museum admission).

Out from downtown

Although the bodies of former president Benjamin Harrison and Hoosier poet James Whitcomb Riley lie in the enormous Crown Hill Cemetery, at 38th Street and Michigan, the most visited grave belongs to 1930s bank robber John Dillinger, at Section 44 Lot 94. Designated Public Enemy Number One, Dillinger completed thirteen bank raids – killing four policemen, three FBI agents, one sheriff, and an undetermined number of innocent bystanders – in a single-year career. Something of a folk hero, he escaped from jail twice, but was eventually ambushed by the FBI outside a Chicago theater in 1934 (see p.362) – that said, some researchers allege that another man was killed in his place.

Opposite the cemetery at 1200 W 38th St, more than 150 lush wooded acres accommodate the capacious Indianapolis Museum of Art (Tues, Wed, & Fri–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm; $7; ☎ 317/923-1331, 🌐 www.ima-art.org). The main building is surrounded by a lake, botanical garden, sculpture courtyard, and a concert terrace. Inside, the exceptional displays include the largest collection of Turner paintings outside Britain and an array of paintings and prints from Gauguin's Pont Aven school; collections from around the globe include an extensive assortment of masks, figures, jewelry, and household items from northern Africa.

The city's most offbeat museum, the Indiana Medical History Museum, three miles west of downtown at 3045 W Vermont St (Thurs–Sat 10am–4pm, plus Wed by appointment only; $5; ☎ 317/635-7329, 🌐 www.imhm.org), is housed in the old Pathology Building of what was once a huge psychiatric hospital. The guides give a fascinating account of medical practices in the late nineteenth century, pointing out the cabinets of preserved brains and similarly gruesome exhibits.

The Children's Museum of Indianapolis, 3000 N Meridian St, four miles north of downtown off of I-65 (daily 10am–5pm; closed Mon late Sept to late March; $12, under-18s $7; ☎ 317/334-3322, 🌐 www.childrensmuseum.org), is arguably the best of its kind in the country. Its most popular exhibit is the Dinosphere, in which visitors can dig for genuine fossils, while All Aboard! is an entertaining romp through the Age of Steam.

Eating

The swish Circle Centre mall houses dozens of places to eat, but most are chains. You'd do better to stick to the more established restaurants downtown or head up to Broad Ripple Village (bus #17) at College Avenue and 62nd Street, which is packed with bars and cafés (along with galleries and shops). At lunchtime, City Market, 222 E Market St, is a maze of lunch counters and tables where you can feast cheaply on all sorts of international food amid a cacophonous din.

Bazbeaux 334 Massachusetts Ave, downtown ☎ 317/636-7662 and 811 E Westfield Blvd, Broad Ripple Village ☎ 317/255-5711. The best (thin-crust) pizzas in town, with a range of exotic toppings.

Elbow Room 605 N Pennsylvania St ☎ 317/635-3354. This pub serves specialty sandwiches and lots of import beers.

Elements 415 N Alabama St ☎ 317/634-8888. Romantic little place with outdoor seating and a small but regularly changing menu that features contemporary American cuisine. Plenty of seafood and vegetarian options.

India Garden 143 N Illinois St ☎ 317/634-6060; also at 830 Broad Ripple Ave ☎ 317/253-6060. The curries are a highlight, along with the good-value lunchtime buffet. The downtown branch is closed on Sundays.

St Elmo Steak House 127 S Illinois St ☎ 317/635-0636. One of the most famous steak restaurants in the meat-mad Midwest. It can be rather pompous, and it's certainly expensive ($40–50 per person), but there's no denying the quality.

Shapiro's 808 S Meridian St ☎ 317/631-4041. Landmark deli just a few blocks off downtown, where you can fill up on lox, tongue, and other specialties in an old-style cafeteria atmosphere. Leave room for the huge desserts.

Yat's Cajun and Creole 659 Massachusetts Ave ☎ 317/686-6380; also at 5463 N College Ave ☎ 317/253-8817. Wildly popular Louisiana-flavored cafeteria, offering a changing menu of inexpensive daily specials in two locations.

Nightlife and entertainment

The emerging nightlife area in downtown is Massachusetts Avenue, where along with some good bars and restaurants, the 3000-seat Murat Centre, a former Masonic shrine at 502 N New Jersey St (☎ 317/231-0000, 🌐 www.murat.com), hosts headliners and Broadway musicals. Otherwise, head north to chic Broad Ripple Village. Check the free weekly NUVO (🌐 www.nuvo.net) for full details of gigs and events.

On the performing arts scene, the 1927 Spanish Baroque Indiana Repertory Theatre, 140 W Washington St (☎ 317/635-5252, 🌐 www.indianarep.com), puts on dramatic productions between September and April, while the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra has weekly concerts at the equally elaborate 1916 Hilbert Circle Theatre, 45 Monument Circle (☎ 317/639-4300, 🌐 www.indyorch.org).

Broad Ripple Brew Pub 842 E 65th St ☎ 317/253-2739. Atmospheric brewpub located six miles north of downtown Indianapolis.

Chatterbox 435 Massachusetts Ave ☎ 317/636-

0584, 🌐 www.chatterboxjazz.com. Ever-busy local bar, hosting live jazz nightly.

Madame Walker Theatre Center 617 Indiana Ave ☎ 317/236-2099, 🌐 www.walkertheatre.com.

Black cultural and heritage center putting on Jazz on the Avenue every Friday, plus regular dance events, plays, and concerts.

Rathskeller Restaurant 401 E Michigan St ☎ 317/636-0396. German beer hall in the basement of the historic Atheneum building that also serves reasonable food.

Slippery Noodle 372 S Meridian St ☎ 317/631-6968. Indiana's oldest bar, established in 1850, is next to Union Station. Cheap beer Monday and Tuesday, and live blues every night.

Vogue 6259 N College Ave ☎ 317/259-7029, @www.thevogue.ws. Popular Broad Ripple rock and indie venue in a former movie theater, and featuring retro club nights.

Out from Indianapolis: Bloomington

BLOOMINGTON, by far the liveliest small city in Indiana, is 45 miles southwest of Indianapolis on Hwy-37. It owes its vibrancy to the main campus of Indiana University, east of downtown. The I.M. Pei-designed Indiana University Art Museum on East Seventh Street (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free) holds a fine international collection of painting and sculpture. Across the street from the pastoral campus, law student Hoagy Carmichael composed Stardust on the piano of a popular hangout. The architecturally rich downtown also features a host of good shops.

Practicalities

Greyhound, 409 S Walnut St (☎ 812/332-1522), runs bus service to Indianapolis. Bloomington's friendly visitor center can be found at 2855 N Walnut St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 9am–4pm; ☎ 812/334-8900, @www.visitbloomington.com).

If you need to stay, the best budget option is the central Motel 6 – Bloomington University, 1800 N Walnut St (☎ 812/332-0820; ②), which is far nicer than you might expect of the chain. The cozy and also very central Victorian Grant Street Inn, 310 N Grant St (☎ 812/334-2353 or 1-800/328-4350, @www.grantstreetinn.com; ⑤), offers more luxury. Among student bars and cafés lining Kirkwood Avenue is the vegetarian Laughing Planet, at no. 322 E Kirkwood (☎ 812/323-2233), renowned for its burritos, while local restaurants include the Japanese/Indian/Tibetan Snow Lion, 113 S Grant Ave (☎ 812/336-0835), and the Siam House, 430 E Fourth St (☎ 812/331-1233), which serves delicious Thai cuisine. The Brewpub at Lennie's, 1795 E Tenth St (☎ 812/323-2112), is the liveliest drinking spot around.

Illinois

Nearly everything in the agricultural powerhouse state of ILLINOIS revolves around Chicago, the largest and most exciting city in the Great Lakes region. At the state's northeastern corner, on the shores of Lake Michigan, Chicago has a fabulous skyline, plus top-rated museums, restaurants, and cafés, and innumerable jazz and blues nightspots. Seventy-five percent of the state's twelve-million-strong population lives within commuting distance of the Windy City's energetic center. Outside of Chicago, the sole punctuation to the endless flat prairies is far to the south, where the forested Shawnee Hills rise between the Mississippi and Ohio ivers. The contrast between Illinois' quiet rural hinterlands and its buzzing urban center could hardly be greater.

Illinois was first explored and settled by the French, though in 1763 the territory was sold to the English. Granted statehood in 1818, Illinois remained a distant frontier until the mid-1830s; only once the native Sauk were subjugated, after a series of uprisings, did settlers arrive in sizeable numbers. Among them were the first followers of Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon Church, who established a large colony along the Mississippi at Nauvoo. The Mormons met with suspicion and persecution and, after Smith was murdered by a lynch mob in 1844, fled west to Utah. Other early immigrants included the young Abraham Lincoln, who practiced law from 1837 onward in Springfield. Now the state capital, it's home to a wide range of Lincolniana, including his restored home, his law offices, and various other period buildings and artifacts, as well as his monumental tomb and new presidential library. Hence Illinois's self-proclaimed nickname, "Land of Lincoln."

Getting around Illinois

Chicago is the site of O'Hare Airport (the world's busiest), and the hub of the national Amtrak train network. If you plan to spend time in the rest of Illinois, Amtrak, numerous commuter railroads, and, to a lesser extent, Greyhound, provide reasonable public transportation. Cycling is also generally easy on these endless flat plains. Half a dozen interstates fan out across the country from Chicago. The famous Chicago-to-LA Route 66 has been defunct since the 1960s, though I-55 southwest to St Louis, followed by I-44 and I-40, follow its general route.

Chicago

CHICAGO is in many ways the nation's last great city. Sarah Bernhardt called it "the pulse of America" and, though long eclipsed by Los Angeles as the nation's second most populous city after New York, Chicago really does have it all, with less hassle and fewer infrastructural problems than its coastal rivals.

Founded in the early 1800s, Chicago had a population of just fifty in 1830. Its expansion was triggered first by the opening of the Erie Canal in 1825, and then by the arrival of the first locomotive in 1848; by 1860 it was the largest railroad center in the world, serving as the main connection between the established East Coast cities and the wide-open Wild West frontier. That position on the sharp edge between civilization and wilderness made it a crucible of innovation. Many aspects of modern life, from skyscrapers to suburbia, had their start, and perhaps their finest expression, here on the shores of Lake Michigan.

Despite burning to the ground in 1871, Chicago boomed thereafter, doubling in population every decade and reaching two million people around 1900, swollen by Irish and Eastern European immigrants. In the early years of the twentieth century, it cemented its reputation as a place of apparently limitless opportunity, with jobs aplenty for those willing to work. The attraction was strongest among blacks from the Deep South: African-Americans poured into the city, with more than 75,000 arriving during the war years of 1916–18 alone.

During the Roaring Twenties, Chicago's self-image as a no-holds-barred free market was pushed to the limit by a new breed of entrepreneur. Criminal syndicates, ruthlessly run by the likes of gangsters such as Al Capone and Bugsy Moran, took advantage of Prohibition to sell bootleg alcohol. Shootouts in the street between sharp-suited, Tommy-gun-wielding mobsters were not as common as legend would have it, but the backroom dealing and iron-handed control they pioneered was later perfected by politicians such as former mayor Richard Daley – father of the present mayor – who ran Chicago single-handedly from the 1950s until his death in 1976. These days, the tourist authorities play down the mobster era; few traces of the hoodlum years exist, and those that do owe more to Hollywood than contemporary Chicago.

Most visitors to Chicago are immediately bowled over by its magnificent urban skyline, adorned with one of the world's finest assemblages of modern architecture, ranging from Mies van der Rohe's masterpieces to the 110-story Sears Tower. The city can also boast the wonderful new Millennium Park and the extraordinary treasures of the Art Institute of Chicago, as well as several other excellent museums, along with restaurants, sports, and highbrow cultural activities. Perhaps its strongest suit, however, is live music, with a phenomenal array of jazz and blues clubs packed into the back rooms of its amiable bars and cafés. The rock scene is also healthy, having spawned such bands as Smashing Pumpkins and Wilco during the 1990s. And almost everything is noticeably less expensive than in other US cities – eating out, for example, costs much less than in New York or LA, but is every bit as good. Two great ways to get a real feel for the city are to head out to ivy-covered Wrigley Field on a sunny summer afternoon to catch baseball's Cubs in action, or take a cruise boat under the bridges of the Chicago River at sunset.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Chicago's O'Hare International Airport (📍 www.ohare.com), the national headquarters for United, American, and several other airlines, is seventeen miles northwest of downtown Chicago. It is connected to the city center by 24hr CTA (Blue Line) trains from the station under Terminal 4, which take around forty minutes and cost $1.75 (see "City transportation," opposite). Midway Airport, smaller than O'Hare but used by an increasing number of domestic airlines, is eleven miles southwest of downtown; take one of CTA's Midway (Orange Line) trains, which take thirty minutes. Taxis into town from O'Hare cost up to $40 (there's also a ride-share program with a flat rate of $20), and take thirty minutes to an hour. From Midway the fare is about $30 and the journey time is twenty to forty minutes. Another option is Continental Air Transport's express bus and van service between the airports and downtown hotels (around $25 from O'Hare, $20 from Midway; ☎ 312/454-7799 or 1-888/284-3826, 📍 www.airportexpress.com).

Chicago is the hub of the nationwide Amtrak rail system, and almost every cross-country route passes through Union Station, west of the Loop at Canal and Adam streets. Greyhound and a number of regional bus companies pull into the large 24hr bus station at 630 W Harrison St (☎ 312/408-5980), three blocks southwest of Union Station.

Arriving in Chicago by car, racing towards the gleaming glass towers of the Loop, can be memorable. Bear in mind, though, that traffic on the expressways to and from downtown can be bumper-to-bumper during rush hours. Parking can also be a problem. Meters are expensive (25¢ for 10min) and usually have a 2hr limit. Check street signs for additional restrictions, which are rigidly enforced – violations may result in your car being towed and impounded. Perhaps the best place to leave a car in the downtown area is in the garage under Grant Park, at Columbus Street and Monroe Drive, close to the east side of the Art Institute ($15 for 24hr).

Information

Pick up information and maps from the Chicago Office of Tourism, in the lobby of the Chicago Cultural Center, 77 E Randolph St (April–Oct Mon–Thurs 8am–7pm, Fri 8am–6pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10am–6pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri

CityPass

For significant discounts at five of the city's major tourist and cultural attractions – the Hancock Observatory, the Field Museum, Shedd Aquarium, Adler Planetarium & Astronomy Museum, and the Museum of Science and Industry – you can purchase a CityPass ($49.50, ages 4–11 $39; ☎ 208/787-4300, 📍 www.citypass.com). Valid for nine days, it allows you to skip most lines and save (up to $40, if you visit all five sights). CityPasses are sold at each of the attractions, or via the website.

10am–6pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; ☎ 1-800/877-CHICAGO, 🌐 www.cityofchicago.org). There are also information centers in the Historic Water Tower, 800 N Michigan Ave on the Magnificent Mile (daily 7.30am–7pm) and in the Northwest Exelon Pavilion at Millennium Park (daily 10am–4pm).

Chicago's main post office, the largest in the world, is at 433 W Harrison St (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm). There's a downtown branch at 211 S Clark St (Mon–Fri 7am–7pm).

City transportation

Getting around Chicago is simple and quick, thanks to buses and the “El,” a system of elevated trains operated 24 hours a day by the Chicago Transit Authority (CTA; ☎ 312/836-7000, 🌐 www.transitchicago.com). Pick up a CTA System Map, available at most subway stations and visitor centers, or from the CTA office on the seventh floor of the Merchandise Mart, 300 N Wells St, just north of the Chicago River. Buses run every five to fifteen minutes during rush hours and every eight to twenty minutes at most other times. Rapid transit trains run every five to fifteen minutes during the day and every fifteen to sixty minutes all night. Lines are color-coded and denoted by route rather than destination. The Howard–Dan Ryan is the Red Line; Lake–Englewood–Jackson Park is the Green Line; the O'Hare–Congress–Douglas is the Blue Line; the Ravenswood is the Brown Line (whose trains circle the Loop, giving the area its name); the Evanston Express is the Purple Line; the Midway–Loop is the Orange Line; and the Skokie Swift is the Yellow Line.

Guided tours

The best guided tours of Chicago have to be the wide range offered by the Chicago Architecture Foundation, based in the Archcenter in the Santa Fe Building at 224 S Michigan Ave (☎ 312/922-3432, 🌐 www.architecture.org). Expert guides point out the city's many architectural treasures and explain their role in Chicago's history and development. Most popular of all are the superb Architecture River Cruises, ninety-minute boat trips along the Chicago River that leave from Michigan Avenue and Lower Wacker Drive (late April to early June Mon–Fri 3 departures, Sat & Sun 5 departures; early June to Sept Mon–Fri 10 deps, Sat & Sun 13 deps; Oct Mon–Fri 5 deps, Sat & Sun 6 deps; Nov Fri–Sun 3 deps; Mon–Fri $25, Sat & Sun $27). The Foundation also runs several walking tours of the Loop, departing from the Archcenter on a complicated schedule of at least two different 2hr tours daily throughout the year ($14 for one tour, $24 for two), and a daily 45min, $5 lunchtime tour of downtown landmarks at 12.15pm. Their longer-range bus tours operate mainly in summer, focusing principally on the works of Frank Lloyd Wright ($40) and Mies van der Rohe ($65), though the 3hr 30min “highlights” tour ($37) leaves at 9.30am on Saturdays all year. Finally, the Foundation also operates the free Loop Tour Train in summer (May–Sept, Sat only, 11am, 11.40am, 12.20pm & 1pm), a unique way to get a first overview of downtown Chicago, in which a special “El” train makes a couple of slow but non-stop commentated circuits around the Loop. Tickets, on the day of the tour only, are available first-come, first-served from the visitor center at 77 E Randolph St.

Among the many other tour operators in the city are Untouchable Tours, which run jokey, gangster-themed bus tours of Prohibition-era haunts ($20; ☎ 773/881-1195; 🌐 www.gangstertour.com); the Chicago Trolley, which makes regular circuits of downtown (daily 9.30am–5pm; $25 for one day, $35 for two days, hop on and off; ☎ 773/663-0260, 🌐 www.chicagotrolley.com); and Shoreline Sightseeing Tours, which specializes in lake cruises, starting from Navy Pier and the Shedd Aquarium, and also runs a simple Water Taxi service between the two (architectural cruises $22–24, lake cruises $12; ☎ 312/222-9328, 🌐 www.shorelinesightseeing.com).

The CTA no longer accepts tokens; instead, riders purchase a “Chicago card” (available in all El stations) and add value to it. One ride costs $1.75; two more rides within two hours costs just 25¢. Passes good for one ($5), two ($9), three ($12), or five ($18) days of unlimited rides on both buses and the El are sold at O’Hare and Midway airports as well as Union Station, the visitor center, and other locations. In addition, Metra Commuter Trains run from various points downtown to and from the suburbs and outlying areas, including Oak Park and Hyde Park. One ride is $1.95.

Chicago’s taxis cost $2.25 at the drop of the flag, and $1.80 per mile. They can be hailed anytime in the Loop and other central neighborhoods; otherwise call Yellow (☎ 312/829-4222) or Checker taxis (☎ 312/243-2537).

Finally, bicycles are available for rent at Millennium Park’s multi-level bike park at 239 E Randolph St.

Accommodation

Most central accommodation is oriented toward business and convention trade rather than tourism, but there are still plenty of moderately priced rooms. A number of clean (if unexciting) prewar hotels in and around the Loop offer reasonable rates, especially on weekends, and motorists can pick from scores of motels along the interstates. Even top-class downtown hotels are, comparatively, not that expensive. Note, however, that a room tax of just over fifteen percent is added to all bills, while overnight parking can cost $20 at a modest downtown hotel, and as much as $40 at a fancy one.

If you’re stuck, Hot Rooms is a reservation service offering hotel rooms at discount rates (☎ 773/468-7666 or 1-800/468-3500; 🌐 www.hotrooms.com). While they’re not as prominent as elsewhere, bed-and-breakfast rooms are available from around $80 per night; the Chicago B&B Association maintains full listings (🌐 www.chicago-bed-breakfast.com).

Allegro 179 W Randolph St ☎ 312/236-0123 or 1-866/672-6143, 🌐 www.allegrochicago.com. With a colorful, updated Art Deco design, this boutique hotel is sure to delight. Luxury amenities throughout. 3

Arlington House International Hostel 616 W Arlington Place ☎ 773/929-5380 or 1-800/467-8355, 🌐 www.arlingtonhouse.com. Easygoing hostel close to loads of good bars and Wrigley Field, with segregated dorms (members $24, others $3 extra) and private rooms with and without en-suite facilities. Open 24hr. 1–3

Cass 640 N Wabash Ave ☎ 312/787-4030 or 1-800/799-4030, 🌐 www.casshotel.com. This basic budget hotel attracts loyal guests with the lowest rates in the Near North area; the rooms are very plain indeed, and the lobby is pretty dingy too. 4

Comfort Inn & Suites Downtown 15 E Ohio St ☎ 312/894-0900 or 1-888/775-4111, 🌐 www.chicagocomfortinn.com. This high-rise chain hotel is given considerable charm by its restored Art Deco lobby. The rooms are well equipped, and complemented by fitness and sauna facilities. Rates include continental breakfast. 6

Days Inn Lincoln Park North 644 W Diversey

Parkway at Clark ☎ 773/525-7010 or 1-888/576-3287, 🌐 www.lpndaysinn.com. This good, friendly motel is popular with visiting musicians and a convenient base for North Side nightlife. Free continental breakfast. 5

The Drake 140 E Walton Place ☎ 312/787-2200 or 1-800/553-7253, 🌐 www.thedrakehotel.com. Chicago’s society hotel, just off the Magnificent Mile, has been modernized without sacrificing its sedate charms. Its well-appointed rooms feature high-speed Internet access and Jacuzzi. You can always just pop in for a drink at the elegant Palm Court Lounge. 6–9

Gold Coast Guest House 113 W Elm St ☎ 312/337-0361, 🌐 www.bbchicago.com. Inconspicuous 1870s row house that’s been beautifully converted to offer four high-class en-suite B&B rooms, with a friendly atmosphere and plenty of useful advice from the knowledgeable hostess. 5

Hampton Inn & Suites 33 W Illinois Ave ☎ 312/832-0330, 🌐 www.hamptoninnchicago.com. Clean high-rise chain hotel (built in 1988 but “Frank-Lloyd-Wright-inspired”) in a good River North location, four blocks east of the Magnificent Mile. 6

HI-Chicago – The J. Ira & Nicki Harris Family Hostel

24 E Congress St
 ☎ 312/360-0300 or 1-800/909-4776 code 244, @ www.hichicago.org. Huge, very central hostel, where beds in the clean and spacious dorms cost $31 for members, $34 for non-members. Open 24hr, with Internet access and full kitchen and laundry facilities. ①

Hotel 71 71 E Wacker Drive ☎ 312/346-7100, @ www.hotel71.com. Stylish boutique hotel in a magnificent setting by the Michigan Avenue Bridge; an extra $10 gets a river view. Big weekend discounts. ⑦

House of Two Urns 1239 N Greenview Ave,
 Wicker Park ☎ 773/235-1408 or 1-877/896-8767, @ www.twourns.com. This rambling, artist-owned
 B&B, three blocks from the El and close to Wicker Park, is filled with contemporary art; the five guest rooms have a quirky flair, but some share facilities.
 Three- and four-room apartments are also available. Rooms ④, apartments ⑦–⑨.

The Inn at Lincoln Park 601 W Diversey Parkway ☎ 773/348-2810 or 1-866/774-7275, @ www. innlp.com. Medium-sized motel, with free continental breakfast, in the accommodation-starved

 Lincoln Park district. ⑤

Monaco 225 N Wabash Ave ☎ 312/960-8500 or 1-800/397-7661, @ www.monaco-chicago.com. A stylish and luxurious French Deco hotel with a 24hr fitness room. ⑧

Red Roof Inn 162 E Ontario St ☎ 312/787-3580
 or 1-800/733-7663, @ www.redroof-chicago-downtown.com. A few yards off the Magnificent Mile, this clean, no-frills option is in the center of the shopping action. ⑤

Sofitel Chicago Water Tower 20 E
 Chestnut St ☎ 312/324-4000 or 1-800/763-4835, @ www.sofitel.com. Stunning 32-story glass prism, just off the Magnificent Mile, that offers elegant, ultra-chic accommodation plus gourmet
 French food in its Café des Architectes. ⑧

Wheeler Mansion 2020 S Calumet Ave
 ☎ 312/945-2020, @ www.wheelermansion.com.
 A very grand mansion that's been converted into a plush, formal, but romantic B&B that's a hit with business travelers. In the Prairie Avenue Historic District, not far from S Michigan Ave and Soldier
 Field. ⑧

The City

Chicago is laid out as an easy grid, numbered from State Street – “that great street” in Sinatra’s song – at zero east and west, and Madison Street at zero north and south. Lake Michigan, which gives the city some of its most attractive open space (twenty miles of lakeshore lie within the city limits), makes a clear point of reference to the east of the urban grid. Michigan Avenue is the main thoroughfare, running between the lakeside museums and parklands, the densely packed skyscrapers of downtown, and the diverse low-rise neighborhoods that spread to the north, south, and west. It’s here that you might experience the full force of “The Hawk,” the strong wind that blows off the lake. The nickname “Windy City” was coined by a New York newspaper editor describing the boastful claims of the city’s promoters when pitching for the World’s Fair Columbian Exposition of 1893. The Chicago River, which cuts through the heart of downtown, separates the business district from the shopping and entertainment areas of the North Side, including the upscale Near North and Gold Coast neighborhoods; the artists’ lofts and galleries of River North; the modestly charming area of Old Town; and the young professional enclaves of Lincoln Park, Wrigleyville, and Lakeview, as well as hip Wicker Park.

In contrast to the wealth and prosperity of the North Side, the deprived South Side is more like New York’s South Bronx: a huge and, in places, desperately poor expanse with a deservedly dangerous reputation. Even so, a few of its corners are well worth visiting – particularly the Gothic campus of the University of Chicago and neighboring Hyde Park, site of the Museum of Science and Industry. Other than Oak Park to the west, which holds the childhood home of Ernest Hemingway and more than a dozen well-maintained examples of the influential architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright, suburban Chicago has little to offer.

Millennium Park

For first-time visitors to Chicago, for whom downtown’s Millennium Park makes the obvious first port of call, it’s hard to believe that until 2004 this space was all but derelict. Now, however, thanks to a highly ambitious (and hugely expensive, to the tune of almost $500 million) renovation project that long overran its original 2000 completion date, it's a showcase for all that's best in the city. Its twin artistic centerpieces are equally compelling. First is a stunning, seamless, stainless-steel sculpture officially titled Cloud Gate but universally known as "the bean," by the Indian-born, British-based artist Anish Kapoor. Inspired by liquid mercury, it invites viewers to walk around, beside, and even underneath it to enjoy spectacular and endlessly intriguing reflections of both the city and the sky above it. Nearby, Crown Fountain consists of two glass-brick towers set to either side of a black granite plaza; giant video images of the faces of ordinary Chicagoans play across them both, and water spurts from them in summer at unexpected intervals to form a lake that's usually filled with playing children. Further back, the Jay Pritzker Pavilion is an amazing open-air auditorium designed by Frank Gehry, who used mighty swirls and flourishes of steel to improve its acoustics. If you're heading for the lakefront, follow Gehry's sinuous, intriguing, wood-and-steel BP Pedestrian Bridge across Columbus Drive.

△ Chicago skyline

Downtown Chicago: The Loop

Downtown Chicago puts on what is perhaps the finest display of modern architecture in the world, from the prototype skyscrapers of the 1890s to Mies van der Rohe's "less is more" modernist masterpieces, and the second tallest building in the world, the quarter-mile-high Sears Tower. Just about all these edifices are workplaces of one kind or another; the whole place is bustling during the day and virtually empty at night.

The compact heart of Chicago is known as the Loop, because it's circled by the elevated tracks of the CTA "El" trains. The best way to get your bearings downtown is on one of the many excellent city tours detailed on p.353; whether you take a river cruise, ride the "El", or join a walking tour, you'll get a sense of the major architectural landmarks and their assorted histories.

Once you're ready to explore by yourself, start by calling in at the Chicago Cultural Center at 77 E Randolph St, which not only holds the city's main visitor center, as described on p.352, but is worth admiring in its own right. Built in 1897 as the original Chicago Public Library, it's a splendid Beaux-Arts palace filled with opulent detail, including the 38ft Tiffany Dome on the fourth floor; it also stages all manner of temporary exhibitions.

The Loop holds some of Chicago's grandest century-old department stores. The best looking, the 1899 Carson Pirie Scott store, at 1 S State St (Mon–Sat 9.45am–8pm, Sun 11am–6pm, @ www.carsons.com), boasts a magnificent iron-work facade that blends botanic and geometric forms in an intuitive version of Art Moderne. Its architect, Louis Sullivan, was also responsible for the gorgeous spherical bronze clocks suspended from the corners of the Marshall Field's department store (Mon–Thurs 9am–8pm, Fri & Sat 9am–9pm, Sun 11am–6pm), two blocks north at State and Washington. The comparatively bland exterior of Marshall Field's oldest and grandest branch masks one of the world's great stores, with seven floors of merchandise.

Half the world's wheat and corn (and pork-belly futures) are bought and sold amid the cacophonous roar of the Chicago Board of Trade, housed in a gorgeous Art Deco tower, appropriately topped by a 30ft stainless steel statue of Ceres, the Roman goddess of grain. It's no longer possible to watch the action inside, but if you're interested in learning more about the similarly energetic ballet that goes on within the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, three blocks away at 30 S Wacker Drive, a high-tech visitor center in the lobby explains all (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; free). Precious metals, currencies, and commodities are bought and sold here to the tune of some $50 billion a day.

Half a block from the Board of Trade, The Rookery, 209 S LaSalle St, built in 1886 by Burnham and Root, is one of the city's most celebrated and photographed edifices. Its forbidding Moorish Gothic exterior gives way to a wonderfully airy lobby, decked out with cool Italian marble and gold leaf during a major 1905 remodeling by Frank Lloyd Wright; the spiral cantilever staircase rising from the second floor must be seen to be appreciated. A couple of doors down toward the Board of Trade, check out the Continental Illinois Bank lobby, with its 28 Ionic marble columns and intricate murals.

Looking up at the proud facade of the Reliance Building, 32 N State St, you'd be forgiven for thinking it dates from the Art Deco Thirties, but it was in fact completed way back in 1895 by Daniel Burnham, who did much to shape the face of Chicago. His Fisher Building, with its tongue-in-cheek, aquatic-inspired ornamental terracotta, stands at 343 S Dearborn St. A block farther south, the 1890 Manhattan Building was the world's first tall all-steel-frame building, and is generally acknowledged as the progenitor of the modern curtain-walled skyscraper. Now converted into luxury apartments, it preserves some noteworthy exterior ornament.

A resurrected stretch of the riverfront walk follows the west bank of the river, with open-air cafés and gardens. Farther south, and back on the Loop side at South Wacker Drive and Adams Street, is the 1468ft Sears Tower, which was the tallest building in the world until 1997, when Malaysia's Petronas Towers nudged it from the top by the length of an antenna; both have since been eclipsed by further construction projects in southeast Asia. Various companies occupy the tower (Sears has moved to the suburbs), and it's so huge that it has more than one hundred elevators. Two ascend, in little more than a minute, from the ground-level shopping mall to the 103rd-floor Skydeck Observatory (daily: May–Sept 10am–10pm, Oct–April 10am–8pm; $12), for breathtaking views that on a clear day take in four states – Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Indiana. Look east for the distinctive triangular Metropolitan Detention Center, where prisoners exercise on the grassy roof beneath wire netting to ensure they don't get whisked away by helicopter.

The Chicago River

The Loop is usually said to end at the “El” tracks, but the blocks beyond this core, to either side of the Chicago River, hold plenty of interest. Broad, double-decked Wacker Drive, parallel to the water, was designed as a sophisticated promenade, lined by benches and obelisk-shaped lanterns, by Daniel Burnham in 1909. Though never completed, and despite the almost constant intrusion of construction works, it makes for a nice extended walk. The direction of the river itself was reversed a century ago, in an engineering project more extensive than the digging of the Panama Canal. As a result, rather than letting its sewage and industrial waste flow east into Lake Michigan, Chicago now sends it all south into the Corn Belt.

A boat tour from beneath the Michigan Avenue Bridge gives magnificent views of downtown (see p.353). However, half an hour’s walk, especially at lunchtime when the office workers are out in force, will do the trick nearly as well. Burnham’s promenade runs along both sides of the river, crossing back and forth over the twenty-odd drawbridges that open and close to let barges and the occasional sailboat pass. The State Street Bridge makes a superb vantage point. On the south bank, at 35 E Wacker Drive, the elegant Beaux Arts Jewelers Building was built in 1926 and is capped on the seventeenth floor by a domed rotunda that once housed Al Capone’s favorite speakeasy. Across the river stands what’s commonly considered Ludwig Mies van der Rohe’s masterpiece – the 1971 IBM Building, 330 N Wabash Ave. The gentle play of light and shadow across the detailed bronze and smoked-glass facade has been the model for countless other less considered copies worldwide. The building is so huge that it acts as a funnel for winter winds off Lake Michigan, and heavy ropes sometimes must be tied across the broad plaza at its base to protect people from getting blown away.

Perhaps Chicago’s most successful and acclaimed building of recent years stands four blocks west at 333 W Wacker Drive. Towering over a broad bend in the river, and bowed to follow its curve, the green glass facade reflects the almost fluorescent green of the river (now upgraded from “toxic” to merely “polluted”). On the lower floors, a more classically detailed stone base actively addresses its stalwart elder neighbors.

The Art Institute of Chicago

The Art Institute of Chicago ranks as one of the greatest art galleries in the world, thanks to a magnificent collection that includes, and extends way beyond, Impressionist and Post-Impressionist paintings, Asian art, photography, and architectural drawings (Mon–Wed & Fri 10.30am–4.30pm, Tues 10.30am–8pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5pm; suggested donation $12, free Tues; ☎ 312/443-3600, 🌐 www.artic.edu). While the Neoclassical facade of the main entrance, on the lake side of South Michigan Avenue, does its best to look dignified, the numerous added-on wings can make it hard to find your way around inside.

Most visitors head straight upstairs to the Impressionist works, which include a wall full of Monet’s Haystacks captured in various lights, next to Seurat’s immediately familiar pointillist Sunday Afternoon on La Grande Jatte. A handful of Post-Impressionist masterpieces by Van Gogh, Gauguin, and Matisse are arrayed nearby. Beyond that, the rooms seem to stretch away forever; it takes at least half a day to get even a basic sense of what’s here and where it is. Specific highlights include the pitchfork-holding farmer of Grant Woods’ oft-parodied American Gothic, which he painted as a student at the Art Institute school, and sold to the museum for $300 in 1930; El Greco’s 1577 Assumption of the Virgin; Edward Hopper’s lonely Nighthawks; Pablo Picasso’s melancholy Old Guitarist, one of the definitive masterpieces of his Blue Period; a tortured, tuxedoed self-portrait that was Max Beckmann’s last Berlin painting before fleeing the Nazis; canvases by Jackson Pollock and Mark Rothko; and several works by Georgia O’Keeffe, such as a 1926 depiction of New York’s Shelton Hotel, where she was living.

Be sure to look for the beautiful pre-Columbian ceramics from what’s now the Southwest USA; the ornate carved stone used for the coronation of the Aztec ruler Motecuhzoma II on July 15, 1503; and the delightful seventh-century Indonesian-sculptured stone monkeys in the Southeast Asia collections, displayed around the McKinlock Court Garden, which in summer is employed as an open-air café. Also here, in the east end of the complex, is the immaculately reconstructed Art Moderne trading room of the Chicago Stock Exchange, designed by Louis Sullivan in 1893 and moved here in the 1970s. And leave time too to browse in the museum’s excellent store.

Grant Park

East of the Art Institute toward Lake Michigan, Grant Park is an urban oasis that’s become rather overshadowed by the high-profile Millennium Park (see p.355) immediately northwest. In any case, wide strips of high-speed road and railroad slice through it, so casual rambling can be frustrating.

The major attractions are gathered in its landscaped southern half, known as Museum Campus. The extensive and engaging Field Museum of Natural History, 1200 S Lake Shore Drive, at Roosevelt Road (June daily 8am–5pm; Sept–May daily 9am–5pm; July & Aug Mon–Thurs 8am–5pm, Fri–Sun 7.30am–5pm; last admission always 4pm; $12, plus extra for temporary exhibitions; @www.fieldmuseum.org), is ten minutes’ walk south of the Art Institute, in a huge, marble-clad, Daniel Burnham–designed Greek temple. It’s quite an erratic sort of institution, in which the exhibits vary enormously in their age and sophistication; as a rule, its temporary exhibitions tend to be the most compelling, but cost a hefty additional premium on the already high entrance fee. “Natural history” is taken to include anything non-white and non-European, so as well as a hall of stupendous dinosaurs, including “Sue,” the most complete T-rex fossil ever found, the permanent collection ranges from Egyptian tombs – the entire burial chamber of the son of a Fifth Dynasty pharaoh was brought here in 1908 – to the man-eating lions of Tsavo, and some fascinating displays on the islands of the Pacific. Best of all for young kids is the “Underground Adventure,” a simulated environment that “shrinks” visitors to a hundredth of their normal size and propels them into a world of giant animatronic spiders and crayfish.

Just across busy Lake Shore Drive, on the shores of Lake Michigan, the Shedd Aquarium (first 3 weeks of June daily 9am–6pm; late June to Aug Mon–Wed & Fri 9am–6pm, Thurs 9am–10pm; Sept–May Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–6pm; $8 aquarium only, $18 wild reef and aquarium, $18 Oceanarium and aquarium, $23 for all exhibits; ☎312/939-2438, @www.sheddaquarium.org) proclaims itself the largest indoor aquarium in the world. The 1920s structure is rather old-fashioned, but the lighthearted and often tongue-in-cheek displays – some use Far Side cartoons – are informative and entertaining. The central exhibit, a 90,000-gallon recreation of a coral reef, complete with sharks (who get fed at 11am and 2pm daily), turtles, and thousands of tropical fish, is surrounded by more than a hundred lesser tanks. Highlights include the new wild reef exhibit, which features floor-to-ceiling living reefs, tropical fish, sharks, and rays. The Oceanarium provides an enormous contrast, with its modern lake-view home for marine mammals such as Pacific dolphins and beluga whales. Designed to replicate a rocky Alaskan coastline, it’s a carefully disguised amphitheater for demonstrations of the animals’ “natural behavior,” such as jumping out of the water and fetching plastic rings. Performances are four times daily; at other times, watch from underwater galleries as the animals cruise around the tank, and listen to the clicks, beeps, and whistles they use to communicate with each other. Get to the Shedd early to beat the long lines and school groups.

At the tip of the Museum Campus peninsula, the Adler Planetarium (late May to early Sept daily 9.30am–6pm, rest of year daily 9.30am–4.30pm, first Fri of month always 9.30am–10pm; $16–20, determined by exhibits entered, free Mon & Tues, Sept–Feb only; ☎312/922-STAR, 🌐www.adlerplanetarium.org) has an interactive 360-degree movie theater and offers one of the best views of the city skyline.

The Near North Side

While Chicago's Near North Side has few big-name attractions, it's great for simply wandering around, chancing upon odd shops, neighborhood bars, and historic sites in a generally low-rise tangle containing some of the city's most characteristic corners.

When the Michigan Avenue Bridge was built over the Chicago River in 1920, the warehouse district along its north bank quickly changed into one of the city's most upmarket quarters, now known as the Magnificent Mile, famed for its fashionable shops and department stores. Throughout the Roaring Twenties one glitzy tower after another was thrown up along Michigan Avenue. At the north end, the opulent Drake Hotel rose off Lincoln Park. To the south, the white terracotta, wedding-cake colossus of the Wrigley Building was put up just over the river at no. 400; it's spectacularly lit up at night. Built by the Chicago-based chewing-gum magnate, it was eclipsed almost immediately by the "Mag Mile's" most famous structure, the Tribune Tower. Still housing the editorial offices of Chicago's morning newspaper, as well as, on the ground floor, the studios of its main AM radio station, WGN (you can peer in from the street and watch the DJs in action), the tower was completed in 1925. Its flying buttresses and Gothic detailing turn their back on the then-prevalent Moderne style. Look closely at its lower floors and you'll see embedded chunks of historic buildings – like the Parthenon and the Great Pyramid – pilfered from around the world by Tribune staffers.

While the Tribune Tower anchors its southern end, the Mag Mile's northern reaches are dominated by the cross-braced steel John Hancock Center at 875 N Michigan Ave. Though it's about 325 feet shorter than the Sears Tower, the 360-degree panorama on a clear day from its 94th-floor Skydeck Observatory (daily 9am–11pm; $9.95) is unforgettable. If you prefer quality over quantity, the Hancock Observatory is a better, less trafficked experience than the Sears.

Back at ground level, you're right at the heart of Chicago's prime shopping district. Stores like Neiman-Marcus and Tiffany & Co front onto Michigan Avenue, but most of the shops are enclosed within multistory complexes, or "vertical shopping malls." The oldest of these – and still the best – is Water Tower Place, 835 N Michigan Ave, with more than a hundred stores on seven floors, plus a bustling food court. The 900 N Michigan Avenue mall offers a less-cramped space and more upscale shops, anchored by Bloomingdale's.

Across from Water Tower Place, at the center of this consumer paradise, stands the Historic Water Tower – a whimsically Gothic stone castle, topped by a 100ft tower, that was built in 1869 and is one of the very few structures to have survived the 1871 fire. The Museum of Contemporary Art, one block east at 220 E Chicago Ave (Tues 10am–8pm, Wed–Sun 10am–5pm; $10; 🌐www.mcachicago.org), is a spare space that holds photography, video, and installation works, as well as a permanent collection featuring pieces by Calder, Nauman, Warhol, and others. At the rear is a lake-view patio where a Wolfgang Puck café serves good coffee and bistro food; additionally, the museum store is well worth a browse. Away from the Magnificent Mile, the area along the river between Michigan Avenue and the lake has seen dramatic redevelopment since Navy Pier, at East Illinois Street (@www.navypier.com), underwent a major facelift in 1995. The pier is now officially the city's premier tourist destination, attracting more than eight million visitors annually to its shops, chain restaurants, IMAX theater, and fifteen-story Ferris wheel. Three floors are taken up by the imaginative interactive exhibits of the Chicago Children's Museum (Sun–Wed & Fri 10am–5pm, Thurs & Sat 10am–8pm; also Fri 5–8pm mid-June to Aug); $8, no reduction for children; free Thurs 5–8pm; ☎312/527-1000, @www.chicchildrensmuseum.org). The pier also serves as a venue for concerts and weekend festivals in summer, and an embarkation point for several boat tours, including those run by Shoreline Sightseeing (see p.353).

The Gold Coast and Old Town

As its name suggests, the Gold Coast, stretching north from the Magnificent Mile along the lakeshore, is one of Chicago's wealthiest and most desirable neighborhoods. This residential district is primarily notable for Chicago's most central (and style-conscious) beach. The broad strand of Oak Street Beach is accessible via a walkway under Lake Shore Drive, across from the Drake Hotel. After dark, the summertime crowds are apt to be found in the myriad bars of Rush and Division streets. The more northerly reaches of the Gold Coast, approaching Lincoln Park, are also its most exclusive, especially in the stretch of Astor Street running south from the park. Old Town, west of LaSalle Street to either side of North Avenue, has a much more lived-in look. Originally a German immigrant community based around the 1873 St Michael's Church, it now boasts a broad ethnic and cultural mix. Wells Street, the main drag, emerged in the late 1960s as a mini-Haight-Ashbury. Although almost all signs of that era have vanished, at least one survivor, the Second City comedy club (see p.370), is still going strong. The rest of the neighborhood is packed with bars, galleries, and barbecue joints, and makes for a diverting afternoon's wander. Especially noteworthy is the House of Glunz, 1206 N Wells St, a wine shop dating to 1888.

Lincoln Park and Wrigleyville

In summer, Chicago's largest greenspace, Lincoln Park, gives a much-needed respite from the gridded pavements of the rest of the city. Unlike Grant Park to the south, Lincoln Park is packed with leafy nooks and crannies, monuments and sculptures, and has a couple of friendly, family-oriented beaches, at the eastern ends of North and Fullerton avenues. Near the small zoo at the heart of the park (April–Oct Sun–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–7pm; Nov–March daily 9am–5pm; free), renowned for its menagerie of African apes, you can rent paddleboats or bikes. If the weather's bad, head for sauna-level conditions at the conservatory, 2400 N Stockton Drive (daily 9am–5pm; free), or bone up on Chicago's captivating past at the Chicago Historical Society Museum, at the south end of the park at 1601 N Clark St (Mon–Sat 9.30am–4.30pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5, free on Mon; ☎312/642-4600, @www.chicagohistory.org), where the comprehensive displays on regional and national history were fully upgraded in 2006.

The Lincoln Park neighborhood, inland from the lake, centers on Lincoln Avenue and Clark Street, which run diagonally from near the Historical Society Museum; Halsted Street, with its blues bars and nightclubs, runs north–south through the neighborhood's heart. Any of these main roads merits an extended stroll, with forays into the many book and record stores. Look for the Biograph Theatre movie house, 2433 N Lincoln Ave, where John Dillinger was ambushed and killed by the FBI in 1934, thanks to a tip from his companion, the legendary Lady in Red.

Chicago spreads north from Lincoln Park for block after low-rise block of houses and shops, many of which date from the late 1800s, when thousands of German immigrants settled in what was then the separate enclave of Lakeview. This area is now dubbed Wrigleyville in honor of Wrigley Field, 1060 W Addison St at N Clark Street, the ivy-covered 1920s stadium of baseball's much-loved Cubs, and one of the best places to get a real feel for the game — the club is so traditional that it fought the installation of floodlights (for night games) until 1988. There are few more pleasant and relaxing ways to spend an afternoon than drinking beer, eating hot dogs, and watching a ballgame in the sunshine, among the Cubs' faithful; see p.370 for ticket information. Field tours run from May through September on select days every half-hour from 10am to 4pm, and cost $20.

Wicker Park and Bucktown

Three miles northwest of the Loop, Wicker Park/Bucktown is Chicago's newest neighborhood. Once a Polish and German community referred to as the "Polish Gold Coast," it is now a trendy, upscale enclave of shopping, clubbing, and Victorian mansions. Stylish health-food cafés, galleries, tattoo parlors, smoky clubs, boutiques, and alternative bookstores follow Damen Street north to Bucktown. The boundary between the two areas is vague if nonexistent, and the neighborhoods diverse enough to satisfy any taste.

The West Side and Oak Park

West of the Chicago River, Chicago's West Side was where the Great Fire of 1871 started — supposedly when Mrs O'Leary's cow kicked over a lantern. The flames spread quickly east to engulf the entire central city, which was built of wood and fed the fire for three full days. Appropriately enough, the O'Leary cottage is now the site of the Chicago Fire Department training academy. The West Side also saw 1886's Haymarket Riots, when striking workers assembled at the old city market at Desplaines and Randolph streets; after a peaceful demonstration, as police began to break up the crowd, a bomb exploded, killing an officer. Six more policemen and four workers died in the resulting panic. Four labor leaders were later found guilty of murder and hanged, although none had been present at the event. Though the West Side has little to see compared with the rest of the city, it does provide a good look at its day-to-day realities, having served as the port of entry for Chicago's myriad ethnic groups, now congregated in its distinct neighborhoods.

Ten miles west of the Loop, the affluent and attractive c.1900 suburb of Oak Park is easily accessible by public transportation: take the Green Line west to the Harlem Avenue stop. The area's visitor center, just over two blocks east of the station at 158 N Forest Ave (daily 10am–3.30pm; ☎ 708/848-1500, @ www.visitoakpark.com), provides an excellent architectural walking tour map.

Ernest Hemingway was born and raised in Oak Park, editing his high school newspaper and living a normal middle-class life. His birthplace at 339 N Oak Park Ave, where he lived until the age of six, is now preserved as a shrine to the author, and is run in conjunction with a museum of his life two blocks south at 200 N Oak Park Ave (Thurs, Fri & Sun 1–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm; $7; ☎ 708/848-2222, @ www.chfop.org).

In 1889, a decade before Hemingway's birth, an ambitious young architect named Frank Lloyd Wright arrived in Oak Park, which he used for the next twenty years as a testing ground for his innovative design theories. Most of the 25 buildings he put up here are in keeping with conventional Victorian design, and few are open to the public; fortunately, however, his most interesting and groundbreaking edifices are maintained as monuments. His ideal of an "organic architecture," in which all aspects of the design derive from a single unifying concept – quite at odds with the fussy “gingerbread” style popular at the time – is exemplified by the Unity Temple at 875 Lake St (March–Nov Mon–Fri 10.30am–4.30pm, Sat & Sun 1–4pm; Dec–Feb daily 1–4pm, $7; ☎708/383-8873, 🌐www.unitytemple-utrf.org). Though the simplicity of this angular, reinforced-concrete structure was largely dictated by economics, its unembellished surfaces contribute to a masterful manipulation of space, especially in the skylit interior, where the subtle interplay of overlapping planes creates a dynamic spatial flow.

Wright built his small, brown-shingled home and studio nearby at 951 Chicago Ave at Forest, aged 22 in 1889, and remodeled it repeatedly for the next twenty years. It shows all his hallmarks: large fireplaces to symbolize the heart of the home and family; free-flowing, open-plan rooms; and the visual linking of interior and exterior spaces. The furniture of the kitchen and dining rooms is Wright’s own design; he added a two-story studio in 1898, with a mezzanine drafting area suspended by chains from the roof beams. You can see the house itself on a 45min guided tour (Mon–Fri 11am, 1pm & 3pm, Sat & Sun every 20min 11am–3.30pm; $12; ☎708/848-1976, 🌐www.wrightplus.org). Lengthier, self-guided audio walking tours ($12) take in the dozen other Wright-designed houses within a two-block radius.

The South Side

The South Side of Chicago has always had a raw deal, cursed with the presence of bad-neighbor heavy industries like the sprawling Chicago Stockyards, the slaughterhouses and meatpackers that Upton Sinclair exposed in his 1906 novel The Jungle, and whose stink covered most of the South Side until the 1950s. Even today, the overriding impression is one of misery and downtrodden poverty, with block after block of deprived and dangerous neighborhoods. That said, there are exceptions: not just the Prairie Avenue and Hyde Park districts described below, but also the buzzing Chinatown around Wentworth Avenue and 22nd Street; the artsy, predominantly Mexican Pilsen district, a few blocks north and west; and the largely Irish, blue-collar Bridgeport, formerly known by the evocative name “Hardscrabble,” around Halsted and 37th – Mayor Daley’s old fiefdom, the home of baseball’s White Sox (see p.370).

Two blocks east of Michigan Avenue, a mile from the Loop and only a quarter of a mile from the lake, Prairie Avenue started life as an exclusive suburb. It’s best reached by taxi, bus, or train; it’s only ten minutes’ walk south of Grant Park, but the route is confusing and the streets are just not safe. As the one part of Chicago to remain unscathed in the Great Fire of 1871, this area had a brief moment of glory as the city’s finest address. However, by 1900 the railroads had cut it off from Lake Michigan, and the wealthy fled back to their traditional North Side haunts. One of the few structures to have survived is the Romanesque 1887 Glessner House, Chicago’s only surviving H.H. Richardson–designed house, standing sentry at Prairie Avenue and 18th. Behind the forbidding stone facade, the house opens onto a garden court, its interior filled with Arts and Crafts furniture, and swathed in William Morris fabrics and wall coverings. The Chicago Architecture Foundation gives guided tours (Wed–Sun 1pm, 2pm & 3pm; $10; ☎312/326-1480, 🌐www.glessnerhouse.org).

Six miles south, Hyde Park, the most attractive and sophisticated South Side neighborhood, is also one of Chicago’s more racially integrated areas. The University of Chicago, endowed by Rockefeller in 1892, has encouraged a college-town atmosphere, with bookshops and numerous cafés surrounding its compact campus, especially along East 57th Street. On the campus itself, two buildings are well worth searching out: the massive Gothic pile of the Rockefeller Memorial Chapel, 59th Street and Woodlawn Avenue (daily 9am–4pm; free), and the Prairie-style, Frank Lloyd Wright–designed Robie House, two blocks north at 5757 S Woodlawn Ave (tours Mon–Fri 11am, 1pm & 3pm, Sat & Sun every 15min 11am–3.30pm; $12; @www.wrightplus.org).

Washington Park wraps around the south side of the campus to join the long green strip of the Midway – one of the few reminders that Chicago was the site of the World's Fair Columbian Exposition. Attracting some thirty million spectators in the summer of 1893 (at the time, 45 percent of the US population), the Midway was then filled with full-sized model villages from around the globe, including an Irish market town and a mock-up of Cairo, complete with belly dancers. These days it's used mainly by joggers and students tossing Frisbees.

A short stroll east, in Jackson Park, the cavernous Museum of Science and Industry, 57th Street at Lake Shore Drive (summer & school hols Mon–Sat 9.30am–5.30pm, Sun 11am–5.30pm; rest of year Mon–Sat 9.30am–4pm, Sun 11am–4pm; $11; ☎773/684-1414, @www.msichicago.org), was Chicago's single most popular tourist destination (and ranked second in the US) until it started charging admission in 1991. Besides interactive computer displays, the best of which explores the inner workings of the brain and heart, exhibits include a captured German U-boat, a trip down a replica coal mine, the Apollo 8 command module, and a simulated space-shuttle journey. It's fun for kids, but adults may not feel like staying very long. The complex also hosts a giant OMNIMAX movie dome; admission is $6 extra.

East of the museum, Promontory Point juts into Lake Michigan, giving great views of the Chicago skyline, including a close-up look at Mies van der Rohe's first highrise, the Promontory Apartments at 5530 S Lake Shore Drive.

Eating

Chicago's cosmopolitan make-up is reflected in its plethora of ethnic restaurants. Italian food, ranging from hearty deep-dish pizza (developed in 1953 at Pizzeria Uno; see p.367) to delicately crafted creations presented at stylish trattorias, continues to dominate a very dynamic scene. In recent years there's been a surge of popularity for New American cuisine. Thai restaurants still thrive, as do ones with a broad Mediterranean slant, many of which serve tapas; and there are still plenty of opportunities to sample more longstanding Chicago cuisines – Eastern European, German, Mexican, Chinese, Indian, even Burmese and Ethiopian. Of course, a number of establishments serve good old-fashioned barbecue ribs, a legacy of Chicago's days as the nation's meatpacker. And no visit is complete without sampling a messy Italian beef sandwich, or a Chicago-style hot dog, laden with tomatoes, onions, hot peppers, and a pickle.

The largest concentration of restaurants is found north and west of the Loop. To the west, Greektown, around Halsted Street at Jackson Boulevard, and Little Italy, on and around Taylor Street, are worth a look, while the Near North and River North areas harbor a good number of upscale places.

Downtown

The Berghoff 17 W Adams St at State ☎312/427-3170. This beautifully preserved landmark, dating from 1893, offers abundant German specialties such as wiener schnitzel, plus fish dishes and corned beef and cabbage. A bargain.

 Billy Goat Tavern 430 N Michigan Ave at Kinzie ☎312/222-1525. This legendary journalists' haunt opens early and closes late, serving the "cheezborbers" made famous by John Belushi's comedy skit. Very reasonable.

Everest One Financial Place, 440 S LaSalle St at Congress ☎312/663-8920. Take in the stunning vista from the 40th floor and tuck into chef Jean Joho's French/Alsatian cuisine, in dishes like wild mushroom consommé and roasted Maine lobster. Very expensive. Closed Sun & Mon.

Italian Village 71 W Monroe St at Clark ☎312/332-7005. Three Italian establishments flourish under one roof. The Village has traditional Italian-American food and a world-class wine cellar; the basement Cantina Enoteca serves chicken Vesuvio, a Chicago creation, among its reasonably priced dishes; and the expensive Vivere has an adventurous menu, a mesmerizing wine list, and a large pre-theater crowd (meaning it's best to arrive after 8pm). Closed Sun.

Lou Mitchell's 565 W Jackson Ave at Clinton ☎312/939-3111. Near Union Station, Lou's has been around since 1923, serving terrific omelets, waffles, and hash browns all day long. Try the pecan-laden cookies.

Marché 833 W Randolph St at Halsted ☎312/226-8399. Creative French cuisine served in an eclectic atmosphere in the Market District. Entrees $20–38.

Prairie Hyatt, 500 S Dearborn St, ☎312/663-1143. Modeled on a Frank Lloyd Wright interior, this place uses only fresh Midwestern ingredients in dishes such as sirloin of buffalo and brandied loaf of duck. Open daily for all meals.

Russian Tea Time 77 E Adams St at Michigan ☎312/360-0000. This Midwestern nod to New York's Russian Tea Room offers a (pricey) sampling of authentic fare from the former Soviet empire.

Trattoria No. 10 10 N Dearborn St ☎312/984-1718. This charming surprise, in a series of underground rooms, serves up delicious ravioli, grilled sea scallops, and risotto. Closed Sun.

The West Side: Greek-town and Little Italy

Francesca's on Taylor 1400 W Taylor St ☎312/829-2828. Assorted Francesca-family restaurants dot Chicago. This relatively subdued example offers some of the best Italian food in the city, at moderate prices. Don't be surprised to find a crowd here all day.

Parthenon 314 S Halsted St at Jackson ☎312/726-2407. One of the oldest places in Greektown, but still deservedly popular: saganaki (fried cheese doused with Metaxa brandy and ignited) was invented here.

Pegasus 130 S Halsted St at Adams ☎312/226-3377. Lively Greek option, where true hospitality and evocative wall murals add to the appeal. Stuffed squid and pastitsio (macaroni, meat, and cheese casserole) are recommended. During the summer the rooftop garden has a superb view of the Loop skyline.

Santorini 800 W Adams St at Halsted ☎312/829-8820. The decor recreates a Greek island village, and the food is beguiling, too; grilled octopus and lamb exohiko (wrapped in filo pastry and fried) are highlights.

South Loop and the South Side

Dixie Kitchen 5225 S Harper, Harper Court ☎773/363-4943. Great soul food here includes pulled-pork sandwiches, breaded oysters with chili sauce, and desserts like peach cobbler and pecan pie.

Emperor's Choice 2238 S Wentworth Ave at 23rd ☎312/225-8800. This attractive storefront serves delicious egg rolls and well-priced seafood dishes. Try the steamed clams, poached shrimp, or lobster.

Gioco 1312 S Wabash Ave at 13th ☎312/939-3870. Immensely popular (and somewhat expensive) place, whose classic, meticulously prepared Italian cuisine is drawing a hip crowd to the rapidly gentrifying South Loop district.

Mellow Yellow 1508 E 53rd St ☎773/667-2000. Casual, popular South-Side joint with a real 1970s feel and menu, albeit with a soul-food emphasis – catfish, steaks, seafood, and rotisserie chicken, plus crêpes and quiche.

Opera 1301 S Wabash Ave at 13th ☎312/461-0161. High-class, high-concept, high-priced but very funky new-Chinese restaurant, housed in an opulent former film studio in the South Loop that holds a few private dining booths.

Near North Side and River North

 Bistrot Zinc 1131 N State St at Elm ☎312/337-1131. Very friendly, intimate neighborhood bistro, offering a quintessential French menu prepared and served just the way it should be, at good prices.

Café Iberico 739 N LaSalle Blvd at Chicago ☎312/573-1510. Authentic and reasonably priced tapas bar, where you can share plates of eggplant stuffed with goat's cheese or grilled octopus on potatoes.

Le Colonial 937 N Rush St at Walton ☎312/255-0088. This atmospheric evocation of some colonial outpost in Indochina, with its palm trees and rattan furniture, serves zestful French-influenced Vietnamese food at reasonable prices, and has outdoor seating in summer.

 Frontera Grill & Topolobampo 445 N Clark St at Illinois ☎312/661-1434. Wildly imaginative Mexican food: Frontera Grill is crowded and boisterous; Topolobampo is more refined and pricier. The front door and bar are shared between the two. Closed Sun & Mon.

Gino's East 633 N Wells St at Ontario ☎312/943-1124. Despite its relocation into larger but meticulously aged premises, this remains a Chicago tradition, with huge deep-dish pizzas and graffiti-covered walls. Expect a considerable wait to get in, and at least 40 minutes for your pizza to cook.

Nacional 27 325 W Huron St at Franklin

☎ 312/664-2727. This popular Latin place draws its menu from every imaginable Central American cuisine, and has salsa dancing on weekends.

Pizzeria Uno 29 E Ohio St at Wabash ☎ 312/321-1000. The original outlet of the chain that put Chicago deep-dish pizza on the map.

Portillo's 100 W Ontario St at La Salle ☎ 312/587-8930. Much-loved local chain that serves delicious Chicago hot dogs and the best Italian beef sandwich in the city.

Star of Siam 11 E Illinois St at State ☎ 312/670-0100. Terrific Thai food served in a spacious, inviting setting. The tom yum soup, pad Thai, and curries are top-notch.

SushiSamba Rio 504 N Wells St at Illinois ☎ 312/595-2300. Very fancy restaurant-cum-bar offering a gimmicky but nonetheless delicious melding of Japanese (sushi) and South American (ceviche) cuisine; lots of fish, naturally, but also tender meats. High prices, but memorable atmosphere.

Lincoln Park and Old Town

Ann Sather 929 W Belmont Ave near Clark ☎ 773/348-2378; also four other locations around town. Chicago institution that serves Swedish-inspired breakfast, brunch, and dinner.

Boka 1729 N Halsted St near Willow ☎ 773/337-6070. Stylish option close to the Steppenwolf Theatre, serving inventive and tasty dishes from around the world on a changing weekly menu that offers small ($7–12) and large ($19–35) portions, depending on your appetite.

Café Ba-Ba-Reeba! 2024 N Halsted St at Armitage ☎ 773/935-5000. A real Spanish hot spot, offering a good range of hot and cold tapas, filling paella, and, of course, sangría.

Charlie Trotter's 816 W Armitage Ave at Halsted ☎ 773/248-6228. Prepare for a superb experience: Chef Trotter is a true artist, and his daring creations, such as caviar-stuffed quail eggs or Maine salmon with blood sausage, are constantly evolving. The prices are appropriately high; you can only choose between two set menus, at $115 (vegetarian) or $135. Closed Sun & Mon.

Old Jerusalem 1411 N Wells St at Evergreen ☎ 312/944-3304. This long-time favorite serves reasonable Middle Eastern dishes; the falafel is great. Bring your own beer or wine.

RJ Grunts 2056 Lincoln Park W at Clark ☎ 773/929-5363. Check out the great burgers and a top-notch salad bar – purported to be the nation's first – in a casual neighborhood atmosphere.

Topo Gigio 1516 N Wells St at Burton ☎ 312/266-9355. Well-prepared, moderately priced Italian cuisine, served by very friendly staff in a peaceful garden amid the Old Town bustle. The homemade tiramisu is fabulous.

Twin Anchors 1655 N Sedgwick St at North ☎ 312/266-1616. You'll wait for a seat in this neighborhood spot, famed for its BBQ ribs, but the interesting clientele and 1950s-style bar make it worth it.

Wishbone 1001 W Washington Blvd at Morgan ☎ 312/850-2663. The rich, down-home Southern cooking comes in large portions at reasonable prices. The yardbird chicken (served with a red-pepper sauce), baked ham, and sweet-potato pie are wonderful.

Wicker Park

Café Absinthe 1954 W North Ave at Milwaukee ☎ 773/278-4488. Fine French dining in a romantic, casual setting. One of the city's best restaurants, with prices to match.

Earwax Cafe 1564 N Milwaukee Ave at North ☎ 773/772-4019. Bustling, inexpensive coffeehouse in a happening neighborhood, with an extensive menu of light vegetarian meals as well as meaty deli sandwiches.

Irazu 1865 N Milwaukee Ave near Armitage ☎ 773/252-5687. Very cheap but wonderful Costa Rican diner, serving great burritos plus a small selection of authentic main courses. Closed Sun.

Drinking

While not quite as wild as in the bootlegging days of speakeasies and Prohibition, Chicago remains a consummate boozers' town, and is one of the best US cities for bars, catering to just about every group and interest, with many open until 3, 4, or even 5am. Although far from picturesque, the cement strip that is Division Street, in the two blocks west of State Street, has become one of the hippest night spots, with a handful of joints tucked away on side streets off the main drag. Wicker Park is the trendiest hangout zone, while Halsted Street between Belmont and Addison is known as Boystown for its gay bars and clubs.

The hundred-plus cafés and coffeehouses across the city may not have taken the place of the traditional taverns, but they're a growing alternative.

Saloons, pubs, and bars

Bar Louie 226 W Chicago Ave ☎312/337-3313. Friendly, casual place in River North (the first in a burgeoning chain), with tables out front and cheap bar food. Open until 4am.

Berghoff's 17 W Adams St ☎312/427-3170. This former men-only stand-up bar in a showcase c.1900 tavern next to The Berghoff restaurant is crowded and congenial at lunchtime and after work.

Cavanaugh's 53 W Jackson St ☎312/939-3125. Visit this Loop favorite in the historic Monadnock Building for an after-work drink. Experience the warm interior with antique woodwork, Harp on draft, and a full menu.

Delilah's 2771 N Lincoln Ave ☎773/472-2771. At this dimly lit bar (playing underground records – from rock to alt-country – at night), choose from a great selection of beers (150) and whiskeys.

Goose Island Brewing Co. 1800 N Clybourn Ave ☎312/915-0071. Forty ales and lagers, including the popular Honker's Ale, are brewed on the premises at this lively Lincoln Park haunt, which ranks as Chicago's best brewpub.

Green Door Tavern 678 N Orleans St ☎312/664-5496. In an unlikely spot near the galleries of River North, this historic place is chock-full of Chicago memorabilia: some pure kitsch, others genuine antiques. Drink at the long bar or settle into a cozy back room to sample home-style cooking.

John Barleycorn 658 W Belden Ave ☎773/348-8899. A dimly lit Lincoln Park pub dating to 1890. This former speakeasy and John Dillinger haunt has retained many of its original fixtures. The lovely garden is open in summer.

Matchbox 770 N Milwaukee Ave ☎312/666-9292. All kinds of Chicago characters squeeze into this phenomenally narrow little neighborhood hangout on the West Side.

Old Town Ale House 219 W North Ave ☎312/944-7020. An eclectic crowd of scruffy regulars and yuppies mingle in this convivial haunt, complete with a pinball machine and a library of paperbacks.

Rainbo Club 1150 N Damen Ave ☎773/489-5999. Busy Wicker Park bar and hangout for indie-rock types.

Signature Room 875 N Michigan Ave ☎312/787-7230. Slightly down-at-the-heel but nonetheless unmissable cocktail lounge on the 96th floor of the John Hancock Building, with the city's best skyline views.

Gay and lesbian bars

Big Chicks 5024 N Sheridan Rd, Andersonville ☎773/728-5511. A friendly place for a mixed crowd, with a no-charge jukebox and free barbecues out back on summer Sundays.

The Closet 3325 N Broadway ☎773/477-8533. A tiny, cramped but congenial lesbian bar that attracts gay men as well.

Gentry 440 N State St ☎773/836-0933. Cabaret and piano bar popular with corporate types after work.

Sidetrack 3349 N Halsted St ☎773/477-9189. One of the most popular bars along Halsted's gay strip in Lakeview.

Nightlife and entertainment

From its earliest frontier days, Chicago has had some of the best nightlife in the US. Blues fans who celebrate Chicago as the birthplace of Muddy Waters' urban blues will be disappointed that the original South-Side headquarters of Chess Records, at 2120 S Michigan Avenue (immortalized in a Rolling Stones song recorded on site), has yet to become a museum. However, the city remains proud of its blues traditions, and continues to innovate in other genres, such as the energetic dance beat of 1980s house music as well as the groundbreaking jazz of the Art Ensemble of Chicago.

Nightclubs aplenty can be found all over town, especially along Halsted Street, Lincoln Avenue, and Clark Street on the North Side. Uptown, at the intersection of North Broadway and Lawrence, is a bit down-at-the-heel, but has half a dozen good venues. The best gay clubs congregate in the Lincoln Park area. Highbrow pursuits are also well provided for: Chicago's classical music, dance, and theater are world-class.

For what's-on information, Chicagoans pick up free weeklies like the excellent Chicago Reader (available Thursday afternoon), the New City, and the gay and lesbian Windy City Times. Full listings also appear in the Friday issues of the Chicago Sun-Times and the Chicago Tribune, while Chicago magazine has useful arts and restaurant listings.

Blues

B.L.U.E.S. 2519 N Halsted St ☎ 773/528-1012, www.chicagobluesbar.com. Opened in the 1970s, B.L.U.E.S. is still going strong, though a little over-touristed. The tiny stage has been graced by all the greats.

Buddy Guy's Legends 754 S Wabash Ave ☎ 312/427-0333, www.buddyguys.com. South Loop club owned by veteran bluesman Buddy Guy, with great acoustics and atmosphere, aims to present the very best local and national acts. Not as touristy as other downtown blues clubs.

Kingston Mines 2548 N Halsted St ☎ 773/477-4646. Top-notch local and national acts on two stages play to an up-for-it, partying crowd.

Rosa's Lounge 3420 W Armitage Ave ☎ 773/342-0452, www.rosaslounge.com. Run by Mama Rosa and her son, this West-Side club is undoubtedly the friendliest blues joint around. For real aficionados. Closed Sun & Mon.

Jazz

Andy's 11 E Hubbard St ☎ 312/642-6805. Very popular with the after-work crowd; informal with moderate prices.

The Cotton Club 1710 S Michigan Ave ☎ 312/341-9787. A sophisticated live-music venue and disco, The Cotton Club attracts a well-dressed, mellow crowd.

Green Dolphin Street 2200 N Ashland Ave ☎ 773/395-0066, www.jazzitup.com. This swanky, pricey restaurant and jazz club offers a solid line-up of regular performers. Closed Mon.

The Green Mill 4802 N Broadway ☎ 773/878-5552. One of the best – and most beautiful – rooms for local and national talent. Located in the tough Uptown neighborhood, and proud of its checkered Prohibition-era past.

Jazz Showcase 59 W Grand Ave ☎ 312/670-2473, www.jazzshowcase.com. A classy, dressy room that hosts premier jazz by top names.

Rock

Cubby Bear 1059 W Addison St ☎ 773/327-1662, www.cubbybear.com. A sports bar during the day – right next to Wrigley Field – this place transforms itself after dark into one of the city's most boisterous and eclectic live venues. Popular with aging dinosaurs more than new bands, but still fun.

Double Door 1572 N Milwaukee Ave ☎ 773/489-3160, www.doubledoor.com. Former biker bar turned hip music venue in the Wicker Park/Bucktown neighborhood. Indie bands play almost every night.

Elbo Room 2871 N Lincoln Ave ☎ 773/549-5549, www.elboroomchicago.com. Easygoing venue specializing in emerging bands, whether indie, pop, funk, or ska.

Empty Bottle 1035 N Western Ave ☎ 773/276-3600, www.emptybottle.com. Loud hole-in-the-wall club where you might hear just about anything: experimental jazz, alternative rock, hip-hop, house, dub, and progressive country.

House of Blues 329 N Dearborn St ☎ 312/527-2583, www.hob.com. Despite its name, this Near North chain venue puts on all kinds of music, including a popular gospel brunch on Sundays.

Metro 3730 N Clark St ☎ 773/549-0203, www.metrochicago.com. Arguably the top spot in the city, this club, in an old cinema building, regularly hosts young British bands trying to break the States, plus DJ mixes.

Folk, country, and world music

Fitzgerald's 6615 W Roosevelt, Berwyn ☎ 708/788-2118. In the western suburb of Berwyn, an excellent venue for alt-country, Americana, Cajun, and zydeco.

HotHouse 31 E Balbo Drive ☎ 312/362-9707, www.hothouse.net. Not-for-profit South Loop arts center that puts on fabulous world-music gigs on Friday and Saturday nights.

Old Town School of Folk Music 4544 N Lincoln Ave. Established in 1959, this place presents about 80 concerts a year, including just about every type of folk and world music, and also offers great classes.

Schubas Tavern 3159 N Southport Ave, Lakeview ☎ 773/525-2508, www.schubas.com. A quirky roster of up-and-coming acts, from rock to alt-country or roots, appear at this intimate, all-but-perfect neighborhood venue.

Dance

Crobar 1543 N Kingsbury St ☎ 312/266-1900, www.crobarnightclub.com. Exclusive, hyper-trendy warehouse club near the river, spinning the newest techno and house.

Excalibur 632 N Dearborn St ☎ 312/266-1944. City institution blasting out rock and R&B on several floors to a predominantly out-of-town crowd.

Funky Buddha Lounge 728 W Grand Ave ☎ 312/666-1695, www.funkybuddha.com. Small

West-Side club where the resident DJs attract a devoted young crowd.

Sidetrack 3349 N Halsted St (T 773/477-9189.

Huge, very glitzy Wrigleyville club, with a garden bar and rooftop deck, that's Chicago's biggest gay venue. Open every night of the week.

Smartbar 3730 N Clark St, underneath the Metro (see opposite) (T 773/549-0203, @www.smartbarchicago.com. Great techno and house on the weekend in post-industrial Wrigleyville surroundings. Weekdays see a mix of punk, goth, and Eighties. The whole complex is open late – until 5am Fri and Sat.

Sound-Bar 226 W Ontario St (T 312/787-4480, @www.sound-bar.com. Near North mega-club that's taken the city by storm, with its sleek decor and massive dancefloor.

Theater and comedy

While it was once every Chicago actor and playwright's ambition to end up in New York, many are now perfectly happy to remain here. The city supports numerous theater companies, several of which boast reputations as good as any in the US. Best known of all is Steppenwolf, with alumni like John Malkovich and Gary Sinise, based at 1650 N Halsted St (T 312/335-1650, @www.steppenwolf.org), while others include the Court Theatre, 5535 S Ellis St (T 773/753-4472, @www.courttheatre.org), and the Goodman Theatre, 200 S Columbus Ave (T 312/443-3800, @www.goodman-theatre.org). Comedy, too, is particularly vibrant; Chicago's improvisational scene is considered the best in the nation, with the troupe at Second City – who now spread their activities across three separate auditoriums centered on 1616 N Wells St (T 312/337-3992, @www.secondcity.com) – especially heralded.

Classical music, opera, and dance

The world-famous Chicago Symphony Orchestra is based at Symphony Center, 220 S Michigan Ave (T 312/294-3000, @www.chicagosymphony.org), but spends much of the year on tour. The 186-member Symphony Chorus performs both classical and contemporary choral works with the CSO, specifically in summer at the open-air Ravinia Festival, 25 miles north of downtown Chicago (@www.ravinia.org). Home for the Lyric Opera of Chicago is the beautiful Civic Opera House, 20 N Wacker Drive (T 312/332-2244, @www.lyricopera.org); its season is from mid-September to early February, and most performances end up being sold out. Chicago can also boast two world-class dance companies: the classically oriented Joffrey Ballet, based at 70 E Lake St (T 312/739-0120, @www.joffrey.com), and the more contemporary Hubbard Street Dance Chicago, 1147 W Jackson Blvd (T 312/850-9744, @www.hubbardstreetdance.com).

Sports

Staunchly blue-collar Chicago must be among the best US cities for watching sports, as Chicagoans are, for better or worse, loyally supportive of their teams. The city's most successful outfit in recent memory was the Michael Jordan-led Bulls basketball team, winner of six NBA championships in the 1990s (T 312/559-1212, @www.nba.com/bulls). Now, though, with the Jordan era long gone, Bulls fans have little to cheer about. The team plays in the ultramodern United Center, 1901 W Madison St, as do hockey's Blackhawks (same phone, @www.chicagoblackhawks.com). The Bears football team (T 312/295-6600, @www.chicagobears.com) can be seen at the 66,000-capacity Soldier Field, 425 E McFetridge Drive, at the south end of Grant Park. As for baseball, neither Chicago team had won a World Series since 1917 until the White Sox finally broke the streak in 2005. Perhaps the destruction of their Comiskey Park home had something to do with it, though its replacement, the US Cellular Field stadium, which stands alongside at 333 W 35th St on the South Side, feels pretty soulless (T 312/831-1SOX, @chicago.whitesox.com). The long-suffering Cubs still call grand old Wrigley Field home (T 312/831-CUBS, @chicago.cubs.mlb.com).

Central Illinois

Interstates 55 and 57 slice south through the Corn Belt of central Illinois from Chicago. Parallel to I-55, the legendary Route 66 began its run here, cutting through the state before running all the way to the Pacific Coast – you might try to catch a glimpse of it, as some old-time diners and other Americana still stand. One worthwhile stop, reachable by either interstate, is the state capital, Springfield, which commemorates president and former resident Abraham Lincoln. Otherwise, if you're on your way south, the college towns of Bloomington-Normal and Champaign-Urbana are the only good urban stops, while if you're heading west from Chicago spare the time to pause at the delightful old river town of Galena.

Springfield

Two hundred miles south of Chicago, the Illinois state capital, SPRINGFIELD, spreads out from a neat, leafy downtown grid. Abraham Lincoln honed his legal and political skills here, and tourists flock to his old homes, haunts, and final resting place. What they find is neither tacky nor pompous, but rather sites that illuminate not only the life of the sixteenth president of the USA, but also the uncertainty and turmoil of a nation on the brink of civil war.

The number one Lincoln attraction is the only house he ever owned, and which he shared with his wife Mary from 1844 to 1861. For a free narrated tour, pick up tickets at the Lincoln Home Visitor Center, 426 S Seventh St (daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎217/492-4241, 🌐www.nps.gov/liho). Assorted displays and a brief film help to pass the time while you wait for the next available tour.

Four blocks north, at 212 N Sixth St, the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum (Mon, Tues & Thurs–Sat 9am–5pm, Wed 9am–8.30pm; $7.50; ☎217/558-8844, 🌐www.alplm.org) is a state-of-the-art new facility that covers Lincoln's career in exhaustive detail, with fascinating original documents and interactive displays, as well as some simple mock-ups aimed largely at kids.

In the restored Greek Revival Old State Capitol, at Sixth and Adams nearby (mid-April to Aug daily 9am–5pm; Sept to mid-April Tues–Sat 9am–5pm; free; ☎217/785-7960), Lincoln attended at least 240 Supreme Court hearings, and proclaimed in 1858, “A house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe this government cannot endure permanently, half slave and half free.” Objects, busts, and papers relating to Lincoln and the Democrat Stephen A. Douglas, whom he debated (and subsequently lost to) in Illinois' 1858 US Senate election, and whom he defeated in the 1860 presidential race, can be found throughout the building. At the tastefully renovated Lincoln Depot on Tenth and Monroe streets (April–Aug daily 10am–4pm; free), the newly elected president said goodbye to Springfield in February 1861 and boarded a train for his inauguration in Washington, DC (a video illustrates the twelve-day journey). The next time he returned was in his funeral train. Lincoln's Tomb, a 117ft-tall obelisk, stands in beautiful Oak Ridge Cemetery on the north side of town. The vault, adorned with busts and statuettes, is open to the public (June–Aug Mon & Wed–Sun 9am–5pm, Tues 9am–8pm; March–May & Sept–Oct daily 9am–5pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–4pm; free). Inside are inscribed the words, “Now he belongs to the ages.”

The Illinois State Museum, at Spring and Edwards in the same complex as the current Illinois State Capitol, is crammed with natural history and Native American and contemporary art exhibits, along with the interactive “At Home in the Heartland” display, which traces Illinois family life from 1700 to 1970 (Mon–Sat 8.30am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free). Completed in 1904, the Dana-Thomas House, 301

E Lawrence Ave (tours Wed–Sun 9am–4pm; $3; ☎ 217/782-6776), survives as the best-preserved and most completely furnished example of Frank Lloyd Wright's early Prairie house, with more than four hundred pieces of glasswork, original art, and light fixtures. Just north of town, at 2075 Peoria Rd, Bill Shea proudly displays fifty years' worth of road signs, gas pumps, and Route 66 memorabilia at Shea's Gas Station Museum (Tues–Fri 7am–4pm, Sat 7am–noon; free).

Twenty miles northwest of Springfield on Hwy-97, Lincoln's New Salem State Historic Site marks where the future president first lived in this area, from 1831 to 1837. In this backwoods clearing he clerked in a store, volunteered for the Black Hawk War, served as postmaster, and failed in business before taking up legal studies and moving to Springfield to pursue his political career. Today the recreated village features simple homes, workshops, a store, and a tavern. Meanwhile, the visitor center hosts a worthwhile exhibit on pioneer lifestyles (mid-April to Aug daily 9am–5pm, March to mid-April & Sept–Oct Wed–Sun 9am–5pm, Nov–Feb Wed–Sun 8am–4pm; suggested donation $2; ☎ 217/632-4000, @ www.lincolnsnewsalem.com).

Practicalities

Amtrak trains from Chicago and St Louis roll in at Third and Washington streets downtown, at manageable times. Greyhound drops off two miles east of downtown at 2351 S Dirksen Parkway. The Convention and Visitors Bureau, 109 N Seventh St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 217/789-2360 or 1-800/545-7300, @ www.visit-springfieldillinois.com), has brochures and maps.

The best selection of inexpensive accommodation, including a Days Inn (☎ 217/529-0171; ③), lies off I-55 at the Dirksen Parkway exit. More central options include the Mansion View Inn, 529 S Fourth St (☎ 217/544-7411 or 1-800/252-1083, @ www.mansionview.com; ④). The Inn at 835, 835 S Second St (☎ 217/523-4466, @ www.innat835.com; ⑤), is a charming ten-room B&B converted from a 1909 downtown apartment block.

Springfield's cafés seem to have exclusive rights to a phenomenon known as the Horseshoe – ostensibly a meat sandwich, but fried, covered in melted cheese, and very tasty. Norb Andy's, 518 E Capitol Ave (☎ 217/523-7777), musters up the best Horseshoes around. The Cozy Dog Drive-In, 2935 S Sixth St (☎ 217/525-1992), claims to be the birthplace of the Cozy Dog (also known as the corn dog), a deep-fried, batter-drenched hot dog on a stick. At the other end of the health spectrum, Augie's Front Burner, 109 S Fifth St (☎ 217/544-6979), serves up good California-style and vegetarian meals.

Galena

The neat little town of GALENA, a few miles short of both Iowa and Wisconsin in the far northwest corner of Illinois, has changed little since its nineteenth-century heyday. Thanks to its sheltered location just a few miles up the Galena River, it was a major port of call for Mississippi River steamboats. These days, the only traffic it gets are the day-trippers who come to admire the gentle crescent of Main Street, tucked in behind an immaculate grassy levee. Its impeccable redbrick facades and graceful skyline of spires and crosses place it among the most attractive river towns in the US.

Galena boasts of having contributed nine generals to the Union army during the Civil War, the most significant of whom was Ulysses S. Grant. Grant moved to the town in 1860, working as a clerk in a leather store owned by his father and operated by his two brothers. Some contemporary accounts speak of him as the town lush, the kind of person decent folk crossed the street to avoid. However, his West Point education encouraged the townspeople to appoint him as colonel when they raised the 21st Illinois regiment on the outbreak of war. When he came home, in August 1865, it was as overall commander of the victorious Union army.

The grateful citizens of Galena presented Grant with a house, a couple of blocks up Bouthillier Street on the far side of the river (April–Oct Wed–Sun 9am–5pm, Nov–March Wed–Sun 9am–4pm; suggested donation $3; ☎815/777-3310). It's not a grand place by any means, but it was in the plainly furnished downstairs drawing room that Grant received the news of his election as president in 1868. Although he went on to serve two terms, he is commonly agreed to have been a better general than president. His administrations were plagued by scandal, and he lost all his own money through unwise investments. The family fortunes were restored just before his death in 1885, when Mark Twain first persuaded Grant to write, and then published, his best-selling Memoirs.

Practicalities

The 1857 Railroad Museum, across the river from the town proper at 101 Bouthillier St, serves as the local visitor center (Mon–Thurs 9am–5pm, Fri & Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎815/777-4390 or 1-877/464-2536, 🌐www.galena.org).

The plush DeSoto House Hotel, 230 S Main St (☎815/777-0090 or 1-800/343-6562, 🌐www.desotohouse.com; 5), was Grant's campaign headquarters in 1868. Its grand Generals' Restaurant serves steak and seafood dinners. If your budget won't stretch that far, the Triangle Motel, a mile west at highways 20 and 84 (☎815/777-2897 or 1-877/425-3629, 🌐www.geocities.com/triangleinn; 2), makes a good-value alternative. As for inexpensive spots to eat, Boone's Place, 515 S Main St (☎815/777-4488), is a reliable espresso and sandwich bar.

Wisconsin

Nearly as many cows as humans call WISCONSIN home; about four million of each reside in this rich, rolling farmland. However, America's self-proclaimed "Dairyland" is more than just one giant pasture. Beyond the massive red barns and silvery silos lie endless pine forests, some fifteen thousand sky-blue lakes, postcard-pretty valleys, and dramatic bluffs. The state, whose Ojibway name means "gathering of the waters," is bordered by Lake Michigan to the east, Lake Superior in the north and, to the west, the Mississippi and St Croix rivers.

The history of Wisconsin exemplifies the standard formula for westward expansion. Seventeenth-century French and British explorers began by trading with the Native Americans and soon ousted them from their land. The European settlers who followed – predominantly Germans, Scandinavians, and Poles – tended to be liberal and progressive; such major national social programs as labor laws for women and children, assistance for the elderly and the disabled, and unemployment compensation were rooted here. On the downside, Senator Joseph McCarthy, the infamous 1950s witch-hunter, was born in Grand Chute, former headquarters of the right-wing John Birch Society.

Wisconsin today is best known for its liquids. The milk from all those cattle yields cheeses of all kinds, while the beer, as the song says, is what made Milwaukee famous. Sparkling Madison apart, Wisconsin's other cities — La Crosse, Green Bay, Oshkosh — can veer toward the dull side, but they're also clean, safe, and amiable, while the smaller towns can be distinctive and charming.

Getting around Wisconsin

You'll be hard put to explore Wisconsin's remote north, or key locales like the Door County peninsula, without a vehicle. Public transportation is better in the south. Milwaukee and, to a lesser extent, Madison are hubs for Greyhound and Amtrak. Five trains daily connect Milwaukee and Chicago, a ninety-minute journey, while one crosses the state in the south en route for Seattle, via Columbus (near Madison), Portage, Wisconsin Dells, Tomah, and La Crosse.

Milwaukee

Bustling MILWAUKEE, the “Deutsch Athens” of southeastern Wisconsin, is a combination of the down-home and the sophisticated, known for its lakeside and ethnic festivals and huge breweries. Visually it's a mix of elegant Teutonic architecture, rambling Victorian warehouses, and tasteful waterfront developments. Its prime position on the shores of Lake Michigan, at the confluence of three rivers, made it a meeting place for Native American groups long before white settlers moved in, while the opulent mansions lining the lake commemorate the industrialists who helped make this Wisconsin's economic and manufacturing capital. By 1850, less than two decades old and with a population of twenty thousand, Milwaukee already had a dozen breweries and 225 saloons. The contemporary estimate of six thousand bars — one per hundred residents — is not necessarily apocryphal.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Milwaukee is well served by air, rail, and bus. Its airport, eight miles south of downtown at 5300 S Howell Ave, is connected with the city center by bus #80 ($1.75), and by shared-ride van service ($11). A taxi will set you back about $26. Amtrak is at 433 W St Paul Ave, while Greyhound (☎414/272-2156) and Wisconsin Coach (☎262/542-8864; 🌐www.wisconsincoach.com), serving southeastern Wisconsin, operate out of the same terminal at 606 N James Lovell Drive. Badger Bus (☎414/276-7490, 🌐www.badgerbus.com), across the street at no. 635, runs to Madison and points between (six daily; $30 roundtrip). Take care in and around the stations at night, which can be dodgy.

Milwaukee's Visitor Center is at Discovery World, at Pier Wisconsin (daily 8am–5pm; ☎414/273-7222 or 1-800/554-1448, 🌐www.visitmilwaukee.org), and has details on such festivals as the eleven-day Summerfest (late June to early July), also known as “The Big Gig,” and the Wisconsin State Fair (early Aug).

Getting around Milwaukee is easy and inexpensive via the county's extensive transportation system (flat fare $1.75; 24hr info ☎414/344-6711). The Milwaukee Loop is a special trolley service connecting 25 stops in the city center (June–Aug, Wed–Thurs 11am–10pm, Fri & Sat 11am–midnight, Sun 11am–6pm; free).

Accommodation

Accommodation in Milwaukee runs the gamut from low-budget motels to upmarket chains and luxury hotels. Alternatively, Cedarburg is a tran-quail, picture-postcard-like village twenty miles north; the Washington House (T 262/375-3550, W www.washingtonhouseinn.com; 4-6) and Stagecoach Inn (T 262/375-0208 or 1-888/375-0208, W www.stagecoach-inn-wi.com; 4-6) here are charming.

Ambassador Hotel 2308 W Wisconsin Ave
T 414/342-8400, W www.ambassadorhotelmilwaukee.com. A beautifully restored Art Deco hotel from 1928, featuring modern-day amenities. 5

The Astor 924 E Juneau Ave T 414/271-4220 or 1-800/558-0200; W www.theastorhotel.com. This classy, historic 1920s hotel offers free continental breakfast and health club passes. Extended stays are available. 4

Best Western Inn Towne Hotel 710 N Old World Third St T 414/224-8400. Modern hotel with comfortable, convenient rooms downtown. 4

Brumder Mansion 3046 W Wisconsin Ave T 414/342-9767 or 866/793-3676; W www.brumdermansion.com. Fabulously decorated, enormous B&B with an in-house theater, just minutes from downtown. Rooms include antiques, marble, rich draperies, and stained glass. 4

Comfort Inn & Suites Downtown Lakeshore 916 E State St T 414/276-8800 or 1-800/328-7275. Clean, very comfortable rooms in a nice part of downtown. 4

The City

Downtown Milwaukee, split north to south by the Milwaukee River, is only a mile long and a few blocks wide. Handsome old buildings and gleaming, modern steel-and-glass structures are comfortably corralled together on three sides by spaghetti-like strands of freeway, with Lake Michigan forming the fourth boundary. To bolster the allure of downtown, the city has successfully poured millions into its Riverwalk development along the Milwaukee River, now something of a nightlife center and the site of many public entertainment events. East of the river on the lakefront, the Milwaukee Art Museum, 700 N Art Museum Drive (daily 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm; $8; T 414/224-3200, W www.mam.org), contains works by European masters and twentieth-century Americans. One wing – with stunning views of the lake – is devoted to a comprehensive collection of Post-Impressionist paintings. Architect Santiago Calatrava's spectacular expansion is an attraction in itself, the white wings of the building flapping up and down three times each day to reduce heat gain and glare. Close by, Discovery World at Pier Wisconsin, 500 N. Harbor Dr (Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; $15.95; T 414/765-9966, W www.discoveryworld.org), features popular hands-on exhibits and the S/V Denis Sullivan schooner. Downtown at 800 W Wells St are the Milwaukee Public Museum (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $11; T 414/278-2702, W www.mpm.edu), where the intertwined histories and mysteries of the earth, nature, and humankind are imaginatively presented through dioramas such as “The Streets of Old Milwaukee,” and the Humphrey IMAX Dome Theater, which has a giant, wraparound screen (show times vary; $8-10, $15 for a combo ticket; T 414/319-4629, W www.mpm.edu/imax).

West of downtown, the 37-room Pabst Mansion, at 2000 W Wisconsin Ave (Feb–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; closed Mon mid-Jan through Feb; $8; W www.pabstmansion.com), was completed in 1893 as the castle of a local beer baron and is a knockout example of ornate Flemish Renaissance architecture, featuring exquisite wood-, glass-, and ironwork. Although the Pabst Brewery here has shut down, the Miller Brewing Company, five miles west of downtown at 4251 W State St, still offers free behind-the-scenes tours (Mon–Sat, usually 10:30am–3:30pm but times change frequently; T 414/931-2337 or 1-800/944-LITE; bus #31), culminating in generous samples for over-21s. The Sprecher microbrewery, seven miles north of downtown, just off of I-43 at 701 W Glendale Ave (Fri 4pm and Sat 1pm, 2pm & 3pm; reservations necessary; $3; T 414/964-2739), serves samples straight out of the barrel. Schlitz, the “beer that made Milwaukee famous,” was bought out by Stroh’s in the late 1980s and is now produced in Detroit.

The free one-hour tours of the engine plant responsible for Milwaukee’s other legendary brand name, Harley-Davidson, located in Wauwatosa in a rough area of town on 11700 W Capitol Drive at Hwy-45, are really for Harley devotees; bikes aren’t assembled here and if you don’t know your shovelheads from your knuckleheads you might feel out of place (Mon–Fri 9.30am–1pm; ☎414/343-7850 or 1-877/883-1450). For those more interested in Harley chic, there’s ample opportunity to purchase all kinds of merchandise throughout Milwaukee.

Eating

The Germans who first settled in Milwaukee determined its eating style – heavy on bratwurst, rye bread, and beer. Subsequent immigrants threw the collective kitchen wide open, making for a culinary cornucopia. With Lake Michigan lapping the city’s feet, freshwater fish can hardly be overlooked, especially on a Friday night when fish fries break out all over the place. Wherever you go, portions tend to be big.

Coquette Café 316 N Milwaukee St ☎414/219-2655. This charming spot in the Third Ward serves great soups and sandwiches as well as French-style pastries.

J Pandl's Whitefish Bay Inn 1319 E Henry Clay St ☎414/964-3800. Suburban landmark famous for reasonably priced grilled whitefish, colossal oven-baked pancakes, and its stein collection.

Mimma's Café 1307 E Brady St ☎414/264-6640. This unmissable Italian restaurant is classy yet casual, with imaginative, mouthwatering cuisine, like fried eggplant and artichoke ravioli, and an extensive wine list.

Sanford 1547 N Jackson St ☎414/276-9608. A fine-dining landmark with creative food and a seasonal menu that emphasizes Wisconsin ingredients, such as artisanal cheeses and locally grown vegetables.

Trocadero 1758 N Water St ☎414/272-0205. Hip, eastside spot that serves small plates and great continental dishes like grilled tuna and saffron shrimp.

Nightlife and entertainment

The concept of neighborhoods is vital to Milwaukee’s nightlife. On the east side, Brady Street, a counterculture haven in the 1960s, is now filled with Italian restaurants and bars. Walker’s Point, on the edge of downtown, has all sorts of gay and straight watering holes, while the Polish locals can be found farther south. Downtown gets busy on the weekend, especially either side of the river on Water and Old World Third streets between Juneau and State.

With more live theater than Chicago, high culture in downtown Milwaukee revolves around the Marcus Center for the Performing Arts, 929 N Water St (☎414/273-7121 or 1-888/612-3500, www.marcuscenter.org). The plush, historic Pabst Theater, 144 E Wells St (☎414/286-3663), and the Riverside Theater, 116 W Wisconsin Ave (☎414/286-3663), host well-known bands, while the Milwaukee Repertory Theater, 108 E Wells St (☎414/224-9490, www.milwaukeeep.com), has a reputation for staging risk-taking productions in addition to classics like “A Christmas Carol.” The Third Ward, a restored warehouse district on the edge of downtown full of shops and cafés, is home to the Broadway Theater Center, 158 N Broadway (☎414/291-7800), which in turn holds the adventurous Skylight Opera (www.skylightopera.com), Chamber Theatre (www.chamber-theatre.com) and Renaissance Theaterworks (www.r-t-w.com).

Café Vecchio 1137 N Old World Third St ☎414/273-5700. Upscale European-style coffee/wine bar featuring a one-hundred-plus wine list, espresso drinks, and twenty different martinis.

John Hawk's Pub 100 E Wisconsin Ave ☎414/272-3199. Riverside British-style establishment downtown serving food all day.

Milwaukee Ale House 233 N Water St

☎ 414/226-BEER. Milwaukee's sole all-grain, old-style brewpub serves filling food and its own beer.
Safe House 779 N Front St ☎ 414/271-2007, www.safe-house.com. This unique, tongue-in-cheek nightclub seems to come straight out of a spy film. Hint: enter through the "International Exports Ltd" office.

Up and Under Pub 1216 E Brady St ☎ 414/276-2677. Milwaukee's top blues bar.

Von Trier 2235 N Farwell Ave ☎ 414/272-1775. Black Forest decor and lots of imported beers – the Weise is a house specialty.

Wisconsin's eastern shores

North of Milwaukee, eastern Wisconsin is a melange of the industrial and the maritime, shaped by its proximity to Lake Michigan and the smaller Lake Winnebago. Of its towns, Green Bay, home to the legendary Packers, is best seen as a prelude to the most romanticized part of the state, Door County.

Green Bay

Few cities are as closely associated with a sports team as GREEN BAY is with the football Packers: 108 miles north of Milwaukee, it's the smallest city in the US to have a major-league professional sports franchise and the only one to own a team. The Green Bay Packer Hall of Fame, 1265 Lombardi Ave (daily 9am–6pm; $10; ☎ 920/569-7500), celebrates the dynastic years of the 1960s when the Pack won Superbowls I and II, as well as more recent stars such as Antonio Freeman and Brett Favre. Stuffed with hands-on displays, movie theaters, and memorabilia, the museum offers more than enough to satisfy any football fan. The Hall of Fame is located in an atrium inside the Packers' Lambeau Field stadium, which you can also tour (times vary; $11, or $19 combination ticket with Hall of Fame; www.packers.com).

Also in this busy but not particularly attractive port, the National Railroad Museum, 2285 S Broadway (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $9 in summer including train ride, $8 in winter; ☎ 920/437-7623, www.nationalrrmuseum.org), gives pride of place to the 1941 Union Pacific Big Boy locomotive, one of many such trains that served Green Bay's still-enormous freight depot. West on Hwy-172, opposite the airport, stands Wisconsin's biggest casino – Oneida Bingo & Casino. Tribal history, and the way in which profits from blackjack, video poker, and bingo have improved education and social and health facilities, are examined at the Oneida Nation Museum, seven miles west of Hwy-41 as it runs south from downtown (summer Tues–Sat 9am–5pm; rest of year closed Sat; $2; ☎ 920/869-2768, www.oneidanation.org).

The city's CVB (☎ 920/494-9507 or 1-888/867-3342, www.packercountry.com) sits in the shadow of the football stadium, off Lombardi Avenue, at 1901 S. Oneida St. Nearby, the Best Western Midway Hotel, 780 Armed Forces Drive (☎ 920/499-3161 or 1-800/528-1234, www.bestwestern.com; 4–5), has standard rooms and an indoor pool. Titletown Brewing Company, 200 Dousman St (☎ 920/437-2337), has a great setting for drinks in a former railroad depot downtown, while Brett Favre's Steakhouse, 1004 Brett Favre Pass (☎ 920/499-MVP4), is an upscale family restaurant/sports bar serving Southern cuisine.

Door County

From Sturgeon Bay, 140 miles north of Milwaukee, Door County sticks into Lake Michigan like a gradually tapering candle for 42 miles. With thirteen light-houses and a dozen fishing villages, its coastline smacks more of New England than the Midwest. The name derives from "Porte des Morts" or "Door of the Dead,” French for the treacherous eight-mile strait that severs Washington Island at its tip. Prices can be a little steep in the summer, but you get what you pay for – a small sliver of America devoid, for the most part, of crude billboards, sloppy diners, bland chain motels, and tacky amusements. Activities include browsing around galleries and attending arts festivals, as well as hiking, fishing, and boating. Renting a bicycle gives you the chance to follow an excellent cycle trail; try Fish Creek’s Nor Door Cyclery (☎ 920/868-2275, 🌐 www.nordoorsports.com), on Hwy-42 just north of the entrance to Peninsula State Park (see opposite), which has the best models. Winter is considerably quieter, with ice fishing, cross-country skiing, and snowmobiling being the predominant outdoor activities.

Pick up road and trail maps at the visitor center on Hwy-42/57 upon entering Sturgeon Bay (lobby open 24 hours; staffed times vary; ☎ 920/743-4456 or 1-800/52-RELAX, 🌐 www.doorcounty.com), where you can also phone local lodgings for free.

Exploring Door County

Door County’s only sizeable town, Sturgeon Bay, is a pleasant enough shipbuilding community, if not exactly abundant in small-town splendor. Ten miles north on Hwy-57 is the rolling Whitefish Dunes State Park, with its wispy sand dunes and popular mile-long beach (daily; $7 per car, $10 with out-of-state plates). A short trail beginning at the park’s Nature Center leads to the spectacular rocky Cave Point County Park (free), studded with wind- and wave-sculptured caves that are particularly dramatic in winter. In general beaches are better this side of the peninsula; you can also swim in several placid inland lakes.

Over on the western side, biking and hiking trails traverse the thickly forested hills of Peninsula State Park (situated between tiny Fish Creek and elegant Mennonite Ephraim, with its resplendent white-clapboard architecture). Peninsula Park is one of the most popular parks in Wisconsin and summer camping reservations usually book up in January. Just outside it on Hwy-42, the anachronistic Skyway Drive-In movie theater (☎ 920/854-9938) offers a couple of hours’ diversion on a warm night. Northeast of Ellison Bay near the peninsula’s tip, Newport State Park is one of Wisconsin’s least visited parks, with hiking, mountain biking, cross-country skiing, and backpack camping opportunities.

Washington Island, off the peninsula’s northern tip, offers a different cultural perspective. During Prohibition, the Icelandic community here convinced authorities that (40 percent alcohol) bitters were an ancient cure for rheumatism and dyspepsia. Cases of the stuff were shipped in, and the habit stuck; drop into the historic Nelsen’s Hall Bitters Pub and Restaurant (☎ 920/847-2496), about two miles from the Detroit Harbor dock for a taste. Motel rooms are available on Washington, but there’s no such luxury on the primitive neighboring 950-acre Rock Island. Once the private estate of a millionaire, it’s dotted with stark, stone buildings; no cars are allowed, so see it by foot or bike.

The islands are served by the Washington Island Ferry from Northport at the tip of the peninsula (daily; $10 roundtrip, cars $23, bikes $4; ☎ 920/847-2546 or 1-800/223-2094, 🌐 www.wisferry.com) and the Rock Island Ferry out of Jackson Harbor (May to early Oct daily; $9 roundtrip for foot traffic only; ☎ 920/847-3322).

Accommodation

Door County has a full range of accommodation, including some overpriced resorts. Prices given are for shoulder seasons (the best time to come); expect to pay up to 25 percent extra at the grander hotels in July and August, and a small weekend premium. Camping is idyllic. State park sites cost $9–17 (plus $9.50 reservation fee and $7 daily admission or $10 for out-of-state residents, annual $25/$35; ☎ 1-888/947-2757). Recommended private campgrounds include Path of Pines, County Road F off Hwy-42, near Fish Creek (mid-May to mid-Oct; $20; ☎ 920/868-3332 or 1-800/868-7802).

French Country Inn 3052 Spruce Lane, Ephraim ☎ 920/854-4001. This charming B&B close to the water offers seven rooms in the summer and four in the winter. Breakfast features organic, local produce when possible. ③

Julie's Park Café & Motel 4020 Main St, Fish Creek ☎ 920/868-2999; 🌐 www.juliesmotel.com. A cozy motel with clean rooms right next to the entrance of Peninsula State Park, The on-site restaurant is good. ③

Peninsula Park-View Resort Cty Rd A and Hwy-42 ☎ 920/854-2633, 🌐 www.peninsulaparkview.com. Friendly motel conveniently situated on the edge of Fish Creek at the quiet entrance of Peninsula State Park. Offers standard rooms as well as suites and cottages. Guests have free use of bikes. ③

Waterbury Inn 10321 Water St, Ephraim ☎ 920/854-2821 or 1-800/720-1624, 🌐 www.waterburyinn.com. This luxury property has one- and two-bedroom suites with fully-equipped kitchens. ③–⑥

White Gull Inn 4225 Main St, Fish Creek ☎ 920/868-3517 or 1-888/364-9542, 🌐 www.whitegullinn.com. The county's crown jewel, this elegant old inn, next to delightful Sunset Park, was built in 1896. Rooms are decorated in antiques, and some have fireplaces and double whirlpools. The inn is also known for its good restaurant (breakfast is included) and fish boil (see below) every night in summer. ⑥–⑧

Eating

One reward of a midsummer visit to Door County is the chance to sample the cherry in all its guises. Another traditional treat is the fish boil, a delicious outdoor ritual involving whitefish steaks, potatoes, and onions cooked in a cauldron over a wood fire. Rounded off with coleslaw and cherry pie, it's widely available for between $12 and $18.

Al Johnson's Swedish Restaurant Hwy-42, Sister Bay ☎ 920/854-2626. Pancakes, meatballs, and other fine Scandinavian dishes are featured at this local spot where goats are tethered atop the sod roof.

Bayside Tavern Main St, Fish Creek ☎ 920/868-3441. A convivial pub serves a celebrated chili, burgers, and a mean Friday-night perch fish fry.

Dal Santo's 147 N 3rd Ave, Sturgeon Bay ☎ 920/743-6100. Pizza, small plates, and Northern Italian dishes are served in this reliable dinner spot. Square Rigger Galley 6332 Hwy-57, Jacksonport ☎ 920/823-2408. This cocktail lounge and restaurant, on a private sandy beach, serves one of the county's best fish boils.

Wilson's 9990 Water St, Ephraim ☎ 920/854-2041. Burgers, sandwiches, and (along with the Door County Ice Cream Factory in Sister Bay) the top ice cream on the peninsula.

Northern Wisconsin

Sparsely settled northern Wisconsin has no large cities (and few small ones), and no interstates. It's a lake-studded wilderness, covered by enormous tracts of forest. Canoe its rivers, fish for record-breakers, or ski or snowmobile cross-country trails without having to fight for space. Bayfield and the Apostle Islands in the northwest are the obvious destinations, but Hayward, southeast of Superior, is home to the amazing National Freshwater Fishing Hall of Fame (mid-April to Nov daily 9:30am–4pm; $6.50), where you're invited to "Walk through the biggest fish in the world!" – a four-story, five-hundred-ton, fiberglass monster.

The Apostle Islands

All but one of the 22 islands scattered off Bayfield Peninsula in Lake Superior are part of the Apostle Islands National Lakeshore – a prized preserve for outdoors enthusiasts seeking to recharge depleted spiritual batteries.

The jumping-off point for the islands, BAYFIELD, once a lumbering and fishing village, is now a pleasant soft-sell tourist trap. Its sumptuous Old Rittenhouse Inn, 301 Rittenhouse Ave (☎ 715/779-5111 or 1-800/779-2129, 🌐 www.rittenhouseinn.com; 5–6), offers gourmet meals and well-appointed rooms. Tree Top House, 225 N Fourth St (☎ 715/779-3293; 2), features clean, simple doubles, while Island View B&B, 86720 Island View Lane (☎ 715/779-5307 or 1-888/309-5307, 🌐 www.island-viewbandb.com; 5), has secluded cottages and B&B-style accommodation a mile outside of town. Lodges and cottages are the centerpiece for the thirty gorgeous lakeside acres of Rocky Run (☎ 715/373-2551; 4), a resort outside Washburn eleven miles south. Bayfield's visitor center is at 42 S Broad St (☎ 715/779-3335 or 1-800/447-4094; 🌐 www.bayfield.org). Campers heading for the islands require permits from the visitor center (ask about permit fees) at 415 Washington Ave (summer daily; weekdays in winter; ☎ 715/779-3397). Getting around the islands is straightforward: Apostle Island's Cruise Services boats ($32.95; ☎ 715/779-3925, 🌐 www.apostleisland.com) wend their way past all of the islands, and will set down and pick up campers.

Madeline Island

By the fifteenth century Madeline Island was known to the Ojibway as Moningwunakauning – home of the golden-shafted woodpecker. Frenchman Michel Cadotte founded a fur-trading post there for the British in 1793, and subsequently married Equaysayway, daughter of a tribal leader, who took the name the island bears today. Madeline is now the only commercially developed Apostle Island, but it remains pretty low-key. Cadotte is buried in an overgrown cemetery in its sole town, LA POINTE.

La Pointe is accessible in summer via the twenty-minute ride on the Madeline Island Ferry Line from Bayfield (every 30min in peak season; cars $16.50 one-way, $33 roundtrip; passengers $5, $10; bikes $2.50, $5; ☎ 715/747-2051, 🌐 www.madferry.com). Its 180 year-round residents maintain an interesting little historical museum (May–Oct daily 10am–5pm; $5.50), and assorted sandy beaches, wide bays, scenic points, and forests can also be explored along 45 miles of sometimes rough road in the area. The Ferry Line conducts two-hour bus tours of the island (July and August, Mon–Sat, 1.30pm; $11).

The visitor center on Main Street (☎ 715/747-2801 or 1-888/475-3386, 🌐 www.madelineisland.com) can offer advice on places to stay; the Madeline Island Motel (☎ 715/747-3000; 4) and The Island Inn (☎ 715/747-2000; 5), both near the ferry dock, are probably the best value. A wooden footbridge from La Pointe across the lagoon leads to Big Bay State Park where the campgrounds share a splendid mile-long beach. Camping sites, on top of a bluff and close to caves in the park (☎ 1-888/947-2757), cost $10–14, plus a $10 reservation fee and a $7–$10 vehicle fee. Eating options include the pub in The Inn on Madeline Island resort (☎ 715/747-6322 or 1-800/822-6315, 🌐 www.madisland.com; 4–6) where homes, cottages, and condominiums can also be rented along a private beach.

Southern Wisconsin

Assorted highways and back roads lace up southern Wisconsin, passing over rolling hills and deep dales. The main urban center of Wisconsin's most populated region is the immensely likeable lakeside college town of Madison, which doubles as the state capital. Cozy Madison-area communities like New Glarus or Mount Horeb, and historic settlements like Little Norway have cute, walkable downtowns. Further north, Wisconsin Dells has a picturesque setting, but may appeal only to those who revel in tacky attractions and Americana. Undulating down the state's western border, alongside the Mississippi River, the scenic highway designated as The Great River Road runs from near Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

Madison

The history books record that MADISON, just over an hour west of Milwaukee, was little more than a wooded, mosquito-infested swamp when it was selected to be the political nucleus of the Wisconsin Territory in 1836. Today this stimulating, youthful metropolis is one of the most beautifully set cities in the US, with a handful of diverting museums, great restaurants, and a student-fueled nightlife scene.

Arrival, information, and accommodation

Greyhound buses run regularly to Milwaukee, Green Bay, and beyond, while Badger Coaches makes six trips daily from downtown Milwaukee ($17 one-way/$30 roundtrip; ☎ 608/255-6771, 🌐 www.badgerbus.com). Both operate out of the terminal at 2 S Bedford St. Van Galder/Coach USA buses depart from the Memorial Union to Chicago's O'Hare Airport (10 daily; $25 one-way, $50 roundtrip; ☎ 608/752-5407 or 1-800/747-0994, 🌐 www.coachusa.com/vangalder). Madison also has a recently renovated airport, (☎ 608/246-3380), offering flights all over the Midwest and further afield. The visitor center is at 615 E Washington Ave (Mon–Fri 8am–4.30pm; ☎ 608/255-2537 or 1-800/373-6376, 🌐 www.visitmadison.com).

Accommodation can be found throughout the city, though the budget chains lie to the east, off I-90/94. Mansion Hill Inn, 424 N Pinckney St (☎ 608/255-4230, 🌐 www.mansionhillinn.com; 6–6), is a sumptuous B&B a few blocks from the capitol offering complimentary wine service every night, while the Madison Concourse Hotel, 1 W Dayton St (☎ 608/257-6000 or 1-800/356-8293, 🌐 www.concoursehotel.com; 6–6) has spacious, well-appointed rooms steps from State Street. Right on Capitol Square, you can stay in one of the comfortable rooms at The Inn on the Park, 22 S Carroll St (☎ 608/257-8811 or 1-800/279-8811; 6). There's also a Hostelling International location at 141 S Butler St (☎ 608/441-0144, 🌐 www.madisonhostel.org), with 28 beds ($18 members/$21 non-members, 5 private rooms ($41 members/$44 non-members), and all the usual amenities: kitchen, laundry, Internet access, storage, and lockers.

The Town

Downtown is neatly laid out on an isthmus between lakes Mendota and Monona, with the white-granite State Capitol (tours Mon–Sat 9am–3pm excluding noon, Sun 1pm–3pm; ☎ 608/266-0382) sitting on a hill at its center, surrounded by shady trees, lawns, and park benches. The State Capitol square is the site of a nationally renowned farmers' market (late April–early Nov Sat 6am–2pm), where you can browse the local produce, and arts and crafts. Nearby, the brand-new, glassy Overture Center, 201 State St, hosts touring musicians, Broadway plays, and other cultural events (box office ☎ 608/258-4141; 🌐 www.overturecenter.com); inside, the Madison Museum of Contemporary Art (Tues–Wed 11am–5pm, Thurs–Fri 11am–8pm, Sat 10am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎ 608/257-0158; 🌐 www.mmoca.org), features touring exhibits.

Frank Lloyd Wright designed the Unitarian Meeting House, 900 University Bay Drive, in the late 1940s. Its sweeping, dramatically curved ceiling and triangle motif are definitely worth a look (May–Oct Mon–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 9am–noon;

$3). The lakeside Monona Terrace Community and Convention Center, 1 John Nolen Drive, is a more recently realized example of Wright's grand vision (daily tours at 1pm; $3). Surprisingly intimate and full of architectural detail, the Center, with its curves, arches, and domes, echoes the State Capitol building just a few blocks away.

If the capitol is the city's governmental heart, the 46,000-student University of Wisconsin is its spirited, liberal-thinking head, now mellowed since its protest heyday in the late 1960s. The Memorial Union, 800 Langdon St (☎608/262-1583), holds a cafeteria and pub, the Rathskeller, with tables strewn beneath huge, vaulted ceilings and live music most nights. Out back, the spacious UW Terrace offers beautiful sunset views over Lake Mendota. Capitol and campus are arterially connected by State Street, eight tree-lined, pedestrianized blocks of restaurants, cafés, bars, and funky stores.

Eating, drinking, and entertainment

State Street is a veritable smorgasbord of food and drink, and the Capitol Square and King St areas have also seen a spate of great new restaurants open in recent years. For details of what's on, check the free weekly Isthmus, which comes out on Thursdays and carries full listings.

The Essen Haus 514 E Wilson St ☎608/255-4674. This raucous biergarten has a phenomenal selection of beers as well as rib-sticking German food.

High Noon Saloon 701 E Washington Ave ☎608/268-1122, 🌐www.high-noon.com. Part of a complex holding multiple bars, this relative newcomer is an intimate, yet spacious, spot to see live music.

Himal Chuli 318 State St ☎608/251-9225. Tiny restaurant offering fantastic Nepalese vegetarian and vegan fare.

 Marigold Kitchen 118 S Pinckney St ☎608/661-5559. Charming, sunny spot serving delicious, creative breakfast and lunch dishes – such as challah french toast and chile poached eggs – focusing on local, organic ingredients.

The Old Fashioned 23 N Pinckney St ☎608/310-4545, 🌐www.theoldfashioned.com. Named for the state's signature brandy cocktail, this homey restaurant serves great sandwiches, traditional Wisconsin food like fried cheese curds, and a killer version of its eponymous cocktail.

The Weary Traveler 1201 Williamson St ☎608/442-6207. This eastside bar and restaurant, in the heart of the funky Williamson St neighborhood, serves creative food like the “bad breath burger” and Hungarian goulash. Hosts live music on the weekends.

Baraboo

Between 1884 and 1912, the Ringling Brothers' Circus kept winter quarters in BARABOO, thirty miles northwest of Madison. The Circus World Museum, 550 Water St, successfully recaptures the pre-TV glory days of big-top history, via an enormous collection of memorabilia and various animal rides and training demonstrations (hours vary seasonally; $5–15; 🌐www.wisconsinhistory.org/circusworld/). In the town center, the Al Ringling Theatre (tours daily Jun–Aug, rest of year on request; $4; ☎608/356-8864), built in 1915 and modeled after the grand opera house at Versailles, is one of America's prettiest small playhouses.

Just outside of Baraboo, Devil's Lake State Park (☎1-888/947-2757; $10–15) is an idyllic spot for hiking, swimming, and camping; no motorboats are allowed in. On Hwy-12, stop into Dr Evermor's sculpture park (Mon, Thurs–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free) – a surreal metal landscape created by an eccentric local artist.

Baraboo is calmer, quieter, and more affordable than nearby Wisconsin Dells. The elegant Victorian Gollmar Guest House B&B, 422 Third St (☎608/356-9432, 🌐www.gollmar.com; 📍), plays up the fact that it was once home to a circus family. More basic rooms are available at the Spinning Wheel Motel, 809 Eighth St (☎608/356-3933; ③). Kristina's Family Restaurant at 506 W Pine near Hwy-12 (☎608/355-9213), serves low-cost meals. Baraboo's visitor center is at the intersection of highways 12, 33, and 136 (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–3pm; ☎608/356-8333 or 1-800/227-2266, @www.baraboo.com).

Spring Green

During his seventy-year career, Wisconsin-born architect and social philosopher Frank Lloyd Wright designed such monumental structures as New York's spiraling Guggenheim Museum and Tokyo's earthquake-proof Imperial Hotel. Three miles south of SPRING GREEN, itself forty miles west of Madison on Hwy-14, stand more intimate examples of his work: Wright's magnificent former residence, Taliesin, and his Hillside Home School. The streamlined geometry and functional grandeur of the latter, opened in 1932, exemplify Wright's break from the boxy, fusty Victorian style. His studio is imposing, and there's also a theater space on the estate. Extensive and varied tours are available of the house and the school (May–Oct daily; reservations recommended; $16–$75). Tours leave from the Frank Lloyd Wright Visitor Center (☎608/588-7900, or 1-877/588-7900 @www.taliesinpreservation.org), which was designed by Wright in 1953 as a restaurant; it now features displays, a café, and a bookstore. Among numerous other Wright-influenced buildings in Spring Green are the bank and the pharmacy.

From 1944 onward, Alex Jordan built the House on the Rock, six miles south of Taliesin on Hwy-23, on and out of a natural, 60ft, chimney-like rock – for no discernible reason. He certainly never lived in it, nor did he intend it to become Wisconsin's number one tourist attraction (mid-March to Oct daily 9am–dusk, $11.50 per section or $26.50 for all three; Nov & Dec Christmas tours Thurs–Mon 9am–5pm; $20.50; ☎800/947-2799, @www.thehouseontherock.com). Only the first section of this multilevel series of furnished nooks and chambers bears any resemblance to a house of any kind. With its low ceilings, indirect lighting, indoor pools, waterfalls, trees, and pervasive shag carpeting, the style brings to mind Frank Lloyd Wright meets The Flintstones. The rest of the house is a logic-free labyrinth, containing Jordan's astounding collection of collections (antiques, nickelodeons and pneumatic music machines, miniature circuses, dolls and dolls' houses, maritime memorabilia, armor and firearms, ad infinitum). The net effect is overwhelming and disorienting, alternately great fun and ghastly. Highlights include the Infinity Room, comprising three thousand small glass panels tapering to a point and cantilevered several hundred feet above the Wyoming Valley.

Practicalities

Spring Green is a pretty place to stay, but prices can be high in summer. Round Barn Lodge, Hwy-14 (☎608/588-2568, @www.roundbarn.com; ④) has a pool, sauna, and restaurant on a former dairy farm. The Usonian Inn, Hwy-14/Hwy-23 (☎608/588-2323 or 1-877/USONIAN, @www.usonianinn.com; ③), offers alternative, Taliesin-style lodgings. Locals hang out at The Shed (☎608/588-9049), an easygoing diner and bar on Lexington Street downtown. The American Players Theatre (☎608/588-2361, @www.americanplayers.org) performs Shakespeare and other classics in a wooded amphitheater each evening from mid-June to October.

Minnesota

4

THE GREAT LAKES

Minneapolis and St Paul

Though MINNESOTA is more than a thousand miles from either coast, it's virtually a seaboard state, thanks to Lake Superior, connected to the Atlantic via the St Lawrence Seaway. The glaciers that, millions of years ago, flattened all but its southeast corner also gouged out more than fifteen thousand lakes, and major rivers run along the eastern and western borders. Ninety-five percent of the population lives within ten minutes of a body of water, and the very name Minnesota is a Sioux word meaning "land of sky-tinted water."

French explorers in the sixteenth century encountered prairies to the south and, in the north, dense forests whose abundant waterways were an ideal breeding ground for beavers and muskrats. Fur trading, fishing, and lumbering flourished, and the Ojibway and Sioux were eased out by waves of French, British, and American immigrants. Admitted to the Union in 1858, the new state of Minnesota was at first settled by Germans and Scandinavians, who farmed in the west and south. Other ethnic groups followed, many drawn by the massive iron ore deposits of north central Minnesota, which are expected to hold out for two more centuries.

More than half of Minnesota's hardy inhabitants, who endure some of the fiercest winters in the nation, live in the southeast, around the so-called Twin Cities of Minneapolis and St Paul. These attractive and basically friendly rivals together rank as the Midwest's great civic double act for their combined cultural, recreational, and business opportunities. Smaller cities include the northern shipping port of Duluth, the gateway to the Scenic Hwy-61 lakeshore drive, and Rochester, near pretty river towns like Red Wing and Winona. The tranquil waters of Voyageurs National Park lie halfway along the state's boundary with Canada.

In recent years, the state has earned a reputation as the "Hollywood of the North," thanks to its increased use as an affordable, talent-rich filmmaking locale. Filmmakers Joel and Ethan Coen, responsible for the Oscar-winning, Minnesota-set Fargo, were raised in the Twin Cities' suburb of St Louis Park.

Getting around Minnesota

Minneapolis/St Paul airport, home base for Northwest Airlines, handles routes to Europe as well as domestic flights. Amtrak trains cross the state once a day east and west from Chicago and Seattle, with stops in Winona, Red Wing, St Paul, St Cloud, Staples, and Detroit Lakes. Greyhound is the largest of the several bus companies plying Minnesota's roads. Five buses per day make the nine-hour journey to Chicago from the Twin Cities. Duluth, St Louis, and Kansas City are also served several times daily from the state's major metropolises.

Minneapolis and St Paul

Commonly known as the Twin Cities, MINNEAPOLIS (a hybrid Sioux/Greek word meaning "water city") and ST PAUL are competitive yet complementary. Fraternally rather than identically twinned, they may be even better places to live than they are to visit, thanks to their cleanliness, cultural activity, social awareness, and relatively low crime rates. Life for a majority of Twin City residents seems so vibrantly wholesome that the most significant threat would appear to be their own creeping complacency.

Only a twenty-minute expressway ride separates the respective downtowns, but each has its own character, style, and strengths. St Paul, the state capital – originally called Pig’s Eye, after a scurrilous French-Canadian fur trader who sold whisky at a Mississippi River landing in the 1840s – is the staid, slightly older sibling, careful to preserve its buildings and traditions. The compact but stately downtown is built, like Rome, on seven hills: the Capitol and the Cathedral occupy one each, both august monuments that keep the city mindful of its responsibilities.

Minneapolis, founded on money generated by the Mississippi’s hundreds of flour and saw mills, is livelier, artier, and more modern, with up-to-date architecture and an upbeat and even brash attitude that never quite jeopardizes its essential affordability. The residents are spread over wider ground than in St Paul, and dozens of lakes and parks underscore the city’s appeal.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Twin Cities International Airport lies about ten miles south of either city in suburban Bloomington. Super Shuttle Minneapolis (☎ 612/827-7777) takes travelers between the airport and major hotels for around $15, while some lodgings provide their own transportation. Taxis to Minneapolis will set you back close to $30, and to St Paul $25. You can also take the new light rail system (☎ 612/373-3333) into Minneapolis (daily 6am–1.30am: $1.50–$2.00), or bus #54 to St Paul (4am–1am: $1.50–$2.00). Amtrak is midway between the cities at 730 Transfer Rd, off University Avenue. The Greyhound terminals, both in convenient downtown locations, are at 950 Hawthorne Ave (☎ 612/371-3325) in Minneapolis and the less-used 166 W University Ave location (☎ 651/222-0507) in St Paul. Metro Transit buses (☎ 612/341-4287 or 612/373-3333) make both cities relatively easy to explore without a car. Old-style trolleys run through downtown Minneapolis during the summer; it costs $17 for an all-day pass.

In Minneapolis, the visitor center is at 250 Marquette Ave (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 612/767-8000 or 1-888/676-MPLS, @ www.minneapolis.org). In St Paul, it’s at 175 W Kellogg Blvd, suite 502 (☎ 651/265-4900 or 1-800/627-6101, @ www.visitsaintpaul.com). The main Minneapolis post office is on First Street and Marquette Avenue (zip code 55401), St Paul’s at 180 Kellogg Blvd E (zip code 55101).

Accommodation

You’re likely to pay more for lodgings downtown than in the suburbs, where dozens of cheap motels line I-494 near the airport, though some of the pricier central hotels offer reduced rates and special package deals on weekends. The pretty riverside community of Stillwater, 25 miles from St Paul via I-35 N and Hwy-36 E, has many grand old B&Bs and motels (☎ 651/439-4001 for information). For bed-and-breakfast options in the Twin Cities, consult @ www.bedandbreakfast.com, as many B&Bs do not have their own websites.

Minneapolis

Birdhouse Inn & Gardens 371 Water St, Excelsior ☎ 952/474-0196. This suburban

B&B a few blocks from Lake Minnetonka offers good prices and a homey atmosphere. 4

Evelo's B&B 2301 Bryant Ave S ☎ 612/374-9656. Three comfortable rooms in a well-preserved Victorian home near bus lines, lakes, and downtown. Nonsmoking only. 4

Hotel Amsterdam 828 Hennepin Ave ☎ 612/288-0459. Friendly, low-cost gay-owned hotel above a noise-controlled bar/disco downtown. 3

Hilton Minneapolis 1001 Marquette Ave ☎ 612/376-1000, @ www.minneapolis.hilton.com. Elegant downtown spot with a great gym and pool. Weekend rates are considerably less. 6–8

Le Blanc House 302 University Ave NE ☎ 612/379-2570, @ www.leblanchouse.com.

Fancy Victorian home just minutes from downtown. Serves gourmet breakfasts on the weekend and continental fare during the week. 5

Minneapolis International House 2400 Stevens Ave ☎ 612/522-5000, www.minneapolishostel.com. This conveniently situated independent hostel has $35–55 private rooms and $25 dorm beds.

Nicollet Island Inn 95 Merriam St ☎ 612/331-1800, www.nicolletislandinn.com. Pricy, mid-river establishment with the edge on other downtown hotels because of its delightful location and excellent restaurant. 8–9

St Paul

Best Western Bandana Square 1010 Bandana Blvd W ☎ 651/647-1637, www.hibandanasquare.com. Housed in a former railroad car repair shop and includes a nice indoor pool and sauna. 5

Chatsworth B&B 984 Ashland Ave ☎ 651/227-

4288, www.chatsworth-bb.com. A beautiful 1902 home now run as a welcoming B&B. 5–6

The Covington Inn Pier 1, Harriet Island com. ☎ 651/292-1411, www.covingtoninn.com. A one-of-a-kind B&B in a converted towboat facing downtown. 6–8

Embassy Suites 175 E 10th St ☎ 651/224-5400 or 1-800/EMBASSY, www.embassystpaul.com. The tropical atrium is the outstanding feature of this comfortable chain hotel on the edge of downtown. 6

The Saint Paul Hotel 350 Market St ☎ 651/292-9292 or 1-800/292-9292, www.stpaulhotel.com. This grand, 1910 establishment is Minnesota's top hotel. Rooms tend to be smaller than those of other luxury hotels, but the staff and atmosphere make up for it. The St Paul Grill, in the hotel, provides some of the city's finest dining, while the classy bar has tons of great scotches and cognacs. 6

Exploring Minneapolis

Downtown Minneapolis is laid out on a simple grid. The riverfront, dubbed the Mississippi Mile, continues to be developed as a place for strolling, dining, and entertainment. The vast Third Avenue Bridge makes an ideal vantage point for viewing St Anthony Falls, a controlled torrent in a wide stretch of the river. The missionary Father Hennepin discovered the falls in 1680, but it wasn't until the early nineteenth century that the first permanent settlement of present-day Minneapolis was begun nearby.

Downtown's major stores line up along the pedestrianized Nicollet Mall. Hennepin Avenue, the other main drag, is a block west. It has been revitalized as an entertainment district in recent years thanks, in part, to the beautifully restored Orpheum and State theaters, twin hosts to top-quality Broadway shows and concerts. The ultra-modern Guthrie Theater, 818 S Second St (☎612/377-2224 or 1-877/44-STAGE; 🌐www.guthrietheater.org), opened in 2006 on the riverfront. Even if you can't make it to one of the classic or brand-new stage productions, presented on one of the venue's three stages, the building itself is still worth a look.

Culturally, Minneapolis would be poorer without the Walker Art Center, 1750 Hennepin Ave S (Tues, Wed, Sat & Sun 11am–5pm, Thurs–Fri 11am–9pm; $8, free Thurs 5–9pm and 1st Sat of month; ☎612/375-7622, 🌐www.walkerart.org). This multipurpose contemporary art and performance space underwent an expansion in 2005, nearly doubling its exhibition area. The museum balances its permanent collection of sculpture and paintings (such as German Expressionist Franz Marc's Blue Horses) with exciting temporary exhibitions. The eleven-acre outdoor Sculpture Garden is a work of collective genius featuring pieces by Calder, Louise Bourgeois, and Frank Gehry. Its most striking piece is the gigantic, whimsical Spoonbridge and Cherry by Claes Oldenburg and Coosje van Bruggen. One mile from downtown, at 2400 Third Ave S, the huge Minneapolis Institute of Arts has a thoroughly comprehensive collection of art from 2000 BC to the present (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm, Sun 11am–5pm; free; ☎612/870-3200, 🌐www.artsimia.org). Antiques, crafts, and artifacts fill the exquisite 1908 mansion setting of the nearby American Swedish Institute, 2600 Park Ave S (Tues, Thurs, Fri & Sat noon–4pm, Wed noon–8pm, Sun 1–5pm; $6; ☎612/871-4907, 🌐www.americanswedishinstitute.org). In stark contrast, changing exhibitions and the University of Minnesota's permanent art collection share space in the controversial Frederick R. Weisman Museum, on campus at 333 E River Rd (Tues, Wed & Fri 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm, Sat & Sun 11am–5pm; free; 🌐www.weisman.umn.edu). Architect Frank Gehry's airy structure, with its boldly irregular stainless-steel west facade overlooking the Mississippi, is the most startling love-it-or-hate-it design in the cities.

Arctic winters aside, hordes of Minneapolitans flock to the shores of lakes Calhoun and Harriet and also Lake of the Isles, all in residential areas within two miles south of downtown. The Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome, 900 S Fifth St (☎612/332-0386), squats on the eastern edge of downtown like a giant white pincushion; the dome is home to the state's pro baseball and football teams, the Twins and the Vikings. Minnehaha Falls, south of downtown, was featured in Longfellow's 1855 poem "Song of Hiawatha" without his ever having laid eyes on it. The adjacent park is a favorite spot for hikes and picnics.

Exploring St Paul

St Paul, Minnesota's capital city, reached along I-94, has more expensive old homes and civic monuments than Minneapolis. The city has its own landing site on Harriet Island for narrated summertime paddleboat cruises (summer noon and 2pm; $15; ☎651/227-1100 or 1-800/543-3908, 🌐www.riverrides.com). Here, as well as in Minneapolis, downtown buildings are linked via skyways. Call in at the jazzy Art Deco lobby of the City Hall and Courthouse, Fourth and Wabasha streets, to see Swedish sculptor Carl Milles' revolving 36ft Vision of Peace, carved in the 1930s from white Mexican onyx. The castle-like Landmark Center, a couple of blocks away at Fifth and Market streets, and the glittering Ordway Center for the Performing Arts both overlook Rice Park, probably the prettiest little square in either city. A sculpture garden with characters from Charles Schulz's "Peanuts" comic strip, the artist himself a St. Paul native, has been added to Schulz Park next to the Landmark Center. A few blocks east, Town Square Park is a lush, multilevel indoor garden in a shopping complex at Minnesota and Sixth streets. The gorgeous granite and limestone Minnesota History Center, 345 W Kellogg Blvd (Tues 10am–8pm, Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; open Mon in summer; $8; ☎888/727-8386, 🌐www.mnhs.org), with its extensive research facilities and some inventive exhibits for the more casual visitor, is the best place to grasp the state's story. An immense steel iguana is the doorkeeper at the exciting hands-on Science Museum of Minnesota, 120 W Kellogg Blvd (Mon–Wed 9.30am– 5pm, Thurs–Sat 9.30am–9pm, Sun 10.30am–5.30pm; $13.50; ☎ 651/221-9444, @ www.smm.org), which also has a domed Omnitheater (entry included in ticket) where you can see giant-screen films. Or check out the Minnesota Children's Museum, 10 W Seventh St (Tues–Thurs and Sat–Sun 9am–5pm, Fri till 8pm; open Mon 9am–5pm summer only; $7.95; ☎ 651/225-6000, @ www.mcm.org), where even big kids will be diverted by the interactive galleries.

A well-preserved five-mile Victorian boulevard, Summit Avenue, leads away from downtown. F. Scott Fitzgerald, who was born close by, finished his first success, This Side of Paradise, in 1918 while living in a modest row house at no. 599. He disparaged the avenue as a “museum of American architectural failures.” Look for the coffin atop no. 465, once the home of an undertaker, and visit the James J. Hill House at no. 240, a railroad baron's sumptuous mansion from around 1891 (tours every half-hour Wed–Sat 10am–3.30pm and Sun 1pm–3.30pm; $8; reservations recommended; ☎ 651/297-2555). Minnesota's first territorial governor Alexander Ramsey's house, nearby at 265 S Exchange St, remains a showcase of Victorian high style (tours on the hour Fri & Sat 10am–3pm, summer also Tues–Thurs 1pm; $7; ☎ 651/296-8760; reservations recommended).

The costumed staff does a fine job of interpreting Minnesota's frontier past at Fort Snelling (May, Sept, Oct Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, June–Aug Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8; ☎ 612/726-1171), near the airport off highways 5 and 55. Built between 1819 and 1825 on a strategic bluff at the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers, this was Minnesota's first permanent structure – a successful attempt by the US government to establish an official presence in the wilderness that had recently been won from Great Britain. Another good bet is the venerable and picturesque Como Park Zoo and Conservatory, reached by taking I-94 to the Lexington Avenue exit, then continuing north on Lexington for about three miles (daily: April–Sept 10am–6pm; rest of year 10am–4pm; $2 donation requested; ☎ 651/487-8200). Farther afield, in suburban Apple Valley, off Hwy-775 is the spacious, highly regarded Minnesota Zoo (daily June–Sept 9am–6pm, rest of the year 9am–4pm; $13, $5 parking fee; ☎ 952/431-9200, @ www.mn zoo.org), where the animals reside in reconstructions of their natural habitats. The Komodo dragon exhibit, Imation IMAX Theater, and Discovery Bay aquatic center, in particular, are outstanding.

Annual celebrations in St Paul include the Taste of Minnesota (tons of food, live entertainment, rides, and fireworks) running from late June to July 4 on Harriet Island and the nation's largest State Fair (end of Aug to early Sept). The Winter Carnival (late Jan to early Feb) is a frosty gala designed to make the most of the season with ice and snow sculpturing, hot-air ballooning, team sports, parades, and more.

The Mall of America

Shopping addicts make the pilgrimage to the Mall of America from all over the Midwest – and far beyond, including parties from as far away as Japan. Opened in 1992, this mind-boggling 4.2-million-square-foot, four-story monument to consumerism tallied 42 million visits in a recent year. It incorporates more than five hundred stores, with a seven-acre theme park – the pay-per-ride Camp Snoopy. Featured rides include UnderWater Adventures ($16.95), with 1.2 million gallons of water and amazing Gulf of Mexico and Caribbean aquariums. Evidence of the Mall's all-under-one-roof convenience is provided by the Chapel of Love retail store, where more than five thousand couples have legitimately tied the knot. The mall is open Monday through Saturday 10am–9.30pm, Sunday 11am–7pm, (☎ 952/883-8800, @ www.mallofamerica.com).

The Mall is twenty minutes south of the cities on I-494 at 24th Avenue, Bloomington. Take bus #54M from St Paul's West Sixth Street at Cedar, the #5E bus or the light rail from downtown Minneapolis; catch the train from 5th St on Nicollet Mall.

Eating

Preconceptions of Midwestern blandness are swiftly put to rest by an almost bewildering array of restaurants in the Twin Cities. In Minneapolis, head for the downtown warehouse district, the southerly Nicollet neighborhood, the funky Uptown, and Lyn-Lake areas, or the university's Dinkytown. In St Paul, try Galtier Plaza downtown, the Asian restaurants on University Avenue, or the horde of ethnic options all along Grand Avenue.

Minneapolis

112 Eatery 112 N 3rd St ☎612/343-7696.

This small, upscale café serves an inventive mix of American and Continental dishes, from pork tenderloin to sautéed sweetbreads.

Broder's Cucina Italiana 2308 W 50th St ☎612/925-3113. Terrific deli offering eat-in or takeout, with a full-service restaurant across the street.

Bryant-Lake Bowl 810 W Lake St ☎612/825-3737. Bowling and fantastic food rarely go hand-in-hand, but this Lyn-Lake institution manages to do both well, turning out such creative dishes as organic chicken wings and a bison Philly sandwich.

Café Brenda 300 1st Ave N ☎612/342-9230. Excellent, moderately priced nouvelle vegetarian cuisine in the downtown warehouse district.

Emily's Lebanese Deli 641 University Ave NE ☎612/379-4069. Friendly, low-cost local place for Lebanese staples.

La Belle Vie 510 Groveland Ave, ☎612/874-6440. Sophisticated Mediterranean fare, including a goat cheese tart and seared sea scallops, served in a posh setting. Both prix fixe and à la carte menus are available – pricey, but worth it.

Modern Café 337 13th Ave NE ☎612/378-9882. Eclectic, cheap, and flavorful food in a former neighborhood diner gone hip.

Monte Carlo 219 3rd Ave N ☎612/333-5900. Locals swear by this century-old steakhouse. Expect to pay around $20 for an entree.

Moose & Sadie's Café and Coffee 212 3rd Ave N, ☎612/371-0464. This great breakfast and brunch spot in the warehouse district serves delicious baked goods and creative soups like coconut milk curry.

Palomino 825 Hennepin Ave ☎612/339-3800. Stylish, popular downtown bistro specializing in Mediterranean fare.

Pizza Luce 119 N 4th St ☎612/333-7359. The decor is no-frills, but the staff is hip and the pizza is excellent.

Sawatdee 607 Washington Ave S ☎612/373-0840. Delicious Thai food, with main courses ranging from $8 to $15. There are several branches in the Twin Cities.

St Paul

Mancini's 531 W 7th St ☎651/224-7345. Great Italian steakhouse with an old-school, supper-club feel.

Mickey's Dining Car 36 W 7th St ☎651/698-0259. Landmark 24hr diner in a 1930s dining car.

Moscow on the Hill 371 Selby Ave ☎651/291-1236. Exquisite Russo-European food is served within a modest setting.

St Paul Grill 350 Market St ☎651/292-9292. Traditional American fare in a classic downtown hotel.

Trattoria DaVinci 400 Sibley St ☎651/222-4050. Exceptional Northern Italian cuisine served in an Italian Renaissance-inspired setting.

W.A. Frost Selby and Western Aves ☎651/224-5715. This former pharmacy and F. Scott Fitzgerald hangout has been converted into a plush restaurant with a garden patio. The menu spans Mediterranean, Asian, and Middle Eastern cuisines and features dishes like mushroom Wellington and squash ravioli; the wine cellar stocks some 3000 bottles.

Entertainment and nightlife

The Greater Twin Cities have been dubbed a “cultural Eden on the prairie,” where 2.5 million people support upwards of one hundred theater companies, more than forty dance troupes, twenty classical music ensembles, and more than a hundred art galleries. Sir Tyrone Guthrie began the theatrical boom back in 1963, enrolling large-scale local assistance to establish the classical repertory company named for him. The cities now have more theaters per capita than anywhere in the US apart from New York City.

Unusually, nightlife in Minneapolis (and, to a lesser extent, St Paul) hasn't been siphoned off by suburbia – one hundred thousand students ensure a vibrant club scene. For complete entertainment information and listings, check out the ubiquitous free weekly City Pages. Lavender and focusPOINT provide a similar service from a lesbian and gay perspective.

Minneapolis and St Paul theaters

Chanhasen Dinner Theater 501 W 78th St, Chanhassen ☎952/934-1525 or 1-800/362-3515. Mainstream musicals, popular comedies, and drama on four stages, plus meals. Thirty minutes from downtown.

Fitzgerald Theater 10 E Exchange St, St Paul ☎651/290-1200, www.fitzgeraldtheater.org. Best known as the venue for Garrison Keillor's weekly A Prairie Home Companion performance, it also hosts other concerts and lectures.

Great American History Theater 30 E 10th St, St Paul ☎651/292-4323, www.historytheatre.com. Original plays deal with events and personalities from the region's past.

Jungle Theater 2951 S Lyndale Ave S, Minneapolis ☎612/822-7063, www.jungletheater.com. Theater/cabaret putting on an eclectic mix of classic and contemporary plays.

Park Square 20 W 7th Pl, St Paul ☎651/291-7005, www.parksquaretheatre.org. The venue for well-executed classic and contemporary plays.

Penumbra 270 N Kent St, St Paul ☎651/224-3180, www.penumbraetheatre.org. African-American theater company focusing on works by African-American playwrights.

Red Eye Collaboration 15 W 14th St, Minneapolis ☎612/870-0309, www.theredeye.org. Arts center dedicated to experimental theater, as well as dance, film, and music.

Theatre de la Jeune Lune 1st St and 1st Ave, Minneapolis ☎612/333-6200, www.jeunelune.org. A unique ensemble of Parisians and Minneapolitans offer dynamic, highly physical productions based on commedia dell'arte, vaudeville, and the like.

Minneapolis bars and clubs

 The Dakota Jazz Club and Restaurant 1010 Nicollet Mall ☎612/332-1010, www.dakotacooks.com. Gourmet Midwestern food and great local and national jazz acts downtown.

Figlio Calhoun Square, 3001 Hennepin Ave ☎612/822-1688. Top late-night dining and people-watching venue, with a menu featuring Italian staples.

Fine Line 318 1st Ave N ☎612/338-8100. Sleek, small, and musically eclectic downtown club.

First Avenue and 7th St Entry 701 1st Ave ☎612/338-8388 or 332-1775, www.first-avenue.com. The landmark rock venue where Prince's Purple Rain was shot still packs them in with top bands and dance music.

Gay 90s 408 Hennepin Ave S ☎612/333-7755.

This sprawling, predominantly gay club has three dance floors, a piano lounge, dining, and polished weekend drag shows.

Loon Café 500 1st Ave N ☎612/332-8342. Try the chili at this noisy, likeable sports bar, which offers great food.

Nye's Polonaise Room 112 E Hennepin Ave ☎612/379-2021. Experience old-time atmosphere at the piano and polka bars, and in the Polish-American restaurant.

St Paul bars and clubs

McGovern's 225 W 7th St ☎651/224-5821. A quintessential Irish pub where you're likely to strike up some decent conversation.

Muddy Pig 162 N Dale St ☎651/254-1030. A hip neighborhood joint with good bar food and a wide selection of microbrews.

O'Gara's Bar and Grill 164 N Snelling Ave ☎651/644-3333, www.ogaras.com. Dimly lit bar/restaurant with its own handcrafted beers. Draws a mixed clientele and hosts live bands in the adjoining Garage.

Tom Reid's Hockey City Pub 258 W 7th St ☎651/292-9916. This pre- and post-game hangout is where locals gather to honor the state's favorite sport.

Town House 1415 University Ave ☎651/646-7087. Gay/lesbian bar with dance and drag nights, plus a piano lounge.

Northern Minnesota

Minnesota's substantial northern half, covered with forested lakes, remains much as it was when the Europeans first traded with the Indians. The northeast – the Arrowhead, poking into Lake Superior – holds the greatest charm: most visitors choose secluded outdoor vacations centered on fishing, canoeing, and snowmobiling, but there's infinite potential for driving tours in a wilderness comparable to the Alaskan interior.

The Arrowhead is anchored by busy Duluth. From here, Scenic Hwy-61 skirts the clifftops around Lake Superior, passing waterfalls, state parks, and neat little towns on the way northeast to the Canadian border. Sleepy Grand Marais is poised at the edge of the wild Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness and the Gunflint Trail, while inland, the Iron Range makes a scenic route north to the idyllic Voyageurs National Park. To the southwest, in Itasca State Park, the Mississippi River begins its great roll down to the Gulf of Mexico; you can cross the headwaters on stepping-stones. Everywhere you'll find campgrounds and mom-and-pop lakeside resorts, havens of homey simplicity dedicated to soothing urban-ravaged souls.

Duluth

DULUTH, at the western extremity of Lake Superior, 150 miles north of Minneapolis and St Paul, forms a long crescent at the base of the Arrowhead. Named for a seventeenth-century French officer, Daniel Greysolon, Sieur du Luth (1636–1710), the town cascades down from the granite bluffs surrounding Skyline Drive (an exhilarating thirty-mile route) to a busy harbor, shared with Superior, Wisconsin. Together these “twin ports” constitute the largest inland harbor in the US.

In the 1980s, Duluth had a face-lift and began to encourage tourism. The main drawback is that it's cold here. The seaway is frozen through the winter, and even spring and fall evenings can be chilly. Temperatures are always significantly cooler near the lake – the location of nearly all the attractions and activities.

From the Convention and Visitors Bureau (see below), a short walk down Lake Avenue leads to the free Marine Museum (June to early Oct daily 10am–9pm; rest of year times vary; ☎ 218/727-2497, 🌐 www.lsmma.com) in Canal Park, a vantage point for watching big boats from around the world pass under the delightfully archaic Aerial Lift Bridge. Originating at Canal Park, Duluth's Lakewalk is the free way to take in the view, though in summer you can also take one and one half-hour harbor cruises ($12; ☎ 218/722-6218 or 1-877/883-4002; 🌐 www.vistafleet.com). Also worthwhile is a visit to the stately lakeside Jacobean Revival mansion Glensheen, 3300 London Rd (May–Oct daily 9.30am–4pm; Nov–April Sat–Sun 11am–2pm; $12; ☎ 218/726-8910 or 1-888/454-GLEN). The vast interior features finely crafted original furnishings, and the grounds are immaculate.

Rail excursions along the Superior shoreline to the busy harbor community Two Harbors run from The Depot complex at 506 W Michigan St (early May to mid-Oct; $12 for 90min, $20 for 6hr; ☎ 218/722-1273 or 1-800/423-1273, 🌐 www.lsrn.org). The Depot (summer 9.30am–6pm; winter 10am–5pm; $10) also houses the Lake Superior Railroad Museum, a children's museum, cultural heritage center, and art museum; at night, it's home to performing arts companies. From the parking lot at Grand Avenue and 71st Avenue W, across from the zoo, the historic Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad takes a 90min journey along the scenic St Louis River (mid-June to early Oct Sat & Sun 10.30am & 1.30pm; $9.25; ☎ 218/624-7549, 🌐 www.lsmrr.org). Duluth's Spirit Mountain ski area (☎ 1-800/642-6377, 🌐 www.spiritm.com) boasts the best downhill runs in the Midwest.

Practicalities

Greyhound buses pull into town four miles south of town just off I-35 at 4426 Grand Ave. The Convention and Visitors Bureau is at 21 W Superior St Suite 100 (Mon–Fri 8:30am–5pm; ☎ 218/722-4011 or 1-800/4-DULUTH, 🌐 www.duluth.org).

visitduluth.com). For a place to stay, the Charles Weiss Inn, 1615 E Superior St (☎ 218/724-7016 or 1-800/525-5243; 5), is a nice Victorian-styled B&B, while better motels include the Edgewater Resort and Waterpark, 2400 London Rd (☎ 218/728-3601 or 1-800/777-7925; ④ www.duluthwaterpark.com; 4–5), which has a new indoor water park. Keep in mind that accommodation rates and availability fluctuate in summer. Indian Point campground, west off Hwy-23 at 75th Street and Grand Avenue (☎ 218/624-5637), has summer bayside tent sites for $19; full hook-ups are also available.

The burgers and pasta at Grandma's Saloon And Grill, in view of the bridge at 522 Lake Ave S (☎ 218/727-4192), are filling and tasty. Grandma's Sports Garden, across a parking lot at no. 425 (☎ 218/722-4724), is similarly convivial, dishing up good food when not functioning as a dance floor on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday nights starting at 10pm. Best of all are the revolving Top of the Harbor, serving American cuisine atop the Radisson Hotel at 505 W Superior St (☎ 218/727-8981), and the lovely Bennett's on the Lake, 600 E Superior St (☎ 218/722-2829), where you can dine on steaks and seafood with a superb view of the lake.

North from Duluth: Highway 61

Memorialized on vinyl by Minnesota native Bob Dylan, stunning Scenic Highway 61 follows Lake Superior for 150 miles northeast from Duluth to the US/Canadian border, its precipitous cliffs interspersed with pretty little ports and picture-postcard picnic sites.

At Gooseberry River State Park, forty miles along from Duluth, the river splashes over volcanic rock through waterfalls and cascades to its outlet in Lake Superior. Like all but one of the seven other state parks along Hwy-61, it provides access to the rugged three-hundred-mile Superior Hiking Trail (☎ 218/834-2700), divided into easily manageable segments for day-trekkers. To camp at any of the state parks, reserve at ☎ 1-866/857-2757.

Just beyond Cascade River State Park, the road dips into the somnolent little port of GRAND MARAIS, where a walk around the photogenic Circular Harbor will soon cure car-stiff legs. The visitor center, 13 N Broadway (☎ 218/387-2524 or 1-888/922-5000, ④ www.grandmarais.com), has lists of outfitters for those going into the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness (see below). An inexpensive room option is the Mangy Moose Motel on Hwy-61 (☎ 218/387-2975 or 1-800/796-2975; 5), while Naniboujou Lodge, fifteen miles further east (☎ 218/387-2688, ④ www.naniboujou.com; 4), is a bit pricier, but worth dropping by just to see the restaurant's eye-popping Cree Indian designs. For herring and imported beer, or just a well-priced snack, head for Sven & Ole's Pizza, 9 W Wisconsin St, in Grand Marais (☎ 218/387-1713).

The town of GRAND PORTAGE, just below the Canadian border, is at the lake end of the historic 8.5-mile portage route – so vital to the nineteenth-century fur trade – now preserved in the form of Grand Portage National Monument, where a clutch of fur-trade era buildings has been superbly reconstructed (summer daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 218/387-2788). In town, residents of the Grand Portage Indian Reservation operate a casino. In summer, ferries run daily to remote Isle Royale National Park (see p.343).

Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness and the Gunflint Trail

The huge Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness, west of Grand Marais, is one of the most heavily used wilderness areas in the country. It's accessible from Tofte, Cook, and especially from easygoing Ely, home of the intriguing Inter- national Wolf Center (hours vary; ☎218/365-4695; $7.50). The wilderness is a paradise for canoeing, backpacking, and fishing. Overland trails, or “portages,” link more than a thousand lakes; in winter you can ski and dogsled cross-country. The unpaved sixty-mile Gunflint Trail from Grand Marais cuts the wilderness in two; otherwise there are no roads in this outback, let alone electricity or telephones. Most lakes remain motor-free, and stringent rules limit entry to the wilderness: in summer you need a date-specific permit that local outfitters can issue. For the following year, permit applications may be submitted by website, fax, or mail beginning November 1; in January, they are processed by lottery. Phone reservations are accepted beginning February 1 ($12 reservation fee and a $20 deposit; ☎1-877/550-6777, ☎518/884-9951, 🌐www.bwcaw.org). For those who don’t want to rough it, several rustic lodges lie strung out along the trail; the Gunflint Trail Association (☎218/387-3191 or 1-800/338-6932, 🌐www.gunflint-trail.com) can offer good advice.

The Iron Range

In the Iron Range, a few miles west of Ely, which is itself about one hundred miles west of Grand Marais, a number of fabulously rich mines continue to function more than a century after their construction. If you’re interested in surveying old workings, it’s possible to descend 2300ft at the Soudan Underground Mine State Park on Hwy-169 (summer daily 10am–4pm; $9, plus $8 vehicle fee).

Eighty miles southwest on Hwy-169 is Hibbing – a plain little community, of interest mainly as the birthplace of Bob Dylan (born Robert Zimmerman) in 1941. Oddly enough, the museum in City Hall has no exhibits on him.

Extensive strip-mining in the city has created both the largest man-made pit and the largest slagheap in the world. Hibbing was also the home of America’s biggest bus company. With the help of model buses and old advertisements the Greyhound Origin Center, 1201 Greyhound Blvd (mid-May to end Sept Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1pm–5pm; $4), looks back to its roots transporting local miners to and from the pits. The Hull–Rust Mahoning Mine, once the world’s largest open-pit iron ore mine, can be toured or viewed from an overlook just past the Center (mid-May–beginning Sept daily 9am–6pm; free).

Voyageurs National Park

Set along the border lakes between Minnesota and Canada, VOYAGEURS NATIONAL PARK is like no other in the US national park system. To see it properly, or indeed to grasp its immense beauty at all, you need to leave your car behind and venture into the wild by boat. Once out on the lakes, you’re in a great, silent world. Kingfishers, osprey, and eagles swoop down for their share of the abundant walleye; moose and bear stalk the banks.

The park’s name comes from the intrepid eighteenth-century French-Canadian trappers, who needed almost a year to get their pelts back to Montréal in primitive birch bark canoes. Their “customary waterway” became so established that the treaty of 1783 ending the American Revolution specified it as the international border.

You can’t do Voyageurs justice on a day-trip, though daily cruises from the Rainy Lake visitor center (open daily mid-May–Sept 9am–5pm, Oct–mid-May Wed–Sun 9am–5pm; from $12-15 for a range of tours; ☎218/286-5258 🌐www.nps.gov/voya) do at least allow a peek at the lake country. If you’re here for a few days, rent a boat (reckon on $50 a day) and camp out. It’s easy to get lost in this maze of islands and rocky outcrops, and unseen sandbanks lurk beneath the surface. If you’re at all unsure, hire a guide from one of the resorts for the first day (around $250 per 8hr day). During freeze-up – usually from December until March – the park takes on a whole new aura, as a prime destination for skiers and snowmobilers.

Practicalities

Most travelers access Voyageurs from Hwy-53, which runs northwest from Duluth. After just over one hundred miles, at Orr, Hwy-53 intersects with Rte-23, which runs northeast toward Crane Lake, at the eastern end of the park. About 28 and 31 miles past Hwy-53's junction with Rte-23, highways 129 and 122 lead, respectively, to the visitor centers at Ash River (May–Sept daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 218/374-3221) and Kabetogama Lake (same hours; ☎ 218/875-2111). Another prime visitor center is at Rainy Lake, at the westernmost entrance, 36 miles farther on via International Falls.

Once inside the park, you need to take a few precautions. Check (natural) mercury levels in fish before eating them, don't pick wild rice (only Native Americans may do this), be wary of Lyme Disease (a tick-induced gastric illness), boil drinking water, and watch out for bears. Discuss such matters along with customs procedures, in case you plan to paddle into Canadian waters, with a ranger before venturing out.

The definitive way to experience the park is to camp on one of its many scattered islands, most plentiful around Crane Lake (if you don't have your own boat, cruise operators can drop you off and pick you up at a later date). There are also first-come, first-served state-owned campgrounds on the mainland at Ash River and Woodenfrog, near Kabetogama. However, most visitors stay in one of more than sixty resorts. Basically family-run cottages, these usually cater for weekly stays, with all meals, though you can rent rooms nightly. Most popular are those around Kabetogama, such as Carlson's Harmony Beach (☎ 218/875-2811, 🌐 www.harmonybeachresort.com; Ⓜ–Ⓟ); Arrowhead Lodge (☎ 218/875-2141 or 1-866/847-7118, 🌐 www.arrowheadlodgeresort.com; Ⓜ–Ⓟ), well known for its restaurant; and the basic, cheap, and cheerful Driftwood Lodge (☎ 218/875-3841, 🌐 www.driftwoodlodgeresort.com; call for weekly rates). You can make reservations through the Kabetogama Lake Association (☎ 1-800/524-9085, 🌐 www.kabetogama.com).

Southern Minnesota

Southern Minnesota is split between high plains, timbered ravines, and slow-flowing Mississippi tributaries in the east, and the drier, flatter prairie and checkerboard farmland of the west. In the scenic southeast, spared a grinding-down by the last glacial advance, attractive small towns sit along the Mississippi, or on bluffs above it, in the ninety-mile Hiawatha Valley. Mississippi shipping helped sustain easygoing communities like Winona, Red Wing, Lake City, and Wabasha, all of which share well-preserved old homes and hotels. Rochester occupies the rolling farmland to the west.

Rochester

The metropolis of ROCHESTER, a white-collar community in a rural setting about eighty miles southeast of Minneapolis and St Paul, was settled in the 1850s by migrants from Rochester, New York, as a humble crossroads campground for wagon trains. After a tornado devastated the town in 1883, Dr William Worrall Mayo established the huge Mayo Clinic, 200 First St SW (☎ 507/284-2511, @www.mayoclinic.org). Free tours serve as ninety-minute promotions for “the first and largest private group medical practice in the world” (Mon–Fri 10am; art tour Mon–Fri 1.30pm). You can also tour the sprawling family home, Mayowood, 3720 Mayowood Rd southwest of Hwy-52 (May to mid-June Sat & Sun at 1pm, 2pm & 3pm, plus Sat at 11am; mid-June to Oct Tues, Thurs, Sat & Sun same hours; $10; ☎507/282-9447).

Jefferson Union Bus Depot, 205 6th St SW (☎507/289-4037), is the hub for bus services. Rochester Direct (☎507/280-9270 or 1-800/280-9270) make between ten and eleven van runs daily to the Minneapolis–St Paul International Airport or the Mall of America for $27 one way, $49 roundtrip or $34 for same-day roundtrip. Rochester’s visitor center is at 111 S Broadway Suite 301 (☎507/288-4331 or 1-800/634-8277, @www.visitrochestermn.com).

Rochester is rife with chain and budget accommodation, especially within the five-block radius of downtown, including the Kahler Hotel, 20 SW Second Ave (☎507/282-2581 or 1-800/533-1655, @www.kahler.com/grand; 4–5). The Broadstreet Café and Bar, 300 First Ave NW (☎507/281-2451), a bistro in a renovated warehouse, serves excellent meals.

Pipestone National Monument

The town of PIPESTONE, eight miles east of the South Dakota border, is named for a soft red clay, within the local quartzite, that was used for centuries by Great Plains Indians to make ceremonial calumets, or peace pipes. The quarry site, a gathering place for Native American tribes, is now the Pipestone National Monument (daily 8am–5pm, longer on summer weekends; $3 per person or $5 per vehicle). A self-guided trail winds from the visitor center through stands of trees, past rock formations and exposed quarry pits and over a creek, complete with picturesque falls.

Pipestone’s small historic district includes a sleepy county museum and a building with several amusing sandstone gargoyles. Pick up a walking-tour brochure from the town’s visitor center (☎507/825-3316 or 1-800/336-6125), on Hwy 75 at 117 8th Ave SE. You can sleep and eat at the grand old Calumet Inn, 104 W Main St (☎507/825-5871 or 1-800/535-7610, @www.calumetinn.com; 4). Each late July to early August the town puts on the nine-day “Song of Hiawatha” Indian pageant in an outdoor amphitheater.

From a distance the red rocks at Blue Mounds State Park, sloping into a long cliff a few miles north of the junction of I-90 and US-75 at Luverne, create a great hump that appeared blue at sunset to approaching pioneers. Twice a year, at the equinoxes, the sun lines up with a curious 1250ft row of rocks, aligned on an east–west axis. There are seasonal campgrounds (☎1-866/85PARKS) and a permanent small herd of buffalo in the park. Call the same number for camping in picturesque Split Rock Creek State Park, only seven miles south of Pipestone and the site of a dam dating from 1935.

The Capital Region

* Georgetown, Washington DC The best neighborhood in which to discover that the District isn't all monuments, memorials, and museums. See p.422

* National Gallery of Art, Washington DC One of the country's premier institutions for art and culture, laid out in spacious, elegant surroundings. See p.413

* Colonial Williamsburg, VA This close replica of Colonial America, apothecaries and all, makes for a fun and interesting trip. See p.439

Monticello, VA Thomas Jefferson's home is for many as much an architectural icon as it is a symbol of democracy. See p.447

* New River Gorge, WV A spectacular river canyon with a 1000ft chasm carved in steep-walled limestone cliffs – one of the country's outstanding natural attractions. See p.458

* The du Pont Mansions, DE Wilmington has some of the East Coast's greatest, most palatial estates, now open to public view. See p.477

△ Mount Vernon

The Capital Region

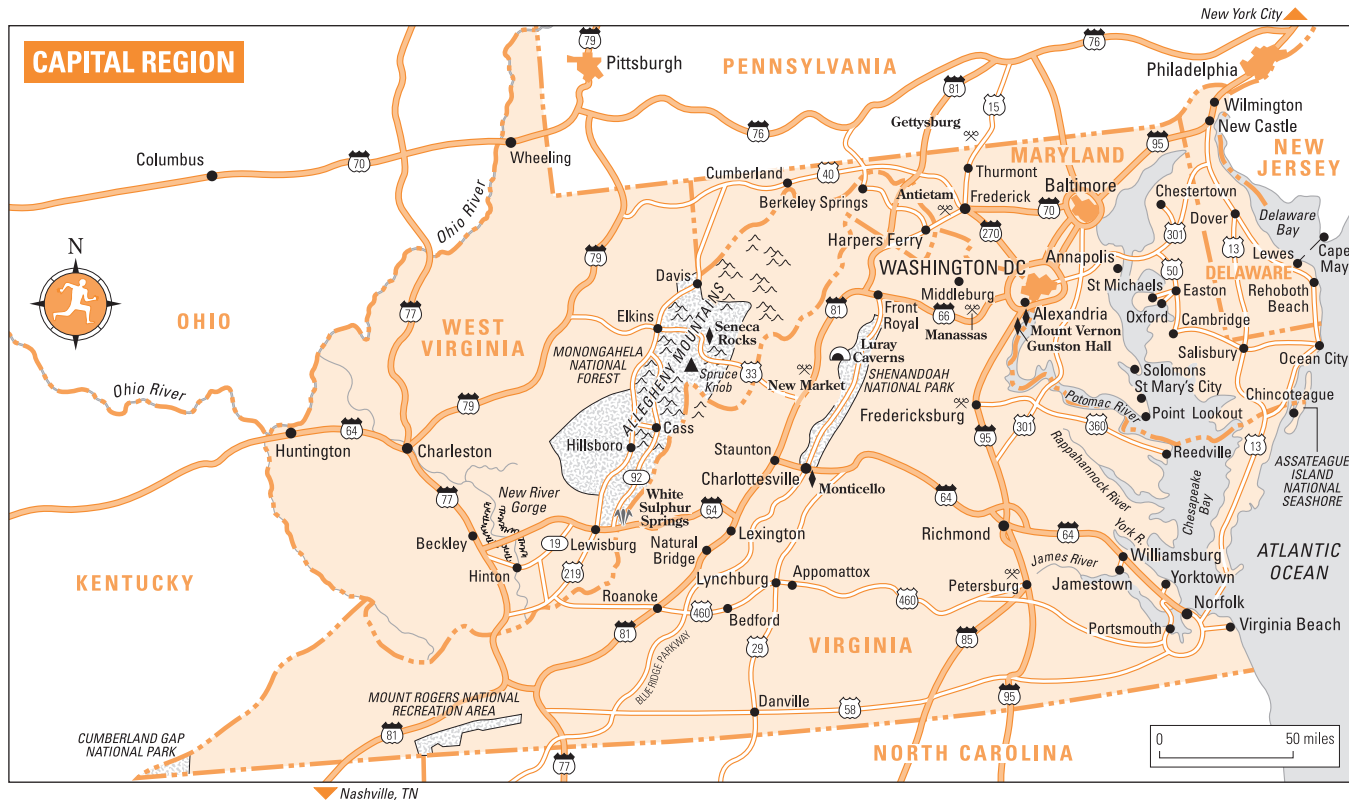

The city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and the four surrounding states of Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware are collectively known as the CAPITAL REGION. Since the days of the first American colonies, US history has been shaped here, from agitation toward independence to the battles of the Revolutionary and Civil wars, to 1960s Civil Rights milestones and current-day protest movements on issues like abortion and gay rights.

Early in the seventeenth century, the first British settlements began to take root along the rich estuary of the Chesapeake Bay; the colonists hoped to find gold, but instead made their fortunes growing tobacco. Virginia, the first settlement, was the largest and most populous. Fully half of its people were slaves, brought from Africa to do the backbreaking work of harvesting tobacco. Despite its central position on the East Coast, almost all of the region lies below the Mason-Dixon Line – the symbolic border between North and South, drawn up in 1763 as the boundary between slave and free states – and until the Civil War one of the country's busiest slave markets was just two blocks from the White House.

Tensions between North and South finally erupted into the Civil War, of which traces are still visible everywhere. The hundred miles between the capital of the Union – Washington DC – and that of the Confederacy – Richmond, Virginia – were a constant and bloody battleground for four long years.

Washington DC itself, with its magnificent monumental architecture, is an essential stop on any tour of the region – or of the country in general, for that matter. Virginia, to the south, is home to hundreds of historic sites, from the estates of early politicians to the Colonial capital of Williamsburg, as well as the narrow forested heights of Shenandoah National Park, along the crest of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Much greater expanses of wilderness, crashing white-water rivers, and innumerable backwoods villages can be found in less-visited West Virginia.

Most tourists come to Maryland for the maritime traditions of Chesapeake Bay – though many of its quaint old villages have been gentrified by weekend pleasure-boaters. Baltimore is full of character, enjoyably unpretentious if a bit ramshackle (it has a phenomenal concentration of bars), while Annapolis, the pleasant state capital, is linked by bridge and ferry to the Eastern Shore, where Assateague Island remains an Atlantic paradise. New Castle, across the border in Delaware, is a perfectly preserved Colonial-era town, with some of the East Coast's best and least crowded beaches nearby.

Washington DC

5

THE CAPITAL REGION

Washington DC

That the marshy swamp where WASHINGTON DC now stands was chosen as the site of the capital of the newly independent United States of America says a lot about then-prevalent attitudes toward government. Washington, District of Columbia (the boundaries of the two are identical) – also known as “The District” – can be unbearably hot and humid in summer, and bitterly cold in winter. Such an unpleasant climate, it was hoped, would discourage elected leaders from making government a full-time job. Today the city, with a majority black population, is run as a virtual colony of Congress, where residents have only non-voting representation and couldn’t vote in presidential elections until the 23rd Amendment was passed in 1961 – the city’s official license plate reads “Taxation Without Representation.”

The most famous sites are concentrated along the National Mall, including the White House, memorials to four of the greatest presidents, and the superb museums of the Smithsonian Institution – all of which are free. In recent years, even the once-blighted area known as Old Downtown (north of the eastern side of the Mall), has had a dramatic uptick in visitors and nightlife; still, you’re more likely to spend your evenings in the hotels and restaurants of the city’s more vibrant neighborhoods, such as historic Georgetown, arty Dupont Circle, and funky Adams–Morgan. When planning your trip, consider that the best times to come are during April’s National Cherry Blossom Festival and the more temperate months (May–June and September).

Some history

The main reason the national capital was established here was the site’s location midway between the South and the North. Additionally, it was accessible from the sea, via the Potomac River. Best of all, the land was cheap: Maryland and Virginia ceded sovereignty of a diamond-shaped tract to the federal government – however, a half-century later, Virginia demanded its land back, thus regaining control of such towns as Arlington and Alexandria. Although George Washington’s baroque, radial plan of the city was laid out in 1791 (by a Frenchman, Pierre L’Enfant, assisted by the black American scientist Benjamin Banneker), few buildings were put up, apart from the actual houses of government, until near the end of the century.

After the Civil War, thousands of Southern blacks arrived in search of a sanctuary from racial oppression; to some extent, they found one. Segregation was banned in public places, and Howard University, the only US institution of higher learning that enrolled black people, was set up in 1867. By the 1870s African-Americans made up more than a third of the 150,000 population, but as poverty and squalor became endemic, official segregation was reintroduced in 1920.

After World War II, the city’s economy and population boomed. Segregation of public facilities was declared illegal in the 1950s, and Martin Luther King Jr gave a famous 1963 speech on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. When King was killed five years later, large sections of the city’s ghettos burned, and DC continues to have some of the country’s highest murder rates, as well as appalling levels of unemployment, illiteracy, and drug abuse. However, skyrocketing real-estate values have led to newly paved roads and a revitalized downtown, where chic restaurants and cultural and sporting events have begun to attract visitors to areas once considered urban wastelands.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Washington DC is served by three major airports, two on the outskirts and one right in the city center. Dulles International Airport, 26 miles west in northern Virginia, and Baltimore-Washington International Airport (BWI), halfway between DC and Baltimore, get the majority of the international traffic. By far the most convenient, Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport, west across the Potomac River from the Mall, is mostly used by domestic flights.

Taking a taxi downtown from BWI or Dulles costs $50-60, while SuperShuttle (☎ 1-800/BLUE-VAN, 🌐 www.supershuttle.com) offers door-to-door service from Dulles (45min; $25); BWI (1hr; $30); and National (15min; $12). Cheaper are the express buses that run every half-hour from both airports to nearby Metro subway stations. From Dulles, take the Washington Flyer Coach Service (☎ 1-888/WASH-FLY, 🌐 www.washfly.com) to the West Falls Church Metro station (25min; $9, roundtrip $16). From BWI, take BWI Express Bus #B30 to Greenbelt Metro station (30min; $3). BWI also provides a free shuttle to frequent Amtrak and MARC trains bound for Union Station (30min; one-way $7/$11-15; ☎ 410/672-6169). National Airport conveniently has its own subway stop and is just a short ride from the city center. A taxi downtown from National costs around $18.

By train, you arrive amid the gleaming, Neoclassical glory of Union Station, 50 Massachusetts Ave NE, three blocks north of the US Capitol and with a connecting Metro station. Greyhound and other buses stop at a modern terminal at 1005 First St NE, in a fairly dodgy part of the city, a few blocks north of the Union Station Metro; take a cab, especially at night. Driving into DC is a sure way to experience some of the worst traffic on the East Coast – the main I-95 and I-495 freeways circle Washington on the Beltway and are jammed eighteen hours a day.

Once in the city, stop at the DC Chamber of Commerce Visitor Center, Ronald Reagan Building, 1300 Pennsylvania Ave NW (spring and summer Mon-Fri 8.30am-5.30pm, Sat 9am-4pm; fall and winter Mon-Fri 9am-4.30pm; ☎ 1-866/324-7386, 🌐 www.dcvisit.com), which can help with maps, tours, bookings, and information. The White House Visitor Information Center, not located at the president's mansion but downtown at 1450 Pennsylvania Ave NW (daily 7.30am-4pm; ☎ 202/208-1631, 🌐 www.nps.gov/whho), supplies free maps and handy guides to museums and attractions.

The Capitol Hill post office, at 2 Massachusetts Ave NE (Mon-Fri 7am-midnight, Sat & Sun 7am-8pm; ☎ 202/523-2628; zip code 20002), has the latest hours of the area post offices.

City transportation

Getting around DC is easy. Most places downtown, including the museums, monuments, and White House, are within walking distance of each other, and an excellent public transit system reaches outlying sights and neighborhoods. The growing Metro subway (☎ 202/637-7000, 🌐 www.wmata.com) is clean and efficient; one-way fares start at $1.35, with a slight rush-hour surcharge from 5.30 to 9.30am and from 3 to 7pm (or up to $4 if you're going out to the suburbs); day-passes cost $6.50 and are valid weekdays from 9.30am on and all day on weekends, while weekly passes are $22 – good for fares up to $2.20 during weekday rush hours and all fares at other times (trains run Mon-Thurs 5am-midnight, Fri 5am-3am, Sat 7am-3am & Sun 7am-midnight). The standard fare on the extensive bus network is $1.25, or $3 for express buses. Taxis are a good alternative: if traveling in the downtown core, most fees are zoned at $8.50–11, and most crosstown fares are no more than $15–20. (Surcharges kick in during peak hours and for each additional passenger.) There are taxi stands at major hotels and transportation terminals (like Union Station), or call Yellow Cab (☎202/544-1212) or Diamond Cab (☎202/387-6200).

Tours

During the day, Tourmobiles (daily 9.30am–4.30pm; tickets $20; ☎202/554-5100, www.tourmobile.com) connect the major museums and sights, allowing you to stop for as long as you choose at twenty different locations.

If you want to cycle or cruise along the Potomac River or the historic C&O Canal, both Thompson's Boat Center, 2900 Virginia Ave NW at Rock Creek Parkway (daily 8am–6pm; ☎202/333-9543), near the Watergate complex, and Fletcher's Boat House, 4940 Canal Rd NW, two miles farther up the canal towpath (daily 9am–7pm; ☎202/244-0461), rent touring bikes, rowboats, and canoes (bikes $4–8 per hour, $15–25 a day; boats $8–10 per hour, $22–30 a day). Better Bikes (daily 24hr; ☎202/293-2080) will deliver rental bikes anywhere in DC ($38–48 a day). In addition, mule-drawn canal boats, staffed by costumed National Park Service guides, follow the old C&O Canal from the Georgetown Visitors Center (1057 Thomas Jefferson St; ☎202/653-5190) on an hour-long narrated cruise (April–Oct; $8). For walking tours of the city, DC Heritage (☎202/828-9255, www.dcheritage.org) has information on the many options for viewing aspects of local history, while Washington Walks ($10 per person; ☎202/484-1565, www.washingtonwalks.com) provides a number of easy treks around the area's more notable sights.

Accommodation

Most DC hotels cater to business travelers and political lobbyists, and during the week are quite expensive. At weekends, however, many cut their rates by up to fifty percent or up to $100 or so. For a list of vacancies, call Washington DC Accommodations (☎202/289-2220 or 1-800/503-3330, www.wdcahotels.com), which provides a hotel-reservation and travel-planning service.

Similarly, a number of B&B agencies offer comfortable doubles starting from $60 in the low season: try Capitol Reservations (☎202/452-1270 or 1-800/847-4832, www.capitolreservations.com) or Bed & Breakfast Accommodations, Ltd (☎413/582-9888 or 1-877/893-3233, www.bedandbreakfastdc.com). There's no good camping anywhere near DC, but Catholic University (☎202/319-5291, conferences.cua.edu), Georgetown University (☎202/687-3001, housing.georgetown.edu), and George Washington University (☎202/994-2552, gwired.gwu.edu/gwhousing) offer budget rooms (starting at $25–30) in summer; these must be arranged well in advance and may have minimum-stay and other requirements. Wherever you go, make sure the facility has air conditioning; DC can be unbearably stifling in the summer without it.

Brickskeller Inn 1523 22nd St NW ☎202/293-1885, www.thebrickskeller.org. A converted apartment house with a stately facade and simple rooms, most of which have sinks; some have a bath and TV. Located above one of Dupont Circle's best bars. $16 extra for private bath. Ⓢ

Embassy Inn 1627 16th St NW ☎202/234-7800 or 1-800/423-9111, www.windsorembassyinns.com.

Welcoming inn in Dupont Circle East offering good-value rooms, free continental breakfast, and early evening sherry. Add $30 for high season. Ⓢ

Fairmont 2401 M St NW ☎202/429-2400, www.fairmont.com. High-class oasis with extremely comfortable rooms with high-speed Internet access, plus a pool, an excellent health club, an internal garden courtyard, and a "Gold Floor" with elite rooms for the real movers and shakers. Just north of Washington Circle, midway between Foggy Bottom and Georgetown. $279. George 15 E St NW, Capitol Hill ☎ 202/347-4200 or 1-800/576-8331, www.hotelgeorge.com. Postmodernism meets Art Deco, resulting in sleek lines, contemporary room furnishings (dark wood and glass, with copious Washington imagery), marble bathrooms, in-room CD players, a trendy bar-bistro, and one of the DC's more stylish lobbies. Save $120 by booking on weekdays. 5-9

Grand Hyatt 1000 H St NW, Downtown ☎ 202/582-1234 or 1-800/233-1234, www.grand-washington.hyatt.com. A nearly 900-room hotel with a splashy twelve-story atrium featuring a lagoon, waterfalls, and glass elevators, plus tasteful rooms and an on-site deli-café, restaurant, and sports bar. Located opposite the Convention Center and with its own Metro connection. Rates drop by $100 on weekends. 5-9

Hay-Adams 800 16th St NW, Foggy Bottom ☎ 202/638-6600 or 1-800/424-5054, www.hay-adams.com. From the gold-leaf and walnut lobby to the sleek modern rooms, the Hay-Adams is one of DC's finest hotels. Upper floors have great views of the White House across the square. Breakfast is served in one of the District's better spots for early-morning power dining. 9

HI-Washington DC 1009 11th St NW ☎ 202/737-2333, www.hiwashingtondc.org. Large (270 beds), clean, downtown hostel near the Convention Center, in a somewhat dicey area. Offers free continental breakfast, high-speed Web access, renovated dorm rooms ($32), and shared bathrooms, plus kitchen, lounge, laundry, luggage storage, and organized activities. 1

Kalorama Guest House 1854 Mintwood Place NW ☎ 202/667-6369, www.kaloramaguesthouse.com. Spacious rooms in three Victorian townhouses near Adams-Morgan, filled with antiques and handsome furniture (but no TV). Free breakfast, coffee, and evening sherry. Booking is essential – doubles with bath can go for $95–110, depending on the season. 4

Mayflower 1127 Connecticut Ave NW ☎ 202/347-3000 or 1-800/228-7697, www.renaissancehotels.com/WASSH. If there's one spot in DC where the national and international political elite come to roost, this is it. This sumptuous Washington classic has a Promenade – a vast, imperial hall – and smart rooms with subtle, tasteful furnishings; the terrific Café Promenade restaurant is much in demand with power diners. $169 weekends, otherwise $400+. 7

Monaco 700 F St NW, Downtown ☎ 202/628-7177, www.monaco-dc.com. Perhaps the most architecturally significant hotel in the area, this former grand, Neoclassical post office designed by Robert Mills today houses ultra-chic accommodation. Features sophisticated modern rooms, minimalist contemporary decor, public spaces with marble floors and columns, and striking spiral stairways. 9

Omni Shoreham 2500 Calvert St NW, Upper Northwest ☎ 202/234-0700, www.omnihotels.com. Plush, grand institution bursting with history and overlooking Rock Creek Park. Offers swank, comfortable rooms, many with a view of the park, plus an outdoor pool, tennis courts, and the foliage-filled Garden Court for drinks. 9

Palomar 2121 P St NW, Dupont Circle ☎ 202/293-3100, www.hotelpalomarc.com. Excellent boutique accommodation with flat-panel TVs and CD players in the rooms, an on-site pool, a fitness center, a stylish lounge, and an evening "wine hour" for schmoozing with other guests. 9

State Plaza 2117 E St NW, Foggy Bottom ☎ 202/861-8200 or 1-800/424-2859, www.stateplaza.com. Commodious, stylish suites with fully equipped kitchens and a dining area, plus a rooftop sundeck, health club, and good café. $109-169, depending on season. 5-7

Swiss Inn 1204 Massachusetts Ave NW ☎ 202/371-1816, www.theswissinn.com. Cozy townhouse accommodation with air-conditioned rooms featuring kitchenettes, TV, and bath. Hosts are multilingual. Book well in advance since prices don't get much better downtown. 4

Tabard Inn 1739 N St NW ☎ 202/785-1277, www.tabardinn.com. Three converted Victorian townhouses near Dupont Circle, with forty unique, antique-stocked rooms featuring a mix of modern and old-fashioned decor. Comfortable lounges have romantic fireplaces, plus there's a courtyard and a fine restaurant. Rates include breakfast and a pass to the nearby YMCA. 5

Topaz 1733 N St NW ☎ 202/393-3000, www.topazhotel.com. Boutique hotel whose vibrant rooms have padded headboards with polka dots, lime-green striped wallpaper, and arty furniture; several also have space for yoga – complete with workout gear and videos – or treadmills, stationary bikes, and elliptical machines. Special rates can drop to as low as $125. 5-7

Washington International Student Center 2451 18th St NW ☎ 202/667-7681 or 1-800/567-4150, www.washingtondchotel.com. Backpacker accommodation in plain dorms in Adams-Morgan, with Internet access, lockers, and free pickup from bus and train stations (advance reservation required). This is downtown DC's cheapest bed ($23), so book at least two weeks in advance. 1

William Lewis House 1309 R St NW ☎ 202/462-

7574 or 1-800/465-7574, @www.wlewishous.com. Elegantly decorated, gay-friendly B&B set in two century-old townhouses north of Logan Circle. All ten antique-filled rooms have shared bath. Out back there's a roomy porch and a hot tub set in a garden. Rates include continental breakfast on weekdays and a full American breakfast on weekends. It's ultra-cheap for what you get, so reservations are essential. 4

Windsor Inn 1842 16th St NW ☎202/667-0300 or 1-800/423-9111, @www.windsorembassynns.com. Not too far from Dupont Circle, with units in twin brick 1920s houses and spacious suites.

Some rooms have fridges; ground-floor rooms look onto a terrace. Free continental breakfast is served in the attractive lobby. 6

Woodley Park Guest House 2647 Woodley Rd NW, Upper Northwest ☎202/667-0218 or 1-866/667-0218, @woodleyparkguesthouse.com. Sixteen cozy rooms (the cheapest share facilities) that come with free continental breakfast and cheap parking. Close to the zoo, the Metro, and plenty of good restaurants. 5

The City

Washington's city plan is easy to grasp: with the US Capitol as the center of the street grid, the District is divided into four quadrants – northeast, northwest, southeast, and southwest. Dozens of broad avenues, named after states, run diagonally across a standard grid of streets, meeting up at monumental traffic circles like Dupont Circle. North–south streets are numbered, east–west ones are lettered.

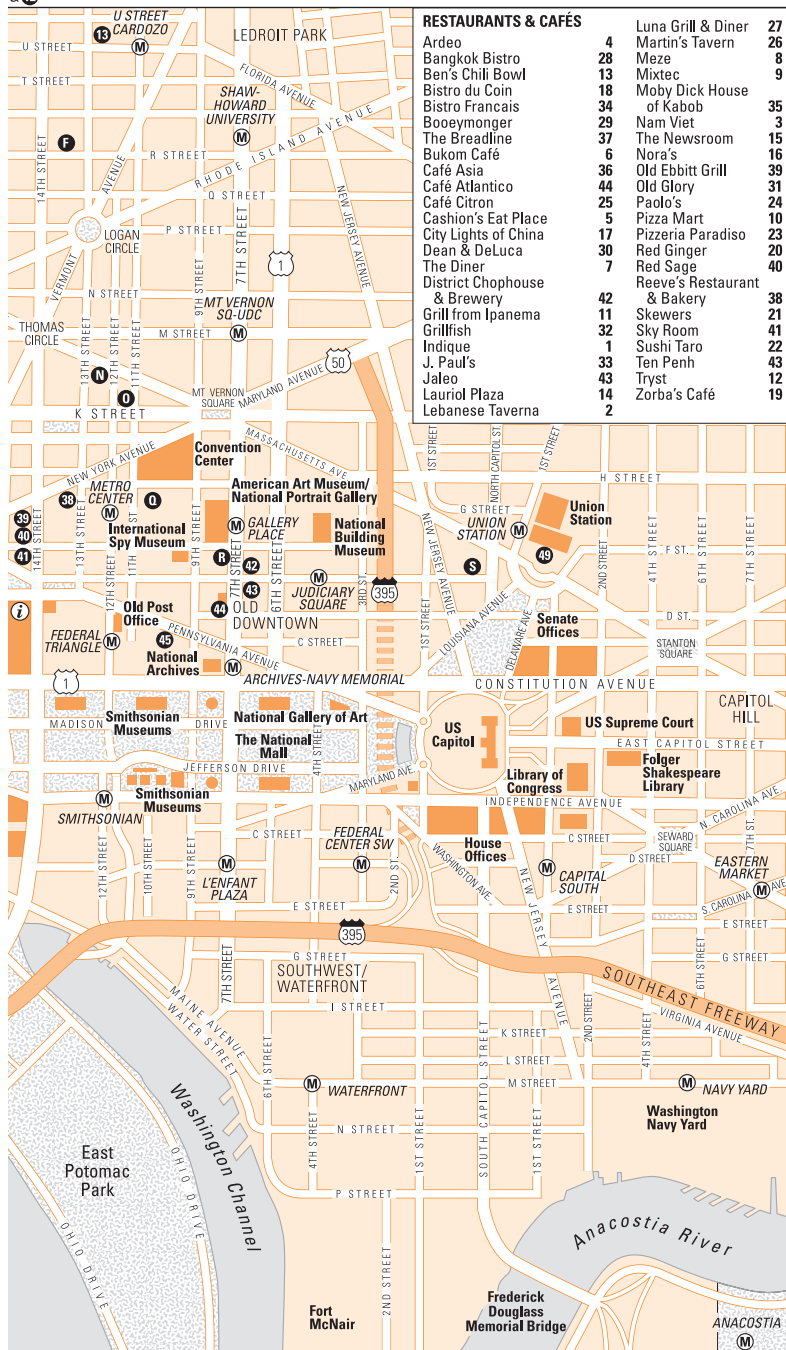

Almost all the most famous sights are on Capitol Hill or, running two miles west, the broad, green National Mall, which holds monuments to presidents Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and (Franklin D.) Roosevelt, as well as the White House, official home of the president. Also here are the bulk of the city's many fine museums, including the peerless collections of the Smithsonian Institution.

Between the Mall and the main spine of Pennsylvania Avenue – the route connecting Capitol Hill to the White House – the Neoclassical buildings of the Federal Triangle are home to agencies forming the hub of the national bureaucracy. North and east of here, Old Downtown has been revitalized after years of neglect, and features new plazas, galleries, and restaurants alongside traditional attractions like the Old Post Office and Ford Theatre, where Abraham Lincoln was shot. West of the White House, Foggy Bottom is another cornerstone of the federal bureaucracy, but further northwest is the city's oldest area, Georgetown, where popular bars and restaurants line M Street and Wisconsin Avenue above the Potomac River. Other neighborhoods to check out – especially for hotels, restaurants, and bars – are Dupont Circle at Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New Hampshire avenues, which pulls in a dynamic mix of urban professionals of all stripes, and the gentrifying community of Adams–Morgan, a favored destination of the weekend party crowd that's a short walk from Dupont Circle up 18th Street at Columbia Road. More gung-ho visitors may also want to follow the Red Line Metro out to the genteel precinct of Upper Northwest, which offers Washington National Cathedral and the National Zoo. Most tourists also take the short Metro ride to Arlington in Virginia to see the National Cemetery (burial place of John F. Kennedy) and glance at the Pentagon.

Capitol Hill

Although there's more than one hill in Washington DC, when people talk about what's happening on "The Hill," they mean Capitol Hill – a shallow knoll topped by the giant white dome of the US Capitol, rising at the official center of the city. Home of both the legislature – Congress – and the judiciary – the Supreme Court – this is still the place where the law of the land is made and interpreted; in addition, it holds the esteemed Library of Congress.

US Capitol

The US Capitol, at the east end of the National Mall between Constitution and Independence avenues (tour information ☎202/225-6827, general information ☎202/224-3121, @www.aoc.gov/cc/visit), provides an opportunity to appreciate the immense power wielded by the nation's elected officials.

George Washington laid the building's cornerstone in 1793 in a ceremony rich with Masonic symbolism, and though the Capitol was torched by the British during the War of 1812, it was later rebuilt and repeatedly expanded over the ensuing centuries. Ten presidents – most recently Gerald Ford – have lain in state in the impressive Rotunda, which, capped by a massive cast-iron dome 180ft high and 96ft across, links the two halves of the Capitol – the Senate in the north wing, the House of Representatives in the south. When the “Tholos” lantern above the dome is lit, Congress is in session.

Tight security means that walk-up access to the Capitol is limited to guided tours that leave every thirty minutes (9am–4.30pm; 35min; free). The tour meanders through several historical rooms, including the National Statuary Hall and the Capitol crypt. Since advance tickets are unavailable, arrive early at the Capitol Guide Service kiosk (near 1st St SW and Independence Ave). Tickets are distributed starting at 9am, and lines can form as early as 7am; before your scheduled tour, you can expect to wait in a lengthy queue south of the building at the South Visitor Receiving Facility. US citizens who want to see the legislative chambers must arrange to get a pass through their representatives. Visitors from other countries should bring a passport or photo ID and first go to the receiving facility, where they can obtain international passes. The planned Capitol Visitors Center, underneath the east front of the building, is years behind schedule, and the current, prospective opening date is in late 2007 or 2008.

Library of Congress

With 130 million books, manuscripts, microfilm rolls, and photographs kept on 530 miles of shelves, the Library of Congress is the largest library in the world. Housed east of the Capitol in the Jefferson, Madison, and John Adams buildings between 1st and 3rd streets SE and E Capitol and C streets SE (Mon–Sat 10am–5.30pm; free; ☎202/707-8000, @www.loc.gov), the library was set up to serve members of Congress in 1800. In 1870, the library became the national copyright repository, and in time it outgrew its original home. The exuberantly eclectic Thomas Jefferson Building opened in 1897, complete with a domed octagonal Reading Room, and hundreds of mosaics, murals, and sculptures in its stunning Great Hall. The ongoing American Treasures exhibit, on the second floor, contains a vast, rotating collection of artifacts that includes such diverse pieces as Walt Whitman's Civil War notebooks, the original typescript of Martin Luther King Jr's “I have a dream” speech, Martha Jefferson's household inventory (with a record of ducks and geese butchered), and numerous music scores, historic photographs, early recordings, magazines, and baseball cards. Free tours depart Monday to Saturday at 10.30am, 11.30am, 1.30pm, 2.30pm, and 3.30pm (with the latter tour time not available on Saturday).

Supreme Court

The Supreme Court, across from the US Capitol at First Street NE and Maryland Avenue NE (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm; free; ☎202/479-3211, @www

.supremecourtus.gov), is the nation's final arbiter of what is and isn't legal. The federal judiciary dates to 1787, but the court didn't receive its own building until 1935, when Cass Gilbert – architect of New York's Woolworth Building – designed this Greek Revival masterpiece. The grand interior spaces, especially the marble and damask drapes of the courtroom itself – where guides give lectures (hourly Mon–Fri 9.30am–3.30pm; free) when the court is not in session – make it worth climbing the gleaming white steps and going inside. Sessions run from October to June. Arrive early to get a seat, or join the separate line if you're happy to settle for a three-minute stroll through the standing gallery.

Folger Shakespeare Library

The renowned Folger Shakespeare Library 201 E Capitol St (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; tours Mon–Fri 11am, Sat 11am & 1pm; ☎ www.folger.edu), on the south side of the Supreme Court, was founded in 1932 and today holds more than 300,000 books, manuscripts, paintings, and engravings related to Shakespeare's work and background. The dark-oak Great Hall – with its carved lintels, stained glass, Tudor roses, and sculpted ceiling – displays changing exhibitions about the playwright and Elizabethan themes; the reproduction Elizabethan Theater hosts lectures and readings as well as medieval and Renaissance music concerts; and an Elizabethan garden on the east lawn grows herbs and flowers common in the sixteenth century.

The National Mall – monuments

The elegant, two-mile-long National Mall stretches from the Capitol to the Lincoln Memorial and is DC's most popular green space, used for summer softball games and Fourth of July concerts. Yet its central role in a planned capital city also places it at the very heart of the country's political and social life: when there's a protest gesture to be made, the Mall is the place to make it, whether it's an anti-war demonstration or the unveiling of an AIDS memorial quilt. What the Mall is perhaps best known for, however is its quartet of presidential monuments, along with the White House and the powerful memorials to veterans of the Korean and Vietnam wars, and, as of recently, World War II.

Washington Monument

The Mall's most prominent feature, the Washington Monument, is an unadorned marble obelisk built in memory of George Washington. At 555ft, it's the tallest all-masonry structure in the world, towering over the city from its hilltop perch at 15th Street NW and Constitution Avenue (daily 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 202/426-6841, ☎ www.nps.gov/wamo). To visit the monument pick up a free ticket from the 15th Street kiosk (8.30am–4:30pm, just south of Constitution Ave on Madison Drive), which allows you to turn up at a fixed time later in the day. The kiosk is first-come, first-served; tickets run out early during the peak season. You can also book a ticket in advance with the National Park Service ($1.50; ☎ 1-800/967-2283, ☎ reservations.nps.gov). The elevator to the observation deck takes seventy seconds and deposits you at the 500ft level to enjoy the monument's panoramic 360° views of the city, though from rather small viewing windows.

The White House

For nearly two hundred years, the White House has been the residence and office of the president of the United States. Standing at the edge of the Mall, due north from the Washington Monument at America's most famous address, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave NW, this grand, Neoclassical edifice was completed in 1800 by Irish immigrant James Hoban, who modeled it on the Georgian manors of Dublin.

Though many visitors are surprised by how small and homey it is, security at the White House is every bit as tight as you'd imagine. Protesters are still allowed to set up camp in Lafayette Park, opposite the north entrance, and adjacent Pennsylvania Avenue has recently been pedestrianized and made into a pleasant strolling route. However, in the wake of 9/11, White House tours (free; ☎ 202/456-7041, 🌐 www.whitehouse.gov) have become much more restricted: to gain access, you must be part of a group of ten and contact your congressional representative at least a month in advance (foreign visitors can contact their embassies or consulates); exceptions are made for school groups and members of the military.

If you're interested in the history of the place and its occupants, walk a few blocks southeast to the visitor center at 1450 Pennsylvania Ave (daily 7.30am–4pm; ☎ 202/208-1631). It's filled with photos and film footage of First Families and their distinguished guests – including a portly President Hoover playing “Hooverball” with a group of lumbering judges, and the Wright Brothers showing off their latest airplane – and the inaugural portraits, in which a series of haggard and exhausted old men hand over power to their beaming, youthful successors.

National World War II Memorial

In 2004 the National World War II Memorial, 17th St SW at Independence Ave (daily 24hr, staffed 9.30am–11.30pm; ☎ 202/426-6841, 🌐 www.nps.gov/nwwm), just west of the Washington Monument, opened to much acclaim, and the memorial stands as a moving statement of duty and sacrifice.

Two arcs on each side of a central fountain have a combined total of 56 stone pillars (representing the number of US states and territories at the time of the war) that are decorated with bronze wreaths. In the middle of each arc stands a short tower, one called “Atlantic” and the other “Pacific,” and within each tower are four interlinked bronze eagles and a sculpted wreath, which, despite its bulk, seems to float above you in mid-air. Beyond the carefully considered architecture and the FDR and Eisenhower quotes chiseled on the walls, a concave wall of four thousand golden stars reminds you of the 400,000 fallen US soldiers – a number matched only by the colossal carnage of the Civil War.

Lincoln Memorial

The Lincoln Memorial, modeled after the Parthenon, with its stately Doric columns, anchors the west end of the Mall (daily 24hr, staffed 9.30am–11.30pm; free; 🌐 www.nps.gov/linc). As one of America's most emblematic sights, the memorial is a fitting tribute to the 16th US president, who preserved the Union after Southern states seceded and took up arms during the Civil War, and ended slavery with his Emancipation Proclamation in 1863.

Although blacks were shamefully not allowed access to the site when it was dedicated in 1922, the memorial would later fulfill its appropriate role as an icon of liberty and peaceful protest. During the Civil Rights March on Washington in 1963, Martin Luther King Jr delivered his epic “I Have a Dream” speech here; the on-site protests against the Vietnam War in the 1960s fueled the growing antiwar feeling in the country; and, since then, all manner of activists, mourners, celebrants, and zealots have given speeches here.

Inside the monument, an enormous, craggy likeness of Lincoln sits firmly grasping the arms of his throne-like chair, deep in thought. Inscriptions of his two most celebrated speeches – the Gettysburg Address and the Second Inaugural Address – are carved on the south and north walls.

△ Vietnam Veterans memorial

Vietnam Veterans Memorial

A striking wedge of black granite, slashed into the green lawn of the Mall at Constitution Avenue and 21st Street NW, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial (daily 24hr, staffed 9.30am–11.30pm; free; 📍 www.nps.gov/vive) serves as a somber and powerful reminder of the 58,000 US soldiers who died in Vietnam. The pathway that slopes down from the grass forms a gash in the earth, its increasing depth symbolizing the increasing involvement of US forces in the war. The polished surface is carved with the names of every soldier who died, in chronological order from 1959 to 1975, and you can often find family members taking paper rubbings of the names of the departed.

In 1984, a traditional grouping of three soldiers in combat was placed nearby, under a floodlit American flag; a decade later, the Vietnam Women's Memorial, in a grove of trees at the east end of the site, added another sculptural triad, honoring the eleven thousand women who served; and currently there are plans for a subterranean visitors center to offer a more heroic view of the war, opening in 2009.

Korean War Veterans Memorial

The Korean War Veterans Memorial, southeast of the Lincoln Memorial (daily 24hr, staffed 8am–11.45pm; free; 📍 www.nps.gov/kwvm), has as its centerpiece a Field of Remembrance, featuring nineteen life-sized, armed combat troops sculpted from stainless steel. The troops advance across a triangular plot with alternating rows of stones and plant life and head toward the Stars and Stripes positioned at the vertex. A reflecting black granite wall, with the inscription “Freedom is not free” and an etched mural, depicting military support crew and medical staff, flank the ensemble.

Jefferson Memorial and Tidal Basin

Completed in 1943 and loosely modeled on his country home, Monticello (see p.447), the Jefferson Memorial, just south of the Mall near 14th Street SW and Ohio Drive (daily 24hr, staffed 9.30am–11.30pm; free; 📍 www.nps.gov/thje), has a shallow dome hovering over a huge bronze statue of Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence and the third US president. It's a stately affair, but the crowds don't linger long, especially with the fetching scene just out front, where the picturesque Tidal Basin stretches up to the Mall and offers one of the best places in town to take a break from sightseeing. The reflections off the Tidal Basin are especially pretty in spring when the rows of Japanese cherry trees come out in full bloom (usually early to mid-April). Rent a boat from Tidal Basin Paddle Boats, 1501 Main Ave SW (March–Sept daily 10am–6pm; $8–16/hr; ☎ 202/479-2426), for a spectacular view of the memorial from the water.

FDR Memorial

The FDR Memorial opened alongside the Tidal Basin, just west of the Jefferson Memorial, in 1997 at West Basin Drive SW and Ohio Drive (daily 24hr, staffed 8am–11.45pm; free; 🌐 www.nps.gov/fdrm). The memorial spreads across a seven-acre site made up of a series of interlinking granite outdoor galleries – called “rooms” – punctuated by waterfalls, statuary, sculpted reliefs, groves of trees, and shaded alcoves and plazas. It's among the most successful and popular of DC's memorials, and has an almost Athenian quality to its open spaces, resting-places, benches, and inspiring texts. On a bright spring or fall day, with the glistening basin waters and emerging views of the Washington Monument and Jefferson Memorial, it's one of the finest places in the city for a contemplative stroll.

The National Mall – museums

In contrast to the memorials and monuments of its western half, the National Mall's eastern side is dominated by museums, most of which are part of the spectacular Smithsonian Institution. The Smithsonian was endowed in 1846 by Englishman James Smithson (who never visited the US) “for the increase and diffusion of knowledge.” The institution's original home, the stately 1855 structure known as The Castle, 1000 Jefferson Drive SW, is in the center of the Mall's south side and now acts as the main visitor center (daily 8.30am–5.30pm; ☎ 202/357-2700). The lovely, flower-filled Enid A. Haupt Garden fronts the Castle on its south facade. Adjacent to the east, the eclectic delight of the Arts and Industries Building has been closed for several years now as the institution struggles to renovate and find a use for it. Unless otherwise stated below, all Smithsonian museums and galleries are open daily all year (except December 25) from 10am until 5.30pm, with summer hours until 7.30 or 8pm, and admission is free. For details on current exhibitions and events, call the visitor center or visit the Smithsonian's website at 🌐 www.si.edu.

National Museum of American History

One of the prime repositories of US cultural artifacts is the National Museum of American History, located at 14th Street NW and Constitution Avenue (☎ 202/357-2700, 🌐 americanhistory.si.edu). Here you'll find Judy Garland's ruby slippers from The Wizard of Oz, Muhammad Ali's boxing gloves, and TV puppet star Howdy Doody, as well as vanishing Americana like Model T Fords, old post offices, and a restored, c.1900 ice-cream parlor. The museum's biggest draw, however, is the battered red, white, and blue flag that inspired the US national anthem – the Star-Spangled Banner itself, which survived the British bombardment of Baltimore Harbor during the War of 1812. Unfortunately, until summer 2008, the museum will be closed for substantial renovations. Check the website or call for updates on the building's progress.

National Museum of Natural History

Continuing eastward toward the Capitol, on the north side of the Mall, at Tenth Street NW and Constitution Avenue lies the imposing, three-story entrance rotunda of the National Museum of Natural History (☎ 202/357-2700, @ www.mnh.si.edu), with troops of screeching school kids endlessly chasing each other around a colossal African elephant. Hundreds of other stuffed animals, tracing evolution from fossilized four-billion-year-old plankton to dinosaurs' eggs and beyond, are also on display throughout the facility.

Naturally enough, the “Dinosaurs” section is the most popular part of the museum, with hulking skeletons reassembled in imaginative poses. Also appealing to (some) tots is the Insect Zoo, filled with all types of bugs, including giant, menacing-looking tropical cockroaches, and the huge-screen IMAX movies ($8.50, kids $7; @ www.si.edu/imax) on various natural themes. The museum also boasts a truly exceptional array of gemstones, including the legendary 45-carat Hope Diamond that once belonged to Marie Antoinette, and the Gem and Mineral Hall, which features natural and reconstructed environments, interactive exhibits, and hands-on specimens.

More recent attractions include the Hall of Mammals, where some three hundred replicas focus on mostly fur-wearing, milk-producing creatures in a variety of simulated environments; and the “African Voices” exhibit – bursting with colorful displays, tools, garments, and icons – suggesting the wide range of languages, cultures, and religions practiced on the continent.

National Gallery of Art – West Building

The visually stunning National Gallery of Art, just east on Constitution Avenue between Third and Ninth streets NW (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–6pm; free; ☎ 202/737-4215, @ www.nga.gov), is the most important museum in the US after New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art. The original Neoclassical gallery, designed by John Russell Pope and opened in 1941, is now called the West Building and holds the bulk of the permanent collection. If you only have limited time, latch onto one of the informative free, daily tours; ask for a schedule at the information desk.

From the domed central rotunda, where you can pick up a floor plan and gallery guide, a vaulted corridor runs the length of the building. Galleries to the west on the main floor display major works by early and high-Renaissance and Baroque masters, arranged by nationality: half a dozen Rembrandts fill the Dutch gallery – including a glowing, mad portrait of Lucretia – Van Eyck and Rubens dominate the Flemish, and El Greco and Velázquez face off in the Spanish, near eight progressively darker Goyas. In the voluminous Italian galleries, there's the only Leonardo in the Americas, the 1474 Ginevra de' Benci, painted in oil on wood, plus Giovanni Bellini's The Feast of the Gods, which depicts deities feasting to bawdy excess in a bucolic setting. Titian, Bellini's former pupil, offers vivid images of Saint John the Evangelist on Patmos and Venus with a Mirror, and fellow Venetian Tintoretto is well-represented with a series of arch, swirling Mannerist portraits. Raphael has only one major piece here: his renowned Alba Madonna (1510), in which the Virgin Mary and baby Jesus are seated on the ground, leaning against a tree stump – intended to emphasize their humility. Works by Sandro Botticelli include his rendering of the Adoration of the Magi, set in the ruins of a Classical temple from which the frame of a new structure, representing Christianity, rises, while even more eye-catching is Benvenuto di Giovanni's five-panel “pentatych” of Jesus surrounded by various spindly, grotesque onlookers.

The other half of the West Building holds an exceptional collection of nineteenth-century French paintings – Gauguin from Pont-Aven to Tahiti, a couple of Van Goghs, some Monet studies of Rouen Cathedral and water lilies, Cézanne still lifes, and the like. For British art, you can find genteel portraits by Gainsborough and Reynolds, but even more evocative hazy land- and waterscapes by J.M.W.

Turner. A series of early American portraits by the likes of Gilbert Stuart gives a good account of the first five US presidents; expansive landscapes by Thomas Cole and others recount the glories of the primeval wilderness; and, best of all, Augustus St Gaudens' magisterial battle sculpture Memorial to Robert Gould Shaw and the Massachusetts 54th Regiment takes up a whole gallery to itself, the colonel's rigid equestrian pose countered by the weary intensity of the black troops marching alongside in a bid to defeat the forces of Southern slavery and secession.

National Gallery of Art – East Building

The National Gallery's East Building (same hours and admission) was opened in 1978 with an audaciously modern I.M. Pei design, dominated by a huge atrium. European highlights of the permanent collection include Pablo Picasso's Blue Period pieces The Tragedy and Family of Saltimbanques, along with his cubist Nude Woman; Henri Matisse's exuberant Pianist and Checker Players, depicting his apartment in Nice; Edouard Manet's evocative Oysters; and A King Charles Spaniel, Georges Seurat's study for his signature Pointillist style. Contemporaneous American works are capped by the stunning pieces of George Bellows, notably the brutal prizefight pictures Club Night and Both Members of This Club, in which you can almost feel the heat as the crowd bays for blood.

Andy Warhol's works are as familiar as they come, with classic serial examples of 32 Soup Cans, Let Us Now Praise Famous Men, and Green Marilyn, while notable Abstract Expressionist works include large, hovering slabs of blurry color by Mark Rothko; the thirteen stations of the cross by Barnett Newman, a series of big canvases built around the visual rhythm of black-and-white stripes; and Jackson Pollock's Number 1, 1950 (Lavender Mist), a spray of finely drizzled, multicolored drippings. There's also Robert Rauschenberg's splattered, stuffed-bird sculpture known as Canyon; and Jasper Johns's Field Painting and Target, which are among his more influential works; and Claes Oldenburg's Soft Drainpipe – Red (Hot) Version (1967), a huge, soft-red sculpture that looks as much like a drooping phallus as anything under the sink.

National Museum of the American Indian

Continuing clockwise around the Mall, skirting the Capitol Reflecting Pool and heading back west along Jefferson Drive, the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian (☎202/357-2700, 🌐www.nmai.si.edu) is the newest of the Mall's museums, instantly recognizable by its curvaceous modern form, with undulating walls the color of yellow earth – designed to represent the natural American landscape – plus a terraced facade and surrounding replicas of forest and wetland landscapes.

The museum is intended to recognize and honor the many tribes who occupied the continent before the arrival of white settlers in the sixteenth and seventeenth century, including the Iroquois, Sioux, Navajo, Cherokee, and countless others. The collection – which reaches back thousands of years and incorporates nearly a million objects from nations spread out from Canada to Mexico – features fascinating ceramics, textiles, and other artifacts from civilizations such as the Olmec, Maya, and Inca, in addition to totem poles, kachina dolls, canoes, and ceremonial masks, headdresses, and outfits. The museum also sponsors periodic musical and dance events, along with lectures, films, and other cultural presentations.

National Air and Space Museum

The National Air and Space Museum, further west between Fourth and Seventh streets SW (☎202/357-1400, 🌐www.nasm.si.edu) is by far DC's most popular attraction, drawing nearly ten million people every year. The entry hall, known as “Milestones of Flight,” is a huge atrium filled with all kinds of flying machines, rockets, satellites, and assorted aeronautic gizmos that are bolted to the floor, hung from the rafters, and couched in cylindrical holes. For many the highlight is the Spirit of St Louis, which flew into history on May 20, 1927, when 25-year-old Charles Lindbergh piloted the world’s first solo transatlantic flight. Elsewhere you can see spy planes, the Sputnik satellite, sound-barrier-breaking fighters, mail planes, and Cold War-era missiles – ominously, the drab green one is an actual (disarmed) ICBM, the Minuteman III.

The “Space Race” exhibit traces the development of space flight, from machines as diverse as a V2 rocket (Hitler’s secret weapon and the world’s first ballistic missile system) to an array of space suits from different eras. Nearby, “Rocketry and Space Flight” traces the history of rocketry from the black-powder rockets used in thirteenth-century China to Robert Goddard’s experiments with liquid fuel in 1926, which pointed the way to eventual space flight.

The whimsically labeled “Wright Cycle Co.” is devoted to the siblings who pioneered aeronautics; the focus is the handmade Wright Flyer, in which the Wrights made the first powered flight in December 1903 at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina. Next door, the “Pioneers of Flight” gallery recounts similarly courageous endeavors, though most visitors make a beeline for “Apollo to the Moon,” the most popular and crowded room in the museum. The main gallery centers on the Apollo 11 (1969) and 17 (1972) missions, the first and last US flights to the moon. There are Neil Armstrong’s and Buzz Aldrin’s spacesuits, a Lunar Roving Vehicle (basically a golf cart with a garden seat), Apollo 17’s flight-control deck, tools, navigation aids, space food, clothes, and charts, and an astronaut’s survival kit (complete with shark repellent).

Finally, the most hardcore of aeronautics buffs should inquire about the museum’s Steven F. Udvar-Hazy Center in suburban Virginia, where you can get a look at flying craft too big even to fit into the main museum’s capacious digs.

Hirshhorn Museum

Continuing west, the Hirshhorn Museum, Independence Ave at 7th St SW (☎ 202/357-2700, 🌐 www.hirshhorn.si.edu), with its concrete facade and monumental scale, is a perfect example of late-modernist architecture at its most inhuman. If the museum has one recognized strength, it’s nineteenth-century French sculpture. Of various bronzes by Henri Matisse, most notable is The Serf, a stumpy portrait of a downtrodden spirit, while Edgar Degas offers energetic studies of women washing, stretching, and emerging from a bath. Masks and busts by Pablo Picasso trace his (and sculpture’s) growing alliance with Cubism, and abstraction gets further along with Brancusi, whose Torso of a Young Man resembles a cylindrical brass phallus.

The Hirshhorn’s cache of modern paintings has several strengths (de Kooning, Bacon) and starts with figurative paintings from the late nineteenth and early twentieth century and winds its way toward Abstract Expressionism and Pop Art. Along the way, separate rooms showcase the various major currents of the past century, from the surrealism of Salvador Dalí, Max Ernst, and Joan Miró to the organic abstractions of Alexander Calder.

National Museum of African Art

Further on, the domed National Museum of African Art, 950 Independence Ave SW (☎ 202/357-4600, 🌐 www.nmafa.si.edu), holds more than six thousand sculptures and artifacts from the cultures of sub-Saharan Africa. The permanent collection ranges widely, and though there are plenty of rotating exhibits, the one that is continuously on view is the museum’s signature “Art of the Personal Object.” It displays chairs, stools, and headrests, mostly carved from wood using an adze, as well as assorted ivory snuff containers (two from Angola with stoppers shaped like human heads), beer straws (from Uganda), carved drinking horns, combs, pipes, spoons, baskets, and cups.

Elsewhere, the emphasis is on political, religious, and ceremonial art, including rounded, stylized, terracotta equestrian and archer figures from Mali and, from Nigeria, a carved wooden palace door that stands 6ft high and depicts in relief a king seated on a horse, his wives ranked above him, and soldiers and daughters below. Remarkably, the door was carved from a single piece of wood.

Arthur M. Sackler Gallery

The angular and pyramidal Arthur M. Sackler Gallery, 1050 Independence Ave SW (☎202/633-4880, 🌐www.asia.si.edu), along with the Freer Gallery (see below), is part of the National Museum of Asian Art. Among its permanent exhibitions, which are on the first level, “The Arts of China” is the most prominent, featuring 3000-year-old Chinese bronzes, ritual wine containers decorated with the faces and tails of dragons, intricate jade pendants, remarkably well-preserved carved wooden cabinets and book stands, and Qing imperial porcelain embellished with symbolic figures and motifs.

Also fascinating is the “Luxury Arts of the Silk Route Empires” exhibit, with silver Syrian bowls, Persian plates, and Central Asian swords and buckles; note as well the beautifully worked, fourth-century Iranian silver drinking vessel (called a rhyton) shaped in the form of a gazelle. Other displays that may be on view include Hindu temple sculpture from India, with bronze, brass, and granite representations of Brahma, Vishnu, and Shiva; a superb thirteenth-century stone carving of the elephant-headed Ganesha; and a Khmer kingdom (Cambodia) temple lintel, in which male figures are shown entwined with vines alongside an unidentified female goddess with conical crown and sarong.

Freer Gallery of Art

From the day it opened in 1923, the Freer Gallery, on Jefferson Drive at 12th Street NW, has been one of the more unusual Smithsonian museums (☎202/633-4880, 🌐www.asia.si.edu). Put together and paid for by railroad magnate Charles Freer, it contains more than one thousand prints, drawings, and paintings by London-based American artist James McNeil Whistler – the largest collection of his works anywhere. The museum also includes Chinese jades and bronzes, Byzantine illuminated manuscripts, Buddhist wall sculptures, and pieces of Persian metalwork.

In addition to his portraits and landscapes, Whistler is also represented by the magnificent Peacock Room, which started life as a simple painting commissioned by Frederick Leyland for his mantelpiece. The eccentric artist, however, decided to cover Leyland’s ceiling with imitation gold leaf and paint the entire room with blue and gold peacocks and feather patterns. Leyland was outraged but left the room untouched; after his death, Freer bought it and shipped it over from London.

United States Holocaust Memorial Museum

The sizable United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, just south of the National Mall at 100 Raoul Wallenburg Place SW (☎202/488-0400, 🌐www.ushmm.org), commemorates the persecution and murder of six million Jews by the Nazis and personalizes the suffering of individual victims, with case after case of newspapers and newsreels documenting Nazi activities from the early 1930s through the “Final Solution,” plus replicas and, in many cases, actual relics, of Warsaw Ghetto streets, railroad cattle-cars, and other artifacts on the top floors.

The staggering number of people killed is chillingly evoked throughout, first by a room filled with shoes stolen from deportees, and later by piles of blankets, umbrellas, scissors, cutlery, and other personal effects taken from the hundreds of thousands who arrived at the various camps expecting to be forced to work – but were instead (most of them) gassed within hours. A recreated barracks from Auschwitz provides the backdrop for the oral memories of some survivors, as well as truly shocking film of gruesome medical experiments carried out there.

Tickets for specific entry times are available free of charge from 10am each day – with a limit of four per person – at the 14th Street entrance. You can also reserve in advance (☎ 1-800/400-9373; fee charged). If you arrive without a ticket any later than mid-morning, you're unlikely to get into the permanent exhibition, but a certain number of temporary displays are usually open to all visitors.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing, one block south of the Mall at 14th and C streets SW (☎ 202/622-2000, 🌐 www.moneyfactory.com; free), is the federal agency for designing and printing all US currency, government securities, and postage stamps; it's also host to one of DC's most popular tours, netting a half-million visitors annually. US currency (the presses here crank out millions of dollars every day) has changed a lot since the Bureau was established in 1862: today it's much more colorful and uses high-tech features – color-changing inks, hidden security stamps, watermarks, and microprinting – to deter counterfeiters.

Between March and August you must pick up tickets in advance for tours that run daily from 9am to 2pm; you can, and should, start waiting in line at 8am, as tickets are often gone by 11.30. The rest of the year, you can just show up without tickets, though you'll still have to wait in line. Note that a special, 40-minute Congressional/VIP tour is offered for those who make arrangements for it through their representative's office (Mon–Fri 8.15am & 8.45am, also May–Aug 4pm–4.45pm), and on which you can see more in-depth, behind-the-scenes views of the plant.

Corcoran Gallery of Art

The Corcoran Gallery of Art, just north of the Mall at 17th St NW and New York Ave (Wed–Sun 10am–5pm, Thurs closes 9pm; $8; 🌐 www.corcoran.org), is one of the oldest and most respected art museums in the US. The gallery possesses a fine collection of landscapes, starting with the expansive Niagara by Frederic Edwin Church and Albert Bierstadt's splendid The Last of the Buffalo, both masterpieces of immense scale. Thomas Cole's The Return, a mythical medieval scene of an injured knight returning to a priory, also displays the Hudson River School's penchant for showing ethereal natural beauty. Later works include those by John Singer Sargent, Thomas Eakins, and Mary Cassatt, among others. Few works, however, are as robust as Winslow Homer's A Light on the Sea, where a brawny-armed woman swathed in fishing nets conveys the hard life of sea folk.

Some of the most familiar names hang in the Clark Landing, a two-tier, wood-paneled gallery accessed from the Rotunda on the second floor. Here you're likely to find mid-level paintings by Degas, Renoir, Monet, Sisley, and Pissarro, as well as works by the likes of Rousseau and Corot – the latter's Repose is a notably sour-faced nude with Pan and his nymphs cavorting in the background. In the Salon Doré (Gilded Room), an eighteenth-century Parisian interior has been recreated to stunning effect, with floor-to-ceiling hand-carved paneling, gold-leaf decor, and ceiling murals.

Downtown and around

Those whose patience grows thin with the hordes of people on the Mall may enjoy a trip through Washington DC's Old Downtown district, which was damaged during the 1968 riots but has recently seen new boutiques, restaurants, and hotels spring up seemingly overnight. Adjacent to Old Downtown is the wedge-shaped Federal Triangle, home to countless government agencies and a few major attractions, such as the National Archives, while, to the northwest, the New Downtown area, known for its lobbyist-rich K Street, has numerous swank shops and restaurants.

National Archives

On display at the National Archives, 700 Pennsylvania Ave NW (daily April–May 10am–7pm, June–Aug 10am–9pm; rest of year 10am–5.30pm; free; ☎ 1-866/272-6272, 🌐 www.archives.gov), are the three short texts upon which the United States was founded: the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights. These three original sheets of parchment, drafted respectively in 1776, 1787, and 1789, are secured in bomb-proof, argon-filled, glass-and-titanium containers that slide into a vault in case of fire or other threats. The impressive Neoclassical Greek building – designed by John Russell Pope – also houses a 1297 revised copy of the Magna Carta, which established in England such basic concepts as trial by jury and equality before the law. Temporary exhibitions often include fascinating documents such as the Louisiana Purchase, the Marshall Plan, Nixon's resignation letter, the Emancipation Proclamation, and the Japanese surrender from World War II. As the official repository of all US national records – census data, treaties, passport applications – the Archives also attracts thousands of visitors who come here each year in search of their own genealogical, military, or other records.

National Portrait Gallery and American Art Museum

Three blocks west of the Pension Building, and in the center of the Penn Quarter, the Old Patent Office building – a Neoclassical gem dating from 1836 – houses two of the city's major art displays: the Smithsonian's National Portrait Gallery and American Art Museum (both daily 11.30am–7pm; free; 🌐 www.npg.si.edu), both of which reopened in July 2006 after extensive renovations lasting several years.

In the Portrait Gallery, images of figures from the performing arts constitute the most popular part of the collection. Notable works include Paul Robeson as Othello; photographs of Gloria Swanson and Boris Karloff; a rough-hewn wooden head of Bob Hope; and an almost three-dimensional metallic study of Ethel Merman as Annie Oakley. Perhaps most striking, though, is Harry Jackson's terrific polychrome bronze sculpture of an aged John Wayne. Also worth a look are the presidential portraits – one for every man to occupy the office. Gilbert Stuart's version of George Washington is an imperial study of an implacable leader, and one of the gallery's star attractions, while Norman Rockwell's flattering portrait of Richard Nixon is the most jarring. Jan Wood offers a relatively recent bust of a carefree, first-term Bill Clinton, looking almost drunken. Personalities from literature and the fine arts are represented by an early Man Ray photograph of Ernest Hemingway and his young son, and the extraordinary, bulky, terracotta figure of Gertrude Stein, depicted by Jo Davidson as a tranquil, seated Buddha.

The other major museum to occupy the Old Patent Office building, the American Art Museum, holds one of the more enduring of the city's art collections, which dates back to the early nineteenth century. The museum contains almost four hundred paintings by George Catlin, who spent six years touring the Great Plains, painting portraits and scenes of Native American life as well as lush landscapes. Another great landscape artist – and there are many here – is Albert Bierstadt, whose Among the Sierra Nevada Mountains is emblematic of the artist's style. Among the sculpture from this period is Daniel Chester French's The Spirit of Life, a winged sprite with laurel wreath, fashioned by the man who produced the powerful statue in the Lincoln Memorial. Notable twentieth-century modern pieces include items by Robert Motherwell, Willem de Kooning, Robert Rauschenberg, Clyfford Still, Ed Kienholz, and Jasper Johns – but none is more vibrant than Nam June Paik’s jaw-dropping Electronic Superhighway, a huge, neon-outlined map of the US with each state represented by TV screens pulsing with hypnotic images.

Another branch of the American Art Museum, the Renwick Gallery, located near the White House at 17th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue (daily 10am–5.30pm; ☎ 202/633-2850; free), offers overflow space for the museum’s treasures, as well as rotating exhibits focusing on the decorative arts and what is perhaps the city’s most stylish room for viewing art – the striking Grand Salon, in the style of a classic European picture gallery, with paintings stacked four and five high on the dark-rose walls.

International Spy Museum

The International Spy Museum, 800 F St NW (hours vary, usually daily April–Oct 10am–8pm; rest of year 10am–6pm; last admission two hours before closing; $15; @ www.spymuseum.org), celebrates espionage in all forms – from feudal Japan’s silent and deadly ninjas, to surveillance pigeons armed with cameras from World War I, to infamous modern-day CIA moles like Aldrich Ames. The informative displays are all interesting enough, but the museum’s standouts are undoubtedly its artifacts from the height of the Cold War in the 1950s and 60s, presented in glass cases and broken down by theme – “training,” “surveillance,” and so on. Some of the many highlights include tiny pistols disguised as lipstick holders, cigarette cases, pipes, and flashlights; oddments like invisible-ink writing kits and a Get Smart!-styled shoe phone; a colorful and active model of James Bond’s Aston Martin spy car; bugs and radio transmitters hidden in ambassadorial gifts (such as a Great Seal of the US given by Russians); ricin-tipped poison umbrellas used to kill Warsaw Pact dissidents; and a rounded capsule containing a screwdriver, razor, and serrated knife – ominously marked, “rectal tool kit.”

Ford’s Theatre National Historic Site

Ford’s Theatre National Historic Site, 511 Tenth St NW (daily 9am–5pm, closed during rehearsals and matinees; free; ☎ 202/426-6924, @ www.nps.gov/foth), is a beautiful restoration of the nineteenth-century playhouse, which continues to stage regular productions of contemporary and period drama (see p.428). It was here, on April 14, 1865, a mere five days after the end of the Civil War, that Abraham Lincoln was shot by Confederate sympathizer John Wilkes Booth during a performance of Our American Cousin.

Entertaining talks (hourly 9.15am–4.15pm; free) set the scene in the theater itself, after which you can file up to the circle for a view of the presidential box where it all happened, then go to the Lincoln Museum, in the basement. Macabre relics here include the clothes that Lincoln was wearing, Booth’s .44 single-shot Derringer pistol, and the assassin’s diary, in which he wrote: “I hoped for no gain. I knew no private wrong. I struck for my country and that alone.” The mortally wounded president was carried across the street to the Petersen House, where he died the next morning. That, too, is open to the public (daily 9am–5pm), who troop through its gloomy parlor rooms to see a replica of Lincoln’s death bed.

Old Post Office

The wondrous Romanesque Revival Old Post Office, 1100 Pennsylvania Ave (Mar–Aug Mon–Sat 10am–8pm, Sun noon–7pm; Sept–Feb Mon–Sat 10am–7pm,

△ Ford's Theatre

Sun noon–6pm; @oldpostofficedc.com; free), features towering granite walls that make it look suitably cathedral-like, as well as an eye-popping seven-story atrium, whose glass roof throws light down onto the restored iron support beams, brass rails, balconies, and burnished wood paneling. Now known as the Pavilion, the site is home to ethnic diners and various shops in addition to a period post-office counter (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm) that's still in use at the Pennsylvania Avenue entrance. Also worth a look is the clock tower (Mon–Fri 9am–5.45pm, Sat & Sun 10am–5.45pm, summer Mon–Fri closes 7.45pm; @www.nps.gov/opot), where park rangers oversee short, free tours up to the observation deck, 270ft above the street.

National Museum of Women in the Arts

Housed in a converted Masonic Temple at 1250 New York Ave NW, the National Museum of Women in the Arts, which opened in 1987, is the country's only major museum dedicated to women artists (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8; @ www.nmwa.org). The collection runs chronologically, starting with works from the Renaissance, like those of Sofonisba Anguissola, who was considered the most important woman artist of her day; her well-judged Double Portrait of a Lady and Her Daughter is on display, along with the energetic Holy Family with St John by her contemporary, Lavinia Fontana. A century or so later, Dutch and Flemish women like Clara Peeters, Judith Leyster, and Rachel Ruysch were producing still lifes and genre scenes of great interest – witness the vivacity of Peeters's Still Life of Fish and Cat. Twentieth-century works include the classical sculpture of Camille Claudel, the paintings of Georgia O'Keeffe and Tamara de Lempicka, linocuts by Hannah Höch, and, most boldly, a cycle of prints depicting the hardships of working-class life by the socialist Käthe Kollwitz. Frida Kahlo appears in a self-portrait wearing a peasant's outfit and clutching a note to Trotsky, but more fetching is Itzcuintli Dog with Me, in which she poses next to a truly tiny, strangely adorable mutt.

The Newseum

The Newseum, 6th St at Pennsylvania Ave (Ⓣ 888/NEWSEUM, Ⓜ www.newseum.org), plans to reopen downtown in summer 2007 after being closed for several years in order to move from Arlington, VA. The museum's mission is to provide an interactive look at the history, theory, and practice of journalism. Visitors will be greeted by a daily dose of news from papers around the world – as well as from historical editions – and high-tech exhibits will include an interactive newsroom and giant video wall. You'll also encounter the world's first Journalists Memorial, a 24-foot-high spiraling glass prism, etched with the names of several thousand journalists killed while reporting.

National Building Museum

First known as the Pension Building, the National Building Museum, 401 F Street NW (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $5; Ⓜ www.nbm.org), housed various federal offices before its current function as a stirring museum of architecture, presenting changing exhibitions that cover topics like urban renewal, high-rise technology, and environmental concerns. The permanent exhibition on the second floor, “Washington: Symbol and City,” concentrates on the construction of the city itself, with a detailed model showing how many of the District's planned buildings have come to fruition. The best feature of the museum, though, is the interior space itself: the majestic Great Hall is a stadium-sized expanse centered on a working fountain, and one of the greatest interior spaces anywhere in DC. The eight supporting columns are 8ft across at the base and more than 75ft high; each is made up of seventy thousand bricks, plastered and painted to resemble Siena marble.

Dupont Circle to Upper Northwest

Washington's other key attractions are spaced out among various neighbourhoods, but they are nevertheless worth taking the time to visit. Many lie near Connecticut Avenue, on the stretch that runs from the increasingly swank shopping and dining area of Dupont Circle up to the elite precinct of Upper Northwest – both areas conveniently accessed by subway. Less convenient, just to the northeast, is the funky urban district of Adams-Morgan – mainly a draw for its diners, clubs, and bars.

Phillips Collection

The Phillips Collection, just northwest of Dupont Circle at 1600 21st and Q St NW (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs until 8.30pm, Sun noon–7pm except summer noon–5pm; $12; Ⓜ www.phillipscollection.org), claims to be “America's first museum of modern art,” based on its opening eight years before New York's Museum of Modern Art. The oldest part of the brownstone Georgian Revival building was the family home of founder Duncan Phillips, who bought nearly 2400 works over the years; during the 1920s, he and his artist wife, Marjorie, became patrons of young painters such as Georgia O'Keeffe and Marsden Hartley, while there are works by everyone from Renoir to Rothko (and several by non-modern artists like Giorgione and El Greco). Highlights include signature pieces by Willem de Kooning and Richard Diebenkorn; Blue Period Picassos; Matisse's Studio, Quai St-Michel; a Cézanne still life; and no fewer than four van Goghs, including the powerful Road Menders. Pierre Bonnard gets a good showing – stand well back to take in the expansive and assertive The Terrace and The Palm. Top billing generally goes to The Luncheon of the Boating Party by Renoir, where straw-boater-wearing dandies linger over a long and bibulous feast.

Embassy Row

An intriguing strip that is unique to Washington DC among American cities, Embassy Row starts in earnest a few paces northwest up Massachusetts Avenue from Dupont Circle, where the Indonesian Embassy at no. 2020 (closed to the public) occupies the magnificent Art Nouveau Walsh-McLean House, built in 1903 for gold baron Thomas Walsh. It's a superb building – with colonnaded loggia and intricate, carved windows – and saw regular service as one of Washington society's most fashionable venues. Nearby, the Anderson House, no. 2118 (Tues–Sat 1–4pm; ☎ 202/785-2040; free), is a veritable palace, finished in 1905 with a gray-stone exterior sporting twin arched entrances with heavy wooden doors and colonnaded portico. Inside there's a grand ballroom, and original furnishings include cavernous fireplaces, inlaid marble floors, Flemish tapestries, and diverse murals. Check out @ www.embassyevents.com for a listing of art shows, lectures, food fairs, films, and displays taking place at selected embassies here and elsewhere in town.

The National Zoo

Continuing well north, into the hilly district of Upper Northwest at 3001 Connecticut Ave NW (luckily a short walk from the Metro) is the Smithsonian's National Zoo (buildings open daily April–Oct 10am–6pm; rest of year 10am–4.30pm; grounds open daily April–Oct 6am–8pm; rest of year 6am–6pm; @ www.nationalzoo.si.edu; free). Although founded in 1889 as a traditional zoo, it likes to think of itself these days as a “BioPark”: Amazonia is a recreation of a tropical river and rainforest habitat, while the American Prairie exhibit provides an explanation of the natural and cultural histories of the nation's grasslands and shows off a selection of bison. Further along, orangutans are encouraged to leave the confines of the Great Ape House and commute to the “Think Tank,” where scientists and four-legged primates come together to hone their communications skills and discuss world events. Between the Ape House and Think Tank is the Reptile Discovery Center, with a full complement of snakes, turtles, crocodiles, alligators, lizards, and frogs. Ponder here on the remarkable komodo dragons, one of which was the first to be born in captivity outside Indonesia. If all else fails, there's always the giant pandas, who have been amusing visitors since their arrival in 1972.

Washington National Cathedral

The twin towers of Washington National Cathedral, the world's sixth-largest cathedral, are visible long before you reach the heights of Mount St Alban, where the church – a good walk from the subway line in Upper Northwest – sits (Mon–Fri 10am–5.30pm, Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun 8am–6.30pm, closes 7.45pm on weekdays May–Aug; @ www.nationalcathedral.org; donation). Built from Indiana limestone and modeled entirely in the medieval English Gothic style, the Protestant cathedral took 83 years to build and measures more than a tenth of a mile from the west end of the nave to the high altar at the opposite end. Among other things, you'll find the sarcophagus of Woodrow Wilson, the only president to be buried in the District, and the Space Window, whose stained glass incorporating a sliver of moon rock commemorates the flight of Apollo 11.

Georgetown

Although it is, unfortunately, a good hike from the nearest subway stop, Georgetown is the quintessential DC neighborhood, enlivened by a main drag – M Street – where chic new restaurants and boutiques are housed in 200-year-old buildings, and the old C&O Canal (which you can tour on a historic boat ride; see p.403) runs parallel to the south. There are few conventional attractions along M, though the Old Stone House, no. 3051 (Wed–Sun noon–5pm; ☎ www.nps.gov/olst; free), comes close, as the only surviving pre-Revolutionary home in the city. Built in 1765 by a Pennsylvania carpenter, it retains its rugged, rough-hewn appearance, the craggy rocks used for the three-feet-thick walls being quarried from blue fieldstone.

In the hillier part of the district, there are two spots that definitely merit a visit: Tudor Place and Dumbarton Oaks. Tudor Place, 1644 31st St NW (tours Tues–Fri 10am–2.30pm, Sat 10am–3pm, Sun noon–3pm; $6; www.tudorplace.org), was once the estate of Martha Washington’s granddaughter and, with its Federal-style architecture and Classical domed portico, has remained virtually untouched since it was built in 1816; Dumbarton Oaks (gardens Tues–Sun 2–5pm, March–Oct closes 6pm; ☎ www.doaks.org; donation) encompasses a marvelous redbrick Georgian mansion surrounded by gardens and woods: in 1944 it was the site of a meeting that led to the founding of the United Nations the following year. Its Bliss Collection (closed for renovation until 2007) is excellent for its Pre-Columbian gold, jade, and polychromatic carvings, sculpture, and pendants, as well as ceremonial axes, jewelry made from spondylus shells, stone masks of unknown significance, and sharp jade “celts” possibly used for human sacrifice. Finally, you can also take a peek in the Music Room and view its wondrous paintings and tapestries, walnut chests and credenzas, decorative wooden ceiling, and vintage pianos and harpsichords.

Arlington National Cemetery

Across the Potomac River west of the National Mall, the vast sea of identical white headstones on the hillsides of Virginia’s Arlington National Cemetery (daily: April–Sept 8am–7pm; rest of year 8am–5pm; free; ☎ www.arlingtoncemetery.org) stands in poignant contrast to the grand monuments of the capital across the river. The country’s most honored final resting place was first used during the Civil War, when the land belonged to Confederate general Robert E. Lee. Some 350,000 US soldiers and others – from presidents to Supreme Court justices – now lie here. An eternal flame marks the grave of President John F. Kennedy, who lies next to his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, and a short distance from his brother, Robert (the only grave marked with a simple white cross). At the Tomb of the Unknowns, visitors can watch a solemn Changing of the Guard ceremony every thirty minutes (hourly Oct–Mar), while the gravesite of Pierre L’Enfant offers a superb view over the Mall and the District that he designed. L’Enfant’s grave is on the grounds of the cemetery’s prominent Neoclassical Arlington House (same hours; free), Lee’s modest mansion that, after the war, his family was forced to sell after finding the presence of war dead inhospitable to a country home. The recent Women in Military Service Memorial, by the main gate, is the country’s first national monument to American servicewomen.

Unless you have strong legs and lots of time, the best way to see the vast cemetery is by Tourmobile ($6; see p.403), which leaves from the visitor center at the entrance. You can also walk here from the Lincoln Memorial across the Arlington Bridge or take the Blue Line of the Metro.

Eating

Just as the faces in government change with every election, so too do restaurants, which come and go more quickly in Washington DC than anywhere else in the US. Within this constant flux a few long-standing favorites endure. Certain neighborhoods – Connecticut Avenue around Dupont Circle, 18th Street and Columbia Road in Adams–Morgan, M Street in Georgetown, and downtown’s Seventh Street and Chinatown – always seem to hold a satisfying range of dining options. A few citywide chains like Teaism and Firehook offer good coffee and quick snacks; otherwise, the cafés in the main museums are good for downtown lunch breaks. Likewise, you’ll find convenient food courts in Union Station and at the Old Post Office.

△ Arlington National Cemetery

Downtown

Breadline 1751 Pennsylvania Ave NW ☎202/822-8900. DC’s best sandwiches, made with DC’s best bread. This superb open bakery also turns out pizza, empanadas, flatbreads, salads, and smoothies, using organic ingredients whenever possible.

Café Asia 1720 I St NW ☎202/659-2696. Breezy Pan-Asian restaurant that’s good for budget sushi and sashimi, or try the big plates of lemongrass-grilled chicken, seafood bakar (in banana leaf with spicy prawn sauce), satay, or Thai noodles.

 Café Atlantico 405 8th NW ☎202/393-0812. Upscale nuevo Latino treat with spicy spins on traditional cuisine, but really best for its Minibar, a six-seat counter famed for its avant-garde versions of old favorites (reserve a month in advance and expect to pay $95 a head).

District Chophouse & Brewery 509 7th St NW ☎202/347-3434. This classy swing-era joint delivers great music, a hearty, meat-and-potatoes grill-house menu (along with some solid crab cakes), and good house beers on tap.

Grillfish 1200 New Hampshire Ave NW ☎202/331-7310. Industrial-chic eatery offering casual dining and well-cooked fish and seafood; the daily catch options might include sea bass, tuna, snapper, trout, mahi-mahi, shark, or calamari.

Jaleo 480 7th St NW ☎202/628-7949. Renowned upscale tapas bar-restaurant with flamenco dancing to accompany its fine seafood and plentiful sangria. Limited reservation policy makes for long waits during peak hours.

 Old Ebbitt Grill 675 15th St NW ☎202/347-4801. A plush recreation of a nineteenth-century tavern, with mahogany bar (serving microbrews), gas chandeliers, leather booths, and gilt mirrors. Politico clientele feasts on everything from burgers to oysters.

Red Sage 605 14th St NW ☎202/638-4444.

Landmark Southwestern restaurant, dripping with Santa Fe chic and featuring rotisserie-grilled meat, fish, and vegetarian specials. Reservations essential.

Reeve's Restaurant and Bakery 1306 G St NW ☎202/628-6350. This classic diner, in business since 1886, has an all-you-can-eat breakfast and fruit bar, crisp-coated chicken at lunchtime, and flavorful pies.

Sky Room Hotel Washington, 515 15th St NW ☎202/638-5900. Perched on a hilltop above the White House, this restaurant has magnificent views that more than make up for the unremarkable (and pricey) steak and seafood. April–Oct only.

Ten-Penh 1001 Pennsylvania Ave NW ☎202/393-4500. High-profile Asian-fusion restaurant serving up expensive but delicious dishes like roasted duck and pork wonton ravioli.

Dupont Circle

Bistro du Coin 1738 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/234-6969. Classic bistro with a superb bar, boisterous atmosphere, and genuine French food for prices that won't cost you your Armani shirt.

Café Citron 1343 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/530-8844. Bright restaurant serving tasty Caribbean-influenced Latin food – try the ceviche or fill up on one of their popular fajitas. Stick around for a smooth late-night scene at the bar.

City Lights of China 1731 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/265-6688. Well-regarded Chinese restaurant, with spicy Szechuan and Hunan specialties and a strong emphasis on seafood – try the Hunan shrimp. Also good for steamed dumplings and garlic eggplant.

Luna Grill & Diner 1301 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/835-2280. Atypical diner with bright decor, planetary murals and mosaics, plus wholesome blue-plate specials and “green plate” (vegetarian) dishes. Try the “Eggs Neptune”: eggs Benedict with a Maryland twist, crab cakes.

The Newsroom 1803 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/332-1489. Offers a wide selection of hipster magazines, British and French imports, and hard-to-find newspapers, plus Internet access, coffee, and snacks.

Pizzeria Paradiso 2029 P St NW ☎202/223-1245. Arguably DC's best pizzeria, with famously tasty pies whose toppings range from simple basil-and-cheese to parmesan, egg, and mullet roe. Expect to wait in line. Also at 3282 M St NW, Georgetown ☎202/337-1245.

Restaurant Nora 2132 Florida Ave NW ☎202/462-5143. One of DC's best places to eat, with prices to match. The all-organic fare includes oddball items like Amish pork loin medallions. Book ahead.

Skewers 1633 P St NW ☎202/387-7400. Mid-priced Middle Eastern that's tops for kebabs – with such unexpected ingredients as monkfish and BBQ shrimp – seafood, and delicately flavored rice. Also excellent appetizers.

Sushi Taro 1503 17th St NW ☎202/462-8999. One of DC's best Japanese restaurants, also with fine curries and noodles. When the cherry blossoms start to bloom, keep an eye out for the annual all-you-can-eat sushi-fest.

Zorba's Café 1612 20th St NW ☎202/387-8555. A self-serve café where you'll find affordable Greek combo platters, kebabs, and pita sandwiches. The sidewalk seating is hard to get in summer.

Adams-Morgan

 Ben's Chili Bowl 1213 U St NW ☎202/667-0909. East of Adams-Morgan in the Shaw neighborhood, but worth the trip for the legendary chili dogs, milk shakes, and cheese fries.

Bukom Café 2442 18th St NW ☎202/265-4600. Savory West African dishes, such as African curried chicken, spicy kebabs, and Moi Moi (black-eyed peas with corned beef and sardines), usually for less than $10.

Cashion's Eat Place 1819 Columbia Rd NW ☎202/797-1819. Renowned for its clever takes on New Southern cuisine, where old-time dishes like casseroles, tarts, corncakes, grits, sweet potatoes, and fruit and nut pies are transformed into taste-bud-altering delights – at a rather high price.

The Diner 2453 18th St NW ☎202/232-8800. More a stylish café than a down-at-the-heel diner, greasy classics adorn the egg, pancake, and sandwich-rich menu nonetheless. Popular for its classic coffee counter and 24hr service; late-night lines form on the weekends.

Grill from Ipanema 1858 Columbia Rd NW ☎202/986-0757. Somewhat pricey Brazilian staples made with flair, highlighted by the feijoada (meat stew), shrimp dishes, and scrumptious Sunday brunch. Try the baked clams to start and watch your caipirinha (rum cocktail) intake.

Lauriol Plaza 1835 18th St NW ☎202/387-0035. The Latin American-styled ceviche and grilled meats that are worth the effort to eat them; the place frequently gets packed with tourists and revelers.

Meze 2437 18th St NW ☎202/797-0017. A wide array of delicious Turkish meze (the Middle East's answer to tapas), both hot and cold, is served in a fashionable restaurant-lounge setting. Kebabs, grape leaves, and apricot chicken are among the highlights.

Mixtec 1792 Columbia Rd NW ☎202/332-1011.

The great-tasting, low-priced Mexican food includes superb tacos and tortillas, plus spit-roasted chicken, mussels steamed with chilis, and a soothing menudo (an aromatic soup).

Pizza Mart 2445 18th St NW ☎202/234-9700.

The elephantine slices at this hole-in-the-wall pizzeria are a club-hopper's late-night salvation. Open until 4am.

Tryst 2459 18th St NW ☎202/232-5500. Very popular hangout where you can enjoy decent pastries and gourmet drinks, but also slurp down wine, beer, and even morning cocktails. Arty and relaxed, with the added bonus of Internet access and good sandwiches at the adjoining diner.

Georgetown

Bangkok Bistro 3251 Prospect St NW

☎202/337-2424. Infuses some style into Thai dining with a sleek dining room that's often full.

The old favorites (tom yum, pad thai, shrimp cakes, and satay) sit alongside spicy beef curries and chili prawns.

Bistro Francais 3128 M St NW ☎202/338-3830. Renowned for its (affordable) French cooking, from simple steak frites and rotisserie chicken to roast pigeon and lamb sausage; open until 3am.

Booeymonger 3265 Prospect St NW ☎202/333-4810. Crowded deli-coffee shop, excellent for its inventive sandwiches like the Gatsby Arrow (roast beef and brie) and the Patty Hearst (turkey and bacon with Russian dressing).

Dean & Deluca 3276 M St NW ☎202/342-2500. Superior self-service café (and fantastic attached deli-market with sushi stand) in one of M Street's most handsome and historic redbrick buildings. Good for croissants, cappuccino, designer salads, pastas, and sandwiches.

J Paul's 3218 M St NW ☎202/333-3450. A "dining saloon" that offers the standard, but good, grill/barbecue menu, with some much-loved crab cakes, too. Last orders for food taken around midnight.

Martin's Tavern 1264 Wisconsin Ave NW ☎202/333-7370. Old-fashioned, clubby diner serving up succulent steaks and chops, great burgers, linguine with clam sauce, and oyster platters.

Moby Dick House of Kabob 1070 31 St NW

☎202/333-4400. Steps from the canal, this cramped kitchen does great Persian food – tender kebabs, lavash bread, rice, and yogurt – all for under $10.

Old Glory 3139 M St NW ☎202/337-3406. Rollicking barbecue restaurant with hickory smoke rising from the kitchen. Accompany your huge portions of ribs and chicken with one of the half-dozen sauces on every table and a shot of great bourbon.

Paolo's 1303 Wisconsin Ave NW ☎202/333-7353. Designer Italian restaurant with a few, highly sought-after tables that open to the sidewalk. The gourmet pizza includes toppings such as feta cheese, salmon, goat's cheese, spinach, and sundried tomatoes; the pastas and other specialties are even better.

Red Ginger 1564 Wisconsin Ave NW ☎202/965-7009. Crab cakes, seafood quesadillas, and oxtail stew are just some of the choices at this Caribbean-African restaurant, with numerous "small plates" (à la tapas) at affordable prices.

Upper Northwest

Ardeo 3311 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/244-6750. Ultra-trendy and pricey spot with "Modern American" cuisine – meaning lots of oddball hybrids from duck-confit cannelloni to mahi mahi with vanilla "foam" – though the culinary experiments work most of the time.

Indique 3512 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/244-6600. Recipes from all over India come together with a modern twist at this stylish and affordable restaurant. Don't miss the tasty samosa appetizer.

Lebanese Taverna 2641 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/265-8681. Tasty Middle Eastern joint with soothingly dark, authentic decor inside and ample sidewalk tables under shady umbrellas outside.

Nam Viet 3419 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/237-1015. No-frills Vietnamese eatery where you can enjoy good soups, caramel pork, Vietnamese steak, and grilled chicken and fish.

Vace 3315 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/363-1999. You might grab a slice of the excellent pizza or try a tasty sub sandwich at this ethnic deli, or you might pack a picnic from the solid selection of sausage, tortellini salad, and olives before heading to the zoo.

Nightlife

Peak times for drinking in DC tend to be during rush hour, and comparatively few people who work in the District during the week venture back into town at the weekend. However, things are slowly improving, and in the well-worn haunts of collegiate Georgetown, yuppified Dupont Circle, and boisterous Adams–Morgan, you should be able to pass a pleasant evening or two – and in the suit-and-tie spots on Capitol Hill, even spot a politician or two. For clubs, expect to pay a cover of $6 to $20 (highest on weekends); ticket prices for most gigs run $5 to $25. Check the free weekly CityPaper for up-to-date listings of music, theater, and other events in the area, in addition to good alternative features and reporting. Gay and lesbian life is at its most outgoing in Dupont Circle.

Bars

Bedrock Billiards 1841 Columbia Rd NW ☎202/667-7665. A comfortable, lively subterranean setting, top bartenders, and loyal clientele set this funky pool hall apart from Adams–Morgan's more frenzied dance-oriented spots.

Brickskeller 1523 22nd St NW, Dupont Circle ☎202/293-1885. Renowned brick-lined basement saloon serving “the world’s largest selection of beer” – as many as 1000 different types, including dozens from US microbreweries. Also has an inexpensive inn upstairs.

Bullfeathers 410 First St SE ☎202/543-5005. Pol watchers just may catch a sighting at this old-time Hill favorite, a dark and clubby spot with affordable beer that was named for one of Teddy Roosevelt’s favorite euphemisms during his White House years.

Capitol City Brewing Co 2 Massachusetts Ave NE ☎202/842-2337. Prime microbrewing turf near Union Station, highlighted by Amber Waves Ale, German-styled Capitol Kolsch, and Prohibition Porter. Another branch is downtown at 1100 New York Ave NW ☎202/628-2222.

Capitol Lounge 229 Pennsylvania Ave SE ☎202/547-2098. More sophisticated than most of the Hill spots – with cigars and martinis in the downstairs bar – but there’s still plenty of life up in the brick-walled saloon thanks to happy hours and colorful campaign memorabilia.

D.A.’s RFD Washington 810 7th St NW ☎202/289-2030. The leading edge in Downtown DC microbreweries, with three hundred bottled beers and forty locally crafted and international brews on tap. Centrally located near the MCI Center, so watch for heavy post-game crowds.

Dragonfly 1215 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/331-1775. Lounge serving sushi and cocktails, with an ultra-swank decor and a beautiful young crowd on the make.

The Dubliner 520 N Capitol St NW, in the Phoenix Park Hotel ☎202/737-3773. A wooden-vaulted, good-time Irish pub with draft Guinness, boisterous conversation, and live Irish music catering to the more refined Hill set. The patio is a solid summer hangout.

Fox and Hounds 1537 17th St NW, Dupont Circle ☎202/232-6307. Smack in the middle of the 17th Street scene, this easygoing bar draws a diverse crowd, all here to enjoy the stiff and cheap rail drinks and the solid jukebox.

Garrett’s 3003 M St NW ☎202/333-1033. Amid its brick-and-wood interior, Garrett’s features a giant rhino head by the door, pumping alt-rock jukebox that keeps the young crowd in a party mood, and nightly drink specials, along with a few microbrews.

Hawk ‘n Dove 329 Pennsylvania Ave SE ☎202/543-3300. Iconic DC pub (a bit tatty at the edges now) hung with football pennants, bottles, and bric-a-brac. Attracts Hill interns for its cheap food and dance nights.

Lucky Bar 1221 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/331-3733. This everybody-knows-your-name kind of place has plenty of room and booths at the back to hang out in, plus a pool table, cheap beer, and world soccer on the tube.

Nanny O’Brien’s 3319 Connecticut Ave NW ☎202/686-9189. An authentic Irish pub in Upper Northwest, with live music from (or in the style of) the Emerald Isle several nights a week.

Clubs and live-music venues

9:30 Club 815 V St NW, Shaw district ☎202/265-0930. Top musicians love to play at this spacious yet intimate club, deservedly famous as DC’s best venue for live acts, from indie rock and pop to reggae and rap. Neighborhood can be rough at night, though.

The Black Cat 1811 14th St NW, Shaw district ☎202/667-7960. Part-owned by Foo Fighter Dave Grohl, this indie institution provides a showcase for up-and-coming rock, punk, and garage bands and veteran alternative acts alike. Connected to the no-cover Red Room Bar. Blues Alley 1073 Wisconsin Ave NW (rear) ☎202/337-4141. Small, celebrated Georgetown jazz bar, in business for over thirty years, attracting top names. Shows usually at 8pm and 10pm, plus midnight some weekends; buy tickets in advance. Cover runs $10–40.

Bohemian Caverns 2001 11th St NW, Shaw district ☎ 202/299-0800. Legendary DC jazz supper club, set in a basement grotto below the stylish ground-level restaurant. Cover runs to $15 or more, with a limited number of reserved tickets for bigger acts.

Chief Ike's Mambo Room 1725 Columbia Rd NW, Adams-Morgan ☎ 202/332-2211. Ramshackle mural-clad bar with live bands playing rock, reggae, and R&B, or DJs hosting theme nights. An unpretentious, fun spot to dance.

Eighteenth Street Lounge 1212 18th St, Dupont Circle ☎ 202/466-3922. Ultra-stylish spot housed in a former mansion. While the attitude can be a bit thick at times, the beats – mostly techno, house, and dub – are a big draw, along with superstar DJs. Look for the unmarked door and dress smart.

Habana Village 1834 Columbia Rd NW ☎ 202/462-6310. Intoxicating Latin dance joint (tango and salsa lessons are available) infused with an eclectic spirit. A good downstairs bar serves a fine mojito.

IOTA 2832 Wilson Blvd, Arlington, VA ☎ 703/522-8340. One of the area's better choices for nightclubbing, this warehouse-style music joint has nightly performances by local and national indie, folk, and blues bands. Has a great bar, and attached restaurant, too.

Love 1350 Okie St NE ☎ 202/636-9030. Mobs of Washingtonians from all walks of life flock to this massive four-story club to dance to hip-hop, techno, and Latin. It's in a dicey area, so take a cab there and back.

Madam's Organ 2461 18th St NW ☎ 202/667-5370. Straightforward hangout with a small cover, featuring live blues, raw R&B, and bluegrass. Upstairs, there's a pool table and a rooftop bar.

Rumba Café 2443 18th St NW, Adams-Morgan ☎ 202/588-5501. This Latin oasis, a sliver of a café-bar with walls decked out with paintings and photographs, is a good bet for a night of sipping caipirinhas and grooving to live Brazilian bossa nova, salsa, and Afro-Cuban rhythms. Wed–Sat only.

Performing arts

With five different theater spaces, the Kennedy Center, 2700 F St NW (☎ 202/467-4600, 🌐 www.kennedy-center.org), next to the Watergate complex, hosts most of the capital's highbrow cultural events, including National Symphony Orchestra and Washington National Opera performances. The highly regarded, often pioneering Arena Stage, 1101 Sixth St SW at Maine Avenue (☎ 202/488-3300, 🌐 www.arenastage.org), puts on contemporary theater and performance pieces at its three-stage complex, while the historic Ford's Theatre, 511 Tenth St NW (☎ 202/347-4833, 🌐 www.fordstheatre.org), has a family-friendly program of mainstream musicals and dramas, frequently historical in nature. The celebrated Shakespeare Theatre, 450 Seventh St NW (☎ 202/547-1122, 🌐 www.shakespearedc.org), stages five productions a year, plus a free summer performance in Rock Creek Park; the National Theatre, 1321 Pennsylvania Ave NW (☎ 202/628-6161, 🌐 www.nationaltheatre.org), offers big-name touring musicals and other crowd-pleasers; and the experimental Woolly Mammoth Theatre, 641 D St NW (☎ 202/289-2443, 🌐 www.woollymammoth.net), showcases budget- and mid-priced contemporary and experimental plays. The Source Theatre Company, 1501 14th St NW, Logan Circle (☎ 202/332-3300, 🌐 www.studiotheatre.org), rounds out DC's alternative theater scene.

Twenty minutes out of the city, Wolf Trap Farm Park, 1551 Trap Rd, Vienna, VA (☎ 703/255-1900, 🌐 www.wolf-trap.org), is the country's first national park for the performing arts, and presents concerts, opera, ballet, and dance at the outdoor Filene Center or the indoor Barns. There's a Metro shuttle bus service from West Falls Church station for most performances (every 20 min; $5). For tickets call ☎ 1-877-WOLFRAP or go online at 🌐 tickets.com. You can also buy tickets in person at the Wolf Trap box office (☎ 703/255-1868).

Spectator sports

Tickets to Washington Redskins football games at FedEx Field in Landover, Maryland (☎ 301/276-6050, 🌐 www.redskins.com), are sold on a season-ticket basis only and often impossible to get unless you have a connection. Easier to obtain are tickets to DC's new Washington Nationals baseball team, which plays at RFK Stadium in a grim part of the city, at 2400 E Capitol St (tickets $7–50; ☎ 1-888/632-NATS, 🌐 washington.nationals.mlb.com), but will move to a new waterfront stadium in the southeast part of DC in 2008. Also in RFK Stadium is the DC United soccer squad (tickets $16–40; ☎ 703/478-6600, 🌐 www.dcunited.com), which plays in the pro MLS league. The huge downtown Verizon Center (☎ 202/628-3200, 🌐 www.verizoncenter.com) hosts home games of the pro basketball men's Washington Wizards (tickets $20–175; ☎ 202/661-5050, 🌐 www.nba.com/wizards) and women's Mystics (tickets $10–79; ☎ 202/266-2277, 🌐 www.wnba.com/mystics), as well as the pro hockey Capitals (tickets $10–225; ☎ 202/266-CAPS, 🌐 www.washingtoncaps.com).

Virginia

VIRGINIA is the oldest American colony and, as birthplace of the nation's tobacco industry and home to no less a figure than George Washington, it has arguably had the most direct influence on the early development of United States.

Virginia's recorded history famously began at Jamestown, just off the Chesapeake Bay, with the establishment in 1607 of the first successful English colony in North America. Though the original colonists hoped to find gold, it was tobacco that made their fortunes when a smooth, palatable variety of the plant was introduced in 1615 by John Rolfe, and it quickly became the colony's major cash crop. Before long, vast plantations, owned by a very few aristocratic families, sprang up along the many broad rivers that flow into the Chesapeake Bay. To grow and harvest tobacco required both an immense amount of land and labor – so Native Americans were driven off their land and slaves were imported from Africa. By 1700, slaves accounted for nearly half of the colony's 75,000 people; a hundred years later, they numbered more than 300,000.

Virginians had an enormous impact on the foundation of the United States: George Mason, Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison wrote the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, and four of the first five US presidents were from Virginia (excepting only John Adams). However, by the mid-1800s the state was in decline, its once fertile fields depleted by overuse and its agrarian economy increasingly eclipsed by the urban and industrialized North.

As the confrontation between North and South over slavery and related economic and political issues grew more divisive, Virginia was caught in the middle. Though this slaveholding state initially voted against secession from the Union, it joined the Confederacy when the Civil War broke out, providing its capital, Richmond, and its military leader, Robert E. Lee, who had previously turned down an offer to lead the Union army. Four long years later, Virginia was ravaged, its towns and cities wrecked, its farmlands ruined, and most of its youth dead.

Richmond itself was largely destroyed in the war; today it's a small city with some good museums, and is the best starting point for seeing Virginia. The bulk of the Colonial sites are concentrated just to the east, in what is known as the Historic Triangle. Here the shadowy remains of Jamestown, the original colony, Williamsburg, the restored Colonial capital, and Yorktown, the site of the final battle of the Revolutionary War, lie within half an hour's drive of each other.

Another historic center, Charlottesville – home to Thomas Jefferson's estate, Monticello – sits at the foot of the gorgeous Blue Ridge Mountains, an hour west of Richmond. It's also within easy reach of the natural splendors of Shenandoah National Park and the little towns of the western valleys. Northern Virginia, often visited as a day-trip from Washington DC, features several posh suburbs, a number of restored historic homes – the closest Colonial architecture to the capital being in Alexandria – and Manassas, the scene of two important Civil War battles.

Getting around Virginia

Virginia is an easy place to explore. Five north-south Amtrak routes cross the eastern side of the state, one of them an "Auto Train" – connecting Lorton, VA, with Florida – that allows you to bring a car along. In addition, the daily Cardinal line runs east from Washington DC to Charlottesville and on to Chicago. Greyhound buses reach dozens of smaller towns. Drivers heading south can take the stunning Blue Ridge Parkway along the Appalachians. If you've got the time, there are ample opportunity for cycling, whether on quiet country roads or up in the mountains, and hiking or walking are also compelling options.

Northern Virginia

Northern Virginia is becoming one large suburban enclave. It includes such chic spots as McLean and Fairfax County, which are home to a high proportion of US senators. In contrast, Alexandria, nestled on the Potomac just beyond the limits of the nation's capital (but not beyond its Metro system), seems at least two centuries removed from the modern political whirl. Further afield, this Anglophile heartland of Virginia's landed gentry – often called "Hunt Country" for their love of horses and fancy-dress blood sports – holds well-preserved historic estates, cottages, churches, barns, and taverns tucked away along the quiet back roads. It's all very popular with tourists, nowhere more so than Mount Vernon, the longtime home of George Washington, while Manassas to the west was the site of the bloody battles of Bull Run.

Alexandria

Extending a good half-mile west of the Potomac and several blocks north and south of it, the Old Town of ALEXANDRIA is a must, especially for those who are staying in Washington DC but don't have time to venture very far into Virginia. Originally an important Colonial trading post and a busy port named after the pioneer John Alexander, the town was actually ceded to the District of Columbia in 1801, but Virginia demanded it back in 1847.

In earlier days, George Washington maintained close ties with Alexandria, owning property here and attending gatherings at the famous Gadsby's Tavern, 134 N Royal St (tours Wed-Sat 11am-4pm, Sun 1-4pm; $4; ☎ www.gadsbystavern.org), which occupies two stately Georgian buildings: the City Hotel from 1792 and the tavern itself from 1785. Downstairs, there's a working restaurant, complete with "authentic" colonial food and costumed staff. Among other restored buildings open to the public are the Carlyle House, 121 N Fairfax St (tours Tues-Sat 10am-4pm, Sun noon-4:30pm; $4; ☎ www.carlylehouse.org), a 1752 manor house that was home to five royal governors; and the Lee-Fendall House, 614 Oronoco St (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $4; @ www.leefendallhouse.org), a splendid clapboard mansion built by Philip Fendall, a cousin of Robert E. Lee’s father. Down on the waterfront, a former munitions factory houses the Torpedo Factory Art Center, 105 N Union St (daily 10am–5pm; free; @ www.torpedofactory.org), where you can watch artists at work in more than two hundred studios and browse several galleries. In the same building, the Alexandria Archaeology Museum (Tues–Fri 10am–3pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; @ www.alexandriarchaeology.org) displays various aspects of the town’s history and prehistory. The Georgian Christ Church, 118 N Washington St (Mon–Sat 9am–4pm, Sun 2–4pm; @ www.historicchristchurch.org), was built in 1773 and often counted George Washington among its worshippers. Patent medicines for the general were concocted behind the tiny yellow windows of the Stabler-Leadbeater Apothecary Shop, 105 S Fairfax St (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–5pm; $4; @ www.apothecarymuseum.org), which was founded in 1792 and remained in business until the 1930s; it still displays herbs, potions, and medical paraphernalia – some eight thousand items in all and well worth a look.

Next to the Amtrak and King Street subway station stands the 333ft obelisk of the George Washington National Masonic Memorial, 101 Callahan Dr (daily 9am–4pm; free; @ www.gwmemorial.org), which is visible for miles around; inside, there’s a 17ft bronze statue of the founding father, sundry memorabilia, and dioramas depicting events from his life.

Practicalities

The Metro station for Old Town Alexandria is King Street (25min from downtown DC; $1.85; yellow and blue lines), a mile or so from most of the sights; alternatively, you can pick up the local DASH bus ($1; routes 2, 5, and 7; call ☎ 703/370-3274, @ www.dashbus.com), which runs down King Street, and get off at Fairfax Street; if you prefer, you can make the twenty-minute walk from the King Street station instead. The friendly visitor center is located in the Ramsey House, the town’s oldest, at 221 King St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 703/838-4200, @ www.FunSide.com); here you can get the usual tourist information as well as details on walking tours.

Good places to stay include Best Western Old Colony Inn, 1101 N Washington St (☎ 703/739-2222, @ www.bestwestern.com; 📍), a moderately priced spot with standard amenities (plus free breakfast and Internet access), and Morrison House, 116 S Alfred St (☎ 703/838-8000 or 1-800/367-0800, @ www.morrisonhouse.com; 📍), a faux Federal-era townhouse (built in 1985) complete with ersatz “authentic” decor, like parquet floors and crystal chandeliers, yet with modern comforts like high-speed Internet connections and designer linens.

There’s a great range of places to eat. Try the 🍷 Blue Point Grill, 600 Franklin St (☎ 703/739-0404), whose extremely fresh and delicious seafood earns it a reputation as one of Alexandria’s best restaurants; the Fish Market, 105 King St (☎ 703/836-5676), a brick building with a terrace just one block from the water, serving oysters and chowder at the bar and fried-fish platters, pastas, and fish entrees; and Southside 815, 815 S Washington St (☎ 703/836-6222), offering upscale Southern cooking, heavy with good, old-fashioned favorites like biscuits with ham, gravy, thick and buttery cornbread, BBQ shrimp, crab fritters, and straight-up crawdads and catfish.

Mount Vernon

Set on a bluff overlooking the Potomac River, eight miles south of Alexandria, Mount Vernon (daily April–Aug 8am–5pm; March, Sept & Oct 9am–5pm;

Nov–Feb 9am–4pm; $13; @ www.mountvernon.org) is the country estate built by George Washington – with five hundred acres of landscaped and planted grounds – that has been restored to the year 1799, the last year of the general’s life. Just fifteen miles from downtown DC, it’s close enough to be reached as a day-trip on the city’s Tourmobiles, or by the Fairfax Connector 101 bus from Huntington Metro station.

In the house itself, the furnishings and decoration reflect Washington’s preference for plain living, but few items – a reading chair with a built-in fan, and a key to the destroyed Bastille, presented by Thomas Paine on behalf of Lafayette – give much of a sense of his character. The four-poster bed upon which he died stands in an upstairs bedroom. Outside, a small museum traces Washington’s ancestry and displays porcelain, medals, weapons, and silver, and a renovated slave quarters, built to house the ninety slaves who lived and worked on the grounds alone, stands nearby. Washington and his wife, Martha, are buried in a simple tomb on the south side of the house.

Three miles away stands the restored grist mill, Route 235 S (April–Oct daily 10am–4pm; $4 separate admission), that Washington built as a water-powered testament to the future of American industry, and today colonial re-enactors go about the laborious work of crushing grain into flour and cornmeal. In 2007, the even more interesting prospect of a restored distillery will open at the site.

Gunston Hall

Gunston Hall, the 1755 Georgian brick home of Washington’s contemporary, George Mason, is a twenty-minute drive south of Washington DC near highways 1 and 95 (daily 9.30am–5pm; $8; @ www.gunstonhall.org). Mason, in writing the Virginia Declaration of Rights, stated “that all men are by nature equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights,” inspiring Thomas Jefferson when he later wrote the Declaration of Independence. Mason was one of the main framers of the US Constitution, which he subsequently refused to support because it neither included a Bill of Rights nor abolished slavery – ironic, considering he himself was a slaveholder. One of the most impressive works of architecture in Virginia, much of his home was designed and constructed by William Buckland; the masterful interiors, particularly in the stately drawing room, feature exquisite carved ornamentation (a fireplace mantel in the Chinoiserie style is particularly distinctive). The house fronts onto a large formal garden, beyond which lie extensive grounds surrounded by a riverfront state park and wildlife refuge.

Manassas Battlefield National Park

Manassas Battlefield National Park extends over grassy hills at the western fringes of the Washington DC suburban belt, just off I-66. Soon after the first shots were fired at Fort Sumter, the first major land battle of the Civil War – known in the North as the Battle of Bull Run – was fought here on the morning of July 21, 1861. Expecting an easy victory, some 25,000 Union troops attacked a Confederate detachment that controlled a vital railroad link to the Shenandoah Valley, and spectators came to see what they imagined would be a rousing entertainment. The battle was a disaster, however: the rebels proved powerful opponents and their strength in battle earned their commander, General Thomas Jackson, the famous nickname “Stonewall.” He and General Lee also masterminded a second, even more demoralizing Union loss here in late August 1862.

Displays in the small visitor center at the entrance (daily 8.30am–5pm; June–Aug Sat & Sun until 6pm; park admission $3; @ www.nps.gov/mana) describe how the first battle took shape, and detail other aspects of the war.

Richmond and the tidewater

At the very heart of Virginia, Richmond and the Chesapeake Bay tidewater make up a fairly compact area that holds some of the country's most important surviving colonial- and Civil War-era sites. The greatest interest is to be found in the fascinating Historic Triangle, east of Richmond, and in Fredericksburg, to the north, around which several crucial battles were waged.

Fredericksburg

Only a mile off the I-95 highway, halfway to Richmond from Washington, DC, FREDERICKSBURG is one of Virginia's prettiest historic towns, where elegant downtown streets are backed by residential avenues lined with white picket fences. In colonial days, this was an important inland port, in which tobacco and other plantation commodities were loaded onto boats that sailed down the Rappahannock River. Dozens of stately early-American buildings along the waterfront now hold antique stores and secondhand bookshops.

In the 1816 town hall, the Fredericksburg Area Museum, 907 Princess Anne St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $5; www.famcc.org), has a range of displays tracing local history, from Native American settlements to the Civil Rights era. The Rising Sun Tavern, at 1304 Caroline St, was built as a home in 1760 by George Washington's brother, Charles. As an inn, it became a key meeting place for patriots and a hotbed of secession. It is now a small museum (March–Nov Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; Dec–Feb Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; $5), where costumed guides take visitors around a collection of pub games and antique pewter. Guides are also on hand to explain eighteenth-century medicine at Hugh Mercer's Apothecary Shop, 1020 Caroline St (same hours as above; $5), which often involved treating patients with the likes of leeches and crab claws.

Fredericksburg's strategic location made it vital during the Civil War, and the land around the town was heavily contested. More than 100,000 men lost their lives in the major battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Spotsylvania, and countless bloody skirmishes. The visitor center, 1013 Lafayette Blvd (daily hours vary but often 9am–5pm; free; www.nps.gov/frsp), has informative exhibits and can lead you out to Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Battlefield Park, south of town. Contact the visitor center or see the above website for information on the other major battlefields in the area, Wilderness and Chancellorsville, both west of town, as well as the various manors and shrines to be found on the killing grounds.

Practicalities

The Amtrak station is at 200 Lafayette Blvd and the Greyhound station at 2217 Princess Ann St. Fredericksburg's visitor center at 706 Caroline St (daily summer 9am–7pm, rest of year 9am–5pm; T 540/373-1776 or 1-800/678-4748, www.visitfred.com) can provide maps of walking tours and details about discounted tickets to the area's attractions.

Fredericksburg has many good, old-fashioned B&Bs, including the 1812 Kenmore Inn, 1200 Princess Anne St (T 540/371-7622, www.kenmoreinn.com; S), which has stylish rooms with Internet access and a cozy pub in the basement that serves traditional fish and ham dishes, occasionally with live jazz, and the Richard Johnston Inn, 711 Caroline St (T 540/899-7606 or 877-557-0770, www.therichardjohnstoninn.com; 4–7), an elegant, eighteenth-century B&B with plush rooms and a broad range of prices, from $95 to $185. One worthwhile motel to try is the Fredericksburg Colonial Inn, 1707 Princess Anne St (T 540/371-5666, ④ www.fci1.com; ④), known for its tasteful rooms stocked with antiques. For close access to the four battlefields, there's On Keegan Pond, 11315 Gordon Rd (☎ 540/785-4662; ④), in a pleasant rural setting, also with antique-laden rooms.

Thanks to a lot of weekend activity, the town has several good places to eat and drink. Sammy T's, 801 Caroline St (☎ 540/371-2008), is a popular bar and diner with substantial sandwiches, salads, and pastas, and a huge range of bottled beers. Smythe's Cottage, 303 Fauquier St (☎ 540/373-1645) serves up tasty Southern cooking like Virginia ham and braised quail in an early nineteenth-century cottage. The Virginia Deli, 101 Williams St (☎ 540/371-2233), doles out hefty sandwiches with names like the Stonewall Jackson (salami and two kinds of ham) and the Blue & Grey (hot chicken, ham, and swiss cheese); the Colonial Tavern, 406 Lafayette Blvd (☎ 540/373-1313), is the place to fill up on Irish food, music, and beer.

Richmond and around

Founded in 1737 at the furthest navigable point on the James River, RICHMOND remained a small outpost until just before the end of the colonial era, when Virginians, realizing that their capital at Williamsburg was open to British attack, shifted it fifty miles further inland. Ironically, the move ended up preserving Williamsburg for posterity, but failed to offer Richmond much protection: the city was raided many times and twice put to the torch, once by troops under the command of Benedict Arnold.

Nonetheless, Richmond flourished, its population reaching 100,000 by the time of the Civil War. When war broke out it was named the capital of the Confederacy, despite Virginia's having voted two-to-one against secession from the Union just a month before. For four years the city was the focus of Southern defenses and Union attacks, but despite an almost constant state of siege – General McClellan came within six miles as early as 1862 – it held on almost until the very end. Less than a week after the city's fall, on April 3, 1865, Robert E. Lee surrendered to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox, a hundred miles west.

After the war, Richmond was devastated. Much of its downtown was burned, allegedly by fleeing Confederates who wanted to keep its stores of weapons and its warehouses full of tobacco out of the victors' hands. Today's Richmond has an extensive inventory of architecturally significant older buildings alongside its modern office towers, while tobacco is still a major industry – machine-rolled cigarettes were invented here in the 1870s, and Marlboro-maker Philip Morris runs a huge manufacturing plant just south of downtown. Finally, it may surprise some visitors to find that Richmond is relatively liberal. In 2003, a statue was even unveiled at Tredagar of the town's former arch-enemy, Abraham Lincoln.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Two hours by car from Washington DC, via I-95, which cuts through the east side of downtown, Richmond is also served by Amtrak, which pulls into 1500 E Main St, on its regional route that connects Newport News, VA, with Washington DC and Boston. Greyhound, which stops just off I-64 at 2910 N Blvd, is a good way from the center of town. The airport, ten miles east of downtown, is served by major carriers and has a small visitor center (Mon–Fri 9.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 804/236-3260; ④ www.flyrichmond.com) in the arrivals terminal. The main visitor center, 403 N 3rd St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 804/782-2777 or 1-888/RICHMOND, ④ www.richmondva.org), provides discounts on area hotels and advises on tours. Much of Richmond is compact enough to walk around, but to get to outlying places you can take a GRTC bus ($1.25, express routes $1.75; ☎ 804/358-GRTC, ④ www.ridegrtc.com).

Accommodation

Finding well-priced accommodation in Richmond isn't difficult, with plenty of chain hotels downtown catering to the business and government trade. If you prefer to get a feel for the old city, stay the night in a B&B in one of the historic quarters.

The Berkeley 1200 E Cary St ☎ 804/780-1300 or 1-888/780-4422, www.berkeleyhotel.com.

Elegant small hotel on the historic Shockoe Slip. Grace Manor Inn 1853 W Grace St ☎ 804/353-4334, www.thegracemanorinn.com. Stately B&B housing three tasteful suites in a grand 1910 building. Rooms are rich with antique decor; some have fireplaces and claw-foot tubs.

Henry Clay Inn 114 N Railroad Ave, Ashland VA ☎ 804/798-3100, www.henryclayinn.com. Though eleven miles out of town, this excellent B&B has fourteen antiques-filled rooms, a proper parlor, and a majestic veranda. Three of the rooms are suites and have a Jacuzzi.

The Jefferson 101 W Franklin St ☎ 804/788-8000 or 1-800/424-8014, www.jefferson-hotel.com. A beautifully maintained grand hotel, with a fabulous marble-columned lobby, marble baths, high-speed Internet access, and stylish rooms.

The John Marshall 101 N Fifth St ☎ 804/783-1929, www.thejohnmarshall.com. Landmark 1929 hotel in a central downtown location, with refurbished rooms and complimentary breakfast.

Linden Row Inn 100 E Franklin St ☎ 804/783-7000 or 1-800/348-7424, www.lindenrowinn.com. A magnificent row of redbrick Georgian terrace houses, now a comfortable modern hotel with antique furnishings, high-speed Internet access, and complimentary continental breakfast.

Richmond Marriott 500 E Broad St ☎ 804/643-3400, www.marriott.com. Smart chain accommodation offering high-speed Internet access, and a good downtown location.

Downtown Richmond

Richmond's downtown centers on a few blocks rising up from the James River to either side of Broad Street. Modern office towers front onto a riverside park, while up the hill in the Court End District, dozens of well-preserved antebellum homes provide a suitable backdrop for some important museums and historic sites.

The Virginia State Capitol, 910 Capitol St, houses the oldest legislative body still in existence in the US; the site has been in continuous use since 1788 as the state (and, briefly, Confederate) legislature. Thomas Jefferson had a hand in the design, based on his favorite building, the Roman Maison Carrée in Nîmes, France. The domed central rotunda (not visible from outside) holds the only marble statue of George Washington modeled from life (by master sculptor Jean-Antoine Houdon), and busts of Jefferson and the seven other Virginia-born US presidents line the walls. Likenesses of famous Virginians, including a solemn bronze of Robert E. Lee, fill the adjacent Old House Chamber, where Aaron Burr was tried and acquitted of treason in 1807. Note that the capitol is closed until 2007 for long-overdue renovations; for the latest information, or to take tours of the surrounding area, call ☎ 804/698-1788 or visit legis.state.va.us.

Also on Capitol Square is the Governor's Mansion, which, like the capitol, is the oldest of its kind in the US, dating to 1813 (for tours call ☎ 804/371-2642). Just two blocks north of the capitol, the Museum of the Confederacy, 1201 E Clay St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, closed Wed; $7), covers the history of the Civil War (known in the South as the War Between the States) through weapons, uniforms, and the like. Personal effects of Confederate leaders include J.E.B. Stuart's plumed hat, the tools used to amputate Stonewall Jackson's arms at Chancellorsville (he died regardless), and Robert E. Lee's revolver and the pen he used to sign the surrender. Next door, the White House of the Confederacy (same hours; $7, or $10 combo ticket), a Neoclassical mansion where Jefferson Davis lived as Confederate president, has been restored to its 1860s appearance.

Two blocks west, the 1812 Wickham House now forms part of the excellent Valentine Richmond History Center at 1015 E Clay St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10). This Federal-style monolith houses a small local history museum, focusing on the experience of working-class and black Americans, as well as an extensive array of furniture and pre–Civil War clothing such as whale-bone corsets and other Gone With the Wind–era apparel.

West of the Convention Center on Sixth Street is the nineteenth-century neighborhood of Jackson Ward. Filling a dozen blocks around First and Clay streets, this National Historic Landmark District has been the center of Richmond's African-American community since well before the Civil War, when Richmond had the largest free black population in the US. As well as covering local history, the Maggie L. Walker House, 110 E Leigh St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; free; www.nps.gov/mawa), traces the working life of the physically disabled, black Richmond woman who, during the 1920s, was the first woman in the US to found and run a bank, now the Consolidated Bank and Trust. Nearby, the Black History Museum at 00 Clay St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $5) contains displays on Richmond's role as a center of Southern black society, and includes a well-presented gallery of artifacts of the Civil Rights movement as well as textiles from different peoples in Africa and America.

While basking in all the history, take a break along the 1.25-mile stretch of waterfront known as Canal Walk, which runs between downtown and Shockoe Bottom. Canal boat rides depart from around 14th and Virginia streets (Apr–Nov Fri & Sat noon–7pm, Sun noon–5pm; also June–Aug Wed & Thurs noon–7pm; $5), providing a leisurely and pleasant half-hour jaunt. Nearby, the Richmond Civil War Visitor Center, 490 Tredegar St (daily 9am–5pm; 804-771-2145, www.nps.gov/rich; free), at the refurbished Tredegar Iron Works, has a regular slide show about Civil War history and three floors of exhibits, including moving personal accounts of the war from ordinary soldiers. Tredegar is also the main visitor center for Richmond National Battlefield Park, a collection of dozens of local Civil War sites, which can be accessed on an 80-mile drive. Four other visitor centers are also in operation, the most interesting being the Chimborazo Medical Museum, a few miles east at 3215 E Broad St (daily 9am–5pm; free; 804-226-1981), which has disturbing displays on the medicine and technology available (or not) to help wounded soldiers of the era. Those that weren't so lucky ended up just west of Tredegar at Hollywood Cemetery, 412 S Cherry St (daily 8.30am–4.30pm; www.hollywoodcemetery.org), where a 90ft granite pyramid memorializes the eighteen thousand Confederate troops killed nearby, and where you can find the graves of presidents James Monroe and John Tyler.

Shockoe Bottom, the Poe Museum, and Church Hill

Split down the middle by the raised I-95 freeway, the gentrified riverfront warehouse district of Shockoe Bottom still holds a few reminders of Richmond's industrial past among the restaurants and nightclubs on its cobblestoned streets. From Shockoe Slip, a fetching old wharf rebuilt in the 1890s after being destroyed in the Civil War, Cary Street runs east along the waterfront, lined by a wall of brick warehouses – now being converted into chic lofts and condos – known as Tobacco Row.

Nearby, Richmond's oldest building, an appropriately gloomy 250-year-old stone house, holds the Edgar Allan Poe Museum, 1914 E Main St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $6; www.poemuseum.org). Poe spent much of his youth in Richmond and considered it his home town. The museum displays Poe memorabilia and relics, including his walking stick and a lock of his hair, plus a model of Richmond as it was in Poe's time.

Church Hill, a few blocks northeast, is one of Richmond's oldest surviving residential districts, its decorative eighteenth-century houses, adorned with cast-iron porches and rambling magnolia-filled front gardens, looking out over the James River (it's also the site of the Chimborazo Museum; see p.436). Capping the hill at the heart of the neighborhood, St John's Church, 2401 E Broad St (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $6; 📞www.historicstjohnschurch.org), dates back to 1741 and is best known as the place where, during a 1775 debate on whether the Virginia colony should raise a militia against the British, future state governor Patrick Henry made the impassioned plea, “Give me liberty or give me death.” His speech, along with the debate itself, is recreated by actors in period dress every Sunday at 2pm in summer; it's a popular affair, so get there an hour early to grab a spot on a pew.

The Fan District and Carytown

The Fan District, so named because its tree-lined avenues fan out at oblique angles, is an interesting Richmond neighborhood surrounding the campus of Virginia Commonwealth University. The district spreads west from the downtown area, beyond Belvedere Street (US-1), and its centerpiece, Monument Avenue, is lined with garish Victorian and historic-revival mansions from the start of the twentieth century, its four grand intersections holding statues of J.E.B. Stuart, Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, and Jefferson Davis.

South of Monument Avenue, at 2800 Grove Ave, stands the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts (Wed–Sun 11am–5pm; $5 donation; 📞www.vmfa.museum). An extensive collection of Impressionist and Post-Impressionist paintings is displayed alongside American paintings ranging from Charles Willson Peale's acclaimed portraits to George Catlin's romantic images of Plains Indians to the Pop Art creations of Roy Lichtenstein and Claes Oldenburg. Other galleries contain such items as Frank Lloyd Wright furniture, Lalique jewelry, Hindu and Buddhist sculpture from the Himalayas, and four jewel-encrusted Fabergé Easter eggs, crafted in the 1890s for the Russian tsars.

Just beyond the Fan District, Carytown is a thriving nine-block area of trendy shops offering Asian art, tarot readings, and holistic medicines alongside restaurants on Cary Street.

Eating and drinking

Richmond has a good choice of eating options at both ends of the price spectrum, with barbecue and the higher-priced New Southern cuisine being specialties.

Acacia 3325 W Cary St ☎804/354-6060. Quality regional cuisine with alfresco dining at this highly rated Carytown bistro. Good range of fresh seasonal ingredients and pricey offerings, which may include poultry, beef, and softshell crabs.

Border Chophouse 1501 W Main St ☎804/355-2907. Western-styled spot that serves up mid-priced pasta, veal, and lamb dishes, but whose specialty is barbecue – be it beef ribs, pork, or chicken.

Cabo's Corner Bistro 2053 W Broad St, Fan District ☎804/355-1144. Swank spot offering creative steak, seafood, and pasta dishes, as well as nightly live jazz.

Millie's Diner 2603 E Main St ☎804/643-5512. Refurbished diner, a bit out of downtown beyond Shockoe Bottom, complete with mini-jukeboxes on each table. The changing menu includes fairly expensive but delicious seafood and steak, and there's also a nice range of brews.

O'Neill's Penny Lane Pub 421 E Franklin St ☎804/780-1682. British-style joint with solid grilled food and other pub grub, plus a full range of English and other beers and European soccer on TV.

Peking Pavilion 1302 E Cary St ☎804/649-8888. Very good, inexpensive (especially at lunchtime) Chinese restaurant in Shockoe Slip serving Szechuan and Mandarin specialties. Part of a local chain.

Richbrau Brewing Co 1214 E Cary St, Shockoe Slip ☎804/644-3018. The place to go in town for hearty, handcrafted microbrews, as well as good Southern fare, dancing, pool, and darts.

Strawberry Street Café 421 N Strawberry St ☎804/353-6860. Casual and comfortable Fan District café offering mainly quiches, pastas, and salads, but also jambalaya and crab cakes.

Third Street Diner 218 E Main St ☎804/788-4750. Relaxed 24hr diner with solid breakfasts and Greek dishes. Draws a stylish student crowd, especially at night when it's also a bar.
The Tobacco Company 1201 E Cary St

☎804/782-9555. Inventive New American food in a stunningly restored three-story tobacco warehouse, complete with antique elevator. Affordable sandwiches and burgers for lunch; pricier steak and seafood for dinner.

Nightlife

Richmond's main nightlife spots are concentrated around the riverside Shockoe Slip and Shockoe Bottom areas, just east of downtown. A good bet for mainstream theater is the Barksdale Theatre, 1601 Willow Lawn Drive (tickets $30–38; ☎804/282-2620, www.barksdalerichmond.org), while the Chamberlayne Actors Theatre, 319 N Wilkinson Rd (tickets $13; ☎804/262-9760, www.cattheatre.com), offers fringe works that are more daring and contemporary. For details on music and events, check the free Style Weekly newspaper or www.arts.Richmond.com.

The Historic Triangle

The Historic Triangle, on the thin peninsula that stretches southeast of Richmond between the James and York rivers, holds the richest concentration of colonial-era sites in the US. Jamestown, founded in 1607, was Virginia's first settlement; Williamsburg is a detailed replica of the colonial capital; and Yorktown was the site of the climactic battle in the Revolutionary War. All are within an hour's drive from Richmond, and Williamsburg is accessible by Amtrak.

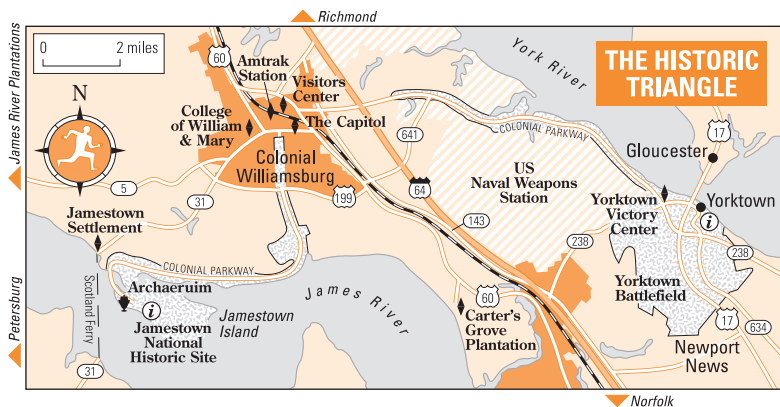

Although I-64 is the quickest way to cover the fifty miles from Richmond to Williamsburg, a far more pleasing drive along US-5 rolls through plantation country, where many eighteenth-century mansions, with lovely grounds, are open to the public. Once you're in the Historic Triangle, the best way to get around is along the wooded Colonial Parkway, which winds west to Jamestown and east to Yorktown, twenty miles in all. Most of the area's numerous tourist facilities – this is the most visited destination in the state – are to be found around Williamsburg; a few suggestions are listed under “Historic Triangle practicalities” on p.442.

Jamestown

To experience Jamestown, the site of the first English settlement in North America, you'll want to visit both the original location and the recreated site by taking the scenic Colonial Parkway or highways 5 and 31 from Williamsburg. The one bit of seventeenth-century Jamestown to survive, protected within the Jamestown National Historic Site on Jamestown Island, is the 50ft tower of the first brick church, built around 1650 (the rest was destroyed by fire in 1698), which makes it one of the oldest extant English structures in the US.

The area is roughly divided into two sections: the New Towne is where the colonists relocated after the 1620s to erect businesses, establish permanent residences, build livestock pens, and so on. Much of what's visible are replicas of the original brick foundations buried below (to protect from weather damage) and the fenced outlines of former property boundaries. More interesting is the site of the Old Towne – the location most of us associate with the colony – which includes ruins from the original triangular 1607 fort. Here you'll see dozens of archeologists working behind a perimeter, and you can also drop in on the Archaearium, where some of the many treasures discovered here – everything from glassware to utensils to the skeleton of a colonist who died a violent death – are on display.

At the end of the Colonial Parkway, the visitor center (daily: June–Aug 8.30am–5.30pm; Sept–May 8.30am–4.30pm; $8 per car, or $10 if combined with the Yorktown battlefield; www.nps.gov/jame), features drawings and audiovisual exhibits that give you a sense of daily life at Jamestown, while, closer to the park entrance, you can watch artisans making old-fashioned glassworks and purchase some of their creations, as well as see the brick remnants of a seventeenth-century kiln now being excavated.

If looking at dusty artifacts and archeologists isn't enough for you, head to the adjacent Jamestown Settlement (daily 9am–5pm; $11.75, or $17 with Yorktown Victory Center; www.historyisfun.org), a complex of museums and actual-size replicas that provide details of what went on here, the reconstructed buildings staffed by guides in period costume. In Powhatan Village, interpreters wearing buckskins engage in weaving, pottery, and other Native American crafts, while in the larger replica of James Fort, some fifteen thatched buildings – all built with period tools – include a blacksmith's forge, storehouse and church. Full-sized replicas of the three ships that carried the first settlers are moored on the James River.

Colonial Williamsburg

Providing vivid details on what the eighteenth-century capital of Virginia may have been like, Colonial Williamsburg is an essential stop for anyone with a flair for American history. While you have to buy a pricey ticket to look inside most of the meticulously restored buildings, the entire historic area, which includes many fine gardens, is open all the time, and you can wander freely down the cobblestone streets and across the lush green commons.

From the Wren Building on the William and Mary campus, separated from Colonial Williamsburg by a mock-historic shopping center, Duke of Gloucester Street runs east through the historic area to the old capitol. The first of the eighteenth-century buildings, a hundred yards along, is the Episcopal Bruton Parish Church (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; donation) where W.A.R. Goodwin preached and all the big names of the revolutionary period were known to visit. Behind the church, the broad Palace Green spreads north to the Governor's Palace. West of the church, the 1771 courthouse and the octagonal powder magazine, protected by a guardhouse, face each other in the midst of Market Square. Further along, Chowning's Tavern, a reconstruction of an alehouse that stood here in 1766, is one of four functioning pubs in the district, this one with lively historic entertainment nightly.

The real architectural highlight is the capitol, a monumental edifice at the east end of Duke of Gloucester Street. The current building, a 1945 reconstruction of

Tickets for Colonial Williamsburg

To set foot inside any of the buildings that have been restored or rebuilt as part of Colonial Williamsburg, you need to buy a ticket, either from the main visitor center (daily 8.45am–5.45pm; ☎ 1-800/HISTORY, 🌐 www.colonialwilliamsburg.com), north of the center off the Colonial Parkway, or from a smaller office at the west end of Duke of Gloucester Street. Most buildings in the park are open daily from 9am to 5pm, but about a third of them may have special hours and days they're open; check the website for details.

There are several types of tickets, which include an introductory guided walk and free parking at the visitor center. The basic Capital City Pass ($34, kids $15), valid for one day only, gets you into many of the lesser buildings, but excludes the Governor's Palace and the museums; the better-value Key-to-the-City Pass ($48, kids $34) includes those buildings and lasts two days; the Freedom Pass ($59, kids $29) is the same as the latter, but lasts for an entire year of admission; and the Independence Pass ($75, kids $38) is almost the same as the Freedom Pass, but throws in a ticket to the nightly shows as well. Aside from these performances, there are additional charges for the various special programs and events offered by Colonial Williamsburg, such as staged trials in the courthouse, holiday spectacles, and candlelit walking tours.

the 1705 original, has an open-air ground-floor arcade linking two keyhole-shaped wings. One wing housed the elected, legislative body of the Colonial government, the House of Burgesses, while the other held the chambers of the General Court – where alleged felons, including thirteen of Blackbeard's pirates, were tried.

A number of fully stocked gift shops along Duke of Gloucester Street have been done up as eighteenth-century apothecaries, cobblers, and silversmiths. The Raleigh Tavern here was where the independence-minded Colonial government reconvened after being dissolved by the loyalist governors in 1769 and again in 1774; the original tavern burned down in 1859. Finally, the imposing two-story Governor's Palace, at the north end of the Palace Green, has a grand ballroom and opulent furnishings, and must have served as a telling declaration of royal power – no doubt enforced by the startling display of swords, muskets, and other deadly weaponry interlaced on the walls of the foyer.

For those in need of further immersion into the past, as well as a heavy dose of theme-park (sur)reality, you can catch “Revolutionary City,” a two-hour spectacle (daily 2.30–4.30pm) held in the streets on the east end of site, where costumed actors act out the highlights of the 1770s and 1780s, sweeping up tourists in the rebellious fervor of the day with a flurry of angry speeches and shouting matches.

Yorktown

YORKTOWN, along the York River on the north side of the peninsula, gave its name to the decisive final major battle of the Revolutionary War. The town was little more than farmland when, on October 18, 1781, overwhelmed and besieged British (and German mercenary) troops under the command of Charles, Lord Cornwallis surrendered here to the joint American and French forces commanded by George Washington. At the heart of the eponymous battlefield ($5 per car, or $10 combined with Jamestown National Historic Site, see p.438; 🌐 www.nps.gov/yonb) that surrounds the town, a visitor center (daily 9am–5pm) has interpretive displays, including a replica, walk-through fighting ship, military artifacts, and a short audiovisual presentation on the war, and also provides several guided tours of the area. (A dozen original buildings survive from the era, along with the earthworks dug by the troops.) The Siege Line Overlook, at the visitor center, has good views of strategic points, while maps and a self-guided audio tour ($3) are available if you want to explore in greater detail.

The town itself also has a handful of interesting old structures worth looking at. These include the handsome homes of local gentry, a customhouse, and, best of all, the archeological remains of the workshop of the Poor Potter – who, contrary to his name, was a prosperous merchant and one of the first businessmen in the colonies to produce quality ceramics and glassworks to rival those imported from England.

Note that, as at Jamestown, the state of Virginia and the National Park Service have constructed a mini-theme park nearby – this time a recreated Continental Army encampment – as part of the Yorktown Victory Center (daily 9am–5pm; $8.25, or $17 with Jamestown Settlement; www.historyisfun.org), west of the battlefield on US-17. The museum covers both sides of the conflict, British and American, and events leading up to the Revolution. Two outdoor museums portray life on a middle-class farm and in a Revolutionary War camp.

Historic Triangle practicalities

Of the three main sites, only Williamsburg is easily reached without a car. Amtrak trains and Greyhound buses stop at 468 N Boundary St, two blocks from the Governor's Palace. The Colonial Parkway makes an excellent, scenic cycling route to Jamestown or Yorktown, but there's no other transportation available; rent a bike for $15–20 a day from Bikes Unlimited at 759 Scotland St in Williamsburg (☎ 757/229-4620). In Colonial Williamsburg, ticket-holders can use the hop-on, hop-off shuttle buses (9am–5.30pm) that leave from the visitor center every ten minutes or so and stop at convenient points in the historic area.

Considering the wealth of historic structures here, it's surprising how few hotels or B&Bs there are with any character. For accommodation, packages with meals, two nights' lodging, and admission are available for around $200 per person, and places to stay around the Historic Triangle are generally bland and rarely cheap; to make your search easier, the Williamsburg Hotel/Motel Association (☎ 757/220-3330 or 1-800/221-7165, www.gowilliamsburg.com) can find you a bed at no extra charge. West of the center, US-60 is lined with endless motels, and there are also several cheap options just a few blocks east of the capitol, including the basic Bassett Motel, 800 York St (☎ 757/229-5175, www.bassettmotel.com; ③), and the clean and conveniently located Quarterpath Inn, 620 York St (☎ 1-800/446-9222, www.quarterpathinn.com; ③). For a change of pace, the Duke of York Motel, 508 E Water St in Yorktown (☎ 757/898-3232, www.dukeofyorkmotel.com; ④), has good beachfront units, some with kitchenettes, fridges, and Jacuzzis, along the York River. Finally, there are several campgrounds along US-5 and US-60 west of Williamsburg that charge $20–25 per tent.

The various restaurants and taverns along Duke of Gloucester Street in Colonial Williamsburg feature good (if overpriced) pub food; all except Chowning's Tavern should be reserved in advance (☎ 1-800/HISTORY), and some operate on a seasonal basis only (often April–Oct). West of the historic area, in the Merchants Square shopping mall, the excellent Trellis Café (☎ 757/229-8610) serves pricey seafood and steak entrees for dinner, but affordable sandwiches and burgers for lunch; across the street, the 🍷 Cheese Shop (☎ 757/220-0298) has great deli sandwiches, but expect a wait during peak hours. For even fancier fare, try the Whitehall, 1325 Jamestown Rd (☎ 757/229-4677), which offers elegant, upmarket French dining with a heavy accent on seafood and beef. There is also a clutch of solid restaurants near the William and Mary campus, including the Green Leaf Café, 765 Scotland St (☎ 757/220-3405), offering chili, burgers, pizza, pasta and thirty brews on tap. Ten-minutes' drive west of Colonial Williamsburg, the Seafare, 1632 Richmond Rd (☎ 757/229-0099), has good, fresh seafood.

The Atlantic coast

One of the busiest of the East Coast ports, Norfolk sits midway along the coast at the point where the Chesapeake Bay empties into the Atlantic Ocean. Virginia's only heavily industrial center, it is not a particularly pretty place, but it does have a rich maritime and naval heritage, as well as the Chrysler Museum, one of the region's best art galleries. Fifteen miles east of Norfolk, along the open Atlantic, Virginia Beach draws summer sun-seekers to the state's busiest seashore.

The rest of Virginia's Atlantic coast is on its isolated and sparsely populated Eastern Shore, where the attractive little island town of Chincoteague serves as the headquarters of a wildlife refuge that straddles the Maryland border and forms part of the Assateague Island National Seashore.

Norfolk

A strategic location at the broad mouth of the Chesapeake Bay and an extensive deep-water harbor made colonial NORFOLK the main American trading port. Today, along with Hampton Roads and Newport News on the north side of the James River, Norfolk is home to the largest naval base outside Russia, and carriers, cruisers, and all manner of gray-steel behemoths cruise past incessantly.

The waterfront features Norfolk's premier attraction, Nauticus: The National Maritime Center (June–Aug daily 9am–5pm; rest of year Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $9.95; ☎ www.thenmc.org), which, besides oceanography exhibits, a shark-petting lagoon, aquariums, and giant-screen films, features informative displays on naval history and technology. On the second floor, the Hampton Roads Naval Museum (same hours; free) documents historical naval operations in the area, while the pier adjacent to the center is frequented by colossal US and foreign ships; you can tour the decks of the USS Wisconsin, which is usually berthed across from the center (same hours; free) and has interactive displays showcasing the wartime role of the battleship. The small Elizabeth River ferry (hours vary, usually weekdays 7.15am–9.45pm, weekends 10.15am–11.45pm; $1; ☎ www.hrtransit.org) shuttles from nearby Waterside Park across the harbor to the historic Portsmouth neighborhood, where brick-lined streets are flanked by early American houses. Waterside Park itself, at the mouth of the Elizabeth River, has something of a party atmosphere on summer weekends with live music, cheap beer, and plenty of atmosphere.

An extraordinary array of Asian antiquities is displayed in the intimate Tudor-style home now known as the Hermitage Foundation Museum, by the Lafayette River at 7637 N Shore Rd (45min guided tours only; Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $5; ☎ www.heritagefoundation.org). Among the treasures are Persian rugs, medieval tapestries, rare ancient Chinese ceremonial vessels, and Roman glass; rotating exhibits highlight works by local artists, potters, and glassmakers.

The Chrysler Museum, half a mile north of the downtown waterfront at 245 W Olney Rd at Mowbray Arch (Wed 10am–9pm, Thurs–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $7, free on Wed; ☎ www.chrysler.org), holds the eclectic collection of car magnate Walter Chrysler Jr. It includes a little bit of everything, from ancient Greek statuary to French Impressionist paintings, Franz Klein abstractions, and Mayan funerary objects, as well as world-class Tiffany and Lalique glassware. For a glimpse of bourgeois life in the area c.1800, check out the museum's Moses Myers House, Bank St at E Freemason St (Wed–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; free), the elegant home of one of Norfolk's most prominent Jewish residents, now being restored to its original look, and adorned with portraits by Gilbert Stuart and Thomas Sully.

Practicalities

Airport Shuttle (☎ 757/857-3001) connects downtown Norfolk with Norfolk International Airport ($20), five miles northeast. Amtrak bus connections from Newport News stop at Monticello Ave and Virginia Beach Blvd, and Greyhound stops opposite at no. 701. Norfolk's downtown visitor center is at the Nauticus Center, 232 E Main St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 757/664-6620 or 1-800/368-3097, ☎ www.norfolkcvb.com); drivers can go to a convenient visitor center with easy parking at exit 273 off I-64, at 9401 Fourth View St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 757/441-1852). Free NET buses provide transportation to major sites (Mon–Fri 6:30am–11pm, Sat noon–midnight, Sun noon–8pm; ☎ www.norfolk.gov/Visitors/net.asp).

With far better accommodation options available nearby in Virginia Beach (see p.444), there should be no need to resort to the standard hotel and motel chains available in Norfolk. One exception is the pleasant Freemason Inn, 411 W York St (☎ 757/963-7000, 🌐 www.freemasoninn.com; 📍), a four-unit B&B whose rooms offer fireplaces, poster beds, and Jacuzzi tubs. For dining, there's excellent, expensive seafood and French cuisine at Voila, 509 Botetourt St (☎ 757/640-0343), and eclectic fare – crab cakes, noodle dishes, steak, and hearty sandwiches – at The 219, 219 Granby St (☎ 757/627-2896). For a cheap taste of Americana, stop by Doumar's, a 1950s-era drive-in restaurant at 1919 Monticello Ave (☎ 757/627-4163), where white-hatted waitstaff bring the food to your car; it's tops for barbeque, burgers, and waffle-cone ice cream.

Virginia Beach

VIRGINIA BEACH, Virginia's only real summer resort, has grown to become the largest city in the state, with nearly half a million people, but takes care to pitch itself as a family destination.

The city's focus is its long, sandy beach, lined with the usual hotels and motels, and backed by a boardwalk strip of bars, restaurants, and nightclubs. Virginia Beach is also a major surfing center, hosting the East Coast Surfing Championships in late August (☎ 1-800/861-SURF). You can rent surf and boogie boards at Wave Riding Vehicles, 19th St and Cypress Ave (☎ 757/422-8823). Away from the sands, most of the action is along Atlantic Avenue, the main beachfront drag.

High-tech exhibits and an IMAX theater are featured at the Virginia Aquarium and Marine Science Center, 717 General Booth Blvd (daily summer 9am–7pm, rest of year 9am–5pm; $12, or $17 with IMAX show; ☎ 757/425-FISH, 🌐 www.vmsm.com), which explores all things aquatic, including tanks devoted to sharks, sea turtles, and jellyfish; it also has a short, pleasant nature trail through the Owls Creek salt marsh, linking its two main buildings and an aviary displaying dozens of native species. The museum also organizes dolphin-watching expeditions (90min; June–Oct; $18) and whale-watching cruises (2hr 30min; late-Dec to mid-March; $28), for which you should reserve in advance (☎ 757/437-BOAT).

The eccentric A.R.E. Center at the headquarters of the Association for Research and Enlightenment, 215 67th St at Atlantic Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 11am–8pm; 🌐 www.edgarcayce.org/visit_are; free), focuses on Edgar Cayce (1877–1945), known as “the sleeping prophet” because of his alleged ability, while in a trance, to diagnose and heal the ailments of individuals anywhere in the world. Visitors can use an enormous metaphysical library, take in a lecture on various New Age subjects (daily 3.30pm), or test their own personal ESP (Sat & Sun 1pm).

Away from the city beach, a few miles up and down the coast are some beautiful and peaceful stretches of golden sand. To the south lies the four-mile-long Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge (daily dawn to dusk; $5 per car, hikers and cyclists $2; 🌐 backbay.fws.gov), where you can walk, bike, or fish (but not swim), and False Cape State Park, a mile-wide barrier spit that connects to North Carolina and is one of the region's last undisturbed coastlines. Closer to Virginia Beach to the north, the thick woodland of First Landing State Park was the site where the first English settlers touched land in 1607 before moving on to Jamestown; it is Virginia's most popular state park, good for its boating and cycling, with a beach on the Chesapeake Bay.

Practicalities

Greyhound stops at 1017 Laskin Rd, off 31st Street, while the Amtrak bus connection from Newport News – and connecting up to Boston and New York – arrives at 19th Street and Pacific Avenue. The visitor center, 2100 Parks Ave (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 757/437-4919 or 1-800/822-3224, 🌐 www.VBFUN.com), is at the east end of I-264, half a mile west of the beach at 21st Street. Beach trolleys called The Wave (daily 8am–2am; $1; ☎ 757/252-6100, 🌐 www.hrtransit.org) are the easiest way to get around; there are three different routes covering the city, the most useful being up and down Atlantic Avenue.

Virginia Beach has a great boon for budget travelers – just a block from the ocean, Angie's Guest Cottage, 302 24th St (☎ 757/428-4690, 🌐 www.angiescottage.com), has dorm beds from $17–20, private rooms from $32–38, and bargain B&B units for $80 and up (there's a two-night minimum for the latter). Typical rates at the seafront hotels tend to approach $200 in summer; cheaper options can be found at The Capes Ocean Resort, 2001 Atlantic Ave (☎ 757/428-5421, 🌐 www.caphotel.com; 📍), which offers a broad range of rooms, though all with ocean-front balconies, microwaves, and fridges (rates can double during the summer, however). For a splash of old-style lodging, the Cavalier, 42nd St and Atlantic Ave (☎ 757/425-8555, 🌐 www.cavalierhotel.com; 📍), is a stately 1927 beachfront resort whose facilities include two pools, a gym, and clay tennis courts; its rooms have fridges and microwaves, and some (for about $50 more) come with Jacuzzis; rates jump by about $100 in the summer. You can also camp at First Landing State Park on the Chesapeake Bay ($23–29; ☎ 757/412-2300 or 1-800/933-7275, 🌐 www.dcr.state.va.us/parks/1stland.htm).

The town also offers some great restaurants and a decent nightlife. Captain John's Crabhouse, 3420 Atlantic Ave (☎ 757/425-6263), has fine seafood and steak, while Mahi Mahi's, 615 Atlantic Ave (☎ 757/437-8030), offers a creative menu of sushi, sashimi, crabcakes, and other seafood, plus a wide selection of beers. Baja Cantina, 206 23rd St (☎ 757/437-2920), is a friendly bar serving tasty Mexican food at affordable prices. For live music, try the Abbey Road Pub, 203 22nd St (☎ 757/425-6330), a solid bar with over a hundred different beers and live, local rock on some nights (Wed–Sat). The Jewish Mother, 3108 Pacific Ave (☎ 757/422-5430), is a daytime deli and late-night bar with blues and roots music – sometimes from notable names (tickets for shows $5–20).

The Eastern Shore

Virginia's longest and least-visited stretch of Atlantic coastline, the Eastern Shore, lies separated from the rest of the state on the distant side of the Chesapeake Bay. Only the southernmost segment of what's known as the Delmarva peninsula belongs to Virginia, by which point it has narrowed to become a flat spit of sand protected by a fringe of low-lying islands.

US-13, which runs straight down the center of the peninsula and provides a handy short cut from Philadelphia or points north, crosses seventeen miles of open sea at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay via the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel ($12 per car one way; $17 roundtrip within 24hrs). To either side of US-13, little villages and fishing harbors such as Nassawadox, Assawoman, and Accomac are tucked away on rambling back roads.

Chincoteague and Assateague Island National Seashore

The most appealing destination on the Eastern Shore, Chincoteague occupies a beautiful barrier island just south of the Maryland border. Although it's little more than a village, its two principal streets hold a fair assortment of motels and restaurants, and it makes a relaxed base for exploring Assateague Island National Seashore (week-long vehicle pass $10; 🌐 www.nps.gov/asis), whose northern half holds several good hiking trails and can only be reached from Maryland (see p.475); the southern half, just a mile onwards from Chincoteague, is taken up by Chincoteague National Wildlife Refuge (daily May–Sept 5am–10pm, Nov–April 6am–6pm, Oct 6am–8pm), notable for its seabirds and wild ponies. Call in at the visitor center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 757/336-6122, 🌐 chinco.fws.gov) for information on the short trails through the dunes and marshes, or if you just want a day at the beach, drive straight past to Tom’s Cove (camping is only available on the Maryland side, for $16 per night). If you’re in Chincoteague on the last Wednesday of July, don’t miss the annual Pony Penning Carnival, when the three hundred wild ponies that roam Assateague Island to the north are herded together and directed on a swim through the channel to Chincoteague Memorial Park, where the foals are sold by auction to help the local community.

Solid accommodation options in Chincoteague include the grand Island Manor House, 4160 Main St (☎ 1-800/852-1505, 🌐 www.islandmanor.com; 5), a smart, antique-furnished B&B; the large Mariner Motel, 6273 Maddox Blvd (☎ 757/336-6565, 🌐 www.esva.net/~motel; 4), with clean and functional rooms; and the Cedar Gables Seaside Inn, 6095 Hopkins Lane (☎ 1-888/491-2944, 🌐 www.cedargable.com; 7), a homey B&B whose four comfy suites have fireplaces, Jacuzzis, CD players, and fridges. Steamers, 6251 Maddox Blvd (☎ 757/336-5478), is a family restaurant serving all-you-can-eat meals of crab, oysters, clams, and shrimp for $15–25. Located in the small waterfront plaza, Landmark Crab House, 6162 N Main St (☎ 757/336-5552), also serves tasty seafood and is open from April to November.

Charlottesville and the Shenandoah Valley

The densely forested 4000ft peaks of the Blue Ridge Mountains form a definite barrier between the history-rich worlds of tidewater Virginia to the east and the rougher river-and-valley country to the west. In between the two, at the geographical center of the state, sits the friendly, manageably small college town of Charlottesville, which holds two great monuments to the mind of Thomas Jefferson. South of Charlottesville, Appomattox Court House is where Robert E. Lee surrendered on behalf of the Confederate army, thus ending the Civil War, while to the west, Shenandoah National Park, which runs south to Tennessee, culminates in the 5729ft Mount Rogers; on the far side of the mountains, the lush Shenandoah Valley was once a vital battleground during the Civil War.

The main highway through the Shenandoah Valley, I-81, can be reached in the north via I-66 from Washington DC and in the middle via I-64 from Richmond through Charlottesville. Numerous scenic routes are slower but more worthwhile, such as Skyline Drive and the Blue Ridge Parkway, which both weave along the four-hundred-mile-long mountain crest, which typically reaches 4000ft or so. You’ll need a car to get the most out of the region, though cycling is a good option along the many back roads and, for hikers, the Appalachian Trail runs right down the middle.

Charlottesville

Seventy miles west of Richmond, CHARLOTTESVILLE holds some of the finest examples of early American architecture; its compact, low-rise center is crisscrossed by magnolia-shaded streets and makes a fine area to amble around, particularly in the six pedestrianized blocks of Main Street. However pleasant the town, the compelling attraction is Thomas Jefferson’s home and resting place, Monticello, which sits atop a hill just east of town, overlooking the beautiful Neoclassical campus of the University of Virginia.

The University of Virginia

Though he wrote the Declaration of Independence and served as the third US president, Thomas Jefferson took more pride in having established the University of Virginia than in any of his other achievements, as he designed every building down to the most minute detail, planned the curriculum, and selected the faculty.

The highlight of the campus is the redbrick, white-domed and -columned Rotunda (☎ 434/982-3200), which was modeled on the Pantheon and completed in 1821 to house the library and classrooms. (The Rotunda burned down in 1895, was errantly rebuilt, and finally reconstructed to Jefferson's letter in 1976.) A basement gallery tells the history of the university, while upstairs a richly decorated central hall links three elliptical classrooms. A staircase winds up to the Dome Room, where paired Corinthian columns rise to an ocular skylight. From the Rotunda, 45-minute guided tours of campus begin (daily 10am, 11am, 2pm, 3pm, & 4pm, except during holidays and May final exams; free) and twin colonnades stretch along either side of a lushly landscaped quadrangle – The Lawn – linking single-story student apartments with ten taller pavilions in which professors live and hold tutorials.

Parallel to the quadrangle buildings, two further rows of dormitory buildings, the East and West ranges, front on to serpentine walled gardens. Edgar Allan Poe stayed in one of these dorms while studying at the university in 1826, but was forced to drop out after he couldn't pay his gambling debts. His room – Number 13, of course – in the West Range is now restored to how it would have looked during his occupancy: a rather spartan, bleak affair (the honorary Ravens Society maintains the unit; see ☎ www.uvaravensociety.com).

Monticello

One of America's most familiar buildings – it graces the back of the nickel – Monticello, three miles southeast of Charlottesville on Hwy-53, was the home of Thomas Jefferson for most of his life. Surrounded by acres of beautiful hilltop grounds, which once made up an enormous plantation, with fine views out over the Virginia countryside, Monticello is a handsome estate. The symmetrical brick facade, centered upon a white Doric portico, belies the quirky irregularities of the interior – furnished as it was when Jefferson lived, and died, here.

To see Monticello you have to join one of the guided tours (daily March–Oct 8am–5pm; rest of year 9am–4.30pm; $14; ☎ 434/984-9822, ☎ www.Monticello.org) that leave continuously from the parking lot at the bottom of the hill. From the outside, Monticello looks like an elegant, Palladian-style country home, but as soon as you enter the domed entrance hall, with its animal hides, native craft-works, and fossilized bones and elk antlers (from Lewis and Clark's epic 1804 journey across North America, which Jefferson sponsored as president), you begin to see a different side of Jefferson. His love of gadgets and clever contraptions, which fill the house, marked him as a true Renaissance man. In Jefferson's private chambers, he slept in a cramped alcove that linked his dressing room and his study, and would get up on the right side of the bed if he wanted to make some late-night notes, on the left if he wanted to get dressed.

Extensive flower and vegetable gardens spread to the south and west, and a dank passage runs under the house from the kitchen and beer cellar (Jefferson was a keen home-brewer) to the remains of Mulberry Row, Monticello's slave quarters. At the south end of Mulberry Row, a grove of ancient hardwood trees surrounds Jefferson's gravesite, marked by a simple stone obelisk; the epitaph, which lists his major accomplishments, does not mention his having been president.

△ Monticello

Charlottesville practicalities

Amtrak trains from DC stop at 810 W Main St, and Greyhound pulls in at 310 W Main St. Once you arrive, you can get to everything on foot, including the downtown visitor center, 100 5th St NE (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–3pm; ☎ 434/977-6100 or 1-877/386-1103, 🌐 www.charlottesvilletourism.org). Another visitor center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 434/977-1783), well-signposted on Hwy-20 just south of I-64, houses a superb free exhibit of four hundred items called “Thomas Jefferson at Monticello,” and is an excellent starting point for a trip there.

For its size, Charlottesville has a good range of accommodation. Most places are of the familiar chain variety, but for (slightly) more special digs, try the English Inn, 2000 Morton Drive (☎ 434/971-9900, 🌐 www.englishinncharlottesville.com; ④), a large, mock-Tudor motel with clean and functional rooms, some of which have fridges and microwaves. For a bit more style, good-value B&B rooms are available at the two beautifully restored houses of the 200 South Street Inn, 200 South St (☎ 434/979-0200, 🌐 www.southstreetinn.com; ⑦), some of whose units have fireplaces and whirlpool tubs; similar amenities are available at the handsome Inn at Court Square, 410 E Jefferson St (☎ 434/295-2800, 🌐 www.innatcourtsquare.com; ⑦), which has nine rooms as well as excellent Southern cuisine on offer. You can also arrange a stay in a B&B through Guesthouses (☎ 434/979-7264, 🌐 www.va-guesthouses.com).

The best eating and drinking can be found near the university and the downtown mall. In between, 🍷 Southern Culture, 633 W Main St (☎ 434/979-1990), is a tasty, down-home favorite, serving up the likes of jambalaya, shrimp, grits, and black bean cakes. Just north of the downtown mall, the upscale Tastings, 502 E Market St (☎ 434/293-3663), offers steak, fricassees, and crab casseroles, plus a fine selection of wine – including many from local vineyards. A sizable selection of beers (more than 130 in all) can be sampled along with solid pub grub a block further north at the English-styled Court Square Tavern, 500 Court Square (☎ 434/296-6111). The C&O Restaurant, 515 E Water St (☎ 434/971-7044), housed in an old railroad engineers' building, offers bistro-style food in its humming bar and more upscale French nouvelle cuisine in the upstairs dining room. Also worth a visit, Starr Hill, 709 W Main St (☎ 434/977-0017), offers an eclectic menu of food and kinetic live music, along with its own microbrews.

Appomattox Court House

Set amid the pleasant, rolling hills of central Virginia, some sixty miles south of Charlottesville on US-460 and Hwy-24, the village of APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE was where Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant met on April 9, 1865, for the former to sign surrender papers for his Army of Northern Virginia, effectively ending the Civil War after four bloody years. Grant's Union troops had cut off a nearby rail line upon which Lee's army depended for vital supplies, and the half-starved Confederates had no choice but to submit. Final papers were signed in the home of the McLean family, who, ironically, had moved here after the war's first major battle – Bull Run – was fought on their property in Manassas. Details of the surrender are given in Appomattox Court House National Historical Park (daily 8.30am–5pm; $4; 🌐 www.nps.gov/apco). The village has been handsomely restored, and the McLean home is now a museum.

Getting anywhere in the vicinity requires a car, and the nearest accommodation is available in the newer burg of Appomattox, a few miles west. Here, the cozy Longacre B&B, 1670 Church St (☎ 434/352-9251 or 1-800/758-7730, 🌐 www.longacreva.com; 📍), is nestled among century-old boxwoods and includes a lap pool; Spring Grove Farm, several miles northwest of town along Rte-613 (☎ 434/352-7429, 🌐 www.springgrovefarm.com; 📍), is set on a 200-acre, 1842 plantation where the eleven rooms and suites (some with fireplaces) have whirlpool tubs and tasteful early American decor.

Shenandoah National Park

The dark forests, deep rocky ravines, and pleasant waterfalls of SHENANDOAH NATIONAL PARK, far from being untouched wilderness, were created when hundreds of small family farms and homesteads were condemned by the state and federal governments during the Depression, and the land was left to revert to its natural state. It's no surprise that Shenandoah, meaning "river of high mountains," has one of the most scenic byways in the US, Skyline Drive, a thin, 105-mile ribbon of pavement curving along the crest of the Blue Ridge Mountains that starts just off I-66 near the town of Front Royal, 75 miles west of DC, and winds south through the park (with a 35mph speed limit), giving great views over the surrounding area.

Week-long admission to the park is $15 for cars and $8 for pedestrians, cyclists, and motorcyclists ($10 for cars and $5 for pedestrians during the winter). The crowds can be especially large in the fall, but at any time of year you can get the best of what the park has to offer by following one of the many hiking trails that split off from the ridge. One favorite leaves from the parking area of Big Meadows Lodge, in the southern half of the park, and winds along to tumbling Dark Hollow Falls; another trail, leaving Skyline Drive at mile marker 45, climbs up a treacherous incline to the top of Old Rag Mountain for panoramic views out over the whole of Virginia and the Allegheny Mountains in the west. More ambitious hikers, or those who want to spend the night out in the backcountry, head for the Appalachian Trail. Details on any of these hikes, and free overnight camping permits, can be picked up at the Dickey Ridge, at milepost 4.6, and Harry F. Byrd Sr, at milepost 51, visitor centers (daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 540/999-3500, 🌐 www.nps.gov/shen).

Park accommodation (☎ 540/743-5108 or 1-800/999-4714, 🌐 www.visitshenandoah.com) includes the 1894 Skyland Lodge, at milepost 41.7, with cabins (🏠) and hotel rooms (🏨), as well as a large restaurant with panoramic views; Big Meadows Lodge, at milepost 51.2, with similar facilities (🏠); and Lewis Mountain Cabins, at milepost 57.5, with cozy, rustic accommodation (🏠). There are also five campgrounds in the park, charging $14 to $19 per night; reserve online or by calling ☎ 1-800/365-CAMP.

The Shenandoah Valley

Many of the small, colorful towns of the SHENANDOAH VALLEY, down below Skyline Drive, were left in ruins after the Civil War, but have since been restored to their antebellum conditions, and numerous memorials, monuments, and cemeteries line the back roads, surrounded by horse farms and apple orchards. The region is marked as an official National Historic Area; for more details on following the military campaigns on foot or by car, see 🌐 www.shenandoahwar.org.

Besides its war history, the northern Shenandoah Valley also holds half a dozen of Virginia's many limestone caverns, which tend to be privately owned and cost around $15–20 to explore. One of the largest is Luray Caverns, twelve miles east of New Market off Hwy-211 (April to mid-June 9am–6pm; mid-June to Aug 9am–7pm; Sept–Oct 9am–6pm; Nov–Mar 9am–4pm; $19; 🌐 www.luraycaverns.com), featuring an underground “organ” with stalagmites as “pipes,” which you can see on the daily one-hour guided tours. Further south, off Hwy-250 northwest of the town of STAUNTON, the Museum of Frontier American Culture (daily 9am–5pm, winter 10am–4pm; $10; 🌐 www.frontiermuseum.org) showcases six different kinds of immigrant farms and the labors involved in tending to each; since the buildings were mostly imported (and rebuilt) from Europe, it's more of a historic theme-park than an authentic cultural experience, but still worth a look to see how back-breaking it must have once been to live the rural life.

Lexington

From the horse-drawn carriages moving along its quiet, brick-lined streets, to the fine rolling countryside all around, the small town of Lexington is an almost anachronistic place of languid country life and Civil War memories. One of its most engaging sites, the somber Lee Chapel (April–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 9am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; free; 🌐 chapelapps.wlu.edu), is on the imposing colonnaded campus of Washington and Lee University, just north of the town center. The Confederate general taught here after the war – when it was known as Washington University – and, along with his family, is interred in the chapel's crypt; his horse Traveler is buried just outside. East of the chapel, on the far end of the parade ground of the Virginia Military Institute, the George C. Marshall Museum (daily 9am–5pm; $5; ☎ 540/463-7103, 🌐 www.marshallfoundation.org) documents the life of World War II US general and later secretary of state George C. Marshall.

In the town center, another big-name warrior is commemorated at the Stonewall Jackson House, 8 E Washington St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $6; 🌐 www.stonewalljackson.org), where the Confederate general and VMI professor lived before he rode off to war (dying at the battle of Chancellorsville). His spartan 1801 brick townhouse is furnished as it was when he lived there. Jackson is buried, along with 144 of his fellow soldiers, in the Stonewall Jackson Memorial Cemetery off South Main Street (daily dawn–dusk; free). For a break from military history, take a trip fifteen miles north of town off Route 606 to Cyrus McCor- mick's Farm (daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎540/377-2255; free), where the famed inventor of the industrial reaper is honored in an antique setting that includes a gristmill, blacksmith's forge, smokehouse, and museum. Alternatively, twenty miles south of Lexington on US-11 is the spectacular Natural Bridge (daily 8am until dark; $12; 🌐www.naturalbridgeva.com), where a creek has slowly carved away the softer limestone to form a 215ft archway; George Washington allegedly carved his initials into the rock (though it takes a keen eye to see them), and Thomas Jefferson was so impressed that he bought the site to preserve it and owned it for fifty years.

Lexington is also a good place to visit for its dozens of fine old homes; pick up a walking-tour map at the visitor center at 106 E Washington St (daily June–Aug 8.30am–6pm; Sept–May 9am–5pm; ☎540/463-3777, 🌐www.lexingtonvirginia.com). Most local accommodation is of the cookie-cutter chain variety, so stick to B&Bs, as there are plenty of decent ones (if a bit small). Historic Country Inns operates some of the most appealing, spread over five stately old structures with 43 total units, some with fireplaces, Jacuzzis, and wet bars, for $65–175 per night (☎1-877/283-9680, 🌐www.lexingtonhistoricinns.com). Otherwise, the Magnolia House Inn, 501 S Main St (☎540/463-2567, 🌐www.magnoliahouseinn.com; 📍), has four comfortable units with tasteful furnishings in a pleasant garden setting; and, just a few miles north of town, the Hummingbird Inn, 30 Wood Lane (☎540/997-9065, 🌐www.hummingbirdinn.com; 📍), has similar facilities, but with the added appeal of a renovated c.1780 farmhouse with fine dining, a solarium, veranda, and wireless Internet access.

For food, the Southern Inn Restaurant, right in the center of town at 37 S Main St (☎540/463-3612) offers smart, mid-priced steak, seafood, and pasta, while the Blue Heron Café, 4 E Washington St (☎540/463-2800), one block from the visitor center, serves tasty vegetarian dishes for lunch during the week and dinner on weekends. If you want to go a bit more upscale, Café Michel, 640 N Lee Hwy (☎540/464-4119), is the place to try for its blend of chic French fare (quail in port wine) matched with regional seafood like crabcakes and lobster; for succulent burgers, seafood, and Mexican food at more affordable prices, the Bistro on Main, 8 Main St (☎540/464-4888), is a solid, savory choice.

Along the Blue Ridge Parkway

Once it wends its way out of Shenandoah National Park, Skyline Drive becomes the Blue Ridge Parkway, which travels southwest along the crest of the Appalachians at an average elevation of three thousand feet. It's a beautiful drive, though I-81, sweeping along the flank of the mountains, is a more efficient way of getting from Virginia to North Carolina and on to the Great Smoky Mountains (a route covered in detail on p.505). Call ☎828/271-4779 or visit 🌐www.nps.gov/blri for information on the half-dozen visitor centers along the Parkway. From June to November, the Rocky Knob Cabins (☎540/593-3503, 🌐www.blueridgeresort.com; $59), at milepost 174, offers a memorable stay in the idyllic Meadows of Dan, with units featuring kitchenettes and fireplaces. Alternatively, the handsome Peaks of Otter Lodge, twenty miles north of Roanoke, VA at milepost 86 (☎1-800/542-5927, 🌐www.peaksofotter.com; $92), is open year-round, with clean, simple rooms and a view overlooking a lake.

Of the nearby towns, ROANOKE, between I-81 and the Parkway, is the largest in western Virginia. Beyond its drab modern amenities, the town has a few attractions that make for a pleasant stopoff, particularly the historic farmers' market, dating to 1882, at Campbell Ave at Market St (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm; ☎540/342-2028), and, in the Center in the Square mall, the engaging

Historical Society of Western Virginia (Tues–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $3; 📍 www.history-museum.org), which documents settlement of the region and has a fascinating mishmash of historical odds and ends, from Victorian fashions and documents signed by Thomas Jefferson to war relics. There's also the Virginia Museum of Transportation, 303 Norfolk Ave (Mon–Fri 11am–4pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $7.40; 📍 www.vmt.org), home to the largest collection of diesel locomotives in the South, with antique buggies, buses, and fire trucks also on show. The visitor center, 101 Shenandoah Ave NE (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 540/345-8622 or 1-800/635-5535, 📍 www.visitroanokeva.com), has walking-tour maps of the town and information on dozens of historic homes, plantations, and other tourable sites in the vicinity. Finally, for sweeping views of the valley, make the fifteen-minute drive from the farmers' market up Mill Mountain to the Roanoke Star, an 89-foot neon-lit star built in 1949 (ask at the visitor center for directions), which gives the town its nickname of "Star City."

Unlike many towns in the region, Roanoke boasts one fine hotel, the Patrick Henry, 617 S Jefferson St (☎ 540/345-8811, 📍 www.patrickhenryroanoke.com; 🍷), whose wrought-iron and chandelier decor in the lobby is matched by sizable rooms with period furnishings and kitchenettes. For more upscale digs near the airport, the Wyndham Roanoke, 2801 Hershberger Rd (☎ 540/563-9300, 📍 www.wyndham.com; 🍷), is the height of chain luxury for the region. Check the visitor center for details on local B&Bs.

You'll find a number of appealing restaurants in Roanoke, including Awful Arthur's Seafood Co, 108 Campbell Ave (☎ 540/344-2997), a good lunch or dinner spot with gut-busting platters of shrimp, crab, and lobster; Stephen's, 2926 Franklin Road SW (☎ 540/344-7203), with more genteel and pricier (but still excellent) entrees of rockfish, salmon, and steak; and Tavern on the Market, 32 Market Square (☎ 540/343-2957), which serves up filling burgers, pasta, and chicken alongside a nice range of beers.

War buffs who've had enough Civil War history might want to call in to the town of BEDFORD, about twenty miles east of Roanoke, which lost 21 men (out of 35) at Omaha Beach during the Allied invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944, the highest per capita loss anywhere in the US. Thus, Bedford was chosen as the site of the National D-Day Memorial (daily 10am–5pm; $5; ☎ 540/586-DDAY, 📍 www.dday.org), which opened on the anniversary of the event in 2001. Situated on a landscaped hilltop, the monuments, statues, and structures depicting the beach landing culminate in the 44ft arch of Victory Plaza. It is signposted just off US-460, on the southwest side of town.

West Virginia

Generally poor and almost entirely rural, WEST VIRGINIA is known for its timber and coal mining industries, which thrive thanks to the state's rich natural resources. Still, West Virginia is, in some places at least, incredibly beautiful, and – completely mountainous – it boasts the longest white-water rivers and most extensive wilderness in the eastern US; the state's become a popular destination for hikers and outdoors enthusiasts, as the moonshiners of old have been replaced by ski instructors and mountain-bike guides.

German and Scots-Irish pioneers started to cross the mountains of western Virginia in major numbers during the eighteenth century, and farming small plots of land with their own labor, had little in common with the slave-holding tidewater planters of eastern Virginia. The western counties had long agitated against rule from the more populous east, and when the Civil War broke out, the area voted to set up a rival Virginia government – one loyal to the Union. Statehood was formalized by Congress in 1863, and then eight years later by the Supreme Court. Around 1900, when railroads first reached into the rugged interior, timber companies clear-cut great expanses of forests, setting up mill towns and dismantling them when they moved onto somewhere new. Later, coal-mining conglomerates perfected the “company town” approach, wherein workers were paid a little bit less each month than the amount they owed for their company-provided food and lodging – helping to cause great resentment and the rise of one of America’s most powerful unions, the United Mine Workers.

The state’s most popular destination, the restored 1850s town of Harpers Ferry, is barely in West Virginia at all, standing just across from the broad rivers that form its Maryland and Virginia borders. To the west, the Allegheny Mountains stretch for over 150 miles, their million-plus acres of hardwood forest rivaling New England’s for brilliant autumnal color. West Virginia’s oldest town, Lewisburg, sits just off I-64 at the mountains’ southern foot, while the capital, Charleston, lies in the comparatively flat Ohio River Valley of the west.

Getting around West Virginia

Since the state is wholly built around mountains and rivers, straight, flat roads are virtually nonexistent and getting around via any means other than driving a car can be a real challenge. Greyhound’s service is limited, mostly traveling the western side of the state along Hwy-77, while Amtrak’s Cardinal line crosses the southeast part from White Sulphur Springs through Charleston to Huntington (as part of a DC-to-Chicago route), and the Capitol Limited goes from DC to Harper’s Ferry and Martinsburg on to the Great Lakes. Otherwise, plan on driving narrow, serpentine roads endlessly up and down, and allow yourself lots of time.

Harpers Ferry

HARPERS FERRY, a ruggedly sited eighteenth-century town restored as a national historic park, clings to steep hillsides above the rocky confluence of the Potomac and Shenandoah rivers. After suffering the ravages of the Civil War and torrential floods, the town was all but abandoned, the empty shells of its homes and factories slowly becoming overgrown by the dense forest that covers the surrounding hills. Almost all of Harpers Ferry has since been reconstructed as an outdoor museum, combining historical importance and natural beauty. In the fall, when the leaves blaze with color, it’s hard to imagine a more picture-perfect setting.

Shuttle buses drop off conveniently at the end of gas-lit Shenandoah Street in the heart of the restored Lower Town, or Old Town. Nearby there’s an information desk, with maps and helpful park staffers. Across the street, the Master Armorer’s House was once occupied by the chief gunsmith for the armory; these days staffers will teach you all about gun-making and the type of local weapons used in the mid-nineteenth century. Adjacent buildings include a restored blacksmith’s shop, clothing and dry-goods stores, a tavern, and a boardinghouse.

John Brown’s fort – actually the firehouse, where he and his surviving raiders were captured – originally stood directly across from the tavern, but was rebuilt a block away, near the point where the rivers meet. There’s little inside, however, and if you want to get the full story of the raid you’d do better to spend half an

John Brown and Harpers Ferry

George Washington set up the country's first national munitions factory at Harpers Ferry to arm the young republic, and by the mid-1800s it was a thriving industrial complex, home to some five thousand workers and linked to the capital by the B&O Railroad and the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal. The 1859 raid on its huge arsenal by militant John Brown rocked the already fragmented nation – bitterly divided over slavery – and was the clearest foreshadowing of the Civil War, which broke out just eighteen months later. In the hope of fomenting a widespread slave revolt, Brown and 21 other abolitionists, including two of his sons and five black men, seized the munitions factory and its large store of weapons on the night of October 16. They held out for two days before US troops, under the command of Robert E. Lee, stormed the buildings, killing many of the raiders and capturing Brown. He was taken to nearby Charles Town, put on trial just nine days later, and convicted of treason; by the time he was hanged on December 2, he was far from alone in regarding himself as a martyr to the abolitionist cause.

hour in the John Brown Museum, opposite, where you can get the skinny on this still-controversial figure.

Other museums, housing exhibits on the Civil War and black history, line both sides of High Street as it climbs away from the river – it's no coincidence that, a century ago, W.E.B. DuBois chose the town as a place for the first American convention of the Niagara movement, which prefigured the NAACP; much of that story is detailed here. In the vicinity, a set of stone steps ascends through the residential area to the 1782 Harper House, the oldest house in town.

A footpath continues uphill, past overgrown churchyards hemmed in by dry-stone walls, to Jefferson Rock, a huge gray boulder affording a great view over the two rivers (Thomas Jefferson said the vista was worth a voyage across the Atlantic). For a longer hike, several trails lead onwards into the surrounding forest: the Appalachian Trail – linking Maine to Georgia – continues from Jefferson Rock across the Shenandoah River into the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia, while the Maryland Heights Trail makes a four-mile roundtrip around the headlands of the Potomac River. You can also float down the Shenandoah in a raft or inner-tube provided by one of the many outfitters along the rivers east and south of town.

Practicalities

Harpers Ferry makes a popular excursion from Washington DC and is served by several trains daily on the Maryland Rail Commuter network (☎ 1-800/325-7245, 🌐 www.mtmaryland.com) and by one daily Amtrak service, the Capitol Limited, en route to Chicago. Otherwise, you'll need to drive here. Parking is virtually banned in the Old Town area, though you can get here via shuttle buses that run from the large visitor center on US-340 (site and center daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 304/535-6298, 🌐 www.nps.gov/hafe), where you pay the $4-per-person or $6-per-car entry fee.

If you want to spend the night, the century-old Hilltop House, 400 E Ridge St (☎ 304/535-2132 or 1-800/338-8319, 🌐 www.hilltophousehotel.com; 📍), may be showing its age, but still has reasonable prices and good views, while appealing B&Bs are sprinkled throughout the area, among them Harpers Ferry Guest House, 800 Washington St (☎ 304/535-6955, 🌐 www.harpersferryguesthouse.com; 📍); and the Angler's Inn, 867 W Washington St (☎ 340/535-1239, 🌐 www.theanglersinn.com; 📍, extra $40 on weekends), which provides the requisite B&B amenities, plus the opportunity to go on a full-day fishing expedition on local rivers

(one-night packages $365–465). The Harpers Ferry Hostel, seven miles east at 19123 Sandy Hook Rd in Knoxville, MD (☎301/834-7652, 🌐www.harpersferryhostel.org; April to mid-Nov only), has dorm beds from $20, private rooms for $50, and its own campground. The park's visitor center has further details on area camping, as does the Jefferson County tourist bureau, 37 Washington Court (☎304/535-2627 or 1-800/848-TOUR, 🌐www.hello-wv.com).

Around Harpers Ferry

CHARLES TOWN, four miles south of Harpers Ferry on US-340, is where John Brown was tried and hanged; the Jefferson County Museum at Washington and Samuel streets (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm; free; ☎304/725-8628) tells the story of his trial, which took place at the still functional Jefferson County Courthouse, 100 E Washington St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm), as well as his conviction and execution. SHEPHERDSTOWN, a cozy village along the Potomac ten miles to the north, is prettier and better for wandering, with quaint old shops and cafés looking across the river to Maryland's infamous Antietam Battlefield. Sited in an old hotel with plenty of Victorian furnishings and antiques, the Historic Shepherdstown Museum, 129 E German St (April–Oct 11am–5pm, Sun 1–4pm; donation; 🌐www.historicshepherdstown.com) displays war relics and a replica of a steamboat – which was demonstrated in town in 1787.

Further afield, the old spa town of BERKELEY SPRINGS (originally known as Bath, like its sister city in England) is preserved as a state historic park thirty miles west of Harpers Ferry on Hwy-9, seven miles south of I-70. Berkeley Springs was a favorite summer retreat of the Colonial elite – George Washington was a regular – and assorted massage and steam-bath treatments are still available at its many health spas. You can take a soak in the old Roman Bath House, 2 S Washington St (daily 10am–6pm; $20 per 30min soak or $45 with massage; reservations recommended at ☎304/258-2711; 🌐www.berkeleyspringssp.com), in active use since 1815; the spring's waters are 74°F year-round but heated to 102°F for bathers. The town's leafy and green central square has footpaths fanning out in all directions, one climbing the hill up to the crenellated, medieval-looking Berkeley Castle, a private estate built in 1885. Among the B&Bs here are the Highlawn Inn, 171 Market St (☎304/258-5700 or 1-888/290-4163, 🌐www.highlawninn.com; 🍷), whose rooms have claw-foot tubs and Victorian decor, and the Manor Inn, 234 Fairfax St (☎304/258-1552, 🌐www.bathmanorinn.com; 🍷), where the simple, pleasant rooms are some of the more affordable in the area. For smart, modern accommodations, the Inn and Spa at Berkeley Springs, 1 Market St (☎304/258-2210, 🌐www.theinnandspa.com; 🍷), is a good choice, too, with rooms in a classic 1930s neo-Georgian building.

The Allegheny Mountains

The Allegheny Mountains, West Virginia's segment of the Appalachian chain, are somewhat obscure to many East Coast travelers. The entire 140-mile crest is protected as part of the Monongahela National Forest, within which numerous state parks contain the most spectacular sights. There are no cities and few towns, public transportation is nonexistent, and not much goes on after dark, but if you like to backpack, hike, cycle, climb, or canoe, the Alleghenies are well worth a visit. For maps and more detailed information, contact the state tourist office or the Monongahela National Forest Supervisor, 200 Sycamore St, Elkins, WV 26241 (Mon–Fri 8am–4.45pm; ☎304/636-1800, 🌐www.fs.fed.us/r9/mnf).

The Northern Monongahela

Some of the most beautiful stretches of the Monongahela National Forest are in the northern part of the state, where the thundering torrents of the Blackwater Falls pour over a 60ft limestone cliff before crashing down through a steeply walled canyon, its water amber-colored from the presence of darkish tannins. South from here spreads the dense maple, oak, walnut, and birch forest of broad Canaan Valley, while to the east rise the highlands of the Dolly Sods Wilderness, vividly marked with rocky topography and murky bogs, with the whole area crisscrossed by hiking, cycling, and skiing trails.

Rising up at the south end of the Canaan Valley, the state's highest point, 4861ft Spruce Knob, stands out over the headwaters of the Potomac River – you can actually drive all the way to the summit. Even more impressive views can be had from the top of Seneca Rocks, some twenty miles to the northeast, whose 1000ft limestone cliffs present what is widely considered the most challenging rock-climb on the East Coast. If you want to take the easy way up, a good trail leads in around the back of the North Peak, and takes well under an hour to the top. Get more information at the Seneca Rocks Discovery Center (April–Oct daily 9am–4.30pm, Nov & March Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; free), near the junction of highways 33 & 55. Yokum's (☎ 304/567-2351 or 1-800/772-8342, 🌐 www.yokum.com), close to the base of the rocks, has a cheap motel (📍), self-service cabins (4), and a pretty riverside campground (from $5), plus a country store and restaurant that serves tasty, good-value meals. Just northwest, not to be missed is Smoke Hole Canyon, whose river has cut a nearly half-mile-deep chasm into the sheer rock walls. When the mist and fog rise out of the deeply carved canyon, it's a truly spellbinding sight. For the hardy, the North Fork Mountain Trail follows the canyon for 24 miles, and the Big Bend Campground is available seasonally (April–Oct; $16; ☎ 304/257-4488 or ☎ 1-877/444-6677).

The tiny logging town of DAVIS, just east of US-219 at the north end of the Canaan Valley, makes a convenient base: the Bright Morning Inn on William Avenue (☎ 304/259-5119, 🌐 www.brightmoringinn.com; 📍) is an 1896 boarding house with nice rooms, while the Meyer House, Third St at Thomas Ave (☎ 304/259-5451, 🌐 www.meyerhousebandb.com; 📍), built in 1885, has three rooms with period decor and DVD players. For food, Muttley's, on William Ave (☎ 304/259-4858), serves great-value steaks, plus duck, pork, and seafood. Among local outdoor guides and outfitters, Blackwater Outdoor Adventures, nearly twenty miles away on Rte-72 at St George (☎ 304/478-3775, 🌐 www.blackwateroutdoors.com), runs rafting, kayaking, and canoeing trips and rents out bikes. Timberline Resort (☎ 304/866-4801 or 1-800/SNOWING, 🌐 www.timberlinerestort.com) operates one of the state's largest downhill ski areas several miles southeast of town. Alternatively, off Route 32 N, the Canaan Valley Resort (☎ 1-800/622-4121, 🌐 www.canaanresort.com) is a year-round affair with winter skiing, summer activities, and hotel rooms (📍), campsites ($25), and cabins and cottages (📍). For more information on the region, contact the visitor center on Main Street (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 304/259-5315 or 1-800/782-2775, 🌐 www.canaanvalley.org).

Elkins and the Augusta Festival

Just west of the Canaan Valley, ELKINS is the biggest town in northern West Virginia and a fine spot to experience the vibrant folk traditions of the Allegheny mountains. The Augusta Heritage Center, located on the campus of Davis and Elkins College at 100 Campus Drive (☎ 304/637-1209, 🌐 www.augustaheritage.com), holds concerts and events throughout the summer, including dulcimer-playing in April and fiddle music in October, but its major annual showcase is mid-August's Augusta Festival, offering workshops in such diverse pursuits as banjoplaying, blacksmithing, quilt-making, and folk dancing; after dark, performers get together for a nightly hoedown, featuring storytellers and bluegrass bands.

Elkins's visitor center, 1035 N Randolph Ave (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.00pm; ☎ 304/636-2717 or 1-800/422-3304, 🌐 www.randolphcountywv.com), can provide full details on local accommodation, including the Cheat River Lodge, six miles from Elkins on Route 33 (☎ 304/636-2301, 🌐 www.cheatriverlodge.com), which has a lovely riverside setting as well as nice suites with plenty of amenities in the main lodge (4) and full modern cabins (7) with stoves, kitchens, and hot tubs. At Davis and Elkins College, the Graceland Inn (☎ 1-800/624-3157, 🌐 www.gracelandinn.com; 5) is an eleven-unit converted 1893 mansion with stylish Victorian rooms. When you want to eat, the Kissel Stop Café, 21 Third St, one block from the visitor center (☎ 304/636-8810), serves tasty sandwiches and coffee amid railroad-car decor.

The Southern Monongahela

The southern half of the Monongahela National Forest is contained within hilly Pocahontas County, known as “the birthplace of rivers” because it holds the headwaters of several great West Virginia rivers. Like most of the Alleghenies, it’s a mountainous, fairly inaccessible region – two roads, US-219 and Hwy-92, wind north-to-south, with a handful of minor roads twisting between them – offering outstanding outdoor recreation as well as endless scenic vistas. The county visitor center in Marlinton (☎ 304/799-4636 or 1-800/336-7009; 🌐 www.pocahontascountywv.com) provides decent maps of the area.

One signature sight is the state-run Cass Scenic Railroad, a restored, steam-powered logging railroad built in 1902. The chugging Shay locomotive carries visitors on a five-hour trip up to the top of 4842ft Bald Knob (schedule varies; $17–22; ☎ 304/456-4300 or 1-800/CALL-WVA, 🌐 www.cassrailroad.com), starting at the old lumber-mill company town of CASS, five miles west of Hwy-28 near the town of Greenbank, now preserved in its entirety as a historic park. You can even stay the night in one of thirteen rail-employees’ two-story cottages built in 1902; the cottages have been converted into self-service accommodation and sleep four to ten people (☎ 1-800/CALL-WVA; 4–5). At the same phone number, you can also rent a historic 1920s caboose, with clean and basic furnishings, for a day-trip up the mountain ($99–149) or an overnight stay (7).

A rigorous five-mile walk downhill from Cass leads along the tracks to the start of the bicycle-friendly Greenbrier River Trail (🌐 www.greenbrierrivertrail.com), which follows the river and the railroad for 75 miles, coming out near Lewisburg. You can also rent a mountain bike from Elk River Touring Center (☎ 304/572-3771 or 1-866/572-3771, 🌐 www.ertc.com), fifteen miles north of Marlinton, the county seat, off US-219 in the hamlet of Slatyfork. The company runs a shuttle service to the trailheads and organizes fly-fishing and cycling trips, and ski tours in winter, and has a good-value restaurant serving trout, seafood and pasta. They also operate twelve basic units in an inn and farmhouse (4) and four cabins at various locations with more amenities (6–8); weekends require a two-night stay.

Five miles west of the junction with the exquisite Highland Scenic Highway (Rte-150), another spot well worth visiting is Cranberry Glades Botanical Area, where a half-mile boardwalk is set out around a patch of peat bog swamp – one of four such bogs occupying 750 acres. Further information can be obtained from the Cranberry Mountain Nature Center (daily May–Oct 9am–4.30pm; ☎ 304/653-4826) at the junction of highways 39 and 55. Further along, the Highland Scenic Highway merits a leisurely trip to explore its 43 miles of eye-catching views, several fine campgrounds, and 150 miles of hiking trails that branch off from it. Contact the Marlinton Ranger District (☎ 304/799-4334) for more information.

Lewisburg and the Greenbrier Resort

Just off I-64, south of the Monongahela National Forest, LEWISBURG was originally a frontier outpost during the Indian Wars of the 1770s, and was greatly prized during the Civil War for its location at the head of the Greenbrier Valley; today it plays host to August's West Virginia State Fair, at 107 W Fair St (☎ 304/645-1090, 🌐 www.wvstatefair.com).

Washington Street is lined by brick-faced early nineteenth-century houses, and makes for pleasant wandering; the area is part of the Lewisburg Historic District, a four-block downtown zone. The visitor center, 111 N Jefferson St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm; ☎ 1-800/833-2068, 🌐 www.greenbrierwv.com), hands out walking-tour maps and can suggest driving tours around Greenbrier Valley. It can also put you in touch with various cozy hotels, such as the General Lewis Inn, 301 E Washington St (☎ 304/645-2600 or 1-800/628-4454, 🌐 www.generallewisinn.com; 5), which has two-dozen Victorian rooms and a fine, moderately priced restaurant.

Just east of Lewisburg, WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS is a historic resort town that's mainly known for its 🏡 Greenbrier hotel and resort, 300 W Main St (☎ 304/536-1110 or 1-800/624-6070, 🌐 www.greenbrier.com; 6), the grandest hotel in the state with its pillared entrance hall, 6500 lush acres, golf courses, and fine restaurants (reserve ahead). Two dozen US presidents have stayed here, perhaps thanks in part to the hotel's deep-underground Cold War-era bunker, which came to public attention in 1992 and now, having been decommissioned, is open for tours (Sun & Wed 1pm; $30; ☎ 304/536-7810).

The New River Gorge

One of West Virginia's most spectacular river canyons, the New River Gorge, lies just thirty miles west of Lewisburg along I-64. Stretching for over fifty miles, and protected as a national park, the thousand-foot chasm was carved through the limestone mountains by the New River – despite its name, one of the oldest rivers in North America. Apart from one daily Amtrak train, there's no easy access to most of the gorge; to see it, you have to get out on the water, with the help of any of over fifty professional rafting companies. For details on the cycling, climbing, hiking, and rafting options available – including how to risk your neck on the Class V rapids of the Gauley River National Recreation Area just north – visit the gorge's southern Sandstone Visitor Center, located where Hwy-64 crosses the river (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 304/466-0417, 🌐 www.nps.gov/neri), or the Canyon Rim visitor center, seven miles north of Oak Hill on Hwy-19 (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 304/574-2115), which sits alongside the New River Gorge Bridge, dramatically rising nine hundred feet above the river.

HINTON, on the southern end of the gorge (and another Amtrak stop), is an almost perfectly preserved company town, beautifully sited, with brick-lined streets angling up from the water, lined by dozens of grand civic buildings as well as row after row of slowly decaying workers' houses. A walking-tour map is available from the visitor center, 206 Temple St (Mon–Fri 10am–4pm; ☎ 304/466-5420), which is also the site of a railroad museum. There are the usual budget motels, along with the New River Falls Lodge, 110 Cliff Island Drive (☎ 304/466-5710, 🌐 www.newriverfallsldodge.com), offering six basic B&B rooms (4) and two-bedroom cottages with kitchens and fireplaces (7). River-rafting outfits include New River Whitewater Tours (☎ 304/465-2025 or 1-800/292-0880, 🌐 www.newriverscenic.com) and Cantrell Ultimate Rafting (☎ 304/466-0595 or 1-800/470-RAFT, 🌐 www.ultimaterafting.com), both charging $50–80 per person, depending on the type of raft and the destination. All of these facilities are to be found on Hwy-20, just south of town.

Charleston

CHARLESTON, West Virginia's state capital and largest city, on the Kanawha River, holds few major attractions, but it does have a nice selection of Victorian-era buildings in various states of preservation. You can find out more and get a walking tour of the historic district by dropping in on the visitor center, 200 Civic Center Drive (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 304/344-5075, 🌐 www.charlestonwv.com). The riverfront state capitol, 1900 Kanawha Blvd (Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun noon–7pm; tours Mon–Fri 9am–3.30pm; ☎ 304/558-4839), designed by Lincoln Memorial and US Supreme Court architect Cass Gilbert, is a stately Renaissance Revival structure from 1932 that has a impressively large, gold-leafed dome. The West Virginia Cultural Center (Mon–Thurs 9am–8pm, Fri & Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; ☎ 304/558-0220, 🌐 www.wvculture.org; free), in the same compound, acts as the state museum and has extensive displays on coal mining, geology, forestry, war, and state history.

Charleston has plenty of generic chain motels and hotels, but if you want distinctive accommodation, try the Brass Pineapple, 1611 Virginia St E (☎ 304/344-0748, 🌐 brasspineapple.com; 🍷), a Victorian-styled B&B with plenty of antique, flowery decor; more unexpected is Tikvah's Kosher Bed-and-Breakfast, 1564 Virginia St E (☎ 304/345-8511, 🌐 www.tikvahskosherbandb.com; 🍷), with comfortable rooms and food that's certified kosher by an area rabbi. For dining choices, 🍴 the Southern Kitchen, 5240 MacCorkle Ave SE (☎ 304/925-3154), dishes up regional favorites like ham-and-gravy and fried chicken at affordable prices, while the Art Deco Blossom Dairy and Soda Fountain Cafe, 904 Quarrier St (☎ 304/305-2233), has the usual tasty sandwiches, burgers, and sundaes for lunch but converts into a chic, upscale bistro at night, serving fine steak, seafood, and regional fare.

Maryland

Founded as the sole Catholic colony in strongly Protestant America, and, in the nineteenth century, isolated as the northernmost slave state, MARYLAND has always been somewhat unusual. Within its small, irregularly shaped area, its attractions range from the frantic boardwalk beaches of Ocean City to the sleepy fishing villages of the Chesapeake Bay to the bustling urban center of Baltimore. The Chesapeake Bay, slowly recovering from near annihilation due to pollution and overfishing, may have lost its once-abundant oyster stocks, but its legendary blue crabs and sweet rockfish are still available, supped on by the weekend boaters who cruise from one to another of the Bay's Colonial-era towns.

Maryland boasts a number of firsts for the United States, including the first Catholic cathedral, gas-lit street, and telegraph line (between Baltimore and Washington DC), while Kent Island on Maryland's Eastern Shore was the third permanent English settlement (behind Jamestown and Plymouth Rock), founded in 1631. During the War of 1812, the British forces, attempting a last-ditch effort to wrest back the colonies, burned down much of Washington DC, then moved on to the shipyards of Baltimore. In a valiant battle, they were staved off at Fort McHenry; the fort's resistance inspired an onlooker, Francis Scott Key, to write the words to the United States' national anthem, The Star-Spangled Banner.

Maryland's largest city is the busy port of Baltimore, a quirky metropolis with a revitalized urban waterfront, thriving cultural scene, and eclectic neighborhoods. Western Maryland stretches over a hundred miles to the Appalachian foothills, its rolling farmlands notable chiefly for the Civil War killing grounds at Antietam. Just twenty miles south of Baltimore, along the Chesapeake Bay, picturesque Annapolis has served as Maryland's capital since 1694. Some of the state's most worthwhile destinations, from the pretty fishing and yachting town of St Michaels to the untouched wilderness of Assateague Island, are across the Chesapeake Bay on the Eastern Shore, connected to the rest of the state by the US-50 bridge but otherwise still a world apart – except for the sprawling resort of Ocean City.

Getting around Maryland

The best ways to get around Maryland are by car and, if you can rent one, boat, sailing around the gorgeous Chesapeake Bay. Cycling is also a good option, especially on the Eastern Shore, where the roads are wide-shouldered and little traveled, and wind through cornfields from one hamlet to another – the state tourist office puts out an excellent free map of the safest and most scenic routes. Baltimore is on the main Amtrak route between New York, Philadelphia, and Washington DC, and is linked by regular buses with Annapolis and elsewhere.

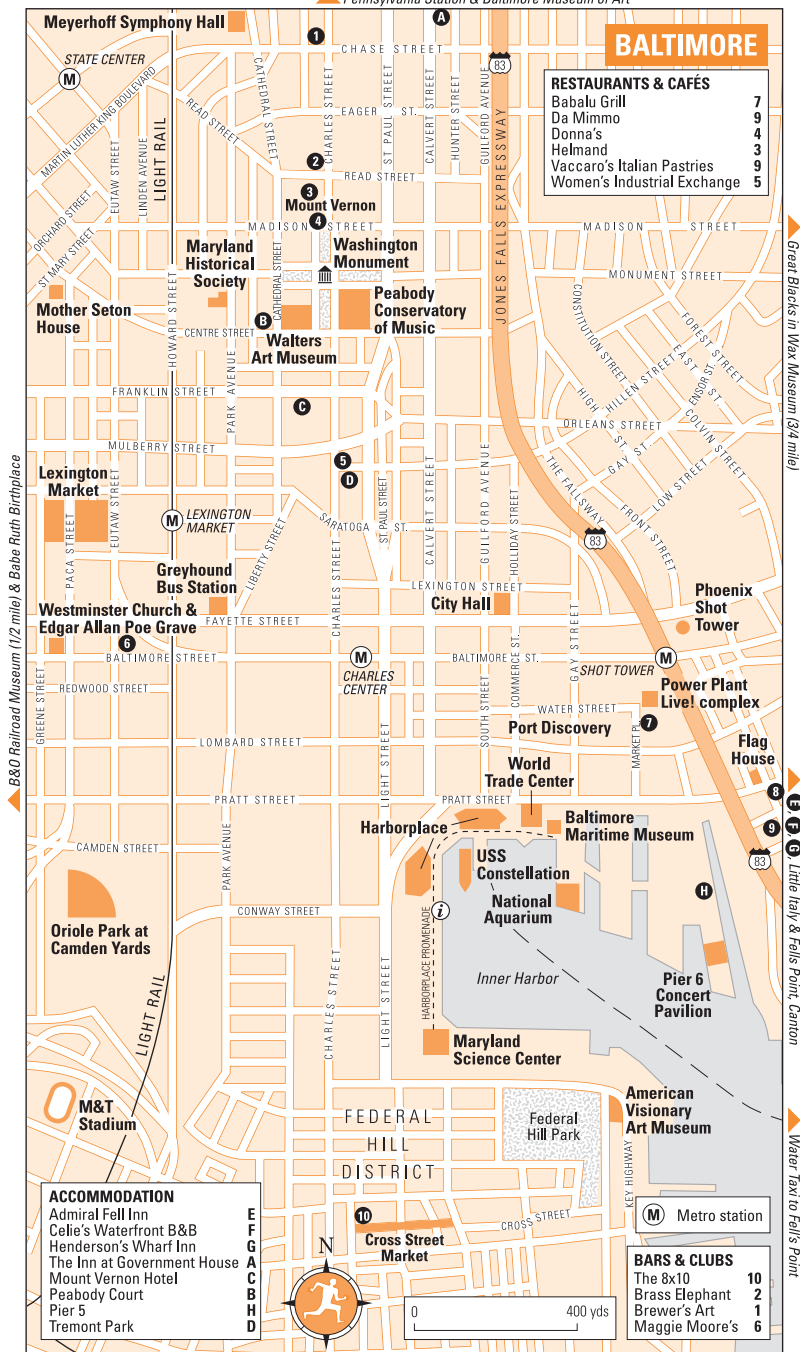

Baltimore

BALTIMORE had a reputation as a city in decline, and while the glory days of heavy industry along the port are now distant, it is among the more enjoyable stops on the East Coast, and its closely knit neighborhoods and historic quarters provide an engaging backdrop to many diverse attractions, especially those along its celebrated waterfront. The city also boasts top-rated museums, which cover everything from fine arts to black history to urban archeology. It's also been home to such diverse figures as writers Edgar Allan Poe and Anne Tyler, and civil rights icons Frederick Douglass and Thurgood Marshall.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Baltimore-Washington International Airport (BWI), ten miles south of the city center and twenty-five miles northeast of DC, is one of the busier East Coast hubs. The cheapest and best way to get into the city is on the MTA light rail system, which takes around twenty-five minutes (☎410/539-5000 or 1-800/RIDE-MTA, 🌐www.mtmaryland.com). Shuttle vans into Baltimore, including Airport Shuttle ($25, $10 per additional person; ☎410/821-5387 or 1-877/VANFORU, 🌐www.baltimoreairportshuttle.com), take around twenty minutes to reach downtown. Taxis cost around $35. MARC commuter trains ($4 one way; ☎410/539-5000 or 1-800/325-RAIL), connect the airport to the restored Pennsylvania Station (also known as Penn Station), half a mile north of downtown at 1525 N Charles St, which is also the arrival point of Amtrak trains (☎1-800/USA-RAIL) from all destinations. Greyhound buses stop downtown at 2110 Haines Street.

Pick up free maps and guides at the Baltimore Area Convention and Visitors Association, 401 Light Street, in front of the Maryland Science Center (daily 9am-6pm; ☎410/837-7024 or 1-877/BALTIMORE, 🌐www.baltimore.org), or from its booths at the airport and train station.

City transportation

Because the city is compact – most sights are within a mile or two of the center – you can cover a lot of territory on foot. The MTA bus, subway, and light-rail system ($1.60, day-pass $3.50; ☎ 410/539-5000, 🌐 www.mtmaryland.com) covers many locations, including the airport (subway and buses Mon–Fri 5am–midnight, Sat & Sun 6am–midnight; light rail Mon–Sat 6am–11pm, Sun 11am–7pm), though the subway and light rail are limited to one main route each. On buses, have exact change ready. For taxis, contact Yellow Cab (☎ 410/685-1212) or Royal Cab (☎ 410/327-0330). Water taxis link the Inner Harbor and sixteen area attractions, including the National Aquarium, Fell's Point, and Fort McHenry (schedule varies; all-day pass $8; ☎ 410/563-3901 or 1-800/658-8947, 🌐 www.thewatertaxi.com), while Harbor Cruises ($30–49; ☎ 410/727-3113, 🌐 www.harborcruises.com) has elaborate dinner outings and special-event cruises.

Accommodation

Baltimore has the usual chain hotels available downtown, along with a few local institutions, while the B&Bs clustered around the historic waterfront area of Fell's Point make for a pleasant alternative. The Convention and Visitors office (☎ 410/837-7024 or 1-877/BALTIMORE, 🌐 www.baltimore.org) can help with reservations.

Admiral Fell Inn 888 S Broadway ☎ 410/522-7377 or 1-800/292-4667, 🌐 www.harbormagic.com. Chic historic hotel spread over seven buildings (some dating to the 1770s) in the heart of Fell's Point. Rooms have vaulted ceilings and fireplaces; some have Jacuzzis and balconies as well. Ⓔ

Celie's Waterfront Inn 1714 Thames St ☎ 410/522-2323 or 1-800/432-0184, 🌐 www.Baltimore-Bed-Breakfast.com. Nine exquisite rooms and suites, some with private balconies. A rooftop deck has superb views of Fell's Point harbor. Ⓙ

Henderson's Wharf Inn 1000 Fell St ☎ 410/522-7087, 🌐 www.hendersonswharf.com. Prominent waterside spot with modern rooms that include boutique furnishings, refrigerators, and Internet access. Continental breakfast and on-site gym as well. Ⓔ

The Inn at Government House 1125 N Calvert St ☎ 410/539-0566, 🌐 www.baltimorecity.gov.

Elaborate, restored 1889 Victorian mansion with antique-filled rooms, grand music and dining rooms, detailed woodwork, and breakfast and parking included. Ⓔ

Mount Vernon 24 W Franklin St ☎ 410/727-2000 or 1-800/245-5256, 🌐 www.bichotels.com. Large, stately hotel with comfortable rooms and a central location. Reserve ahead in summer. Ⓙ

Peabody Court 612 Cathedral St ☎ 410/727-7101, 🌐 www.peabodycourthotel.com. Luxury hotel in a handsome, converted 1928 apartment building set in a historic neighborhood. Has marble bathrooms and upscale decor, plus Internet access. Pet-friendly. Ⓔ

Pier 5 711 Eastern Ave ☎ 410/539-2000, 🌐 www.harbormagic.com. Centrally located, upscale boutique hotel with plenty of style, offering smart, modern rooms with CD players and suites with fridges, microwaves and wet bars. Ⓔ

Downtown Baltimore

Named after Maryland's founder, Lord Baltimore, the city of Baltimore was christened in 1729, a half-century after its namesake's death, and was the second-largest city in America up until 1870. Like San Francisco, Baltimore burned to the ground just after the start of the twentieth century, leaving only its domed 1867 City Hall, 100 N Holliday St, standing. Until the last decade, much of the downtown looked burned over in a different way, blighted by poverty and decay. Fortunately, many parts of town have undergone a dramatic face-lift, especially in the Inner Harbor section. Enlivened by new restaurants and bars, this area now makes for a pleasant stroll along the brick-lined waterfront and features nautical and science-oriented attractions. It's also within walking distance of the two sports stadiums.

The main cluster of businesses, restaurants, and cafés is found west of the central Charles Street, in Baltimore's original shopping district, now coming back after its long decline. One landmark here, dating from 1782, is a must-see: the oldest and loudest of the city's covered markets, Lexington Market (Mon–Sat 8.30am–6pm; www.lexingtonmarket.com), has more than a hundred food stalls, including Faidley's (☎ 410/752-6461), the best and cheapest of many outlets serving oysters, clams, crabs, and other catches from the Chesapeake Bay. Safe during the day, the area can become threatening after dark, when it is best avoided.

Just south of the market, at 519 W Fayette St, Westminster Church was built in 1852 atop the main Baltimore cemetery, and many ornate tombs are now located in dark catacombs below. Among the prominent figures entombed is Edgar Allan Poe, who lived in town for three years in the 1830s, marrying his 13-year-old cousin and starting a career in journalism before moving on to Richmond, Virginia. In 1849, while passing through Baltimore, Poe was found incoherent near a polling place and died soon after. In 1875 his remains were moved from a pauper's grave and entombed within the stone memorial that stands along Green Street on the north side of the church. Every January 19, a mysterious figure clad in black appears at Poe's grave to offer a toast of cognac and three red roses in honor of his birthday.

A somewhat more fun place to visit is the brick rowhouse where baseball great Babe Ruth was born in 1895, at 216 Emory St (daily: April–Oct 10am–6pm; Nov–March 10am–5pm; $10; www.BabeRuthMuseum.com). Chock-full of photographs, film clips, and memorabilia, it traces the life and achievements of the legendary home-run hitter. Appropriately enough, Oriole Park at Camden Yards, the baseball stadium of the Baltimore Orioles (tickets $8–45; ☎ 1-888/848-BIRD), is just two blocks west, on the site of an old railroad terminal; guided tours are available (May–Dec Mon–Sat 11am–2pm on the hour, Sun 12:30pm, 1pm, 2pm & 3pm; $7; ☎ 410/547-6234, www.TheOrioles.com). The centenary of the Babe's birth was marked by the unveiling of a bronze statue in 1995 (see if you can spot the mistake).

Just next door, looking very much like an alien spaceship that just landed, is the 68,400-seat M&T Bank Stadium – built in 1998 and home to the Baltimore Ravens, who were named after Edgar Allan Poe's most (in)famous character and won an unexpected Super Bowl victory in 2001. Tickets are hard to come by ($40–315; ☎ 410/547-SEAT), but tours are offered daily ($5; ☎ 410/261-RAVE, www.baltimore Ravens.com).

A half-mile west of Oriole Park, the B&O Railroad Museum, housed in an 1830 passenger station and depot at 901 W Pratt St (Mon–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–4pm; $14; www.borail.org), commemorates the first large-scale railroad in the US, which was founded in 1827. Here you can see displays of dozens of ornate carriages, including some wacky parasol-covered early models, and row upon row of locomotives, from the first steam engines to sleek 1940s diesels, all housed in stylish historic-landmark depots, roundhouses, and support buildings that testify to the glory days of rail transport.

The Inner Harbor

The rotting wharves and derelict warehouses that stood in the Inner Harbor through the 1970s are today replaced by the sparkling steel-and-glass Harborplace shopping mall (Mon–Sat 10am–9pm, Sun 11am–7pm; www.harborplace.com), which swarms day and night with tourists and locals. Sweeping views of the entire city and beyond can be admired from the 27th-story Top of the World observation deck of Baltimore's own World Trade Center on the north pier (Oct–April Wed–Sun 10am–6pm; May–Sept 10am–9pm; $5; ☎ 410/837-VIEW). Nothing in the Inner Harbor dates from before its rebuilding, but to lend an air of authenticity, the graceful USS Constellation (April–Oct 10am–5.30pm, Nov–Mar 10am–4.30pm; $8.75, 🌐 www.constellation.org), has been placed here, the only Civil War vessel still afloat and the last all-sail warship built by the US Navy. Other historic ships and a squat 1856 lighthouse that’s been moved here make up the Baltimore Maritime Museum (daily 10am–5pm; $6; 🌐 www.baltomaritimemuseum.org) on the next pier.

Far and away the biggest tourist attraction in Baltimore is the National Aquarium, 501 E Pratt St (spring & fall Sat–Thurs 9am–5pm, Fri 9am–8pm, winter opens an hour later, summer daily 9am–8pm; open for 90min after last admission; $22, $25 with dolphin show; 🌐 www.aqua.org), an essential sight for its jellyfish, sharks, rays, sea turtles, and other oceanic creatures. Also popular is its recently opened Dolphin Amphitheater, where you can see the playful cetaceans cavorting and seemingly trying to please the crowd.

If this isn’t enough to satisfy the tykes, stop at the gleaming Port Discovery, just north of the harbor at 35 Market Place (summer Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, rest of year Tues–Fri 9.30am–4.30pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $10.75, 🌐 www.portdiscovery.org). This children’s museum is packed to the ceiling with hands-on exhibits, learning games, interactive toys, a media studio where kids put on their own productions, and many other amusements.

Federal Hill and around

Lined with interesting shops, restaurants, and galleries, the Federal Hill district, a short walk south of the Inner Harbor, is a great place to escape from the crowds. Stop by the visitor center on Main Street (☎ 410/727-4500, 🌐 www.historicfederalhill.com) for walking-tour maps and information. Its main thoroughfare, Light Street, leads to the indoor Cross Street Market, which opened in 1875 and has two blocks of open-air markets boasting some excellent delis, seafood bars, and fruit stalls. Federal Hill Park in the northeast is a quiet public space with fine views over the harbor and the downtown cityscape.

In the northern part of the area, by the harbor at 601 Light St, the sparkling glass, steel, and concrete Maryland Science Center (Tues–Thurs 10am–5pm, Fri 10am–8pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 11am–5pm; $14.50, IMAX show $8, combination ticket $18.50; 🌐 www.mdsci.org) is mainly aimed at kids, with interactive displays on themes ranging from dinosaurs to space travel; an IMAX theater and planetarium provide added interest for youngsters.

Better is one of the city’s most fascinating and unexpected institutions, the American Visionary Art Museum, east of Federal Hill Park at 800 Key Hwy (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; $12; 🌐 www.avam.org), devoted to the works of untrained or amateur artists. Some of the more notable items include Tom Duncan’s obsessively intricate sculpture of the boardwalk of Coney Island, eerie Bosch-like paintings of alien abductions, and all kinds of incarnations of Jesus and the Virgin Mary, crafted in wood, sequins, iron, and many other media.

Mount Vernon

Baltimore’s most elegant quarter is just north of downtown on the shallow rise known as Mount Vernon, where several fine museums sit amid rows of eighteenth-century brick townhouses. This district, which is quite good for strolling, takes its name from the home of George Washington, whose likeness tops the 178ft marble column of the central Washington Monument (Wed–Sun 10am–5pm; free). There’s a ground-floor museum covering Washington’s life, and you can climb the building’s 228 steps for a great view over the city.

Across the street, a solemn stone facade of the Peabody Conservatory hides one of the city's best interior spaces: the beautiful, skylit atrium of the Peabody Library, 17 E Mount Vernon Place (Tues–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–1pm; ☎ 410/659-8179; free), an 1878 Victorian delight rich with cast-iron balconies, soaring columns, and glass skylights, renovated in 2004. The ground floor features displays of various history books, among them a wonderful illustrated 1555 edition of Boccaccio's Decameron, and a 1493 printing of the Nuremberg Chronicles.

Two blocks west, the Maryland Historical Society, 201 W Monument St (Wed–Sun 10am–5pm $8; ☎ www.mdhs.org), traces the path of local history through key documents and portraits of the old Maryland elite, while its items of interest include models of Chesapeake Bay boats, a range of decorative arts and furniture from various periods, and the original manuscript of the lyrics to “The Star-Spangled Banner.”

Walters Art Museum

A block south of the Washington Monument, the Walters Art Museum, 600 N Charles St (Wed–Sun 10am–5pm; $10, special exhibits extra $5; ☎ www.thewalters.org), provides a comprehensive survey of art from ancient statuary to French Impressionist painting. The main building's core is a large sculpture court, modeled on an Italian Renaissance palazzo, beyond which modern galleries show off Egyptian jewelry and sarcophagi (including an intact mummy), Greek and Roman antiquities, medieval illuminated manuscripts, Islamic ceramics, and some very fine Byzantine silver. The top floor has pre-Columbian artifacts – funerary objects, stone carvings, masks, sculptures, and more – in a grand hall filled with late nineteenth-century paintings, including Manet's At the Café. The adjacent restored Hackerman House holds some especially beautiful pieces, including Chinese jade figurines, a Ming dynasty handscroll, and a pair of polychrome-and-gilt temple doors carved to look like peacock feathers. The seventh-century lacquered wood statue here of a svelte Buddha is perhaps the oldest such image in the world.

The Flag House and Star-Spangled Banner Museum

A quarter of a mile east of downtown and the Inner Harbor, across the busy Falls Expressway, is the intriguing Flag House and Star-Spangled Banner Museum, 844 E Pratt St (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm; last tour at 3.30pm; $5; ☎ www.flaghouse.org). It was here, in 1813, that Mary Pickersgill sewed the 30ft-by-45ft US flag whose presence at the harbor fort attack inspired Francis Scott Key to write “The Star-Spangled Banner.” The actual well-worn flag is now in the National Museum of American History in Washington DC (see p.412), but the house is full of other patriotic tributes as well as various antiques from the era; on the same property, the less interesting War of 1812 Museum (same hours and admission) covers the eponymous conflict with costumes and military relics.

Little Italy

The densely tangled streets of Little Italy spread to the east of downtown. Besides dozens of restaurants and cafés (many of them very good), the area is built around the 1881 Saint Leo the Great church, 227 S Exeter St, and holds plenty of Baltimore's trademark stone-fronted rowhouses, almost all with highly polished steps quarried from local marble – a rock of such quality that it was used to build the monuments of Washington DC. As an improvised local substitute for air-conditioning, in the heat of summer residents move their furniture outdoors, thereby turning each street into an extended living room.

Fell's Point, Canton, and Fort McHenry

Baltimore's oldest and liveliest quarter, Fell's Point, lies a mile southeast of Little Italy. Its shipyards are long gone, but many old bars and earthy pubs have hung on to form one of the better nightlife districts on the East Coast. The area visitor center, 808 S Ann St (daily noon–4pm; ☎ 410/675-6750), provides good maps for self-guided walking tours, and tours (daily 1pm & 2.30pm; donation) of the 1765 Robert Long House, the oldest surviving urban residence in Baltimore, a handsome Colonial structure dating to 1765. Other interesting sights include the Fell's Point Maritime Museum, 1724 Thames St (Thurs–Mon 10am–5pm; $4; ☎ 410/732-0278), originally a trolley barn and warehouse, now converted into exhibition space outlining the area's nautical history as a shipping point for fruit and tobacco, as well as slaves and opium. A different perspective on that history is provided by the new Frederick Douglass Isaac Myers Maritime Park, 1417 Thames St (Mon & Wed–Fri 11am–5pm, Sat & Sun noon–6pm; $5; 🌐 www.douglassmyers.org), named for two pioneering black leaders and focusing on their backgrounds, the history of the local port – including the slave trade – and a recreation of a late-nineteenth-century shipyard that employed African Americans.

East of Fell's Point, Canton is another district full of historic rowhouses, some of which date back to the Civil War, and is being revitalized with new restaurants and nightlife. Across the water from Canton lies one of Baltimore's most prominent historical sites, Fort McHenry National Monument, 2400 E Fort Ave (daily 8am–5pm, summer closes 8pm; $5 for seven-day pass; 🌐 www.nps.gov/fomc), a star-shaped fort that's most famous as the redoubt the British bombarded during the War of 1812 in an attempt to penetrate the harbor to attack Baltimore. The attack failed, and Francis Scott Key, when he saw “the bombs bursting in air,” was moved to write the “Star-Spangled Banner” – originally known as “The Defence of Fort McHenry.”

Further north

About a mile northeast of the center, in an old fire station off Broadway at 1601 E North Ave, the Great Blacks in Wax Museum (Tues–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm, winter closes an hour earlier; $9; 🌐 www.ngbiwm.com) uses wax models in posed dioramas to illustrate black history, from Egyptian pharaohs and early Muslims through to Marcus Garvey, Martin Luther King Jr, Nelson Mandela, and Colin Powell.

Further out on the north side, two miles from downtown at the top of Charles Street, is the Baltimore Museum of Art, 10 Art Museum Drive (Wed–Fri 11am–5pm, Sat & Sun 11am–6pm; $10, free on first Thurs of the month; 🌐 www.artbma.org). As well as great Italian and Dutch works by Botticelli, Raphael, Rembrandt, and Van Dyck, the museum has a delightful collection of less-heralded works, including Chardin's A Game of Knucklebones, drawings by Durer and Goya, and photographs from Weston, Stieglitz, and other masters. One gallery in the West Wing is devoted to Warhol, while the American Wing holds furniture and decorative arts, as well as paintings. The highlight is the Cone Collection, featuring works by Delacroix, Degas, Cézanne, and Picasso, as well as over a hundred drawings and paintings by Matisse – among them his signature Large Reclining Nude and a Seated Odalisque.

Eating

Baltimore is affectionately known as Crab City, and it has dozens of reasonably priced fresh seafood places where you can get top-notch steamed crabs. In addition, it has the usual range of diners and more than a dozen good family-run restaurants side by side in Little Italy. Canton and Mount Vernon hold a more eclectic selection, ranging from Irish to Mexican, while Fell's Point boasts numerous vegetarian, seafood, and other types of restaurants. In general, the city's restaurants tend to be unpretentious, family oriented, and reasonably priced.

Babalu Grill 332 Market Place, just north of Inner Harbor ☎410/234-9898. Popular restaurant serving well-priced traditional Cuban and Nuevo Latino cuisine in a lively setting. Good for its ceviche, ham croquettes, lamb shank, and Cuban sandwich with fried yucca.

Bertha's 734 S Broadway ☎410/327-5795. Casual and inexpensive (yet stylish) seafood restaurant, tucked away behind a tiny Fell's Point bar. Known for its delicious mussels, high tea, and nightly live blues, jazz, or Dixieland.

Black Olive 814 S Bond St, Fell's Point ☎410/276-7141. Expensive but succulent Mediterranean restaurant that has affordable meze (small plates) like grilled octopus salad, calamari, and pan-seared zucchini, as well as pricier, sharable entrees like rack of lamb and lobster tail.

Blue Moon Cafe 1621 Aliceanna St ☎410/522-3940. Fell's Point breakfast joint that locals swear by, lining up for the cheap and tasty crab Benedict, crab crepes, burritos, biscuits with sausage gravy, and cinnamon rolls.

Da Mimmo 217 S High St ☎410/727-6876. Intimate, romantic, mid-priced Little Italy café, with a wide-ranging menu that includes favorites like Clams Casino and pasta fagioli, plus live piano music and a more upscale ambience than you might expect.

Donna's 800 N Charles St ☎410/385-0180. Delicious sandwiches and burgers for lunch, and savory, mid-priced pasta, steak, and seafood for dinner in an elegant Mount Vernon locale. Also at 222 S Green St ☎410/328-1962 and 3101 St Paul St ☎410/889-3410).

Helmand 806 N Charles St ☎410/752-0311. Inexpensive but chic dinner-only Afghan restaurant in Mount Vernon, with plenty of lamb dishes as well as aushak (leek-filled vegetarian ravioli) and the delicious kaddo borawni (a fried-pumpkin appetizer).

Mama's on the Half Shell 2901 O'Donnell St, Canton ☎410/276-3160. Local, affordable favorite for its raw bar with jumbo shrimp and littleneck clams, plus crab-cake and scallops platters, and plenty of savory sandwiches – including the ever-popular oyster po' boy.

Obrycki's 1727 E Pratt St, just north of Fell's Point ☎410/732-6399. Baltimore's best and longest-established seafood restaurant, with delicious steamed, soft-shell, and broiled crabs at premium prices, as well as other excellent seafood. Closed in winter.

Vaccaro's Italian Pastries 222 Albemarle St, Little Italy ☎410/685-4905. Great spot to load up on cheesecakes, cookies, and other sweets, and to indulge in the kind of delicious gelato they make in the Old Country.

Woman's Industrial Exchange 333 N Charles St ☎410/685-4388. Excellent-value 1940s café between Mount Vernon and the Inner Harbor, with cheap breakfasts, huge plates of chicken gumbo, and delicious crab cakes.

Drinking and nightlife

Fell's Point may well have the densest assembly of drinking places in the US. You'll find one bar after another lined up along Broadway and the many smaller side streets; almost all feature some sort of entertainment, usually live bands, and on summer nights the sidewalks are packed with revelers. The Power Plant Live! complex, next to the Inner Harbor at 34 Market Place (☎410-727-LIVE, 🌐 www.powerplantlive.com), offers a wide selection of dining and mainstream entertainment choices and opens onto an outdoor plaza. The up-and-coming areas of Canton and Federal Hill also have plenty of drinking spots, while the city's highbrow culture is concentrated northwest of the center, in the Mount Royal Avenue area, in places like the Meyerhoff Symphony Hall, 1212 Cathedral St (☎410/783-8000, 🌐 www.baltimoresymphony.com) – home to award-winning conductor Marin Alsop – and the Lyric Opera House, 110 W Mount Royal Ave (☎410/727-6000, 🌐 www.baltimoreopera.com). For a rundown of what's on, pick up a copy of the excellent free City Paper (🌐 www.citypaper.com) or check out 🌐 www.Baltimore.org.

The 8x10 10 E Cross St, Federal Hill
 ☎410/625-2000. Solid bar and live-music venue that features an eclectic mix of bands, from jazz to indie rock and electronica, often for a cover charge.

Brass Elephant 924 N Charles St, Mount Vernon
 ☎410/547-8485. Upscale, stylish lounge in an antique rowhouse, serving up tasty blue-crab guacamole, sautéed squid, and shellfish risotto as "bar fare," as well as some nice single-malt scotches and good, pricey cocktails.

Brewer's Art 1106 N Charles St, Mount Vernon ☎410/547-9310. The place anyone with a yen for microbrews must visit – a local landmark for beer-making that's tops for its "Ozzy" Belgian-style, dark "Proletary Ale" and good old "Charm City Sour Cherry."

Cat's Eye Pub 1730 Thames St, Fell's Point
 ☎410/276-9085. Cozy, crowded bar, offering a good range of beers and live music nightly, from blues and jazz to bluegrass and folk.

Lulu's Off Broadway 1703 Aliceanna St, Fell's Point ☎410/537-LULU. Jumping joint where you can sup on BBQ ribs, meatloaf, and lobster sandwiches – as well as vegetarian fare – or knock back a glass of wine or a microbrew while listening to guest DJs on weekend nights.

Maggie Moore's 21 N Eutaw St, north of Inner Harbor ☎410/837-2100. Smart and appealing Irish pub with handsome decor and nice, dark brews, as well as fare such as leg-of-lamb sandwich and beef-and-Guinness stew.

Max's on Broadway 735 S Broadway ☎410/675-6297. Huge corner venue with a very long bar – doling out some 300 kinds of beer in bottles, and rotating more than 70 on tap – pool tables, and, upstairs, a leather-upholstered cigar lounge with a more refined atmosphere.

Wharf Rat Bar 801 S Ann St, Fell's Point
 ☎410/276-9034. This friendly bar, well stocked with English ales, other European imports, and regional microbrews, packs in a trendy and discerning crowd.

Western Maryland

Stretched between West Virginia and the razor-straight Pennsylvania border, western Maryland ranges for some two hundred miles east to west, but is in places only two miles north to south. The further west you go the more hilly and rural it becomes, similar to Maryland's Appalachian neighbors.

Apart from the Civil War battlefield at Antietam, west of the only sizable town, Frederick, the best reason to come to this part of the state is to cycle or hike the footpath of the restored old Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, which winds along the Maryland side of the Potomac River from Washington, DC, for over 180 miles to Cumberland in the western mountains. Even further west is the state's largest freshwater lake, Deep Creek Lake, popular with watersports enthusiasts. It also has more than seventy thousand acres of public parks and forests surrounding it, some of which make for smooth cross-country skiing during the winter.

Frederick and around

One of the first towns settled in northwestern Maryland, FREDERICK, less than an hour west of Baltimore at the junction of I-70 and I-270, was laid out in 1745 by German farmers lured from Pennsylvania by the promise of cheap, fertile land. It grew to become a main stopover on the route west to the Ohio Valley, and the bulk of today's tidy town survives from the early 1800s.

The visitor center, 19 E Church St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎301/228-2888 or 1-800/999-3613, @www.fredericktourism.org), has walking-tour maps of the town. Some of the more notable sights include the Schifferstadt House, just off US-15 (April to early Dec Thurs–Sun noon–4pm; $3; ☎301/668-6088), a stone-walled farmhouse built in 1756 and largely unaltered since; the Roger Taney House, 121 S Bentz St (Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $3; ☎301/663-7880), owned by the US Supreme Court chief justice best known for presiding over the infamous Dred Scott decision, which helped lead to the Civil War; and the Beatty-Cramer House, 9010 Liberty Rd on Rte 26 (April–Oct first Sat of month 10am–4pm; $3; also by appointment at ☎301/668-2086), a collection of three farm buildings that contains the area's oldest still-standing structure.

In the outskirts north of Frederick, Cunningham Falls State Park (8am–sunset) and the Catoctin Mountain Park (open dawn to dusk; free) both hold seemingly endless hardwood forests – great for fall color – in the midst of which are numerous preserved remnants of early homesteads. Pick up details on hiking and camping at the main visitor center, off Hwy-77 two miles west of US-15 (Mon–Thurs 10am–4.30pm, Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 8.30pm–5pm; ☎301/663-9388, www.nps.gov/cato). You can also camp here ($20–30 a night), and rent cabins of various sizes ($35–140).

There are motels along both I-70 and US-15, but the town's major B&Bs, the Hill House, 12 W Third St (☎301/682-4111; ⑤), and Hollerstown Hill, 4 Clarke Place (☎301/228-3630, www.hollerstownhill.com; ⑤), each offer four pleasant rooms in historic buildings from the late nineteenth century. If you plan on visiting Antietam, the Jacob Rohrbach Inn, 138 W Main St, Sharpsburg (☎301/432-5079, www.jacob-rohrbach-inn.com; ⑥), has four well-appointed rooms and suites and one detached cottage, all decorated in a style appropriate for a two-hundred-year-old homestead.

For a bite to eat, try the burgers and steamed crabs at Cactus Flats, three miles north off US-15 (☎301/898-3085), or the seafood, sandwiches, and microbrewed pale ales and stouts at Barley & Hops, 5473 Urbana Pike (☎301/668-5555).

Antietam National Battlefield

The site of the single bloodiest battle in the Civil War—causing more American deaths than any other single-day battle in US history—Antietam National Battlefield spreads over unaltered farmlands outside the whitewashed and balconied village of Sharpsburg, fifteen miles west of Frederick. Here, on the morning of September 17, 1862, forty thousand troops faced a Union army twice that number in an effort to consolidate rebel gains after their victory at the Battle of Second Manassas (or Second Bull Run). Hours later, 23,000 men from both sides lay dead or dying. The fiercest fighting, and the worst bloodshed, occurred in cornfields to the north.

△ Antietam National Battlefield

For all the carnage, the battle wasn't tactically decisive, but the Confederates' lack of success lost them the support of their would-be ally Great Britain, while the Union performance encouraged Lincoln to issue the Emancipation Proclamation. Pick up a brochure and driving-tour map of the park at the visitor center, a mile north of Sharpsburg off Hwy-65 (daily: summer 8am–7pm; winter 8:30am–5pm; $4 pass for three days; ☎ 301/432-5124, 🌐 www.nps.gov/anti).

Cumberland and the C&O Canal

The only large town in the far west of Maryland, sandwiched between West Virginia and Pennsylvania in a part of the state only eight miles wide, CUMBERLAND started life as a coal-mining center in the late 1700s. Often confused with Daniel Boone's Cumberland Gap in southwest Virginia, this Cumberland was also an important trans-Appalachian crossing, but its main place in history is as the terminus of the C&O (Chesapeake and Ohio) Canal, an impressive engineering feat begun in 1813 but not completed until 1850, by which time the railroads had already made it obsolete.

There are six visitor centers along the canal: the easternmost is in Georgetown, in Washington DC, and the westernmost is in Cumberland, at 13 Canal St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 301/722-8226, 🌐 www.nps.gov/choh); only the section of the park in Great Falls – whose own visitor center is at 11710 MacArthur Blvd, in Potomac, Maryland (☎ 301/767-3714) – charges admission ($3 per pedestrian and $5 per car for three days). All centers provide information on hiking, cycling, canoeing, and camping, which can prove valuable if you're interested in traveling the entire 184.5 miles along the canal towpath, an often lovely concourse that provides one of the longest contiguous trails in the US.

In summer, the historic trains of the Western Maryland Scenic Railroad leave from here to make the three-hour trip to Frostburg through the surrounding mountains (all trips at 11:30 am: May–Sept Fri–Sun; Oct Thurs–Sun; Nov–mid Dec Sat & Sun; $23; ☎ 301/759-4400 or 1-800/872-4650, 🌐 www.wmsr.com). Look for the tiny black-and-white log cabin where George Washington served his first commission in the 1750s, standing directly opposite the station on the other side of the canal.

About thirty miles east of Cumberland, I-68 slices straight through a 1600-foot wedge of sedimentary rock, exposing a dramatic “Smiley Face” rock formation called a syncline that can be viewed from a platform at the excellent Sideling Hill Exhibit Center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 301/842-2155), where there's a special geologic exhibit and stunning views all around.

Annapolis and southern Maryland

While Baltimore has grown into the state's largest and busiest city, Annapolis, Maryland's capital since 1694, has changed little in size and appearance. Though its charmingly narrow, time-worn streets are now often crowded, Annapolis is still among the more engaging small US cities. Its once-vital Chesapeake Bay waterfront has little of the feel of Colonial maritime life, and the main draws are the Beaux Arts campus of the US Naval Academy and the beautiful state capitol. If you want to get a better feel for the Chesapeake Bay region away from the crowds, head south to places like St Mary's City – the first capital of Maryland, completely reconstructed in the 1960s – or Solomons Island, one of many small bay towns that seem not to have changed for decades.

Annapolis

At the center of ANNAPOLIS, overlooking the town's dense web of streets, the Maryland State House (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; tours at 11am & 3pm; ☎ 410/974-3400; free) was completed in 1779 and, for six months in 1783–84, served as the official capital of the thirteen colonies; it remains the nation's oldest statehouse still in use. The Old Senate Chamber, off the grand entrance hall, is where the Treaty of Paris was ratified in 1784, officially ending the Revolutionary War. A statue of George Washington stands here on the spot where, three weeks before the treaty signing, he resigned his commission as head of the Continental Army. Also on the grounds of the State House is the cottage-sized Old Treasury, built in 1735 to hold Colonial Maryland's currency reserves.

Many grand late-eighteenth-century brick homes line the streets of Annapolis, but none surpasses the Hammond-Harwood House, two blocks west of the State House at 19 Maryland Ave, off King George Street (April–Oct Tues–Sun noon–5pm, last tour at 4pm; $6; 🌐 www.hammondharwoodhouse.org). The warm redbrick villa, which consists of two wings connected by a central hall, was built in 1774 to the designs of William Buckland and is most notable for its beautifully carved woodwork and intricate front doorway. The Chase-Lloyd House, 22 Maryland Ave (Tues–Sat 2–4pm; $2; ☎ 410/263-2723), a three-story Georgian brick townhouse from 1774 also by Buckland, is worth a look as well, with its grand stairway, interior Ionic columns, and intricate ornamentation. Near the Hammond house, another mansion, the 1765 William Paca House, 186 Prince George St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, winter Fri–Sun noon–5pm; $8 including tour), is decorated in warm rich colors and ornate furniture, while the splendid formal garden, which you can peer into from King George Street, has French-styled geometry and lovely topiary and boasts a nice viewing pavilion.

Besides such elite manors, dozens of eighteenth-century clapboard cottages and commercial warehouses fill the narrow streets that run down to the waterfront. The Historic Annapolis Foundation, housed in a c.1715 tavern at 18 Pinkney St (☎ 410/267-7619, 🌐 www.annapolis.org), can provide information on self-guided tours of the more notable structures.

For a unique insight into Maryland's history, stop by the Banneker-Douglass Museum, 84 Franklin St, a few blocks northeast of the state house (Tues–Fri 10am–3pm; free; ☎ 410/216-6180, 🌐 www.marylandhistoricaltrust.net/bdm.html), named after two of the most prominent black leaders and home to the state's largest holding of African-American art and artifacts.

The waterfront and US Naval Academy

Although few Colonial sites survive on the Chesapeake Bay waterfront, the rebuilt 1850s dockside Market House, 25 Market Place (hours vary; 🌐 www.annapolismarkethouse.com; free), is an early nineteenth-century replacement of a Colonial warehouse that was used by the revolutionary army but today is home to seafood vendors and restaurants. Among the boat-supply shops and harbor-side bars, the gray stone walls of the US Naval Academy house four thousand crew-cut young men and a handful of women who spend four rigid years here before embarking on careers as naval officers. Superb guided tours leave from the Armistead Visitor Center (daily: March–Dec 9am–5pm; Jan & Feb 9am–4pm; tours $8; ☎ 410/263-6933, 🌐 www.navyonline.com) in Halsey Field House, through Gate 1 at the end of King George Street, and take in the elaborate crypt and marble sarcophagus of early-American naval hero John Paul Jones.

Practicalities

Annapolis is easy to reach: Greyhound stops at 308 Chinquapin Round Road, and you can access Amtrak and MARC trains (☎ 1-800/RIDE-MTA @ www.mtmaryland.com) at BWI Airport via the North Star (C-60) Route on Annapolis's ADOT bus system ($4; ☎ 410/263-7964). By road, it's only about half an hour from Washington (via US-50) or Baltimore (via I-97). Central, historic Annapolis is very walkable, and the city's visitor center, 26 West St (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 410/280-0445, @ www.visit-annapolis.org), can provide free maps and practical information about walking tours, and minibus and water tours.

Finding a place to stay is not usually a problem, though prices are steep. There's a free accommodations bureau (☎ 1-800/715-1000, @ www.stayannapolis.com), or you can choose from B&Bs like the central Scot-Laur Inn, 165 Main St (☎ 410/268-5665, @ www.scotlaurinn.com; 4), with ten pleasant rooms, though a two-night minimum stay is required on weekends; the four rooms and one suite of the more basic Flag House Inn, 26 Randall St (☎ 410/280-2721 or 1-800/437-4825, @ www.flaghouseinn.com; 6); or, for a premium, the three supremely elegant suites of the Annapolis Inn, 114 Prince George St (☎ 410/295-5200, @ www.annapolisinn.com; 9). Alternatively, the three mid-eighteenth-century buildings making up the Historic Inns of Annapolis, 58 State Circle (☎ 410/263-2641, @ www.historicinnsofannapolis.com; 8), provide smart accommodation options in classic Georgian structures.

Worthwhile dining options include the no-frills Chick and Ruth's Delly, 165 Main St (☎ 410/269-6737), which offers monster breakfasts and huge sandwiches named after local politicians; the ritzier Harry Browne's, 66 State Circle (☎ 410/263-4332), popular with politicos and expense-account lobbyists for its upscale steak and seafood; and the historic waterfront Middleton Tavern, 2 Market Space (☎ 410/263-3323), a great place to dine on oysters or fish and chips while people-watching from the sunny porch. There's also the Market House on the waterfront for a variety of seafood options. After dark the King of France Tavern, in the 1776 Maryland Inn, 16 Church Circle (part of the Historic Inns of Annapolis; ☎ 410/263-2641), puts on live jazz.

Southern Maryland

The winding back roads of southern Maryland are obscure to many visitors and resemble in many ways the rural South. Along both main routes, US-301 from Baltimore and Hwy-2 from Annapolis, fields of corn and tobacco, dotted with aging wooden barns, fill the arable lands in scattered parcels, and narrow, tree-lined country lanes branch off to rivers or coves of the broad Chesapeake Bay.

The old shipbuilding community of SOLOMONS ISLAND – not actually an island but a narrow two-mile peninsula between the Patuxent River and Back Creek Bay – lies sixty miles south of Annapolis via Hwy-2. The best reason to stop here is the Calvert Marine Museum, on Hwy-2 at the north end of town (daily 10am–5pm; $7; @ www.calvertmarinemuseum.com), which focuses on the Patuxent River and on the unique estuarine ecosystem of the Chesapeake Bay tidal areas, with two protected marshland wildlife areas, one saltwater and one freshwater. Your admission also gains you access and entry to the nearby Drum Point Lighthouse, a small wooden Colonial cottage perched above the water on spindly iron legs. The waterfront is dotted with cozy B&Bs, among them the Back Creek Inn, 210 Alexander Lane (☎ 410/326-2022; 5), which has nicely decorated rooms, a pair of suites, and a cottage. Fresh seafood restaurants include Solomon's Pier, 14575 Old Solomons Island Rd (☎ 410/326-2424), good for its tasty dishes and sunny outdoor decks, and the pricier lobster tail and crab cakes of the Captain's Table, 275 Lore St (☎ 410/326-2772), with similarly pleasant waterfront dining.

St Mary's City

Set on a broad Potomac cove near the southern tip of the Maryland peninsula, twenty miles south of Solomons Island, ST MARY'S CITY is a limited reconstruction of Maryland's first Colonial capital, established here in 1634 before being moved to Annapolis sixty years later. The entire complex, including a working tobacco plantation and a replica of the tiny Maryland Dove (the square-rigged ship that transported provisions to the site in 1634 from England) is run as a historic theme park, complete with costumed guides who answer questions in character (March–June and Sept–Nov Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; July–Sept Wed–Sun 10am–5pm; $7.50; @ www.stmaryscity.org). Its main feature is a reconstruction of the long-vanished State House, where in 1689 Protestant rebels seized control of what had been a Catholic-run colony.

The Eastern Shore

The rambling back roads of Maryland's enticing Eastern Shore cross over half of the broad Delmarva (Delaware, Maryland, Virginia) peninsula that protects the Chesapeake from the open Atlantic. The US-50 bridge, built across the Chesapeake Bay in the early 1960s, may have made the Eastern Shore more accessible, but the area off the main roads still has a sleepy air. Branching off from US-50 as the highway races down to the beach resort of Ocean City, quiet country lanes lead to 200-year-old waterfront towns like Chestertown and St Michaels.

Chestertown

A stopping place for travelers since Colonial days, when it was a prime Chesapeake port, CHESTERTOWN stretches west along High Street from the Chester River. It is surprisingly intact, with its fine old riverfront homes and a courthouse square lined with ornate wooden cottages. Although the town is rich with historic edifices, like the grand 1769 Georgian Wide Hall, at 101 N Water St, the only house regularly open to the public is the contemporaneous Geddes-Piper House, 101 Church Alley (Wed–Sat 10am–4pm; tours May–Oct Sat & Sun 1–4pm; $4; ☎ 410/778-3499, @ www.hskcmd.com), which has a good collection of kitchen tools and eighteenth-century furnishings. Many of the old houses have been converted into charming B&Bs, like the Widow's Walk Inn, 402 High St (☎ 410/778-6455 or 1-888/778-6455, @ www.chestertown.com/widow; ☎), while the Imperial Hotel, 208 High St (☎ 410/778-5000, @ www.imperialchestertown.com; ☎), houses the upscale Front Room restaurant, serving excellent steak and seafood, in addition to having pleasant and tidy guestrooms. Also top-notch is the Feast of Reason, 203 High St (☎ 410/778-3828), across the street, which has quality soups and sandwiches for lunch. The visitor center, 122 North Cross St (spring & summer Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; fall & winter Sat & Sun closes 2pm; ☎ 410/778-9737, @ www.kentcounty.com), has information on the town's historic features as well as walking and cycling tours.

St Michaels

One of the prettiest harbors along the Chesapeake Bay, ST MICHAELS, twelve miles west of US-50 on Hwy-33, is also one of its oldest ports. Since the early 1960s it has been revitalized, its old buildings now gentrified into art galleries, boutiques, and cozy B&Bs. Some corners of the town survive intact, however; among them the old town green, St Mary's Square, a block off the main Talbot Street on Mulberry Street.

To get a clear sense of the history of Chesapeake Bay, head north along the docks to the extensive and modern Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum (daily March–May & Oct 10am–5pm; June–Sept 10am–6pm; Nov–Feb 10am–4pm; $10; www.cbmm.org). The complex focuses on the restored 1879 Hooper Strait Lighthouse (which you can tour), at the foot of which float several Chesapeake Bay sailboats, designed to make the most of the bay's shallow waters. If you want to get out on the bay, Patriot Cruises (daily 11.30am, 12.30pm, 2.30pm & 4pm; $19.50; 410/745-3100, www.patriotcruises.com) runs 60 to 90min excursions, while other companies operate shorter (and cheaper) trips.

B&Bs, such as the period-furnished Hambleton Inn, 202 Cherry St (410/745-3350 or 1-866/745-3350, www.hambletoninn.com; ) , with its five cozy units, and the Kemp House Inn, 412 Talbot St (410/745-2243, www.kemphouseinn.com; ) , featuring slightly more antique decor, tend to be fully booked in the high season, so call well ahead. If you want to go all-out, try the Harbour Inn, 101 N Harbor Rd (410/745-9001, www.harbourinn.com; ) , a waterside resort with chic rooms and suites, along with a spa and marina. Among St Michaels's revered seafood restaurants, the  Crab Claw, on Rte 33 (Mar–Nov; 410/745-2900), has fine views and boasts an extensive menu; it's especially good for its steamed crabs. On weekends, the town's docks are alive with boaters who flock to bar-restaurants such as the Town Dock (410/745-5577), offering tasty fried oysters and crab cakes, and St Michaels Crab House (410/745-3737), with its fine raw bar, both at the end of Mulberry Street.

Tilghman Island

The only real reason to come to the declining fishing port of TILGHMAN ISLAND, west of St Michaels across the Knapps Narrows drawbridge, is its the seafood. Drop in on Dogwood Harbor, on the east side of the island, during the fall and winter harvest when the rusty skipjacks unload at Harrison Oyster Packing Company (410/886-2530), a wholesaler at the foot of the bridge. You can buy oysters fresh off the boat here, or sample them and other local items at two very good restaurants on either side of the bridge: the Bay Hundred (410/886-2126) and The Bridge (410/886-2330). Many locals and weekend fishermen head for Harrison's Chesapeake House (410/886-2121, www.chesapeakehouse.com), two miles south of town, for a traditional Eastern Shore dinner with corn on the cob and fried chicken.

Ocean City

With more than ten miles of broad Atlantic beach, a boisterous boardwalk, amusement park, and hordes of visitors every summer weekend, OCEAN CITY is Maryland's number one warm-weather resort, accessible across the Eastern Shore via US-50. If you're after a quiet weekend by the sea, avoid it like the plague and take extra care to avoid college Spring Break.

Ocean City is, at least, easy to reach: the Greyhound terminal is at Second St and Philadelphia Ave, and The Beach Express (1-866/628-7433, www.beach-express.com) runs shuttles to and from the Baltimore, Washington DC, and Philadelphia airports. The city has two helpful visitor centers. The first is the Chamber of Commerce, on US-50 as you approach the city (daily 9am–5pm; 1-888/626-3386, www.oceancity.org), while the second is at 4001 Coastal Hwy (daily 9am–5pm; 410/289-2800 or 1-800/626-2326, www.ococean.com); both have the usual brochures and can help with accommodation.

Places to stay are plentiful except on summer weekends, and off-season rates are at least half prime-time ones. Choices include the Oceanic motel, on the tip of the peninsula at the south end of Baltimore Street (410/289-6494, www.oceanic.com).

ocmdhotels.com/oceanic; ③–⑦ by season), and the fading Commander Hotel, on the boardwalk at 14th Street (☎410/289-6166 or 1-888/289-6166, 🌐www.commanderhotel.com; ④–⑨). The few good eating options among the fast-food joints and the national franchises include The Angler, on the bay at Talbot Street (☎410/289-7424), with fresh seafood, as well as beers and tropical cocktails. Nightspots include the frenetic Big Kahuna Surf Club, 18th and Coastal Highway (☎410/289-6331), and Shenanigan's, 4th and Boardwalk (☎410/289-7181), an Irish pub with a full menu and live music until 2am.

Assateague Island National Seashore

Just nine miles down the coast, Assateague Island National Seashore – a 37-mile stretch of entirely undeveloped beach and marshland – is a great escape from Ocean City. Its main visitor center (daily 9am–5pm; ☎410/641-1441, 🌐www.nps.gov/asis) is eight miles from Ocean City, just before the humpback bridge across to the island ($10 park entry per car or $3 per pedestrian/bicyclist, valid one week). Of the park's three main trails, the Life of the Marsh Trail guides you along half a mile of boardwalks through low-lying leeward wetlands, while Life of the Dunes, over the thick white sands just back from the beach, is a little longer and harder going. Most visitors, however, come strictly for the beaches themselves. Seashore and bayside camping on Assateague Island is available year-round (☎410/641-3030 or 1-888/432-2267; $5 permit), but if you want a bit more comfort, the best lodging is to be found near the southern half of the island, across the Virginia border in Chincoteague (see p.445).

Delaware

DELAWARE, enjoyed for its beautiful beaches but also notorious for its massive DuPont Corporation chemical plants, has an impressive and important history. In 1631 Dutch whalers established a settlement at the mouth of the Delaware Bay, and soon afterwards the Swedes built a larger colony at present-day Wilmington. The two groups fought amongst themselves until the British took over in 1664. DELAWARE was then part of neighboring Pennsylvania – Philadelphia is only ten miles north – until separating itself off in 1776, and in 1787 it was the first former colony to ratify the Constitution and become a state. Much of Delaware's fortunes can be traced to the du Pont family, who, fleeing the wrath of revolutionary France, set up a gunpowder mill that became the main supplier of conventional explosives to the US government. The family built huge mansions in the Brandywine Valley north of Wilmington, near the perfectly preserved old Colonial capital, New Castle, on the Delaware Bay just five miles south of I-95. Further south, Dover, the capital, may not detain you long, but beyond it, the small and amiable resorts of Lewes and Rehoboth Beach mark the northern extent of over twenty miles of rather unspoiled Atlantic beaches.

Getting around Delaware

Apart from Wilmington, which is on the main East Coast train and bus lines, Delaware is hard to get around without a car. Greyhound stops only at Wilmington and Dover, and local public transit is limited at best. I-95 and the New Jersey Turnpike converge at Wilmington, from where US-13 runs south through the state. More often called the Du Pont Highway, it was paid for and constructed by the industrialists so that they could ride in comfort between their Wilmington mansions and Dover. A direct car ferry connects Cape May, the southern tip of New Jersey, and Lewes, at the mouth of the Delaware Bay (see p.479).

Wilmington and around

Medium-sized WILMINGTON offers a pleasant diversion from the tourist trail, boasting decent art museums and some pretty waterside parks, and the surrounding Brandywine Valley holds the manor homes and gardens (and factories) of the du Ponts, providing an inside look at the First State's First Family.

Amtrak pulls in at the quirky 1907 terracotta station at 100 S French St, on the dicey and run-down south side of the city. From here, the two main streets, Market and King, run north for about a mile to the Brandywine River, holding stores and other businesses, as well as a handful of restored eighteenth-century row-houses. These are clustered around the Delaware History Museum, 504 Market St (Tues–Fri 11am–4pm, Sat 10am–4pm; $4; ☎ 302/656-0637), which has some mildly interesting exhibits and dioramas about state history, and the Old Town Hall, 500 Market St (Sun & Tues–Fri 11am–4pm, Sat 10am–4pm; $4; 🌐 www.hsd.org/oth.htm), a 1798 Federal mansion.

The Delaware Art Museum, 2301 Kentmere Pkwy (Tues & Thurs–Sat 10am–4pm, Wed 10am–8pm, Sun noon–4pm; $10, free Sun; 🌐 www.delart.org), is the one sight you should really see if you're in Wilmington. The museum's focus is American art from the nineteenth and twentieth centuries and has a number of emblematic images from key figures like Frederic Church, Winslow Homer, Edward Hopper, and Augustus Saint Gaudens. For those with a yen for the archly modern, the Delaware Center for the Contemporary Arts, back downtown at 200 S Madison St (Tues & Thurs–Sat 10am–5pm, Wed & Sun noon–5pm; $5; 🌐 www.thedcca.org), is best-known for its dozens of yearly rotating exhibits that showcase regional and national artists.

Most of Wilmington's Colonial sites are hidden away amid the shambling, industrialized waterfront east of downtown. A poorly signposted "Historic Wilmington" loop stops first at the foot of Seventh Street, where a small monument marks the site of Delaware's first European colony, Fort Christina, set up by Swedish settlers in 1638. Nearby, at 606 Church St, the Hendrickson House Museum and Old Swedes Church (tours Wed–Sat 10am–4pm; $2; ☎ 302/652-5629) are, respectively, a c.1690 pinewood residence with furnishings from various eras, and one of the oldest houses of worship in the US, built in 1698. The church retains its impressive black-walnut pulpit and features intricate Victorian-era stained-glass windows as well as a garden labyrinth outside. Several miles north, near I-95 in Rockwood Park, the Gothic Revival Rockwood Mansion, 610 Shipley Rd (park and gardens daily 6am–10pm, mansion tours Tues–Sun 10am–3pm; 🌐 www.rockwood.org), was built in 1854 in the style of a rural English estate, its elegant rooms now smartly restored to their Gilded Age appearance.

The downtown CVB, 100 W 10th St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 302/652-4088 or 1-800/489-6664, 🌐 www.VisitWilmingtonDe.com), has walking- and driving-tour maps and practical information. The DART bus system runs around the county (tickets $1.15; ☎ 302/652-3278; 🌐 www.dartfirststate.com). Few people choose to spend the night in Wilmington, but you might want to try the splendidly ornate Hotel du Pont, 100 W 11th St (☎ 302/594-3100 or 1-800/441-9019, 🌐 www.hoteldupont.com; 📍 9), whose rooms and suites are the height of contemporary chic, and even affordable in the low season. Alternatively, Brandywine Suites, 707 King Street (☎ 302/656-9300, 🌐 www.brandywinesuites.com; 📍), in a central location, offers very affordable, spacious units with microwaves, fridges, and Internet access. For eating, you can scout around the happening Trolley Square area northwest of downtown, where Kelly's Logan House, 1701 Delaware Ave (☎ 302/652-9493), serves tasty burgers and other pub fare in a pleasant garden setting. The Washington Street Ale House, 1205 Washington St (☎ 302/658-2537), has the same sort of food, along with pasta and seafood, but the main draw is its microbrew selection.

The du Pont mansions

A short distance up I-95 from the Rockwood Mansion, the first of the du Pont mansions is accessible in Bellevue State Park, 800 Carr Rd (daily 8am–dusk; free). William du Pont Jr converted a Gothic Revival mansion into his own version of James Madison's Neoclassical home and called it Bellevue Hall. You can visit the grounds and see the ponds, woodlands, gardens, and tennis courts.

Twenty minutes northwest of Wilmington, various generations of the du Pont family built opulent homes in the rural Brandywine Valley. To learn how their fortune was made, stop at the Hagley Museum, off Hwy-141 just north of Wilmington (mid-March to Dec daily 9.30am–4.30pm; Jan to mid-March Sat & Sun 9.30am–4.30pm; $11; 🌐 www.hagley.org), situated on a 235-acre du Pont estate. The museum begins with the founding in 1802 of a small water-powered gunpowder mill along the Brandywine River; over the next hundred years the mill grew into a complex that included ever-larger steam-powered and eventually electrically powered factories – almost all of which are still in working order. While you're there, be sure to visit Eleutherian Mills, the supremely elegant du Pont mansion that is the centrepiece of the estate.

The enormous, dusty-pink 1910 Nemours Mansion, just a mile up the road (closed for renovation until 2007; updates at ☎ 302/651-6912 or 1-800/651-6912, 🌐 www.Nemours.org), is surrounded by a three-hundred-acre, Versailles-style formal garden. Inside the mansion, you'll find plenty of lavish rooms along with a 1910 fitness room, bowling alley, ice-making room, and collection of early twentieth-century automobiles. Two miles northwest, off Hwy-52, the one-time du Pont family estate of Winterthur (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; tours $20–30, gardens and galleries only $15; 🌐 www.winterthur.org) has been converted into a premier showcase for early American decorative arts, each of its 175 rooms showcasing a particular style. Ranging from the simplicity of Shaker appointments to a beautiful three-story elliptical staircase taken from a North Carolina plantation home, the various pieces of furniture, textiles, silverwork, and paintings – all made in the country between 1640 and 1860 – form a rich catalog of the diversity of American applied arts.

New Castle

Delaware's well-preserved first capital, NEW CASTLE, fronts the broad Delaware River, just six miles south of Wilmington via Hwy-141. Founded in the 1650s by the Dutch and taken over by the British in 1664, New Castle has managed to survive intact, its quiet cobbled streets and immaculate eighteenth-century brick houses shaded by ancient hardwood trees.

The heart of New Castle is the tree-filled town green that spreads east from the shops of Delaware Street. It's dominated by the stalwart tower of the Immanuel Episcopal Church, Harmony St at The Strand, built in 1703 and bordered by tidy rows of eighteenth-century gravestones. On the west edge of the green, the 1732

Old Court House, 211 Delaware St (Tues–Sat 10am–3.30pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; free) served as the first state capitol until 1881.

Fine Colonial houses fill the blocks around the town green. The largest is the George Read II House (Tues–Fri & Sun 11am–4pm, Sat 10am–4pm, winter Sat & Sun only; $5; 📍 www.hsd.org/read.htm), two blocks south along the river at 42 The Strand. Though the original c.1800 house burned down in 1824, the sumptuous replica holds marble fireplaces, brightly painted walls, elaborately carved woodwork, fine Federal-style plaster ornament, and spacious, picturesque gardens. Another nice collection of classic edifices from various eras, operated by the New Castle Historical Society (📍 www.newcastlehistory.org), lies several blocks north along Third and Fourth streets: the Amstel House, 2 E Fourth St (April–Dec Wed–Sat 11am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $4), is a 1730 early-Georgian mansion that has been visited by a number of prominent Revolutionary-era figures; the hexagonal brick bauble of the Old Library Museum, 40 E Third St (March–Dec Sat & Sun 1–4pm; free), today houses the historical society’s collection; and the Dutch House, 32 E Third St (April–Dec Wed–Sat 11am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $4), is a simple c.1700 residence with authentic decor and artifacts including a cherry-wood cupboard, duck-footed wooden chairs, and polychromed Delft ceramics.

Practicalities

New Castle makes for a good day-trip from Washington DC or Philadelphia, but there’s enough here to merit a longer visit. To pick up the self-guided walk-ing-tour map, drop by the visitor center at 211 Delaware St, in the Old Court House (same hours; 📞 302/323-4453), or call the Historic New Castle Visitors Bureau (📞 1-800/758-1550). Centrally located B&Bs include the William Penn Guest House, 206 Delaware St (📞 302/328-7736; 📍), with four cozy units in a building dating from 1682 (its namesake even visited here) and the Terry House, 130 Delaware St (📞 302/322-2505, 📍 www.terryhouse.com; 📍), a Civil War-era townhouse with four simple, tastefully decorated rooms. The better restaurants serve traditional, Colonial-era dishes, some of them being quite good. There’s solid beer and pub grub, including crabs, clams, shepherd’s pie, and a “Smorgas-Board” thick with cheese and sausage, at the popular Jessop’s Tavern, 114 Delaware St (📞 302/322-6111), while more refined taste buds will enjoy the French-influenced seafood dishes at the grand 🍷 Arsenal at Old New Castle, next to the Episcopal Church at 30 Market St (📞 302/328-1290).

Dover

Located in the mostly agricultural center of the state, just west of US-13, the capital city of DOVER is basically a very small town, with a low-rise business district hemmed in by suburban houses. South of Lockerman Street, the main route through town, government buildings center on the 1792 Old State House, its onetime judicial and legislative chambers now restored as a museum (Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; free) and furnished with early American antiques.

In the same building as the visitor center (Wed–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; 📞 302/739-4266), at the corner of Duke of York and Federal streets next to the Old State House, the impressive Biggs Museum of American Art (same hours; 📍 www.biggsmuseum.org; free) has historical and decorative art displays, including Colonial-era furniture, paintings by the likes of Benjamin West and Gilbert Stuart, silver and porcelain services, and grand landscapes from Albert Bierstadt and Thomas Cole. The Delaware State Museums, 316 S Governors Ave (all Tues–Fri 10am–3.30pm, Sat 9am–5pm; 📍 history.delaware.gov; free), comprise a quaint trio located a short walk west of the green, highlighted by the Johnson Victrola Museum, dedicated to the memory of Dover-born engineer Eldridge Reeves Johnson, who helped to invent the Victrola. The layout is like a 1920s music store: dozens of “talking machines,” from early wind-ups to prototype jukeboxes, play period recordings, and amusing photographs document early, pre-electric recording techniques.

For more than fifty years, Spence's Bazaar, two blocks south on Queen Street at 550 S New St (Tues & Fri 7.30am–6.30pm; free), has hosted a free-for-all flea market. All of Dover turns out for this, including dozens of local Amish, who ride here in their old horse-drawn buggies to sell homegrown fruits and vegetables. A few miles outside town, the eighteen-acre John Dickinson Plantation, off Rte 9 at 340 Kitts Hummock Rd (Tues–Sat 10am–3.30pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; ☎ 302/739-3277; free), is where costumed re-enactors of Colonial residents, including slaves, go about the paces of farming, cooking, and gardening; both the estate's grounds and 1740 brick mansion are viewable on various tours, lasting ninety minutes to two hours.

Many chain motels line US-13, but you can get a taste of the local flavor at one of the B&Bs. The Little Creek Inn, 2623 N Little Creek Rd, off Hwy 8 (☎ 302/730-1300, ☞ www.littlecreekinn.com; Ⓜ), an attractive 1860 estate, has five rooms (some with Jacuzzis) featuring period appointments, as well as a pool, gym, and bocce court. Similar amenities can be found at the State Street Inn, 228 N State St (☎ 302/734-2294, ☞ www.statestreetinn.com; Ⓜ), whose rooms are a bit smaller but are more centrally located. As for eating, most of Dover's restaurants are concentrated on Loockerman and State streets in the town center, just north of the green. W.T. Smithers, 140 State St (☎ 302/674-8875) offers reasonably priced steaks, sandwiches, and seafood, while the Old Town Pub, 107 W Loockerman St (☎ 302/734-4575), is the spot locals visit to hoist a few brews and chow down on solid deli fare.

The Delaware coast

The thirty-mile-long Delaware coast is one of the little-known jewels of the East Coast. Its only really built-up resort, packed solid in summer, is Rehoboth Beach. The historic fishing community of Lewes is also attractive, but what really sets the area apart are the long stretches of sand you can have to yourself at times. Much has been preserved as open space, most extensively at Delaware Seashore State Park, which stretches south from Rehoboth to the Maryland border.

Lewes

Accessible via Hwy-1, or on the ferry from Cape May, New Jersey (see p.195), the natural harbor at the mouth of Delaware Bay at LEWES has attracted seafarers ever since a Dutch whaling company set up a small colony here in 1631, a history outlined in the mock-Dutch Zwaanendael Museum, in the heart of town on Savannah Road at Kings Highway (Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; free; ☎ 302/645-1148). The CVB next door (June–Sept Mon–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat & Sun 10am–2pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 1–4pm; ☎ 302/645-8073 or 1-877/465-3937, ☞ www.leweschamber.com), housed inside a gambrel-roofed 1730s farmhouse, has walking-tour maps of the town and its numerous eighteenth-century homes. While wandering, don't miss the Lewes Historic Complex, three blocks north at 110 Shipcarpenter St (mid-June to early Oct Mon–Sat 11am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm, May to mid-June Sat 11am–4pm; $5; ☞ www.historiclewes.org), a collection of twelve classic properties (two of them off-site and charging $3 admission) dating from the early Colonial to late Victorian periods, including a crude plankhouse, a doctor's office, a store, and a boathouse.

Though Lewes has a proud history, most people come here for the beach. There's an extensive strand along the usually calm Delaware Bay at the foot of the town, while three-thousand-acre, four-mile-long Cape Henlopen State Park (☎ 302/645-8983), where the bay meets the open ocean just a mile east of the town center, offers the chance to camp ($27–29 per night) beside the biggest sand dunes north of Cape Hatteras. For a bit of a diversion, ride the ferry across Delaware Bay from beside the state park to the pleasant Victorian beach resort of Cape May, New Jersey (80min trip; 6–15 services daily; times vary by day and season; April–Oct $29 per car, $9.50 per person, Nov–Mar $23/$7; ☎ 1-800/64-FERRY, 🌐 www.capemaylewesferry.com).

You can walk almost everywhere in town, or rent a bike from Lewes Cycle Sports, 526 Savannah Rd (☎ 302/645-4544). Thanks to its proximity to Rehoboth Beach, in summer accommodation prices can reach $150 or more a night, even for a fairly dismal unit. There are cheap, adequate motels along Savannah Road, while the B&B scene is pricier (and less appealing) than you might expect; try instead more upscale spots like Hotel Blue, 110 Anglers Rd (☎ 302/645-4880, 🌐 www.hotelblue.info; by season 5–8), whose rooms and suites come with flat-panel TVs, boutique furnishings, and Internet access. Cheaper accommodation is available at the Zwaanendael Inn, 142 2nd St (☎ 302/645-6466, 🌐 www.zwaanendaelinn.com; 4–6 by season), best for its central location and simple, cozy units with a smattering of antiques. Most of the restaurants, not surprisingly, feature seafood, including the Lighthouse (☎ 302/645-6271), by the bridge, with its gut-busting “Super Seafood Bash” piled in a large basket; for more formal Italian dining, opt for La Rosa Negra, 1201-F Savannah Road (☎ 302/645-1980), serving succulent steak, veal, fish, and crab cakes. The Buttery, 2nd St at Savannah Rd (☎ 302/645-7755), is a fine French bistro that specializes in crab cakes, burgers, and seafood sandwiches for lunch, and much pricier steak and rack of lamb for dinner.

Rehoboth Beach

A nonstop parade of motels and malls along the six miles of Hwy-1 links Lewes with REHOBOTH BEACH, Delaware's largest and liveliest beach resort, which merges into Dewey Beach at its southern end.

The resort's wooden boardwalk is one of the last ones left on the East Coast, stretching along the Atlantic to either side of Rehoboth Avenue – “The Avenue” – which acts as the main drag, its four short blocks clogged with the usual array of T-shirt vendors and seaside kitsch. Most of the restaurants and nightspots are concentrated here, though you're better off sticking to Lewes for dining. Exceptions include the Back Porch Café, 59 Rehoboth Ave (☎ 302/227-3674), with its upscale selection of softshell crab, guinea fowl, and pan-roasted rabbit, and 🍷 Dogfish Head, 320 Rehoboth Ave (☎ 302/226-2739), which has affordable, wood-grilled seafood and steaks, but is best known for its acclaimed microbrews and on-site distillery.

Apart from the peak times of July and August, it shouldn't be too difficult to find a bed in one of Rehoboth's many motels, including the Sandcastle, 123 Second St (☎ 302/227-0400 or 1-800/372-2112, 🌐 www.thesandcastlemotel.com; 5–6 by season), which has a pool and sundeck, and the Crosswinds, three blocks from the boardwalk, 312 Rehoboth Ave (☎ 302/227-7997, 🌐 www.crosswindsmotel.com; 3–7), which offers rooms with refrigerators. Among area B&Bs, try the Corner Cupboard Inn, 50 Park Ave (☎ 302/227-8553, 🌐 www.cornercupboardinn.com; 4–7 by season), with seventeen basic units and its own pleasant restaurant or the Rehoboth Guest House, 40 Maryland Ave (☎ 302/227-4117 or 1-800/564-0493, 🌐 www.rehobothguesthouse.com; 4–5 by season), which has outdoor cedar showers and a tree-shaded backyard in addition to its also basic rooms. For more information, contact the Chamber of Commerce, 501 Rehoboth Ave (☎ 302/227-2233 or 1-800/441-1329, 🌐 www.beach-fun.com).

South of Rehoboth, Delaware Seashore State Park (☎ 302/227-2800, 🌐 www.destateparks.com) stretches for miles along a thin, sandy peninsula, split by Hwy-1 and bounded on the east by the Atlantic and on the west by various freshwater marshlands. (Parts of the park are currently being reconstructed and won't be open until 2008.) South of the park, as you approach the Maryland border, you'll pass the concrete tower blocks of Bethany Beach and the pleasant barrier island of Fenwick Island State Park (daily 8am–dusk; ☎ 302/227-2800; free), a three-mile stretch that offers good swimming and the opportunity for “surf fishing” – casting a line from your car parked on the beach itself.

The South

CHAPTER 6

Highlights

- * Blue Ridge Parkway, NC A tortuous but exhilarating wilderness highway that makes a destination in itself. See p.504
- * Martin Luther King Birth Home, Atlanta, GA Engaging tours take you around King's childhood home, in the South's most dynamic city. See p.526
- * Savannah, GA With its romantic overgrown garden squares and busy waterfront, this gorgeous, atmospheric town is a dream to walk around. See p.534
- * Memphis, TN Especially exciting for music fans, who could spend days checking out Beale Street, Sun Studio, the Stax Museum, Al Green's church, and, of course, Graceland. See p.553
- * Country Music Hall of Fame, Nashville, TN At once a fascinating interactive museum and a treasure trove of memorabilia, including Elvis's gold Cadillac. See p.569
- * The Mississippi Delta, MS The birthplace of the blues holds an irresistible appeal, with Clarksdale as the obvious first port of call. See p.588

△ Cottonfields in the Mississippi Delta

The South

Mark Twain put it best, as early as 1882: “In the South, the [Civil] war is what AD is elsewhere; they date everything from it.” Several generations later, the legacies of slavery and “The War Between the States” remain evident throughout the southern states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Arkansas. It’s impossible to travel through the region without experiencing constant jolting reminders of the two epic historical clashes that have shaped its destiny: the Civil War, and the civil rights movement of the 1950s and 1960s.

Although it’s debatable whether the much-vaunted “New South” truly exists, the last few decades have unquestionably seen considerable change. The inspirational campaigns that finally secured black participation in Southern elections have resulted not only in the prominence of black political leaders but also in the emergence of liberal white counterparts like Jimmy Carter and Bill Clinton. High-tech industries have moved in, luring considerable inward migration, while urban centers such as Atlanta, the birthplace of Dr Martin Luther King Jr and venue for the 1996 Olympics, are booming.

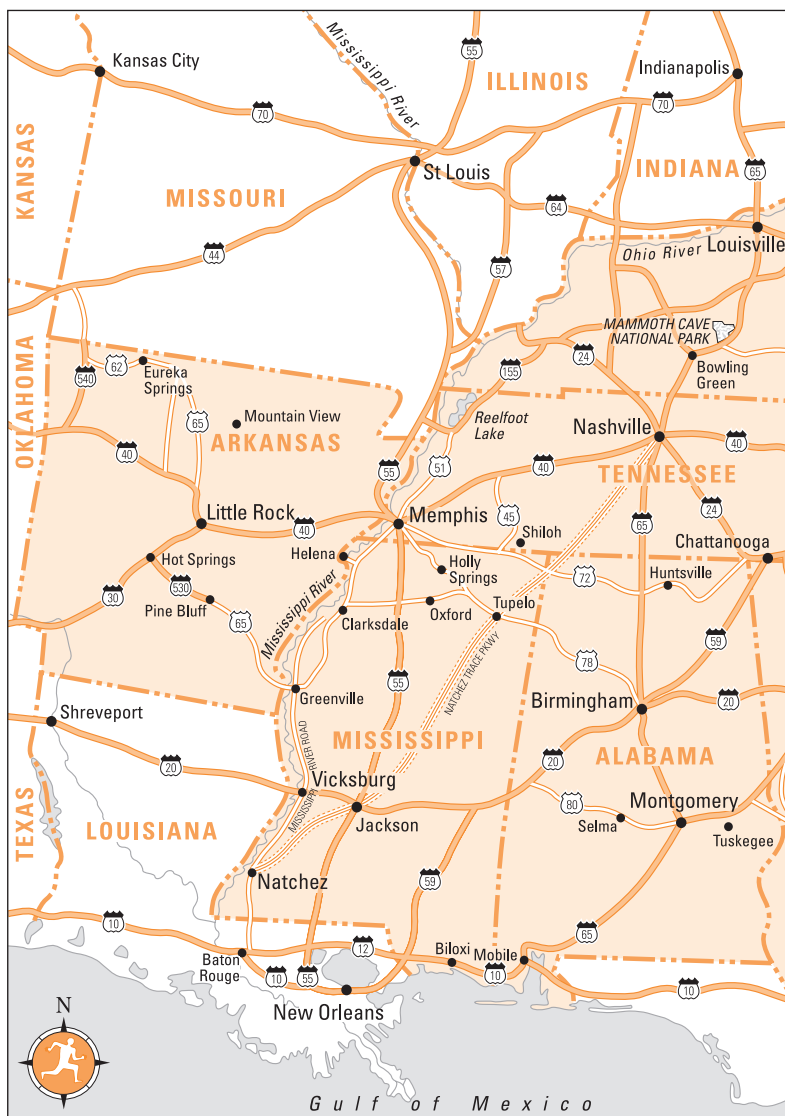

That said, it’s misleading in any case to generalize too much about “the South.” Even during the Civil War there were substantial pockets of pro-Union support, particularly in the mountains, while during the long century of segregation that followed, certain states, such as Mississippi and Alabama, were far more brutally oppressive than others. These days, inequities within the South, between for example the industrialized “Sun Belt” centers of North Carolina and northern Alabama and the much poorer rural backwaters of southern Georgia, Mississippi, or Tennessee, are just as significant as those between the South and the rest of the nation, and are no longer so clearly demarcated along racial lines.

For many travelers, the most exciting aspect of a visit to the South has to be its music. Fans flock to the homelands of Elvis Presley, Hank Williams, Robert Johnson, Dolly Parton, and Otis Redding, heading to the country and blues meccas of Nashville and Memphis, or seeking out backwoods barn dances in Appalachia and blues jook joints in the Mississippi Delta or South Carolina. The Southern experience is also reflected in a rich regional literature, documented by the likes of William Faulkner, Carson McCullers, Eudora Welty, Margaret Mitchell, and Harper Lee.

Other major destinations for visitors include the elegant coastal cities of Charleston and Savannah, frenzied beach resorts such as Myrtle Beach, college towns like Athens and Chapel Hill, and the historic Mississippi River ports of Natchez and Vicksburg. Away from the urban areas, much Southern scenery consists of fertile but sun-baked farmlands, the undulating hillsides dotted with wooden shacks and rust-red barns, and broken by occasional forests. Highlights include the misty Appalachian mountains of Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina; the subtropical beaches and tranquil barrier islands along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts; and the river road through the tiny settlements of the flat Mississippi Delta.

Unless your primary goal is the coastline, where the beaches offer a less expensive alternative to neighboring Florida, it's better to avoid visiting during midsummer.

In July and August, the daily high temperature is mostly a very humid 90°F, and while almost every public building is air-conditioned, the heat can be debilitating. May and June are more bearable, and tend to see a lot of local festivals, while the fall colors in the mountains – just as beautiful and a lot less expensive and congested than New England – are at their headiest during October.

Public transportation in rural areas is poor. In any case, it's best to take things at your own pace – you'll find things to see and do in the most unlikely places – so renting a car is the best idea. Accommodation in the South is generally good value. Motels are everywhere, while abundant B&Bs offer a chance to sample the much-vaunted Southern hospitality – though unless you share a broadly Confederate view of history, they can also tend to be socially uncomfortable. The region's varied cuisine, much of it dished out at simple roadside shacks, ranges from the ubiquitous grits (maize porridge) to highly calorific, irresistible soul food: fried chicken, wood-smoked barbecue, and the like, along with turnip greens, spinach, macaroni, and all manner of tasty vegetables. Fish is also good, from catfish to the wonderful Low Country Boils – seafood stews served with rice, traditionally prepared on the sea islands.

Some history

The Spanish and French both constructed settlements along the southern coastline of North America during the sixteenth century. However, it was the British who dominated the region from the seventeenth century onwards, establishing agricultural colonies in the Carolinas and Georgia. Both climate and soil favored staple crops, and massive labor-intensive plantations sprang up, predominantly growing tobacco prior to independence, and later shifting to cotton. No self-respecting European would cross the Atlantic to toil on a plantation, though, so the big landowners turned to slavery as the most profitable source of labor. Millions of blacks were brought across from Africa, most arriving via the port of Charleston.

Although the South consistently prospered until the middle of the nineteenth century, there was little incentive to diversify its economy. As a result, the Northern states began to surge ahead in both agriculture and industry; while the South grew the crops, Northern factories monopolized the more lucrative manufacturing of finished goods. So long as there were equal numbers of slave-owning and “free” states, the South continued to play a central role in national politics, and was able to resist abolitionist sentiment. However, the more the United States fulfilled its “Manifest Destiny” to spread across the continent, the more new states joined the Union for which plantation agriculture, and thus slavery, was not appropriate. Southern politicians and plantation owners accused the North of political and economic aggression, and felt that they were losing all say in the future of the nation. The election of Abraham Lincoln, a longtime critic of slavery, as president in 1860 brought the crisis to a head. South Carolina seceded from the Union that December, and ten more southern states swiftly followed. On February 18, 1861, Jefferson Davis was sworn in as president of the Confederate States of America – an occasion on which his vice president proudly proclaimed that this was the first government in the history of the world “based upon this great physical and moral truth . . . that the Negro is not equal to the white man.”

During the resultant Civil War, the South was outgunned and ultimately overwhelmed by the vast resources of the North. The Confederates fired the first shots and scored the first victory in April 1861, when the Union garrison at Fort Sumter (outside Charleston) surrendered. The Union was on the military defensive until mid-1862, when its navy blockaded Georgia and the Carolinas and occupied key ports. Then Union forces in the west, under generals Grant and Sherman, swept through Tennessee. By the end of 1863 the North had taken Vicksburg, the final Confederate-held port on the Mississippi, as well as the strategic mountain-locked town of Chattanooga on the Tennessee–Georgia border. Grant proceeded north to Virginia, while Sherman captured the transportation nexus of Atlanta and began a bloody and ruthless march to the coast, burning everything in his path. With 258,000 men dead, the Confederacy's defeat was total, and General Robert E. Lee surrendered on April 9, 1865, at Appomattox in Virginia.

The war left the South in chaos. A quarter of the South's adult white male population had been killed, and two-thirds of Southern wealth destroyed. From controlling thirty percent of the nation's assets in 1860, the South was down to twelve percent in 1870, while the spur the war gave to industrialization meant that the North was booming. For a brief period of Reconstruction, the South was occupied by Union troops. Newly freed Southern blacks were able to vote, and black representatives were elected to both state and federal office. However, unrepentant former Confederates thwarted any potential for change, and by the end of the century the Southern states were firmly back under white Democratic control. "Jim Crow" segregation laws were imposed, backed by the terror of the Ku Klux Klan, and poll taxes, literacy tests, and property qualifications disenfranchised virtually all blacks. Many found themselves little better off as sharecroppers – in which virtually all they could earn from raising crops went to pay their landlords – than they had been as slaves, and there were mass migrations to cities like Memphis and Atlanta, as well as to the North.

Not until the Supreme Court outlawed segregation in schools in 1954 was there any sign that the federal authorities in Washington might concern themselves with inequities in the South. Even then, individual Southern states proved extremely reluctant to effect the required changes. In the face of institutionalized white resistance, non-violent black protestors coalesced to form the civil rights movement, and broke down segregation through their own mass action. After tackling such issues as public transportation, as in the Montgomery bus boycott and the Freedom Rides, and segregated dining facilities, as in the Greensboro lunch-counter sit-in, the campaign culminated in finally restoring full black voter registration. One obvious itinerary for modern travelers is to trace the footsteps of Dr Martin Luther King Jr., from his birthplace in Atlanta, through his church in Montgomery, to the site of his assassination in Memphis.

The dispossession of the Native Americans is often the forgotten chapter of Southern history. Colonial powers at best tolerated the Indians, for the most part peaceful agrarian tribes, and used them as allies in their imperialist wars with each other. However, after the Revolution, pressure from plantation owners and small farmers led to the forced removal in the 1830s of the "five civilized tribes" – the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole – to malarial Oklahoma. Today only a few thousand Native Americans live in the South.

North Carolina

NORTH CAROLINA, though the most industrialized of the Southern states, remains relatively rural and poor, holding eight million people spread over an area larger than England. Geographically, it breaks down into three distinct areas – running from east to west, the coast, the Piedmont, and the mountains – so touring it provides plenty of variety. For visitors, the coast is the most promising region, with good beaches, beautiful landscapes, and a fascinating history. The inner coast consists largely of the less developed Albemarle Peninsula, with colonial Edenton nearby. The central Piedmont is dominated by manufacturing cities, and by the academic institutions of the prestigious "Research Triangle":

Raleigh, the state capital, is home to North Carolina State University; Durham has Duke; and the University of North Carolina is in trendy Chapel Hill. Winston-Salem combines tobacco culture and Moravian heritage, while Charlotte is distinguished by little but its downtown skyscrapers. In the mountains, one of the most stunning stretches of Appalachia, the only towns of any size, Asheville and Boone, make nice places to stop along the spectacular Blue Ridge Parkway; Great Smoky Mountains National Park overlaps the border with Tennessee.

Getting around North Carolina

North Carolina's major airports are at Charlotte, an arrival point for transatlantic flights, Raleigh-Durham, and Wilmington, all of which will connect you with several major US cities. A tiny airport at Manteo in the Outer Banks (☎252/475-5570, 🌐www.fly2mqi.com) runs charter flights to the barrier islands, but driving is easier. Charlotte, Raleigh, Durham, and Greensboro (with an express bus link to Winston-Salem) are served by Amtrak, but unfortunately there is no coastal route. Plenty of buses run within the Piedmont; schedules are much less frequent in the mountains and along the coast, both of which are best explored by car. The state also has a good network of cycling routes along quiet country roads; for information, contact the Department of Transportation (☎919/807-0777, 🌐www.ncdot.org).

The North Carolina coast

The North Carolina coast, which ranges through salt marshes, beaches, barrier islands, and estuaries, holds most of the state's more interesting historic sites. Among these are Roanoke Island, where the continent's earliest English colonists vanished in 1590, and Kill Devil Hills, where the Wright brothers achieved the first powered flight just over three centuries later. As for scenic beauty, the Outer Banks, the long reef of barrier islands that stretch down from Virginia, are in places beautifully unspoiled, though elsewhere they're sadly downright tacky.

Edenton and the Albemarle

The huge Albemarle Peninsula remains largely unexploited. Local towns try to make much of their Colonial history – this was the first area in North Carolina to have permanent European settlements, around the end of the seventeenth century – but often there's not a lot left to see. It's rewarding to explore, though, if you like to travel off the beaten path, its sleepy old towns and remote plantations set in wide swathes of rural farmland and endless marshes, that eventually give way altogether to water in a ragged pattern of sounds and lakes.

Edenton

EDENTON, set along a beautiful, placid Albemarle Sound waterfront, was established as North Carolina's first state capital in 1722. A major center of unrest in the American Revolution, it remained a prosperous port until the early nineteenth century, when it began to fade. Nowadays, if you like peace and quiet, it makes a nice little base for explorations of the coast, with some good B&Bs and restaurants, and a nostalgic small-town ambiance.

The town's main road, Broad Street, is interesting in an offbeat way, with its Victorian facades, old-fashioned stores, and three-screen vintage Liberty Theater. The Historic Edenton Visitor Center, 108 N Broad (April–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; ☎252/482-2637), runs trolley tours (Tues–Sat 10am, 11am, noon, 2pm, 3pm & 4pm; $10) that take in all the major sites, including a fine collection of Colonial and pre–Civil War houses. There’s also a free, self-guided walking tour.

The visitor center provides an African-American history walking-tour map as well; among other important figures, Edenton was home to the remarkable Harriet Jacobs, a runaway slave who hid for seven years in her grandmother’s attic. In 1842, she finally escaped to the North, and was eventually reunited in Boston with the two children she had had by a white man in Edenton. She wrote this amazing story as Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl, one of the most famous published slave narratives of the nineteenth century. None of the buildings mentioned in the book is still standing, but the walking and trolley tours give you an idea of where places were.

Luxurious B&Bs include the peaceful Trestle House Inn, set in seven acres overlooking a nature refuge on a lake; it’s five miles south of town, off Hwy-32, at 632 Soundside Rd (☎252/482-2282, 🌐www.trestlehouseinn.com; 5). A few minutes’ walk from the waterfront, the friendly Governor Eden Inn, 304 N Broad St (☎252/482-2072 or 1-866/872-5608, 🌐www.governoredenninn.com; 4), offers appealing rooms and a huge veranda. Edenton has a gratifying number of good places to eat. Chero’s, 112 W Water St (☎252/482-5525), is a funky, colorful place serving delicious Mediterranean and regional food, while the fishy Waterman’s Grill, 427 S Broad St (☎252/482-7733), gets packed with convivial locals at dinnertime. For Carolina pit-cooked barbecue, try Lane’s Family BBQ, 421 E Church St (☎252/482-4008). Acoustic Coffee, 302 S Broad St (☎252/482-7465), has coffee, pastries, and live music on Friday evenings.

Exploring the Albemarle

Albemarle plantation life is brought alive in the informed, illuminating tours of Hope, the home of David Stone, a state governor and US senator of the Revolutionary and Federal periods. It’s a remote place, set in the sleepy fields of the rural heartland; you’ll find it off Hwy-308, a few miles west of Windsor, which is about 25 miles southwest of Edenton (tours: April–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; Nov–March 10am–4pm, Sun 2–5pm; $8; 🌐www.hopeplantation.org). The main house at Hope, dating from 1803, was built to an English template, and is now filled with hand-carved wooden furniture. Admission also includes entrance to the 1763 King-Bazemore House, a simple planter’s home.

At Creswell, 25 miles southeast of Edenton on US-64, a vivid picture of slave life is given by Somerset Place State Historic Site (April–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Nov–March Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; free). The small museum here tells the history of the plantation, from its origins in the 1780s to its growth, by 1860, into a 2000-acre enterprise, and its demise after the Civil War. Old photos, documents, and a timeline detail the steady accumulation of more than three hundred enslaved Africans and the work they did. On the grounds – a sweeping vista of lowland fields and huge oaks, dissolving into marshland beyond – you can walk through reconstructions of the plantation hospital and two typical slave houses.

There’s a campground at neighboring Pettigrew State Park (☎252/797-4475; $15; first-come, first-served), an area of mighty trees ranged around a shallow rainwater-fed lake, ideal for fishing. Even if you don’t stay, you should visit the tiny museum at water’s edge, where the interesting display on local Native Americans includes two 4000-year-old dugout canoes that were raised from the lake.

The southern shore of the Albemarle Peninsula holds less to see, though the marshy countryside and tree-lined roads make for a pleasant drive. Lake Mattamuskeet Wildlife Refuge (☎252/926-4021) is an amazing sight in winter, when thousands of swans migrate here from Canada. The refuge’s entrance is on Hwy-94, about a mile north of its intersection with US-264. South of Mattamuskeet, you can catch a ferry from Swan Quarter to Ocracoke on the Outer Banks (see p.496).

The Outer Banks

The OUTER BANKS are a string of skinny barrier islands, the remnants of ancient sand dunes, which stretch about 180 miles from the Virginia border to Cape Lookout, near Beaufort. This is a great region to meander, with some wonderful wild beaches sprinkled with wispy sea oats, otherworldly marshes, and attractive small towns not totally given over to commercialization. Note that when Outer Banks hotels describe themselves as “waterfront,” it simply means they are on the coastal side of the road, not that they necessarily have ocean views. There is no public transportation on the Outer Banks, apart from the ferries between islands and to the mainland.

If you come in on the main road from the north, US-158, stop at the well-stocked Cape Hatteras National Park Service visitor center (daily: June–Aug 9am–6pm, Sept–May 9am–5pm; ☎ 252/261-4644, 🌐 www.nps.gov/caha) as you cross the low bridge from the mainland. South along US-158 and the parallel shoreline Beach Road, the coastal towns of Kitty Hawk, Kill Devil Hills, and Nags Head are strung out without a break, and the fine beaches are lined with motels, restaurants, and huge vacation “cottages.” Arriving from the west on Hwy-64, you’ll come to another very useful visitor center (daily 9am–5.30pm; ☎ 252/473-2138, 🌐 www.outerbanks.org) on Roanoke Island. The island, site of the first English settlement in the US, has obvious historical interest; its village, Manteo, is perhaps the nicest on the Outer Banks.

Kill Devil Hills and Nags Head

The main feature of the Wright Brothers National Memorial (daily: June–Aug 9am–6pm, Sept–May 9am–5pm; $4; ☎ 252/441-7430, 🌐 www.nps.gov/wrbr), just off the main road at KILL DEVIL HILLS, is the Wright Brothers Monument, a 60ft granite fin atop a 90ft dune (which is in fact the Kill Devil Hill). The memorial commemorates the plucky Orville Wright’s first powered flight, on December 17, 1903. (Most histories say the flight took place at Kitty Hawk, a town eight miles north, but that was just the name of the nearest post office.) A boulder next to the memorial’s visitor center marks where Orville’s first aircraft hit the ground, and successive numbered markers show the distance of each of his three subsequent flights. A museum in the visitor center records the brothers’ various experiments. After several years of trials with kites and gliders, visiting the Outer Banks for a few weeks at a time and living in makeshift shacks on the beach, Orville and Wilbur finally launched their powered plane on a cold December morning, shaking hands before the takeoff. As one of the locals acting as ground crew remarked, “We couldn’t help notice how they held on to each other’s hand, sort o’ like folks parting who weren’t sure they’d ever see one another again.” The phlegmatic Orville recorded the historic moment of takeoff in his diary: “The machine lifted from the truck . . . I found control of the front rudder quite difficult . . . the machine would rise suddenly to about 10 feet and then as suddenly, on turning the rudder, dart for the ground . . . time about twelve seconds.”

A few miles south in NAGS HEAD, at Mile 12 on Hwy-158, Jockey’s Ridge State Park (☎ 252/441-7132) boasts the largest sand dunes on the east coast. The park has trails and summer nature programs, and instructors from Kitty Hawk Kites (☎ 252/441-4124 or 1-877/359-8447, 🌐 www.kittyhawk.com) can teach you the basics of hang-gliding (from $99). It’s a beautiful place to be at sunset.

Motels line the beaches north of Oregon Inlet, which separates Bodie Island and Cape Hatteras National Seashore. The First Colony Inn, a luxurious B&B at 6720

S Virginia Dare Trail, Nags Head (☎252/441-2343 or 1-800/368-9390, 🌐www.firstcolonyinn.com; 🍷8), is housed in a 1930s beach hotel, with wonderful verandas and a pool. The standard of food around these parts varies considerably, but the Flying Fish Café, at Mile 10 in Kill Devil Hills (☎252/441-6894), serves Mediterranean-influenced cuisine, with seafood or meat entrees at $17–24. In Nags Head, Tortuga's Lie, at Mile 11 on Beach Road (☎252/441-7299), is a funky place for creative shellfish, Tex-Mex, and Asian-influenced dishes.

Roanoke Island and Manteo

ROANOKE ISLAND, which lies between the mainland and Bodie Island, is accessible from both by bridges. This was the first English settlement in North America, founded in 1585, and makes much of its semi-mythical status as Sir Walter Raleigh's so-called "Lost Colony" (see box, p.494).

Nothing authentic survives of the Roanoke settlement, though Fort Raleigh National Historic Site, three miles north of Manteo off US-64, contains a tiny conjectural reconstruction of the colonists' earthwork fort, set in a wooded glade with a canopy of Spanish moss (daily: June–Aug 9am–6pm, Sept–May 9am–5pm; free; ☎252/473-5772, 🌐www.nps.gov/fora). A museum covers the history of the expeditions and local Indian interaction with the colonists, and an outdoor amphitheater on the ocean hosts performances of The Lost Colony, an undeniably impressive drama, staged here since 1937 (June to late Aug Mon–Sat 8.30pm; $16–20; ☎252/473-3414, 🌐www.thelostcolony.org). Outside, a simple monument commemorates the Underground Railroad and the Freedmen's Colony that formed here during the Civil War. Adjacent to the fort, the Elizabethan Gardens are elegantly landscaped with walkways, statues, and subtropical blooms (June–Aug Mon–Fri 9am–8pm, Sun 9am–7pm; April, May, Sept & Oct daily 9am–6pm; March & Oct daily 9am–5pm; Nov–Jan daily 9am–4pm; $8; ☎252/473-3234, 🌐www.elizabethangardens.org).

Just across from the waterfront at Manteo, the Roanoke Island Festival Park has a slew of lively historical attractions that, if seen in full, take several hours (daily: April to mid-June & mid-Aug to Oct 10am–6pm; mid-June to mid-Aug 10am–7pm; Nov–Dec & mid-Feb to March 10am–5pm; $9 tickets valid for two consecutive days; ☎252/475-1500, 🌐www.roanokeisland.com). Highlights include the adventure museum, an interactive trot through the history of the Outer Banks, the settlement site, a living museum peopled with "Elizabethan" soldiers and craftsmen, and the Elizabeth II, a reconstruction of a sixteenth-century English ship. Wherever you go, you won't escape the attentions of the wandering costumed docents, ever keen to engage hapless visitors in Elizabethan-style chat.

If you're after fine dining on the Outer Banks, Manteo is the place. Clara's Seafood Grill (☎252/473-1727), right on the waterfront, offers tasty and creative shellfish dishes, with nice views, while the Full Moon Café, across from the waterfront at the corner of Sir Walter Raleigh and Queen Elizabeth streets (☎252/473-6666), is more casual, serving chowder, gourmet sandwiches, quiche, and coffee. Manteo also has a good range of places to stay. The Outdoors Inn, 406 Uppowoc St (☎252/473-1356, 🌐www.theoutdoorsinn.com; 🍷9), has two stylish, brightly decorated en-suite B&B rooms in a lovely, airy home; the owners offer a range of dive trips, kayaking, and fishing charters. The Island Guesthouse, on Hwy-64 (☎252/473-2434, 🌐www.theislandmotel.com; 🍷9), is more of a motel, with fully equipped rooms and a sociable atmosphere.

Cape Hatteras National Seashore

CAPE HATTERAS NATIONAL SEASHORE stretches south from South Nags Head on Bodie Island onto Hatteras and Ocracoke islands, with forty miles of wonderful unspoiled beaches on its seaward side. Most tourists just drive

Roanoke – The Lost Colony

According to popular myth, the first English attempt to settle in North America – Sir Walter Raleigh's colony at Roanoke – remains an unsolved mystery, in which the "Lost Colony" disappeared without trace.

Sir Walter himself never visited North America. The original patent to establish a colony was granted by Queen Elizabeth I to his half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, but Gilbert died following an abortive landfall in Newfoundland in 1583. Raleigh assumed responsibility, and directed subsequent explorations further south. A 1584 expedition pinpointed Roanoke Island, behind the Outer Banks of North Carolina and thus hidden from the view of the Spanish, who were by now jealously patrolling the Atlantic seaboard from their bases in Florida. The English named the region Virginia, in honour of the Virgin Queen.

A party led by Ralph Lane in 1585 was far more interested in searching for gold than in the hard graft of agriculture; their hopes of finding a fortune were quickly dashed, however, and the following year they sailed home with Sir Francis Drake, who visited on his way up from the West Indies. In 1587, 117 more colonists set off from England, intending to farm a more fertile site beside Chesapeake Bay; but, fearing Spanish attack, the ships that carried them dumped them at Roanoke once again. Their leader, John White, who went home to fetch supplies a month later, was stranded in England when war broke out with Spain, and the Spanish Armada set sail. When he finally managed to persuade a reluctant sea captain to carry him back to Roanoke in 1590, he found the island abandoned. Even so, he was reassured by the absence of the agreed-upon distress signal (a carved Maltese cross), while the word "Croatoan" inscribed on a tree seemed a clear message that the colonists had moved south to the eponymous island. However, fearful of both the Spanish and of the approaching hurricane season, White's ships refused to take him any further.

There the story usually ends, with the colonists never seen again. In fact, during the next decade, several reports reached the subsequent, more durable colony of Jamestown (in what's now Virginia), of English settlers being dispersed as slaves among the Native American tribes of North Carolina. Rather than admit their inability to rescue their fellow countrymen, and thus expose a vulnerability that might deter prospective settlers or investors, the Jamestown colonists seem simply to have written their predecessors out of history.

In a little-known footnote, Roanoke Island gained and lost another colony during the Civil War. After it was captured by Union forces in February 1862, so many freed and runaway slaves made their way here through Confederate lines that the federal government formally declared it to be a "Freedmen's Colony." Around four thousand blacks were living on Roanoke by the end of the war, and many of the men served in the Union army. During Reconstruction, the government returned all land to its former owners, and the colony was disbanded. Roanoke retains a substantial black population to this day.

straight through on Hwy-12, and even in high season you can pull off the road and walk across the dunes to deserted beaches. The salt marshes on the western side are also beautiful, and at the northern end of Hatteras Island the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge (☎ 252/473-1131, 🌐 www.fws.gov/peaisland) offers guided canoe tours, trails, and observation platforms from which you can see a wide variety of birdlife.

Nearly a thousand ships have been wrecked along this treacherous stretch of coast since the sixteenth century. At the south end of Hatteras Island, not far from the early nineteenth-century black-and-white-striped Cape Hatteras Lighthouse, a visitor center (daily: summer 9am–6pm; rest of year 9am–5pm) has exhibits on the island's maritime history. The 208ft lighthouse itself, which you can climb (March–Oct; $6), was moved 2900ft inland from its original location to protect it from encroaching Atlantic waters. Further south, at the village of Frisco, the Native American Museum is a loving collection of arts and crafts from around the US, including a drum from a Hopi kiva, or prayer chamber. The museum also offers several acres of forested nature trails (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm, Mon by appointment; $5; ☎ 252/995-4440, 🌐 www.nativeamericanmuseum.org).

In Hatteras, next to the Ocracoke ferry landing, the Graveyard of the Atlantic Museum (Tues–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 11am–2pm; free; 🌐 www.graveyardoftheatlantic.com) tells the stories of the explorers, pirates, and Civil War blockade-runners who perished along this wild stretch of coast, with lots of models, photos, and artifacts retrieved from Outer Banks shipwrecks.

Various motels, food shops, and restaurants are scattered through the fly-blown settlements along Hwy-12. The Cape Hatteras Motel in Buxton, a mile from the lighthouse (☎ 252/995-5611, 🌐 www.capehatterasmotel.com; 4–7), has comfy oceanfront rooms, a pool, and a relaxed, friendly atmosphere. A good place for breakfast and seafood is Diamond Shoals, also in Buxton on Hwy-12 (☎ 252/995-5217), while on the waterfront at Hatteras, Austin Creek Grill serves stylish salads, shellfish, and pasta nightly (☎ 252/986-1511). Camping is best at one of the first-come, first-served National Park Service campgrounds (☎ 252/473-2111, 🌐 www.nps.gov/caha; $20 per night); they're located at Frisco and Oregon Inlet on Bodie Island (both mid-April to mid-Sept); and at Cape Point near Buxton (late May to early Sept).

Ocracoke Island

Peaceful, undeveloped OCRACOKE ISLAND is forty minutes by free ferry from Hatteras (see box, p.496) – and is even more beautiful. This 16-mile ribbon of land is bisected by Hwy-12, and it's perfectly possible to pull over anywhere and enjoy a deserted patch of beach. Despite the crowds of tourists in the tiny village of Ocracoke itself, at its southern tip, the island somehow seems to have hung on to its easy-going atmosphere. There's nothing in particular to see, except perhaps the harbor and squat lighthouse (you can't go in), and a tiny British World War II naval cemetery. It's nicer instead just to catch some rays, take a stroll, or enjoy a cycle ride; a number of places, including hotels, rent bikes.

Hotels and B&Bs in Ocracoke village get full in summer, and are fairly expensive; as elsewhere on the Outer Banks, rates drop come September. The Anchorage Inn, on Hwy-12 (☎ 252/928-1101, 🌐 www.theanchorageinn.com; 5), is comfortable, with sea views, a pool, and complimentary continental breakfast. Or you could sleep in one of the unusual “crow's-nest” rooms in the 1901 Island Inn and Dining Room, on Hwy-12 (☎ 1-877/456-3466, 🌐 www.ocracokeislandinn.com; 3–6), whose restaurant is renowned for its crabcakes (☎ 252/928-7821). Other, less expensive restaurants include the Back Porch, on Back Road (☎ 252/928-6401), which serves great fish, and the lively Howard's Pub & Raw Bar, a mile north of the village on Hwy-12 (☎ 252/928-4441), which offers more than two hundred beers, plus a full menu until 2am. It's one of the few places on the island that's open all year. The fairly isolated Park Service campground tends to be the first of the Outer Banks sites to fill up; unlike the others, it accepts reservations (☎ 1-800/365-2267; $20 per night; open mid-April to mid-Sept).

Cape Lookout National Seashore

The mainland between Cedar Island and Beaufort (see p.496) is a rural backwater, sparsely settled and hardly touched by tourists. The most likely reason to pass through is to get to the all-but-deserted CAPE LOOKOUT NATIONAL SEASHORE, a narrow ribbon of sand stretching south of Ocracoke Island along three

Ocracoke ferries

In summer, free ferries run between Hatteras and Ocracoke. The crossing takes forty minutes, although you may have to wait if you have a car – there's room for only thirty cars, and it's loaded on a first-come, first-served basis.

Hatteras–Ocracoke May–Oct every 30min 7.30am–7pm, hourly 5–7am & 7pm–midnight; Nov–April every 30min 9am–6pm, hourly 5am–9am & 6pm–midnight.

Ocracoke–Hatteras May–Oct every 30min 8.30am–7.30pm, hourly 5–8am & 8pm–midnight; Nov–April every 30min 10am–7pm, hourly 5am–9am & 7pm–midnight.

Ferries from Ocracoke also head south down the coast to Cedar Island on the mainland (2hr 15min; $1 pedestrian, $3 bike, $10 motorbike, $15 car) and to Swan Quarter on the Albemarle Peninsula (2hr 30min; same fares). Both require reservations in summer, preferably a day or two in advance (Ocracoke ☎1-800/345-1665, Cedar Island ☎1-800/856-0343, Swan Quarter ☎1-800/773-1094); at short notice you should be able to get the day you want, if not the time.

Between Ocracoke and Cedar Island summer nine or ten departures 7am–8.30pm; spring & fall six departures 7am–8.30pm; winter four departures 7am–4pm.

Ocracoke–Swan Quarter late May to early Sept 6.30am, 12.30pm, 4pm; no 4pm sailing rest of year.

Swan Quarter–Ocracoke late May to early Sept 7am, 9.30am, 4pm; no 7am sailing rest of year.

For further information contact ☎1-800/BY-FERRY or @www.ncferry.org.

undeveloped Outer Banks, with no roads or habitation. The seashore is only accessible by ferry (mid-March to early Dec) or private boat, and its few visitors share a total of around 56 miles of beach along all three islands, with the marshes on the landward side supporting rich and unusual plant- and birdlife that have adapted to the harsh, salty conditions. The visitor center is at the eastern end of the low-key mainland settlement of Harker's Island (daily 9am–5pm; ☎252/728-2250, @www.nps.gov/cal0), thirty miles south of the Cedar Island ferry terminal.

At the northern tip of the first island, North Core Banks, across from Ocracoke, stand the pretty, but eerie, ruins of the abandoned village of Portsmouth, whose last two residents left in 1971. Ferries arrive in Portsmouth from Ocracoke (around $16 roundtrip; call Rudy Austin on ☎252/928-4361). The ferry from Atlantic, south of Cedar Island on the mainland ($14 roundtrip; call Morris Marina on ☎252/225-4261), lands at Long Point, seventeen miles south of Portsmouth, which you can only reach on foot. Cabins on the island are operated by Morris Marina ($100 per night for up to six people); otherwise there's only primitive camping.

South Core Banks is served by private ferry from Davis, south of Atlantic on the mainland ($14 roundtrip; ☎1-877/956-6568). Here, too, the ferry company manages more than twenty cabins, all with showers (3–6). Camping is as primitive as on the north island, but the ferry operator can pick up food for you on the mainland and bring it across. Three passenger ferries run to the southern tip of the south island from Beaufort (see below) and from Harker's Island, to within two or three miles of Cape Lookout itself and its lighthouse.

To get to the peaceful Shackleford Banks, inhabited by wild mustangs since the early 1500s, when they are thought to have swum ashore from shipwrecks, you can catch ferries from Beaufort and Morehead City (see opposite).

Beaufort

BEAUFORT, about 150 miles southeast of Raleigh, is probably the nicest of North Carolina's coastal towns. A good base for visiting the nearby beaches, it's also a relaxing place in its own right, with an attractive waterfront that's particularly lively at night. The Maritime Museum, 315 Front St, has good displays on local ecology and shipping history (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; ☎ 252/728-7317), while across the road you can watch boats being made at the Watercraft Center, a working boatyard (Wed–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free).

North Carolina's third-oldest town, Beaufort also has an appealing twelve-block historical district, centering on Turner Street, off the waterfront. Here you'll find handsome old houses, an apothecary, and the city jail; the town welcome center, 130 Turner St (daily: March–Nov 9.30am–5pm; Dec–Feb 10am–4pm; ☎ 252/728-5225, 🌐 www.historicbeaufort.com), offers a number of tours and self-guided walking tour brochures.

Ferries to Shackleford Banks (see opposite) are run by Island Ferry Adventures (mid-March to mid-Nov; roundtrip $14; minimum two adults; ☎ 252/728-7555, 🌐 www.islandferryadventures.com), Mystery Tours (from $15; ☎ 252/728-2527, 🌐 www.mysteryboattours.com), and Outer Banks Ferry Service (☎ 252/728-4129), all on the waterfront. You can also get there from Morehead City, a couple of miles down the coast (Waterfront Ferry Service ☎ 252/726-7678). Beaufort Inlet Watersports, next to the Outer Banks Ferry Service at 328 Front St (☎ 252/728-7607), offers parasailing for around $50 single, $90 tandem.

Among the many historic B&Bs in the shady residential streets off Turner, Langdon House, 135 Craven St (☎ 252/728-5499, 🌐 www.langdonhouse.com; ⑤), is friendly and relaxed; the Cedars Inn, 305 Front St (☎ 252/728-7036, 🌐 www.cedarsinn.com; ⑥), is rather plush. The Inlet Inn, on the waterfront at 601 Front St (☎ 252/728-3600 or 1-800/554-5466, 🌐 www.inlet-inn.com; ⑤), has huge hotel rooms and serves continental breakfast in your room. Morehead City and the Bogue Banks boast plenty of motels.

As for eating and nightlife, Beaufort's waterfront is vibrant at night, milling with yachties and vacationers drinking, listening to live music at the Dock House Bar, and simply strolling. There are a number of decent bar/restaurants on the wooden boardwalk right on the water, with other good options a block or so inland. The Beaufort Grocery Co, 117 Queen St (closed Tues; ☎ 252/728-3899), prides itself on inventive dishes made from superbly fresh ingredients, while the buzzy, hip Aqua, 114 Middle Lane (☎ 252/728-7777; dinner only, closed Sun & Mon), offers Carolina-style tapas and big desserts.

The beaches

South of Beaufort, the beaches along the twenty-mile offshore Bogue Banks, especially Atlantic Beach at the east end, are always pretty crowded. On Bear Island to the south – reached from Swansboro by boat taxi or ferry (April–Oct, hours vary; $5; ☎ 910/326-4881) – the stunning Hammocks Beach State Park has high sand dunes, a wooded shore, and perfect beaches. To camp ($9), you need to register at the small park center (daily: Sept–May 8am–5pm; June–Aug 8am–6pm; ☎ 910/326-4881). No camping is permitted in turtle season (March and April), when loggerhead sea turtles come ashore to lay their eggs.

On the far side of the massive Camp Lejeune US Marine base – home to around forty thousand Marines – Topsail Island, yet another sand bar of resorts (accessible via Hwy-172 on the mainland), is considerably less built up than the Bogue Banks, presumably because its beaches aren't quite as good. Both Surf City and Topsail were once slightly run-down family resorts, but have improved nicely. Public beach access points are signposted from the main road, but you can get down from lots of other places.

Wilmington

Though it's the largest town on North Carolina's coast, WILMINGTON, set back along the Cape Fear River, fifty miles short of the state's southern border, has a welcoming, laid-back feel. During the Civil War, it was briefly the Confederacy's most important harbor, exporting cotton all over the world. "Blockade-runners" would attempt to outrun the Union navy, racing into the safety of Fort Fisher's guns some twenty miles to the south of town; "Rebel Rose" Greenhow, glamorous Confederate spy, drowned here during a run in 1864. Dozens of blacks were murdered in Wilmington by white mobs in the Race Riot of 1898 – a backlash to the election of a "Fusionist" (Republican-Populist-black) governor two years earlier. Historians see it as effectively a coup d'état, which had immense repercussions all over the South; in 2006, a commission appointed by North Carolina's state legislature recommended that the state pay substantial reparations to Wilmington's black community.

For all that, Wilmington today is attractive, friendly, and buzzy. Its notoriety as a popular movie location has earned it the nickname "Hollywood East," or even "Wilmywood", and the influx of creative types has led to a certain gentrification that feels very different from the rest of the coast. That's not to call it ersatz – its lively cobbled waterfront and historic district, starting on the south side of Market Street and stretching east along Third Street, feel genuinely lived in.

While Wilmington's extravagant houses, ornate City Hall, and lovely old Thalian Hall demonstrate its former wealth, it's the cobbled streets of the weathered, boardwalked waterfront, dotted with cafés and restaurants, that really appeal. Chandler's Wharf, an upmarket mall in a restored warehouse, is typical of the area's revitalization, while the Cotton Exchange, 321 N Front St, sells crafts and food in a group of buildings that once housed a grain mill, warehouse, and cotton business. At the foot of Market Street, at the small Riverfront Park, you can pick up a horse-drawn carriage tour (☎ 910/251-8889; $11); a harbor cruise (☎ 910/343-1611, @ www.cfrboats.com; $14); or a river taxi to the battleship USS North Carolina, which participated in every naval offensive in the Pacific during World War II. At 814 Market St, the Cape Fear Museum (summer Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; rest of year closed Mon; $6; @ www.capefearmuseum.com) gives a lively account of local history.

To get a sense of how Wilmywood works, take a tour of EUE/Screen Gems Studios, 1223 N 23rd St, the site of productions as diverse as David Lynch's Blue Velvet and TV hits Dawson's Creek and One Tree Hill (June–Aug Sat & Sun noon & 2pm, Sept–May Sat noon; $12; ☎ 910/343-3433, @ www.screengemsstudios.com).

Twenty miles south of Wilmington on Hwy-421, near Kure Beach, Fort Fisher State Historic Site commands a spectacular rocky position overlooking both the sea and the mouth of the Cape Fear River. This used to be the largest earthen fort in the South, and you can walk a trail around the remains; a small museum focuses on its days as a Confederate stronghold, with relics from sunken blockade-runners and various weaponry (April–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; Nov–March Tues–Sat 10am–4pm; free). You can catch a ferry from Fort Fisher to the little mainland town of Southport (roughly every 45min; call to check exact schedule; $5 per vehicle; 30min trip; ☎ 1-800/368-8969).

Practicalities

The bus station is at 201 Harnett St, a mile north of downtown off Third Street. Wilmington's visitor center, 24 N Third St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 9am–4pm, Sun 10am–4pm; ☎ 910/341-4030 or 1-877/406-2356, @ www.cape-fear.

nc.us), has maps and walking tours, including a good African-American site map and a Dawson's Creek FAQ sheet. The funniest, most informative overviews of the city are given by Adventure Walking Tours, which leave from the flagpole at Market and Water streets (April–Oct 10am & 2pm; $12; ☎ 910/763-1785). There's also a brochure-packed information kiosk (April–Oct daily 9.30am–4.30pm) at the bottom of Market Street.

Cheap motels line Market Street for the last few miles into Wilmington, and there are also some lovely B&Bs: the movie stars stay at the atmospheric Graystone Inn, on Third and Dock (☎ 910/763-2000, 🌐 www.graystoneinn.com; 7). At the non-smoking Best Western Coastline Inn, on the riverfront at 503 Nutt St (☎ 910/763-2800 or 1-800/617-7732, 🌐 www.coastlineinn.com; 4), rates include breakfast served in your room.

The central blocks of downtown hold an abundance of swanky, often Asian-flavored restaurants, such as Deluxe at 114 Market St (☎ 910/251-0333), where entrees like panko-dusted soft-shell crabs cost $26. But you can eat well for less, too, for example at 🌟 Caffé Phoenix, a light, cheerful bistro with some sidewalk seating at 9 S Front St (☎ 910/343-1395), which offers good lunch and dinner specials. For a quick meal try the Dock Street Oyster Bar, 12 Dock St (☎ 910/762-2827), a funky little place serving cheap raw oysters and seafood. Wilmington has a thriving nightlife as well; for listings, pick up a copy of the free weekly Encore. Marrz, 15 S Front St (☎ 910/772-9045, 🌐 www.marrz.net), is a hip live-music venue, while the Barbary Coast, 116 Front St (☎ 910/762-8996), is a dingy hole-in-the-wall that has gained some cachet from being Mickey Rourke's favorite bar in town. Built in 1858, Thalian Hall, 310 Chestnut St (☎ 1-800/523-2820, 🌐 www.thalianhall.com), hosts dance, music, theater, and movies.

The North Carolina Piedmont

North Carolina's PIEDMONT is a fairly industrialized area of textile and tobacco towns, mostly in decline. Even close to the towns, though, it can still be very rural; little has changed here since the 1950s. The main area of interest is the Research Triangle trio of neighboring college towns: Raleigh, the state capital; relaxed Durham, with its strong black community; and countercultural Chapel Hill. Winston-Salem, famous for its tobacco industry, boasts the excellent Old Salem village.

Raleigh

Founded as North Carolina's capital in 1792, RALEIGH stands on I-40 at the very heart of the state. The town focuses around the central, pedestrianized Capitol Square, where the North Carolina Museum of History, 5 E Edenton St (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎ 919/715-0200), is impressively far-reaching, a chronological trot through the state's history from the viewpoint of its people, with particularly strong sections on women. Opposite is the North Carolina Museum of Natural Sciences, 11 W Jones St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free), which looks at local geology, as well as animal and plant life, going all the way back to the dinosaur age.

South of the capitol, the four-block City Market, a lamplit, cobbled enclave at the intersection of Blount and Martin streets, holds a number of good shops and restaurants. Check out the local artists and sculptors at work in Artspace, 201 E Davie St (Tues–Sat 10am–6pm; 🌐 www.artspacenc.org), which also hosts free lectures, movies, and poetry readings. Seventeenth US President Andrew Johnson was born in a tiny hut just north of where the capitol now stands; his birthplace has since been moved to Mordecai Historic Park, north of town at the corner of Wake Forest Rd and Mimosa St (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; 1hr tours begin on the hour, with last tour at 3pm; $5).

A little way out to the northwest via I-40, the impressive North Carolina Museum of Art, 2110 Blue Ridge Rd (Tues–Thurs & Sat 9am–5pm, Fri 9am–9pm, Sun 10am–5pm; tours daily 1.30pm; free except for special exhibitions), has an eclectic display of works from the ancient world, Africa, Europe, and the US, along with a great restaurant (see below).

Practicalities

Raleigh-Durham airport (📍 www.rdu.com) is off I-40, fifteen minutes northwest of town. The taxi ride into town costs around $30, while a circuitous shuttle service will set you back $25. Amtrak drops you off at 320 W Cabarrus St, while the Greyhound station is in a seedy part of downtown at 321 W Jones St. The visitor center, 301 N Blount St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; ☎ 1-800/849-8494, 🌐 www.visitraleigh.com), has the usual racks of leaflets.

If you want to stay, avoid the more anonymous downtown hotels and instead head out to Hillsborough Street, near North Carolina State University, where the Velvet Cloak Inn at no. 1505 offers comfortable rooms, free coffee, tea, and cookies, and an indoor pool (☎ 919/828-0333, 🌐 www.velvetcloakinn.com; 📍). For food, Big Ed's, in the City Market at 220 Wolfe St (closed Sun; ☎ 919/836-9909), serves fabulous Southern breakfasts, while Cup a Joe, near the university at 3100 Hillsborough (☎ 919/876-4588), is a bohemian coffee bar that attracts a mixed crowd. The huge 42nd St Oyster Bar, downtown at 508 Jones St (☎ 919/831-2811), is a popular spot for fresh fish and seafood, with live music at weekends, and the art museum boasts the contemporary Blue Ridge Restaurant (Tues–Sun lunch, Fri dinner; ☎ 919/833-3548).

Hillsborough Street, lined with bars and restaurants, is the epicenter of Raleigh's student nightlife. The Brewery, at no. 3009 (☎ 919/838-6788, 🌐 www.brewerync.com), hosts the best regional rock and alternative bands. Away from Hillsborough, Berkeley Café, 217 W Martin (☎ 919/821-0777), specializes in roots, alt-country, and rock, while Kings, 424 S McDowell St (☎ 919/831-1005, 🌐 www.kingsbarcade.com), is a laid-back place for anything from drum 'n' bass to New Romantic nights, with retro video games, free food, and go-go girls to boot. Pick up the free Spectator for nightlife listings.

Durham

Twenty miles northwest of Raleigh, DURHAM found itself at the center of the nation's tobacco industry after farmer Washington Duke came home from the Civil War with the idea of producing cigarettes – by 1890 he and his three sons had formed the America Tobacco Company. The Duke Homestead Historical Site, north of I-85 at 2828 Duke Homestead Rd (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm; free), is an absorbing living museum covering the social history of tobacco farming, with demonstrations of early farming techniques and tobacco-rolling.

In 1924, the Duke family's $40 million endowment to the small-scale Trinity College enabled it to expand into a world-respected medical research facility, swiftly changing its name to Duke University. On campus, the Nasher Museum of Art at 2001 Campus Drive (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5; ☎ 919/684-5135, 🌐 www.nasher.duke.edu) has good African, pre-Columbian, medieval, and Asian collections.

Durham takes pride in its vibrant black heritage. Seven miles north of town, in rural Treyburn Park, the fascinating Historic Stagville (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm; free; ☎ 919/620-0120, 🌐 www.historicstagvillefoundation.org) illustrates North Carolina plantation life, in particular the slave experience, from the early 1800s to Reconstruction. Around eighty to a hundred enslaved Africans worked on the Stagville plantation; on the grounds you can see the small two-story houses they lived in, four families (one per room) per dwelling, as well as the plantation owners' house and a colossal barn built by skilled slave carpenters.

Downtown Durham has little of interest, though Brightleaf Square, an upbeat shopping area of restored tobacco warehouses at Gregson and Main streets, is a nice enough place to take a stroll, browsing its galleries, bookstores, and specialty stores.

Practicalities

Greyhound buses stop at 820 W Morgan St. Pick up maps and local information from the Durham visitor center, 101 E Morgan St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–2pm; ☎ 919/687-0288 or 1-800/446-8604, 🌐 www.durham-nc.com). The Arrowhead Inn, 106 Mason Rd (☎ 919/477-8430, 🌐 www.arrowheadinn.com; 🍷), which dates back to 1775, offers lovely B&B rooms.

For food, try the places around Brightleaf Square: Fowler's, 112 S Duke St (☎ 919/683-2555), serves organic gourmet sandwiches and coffee, while Anotherthyme, 109 N Gregson St (dinner only; ☎ 919/682-5225), specializes in creative seafood and tapas. Durham's role as the heart of the North Carolina Piedmont blues scene – musicians like Reverend Gary Davis would play for tips at Raleigh's tobacco markets – is commemorated by early September's Bull Durham Blues Festival (🌐 www.hayti.org/blues).

Chapel Hill

Hip, villagey CHAPEL HILL, on the southwest outskirts of Durham, is nationally renowned as the home of such bands as Superchunk and Archers of Loaf, and musicians like Ben Folds and Ryan Adams, not to mention James “Carolina on My Mind” Taylor. About half its fifty thousand population are students, and its position as a bastion of white liberalism in a poor rural state brings the town its detractors. That said, it's a pleasant enough place to hang out for a while, in the laid-back bars and coffeehouses along Franklin Street, which fringes the north side of campus. Franklin continues west into the adjacent city of Carrboro, where it becomes Main Street; bars and restaurants here have a slightly hipper, post-collegiate edge.

The University of North Carolina, dating from 1789, was the nation's first state university. The earliest of its fine eighteenth-century buildings is Old East, its original brick painted a fashionable tan in the 1840s. Evidence of the university's wealth can be seen at the splendid Morehead Planetarium on E Franklin St (Mon–Wed 10am–5pm, Thurs–Sat 10am–5pm & 6.30–9.30pm, Sun 12.30–5pm; $5.25; 🌐 www.moreheadplanetarium.org), which served as an early NASA training center, and at the Ackland Art Museum, South Columbia and Franklin streets (Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free; 🌐 www.ackland.org), which is particularly strong on Asian art and antiquities.

Practicalities

The Chapel Hill/Orange County visitors bureau is at 501 W Franklin (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–2pm; ☎ 1-888/968-2060, 🌐 www.chocvb.org). Chapel Hill has few places to stay; one of the most popular spots is the very swanky, university owned Carolina Inn, on campus at 211 Pittsboro St (☎919/933-2001 or 1-800/962-8519, 🌐www.carolinainn.com; 6). Five miles northeast of town, the Sheraton, 1 Europa Drive (☎919/968-4900; 5), has stylish, very comfortable rooms, while the nearby Hampton Inn, 1740 Hwy-15/501 (☎919/968-3000; 4), is cheaper.

Chapel Hill abounds in great restaurants. The minimalist Lantern, 423 W Franklin St, dishes up fabulous pan-Asian food until late (closed Sun; ☎919/969-8846), and has an atmospheric bar. At 610 Franklin, Crooks Corner (closed Mon; ☎919/929-7643) offers a daily changing menu of delicious, stylish Southern cooking. Elmo's Diner, in the Carr Mill Mall in Carrboro, 200 N Greensboro St (☎919/929-2909), does great breakfasts, tasty veggie choices, and daily specials.

For nightlife, stay on Franklin and Main streets. Orange County Social Club, 108 E Main St, Carrboro (☎919/933-0669, 🌐www.orangecountysocialclub.com), is a stylish, laid-back bar with vintage decor, a pool table, a great jukebox, and a garden. Most music venues have an eclectic booking policy: Local 506, 506 W Franklin St (☎919/942-5506, 🌐www.local506.com), features wild bands, open-mike hip-hop, and the annual Sleazefest in August (🌐www.sleazefest.com), while over in Carrboro, the friendly Cat's Cradle, 300 E Main St (☎919/967-9053, 🌐catscradle.com), books the best bands on the national touring circuit. Check listings in the free Independent Weekly (🌐www.indyweek.com).

Winston-Salem

Though synonymous with the brand names of its cigarettes, WINSTON-SALEM, eighty miles west of Chapel Hill, owes its spot on the tourist itinerary to the delightful Old Salem. These twenty well-preserved blocks of clapboard and half-timbered brick homes, very close to downtown, honor the heritage of the city's first Moravian settlers. Escaping religious persecution in what are now the Czech and Slovak republics, the first Moravians settled in the Piedmont in the mid-seventeenth century. They soon established trading links with the frontier settlers and founded the town of Salem on a communal basis – they permitted only those of the same religious faith to live here. The demand for their crafts helped establish the adjacent community of Winston, which, accruing tremendous wealth from tobacco, soon outgrew the older community. The two merged in 1913 to form Winston-Salem.

Visitors are free to stroll or drive the streets of Old Salem, or by touring ten restored buildings (Mon–Sat 9am–5.30pm, Sun 1–5pm; $21, or $24 for two days) you can learn, with the help of costumed guides, about the skills, trades, and customs of the Moravians. Start at the huge visitor center on Academy and Old Salem Rd (Mon–Sat 8.30am–5.30pm, Sun 12.30–5.30pm) and, if time is tight, prioritize the St Philips Moravian Church, an African-American church originally built in 1823, and the Single Brothers House, built in 1771, where unmarried men would sleep, worship, and make items such as silverware, hats, and paper. Admission includes entrance to the Museum of Early Southern Decorative Arts (Mon–Sat 9.30am–5pm, Sun 1.30–5pm; last tour at 3.30pm), the Children's Museum, geared toward under-9s (Tues–Fri 9am–5pm, Sun & Mon 1–5pm; $6 for the two if not part of Old Salem ticket), and the striking Toy Museum (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm), which has thousands of antique toys dating from 225AD. Large lunches and dinners, and beer, are served at the Salem Tavern, 736 S Main (☎336/748-8585), where the costumed waiters carry dishes like the $7.50 Moravian chicken pie to diners on the spacious patio or lawns, and the Winkler Bakery at 525 S Main produces great cookies.

Three miles northwest of downtown, the Reynolda House Museum of American Art, 2250 Reynolda Rd (Tues–Sat 9.30am–4.30pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; $10), features pieces by top American artists from the eighteenth century to the present day, in what was the home of tobacco baron Richard Joshua Reynolds. The mansion, designed by Charles Barton Keen, is set in lush, landscaped gardens, with a number of its surrounding buildings converted into fancy stores and restaurants known collectively as Reynolda Village.

Practicalities

Winston-Salem's visitor center is a few blocks from Old Salem, at 200 Brookstown Ave (☎ 336/728-4200, 🌐 www.visitwinstonsalem.com). Next door, the Brookstown Inn (☎ 336/725-1120 or 1-800/845-4262, 🌐 www.brookstowninn.com; Ⓜ), is a lovely small hotel in a former textile mill. The Best Western Salem Inn, 127 S Cherry St (☎ 1-800/533-8760, 🌐 www.bestwestern.com; Ⓜ), offers clean motel rooms and a good complimentary breakfast and has an Amtrak bus connection from the nearest train station, which is in Greensboro, 28 miles away.

With the exception of the Old Salem options mentioned above, eating alternatives aren't that exciting, though Bistro 420, 420 W Fourth St (closed Mon ☎ 336/721-1336), serves good Southern cuisine.

Charlotte

The banking and transportation center of CHARLOTTE, where I-77 and I-85 meet near the South Carolina border, is the largest city in the state. Business and city leaders like to project the image of a sophisticated, fast-lane cultural metropolis, but its center is in fact somewhat soulless, with most restaurants and stores tucked away inside the city's skyscrapers. The busiest downtown thoroughfare, Tryon Street, is an unlovely mass of tall buildings and concrete known as "uptown." In Independence Square, at Tryon and Trade, giant modern statues depict transportation, commerce, industry, and the future. A few blocks away, the excellent Museum of the New South, 200 E Seventh St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $6; 🌐 www.museumofthenewsouth.org), looks at the growth of the region from Reconstruction onwards. Interesting vignettes include those on musical history, with the spotlight falling on local names such as gospel legends the Golden Gate Quartet. Discovery Place, 301 N Tryon St, is a kids-oriented science museum with an indoor rainforest, an OMNIMAX theater, and a planetarium (June–Sept Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 12.30–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 12.30–5pm; $8.50, OMNIMAX $8.50, combo ticket $14; 🌐 www.discoveryplace.org).

Practicalities

Charlotte/Douglas International Airport, seven miles west of town on Old Dowd Road or I-85, is served by the #5 bus ($1.65), which runs hourly from the Charlotte Transportation Center, uptown on Brevard Street, between Fourth and Fifth streets, to the airport; taxis cost about $18 and shuttle buses $10. Greyhound stops centrally at 601 W Trade St, while Amtrak trains pull in at 1914 N Tryon St. The huge visitor center is at 330 S Tryon St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 9am–3pm; ☎ 704/331-2700 or 1-800/231-4636, 🌐 www.charlottetcvb.org).

Most of Charlotte's hotels are aimed at the conference trade, though the 1929 Dunhill Hotel, 237 N Tryon St (☎ 704/332-4141, 🌐 www.dunhillhotel.com; Ⓜ), possesses an Old World elegance. The Days Inn, 601 N Tryon St (☎ 704/333-4733; Ⓜ), is a cheaper central alternative. Good restaurants include trendy Providence Café, 110 Perrin Place (☎ 704/376-2008), for vegetarian and New American cuisine and LaVecchia's Seafood Grille, 325 E Sixth St (☎ 704/370-6776; closed Sun). Nightlife is concentrated between the easily walkable grid of Tryon, College, Seventh, and Fifth streets, and in the South End, southwest of uptown. Check listings in the free weekly Creative Loafng (🌐 charlotte.creativeloafng.com).

The North Carolina mountains

The best way to see the mountains of North Carolina is from the pristine Blue Ridge Parkway, which runs across the northwest of the state from Virginia to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. It's a delight to drive; the vast panoramic expanses of forested hillside, with barely a settlement in sight, may astonish travelers fresh from the crowded centers of the east coast. This predominantly poor region has been a breeding ground since the early twentieth century for bluegrass music, which you will still find, along with traditional clogging, performed regularly throughout the region; tiny towns like laid-back Asheville are good places to see the edgier "newgrass."

The helpful visitor center at 1700 Blowing Rock Rd in Boone (☎ 1-800/438-7500, 🌐 www.mountainsofnc.com), services most of the mountain area.

The Blue Ridge Parkway

The peak tourist season for the BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY is October, when the leaves of the deciduous trees that cover the landscape turn from bright yellow and gold through browns to vivid red. Year-round, however, this magnificent, twisting mountain road – largely built in the 1930s by President Roosevelt's Civilian Conservation Corps volunteers – is a worthwhile vacation destination in itself, peppered with state-run campgrounds, short hiking trails, and dramatic overlooks. Although the Parkway is closed to commercial vehicles, and only particularly crowded near one or two major beauty spots, the constant curves make it hard to average anything approaching the 45mph speed limit.

Boone

Although BOONE is the most obvious northern base for exploring the mountains, the town itself holds little of interest. Corny family entertainments dot US-321, while pretty backroads hold offbeat settlements such as Valle Crucis, off US-194, where the 1883 Mast General Store (summer Mon–Sat 7am–6.30pm, Sun noon–5pm; winter hours vary; ☎ 828/262-0000) is well worth a look for its cast-iron cookware, fresh coffee beans, rustic furniture, outdoor gear, and fat barrels overflowing with candies.

Boone's visitor center is downtown at 208 Howard St (☎ 828/262-3516 or 1-888/251-9867, 🌐 www.visitboonenc.com). For clean hotel rooms, head for the High Country Inn, 1785 Hwy-105 (☎ 828/264-1000 or 1-800/334-5605, 🌐 www.

Mountain activities

Organized outdoor pursuits available along the Blue Ridge Parkway include excellent whitewater rafting and canoeing, most of it on the Nolichucky River near the Tennessee border, south of Johnson City, Tennessee, but also on the Watauga River and Wilson Creek. Companies running trips include Nantahala Outdoor Center (☎ 1-800/232-7238, 🌐 www.noc.com) and High Mountain Expeditions (☎ 1-800/262-9036, 🌐 www.highmountainexpeditions.com), who also offer biking, hiking, and caving trips. Expect to pay around $75 for a full day of rafting.

Winter sees skiing at a number of slopes and resorts, particularly around Banner Elk, twelve miles southwest of Boone. Resort accommodation is expensive, ski passes less so. Appalachian Ski Mountain (☎ 1-800/322-2373, 🌐 www.appskimtn.com) is near Blowing Rock, and Ski Beech (☎ 1-800/438-2093, 🌐 www.skibeech.com), the highest ski area in the east, is at Beech Mountain. You can pick up full listings at visitor centers, or check 🌐 www.skithehighcountry.com.

Music

Music is the lifeblood of the USA, with every mile along the highways seeming to evoke a favorite song or performer. Devotees flock to cities associated with some of the world's greatest genres: Chicago, birthplace of the blues; New Orleans, with unrivaled jazz and R&B scenes; Nashville, synonymous with country; and Memphis, home to Sun and Stax record labels as well as the ultimate rock 'n' roll shrine, Graceland. Indie rockers often head to Los Angeles and New York, while college towns like Austin, Texas, and Athens, Georgia, are good places to catch rising stars. And, of course, there's always Las Vegas, where every act arrives in the end. Outside the cities, rural Appalachia brims with ensembles of backwoods fiddlers; Louisiana's sleepy bayous are enlivened by foot-stomping Cajun and zydeco sounds; and the jook-joints of Mississippi Delta hamlets enrapture blues purists.

Rural beginnings

American folk music can be traced back to the Europeans – particularly those from England and the Celtic lands – who settled in the Appalachian mountain region. Over the centuries, traditional songs and ballads mixed with various influences from other parts of the world and evolved into the guitar-twanging country-and-western music that is today associated with the American South. It wasn't until the mid-twentieth century, however, that country music broke into the mainstream, when the plain cowboy style of Roy Rogers and the harmonies of the Carter Family found a home with a wide audience, and honky-tonk hero Hank Williams performed six encores in his Grand Ole Opry debut.

From soul to hip-hop

As the black social experience diversified over the course of the twentieth century, various forms of music sprang up to give it voice. In the 1960s, the heartfelt soul of masters like Otis Redding preceded the explosion of talent that came to define the Motown era, which was born in Detroit. As soul went mainstream in the 1970s, progressive mavericks like Parliament and Funkadelic paved the way for the transition to 1980s rap culture: loaded with attitude, street-style, and political savvy, rappers from Run DMC to NWA, mostly based in New York and LA, stood at the forefront of a dynasty that would eventually include hip-hop and a second generation of R&B. Other major current centers of hip-hop include Philadelphia, Atlanta, and Detroit, to name just a few.

Bluegrass, developed by William Smith Monroe and named after the fields of his native Kentucky, is another sub-genre of American folk music, and many regard its banjo- and fiddle-based sound to be the purest form of country there is. It's enjoyed a bit of a revival in the past decade, with newfound popularity for traditionalists like Ralph Stanley and more modern practitioners Alison Krauss and Gillian Welch, the latter of whom it's hard to believe grew up in Los Angeles and Boston.

Ten great music venues

A performance at the Ryman Auditorium

Gilman Street Project,

Berkeley CA. Punk, indie, and experimental. p.1141

BB King's Blues Club, Memphis

TN. Blues. p.566

The Fillmore Auditorium, San

Francisco, CA. Rock and alt-rock. p.1133

Knitting Factory, New York,

NY. Varied, from art-rock to electronica. p.123

Preservation Hall, New Orleans,

LA. Trad jazz. p.697

Continental Club, Austin, TX.

Country and folk. p.741

Rosa's Lounge, Chicago, IL.

Blues. p.369

Ryman Auditorium, Nashville,

TN. Country and western. p.570

The Stone Pony, Asbury Park,

NJ. Rock. p.190

Whisky-a-Go-Go, Los Angeles,

CA. Hard rock. p.1073

The Mississippi sounds

Both jazz and the blues grew out of African-American culture, with the latter inextricably linked to the experiences of slavery and poverty. Forged from a combination of African and gospel sounds into a simple twelve-bar form during the late nineteenth century, by the 1930s the blues had gained widespread popularity, spreading along a path that followed the Mississippi River through Memphis, then on to northern urban centers (namely Chicago), which were relatively safe havens for the descendants of freed slaves. Thanks to mainstream icons like Leadbelly, Muddy Waters, and BB King, the genre not only solidified its own stature but – as the saying goes – “had a baby and named it rock’n’roll.”

Jazz remains forever associated with the Deep South and, more specifically, the Creole culture of New Orleans and the Mississippi Delta. The most complex of all modern musical styles, jazz, noted for its syncopation and polyrhythms, blends African traditions with western techniques, favoring saxophones, trumpets, the double bass, and piano to create a distinctive American sound. Miles Davis is the figure most responsible for raising jazz to a high art form; he first made his mark in New York City’s mid-twentieth-century club scene.

Ten places immortalized in song

There seems a limitless number of well-known songs written about big American cities – “Sweet Home Chicago,” “New York, New York,” “Viva Las Vegas,” “I Love LA” just for a start – and probably an equal number about states (“Private Idaho” by the B-52s, “California Dreaming” by the Mamas and Papas, “Sweet Home Alabama” by Lynyrd Skynyrd). Here are a few that are a little less obvious in their iconic subjects:

Lexington Ave & 125 St, New York City. This crossroads in Harlem is where Lou Reed’s character in “Waiting For The Man” came to score.

The San Francisco Dock. It’s a lot more commercialized now, but spare a thought for Otis Redding penning “Dock Of the Bay” when you visit Pier 41.

Highway 61. This famous road is so long that Bob Dylan thought to dedicate an entire album, “Highway 61 Revisited,” to it.

Max Yasgur’s Farm, Bethel NY. Actually sixty miles from the town of Woodstock, the venue of the 1969 festival features in Joni Mitchell’s anthemic “Woodstock,” as well as the Mountain song “Max Yasgur’s Farm.”

Redondo Beach, CA. Patti Smith’s punk-reggae beat first brought this hangout for bronzed LA types to our attention in “Redondo Beach” from her classic debut album.

Rockaway Beach, Queens, NY. The Ramones hitch a ride to their favorite local hangout (aside, perhaps, from “53rd and 3rd” in Manhattan, but that’s a sorrier story).

The Painted Desert, AZ. Natalie Merchant of 10,000 Maniacs sings about this stunning piece of Southwestern geography on the album “In My Tribe.”

Route 66. Most people are probably familiar with the Nat King Cole hit about this historic piece of tarmac.

Asbury Park, NJ. Jersey boy Bruce Springsteen immortalized this run-down beach town in “4th of July, Asbury Park (Sandy)”; other Jersey locations, like Atlantic City, also get their due in the Boss’s tunes.

The skyway system, Minneapolis, MN. The Replacements song “Skyway” is dedicated to the city’s enclosed (to ward off the cold) five-mile track that “don’t move at all like a subway.”

Dylan penned a barbed tribute to Highway 61

Rock of ages

Rock has come a long way since its blues-based infancy, when Elvis Presley swiveled his hips in 1950s Memphis, Bill Haley “rocked around the clock,” and Chuck Berry told Beethoven it was time to “roll over.” The amorphous new form would absorb a host of influences, from Bob Dylan’s folk protest songs to the pop that followed the Beatles-led British invasion, through the drug- and sitar-tinged psychedelic revolution of bands like the Grateful Dead in the late 1960s. Since then, spiky New York punk, quirky Ohio industrial, furious LA hardcore, slacker Seattle grunge, and spaced-out neo-psychedelia are but a few of the sounds that have thrown up modern-day rock icons like Patti Smith, Black Flag, Nirvana, and REM.

highcountryinn.com; ④), which also has a decent café and bar; good B&Bs include the Lovill House Inn, set in eleven wooded acres at 404 Old Bristol Rd (☎ 828/264-4204 or 1-800/849-9466, 🌐 www.lovillhouseinn.com; ④). Most of the best places to eat and drink are along King Street; the Caribbean Café, no. 489 (☎ 828/265-2233), serves award-winning spicy food, with some great veggie choices, while Earth Fare, no. 178 (☎ 828/263-8138), is a natural foods store, with a café and juice bar.

South along the Parkway

Eight miles south of Boone, BLOWING ROCK is a pleasant, if touristy, resort just south of the Blue Ridge Parkway. The “Blowing Rock” itself, a high cliff from which light objects thrown over the side will simply blow back up, is nowhere near as impressive as photos suggest. The three-mile steam-driven Tweetsie Railroad, which is now the center of a family theme park on Hwy-321, is all that remains of a train line that used to run across the mountains to Johnson City, Tennessee (June–Aug daily 9am–6pm; May, Sept & Oct Fri–Sun 9am–6pm; $27, under-13s $19; 🌐 www.tweetsie.com).

Blowing Rock’s visitor center (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎ 828/295-7851; 🌐 www.blowingrock.com) is on Park Avenue. On Main Street you’ll find hotels such as the Boxwood Lodge at no. 637 (☎ 828/295-9984, 🌐 www.boxwoodlodge.com; ④). At Woodland’s (☎ 828/295-3651), on the Hwy-321 bypass, the pork barbecue is excellent; it’s also a good spot to drink beer, as is the comfy back porch of The Canyons, Hwy-321 (☎ 828/295-7661), which dishes up contemporary Southwestern and regional cuisine.

The Canyons has a fine view of the privately owned Grandfather Mountain (5964ft), fifteen miles south of Blowing Rock, with access near milepost 304 (daily: spring & fall 8am–6pm; summer 8am–7pm; winter 8am–5pm; $14; 🌐 www.grandfather.com). The price may be high, but the owners make a genuine attempt to protect this unique environment, and the view from the top – especially on the “mile-high swinging bridge” between the peaks – is superb, as are some of the trails. Bears, otters, and other animals, including golden and bald eagles that were wounded by gunshot in their western homelands, are held in habitat-like settings. During the Highland Games and “Gathering of the Clans” held here in the second full week in July, distantly Scottish Americans (take a look at the local phone book and see just how many names begin with “Mc”) dress up in kilts, toss cabers, and tootle away on bagpipes.

Of various short and easy trails off the Parkway hereabouts, the one leading half a mile or so up to Rough Ridge, near milepost 301, is especially picturesque at dusk. Rough Ridge is one of several access points to the 13.5-mile Tanawha Trail, which runs along the ridge above the Parkway from Beacon Heights to Julian Price Park, looking out over the lush, dense forests to the east. Another good hiking destination is the Linville Gorge Wilderness, near milepost 316 a couple of miles outside Linville Falls village. There are two main trails; one is a steep, 1.6 mile roundtrip climb to the top of the high and spectacular Linville Falls themselves. Breathtaking views from either side of the gorge look down 2000ft to the Linville River below, which has perfect, long, deep swimming pools. An easier walk leads, in half a mile, to the base of the falls. You can also climb Hawksbill or Table Rock mountains from the nearest unsurfaced forest road, which leaves Hwy-181 south of the village of Jonas Ridge (signposted “Gingercake Acres,” with a small, low sign to Table Rock). The unremarkable but amiable villages of Linville and Linville Falls have the usual motels and restaurants; Linville Falls also has a campground (☎ 828/765-2681, 🌐 www.linvillefalls.com; $28 per night), and Spears Restaurant, Hwy-221 (☎ 828/765-0026), is worth a detour for its hickory-smoked pork barbecue.

The views from the Parkway in the Mount Mitchell State Park (☎828/675-4611) area, south toward Asheville, are tremendous. Sadly, however, this is largely because the trees around the summit of Mount Mitchell – the highest point in the eastern US, at 6684ft – have been ravaged by acid rain from coal-burning industries in the Chattanooga Basin to the west, and the large barren patches leave the horizon clear. Park your car at the end of the signed four-mile detour north of the Parkway, where there's a small museum and restaurant, then follow a short stepped trail that leads to a damp 1930s watchtower.

Asheville

Encircled by a ring of interstates, and skirted to the east and south by the Parkway, arty ASHEVILLE, roughly one hundred miles southwest of Boone, retains an appealing 1920s downtown core. With a strong student community from UNC, it's also become quite an alternative center, studded with funky coffee bars, galleries, vintage shops, and bohemian bookstores. Vibrant yet laid-back, it's a nice place to walk around, with a number of handsome Art Deco buildings. Woolworth Walk, 25 Haywood St, is a typically quirky space, exhibiting more than one hundred local artists in a vintage Woolworth store, while Malaprop's Bookstore, 55 Haywood, has a wonderful selection of titles.

Two miles south of town on Biltmore Avenue, the Biltmore Estate is the largest private mansion in the US, with 250 rooms (daily: April–Dec 8.30am–5pm; Jan–March 9am–5pm; prices vary, typically Mon–Thurs $38, Fri–Sun $42; ☎www.biltmore.com). Built in the late nineteenth century by George Vanderbilt and loosely modeled on a Loire chateau, it's a wild piece of nouveau riche folly, from the Victorian chic of the indoor palm court to the gardens designed by Frederic Law Olmsted, he of New York's Central Park. You could spend a whole day here, taking a self-guided or guided tour, checking out the tastings at the winery, renting a raft or bike to explore the 250 acres of grounds, eating at the four restaurants, and maybe even staying at the 213-room “inn” (☎828-225-1600; 📍).

Asheville's Greyhound/Trailways terminal is inconveniently located at 2 Tunnel Rd, two miles out of downtown; take bus #13 or #4 stopping at the Innsbruck Mall. There's a good little visitor center at 36 Montford Ave, reached via exit 4C off I-240 (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5.30pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; ☎828/258-6111 or 1-800/257-1300, ☎www.exploreasheville.com). Central motels include the Days Inn, 120 Patton Ave (☎828/254-9661; 📍), and there's another Days Inn near the Asheville Mall, at 201 Tunnel Rd (☎828/252-4000, ☎www.daysinnashevillmall.com; 📍). For a bit of pampering, head to the luxurious Cedar Crest B&B, set in four acres three blocks from the Biltmore Estate, at 674 Biltmore Ave (☎828/252-1389 or 1-800/252-0310, ☎www.cedarcrestvictorianinn.com; 📍). The nearest campground is Bear Creek RV Park, 81 S Bear Creek Rd, off I-40 to the west (☎828/253-0798, ☎www.ashevillebearcreek.com; $32).

Asheville has by far the best places to eat in the region, with lots of ethnic and organic food. The fabulous 🍴 Laughing Seed Café, 40 Wall St (☎828/252-3445; closed Tues), dishes up really good vegetarian cuisine from around the world, while tiny Salsas, 6 Patton Ave (☎828/252-9805), offers Mexican and Caribbean dishes. There's a lively nightlife scene, too; Jack of the Wood, an enjoyable bar at 95 Patton Ave (under the Laughing Seed; ☎828/252-5445), and the Grey Eagle, 185 Clingman Ave (☎828/232-5800), both feature regular live bluegrass, folk, and newgrass. For funk, world, jazz, and R&B, check out the Orange Peel, 101 Biltmore Ave (☎828/225-5851; closed Sun–Tues), or Tressa's, 28 Broadway (☎828/254-7072, ☎www.tressas.com), a stylish club in a fine restored building. In summer, you can sit outdoors and listen to traditional mountain music at “Shindig on the Green” (Sat nights at Pack Square Park), run by the same people as August's Mountain Dance and Folk Festival (📍 www.folkheritage.org), which features bluegrass, newgrass, string bands, and traditional clogging.

Black Mountain and Chimney Rock

BLACK MOUNTAIN, fourteen miles east of Asheville on I-40, is home to the hugely enjoyable Leaf Festival (📍 www.theleaf.com). This folk music and arts and crafts gathering, held in mid-May and October, showcases Appalachian and world folk music, and usually attracts major European and African musicians. There's little to do in Black Mountain otherwise, but the clear fresh air, pretty views, and relaxed pace make a visit worthwhile. The Monte Vista, at 308 W State St (📞 828/669-2119 or 1-888/804-8438, 📍 www.montevistahotel.com; 4), is a small, comfy, nicely old-fashioned hotel; Dripolator, nearby at 221 W State St (📞 828/669-0999), serves fantastic coffee, smoothies, and desserts. For nightlife, the Town Pump Tavern, 135 Cherry St (📞 828/669-4808, 📍 www.townpumpmusic.com), has live bluegrass and roots music five nights a week.

Twenty-five miles southeast of the Parkway on US-64/74A, the natural granite tower of Chimney Rock sticks out from the almost-sheer side of Hickory Nut Gorge (daily: summer 8.30am–5.30pm; rest of year 8.30am–4.30pm; park stays open 90min past last ticket sale; $14; 📞 828/625-9611 or 1-800/277-9611, 📍 www.chimneyrockpark.com). After taking the elevator twenty-six stories up through the body of the mountain, you can walk along protected walkways along the impressive cliffs. Many of the climactic moments of The Last of the Mohicans were filmed here; you may recognize the mighty Hickory Nut Falls, which tumble 400ft from the western end of the gorge.

Great Smoky Mountains National Park

West of Asheville, GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK is the most visited national park in the US. It straddles the border with Tennessee, and is covered in more detail – with a map – in our Tennessee section. In summer and fall, the North Carolina approaches to the park are every bit as clogged with traffic as those in Tennessee, and all accommodation can be booked up weeks in advance.

The largest base for touring the park is CHEROKEE, where a few Cherokee managed to hang on when the tribe was “removed” along the Trail of Tears to Oklahoma in 1838 (see p.578). Now known as the “Eastern Band of the Cherokee Nation,” they have a small reservation on the edge of the park, which derives its main income from tourism. As a result, Cherokee itself, nicely set in the cleft of a valley, has its fair share of fast-food restaurants, cornily named motels, moccasin retailers, and themed attractions (including Santa's Land – star attraction, the Rudicoaster) – along with, of course, the requisite casino.

Away from the kitsch and cliché, however, the impressive Museum of the Cherokee Indian, Hwy-441 at Drama Rd (mid-June to Aug Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 9am–5pm; Sept to mid-June daily 9am–5pm; $9, or $18 combo with Oconaluftee, see below; 📍 www.cherokeemuseum.org), has good archeological and interactive displays on Cherokee arts and history – including Sequoyah's invention of a syllabary in 1821, to preserve the oral Cherokee culture in writing. Qualla Arts and Crafts, across the street, is a Cherokee-owned co-operative selling high-quality traditional crafts (daily: June–Aug 8am–8pm; Sept & Oct 8am–6pm; Nov–May 8am–4.30pm; 📞 828/497-3103). Nearby, the Oconaluftee Indian Village (mid-May to late Oct daily 9am–5.30pm; $14, or $18 combo with the museum, see above) is a reconstruction of a mid-eighteenth-century Cherokee village. Amid the log cabins, you can see demonstrations of weaving and basket-making, as well as crafts and skills that have long since died out, such as dugout canoe construction and blowpipe hunting. During summer, at the Mountainside Theater on Hwy-441, an outdoor drama, Unto these Hills, re-enacts the Cherokee plight from Hernando De Soto's arrival to the Trail of Tears (mid-June to late Aug, Mon–Sat 8pm; $15–18; ☎ 1-866/554-4557, 🌐 www.untothesehills.com).

The friendly visitor center (daily: Nov to late Aug 8am–9pm; late Aug–Oct 8am–5pm; ☎ 828/497-9195 or 1-800/438-1601, 🌐 www.cherokee-nc.com), in the center of town on Hwy-441 by the river, has lots of information on the National Park and the Parkway. There are several reasonable motels – like the central Cherokee Plaza (☎ 828/497-2301 or 1-800/535-4798; ③–④), which overlooks the river – but you might just as well stay in Maggie Valley (see below). You'll do fine for eating if you like fast food and buffets – and note that as a reservation town, Cherokee is entirely dry.

The Oconaluftee visitor center, the headquarters of the North Carolina side of the park, is two miles north of Cherokee on US-441 (daily: summer 8am–7pm; fall & spring 8am–6pm; winter 9am–5pm; ☎ 828/497-1904, 🌐 www.nps.gov/grsm). It holds good displays on Appalachian farming life, and a recreated pioneer village.

Fifteen miles east, the small community of MAGGIE VALLEY boasts a string of motels with peaceful views over the valleys – one of the cheapest, the Riverlet, on US-19 (☎ 828/926-1900 or 1-800/691-9952, 🌐 www.riverlet.com; ③), commands prospects of two streams. It's all rather tranquil here, with trout farms, wooden shacks, the occasional boiled peanut and honey stand, and clear, fresh air. Tourism focuses on hillbilly culture, with lots of hoedowns and the like; the nearby Ghost Town in the Sky is an extraordinary piece of kitsch, with a chairlift that sweeps you up to a hokey Wild West–style theme park complete with gunfights, cancan girls, and Indian dancers (summer daily; fall Sat & Sun only; $25, children $15; 🌐 www.ghosttowninthesky.com). During the last fortnight in July, Maggie Valley hosts North Carolina's International Folk Festival (🌐 www.folkmootusa.org).

South Carolina

The relatively small state of SOUTH CAROLINA remains, with Mississippi, one of the poorest and most rural in the US; it holds no truly substantial urban centers, and though the pockets of prime real estate along its coast have been developed into exclusive golf courses and tennis clubs, these are self-contained enclaves that make little impression on the rest of the state. Politics in South Carolina, the first state to secede from the Union in 1860, have traditionally been conservative. Reconstruction was mired in terrible Klan violence, while demagogues openly espoused lynching and enforced “Jim Crow” laws with frightening zeal. Today, the state contains two of the country's most right-wing minor universities – football-fixated Clemson, and Christian Bob Jones University in Greenville, a training-ground for the fundamentalist right.

For travelers, however, the state has a lot to offer. Its main fascination lies in the subtropical coastline, also called the Low Country, and its sea islands. Great beaches, swampy marshes, and lush palmetto groves preserve traces of a virtually independent black culture (featuring the unique patois, “Gullah”), dating back to when enslaved Africans escaped here from the mainland plantations. There are no interstates along the coast, so journeys take longer than you might expect, and the pace of life definitely feels slower. Beyond the grand old peninsular port of Charleston – arguably the most elegant town in the US, with its pastel-colored old buildings, appealing waterfront, and magnificent, tree-lined avenues – restored plantations stretch as far north as Georgetown, en route toward the poseur’s paradise of Myrtle Beach. Inland, the rolling Piedmont and flat coastal plain hold little to see.

Getting around South Carolina

Charleston has South Carolina’s biggest airport, with flights to and from major towns on the east coast. Three Amtrak routes cut through the state, stopping at Greenville and Clemson in the west, Columbia and other towns in the center, and Charleston on the coast. Buses run along I-85 between Charlotte, North Carolina, and Atlanta, while a less regular service operates along the coast, stopping at Myrtle Beach and Charleston.

Myrtle Beach and the north coast

MYRTLE BEACH is a brazen splurge of seaside fun, an unmitigated stretch of commercial development twenty miles down the coast from the North Carolina border, at the center of the sixty-mile “Grand Strand.” Predominantly a family resort, it’s packed fit to burst during mid-term vacations with leering, jeering students drinking and partying themselves into a frenzy. Fans of crazy golf, water parks, factory outlet malls, funfairs, and parasailing will be in heaven, and the beach itself isn’t at all bad. The widest stretch is at North Myrtle Beach, a chain of small communities among which Ocean Boulevard is the center.

South of Myrtle Beach lies Murrells Inlet, a fishing port with lots of good seafood restaurants, and Pawleys Island, a secluded resort once favored by plantation owners and today retaining a far slower pace than its neighbors. Between the two on Hwy-17 is the beautifully landscaped Brookgreen Gardens (daily: summer 9.30am–9.30pm; rest of the year 9.30am–5pm; admission $12, valid for a week; ☎ 1-800/849-1931, 🌐 www.brookgreen.org), a former rice and indigo plantation with an outdoor display of American figurative sculpture, and the setting for many of Julia Peterkin’s novels of Gullah life. There’s also a wildlife sanctuary, where you can often see alligator and deer.

Practicalities

US- or Hwy-17 (also called Kings Highway) is Myrtle Beach’s main traffic thoroughfare; the parallel Ocean Boulevard is lined with hotels and motels. Greyhound buses from Charleston and Wilmington come in at 511 7th Ave N. Minimal transportation in the beach areas is provided by Coastal Rapid Public Transit buses (☎ 843/488-0865); Great American Trolley runs a route along Ocean Boulevard from 29th Ave S to Broadway at the beach (March–Oct; ☎ 843/236-0337). The main visitor center at 1200 N Oak St (☎ 843/626-7444 or 1-800/356-3016, 🌐 www.myrtlebeachinfo.com) provides bus timetables, events listings, and stacks of hotel brochures.

During the summer, accommodation rates increase dramatically, to the point where it’s hard to find a room for under $80 per night; it may be cheaper to stay in

Conway, about eleven miles to the west of US-501, where there's another visitor center at 2090 Hwy-501 E. In Myrtle Beach, the vast Compass Cove Resort, 2311 S Ocean Blvd (☎ 1-800/331-0934, 🌐 www.compasscove.com; 📍), features around twenty pools, plus ocean views from the more expensive tower rooms; Serendipity Inn, near the sea at 407 71st Ave N (☎ 843/449-5268, 🌐 www.serendipityinn.com; 📍), is an old Spanish-Mission-style motel that's been converted into a B&B, with a pretty courtyard and a nice breakfast buffet. Those commercial campgrounds that survive along Kings Highway in North Myrtle Beach – many have been bought up by condo developers – tend to be vast, soulless places, populated by long rows of RVs.

So long as you crave surf 'n' turf, burgers, or diner food, you'll have no problem finding somewhere to eat. Creative seafood (along with gourmet breakfasts, innovative lunch specials, and sea views) can be had at the classy Sea Captain's House, 3002 N Ocean Blvd (☎ 843/448-8082), or at a number of similar establishments in Murrells Inlet; for a Mediterranean-influenced meal in a funky, colorful atmosphere, stop by the Collector's Café, 7726 N Kings Hwy (☎ 843/449-9370).

As for nightlife, there are scores of themed bars and music venues competing for the tourist dollar. There's a House of Blues at Barefoot Landing, 4640 Hwy-17 (☎ 843/272-3000, 🌐 www.hob.com), which attracts top national bands. More kitschy are the glut of country music variety shows; the longest-running is the Carolina Opry, Hwy-17 N (☎ 843/913-4000, 🌐 www.thecarolinaopry.com), where powerful singers belt out corny, family-oriented rock'n'roll, country, and bluegrass, with a couple of hymns thrown in for good measure. Next door at the Dolly Parton-owned Dixie Stampede, 8901-B Hwy-17 N (☎ 1-800/433-4401, 🌐 www.dixiestampede.com), you can see a patriotic, surreal take on the Civil War with some impressive horsemanship, all while chowing down on a huge dinner without the aid of utensils.

South to Charleston: Georgetown and the plantations

The peaceful waterfront community of GEORGETOWN – the first town in forty miles beyond Myrtle Beach that's anything more than a beach resort – makes a refreshing contrast, even with the views of the monstrous paper works on the opposite bank. It's hard to imagine today, but in the eighteenth century Georgetown was the center of a thriving network of Low Country rice plantations; by the 1840s the surrounding area produced nearly half the rice grown in the United States.

Though Georgetown's main street has a time-warped, late-1950s feel, the town's 32-block historic district features many fine eighteenth-century and antebellum houses; the visitor center, 531 Front St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; ☎ 843/546-8436 or 1-800/777-7705, 🌐 www.georgetownchamber.com), has details of self-guided walking tours. The Rice Museum, in the Clock Tower at 633 Front St (Mon–Sat 10am–4.30pm; $7; 🌐 www.ricemuseum.org), tells the story of the Low Country's long history of rice cultivation, and its dependence upon a constant supply of enslaved Africans brought over from the Windward coast for their rice expertise.

One memorable way to pass the time here is to take a 2hr sailing cruise into Winyah Bay aboard the tall ship Jolly Rover, which departs from alongside 802 Front Street. The daytime trips ($20) are pirate-themed and aimed largely at children, while the sunset ones ($25) are more romantic (June to early Sept Mon–Sat 10am, 1pm, & 6pm; May and early Sept to Oct Mon–Fri 5pm, Sat 1pm & 5pm; ☎ 843/546-8822 or 1-800/705-9063, 🌐 www.rovertours.com).

If you want to stay in sleepy Georgetown, the Carolinian Inn, 706 Church St (☎ 843/546-5191 or 1-800/722-4667, 🌐 www.carolinianinn.com; 📍), which has a pool, is the best bet. There's a shortage of good places to eat, but at least the Kudzu Bakery, 120 King St (☎843/546-1847), offers light lunches and pastries.

Hopsewee Plantation, the grand 1740 mansion home of Thomas Lynch, a signatory of the Declaration of Independence, is set in Spanish-moss-draped grounds, twelve miles south of Georgetown on US-17 (March–Oct Mon–Fri 10am–4pm; Nov–Feb Thurs & Fri 10am–4pm; $12; 🌐www.hopsewee.com). In addition to the main house, you can also see two slave cabins, inhabited by slaves and their descendants until the 1940s. Wooded trails lead through pretty grounds, but clouds of ferocious mosquitoes drift up from the river, so think twice before wandering around in summer.

Hampton Plantation State Historic Site, further south, two miles off US-17 on Hwy-857, is probably closer to the look of a typical plantation. The grounds (9am–6pm; free) are attractive, but the house (March–Oct daily except Mon noon–4pm; Nov–Feb Thurs–Sun noon–4pm; $4) is most impressive, a huge eighteenth-century Neoclassical monolith built by Huguenots; while its exterior has been restored, the inside is relatively bare. The plantation itself is isolated in the heart of the dense Francis Marion National Forest. This heavily African-American area is particularly known for its sweetgrass basket-weaving, a craft that originated with the slaves in West Africa, using tight bundles of grasses to make intricate baskets and pots. Despite the enormously time-consuming work and the cost of materials, the baskets you see being made at roadside stalls here cost at most $25.

Further south, beyond the forest and a few miles north of Charleston on US-17, is the much-publicized Boone Hall Plantation (April to early Sept Mon–Sat 8.30am–6.30pm, Sun 1–5pm; early Sept to March Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sun 1–4pm; $14.50; 🌐boonehallplantation.com). Though the plantation dates from the late seventeenth century, the house is a twentieth-century reconstruction; tours are conducted by hapless young women in Southern Belle costumes who rather overplay the connections with Gone With the Wind. The grounds are more interesting, with a long, tree-lined drive and a slave street, this time of small mid-eighteenth-century brick cabins that housed the more “privileged” slaves – domestic servants and skilled artisans.

Charleston

CHARLESTON, one of the finest-looking towns in the US, stands roughly halfway between Myrtle Beach to the north and Savannah, Georgia, to the south, one hundred miles from either. It's a compelling place to visit, its historic district lined with tall, narrow houses of peeling, multicolored stucco, adorned with wooden shutters and wide porches (known here as piazzas). The Caribbean feel is augmented by palm trees and the dreamy, tropical climate, while the town's pretty hidden gardens, leafy patios, and ironwork balconies evoke the romance of New Orleans.

Founded as a money-making venture by a group of English aristocrats in 1670, on the tip of a peninsula at the confluence of the Ashley and Cooper rivers, Charles Towne swiftly boomed as a port serving the rice and cotton plantations. It became the region's dominant town, a commercial and cultural center that right from the start had a mixed population, with immigrants including French, Germans, Jews, Italians, and Irish, as well as the English majority. One-third of all the nation's enslaved Africans passed through Charleston, sold at the market on the riverfront and bringing with them their ironworking, building, and farming skills.

The town had a sizeable free black community too, and its then unusual urban density allowed an anonymity and racial openness that, although still dominated by slavery, went a lot further than in the rest of the South. Nevertheless there was still slave unrest, culminating in the abortive Veysey revolt of 1823, after which the city built the Citadel army and later the military university to control future uprisings.

Charleston was practically ruined by the Civil War, which started on its very doorstep, at Fort Sumter in the harbor. Fire swept through, destroying large chunks, in 1861, and Union bombardment was relentless; it was eventually taken by Union forces in February 1865. After the war, the decline of the plantation economy and slump in cotton prices led to an economic crash, made worse by a catastrophic earthquake in 1886. As the upcountry industrialized, capital steadily deserted the city, and it only really recovered when World War II restored its importance as a port and naval base. Since then, a steady program of preservation and restoration has made tourism Charleston's main focus, based primarily on its rich Colonial history. Downtown, especially, there's a rather genteel air about the place, and prices tend to be high, whether you're looking for a room, a quick lunch, or a beer. Despite the gentrification, however, Charleston has kept its atmosphere, while maintaining all the energy and life of a real, working town. The traditions of the sea islands are a tangible presence here, too: "basket ladies" weave their sweetgrass baskets all around the market and near the post office, and many locals – black and white – speak the distinctive Gullah dialect.

△ Charleston's waterfront

As for the Charleston dance craze, the steps supposedly originated with West African slaves in South Carolina, but became popular during the Jazz Age, following the success of "The Charleston," a hit tune in James P. Johnson's Broadway smash Runnin' Wild.

Arrival and information

Charleston International Airport is about twelve miles north of downtown, off I-526 (📍 www.chs-airport.com); the airport shuttle (☎ 843/767-1100) costs $12, while a taxi ride with Yellow Cabs (☎ 843/577-6565) costs around $25. Local public transportation isn't bad: CARTA buses ($1.25 exact change; 📍 www.ridecarta.com) cover most areas, including nearby beaches as well as the Amtrak station at 4565 Gaynor Ave, eight miles north of downtown (take a cab at night) and Greyhound station, in a similarly unsafe area at 3610 Dorchester Rd, out near I-26. The Downtown Area Shuttles (DASH; $1.25 exact change) comprise four useful trolley routes, three of which stop at the visitor center. You can buy passes that cover both buses and trolleys (day-pass $4, 3-day pass $9, 10-ride pass $10).

Charleston's huge, well-equipped visitor center, 375 Meeting St (daily: March–Oct 8.30am–5.30pm; Nov–Feb 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 843/853-8000, 📍 www.charlestoncvb.com), has discount coupons, leaflets, maps, and bus passes; they also show a short film about Charleston's history ($2). The post office is at 83 Broad St.

Accommodation

Though Charleston accommodation is pricey, it's worth budgeting to stay within walking distance of downtown. As well as hotels, a lot of grand Historic District houses serve as B&Bs, with prices starting at around $80 a night; agencies include Historic Charleston B&B, 60 Broad St (☎ 843/722-6606 or 1-800/743-3583, 📍 www.historiccharlestonbedandbreakfast.com). There's also a good hostel not too far from downtown. Further out, the usual motels cluster around US-17 in West Ashley and Mount Pleasant, and along I-26 in North Charleston.

Guided tours

Charleston is ideal for walking tours; the visitor center has details on scores of them. For a lively, informed overview, set off from the circular fountain in Waterfront Park with Tour Charleston LLC (daily 10am, 2pm & 5pm; $18; ☎ 843/723-1670, 📍 www.tourcharleston.com). The same company offers popular pirate tours (10am & 4pm; $18) and ghost tours (5pm, 7.30pm & 9.30pm; $18). The Civil War Walking Tour sets out from the Mills House Hotel, 115 Meeting St (March–Dec daily 9am; $17; private tours available all year; ☎ 843/722-7033). Architectural Walking Tours of Charleston run two 2hr tours, starting at the Meeting Street Inn, 173 Meeting St – the morning tour covers the eighteenth century, the afternoon tour the nineteenth (Mon & Wed–Sat 10am & 2pm; $20; ☎ 843/893-2327 or 1-800/931-7761, 📍 www.architecturalwalkingtoursofcharleston.com). In fall, the Preservation Society, 147 King St (☎ 843/722-4630), organizes candlelit tours of the Historic District, visiting a few private old homes (Sept & Oct Thurs–Sat 7–10pm; $45; 📍 www.preservationsociety.org).

There are two good black history tours. Al Miller's van tours include material on slave uprisings, the Civil War, and the lives of the freed slaves; they leave from the visitor center (1hr/2hr; $10/15; ☎ 843/762-0051, 📍 www.sitesandinsightstours.com). Gullah Tours, which depart from Gallery Chuma, 43 John St, diagonally across from the visitor center, include folktales told in Gullah and a meeting with renowned local ironworker Philip Simmons (Mon–Fri 11am & 1pm, Sat 11am, 1pm & 3pm; $18; ☎ 843/763-7551, 📍 www.gullahtours.com).

Horse and carriage rides provide a lively and leisurely overview of the town, especially lovely in the cool of the early evening. Try Old South Carriage Co, which leaves regularly between 9am and 5pm from 14 Anston St (1hr; $20, children $8; ☎ 843/723-9712, 📍 www.oldsouthcarriagetours.com).

Andrew Pinckney Inn 40 Pinckney St
 ☎ 843/937-8800 or 1-800/505-8983, @ www.andrewpinckneyinn.com. Stylish, Caribbean-style rooms in this boutique inn located beside Charleston's historic market. Continental breakfast served on the rooftop terrace overlooking the city. 5

Cannonboro Inn B&B 184 Ashley Ave, Cannonboro
 ☎ 843/723-8572 or 1-800/235-8039, @ www.charleston-sc-inns.com. Fine columned house with attractive patio and garden. Six very comfortable nonsmoking rooms, delicious breakfasts, and free use of bicycles. 6

Days Inn Historic District 155 Meeting St
 ☎ 843/722-8411 or 1-866/683-8411, @ www.thedayinn.com/charleston05262. This two-storey motel makes an unlikely sight so close to the market, but its rooms are surprisingly spacious and comfortable, with attractive wrought-iron balconies. A pool and free off-street parking as well make this downtown's best bargain. 4-6

Elliott House Inn 78 Queen St ☎ 843/723-1855 or 1-800/729-1855, @ www.elliotthouseinn.com. Built in 1861 as a residence, today the Elliott House holds 24 plush, antique-furnished guest rooms. Complimentary wine and afternoon tea are served in a pretty courtyard, which also has a Jacuzzi. Free bicycle use and a good continental breakfast. 5-7

Maison Dupre 317 E Bay St ☎ 843/723-8691 or 1-800/844-4667, @ www.maisondupre.com. Beautiful inn with 15 rooms set in a crumbling 1804 European-style building and assorted other period structures. An idyllic garden holds fountains and a wishing well. Complimentary high teas plus a good continental breakfast. 6-8

Merhaven Bed, no Breakfast 16 Halsey St, Cannonboro ☎ 843/577-3053, @ www.virtualcities.com/ons/sc/z/scz6801.htm. Two simple but light and comfortable rooms, with shared bath, and, obviously, no breakfast, in a comfy family home with a little courtyard. No credit cards. 4-5

Mills House Hotel 115 Meeting St ☎ 843/577-2400 or 1-800/874-9600, @ www.millshouse.com. Large, very elegant, and very central hotel, in business since 1853 and true to its traditions despite total renovations. Guest rooms combine period furnishings with modern comfort, while the nice lounge bar features occasional live music. 5-8

Not So Hostel 156 Spring St, Cannonboro
 ☎ 843/722-8383, @ www.notsohostel.com. Appealing hostel in a double-porched 1850 house. Rates include Internet access, bike rental, coin laundry, and breakfast, with a free shuttle from the airport, bus, and train stations. Regular live music on a small stage in the back yard. Dorms $19 per night, with every seventh night free. There are also private double rooms, plus one that sleeps four (six more to come) and you can also camp in the yard. 1/3

The City

Charleston's historic district is fairly self-contained, a predominantly residential area of leaning lines, weathered colors, and exquisite hidden courtyards, bounded by Calhoun Street to the north and East Bay Street by the river. The further south of Broad you head, the posher, prettier, and more residential the streets become. The district is best taken in by strolling at your own pace – though that pace can get pretty slow in high summer, when the heat is intense. Attractive spots to pause in the shade include the swinging benches at Waterfront Park, a beautifully landscaped piazza with fountains and boardwalks leading out over the river, and White Point Gardens, by the Battery on the tip of the peninsula, where the flower-filled lawns have good views across the water and a breeze even in the sweltering summer.

Most of the city's fine houses are private, and can only be admired from the outside; some, however, are available for tours. The late nineteenth-century Calhoun Mansion, just up from Battery Park at 16 Meeting St, is fabulously over-the-top, with its ornate plaster and woodwork, hand-painted porcelain ballroom chandeliers, and similar extravagances (Wed–Sun 11am–5pm, closed Jan; $15). Nearby, the stately antebellum Edmonston-Alston House overlooks the harbor at 21 E Battery St (Tues–Sat 10am–4.30pm, Sun & Mon 1.30–4.30pm; $10); this was one of the first houses built on the Battery, in 1825, and retains its furniture from 1838. The Neoclassical Nathaniel-Russell House, 51 Meeting St (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; @ www.historiccharleston.org; $10), is noted for its daring flying staircase, which soars unsupported for three floors. Tremendously elegant both inside and out, its piazza-free design also sets it apart from the other mansions. The Charleston Museum's $21 combination ticket (see below) gets you into the 1803 Joseph Manigault House, a lovely Neoclassical structure which stands with its back to the museum, built by descendants of Huguenot settlers, and the 1772 Heyward-Washington House, at the south end of the peninsula at 87 Church St, which was built by Thomas Heyward, a rice baron and signatory of the Declaration of Independence. (George Washington stayed here for a month in 1791, thus the name.) Admission to each separately is $9 (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm). North of downtown at the antebellum Aiken-Rhett House, 48 Elizabeth St, the work-yard and slave quarters are intact, while the mansion itself retains its original decor and furnishings (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; $8).

Built in 1771 as the Customs House and used as a prison during the Revolutionary War, the Old Exchange and Provost Dungeon, 122 E Bay St (daily 9am–5pm; $7), is a hugely significant Colonial structure. Today the upper floors are given over to learned exhibits detailing the history of the building and the city; the tone changes in the dank dungeon down below, where groups of spotlit animatronic dummies recount tales of revolutionaries, gentlemen pirates, and all manner of derring-do.

Charleston's market area runs from Meeting Street to East Bay Street, focusing on a long, narrow line of enclosed, low-roofed, nineteenth-century sheds, but also spilling out onto the surrounding streets. Undeniably touristy, packed with hard-headed “basket ladies,” this is one of the liveliest spots in town, selling junk, spices, tacky T-shirts, jewelry, and rugs. With downtown Charleston's heavy emphasis on its Colonial history, it's easy to overlook just how central the city was to the Civil War; a visit to the Confederate Museum, on the market's upper level (Oct–March Tues–Sat 11am–3.30pm; April–Sept Tues–Sat 11am–4.30pm; $6) tips the balance by showing just how close to home the “Lost Cause” still feels to many old Charlestonians. A shrine to the Rebel forces, the museum's one room is packed with everything from battleship splinters to bloodstained ladies' gloves, mess tins, canteens, and tattered flags.

Far more satisfying, the vast Charleston Museum, opposite the visitor center at 360 Meeting St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; ☎ www.charlestonmuseum.org; $10, $16 with the Joseph Manigault House or the Heyward-Washington House, $21 with both), is the nation's oldest, dating from 1773 (although the original building no longer stands). It's filled with a wealth of city memorabilia, with videos on subjects from rice-growing to the Huguenots, and strong sections on Native Americans, architecture, and the devastation of the Civil War. Prize exhibits include the table on which the secession of South Carolina was signed in 1860, a giant fossil crocodile, and the Pioneer, the first Confederate submarine, built in New Orleans in 1862. One room holds choice items from the museum's early collections; pickled snakes share space with Egyptian mummies (their faces exposed) and casts from the British Museum in London.

A good source for black history is the Avery Research Center for African-American History and Culture, based in what was once a prestigious African-American private school, west of the market at 125 Bull St (tours Mon–Fri 2–4pm, Sat noon–5pm; donation; ☎ www.cofc.edu/avery). Focused on an archive of personal papers, photographs, oral histories, and art, the center also shows periodic films, lectures, and exhibitions.

The high-quality Gibbes Museum of Art, a couple of blocks south of the market at 135 Meeting St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; ☎ www.gibbesmuseum.org; $9), places a strong emphasis on Charleston itself, providing a quick history of the city through art, but it also hosts interesting traveling exhibitions in the upstairs galleries.

At the end of Calhoun Street, overlooking the harbor, you'll find Charleston's hugely popular Aquarium (mid-Aug to end March Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; April to mid-Aug Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; last ticket sold 1hr before closing; $15, plus IMAX $22.50, plus Fort Sumter (see below) $26.50, plus IMAX and Fort Sumter $34.50; @www.scaquarium.org). It's a well-designed space, with a 40ft-deep tank at the core and open, eye-level exhibits recreating North Carolina's various watery habitats – including the Piedmont, swamps, salt marshes, and ocean – and their indigenous aquatic plant and animal life. As well as thousands of sea creatures you'll also find gators, snakes, and turtles, soaring birds, and frolicking otters. The porch-like terrace, with giant rocking chairs, is a nice place to catch the river breezes; watch out for schools of dolphins playing in the water below.

△ Charleston, SC

Fort Sumter National Monument

The first shots of the Civil War were fired on April 12, 1861, at Fort Sumter, a redoubtable federal garrison that entirely occupied a small artificial island at the entrance to Charleston Harbor. After secession, the federal government had to decide whether to reprovision its forts in the south. When a relief expedition was sent to Fort Sumter, Confederate General Pierre Beauregard demanded its surrender. In one of the ironies that so characterized the war, Beauregard, who personally coordinated the bombardment, had attended artillery classes taught by the fort's commander, Major Robert Anderson, at West Point. After a relentless barrage, the garrison gave in the next day.

Fort Sumter can only be seen today on regular boat tours that leave from alongside the Aquarium at the eastern end of Calhoun Street (daily: March–Nov 9.30am, noon & 2.30pm; Dec–Feb 11am & 2.30pm; $14; for combined tickets with the aquarium, see opposite; ☎843/881-7337 or 1-800/789-3678, @www.fortsumtertours.com). It takes 35 minutes for boats to reach the island, with great views of Charleston along the way. Only one of the fort's original three stories is left standing, thanks not to the assault that started the war, but to its subsequent siege and bombardment by Union troops, who finally recaptured it on Good Friday 1865, the very day Lincoln was assassinated. A small on-site museum holds the flags that flew over the fort, while a more comprehensive one back at the Fort Sumter visitor center on the mainland recounts the history not only of the fort but also of Charleston, and the build-up to the conflict (daily 8.30am–5pm; free).

Eating

Historic Charleston's elegant ambience lends itself very well to classy New Southern cooking served up in a variety of innovative, upbeat restaurants – prices tend to be high, but it's worth splashing out on a rather special meal. There are also plenty of ethnic restaurants, and cappuccino bars and cafés line Market and King streets.

Cypress Lowcountry Grille 167 E Bay St ☎843/727-0111. Exquisite Southern/Pan-Asian fusion food – raw and baked oysters, grouper with okra and herb broth, tuna sashimi – in a fashionable, soaring space. The wine list is exemplary, too. Entrees cost $22–35, but if you're going to splurge, let this be the place. Dinner only.

fish 442 King St ☎843/722-3474. Small, upscale, but surprisingly inexpensive seafood place a block west of the city visitor center, with black tables and exposed brickwork. The menu is simple in the extreme, with $14–18 entrees labeled as “salmon”, “trout,” and so on, but the modern Southern cuisine is infused with a definite Asian flavor. Closed Sat lunch & all Sun.

Gaulart and Malicet aka Fast and French, 98 Broad St ☎843/577-9797. Disarmingly idiosyncratic French bistro, popular with locals, where you eat perched at high communal tables. While not necessarily authentic, the food is very good, ranging from cheap snacks like a $4 croque monsieur to $13 specials such as bouillabaisse or chicken du jour. Check out the fondue nights on Thursdays.

Hominy Grill 207 Rutledge Ave ☎843/937-0930. This simple, stylish neighborhood restaurant is a favorite for fabulous gourmet Low Country cooking – try the amazing brunches. Closed Sun eve.

Hyman's Seafood 213–215 Meeting St ☎843/723-6000. Sprawling, family-owned restaurant serving great seafood – try the she-crab soup, oysters, or flounder – in a convivial, casual setting; the fried green tomatoes are something special, too. Deli take-out available.

Jestine's 251 Meeting St ☎843/722-7224. Authentic black Low Country cooking, served in a plain, simple dining room in the heart of downtown. Go for the superb fried chicken or meat-and-three-veggie deals. Closed Mon.

Magnolias 185 E Bay St ☎843/577-7771. Nouvelle Southern cuisine – shrimp with grits and such – in a buzzy monochrome setting with a circular bar.

Pane E Vino 17 Warren St ☎843/577-2337. Friendly, lovely restaurant just off the main drag in the blossoming Upper King St neighborhood, with a large if not very scenic outdoor terrace. Officially “Mediterranean” but predominantly Italian, the food is great, with pasta specials around $12 and meat or fish entrees $16–20. Closed Sun & Mon.

Poogan's Porch 72 Queen St ☎843/577-2337. Delicious local food in a big old Charleston house, including Low Country Boils, crabcakes, and catfish. Very popular for Sunday brunch. Dine on the porch or on the shady patio. Closed Sun eve.

Slightly North of Broad 192 E Bay St ☎843/723-3424. Another smart nouvelle Southern restaurant – scallops with smoked sausage, blue crab salad, and the like. It's lively with downtown business folk at lunchtime (Mon–Fri only), when they offer a $10 prix-fixe menu.

Nightlife and entertainment

Charleston has lots of music venues, clubs, and bars. For listings, see the free weekly City Paper (@www.charlestoncitypaper.com). Ask at the visitor center about the city's many festivals: chief among them is the Spoletto Festival (☎843/722-2764, @www.spoletousa.org), an extraordinarily rich extravaganza of international arts for such a relatively small city. Inspired by its Italian namesake, the festival runs for seventeen days in May/June, alongside its funkier sibling, Piccolo Spoleto (☎843/724-7305, @www.piccolospoleto.com). October's Moja Arts Festival (@www.mojafestival.com) celebrates African-American and Caribbean theater, dance, and film.

Blind Tiger 38 Broad St ☎ 843/577-0342. Local bar with hidden entrance, busy deck, and regular live music.

Cumberland's 301 King St ☎ 843/577-9469, www.cumberland.net. Friendly venue for indie, blues, bluegrass, rock, reggae, and folk.

Music Farm 32 Ann St ☎ 843/853-3276, www.musicfarm.com. This warehouse-like building alongside the visitor center is the best place in Charleston to see regional and national touring bands.

Pantheon 28 Ann St ☎ 843/577-2582. Charleston's most popular gay dance club, off King St near the visitor center. Fri–Sun only.

Southend Brewery and Smokehouse 161 E Bay St ☎ 843/853-4677. Charleston's best microbrewery, with a lively atmosphere and reasonable food.

Tango 39 Hutson St ☎ 843/577-2822. Popular multilevel dance club, open Thurs through Sat.

Vendue Inn 19 Vendue Range ☎ 843/845-7900. Elegant rooftop bar and restaurant with great views over the city, and live music of all kinds Sun–Wed.

Around Charleston

The river road, Hwy-61, leads west from Charleston along the Ashley River, past a series of magnificent plantations. Many can be visited, although in best Southern tradition, house tours tend to dwell on the furniture and dining habits of the slave masters rather than provide much sense of social history. Drayton Hall, closest to Charleston at 3380 Ashley River Rd (daily: March–Oct 9.30am–4pm; Nov–Feb 9.30am–3pm; www.draytonhall.org; $14), is a particularly elegant Georgian mansion, looking much as it did in the mid-eighteenth century, with its handcarved wood and plasterwork; there is little furniture on show, and the hourly guided tours of the house concentrate on the fine architecture. At 11.15am and 2.15pm, however, special talks, backed up by photographs and artifacts, emphasize the role of African-Americans in the Low Country, tracing the story of slavery and emancipation and how it related to Drayton Hall.

The nearby Magnolia Plantation and Gardens, ten miles from downtown Charleston, is most notable for its stunning ornamental gardens, particularly in spring when the azaleas are blooming (daily March–Oct 8am–5.30pm Nov–Feb 8.30am–5pm; $14, ticket valid for 6 days; ☎ 1-800/367-3517, www.magnoliaplantation.com). The admission price gives you access to the gardens, which include a tropical greenhouse, a petting zoo, a maze, and a wildlife observation tower, but you have to pay extra for house tours (daily 9.30am–4.30pm; $7). You don't have to pay the general admission charge to explore the Audubon Swamp Garden ($7), a preserved swamp complete with alligators and lush flowers. If you've paid general admission you can also take a "nature train" tour of the grounds, or a "nature boat" tour of the swamp; both cost $7 and last 45min.

Across the Ashley River, on Hwy-171, west of the Ashley River Bridge three miles northwest of Charleston, Charles Towne Landing is a 663-acre state park, located on the site where in 1670 the English colonists established the first permanent settlement in the Carolinas (daily: summer 8.30am–6pm; rest of year 8.30am–5pm; $5; shuttle buses $1). As well as the landing site itself, you can see a living history settlement, a replica of a seventeenth-century merchant ship, and a zoo, home to species the colonists would have encountered when they landed here – pumas, bison, alligators, black bears, and wolves. There are also seven miles of hiking and biking trails; you can rent bikes for $3.

East of Charleston, beaches such as Isle of Palms and Sullivan's Island are heavily used by locals at weekends. The further you get from town, the more likely you are to find a stretch to yourself. It's possible to get to Isle of Palms and Sullivan's Island using CARTA bus route #8 (www.ridecarta.com). If you want to stay, there are plenty of motels and eating places. On Isle of Palms, head for the Sea Biscuit Cafe, 21 J.C. Long Blvd (☎ 843/886-4079; closed Mon), which does great Southern breakfasts, and Windjammer, 1000 Ocean Blvd (☎ 843/886-8596), a late bar with live music at weekends. On Sullivan's Island, Bert's, 2209 Middle St (☎843/883-4924), is a friendly little bar and grill.

The sea islands

South of Charleston toward Savannah, the coastline dissolves into small, marshy islands. Edisto Island, south of US-17 on Hwy-174, is typical: huge live oaks festooned with great drapes of Spanish moss line the roads, beside bright green marshes with rich birdlife, and fine beaches on the seaward side. If you want to stay, there are no budget motels, but the campground at Edisto Beach State Park (☎843/869-2156, 🌐www.southcarolinaparks.com; $4 park admission) is near a great beach lined with palmetto trees and other semitropical plants. They have a few air-conditioned cabins that get reserved months in advance, and are rented by the week only in summer (📍).

The largest town in the area, BEAUFORT (pronounced “Byoofert”), is a little twee, though its old district is lovely – offset somewhat by racial tensions and the baleful proximity of the Parris Island US Marine Base, notorious for the brutality of its training regime. Think The Big Chill meets Kubrick's Full Metal Jacket; both movies are set here. The Greyhound bus station is two miles north of town on US-21. The visitor center at 1106 Carteret St (☎843/524-3163, 🌐www.beaufortsc.org) has details of tours around the historic district and discount coupons for the motels out on US-21. In town, the Best Western Sea Island Inn, near the water at 1015 Bay St (☎843/522-2090, 🌐www.bestwestern.com/seaislandinn; 📍), has nice rooms with an old-fashioned feel. For a luxurious B&B, head for the Beaufort Inn, 809 Port Republic St (☎843/379-4667, 🌐www.beaufortinn.com; 📍), which also has a superb Low Country/New American restaurant. Breakfast is best (try the corned-beef hash) at Blackstone's, 205 Scott St (☎843/524-4330); if you're after coffee and a light meal (and a good read), there's Firehouse Books and Espresso, 706 Craven St (☎843/522-2665). Ollie's by the Bay, 822 Bay St (☎843/524-2500), has river views and great oysters. In spring and fall, Beaufort's waterfront stages a series of live gospel, jazz, and bluegrass concerts; check with the visitor center for schedules.

St Helena Island and Hunting Island Beach

Across the bridge to the southeast of Beaufort, ST HELENA ISLAND, dotted with small shrimp- and oyster-fishing communities, is among the least spoiled of the eastern sea islands. The further south you go the more gorgeous the landscape gets: amazing Spanish moss hangs from ancient oaks, while enormous, wide views stretch out across bright marshes. Occasionally you see what looks like a fleet of ships in the middle of a field, only to realize that in fact the boats are anchored in a small salt creek, hidden by bright green marsh reeds.

This is an area of strong black communities, descended from slaves, who were given parcels of land when they were freed by the Union army in February 1865; they speak a dialect known as Gullah, an Afro-English patois with many West African words. The Gullah Institute, in the Penn Center Historic District off US-21 (☎843/838-2432, 🌐www.penncenter.com), houses the school started for freed slaves by Charlotte Forten, a black Massachusetts teacher, who remarked, “I have never seen children so eager to learn . . . the majority learn with wonderful rapidity. Many of the grown people are desirous of learning to read. It is wonderful how a people who have been so long crushed to the earth . . . can have so great a desire for knowledge, and such a capability for attaining it.” The school was an important retreat for civil rights leaders in the 1960s, used by Dr Martin Luther King Jr's SCLC and others. Set back from the road is a museum containing fascinating old pictures of black fishermen and farmers, plus weathered tools, shrimp nets, and rattlesnake skins (Mon–Sat 11am–4pm; donation). Nearby, off US-21 and nestled among the thick Spanish moss, the ruined black Chapel of Ease, with seashell-adorned interior walls, was built in 1742.

There are some great places to eat around here. Ultimate Eating, 859 Sea Island Parkway (☎ 843/838-1314), serves nourishing Low Country and Gullah-style dishes, while at 1929 Sea Island Parkway, before the bridge across to Hunting Island, the tiny Shrimp Shack (March–Dec Mon–Sat from 11am; ☎ 843/838-2962), is a wonderful fresh seafood joint. Don't miss the fat, juicy shrimp burgers.

St Helena's main beach, at Hunting Island State Park on the east shore (daily dawn–dusk: $4), can get crowded, but it's simply ravishing: soft white sand, wide and gently shelving, scattered with shards of pearly shells and fringed with a mature maritime forest of palmettos, palm trees, and sea oats. The water is incredibly warm. Pelicans come here to feed, particularly in the early morning, and the shrimp fleet sails past soon after; it's also a turtle-nesting site. You can stay near the beach in weather-beaten cabins backing onto a glassy lagoon full of jumping fat fish, although you need to stay at least a week in summer, and reserve about a year in advance (☎ 843/838-2011, 🌐 www.southcarolinaparks.com; 4). There's also the larger Hunting Island campground: head first to the park office, next to a sluggish, alligator-filled pool (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 11am–5pm).

Georgia

Away from the bright lights of its capital Atlanta, GEORGIA, the largest of the Southern states, is overwhelmingly rural. Its highly indented coastline holds some beaches and towns, but mostly the state is composed of slow, easygoing communities, where the best – and sometimes the only – way to enjoy your time is to sip iced tea and have a chat on the porch.

Settlement in Georgia, the thirteenth British colony (named after King George II), started in 1733 at Savannah, intended as a haven of Christian principles for poor Britons, with both alcohol and slavery banned. However, under pressure from planters, slavery was introduced in 1752, and by the time of the Civil War almost half the population were black slaves. Little fighting took place on Georgia soil until Sherman's troops marched in from Tennessee, burned Atlanta to the ground, and, in the infamous "March to the Sea," laid waste to all property on the way to the coast.

Today, bustling Atlanta stands as the unofficial capital of the South. The city where Dr Martin Luther King Jr was born, preached, and is buried bears little relation to Gone With the Wind stereotypes, and its forward-looking energy is upheld as a role model for other cities with large black populations. Atlanta's main rival as a tourist destination is the Georgia coast, stretching south from beautiful old Savannah via the sea islands to the semitropical Okefenokee Swamp, inland near Florida. In the northeast, the Appalachian foothills are particularly fetching in fall, while the college town of Athens has a reputation for producing offbeat rock groups such as R.E.M. and the B-52s.

Getting around Georgia

Georgia's main points of interest are easily accessible, but local transportation is poor. Amtrak trains from Washington, DC, to New Orleans and Florida call at Atlanta and Savannah, respectively. Bus services in most areas are patchy and infrequent, though Atlanta has regular connections to the major cities, and several daily buses along the coast call at Savannah. Atlanta has the world's largest passenger airport, and Savannah has a reasonable service, but airfares between the two are high.

Atlanta

6

THE SOUTH | Atlanta

ATLANTA is a relatively young city. It only came into being in 1837, when an almost random dot on the map was named “Terminus” during plans for railroad construction. The Chattahoochee River here is not navigable, and the land poor for agriculture, but after the railroads arrived, the renamed Atlanta proved to be a crucial transportation center in the Civil War. Home to the huge Confederacy munitions industry, it was burned by Sherman's Union army in 1864, an act immortalized in Gone With the Wind. Recovery after the war took just a few years: Atlanta was the archetype of the aggressive, urban, industrial “New South,” championed by “boosters” – newspaper owners, bankers, politicians, and city leaders. Industrial giants who based themselves here included Coca-Cola, source of a string of philanthropic gifts to the city. Heavy black immigration increased its already considerable African-American population and led to the establishment of the thriving community, centered on Auburn Avenue, which was to produce Martin Luther King Jr.

Today's Atlanta is at first glance a typical large American city, but no visitor could fail to notice its cosmopolitan, progressive feel. Ever since electing the nation's first black mayor, the late Maynard Jackson, in 1974, it has remained the most conspicuously black-run city in the US; further, its hosting of the 1996 Olympics is just the highest profile success in a sustained catalogue of entrepreneurial achievements. Tourists come to Atlanta for its vibrant arts, dining, and nightlife scenes, but the city holds plenty of must-see attractions as well, from the various sites associated with Dr King to cultural institutions like the High Museum of Art and Atlanta History Center, and from the new Georgia Aquarium to open spaces like downtown's Centennial and Piedmont parks.

The flip side of the fact that there was no great reason to put a city here is that neither are there any obvious geographical factors to prevent Atlanta from growing indefinitely. The population of the entire metropolitan area now exceeds four million, and urban sprawl is such a problem that each citizen is obliged to travel an average of 35 miles per day by car – the highest figure in the country. Cut off from each other by roaring freeways, and an enclave mentality, its neighborhoods tend to have distinct racial identities – broadly speaking, “white flight” was to the northern suburbs, while the southern districts are predominantly black.

Arrival and information

The colossal Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport (☎404/530-6600), the busiest passenger airport in the US, is ten miles south of downtown Atlanta, just inside I-285 (“the perimeter”). It marks the southern terminus of the south line of the subway (see p.524), a 15min ride from downtown, and is also served by the Atlanta Link shuttle buses (daily 7am–11pm; $16.50 to downtown; ☎404/524-3400 or 1-866/545-9633, @www.theatlantalink.com) and Checker Cab taxis (☎404/351-1111; $25 to downtown).

Atlanta's Amtrak station, 1688 Peachtree St, is at the north end of Midtown, just under a mile north of the nearest subway station, Arts Center; catch a cab or bus

#23 to connect. Greyhound buses arrive south of downtown at 232 Forsyth St, near the Garnett Street subway station.

Atlanta's principal visitor center is downtown at Pryor and Atlanta streets (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm; ☎404/523-2311 or 1-800/285-2682, 🌐www.atlanta.net). The adjoining AtlanTIX (Tues–Sat 11am–6pm, Sun noon–4pm; ☎678/318-1400, 🌐www.atlantaperforms.com) sells tickets for local events and performances, with half-price discounts available every day. Other visitor centers are located in the Lenox Square mall in Buckhead (Tues–Sat 11am–5pm, Sun noon–6pm), which also holds an AtlanTIX booth, and in the North Terminal at the airport (Mon–Fri 9am–9pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 12.30–6pm).

The city's safe, efficient subway system consists of two distinct lines, one east–west and one north–south; they intersect downtown at Five Points (daily 5am–1am; single fare $1.75, Fri–Sun pass $9, weekly pass $13). The system is run by the Metropolitan Area Rapid Transit Authority (MARTA; ☎404/848-5000, 🌐www.itsmarta.com), which also operates a wide network of buses.

The Atlanta Preservation Center runs a varied program of ninety-minute walk-ing tours of different Atlanta neighborhoods, including Sweet Auburn (with emphasis on the churches), and an architectural tour of downtown (March–Nov only, daily except Tues; $10; ☎404/688-3350, 🌐www.preserveatlanta.com).

Accommodation

The most economical accommodation options in downtown Atlanta are the chain hotels, but with so many conventioners coming to town even these aren't particularly inexpensive; weekend rates can be better, but just to park costs at least $15 per night. Midtown is generally cheaper, and puts you nearer the nightlife, while Buckhead boasts some of the swankiest hotels in the country. If you're driving into Georgia, you can save a good deal of money by picking up discount coupons from state visitor centers. The B&B Atlanta agency can reserve B&B rooms (☎404/875-0525 or 1-800/967-3224, 🌐www.bedandbreakfastatlanta.com).

Ansley Inn 253 15th St ☎404/872-9000 or 1-800/446-5416, 🌐www.ansleyinn.com. Lovely, friendly Midtown B&B, in a century-old Tudor-style mansion near Ansley Park (and in a less characterful extension out back), where the 22 rooms have stripped-wood floors, antique furnishings, wet bars, and whirlpool tubs. Closed for renovations at press time, but expected to reopen shortly. ⑤

Atlanta International Hostel 223 Ponce de Leon Ave ☎404/875-9449 or 1-800/473-9449, 🌐www.hostel-atlanta.com. Around a hundred $22 beds in male, female, and mixed dorms, in a central Midtown location close to the North Ave MARTA station. Also a pool table, kitchen, and laundry room.

Cheshire Motor Inn 1865 Cheshire Bridge Rd NE at Piedmont ☎404/872-9628. Old-fashioned family-run Midtown motel that's also home to the Colonnade restaurant (see p.530). Good-value accommodation in an area where it's safer to drive than walk. ⑤

Days Inn – Atlanta Downtown 300 Spring St NW ☎404/523-1144, 🌐www.atlantadaysinn.com. Reliable chain hotel in the heart of downtown, with a restaurant and an outdoor pool. ⑤

Georgian Terrace Hotel 659 Peachtree St NE ☎404/897-1991 or 1-800/651-2316, 🌐www.thegeorgianterrace.com. Stylish century-old hotel in prime Midtown location across from the Fox Theatre. Very classy rooms and suites – some bedrooms are round, offering great views – plus fine restaurants and a rooftop pool. ⑦

Hampton Inn and Suites Atlanta Downtown 161 Spring Street NW ☎404/589-1111 or 1-800/426-7866, 🌐hamptoninn.hilton.com. This six-story downtown chain hotel may look unspectacular, but all its rooms have been renovated to a surprisingly high standard, making it one of the best-value central options. Rates include breakfast. ⑥

Hotel Indigo 683 Peachtree St at Ponce de Leon ☎404/874-9200, 🌐www.hotelindigo.com. Plush but well-priced “boutique hotel” near the Fox Theater in the heart of Midtown. ⑤

Ritz-Carlton Buckhead 3434 Peachtree Rd NE ☎404/237-2700, 🌐www.ritzcarlton.com. Exquisite, elegant hotel, one of the finest in the Ritz-Carlton group, with one of Atlanta's best haute cuisine restaurants. ⑦

Sheraton Atlanta Hotel 165 Courtland St NE
 ☎ 404/659-6500 or 1-800/833-8624, 🌐 www.sheratonatlantahotel.com. Luxury downtown hotel with wonderful indoor pool surrounded by foliage, plus its own mini-shopping mall. 6

Super 8 111 Cone St ☎ 404/524-7000 or 1-800/800-8000, 🌐 www.super8atlanta.com. Very atypical Super 8, housed in a converted downtown hotel and offering bargain rates for a great spot near Centennial Park. 4

Travelodge Downtown 311 Courtland St NE
 ☎ 404/659-4545 or 1-800/578-7878, 🌐 www.travelodge.com. Small, central motel, offering standard rooms on the east side of downtown, plus a pool. 4

The City

Atlanta's layout is confusing, with its roads following old Native American trails rather than a logical grid. An absurd one hundred streets are named "Peachtree"; be sure to note whether you're looking for Avenue, Road, Boulevard, and so forth. The most important of the Peachtrees, Peachtree Street, cuts a long north-south swath through the city. Sights are scattered, but relatively easy to reach on public transportation. Most individual neighborhoods, including downtown, the Martin Luther King Jr Historic District (ranged along Auburn Avenue), and trendy Little Five Points and Virginia-Highland, are easy to explore on foot.

Downtown Atlanta

Downtown Atlanta centers on the railroad terminus for which the city was founded. During the late nineteenth century, its original core was effectively buried by the construction of railroad viaducts; businesses moved their commercial activities up to the new street level and used their former premises as cellars. Twice now, in 1969 and 1989, the city has attempted to revitalize the underground labyrinth of cobbled streets as an entertainment, shopping, and dining complex. Known as Underground Atlanta (or "the Underground"), it's a gimmicky mall that continues to be the liveliest part of downtown, and the one area that remains active after dark, but in truth it's once more running out of steam, and much more of a draw for local teenagers than for out-of-town visitors.

By contrast, tourists and local families alike are flocking these days to Centennial Olympic Park, a quarter-mile northwest of Underground Atlanta. Created when several downtown blocks were razed prior to the 1996 Olympics, and intended as a focus for public festivities during the Games, the park was immediately forced into temporary closure by the pipe-bombing that killed two revelers. Now relandscaped, it has become the city's most popular open space, and is usually thronging in summer with kids playing in the 25 water jets of its Fountain of Rings.

On the north side of the park, the new Georgia Aquarium, 225 Baker St (Mon-Fri 9am-6pm, Sat & Sun 8am-6pm; $22.75, under-13s $17; ☎ 404/581-4000, 🌐 www.georgiaaquarium.org), claims to be the world's largest such site. A state-of-the-art facility aimed primarily at children, it's been such a success that unless you reserve tickets in advance (for a specific time slot), you may well not be able to get in at all – and even if you do, the endless shuffling crowds may make you wish you hadn't bothered. Its five themed zones do hold some undeniably impressive exhibits, though, especially Cold Water Quest, with its five beluga whales, eerily lit century-old Japanese spider crabs, sea otters, and giant octopus.

Immediately east of the aquarium, the World of Coca-Cola museum has recently moved from its former home at Underground Atlanta, and had yet to reopen when this book went to press. Expect high-tech displays on Coca-Cola's history, and a chance to quench your thirst with Coke products from all over the world (see 🌐 www.woccatlanta.com for the latest details).

At Centennial Park's southwest corner, the CNN Center is the headquarters of Atlanta's pride and joy, the largest news broadcaster in the world. Adrenalinfueled, 55-minute guided tours (daily 9am–5pm, every 15min; $12) rush visitors past frazzled producers and toothy anchorpersons; if you're interested in how TV studios work, it's entertaining enough, but you'll learn little about how CNN defines and disseminates news.

Sweet Auburn

A mere half-mile east of downtown, Auburn Avenue stands as a monument to Atlanta's black history. During its heyday in the 1920s, "Sweet Auburn" was a prosperous, progressive area of black-owned businesses and jazz clubs, but it went into a decline with the Depression, from which, despite repeated attempts at revitalization, it has never truly recovered.

Nonetheless, several blocks have been designated as the Martin Luther King Jr National Historic Site, in honor of Auburn's most cherished native son. This short stretch of road is the most visited attraction in all Georgia, and it's a moving experience to watch the crowds of schoolkids listening patiently to the guided tours and waiting in turn to take photographs. Head first for the Park Service's visitor center, 450 Auburn Ave (daily: mid-June to mid-Aug 9am–6pm; mid-Aug to mid-June 9am–5pm; ☎ 404/331-5190, 🌐 www.nps.gov/malu), where the "Courage To Lead" exhibition covers King's life and campaigns. If you're looking for an account of the civil rights years, the museum at Memphis is much more comprehensive (see p.558), but this provides a powerful potted summary, with alternative simplified captions for children. It culminates with the mule-drawn wagon that was used in King's funeral procession in Atlanta on April 9, 1968.

As soon as you arrive at the visitor center, register for a free half-hour tour of King's Birth Home, a short walk east at 501 Auburn (same hours as visitor center). The lively, anecdotal tours start from Fire Station no. 6, nearby at 39 Boulevard; as only fifteen people can visit at a time, and school groups often visit en masse, you may have to settle instead for a "virtual tour," utilizing the computers at the visitor center. The home itself is a 14-room Queen Anne-style shotgun house, restored to its prosperous 1930s appearance, and now looking smarter than its neighbors. Home to Martin until he was 12, it remained in his family until 1971.

Across from the visitor center, the King Center, 449 Auburn (daily 9am–5pm; 🌐 www.thekingcenter.org), is privately run by King's family. Chiefly an educational and research facility, it also features displays of treasured artifacts such as King's Bibles and traveling case, as well as separate rooms devoted to Mahatma Gandhi and Rosa Parks. King's mortal remains, guarded by an eternal flame, are held in a plain marble tomb, inscribed with the words "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty I'm free at last," which stands in the shallow, five-tiered Reflecting Pool outside.

Next door, the Ebenezer Baptist Church, where King's funeral took place – and where his mother was assassinated while playing the organ in 1974 – has been converted into another museum (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm), staffed by volunteers eager to share their memories. It's now only used for special occasions, while its congregation has decamped to a much larger church alongside the visitor center.

Midtown

Midtown stretches from Ponce de Leon Avenue, lined with funky restaurants, to 26th Street. In recent years, it has become dominated by massive cutting-edge skyscrapers – look out for the spiky, futuristic One Atlantic Center, at 15th and Peachtree streets, designed by Philip Johnson and John Burgee. The wildly flamboyant Art Deco Fox Theatre, 660 Peachtree St, at Ponce de Leon (☎ 404/881-2100, 🌐 www.foxtheatre.org), with its strong Moorish theme, should also not be missed. Unless you buy a ticket for one of its fairly mainstream shows, the only

Dr Martin Luther King Jr (1929–1968)

Martin Luther King Jr was born in Atlanta at 501 Auburn Avenue on January 15, 1929. The house was then home to his parents and his grandparents; both his maternal grandfather, Rev A.D. Williams, and his father, Martin Luther King Sr, served as pastor of the nearby Ebenezer Baptist Church. Young Martin was ordained at 19 and became co-pastor at Ebenezer with his father, but continued his studies at Crozer Theological Seminary in Pennsylvania, where he was profoundly influenced by the ideas of Mahatma Gandhi, and at Boston University.

Returning to the South, King became pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, Alabama, in 1954, where his leadership during the bus boycott a year later (see p.585) brought him to national prominence. A visit to India in 1957 further cemented his belief in non-violent resistance as the means by which racial segregation could be eradicated. He returned to Atlanta in 1960, becoming co-pastor at Ebenezer once more, but also taking on the presidency of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. As such, he became the figurehead for the civil rights struggle, planning strategy for future campaigns, flying into each new trouble spot, and commenting to the news media on every latest development. His apotheosis in that role came in August 1963, when he addressed the March on Washington with his famous “I Have a Dream” speech. He was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964.

Despite King’s passionate espousal of non-violence, J. Edgar Hoover’s FBI branded him “the most dangerous and effective Negro leader in the country,” and persistently attempted to discredit him over his personal life. King himself became more overtly politicized in his final years. Challenged by the stridency of Malcolm X and the radicalism of urban black youth, he came to see the deprivation and poverty of the cities of the North as affecting black and white alike, and only solvable by tackling “the triple evils of racism, extreme materialism, and militarism.” In the South, he had always been able to appeal to the federal government as an (albeit often reluctant) ally; now, having declared his opposition to the war in Vietnam, he faced a sterner and lonelier struggle. In any event, his Poor People’s Campaign had barely got off the ground before King was assassinated in Memphis on April 4, 1968.

way to see the theater is on an organized tour (Mon, Wed & Thurs 10am, Sat 10am & 11am; $10; ☎404/688-3353).

Three blocks north of the theater, the only ordinary brick home left on Peachtree Street, at no. 990, has survived because of its status as the Margaret Mitchell House (daily 9.30am–5pm; $12; ☎404/249-7015, @www.gwtw.org). Mitchell and her husband were living in the small basement apartment she called “the dump” during the ten years she took to write the best-selling novel of all time, Gone With the Wind. Published in 1936, it took just six weeks to sell enough copies to form a tower fifty times higher than the Empire State Building; the 1939 movie version scaled further peaks of popularity. Guided tours and various exhibits tell the whole fascinating story. After a compulsory hard-sell interval in the gift store, you can then see more memorabilia in the separate but linked movie museum (same hours and ticket).

A little further up Peachtree, at no. 1280, the enormous Woodruff Arts Center is home to Atlanta’s High Museum of Art (Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Thurs 10am–8pm, Sun noon–5pm; $15; ☎404/773-4444, @www.high.org). Celebrating its centenary in 2005, the High unveiled three new buildings, designed by Renzo Piano, around its central piazza. Now with double the exhibition space, it’s a truly world-class museum. Its permanent collections include the excellent “Art and Life in Africa” displays at street level, American folk art by outsider artists like Howard Finster and Mose Tolliver, and extensive European galleries covering five centuries from Renaissance Italy to the French Impressionists. Its temporary exhibitions are quite superb too, while the museum has formed a three-year partnership, which started in late 2006, with the Louvre in Paris, that enables it to display themed highlights from the Louvre's unparalleled treasures. The High also has a good gift shop, a peaceful little espresso bar, and a top-notch restaurant, Table 1280.

A few blocks east of Peachtree St, best approached via 14th St, the highlight of spacious Piedmont Park is the landscaped Atlanta Botanical Garden (daily except Mon: April–Sept 9am–7pm, Oct–March 9am–5pm; $12). In addition to holding conservatories of tropical and desert plants, the garden hosts summer-long sculpture exhibitions on its lovely lawns.

Buckhead

North of Midtown, where Peachtree meets Paces Ferry Road, the affluent, predominantly white Buckhead neighborhood has long been a trendy area of glitzy malls and swanky hotels. In recent years, it has acquired an unwanted reputation as “party central” and even witnessed several murders. However, the developers who are currently upgrading Buckhead yet again make no bones about adopting Los Angeles's Rodeo Drive as their role model, and the area is likely to continue as the city's premier nightlife and shopping district, becoming even more exclusive than ever.

Tucked away a short distance west of central Buckhead, the permanent exhibits at the superb Atlanta History Center, 130 W Paces Ferry Rd (Mon–Sat 10am–5.30pm, Sun noon–5.30pm; $15; ☎ 404/814-4000, 🌐 www.atlantahistorycenter.com), focus on two main aspects. One section covers Atlanta history in exhaustive detail, with fascinating old photos and movie footage; black and women's history is well-represented, though there's very little on Dr King. Several other rooms display a remarkable collection of Civil War artifacts; even if the military minutiae don't captivate you, the human stories surely will, and the whole combines to provide a clear year-by-year history of the war, albeit with a definite leaning toward the Confederate cause. You can also tour two houses in the extensive grounds: the ponderous 1920s mock-classical Swan House, a mansion, and the antebellum Tullie Smith Farm and garden.

The West End

The West End, Atlanta's oldest quarter, is a slightly shabby but slowly reviving district southwest of downtown. Historically a black residential area, it remains so today: a buzzy, more upbeat counterpoint to Sweet Auburn. Here, you'll find Georgia's only museum dedicated to African-American and Haitian art, the Hammonds House, 503 Peeples St (Tues–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat & Sun 1–5pm; $4; 🌐 www.hammondshouse.org), as well as the 1910 Beaux Arts Herndon Home, 587 University Place (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm; $5; 🌐 www.herndonhome.org), which was designed and lived in by Alonzo Herndon, a former slave who became a barber, founded the Atlanta Life Insurance Company (from 1920 to 1980 the nation's largest black-owned business), and went on to become the city's first black millionaire.

You can also visit the Wren's Nest, at 1050 R.D. Abernathy Blvd, the former home of Joel Chandler Harris, the (white) author of Br'er Rabbit (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $7). The house has been open to visitors since soon after Harris died in 1908, and remains much as he left it, complete with a stuffed owl given to him by President Theodore Roosevelt. A short film explains that he first heard the Uncle Remus stories from slaves, when he trained as a printer on a plantation newspaper. Occasional storytelling sessions take place in the peaceful, untamed garden.

Grant Park

A mile southeast of downtown, Grant Park – named for a Confederate defender of Atlanta, not the victorious Union general – is home to two neighboring attractions. A purpose-built theater houses the Cyclorama, a huge circular painting depicting the Civil War Battle of Atlanta, executed by a group of German and Polish artists in 1885–86. Cycloramas used to travel around the country as entertainment in the days before movies; you sit inside the circle of the painting while the whole auditorium slowly rotates. It makes an especially impressive spectacle because, in part to mask deterioration of the canvas, a 3D diorama has been constructed in front that makes it hard to see where the painting ends and the mannequins begin. An accompanying museum (daily 9.20am–4.30pm; $7) treats the war from the viewpoint of the average soldier, interspersing distressing statistics with photos and memorabilia.

The adjacent Zoo Atlanta (Mon–Fri 9.30am–5.30pm, Sat & Sun 9.30am–6.30pm; $18; www.zooatlanta.org) features a pair of giant pandas from Chengdu, 24 gorillas, and several orangutans, plus recreations of African rainforests and other habitats.

Little Five Points to Emory University

Northeast of Auburn Avenue, around Euclid and Moreland avenues, the youthful Little Five Points district is the center of Atlanta's alternative community, a tangle of thrift stores, secondhand record stores, funky restaurants, body-piercing and branding parlors, bars, and clubs. By way of contrast, just a few blocks north at 1 Copenhill Ave, on the hill where Sherman is said to have watched Atlanta burn, the Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and Museum (Mon–Sat 9am–4.45pm, Sun noon–4.45pm; $8; t.404/865-7100, www.jimmycarterlibrary.org) is devoted to the peanut farmer who rose to become Georgia state governor and the 39th president of the USA. In addition to viewing film footage and a reconstruction of his Oval Office, you can read 12-year-old Jimmy's school essay on health, in which he earnestly urges his readers to keep their teeth clean.

Northeast of here, beyond the yuppie Virginia-Highland restaurant district, the trek to Emory University's campus is rewarded by the stylish, airy Michael C. Carlos Museum, 571 S Kilgo St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $7 donation; t.404/727-4282, www.carlos.emory.edu), which has a huge collection of fine art and antiquities from all six inhabited continents. Sub-Saharan African art is unusually well represented, including Nigerian headcrests woven with snake-like tendrils; among the extraordinary pre-Columbian collection, note the Andean Human as a Peanut.

Stone Mountain

Half an hour's drive east of Atlanta's city center, Stone Mountain State Park is arrayed around the base of what's said to be the world's largest natural granite monolith, a full five miles in circumference. One face of this outcrop holds a massive bas-relief sculpture, measuring 90ft by 190ft, and depicting Confederates Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee, and Stonewall Jackson. Started in 1924 by Gutzon Borglum, who went on to carve Mount Rushmore in South Dakota, the sculpture was not completed until 1970. For most visitors, however, the carving is just one feature of what's become an all-around family destination. You can see it if you simply pay the $8 per vehicle fee to drive into the park, but paying an additional, steep fee of $22 per adult or $18 per child aged 3–11 (reduced to $13 for everyone after 4pm, and to $17 on days when not all attractions are open) entitles you to a host of other attractions and activities. These include a 30min train ride around the mountain; paddlewheel and pedal-boat rides on the nearby lake; two mini-golf courses; and the Crossroads theme park, which features a “4D” movie theater and various hokey countrified stalls and diners. It’s also possible to hike up the mountain on a 45min trail, or ride a sky lift to the top. The park itself is open daily 6am to midnight, while the major paying attractions vary between a maximum of 10am to 8pm in summer down to 10am to 5pm in winter. Contact ☎ 1-800/401-2407 or 🌐 www.stonemountainpark.com for full details.

Eating

Atlanta has scores of good restaurants to suit all budgets. Most of the downtown options close down fairly early and are quite upmarket, while Buckhead is even glitzier. Southern soul food is best around Auburn Avenue, and vegetarians can get plenty of choice in Little Five Points and Virginia-Highland.

Atlanta Fish Market 265 Pharr Rd NE ☎ 404/262-3165. Buckhead’s top seafood specialist, at the sign of the giant fish, with ultra-fresh oysters and crabs; dinner can get expensive, but lunch (daily except Sun) is great value.

Buckhead Diner 3073 Piedmont Rd, at E Paces Ferry ☎ 404/262-3336. Glitzy postmodern diner, always packed with locals enjoying Southern food with a (frequently Asian) twist, like crab egg rolls, stuffed grits, or veal and wild mushroom meatloaf. No reservations taken, so expect a wait.

Café Sunflower 2140 Peachtree Rd ☎ 404/352-8859. Friendly, classy, good-value vegetarian restaurant on the southern fringes of Buckhead. Tasty stir-fried tofu and pad Thai noodles, several “mock chicken” dishes, delicious steamed dumplings, and amazing dairy-free desserts. Closed Sun.

Colonnade 1879 Cheshire Bridge Rd NE at Wellborne ☎ 404/874-5642. Long-established, inexpensive Southern restaurant adjoining Midtown’s Cheshire Motor Inn (see p.524). Specializes in fried chicken made just the way it’s supposed to be.

DeKalb Farmers’ Market 3000 E Ponce de Leon Ave ☎ 404/377-6400. This enormous indoor market, 20 minutes’ drive east of downtown toward Stone Mountain, is the perfect spot for a take-out lunch. Stalls sell goat stew, tofu stir-fry, and glazed duck; other goodies include fresh farm-fattened catfish and pretty blue crabs, as well as aromatic coffees from around the world.

Doc Chey’s Noodle House 1424 N Highland Ave ☎ 404/888-0777. Plain but friendly Virginia-Highland noodle joint, serving bargain-priced Asian food that also includes rice and soup dishes. There’s also a spacious patio.

Fat Matt’s Rib Shack 1811 Piedmont Ave ☎ 404/607-1622. Atlanta’s best barbecue, halfway between Midtown and Buckhead, plus live blues at 8pm nightly. It makes little difference if you choose a plateful of juicy pork or chicken, or a “sandwich”

(a slab of ribs piled on a slab of bread) – everything here is delicious.

Flying Biscuit 1001 Piedmont Ave ☎ 404/874-8887. Jazzed-up café/diner at a lively Midtown intersection. Soon to go national, it’s currently renowned locally for its healthy/organic breakfasts in particular, and also serves medium-priced New American lunches and dinners, all with a Southern twist. A smaller location is near Little Five Points, at 1655 McLendon Ave NE ☎ 404/687-8888).

Harvest 853 N Highland Ave NE ☎ 404/876-8244. Appealing, flavorful “inspired regional cuisine,” such as cornbread-crusted chicken or cane sugar pork loin, served in a bright, characterful frame house in the heart of Virginia-Highland.

Kyma 3085 Piedmont Rd NE ☎ 404/262-0702. Extraordinarily opulent Greek restaurant in Buckhead. Serves beautifully prepared and expensive meat and fish dishes, much of it flown in daily from the Aegean. Dinner only, closed Sun.

Mary Mac’s Tearoom 224 Ponce de Leon Ave ☎ 404/876-1800. Cute little Midtown restaurant, straight out of the 1940s, famous for its cheap traditional Southern cuisine, served for lunch and dinner daily.

Nava 3060 Peachtree Rd NW ☎ 404/240-1984. Spicy, pricey, and imaginative modern Southwestern food – like barbecued rabbit tostadas – plus mighty margaritas, in Buckhead. Has a great outdoor terrace and very tasteful Southwestern decor. Dinner nightly, lunch weekdays only.

 R Thomas’ Deluxe Grill 1812 Peachtree Rd NW ☎ 404/872-2942. Lively, very quirky 24hr Midtown place where all the seating is outdoors, albeit sheltered by rattan screening (the traffic is still a bit too close and noisy for some, however). The incredibly varied menu ranges from Thai stir-fries with quinoa via fish tacos to gourmet sandwiches. It’s not all vegetarian, but even the chicken and steak tend to come with raw salads, and it makes a good, healthy, and cheap option.

Thelma's Kitchen 768 Marietta St NW
 ☎ 404/688-5855. Inexpensive downtown soul-food institution; try the salmon and grits for breakfast, and, of course, fried chicken for lunch. Mon–Fri 7.30am–4.30pm, Sat 8am–3pm.

The Varsity 61 North Ave NW ☎ 404/881-1706.
 Vast, packed Midtown fast-food drive-in diner: a true Fifties throwback, with chili dogs for under $2. Open until at least 11.30pm nightly.

Nightlife

Atlanta is a place where you can have a very good time; budget for blowing some money hopping between its bars and clubs. The main concentrations are in the overlapping yuppie Virginia-Highland and punky Little Five Points, and the more upmarket Midtown, the center of Atlanta's thriving gay and lesbian scene. Buckhead can be a lot of fun if you've got bags of cash. Major venues for touring acts include the Tabernacle at Centennial Park, 152 Luckie St (☎ 404/659-2022), and the Variety Playhouse, 1099 Euclid Ave, in Little Five Points (☎ 404/524-7354, 🌐 www.variety-playhouse.com). Up-to-the-minute listings can be found in the free weekly Creative Loafing (🌐 www.creativeloafing.com).

Apache Café 64 Third St ☎ 404/876-5436, 🌐 www.apachecafe.info. This busy downtown café serves up Latin and Caribbean favorites, but is most loved for its ever-stimulating nightly program of live R & B and soul artists, jazz funk and hip-hop dance nights, and spoken-word performances.

Blind Willie's 828 N Highland Ave NE ☎ 404/873-2583, 🌐 www.blindwilliesblues.com. The best blues venue in town, with appearances by major artists, this Virginia-Highland hangout is also a lively bar. Open Mon–Sat from 7pm.

Django Gypsy Kitchen and Saloon 495 Peachtree St ☎ 404/347-8648, 🌐 www.djangoatlanta.com. "The Belly," the funky basement of this smart, contemporary restaurant at the south end of midtown, is the nightly venue for wildly eclectic dance parties, with music from house to hip-hop to soca to Afro-Cuban jazz. Closed Sun.

The Earl 488 Flat Shoals Road ☎ 404/522-3950, 🌐 www.badearl.com. Atlanta's finest rock club, well east of the center, just south of I-20, puts on proper live acts – usually a headliner plus a couple of supports – pretty much every night.

Eddie's Attic 515B N McDonough St, Decatur ☎ 404/377-4976, 🌐 www.eddiesattic.com. Nightly acoustic music, from traditional fiddlers to contemporary singer-songwriters, plus occasional stand-up comedy.

Masquerade 695 North Ave NE ☎ 404/577-8178, 🌐 www.masq.com. Groovy grunge/punk hangout in a converted Midtown mall, split into rooms done up as Heaven, Hell, and Purgatory, with a big outdoor auditorium. Live bands Wed–Sun.

Star Community Bar 437 Moreland Ave NE ☎ 404/681-9018. Enjoyable Little Five Points watering hole, in a former bank bursting with Elvis memorabilia, and offering live music Wed–Sat. Cover charge. Closed Sun.

North from Atlanta: the mountains

Some spectacular Appalachian mountain scenery – at its best in October, when the leaves turn a brilliant red and gold – lies just a short drive from Atlanta. A drive through the mountains on the secondary roads takes you through endless hairpins and narrow passes; Hwy-348 ascends a particularly impressive pass at the White County line, crossed at the top by the Appalachian Trail. Of the various towns and villages, Dahlonega makes the best base; most of the rest – like Helen, 35 miles northeast, now a pseudo-Bavarian village – are either kitsch or downright dull. The region does, however, abound in delightful state parks, several of which offer both camping and hotel-style lodges.

Dahlonega

The attractive small town of DAHLONEGA, in the Appalachian foothills fifty miles northeast of Atlanta on US-19, owes its origins to the first-ever Gold Rush in the US. Benjamin Parks discovered gold at Auraria, six miles south, in 1828; Dahlonega was established five years later, to serve as the seat of Lumpkin County. Within another five years, enough gold had been unearthed for Dahlonega to acquire its own outpost of the US Mint, which, by the time production was terminated by the Civil War, had produced over $6 million of gold coin. The whole saga is recounted by videos and displays in the Gold Museum, housed in the handsome former courthouse on the main square (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–5pm; $4; ☎ 706/864-2257). You can also pan for gold at various small mines in the area, although you're unlikely to make your fortune. In the third week of June, the town hosts one of Appalachia's biggest annual bluegrass festivals, while the third weekend of October sees the Gold Rush Days, a real downhome hoedown, with food, crafts, clogging, and music.

Dahlonega's visitor center is across from the courthouse (daily 9am–5.30pm; ☎ 706/864-3711 or 1-800/231-5543, 🌐 www.dahlonega.org). The Smith House, just down from the square at 84 S Chestatee St (☎ 706/867-7000 or 1-800/852-9577, 🌐 www.smithhouse.com), is a classic Southern restaurant, serving superb all-you-can-eat meals at low prices, and also offering comfortable double rooms (4).

Amicalola Falls State Park

Twenty miles west of Dahlonega on Hwy-52, Amicalola Falls State Park (daily 7am–10pm; $3 per vehicle; ☎ 706/265-4703) focuses on a dramatic multi-tiered waterfall that cascades down a steep wooded hillside. Having driven to the overlook at the top, continue for another half-mile to reach the park's modern lodge (☎ 706/265-8888 or 1-800/573-9656, 🌐 www.amicalolahfalls.com; 4), which holds comfortable double rooms and a restaurant with panoramic views. For even more seclusion, hike for five miles from here toward the start of the Appalachian Trail, to reach the irresistible Len Foote Hike Inn (☎ 770/389-7275 or 1-800/864-7275, 🌐 www.hike-inn.com; 6), accessible only on foot, which offers basic rooms, with two bunk beds in each, and serves breakfast and dinner family-style, included in the overnight rates.

Athens

The small and very likeable city of ATHENS, almost seventy miles east of Atlanta, is home to the 30,000-plus students of the University of Georgia, and has a liberal feel – and city government – that's unusual for the South. Its compact downtown area north of the campus is alive with book and record stores, clubs, bars, restaurants, and cafés; Broad Street in particular is lined with sidewalk tables.

Although Athens may hold little in terms of conventional tourist attractions, it has become internationally famed as the home of rock groups such as R.E.M., Widespread Panic, and the B-52s. R.E.M. started out playing at the 40 Watt Club, originally housed at 171 College Ave, but repeatedly relocated until it found its sixth, and largest, premises in 1990 at 285 W Washington St (☎ 706/549-7871, 🌐 www.40watt.com), where it continues to host an eclectic program of gigs. The biggest music names tend to appear at the Georgia Theatre, 215 N Lumpkin St (☎ 706/549-9918, 🌐 www.georgiatheatre.com), a converted movie theater that still shows films on quiet nights, while up-and-coming bands can be heard at the Caledonia Lounge, 256 W Clayton St (☎ 706/549-5577, 🌐 www.caledonialounge.com). The free weekly Flagpole (🌐 www.flagpole.com) carries full music listings.

Practicalities

From Atlanta, Greyhound arrives at 220 W Broad St; the Athens Transit System operates buses around town (every 30min; $1.25¢ flat fare). The visitor center is situated in the city's oldest surviving home, the 1820 Church-Waddel-Brumby House, a couple of blocks north of campus at 280 E Dougherty St (summer Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun noon–6pm, otherwise Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; ☎ 706/353-1820, 🌐 www.visitathensga.com). They can provide excellent self-guided walking tours on local music history and other themes (also available online), while a good 90min bus tour of historic Athens leaves daily at 2pm ($15; ☎ 706/208-8687).

Lodging can be a problem during graduation or when there's a big football game. Otherwise, choices include the good-value, business-oriented Courtyard by Marriott, 166 Finley St (☎ 706/369-7000 or 1-800/321-2211, 🌐 www.marriott.com/ahncy; 📍); the new Holiday Inn Express, 513 W Broad St (☎ 706/546-8122, 🌐 www.hi-athens.com; 📍); or the eight-room Magnolia Terrace B&B, 277 Hill St (☎ 706/548-3860, 🌐 www.bbonline.com/ga/magnoliaterrace; 📍).

As for food, R.E.M. devotees will want to head straight for the original home of their Automatic for the People album title – Weaver D's soul-food café, a short walk east of downtown at 1016 E Broad St (lunch only; ☎ 706/353-7797), which serves delicious fried chicken and vegetables. The Grit, similarly close to downtown on the northwest side, at 199 Prince Ave (☎ 706/543-6592), offers tasty, inexpensive vegetarian dishes from around the world, while the Five and Ten, 1653 S Lumpkin St (☎ 706/546-7300), is a much fancier option offering a delicious contemporary take on Southern cuisine. Athens has a thriving bar scene, although Georgia's blue laws require drinks-only bars to close on Sundays.

Central Georgia

South of Atlanta, the broad expanse of central Georgia is famous more for its people than for places to see. Otis Redding, James Brown, Little Richard, and the Allman Brothers were all born here or grew up in the area, while former president Jimmy Carter came from little Plains, roughly 120 miles due south of the capital.

Few of the small towns hold much interest, though vegetable fanatics may enjoy tiny Juliette, twenty miles north of Macon, where the Whistle Stop Café dishes up the fried green tomatoes of book and movie fame (☎ 478/992-8886; Tues & Sun 11am–4pm, Wed–Sat 11am–7pm), and Vidalia further east, the “Sweet Onion Capital of the World.” The largest communities are Columbus, a dull army center, and likeable Macon.

Macon

MACON, eighty miles southeast of Atlanta on I-75, where I-16 branches off to the coast, makes an attractive stop en route to Savannah, especially when its 280,000 cherry trees erupt with frothy blossoms (celebrated by a festival in the third week of March). As the highest navigable point on the Ocmulgee River, Macon was laid out in 1823 and became a major cotton port. These days, and particularly since the Colonial Mall Macon appeared near the intersection of the two freeways, downtown is not the commercial center it once was.

Macon was home to Little Richard, Otis Redding, and the Allman Brothers, while James Brown recorded his first smash, the epoch-making “Please Please Please,” in an unlikely-looking mansion at 830 Mulberry St. Otis is commemorated by a bronze statue next to the unremarkable Otis Redding Memorial Bridge, just east of downtown, while his daughter Karla still runs an upscale shoe store downtown. Duane Allman and Berry Oakley, killed here in motorcycle smashes in 1971 and 1972, respectively, are buried in Rose Hill Cemetery on Riverside Drive, the inspiration for several of the band's songs. That heritage is celebrated in the exuberant Georgia Music Hall of Fame, next door to the visitor center (see below) at Martin Luther King Jr Blvd and Walnut St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $8; ☎478/751-3334, 🌐www.gamusichall.com). A huge roster of Georgia musicians are recalled by such displays as a gospel chapel, a rock'n'roll soda shop, and a country café. As well as admiring Redding's trademark black sweater and the B-52s' wigs, you can watch Ray Charles singing “Georgia on My Mind” to the state legislature, and inspect a photo of James Brown confiding to Pope John Paul II that he feels like a sex machine.

Ocmulgee National Monument

Between 900 and 1100 AD, a Native American group migrated from the Mississippi Valley to a spot overlooking the Ocmulgee River a couple of miles east of modern downtown Macon, where they leveled the site that is now Ocmulgee National Monument (daily 9am–5pm; free; 🌐www.nps.gov/ocmu). Their settlement of thatched huts has vanished, though two grassy mounds, each thought to have been topped by a temple, still rise prominently from the plateau. Near the visitor center, you can enter the underground chamber of a ceremonial earthlodge, the clay floor of which holds a ring of individually molded seats, and a striking bird-shaped altar.

Practicalities

Macon's visitor center, in the imposing Terminal Station at the foot of Cherry Street (Mon–Sat 9am–5.30pm; ☎478/743-3401 or 1-800/768-3401, 🌐www.maconga.org), is also the base for guided trolley tours and visits to the major attractions ($15).

Greyhound pulls into town at 65 Spring St, where Little Richard is said to have written “Tutti Frutti” while washing dishes. The best accommodation is downtown: for old-fashioned Southern hospitality, head for the grand 1842 Inn, 353 College St (☎478/741-1842 or 1-877/452-6599, 🌐www.the1842inn.com; 📍), which offers a full Southern breakfast in its lovely courtyard. Otherwise, Scottish Inns, 1044 Riverside Drive (☎478/746-3561; 📍), is the best budget option.

As for food, the atmospheric, wood-paneled Len Berg's, 240 Old Post Office Alley, off Walnut St (open for lunch only, Mon–Sat; ☎478/742-9255), has been serving downhome Southern lunches at bargain prices for almost a century. Bert's, downtown at 442 Cherry St (☎478/742-9100; closed Sun), is a nice little place where the food ranges from cheap Greek feta burgers at lunch to pricey wasabi tuna at dinner. For a true Southern barbecue experience, drive 45min north of town on US-23 to 📍Fresh Air Barbecue, near Jackson (☎478/775-3182); it's a roadside shack serving pork that's been hickory-smoked for 24 hours, along with succulent Brunswick stew and crisp coleslaw.

Savannah

American towns don't come much more beautiful than SAVANNAH, seventeen miles up the Savannah River from the ocean, and twenty miles south of the South Carolina state line. The ravishing historic district, ranged around Spanish-moss-

ACCOMMODATION

17 Hundred 90
Azalea Inn
Bed and Breakfast
Days Inn
Hamilton-Turner Inn

C Magnolia Place
G The Mulberry
Savannah
E Pensione
D

RESTAURANTS & BARS

6 Jazz'd Tapas Bar
11 The Jinx
1 Lady and Sons
12 Leopold's Ice
5 Cream
13 Mercury Lounge

9 Moon River Brewing
8 Co.
4 Mrs Wilkes' Boarding
10 The Olde Pink House
7

2 14
3

swathed garden squares, formed the core of the original city, and today boasts examples of just about every architectural style of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The atmospheric cobbled waterfront on the Savannah River, key to the postwar economy, is edged by towering old cotton warehouses.

Savannah was founded by James Oglethorpe in 1733 as the first settlement of the new British colony of Georgia. His intention was to establish a haven for debtors, with no Catholics, lawyers, or hard liquor – and, above all, no slaves. However, with the arrival of North Carolina settlers in the 1750s, plantation agriculture, based on slave labor, took off. The town became a major export center, at the end of important railroad lines by which cotton was funneled from far away in the South. General Sherman arrived here in December 1864 at the end of his “March to the Sea”; he offered the town to Abraham Lincoln as a Christmas gift, but at Lincoln’s urging left it intact and set to work apportioning land to freed slaves. This was the first recognition of the need for “reconstruction,” though such concrete economic provision for slaves was rarely to occur again.

After the Civil War, the plantations flourished; cotton prices slumped, and Savannah went into decline. There was little industry beyond the port, and as that fell into disuse and decay, so too did Savannah’s graceful townhouses and tree-lined boulevards. Not until the 1960s did local citizens start to organize what has been, on the whole, the successful restoration of their town. In the last two decades, the private Savannah College of Art and Design (SCAD) has injected Savannah with even more vitality, attracting a population of lively young artists and regenerating downtown even further by buying up a number of wonderful old buildings.

Savannah acquired notoriety in the mid-1990s thanks to its starring role in John Berendt’s best-selling Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil; both book and movie detailed a delicious brew of cross-dressing, voodoo, and murder. For a sense of what goes on behind closed doors in the city, it’s an unbeatable read. If you want to look behind those doors yourself, however, few locations in “The Book” – as it’s universally known – are open to the public, and none is likely to satisfy your curiosity.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Savannah’s airport is eight miles west of the city; from there, a taxi to downtown costs around $25. The bus station is on the western edge of downtown at 610 W Oglethorpe Ave, and the train station is about three miles southwest, at 2611 Seaboard Coastline Drive. The latter isn’t served by buses; a taxi from the station to downtown usually costs about $10.

The historic district is best explored on foot, but if you want to get further out, Chatham Area Transit (CAT; @www.catchacat.org) operates the free CAT Shuttle service, running between downtown, the visitor center, the waterfront, and the City Market, and also a reasonable bus network ($1). Route maps are available from the visitor center, 301 Martin Luther King Jr Blvd (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; ☎912/944-0455 or 1-877/728-2662, @www.savannahvisit.com), along with direct phones to various hotels and tour companies. The center also sells $8 passes that entitle visitors to unlimited parking at certain city meters and garages for two days. There’s another small tourist information office at River Street on the waterfront (daily 10am–10pm).

The main visitor center can provide details of countless walking tours, many of them ghost-themed, and serves as the starting point for several different trolley tours, costing from around $20. The best black heritage tour is run by Johnnie Brown ($20; ☎912/398-2785). You can also join leisurely horse-and-carriage tours, which set off from Reynolds and Madison squares every 20 to 30min (from $20; ☎912/443-9333, @www.savannahcarriage.com), or riverboat cruises, starting behind City Hall (from $18; ☎912/232-6404 or 1-800/786-6404, @www.savannahriverboat.com).

Accommodation

Ideally, the best place to stay in Savannah is the historic district, which is packed with gorgeous B&Bs (and a few nice hotels). For those on a tight budget, the usual chain motels can be found near the Greyhound station and further out on Ogeechee Road (US-17). The nearest campground is six miles southeast, at Skidaway Island State Park (from $20; ☎ 1-800/864-7275).

17 Hundred 90 307 E President St ☎ 912/236-7122, www.17hundred90.com. The oldest inn in town, said to be haunted, with an atmospheric bar and elegant restaurant. Rooms are small, but many come with original brick fireplaces. ⑥

 Azalea Inn 217 E Huntingdon St ☎ 912/236-2707 or 1-800/582-3823, www.azaleainn.com. Charming, friendly B&B, with ten bright, delightfully furnished en-suite rooms and a very welcome pool in the garden. Superb Southern breakfasts are served daily, formal dinners much more occasionally. ⑥

Bed and Breakfast Inn 117 W Gordon St ☎ 1-888/238-0518, www.savannahbnb.com. Great-value B&B, in two 1853 townhouses overlooking shady Chatham Square – reservations are essential. ④

Days Inn 201 W Bay St ☎ 912/236-4440, www.daysinn.com. Though it lacks the character of the B&Bs, this makes for an affordable, central choice. ④

Hamilton-Turner Inn 330 Abercorn St ☎ 912/233-1833 or 1-888/448-8849, www.hamilton-turnerinn.com. Opulent, 1873 French

Second Empire-style B&B with 17 rooms on Lafayette Square; once owned by “Mandy” from “The Book.” ⑦

Magnolia Place 503 Whitaker St ☎ 912/236-7674 or 1-800/238-7674, www.magnoliaplaceinn.com. Exquisite B&B in a fine old building overlooking leafy Forsyth Park; friendly staff, huge rooms, afternoon teas, and gourmet breakfasts served in the pretty patio, on the vast porch, or in the comfortable lounge. ⑦

The Mulberry 601 E Bay St ☎ 912/238-1200 or 1-877/468-1200, www.savannahhotel.com. Friendly Holiday Inn-owned hotel with a B&B feel (free iced tea and cookies in the lounge). Rooftop Jacuzzi, pool, courtyard, and luxurious river-view rooms. ⑤

Savannah Pensione 304 E Hall St ☎ 912/236-7744. This former hostel, housed in a historic Victorian District building, no longer offers individual dorm beds. Instead the same basic rooms are rented at very inexpensive rates – meaning it’s still the cheapest option for friends or couples traveling together. ②

The Town

Savannah’s historic district is flanked by the river to the north, Martin Luther King Jr Boulevard to the west, and Broad Street – which has long been replaced by Broughton Street as downtown’s main commercial thoroughfare – to the east. You can get an overview at the Savannah History Museum, adjoining the visitor center in the restored Railroad Station at 303 Martin Luther King Jr Blvd (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat & Sun 9am–5pm; $4.25), where an informative jaunt through Native American culture, colonial development, the river, and the Civil War is let down slightly by a slide show that is less a history lesson than a hard-sell promotion of Savannah’s considerable charms.

The best way to get a feel for the place is simply to wander its “tabby” streets, paved with a kind of primitive concrete mashed up with oyster shells. They’re lined with shuttered Federal, Regency, and antebellum houses, embellished with intricate iron balconies and intriguing details such as false “earthquake decorations.” The lush subtropical greenery is as stunning as the buildings, creeping its way through the ornate railings, cracking open the sidewalk, casting cool shadows, and filling the air with its warm, sensual scent. More than twenty shady residential garden squares, ablaze with Spanish-moss-tangled dogwood trees, azaleas, and creamy magnolias, offer peaceful respite from the blistering summer heat. Each one has its own personality and its own monument in the center. Forrest Gump told his life story from a bench in Chippewa Square, but eager movie-buffs will find the bench long gone, and just an imposing statue of James Oglethorpe to admire instead.

In between strolling and sitting, most visitors take in one or two of Savannah’s old mansions, such as the first restoration project of the Historic Savannah Foundation, the Georgian Davenport House, at 324 E State St (Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1-4pm; $7; @www.davensportsavga.com), which boasts a wonderful elliptical staircase and delicate plasterwork. The Green-Meldrim House, on Madison Square (Thurs & Fri 10am-4pm, Sat 10am-1pm; $5), is a splendid Gothic Revival mansion that General Sherman used as his headquarters. Its dramatic ironwork is a rare example of pre-Civil War craftsmanship; most iron in Savannah was melted down during the Civil War, and many of the balconies and railings you see today are later copies.

A Regency mansion designed by English architect William Jay on Telfair Square forms the original core of the Telfair Museum of Art, 121 Barnard St (Mon noon-5pm, Tues-Sat 10am-5pm, Sun 1-5pm; $9; @www.telfair.org). The South's oldest art museum, its best-known piece is Sylvia Shaw Judson's Bird Girl sculpture, as seen on the cover of "The Book," which was moved here from Bonaventure Cemetery (see opposite). In 2006 the Telfair's spectacular Jepson Center for the Arts (same hours; $9, or $14 with museum) opened, its dramatic marble and glass facade making a controversial addition to the neighboring York St side of Telfair Square. The center is intended to host changing exhibitions that showcase the work of Southern and Savannah-based artists, but so far its early displays have focused as much on trumpeting the virtues of the building itself; further, the admission fee is steep for what little there is to see. Kids, however, will love the high-tech gadgetry of the second-floor ArtZeum. Another Jay edifice, the elegant Owens-Thomas House at 124 Abercorn St – designed when Jay was just 24 – forms a third component of the Telfair organization (same hours; $9, $18 to visit all three).

At the southern edge of the Historic District, on Calhoun Square, the Massie Heritage Interpretation Center, 207 E Gordon St (Mon-Fri 9am-4pm; $3), is housed in Savannah's first public elementary school. A simple, effective museum, it illuminates the city's architecture with displays on its neighborhoods and development, and traces influences from as far away as London and Egypt.

Though the city squares may be redolent of the Old South, Savannah's waterfront, at the foot of a steep little bluff below Bay Street, and reached by assorted stone staircases and atmospheric alleyways, resembles more an eighteenth-century European port. The main thoroughfare, River Street, is cobbled with the ballast carried by long-vanished sailing ships, while its tall brick cotton warehouses are said to be haunted by the ghosts of the slave stevedores. It's now a touristy commercial district, lined with seafood restaurants and salty bars that heave with partying crowds on Saturday nights. Looking out over the water from the paved Riverfront Plaza, across the way, you can appreciate just how busy the port still is.

Two blocks south of the visitor center, at 460 Martin Luther King Jr Blvd, the uncompromising Ralph Martin Gilbert Civil Rights Museum (Mon-Sat 9am-5pm; $4) explores Savannah's significant role in black history. With a sustained program of mass meetings, lunch-counter sit-ins, dangerous "wade-ins" at whites-only Tybee Island beaches, and a fifteen-month boycott of local department store Levy's – the longest-running store boycott in the history of the movement – Savannah was very active in the campaigns of the 1960s; by 1964, Dr King called it "the most integrated city south of the Mason-Dixon Line." The local emphasis is consistently fascinating, and the testimony of a vanishing generation of activists compelling: "No one gave us anything ... we had to fight, and wrench it from the jaws of injustice."

African-American history is also recalled at the 1775 First African Baptist Church, in the Historic District at 23 Montgomery St (Mon-Fri 10am-3.30pm). This is the oldest black church in North America, built by slaves. Note the tribal carvings on the sides of the pews upstairs, and, downstairs, the diamond shapes made by holes in the floor – ventilation holes for slaves hiding in the 4ft subteranean crawl spaces while waiting to escape to safe havens via the Underground Railroad. At the Second African Baptist Church, 123 Houston St, General Sherman read the Emancipation Proclamation in December 1864, and issued the famous Field Order #15, which granted each freed slave forty acres and a mule.

Southeast of downtown, the predominantly black Victorian District is being slowly restored, and has a couple of good, if underfunded, museums. The nerve center of the restoration process is the King-Tisdell Cottage, 514 E Huntingdon St (Tues–Sat noon–4.30pm; $4; @ www.kingtisdell.org), owned by a middle-class black family at the end of the nineteenth century. In addition to a fine collection of Gullah baskets and African woodcarving, it illustrates the history of slaves and free blacks before the Civil War, and of the freed slaves after. The airy Beach Institute, 502 E Harris St (Tues–Sat noon–5pm; $4), Georgia's first school for freed slaves, today houses an African-American art gallery with a permanent display of extraordinary woodcarvings by folk artist Ulysses Davis.

A ten-minute drive east from Savannah will take you to the lovely Bonaventure Cemetery, swathed in trees and sloping down to the Wilmington River. The final resting place of local luminaries such as Johnny Mercer and Conrad Aiken, it's also a major sight in Midnight in the Garden, in which it's written about to great effect.

Eating

Savannah has lots of restaurants. With very few exceptions, most places on the waterfront are eminently avoidable. Far better to head for the City Market – four blocks of restored grain warehouses just a few blocks back from the river – which is downtown's prime restaurant and nightlife district.

Bistro Savannah 309 W Congress St ☎912/233-6266. A City Market favorite, with lovely decor – cherry-red walls, fairy lights – and a sophisticated menu of excellent seafood and organic specials. Try the succulent grilled flounder. Dinner only, nightly.

Cha Bella 102 E Broad St ☎912/790-7888. Jazzy, very contemporary Italian restaurant at the eastern edge of downtown, serving high-quality, modern Mediterranean cuisine with a strong commitment to organic ingredients.

Gallery Espresso 234 Bull St ☎912/233-5348.

Artsy coffee bar with nice cakes, crumpets, and muffins, along with the best coffee in town (try the local Thai) and wine. Open late.

Garibaldi 315 W Congress St ☎912/232-7118.

This atmospheric City Market restaurant, all gold mirrors and pressed-tin ceiling, serves great Northern Italian dishes, nouvelle cuisine, and seafood, mostly for under $20.

Gryphon Bull and Charlton sts ☎912/525-5880.

There's an atmospheric mix of art students, lecturers, and ladies-that-lunch in this sweet tearoom, housed in an old pharmacy with its original counter, tiled floor, and mirrors. Hundreds of special teas, genteel gourmet lunches, and mouthwatering cakes; high tea is served 4–6pm. Closed Sun.

Lady and Sons 102 W Congress St ☎912/233-2600. Thanks to heavy TV exposure, Paula Deen's mega-successful Southern restaurant sees daily lines around the block for its gut-busting buffets of fried chicken, Low Country Boil, macaroni, fried green tomatoes, and the like. Many locals insist, however, it's not a patch on Mrs Wilkes (see above).

Leopold's Ice Cream 212 E Broughton St ☎912/234-4442. In a heart-warming, if unlikely, tribute to Savannah's bygone charms, Hollywood producer Stratton Leopold (responsible for Mission: Impossible III, among others) has revamped his family's traditional downtown ice-cream parlor, originally opened in 1919, and personally serves exquisite homemade ices, plus a full menu of sandwiches, salads, and burgers.

Mrs Wilkes' Boarding House 107 W

Jones St ☎912/232-5997. This local institution offers a real Southern experience, serving all-you-care-to-eat lunches only, for $13. Everyone sits around large tables, helping themselves to delicious mounds of fried chicken, sweet potatoes, spinach, beans, and spaghetti. There's no sign outside; get there early and join the line. Mon–Fri only. No credit cards.

The Olde Pink House 23 Abercorn St

☎912/232-4286. With its resplendent pink Regency facade, this place looks a bit too good to be true, but its Low-Country, fish-heavy food is actually superb – especially the signature crispy scored flounder – and the effortless elegance of the surroundings totally seductive. Open for dinner only.

Entertainment and nightlife

Savannah's nightlife is laid-back and enjoyable, though many places are unusually strict about requiring ID. Everything is fairly close together, ranged between the City Market and the river, and almost uniquely in the US (New Orleans is another exception) you can drink alcohol on the streets in open cups. For listings, pick up the free weekly Connect newspaper (☎www.connectsavannah.com).

Savannah has the largest Irish population per capita in the US, and St Patrick's Day (March 17) is a big deal. Nowadays nearly a million revelers descend on the town to guzzle green beer, green grits, and copious amounts of Guinness; many of the 130,000 permanent residents choose this weekend to leave town.

Club One 1 Jefferson St ☎912/232-0200. Decadent gay club, where drag acts once a month include Lady Chablis, from "The Book"; everyone is welcome.

Jazz'd Tapas Bar 52 Barnard St ☎912/236-7777, ☎www.jazzdsavannah.com. Postmodern City Market lounge in the basement of the former Kress department store. Serves Southern-style (as opposed to being particularly Spanish) tapas snacks and puts on live, no-cover jazz or blues nightly (except Mon).

The Jinx 127 W Congress St ☎912/236-2281, ☎www.thejinx.net. Savannah's premier rock club, located in City Market, also puts on hip-hop and electro dance nights.

Mercury Lounge 125 W Congress St ☎912/447-6952. Super-hip lounge, with kooky decor, regular swing music, and live jazz.

Moon River Brewing Co. 21 W Bay St ☎912/447-0943. Popular brewpub near the waterfront.

Out from Savannah

Tybee Island, eighteen miles east of the city on US-80, has Savannah's best – and not too overdeveloped – beach, as well as a 154ft lighthouse dating from 1736, with a small museum (summer daily except Tues 9am–5.30pm; $5). Old Savannah Tours run six daily shuttle buses out from the city in summer ($10 roundtrip; ☎912/234-8128 or 1-800/517-9007, ☎www.oldsavannahtours.com). Abundant accommo- dation options include the 1930s oceanfront DeSoto Beach Hotel, 212 Butler Ave (☎ 912/786-4542 or 1-877/786-4542, 🌐 www.desotobeachhotel.com; 📍). For great Low Country food, head for The Crab Shack, 40 Estill Hammock Rd, Chimney Creek (☎ 912/786-9857), where you can dine on delicious fresh crabs and shrimp in a shabby old shack by the creek – if you can find it, that is: take a right turn off the main road to the beach, about two miles before you reach the lighthouse turnoff.

Fort Pulaski National Monument, off US-80 E en route to Tybee Island (daily 9am–5pm; $3; 🌐 www.nps.gov/fopu), is the most interesting of several local forts. An impressive Confederate stronghold, set on its own idyllic (if rather buggy) little island and ringed by a moat inhabited by the occasional alligator, it was nevertheless taken by Union troops, the first masonry fortress to be pierced by rifled cannon fire.

Ten miles south of Savannah, at 7601 Skidaway Rd, you come to Wormsloe State Historic Site (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 2–5.30pm; $3; 🌐 www.wormsloe.org). In the eighteenth century this was an important defensive plantation; the atmospheric tabby ruins of the fortified house of British settler Noble Jones are now overgrown with palms and lush forest. Inside the house, a museum covers the early settlement of Savannah, with archeological finds and demonstrations of the skills and crafts of the first settlers.

Much of the Georgia coast is taken up by a string of National Wildlife Refuges, on the small marshy islands that make up the barrier island chain. It's well worth detouring or backtracking along the quiet side roads to cross to Blackbeard Island, Wolf Island, Pinckney, or Wassaw, where tranquil swamps are filled with nesting birds and offer great fishing.

Brunswick and the southern coast

BRUNSWICK, the one sizeable settlement south of Savannah, is a hop-off point for the offshore sea islands. The town in itself is industrial and far from exciting, though the shrimp docks can be quite interesting when the catch is brought in. In the unlikely event you'll need to stay in town, the visitor center, 4 Glynn Ave (daily 8.30am–5pm; ☎ 912/265-0620 or 1-800/933-2627, 🌐 www.bgivb.com), has lists of budget motels and central B&Bs. A more unusual alternative is the wonderful Hostel in the Forest, a couple of miles west of I-95 exit 6, reached via an inconspicuous muddy driveway on the south side of US-82 (☎ 912/264-9738, 🌐 www.foresthostel.com). For $20 per person you'll get either a dorm bed in a geodesic dome or a private room (with electricity!) in one of eight treehouses. The price includes a communal dinner, and all guests are expected to perform a small chore. Otherwise, the best food nearby is at the superlative Georgia Pig, in an unlikely setting next to a gas station at exit 6 on I-95 (☎ 912/264-6664), where luscious smoky barbecue comes with the local Brunswick stew, coleslaw, honey-flavored baked beans, and fragrant sauce.

The sea islands

Several of Georgia's sea islands, like those of South Carolina, were divided among freed slaves after the Civil War. However, these islands remained poor agricultural communities, and little now remains from those years for an outsider to see. Today they make handy alternatives to Florida as seashore breaks for tired inlanders.

Jekyll Island

The southern islands are the most developed, thanks largely to Jekyll Island, which was originally bought in 1887 for use as an exclusive “club” by a group of millionaires including the Rockefellers, the Pulitzers, the Macys, and the Vanderbilts. Their opulent residences are still standing, though in perpetual need of refurbishment. A small Welcome Center stands on the causeway (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 912/635-3636 or 1-877/453-5955, 🌐 www.jekyllisland.com), though the Jekyll Island Museum Center (daily 9am–5pm) gives a more useful overview of the island's history. Reached by turning left after you pay the $3 island toll, and then heading along Riverview Drive onto Stable Road, it also runs hourly guided tours of the mansions for $10. The “historic district” centers on the rambling old original club building, which, as the Jekyll Island Club Hotel, now offers elegant and surprisingly affordable accommodation (☎ 912/635-2600 or 1-800/535-9547, 🌐 www.jekyllclub.com; 📍). There's a campground a little further north (☎ 912/635-3021; $20), near the nesting sites of loggerhead turtles.

St Simon's Island and Cumberland Island

Most of St Simon's Island, reached across a green marsh inhabited by wading birds (35¢ toll), is still an evocative landscape of marshes, palms, and live oaks covered with Spanish moss. The tiny village is pleasantly quiet, little more than a handful of T-shirt shops and cafés. Although the beach by the village is nice and firm for strolling, fierce currents render swimming unsafe: head instead for the east side of the island, where the flat, fine sand stretches out for miles. Southeast Adventures, 313 Mallory St (☎ 912/638-6732, 🌐 www.southeastadventure.com), rents out kayaks and runs bird- and dolphin-watching tours. Fort Frederica National Monument, seven miles north of the causeway (daily 8.30am–5pm; $5 per vehicle), was built by General Oglethorpe in 1736 as the largest British fort in North America; it's now an atmospheric ruin.

As well as resorts like the lovely Sea Palms, 5445 Frederica Rd (☎ 912/638-3351 or 1-800/841-6268, 🌐 www.seapalms.com; 📍), whose atmospheric rooms overlook the marshes, accommodation options include Saint Simon's Inn, 609 Beachview Drive, a block from the beach near the village (☎ 912/638-1101, 🌐 www.stsimonsinn.com; 📍). By far the best place to eat is Frannie's Place Restaurant, 318 Mallory St (☎ 912/638-1001), famed for its Brunswick stew; try also the specialty sandwiches, crabcakes, and to-die-for desserts.

To the south, Cumberland Island is a stunning wildlife refuge of marshes, beaches, and semitropical forest roamed by wild horses, with the odd deserted planter's mansion. You can get here by ferry from the village of St Mary's, back on the mainland near the Florida border (March–Nov daily 9am & 11.45am; Dec–Feb Thurs–Mon 9am & 11.45am; 45min; $15 roundtrip).

Okefenokee Swamp

The dense semitropical Okefenokee Swamp stretches over thirty miles down to Florida from a point roughly thirty miles southwest of Brunswick. Tucked away among its astonishing profusion of luxuriant plants and trees are something like twenty thousand alligators and over thirty species of snakes, as well as bears and pumas. You can only get in at the Okefenokee Swamp Park, a private charity-owned concession at the northeast tip, on Hwy-177 off US-23/1 (daily 9am–5.30pm; ☎ 912/283-0583, 🌐 www.okeswamp.com). Admission is $12, which enables you to see a serpentarium, a good interpretive center on wildlife, an observation tower, and reconstructed pioneer buildings; you can pay $4–18 extra for intriguing boat tours through the swamp of thirty to ninety minutes (be sure to slick yourself with bug repellent).

For nearby accommodation, unlovely Waycross, ten miles north, holds bargain motels such as the Pinecrest, 1761 Memorial Drive (☎ 912/283-3580; 📍).

Kentucky

Two hundred years after it was wrested from the Native Americans, KENTUCKY still hasn't quite decided whether it belongs in the North or the South. Both of the rival presidents during the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson Davis, were born here, and divisions were acute between slave-owning farmers and the merchants who depended on trade with the nearby cities of the industrial North. While the state remained officially neutral, more Kentuckians joined the Union army than the Confederates. After the war, Kentucky sided with the South in its hostility to Reconstruction, and has tended to follow southern political trends.

Kentucky's rugged beauty is at its most appealing in the mountainous east and the small historic towns of the Bluegrass Downs, with visits enlivened by the varied attractions of bourbon whiskey, thoroughbred horses, and bluegrass music. Louisville, home of the Kentucky Derby, is a busy manufacturing and arts center; the more reserved Lexington, eighty miles east, is a major horse-breeding market.

Getting around Kentucky

Kentucky's limited public transportation can be a real headache. There's full Greyhound service along the interstates south of Louisville and Lexington, but that's about it. Amtrak doesn't operate here at all. Cycling is a pleasant and manageable option but driving is the only way to cover much ground.

Lexington, Bluegrass, and eastern Kentucky

The fertile Bluegrass Downs, just eighty miles across, form the base of America's thoroughbred racing industry, with Lexington quietly prospering at its heart. The name comes from the unique steel-blue sheen of the buds in the meadows, only visible in early morning during April and May. Kentucky's first white pioneers, who trekked in the 1770s through the 150 miles of wilderness now called the Daniel Boone National Forest, were amazed to find this "Eden" deserted while the Indians lived in much less attractive terrain. Archeologists later discovered this was due to mineral deficiencies in the soil causing fatal bone diseases. The area around Lexington holds some of the oldest towns west of the Alleghenies. Eastern Kentucky, however, suffers from acute rural poverty despite the fine scenery of the Natural Bridge and Cumberland Gap districts.

Lexington

The productivity of the bluegrass fields has kept LEXINGTON's economy ticking over since 1775, though the lack of a navigable river has always made its traders vulnerable to competition from Louisville, eighty miles west. However, its current affluence dates from after World War I, when smoking caught on internationally and Lexington emerged as the world's largest burley tobacco market. Despite a population exceeding 200,000, Lexington maintains a quasi-rustic atmosphere and boasts many fine antebellum houses; its most conspicuous activity is the horse trade, with an estimated 450 farms in the vicinity.

Arrival and information

Lexington's airport is six miles west of town on US-60 W, near Keeneland race-track. Greyhound drops off about a mile from downtown at 477 New Circle Rd across the street from the local bus station (bus #3 goes downtown). Lex-Tran (☎859/253-4636, 🌐www.lextran.com) operates a good service to the university and suburbs, but you'll need a car to reach the horse-related attractions. The visitor center is at 301 E Vine St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun May–Aug noon–5pm; ☎859/233-7299 or 1-800/845-3959, 🌐www.visitlex.com) and gives out handy walking- and driving-tour maps. Check the free ACE Weekly (🌐www.aceweekly.com) for local listings and events.

Accommodation

Lexington has very little accommodation to offer downtown, though budget motels can be found around the exits from I-75. If you're stuck, the visitor center (see above) can help find rooms. The best campground is at the Horse Park (☎859/233-4303, 🌐www.kyhorsepark.com; from $13).

Comfort Suites South 5527 Athens-Boonesboro Rd, I-70 exit 104 ☎859/263-0777 or 1-800/228-5150, 🌐www.comfortsuites.com. Spacious, good-value chain motel six miles southeast of the city center. Ⓔ

Gratz Park Inn 120 W Second St ☎859/231-1777 or 1-800/752-4166, 🌐www.gratzparkinn.com. Downtown's oldest and most prestigious hotel, with rooms decorated in nineteenth-century style and a highly rated restaurant. Ⓙ

Holiday Inn North 1950 Newtown Pike ☎859/233-0512, 🌐www.hilexingtonnorth.com.

Vast and very upscale affiliate of the Holiday Inn chain northeast of downtown, complete with a covered "Holidome" holding a swimming pool, sports hall, and gym. Ⓜ

La Quinta 1919 Stanton Way, junction of I-64 & I-75, exit 115 ☎859/231-7551 or 1-800/531-5900. Handily placed motel with comfortable rooms and free continental breakfast. Ⓝ

Swann's Nest B&B 3463 Rosalie Lane ☎859/226-0095, 🌐www.swannsnest.com. An appealing rural retreat, offering five comfortable guest suites on a thoroughbred farm. Ⓞ

Downtown Lexington

The plush hotels, glass office blocks, skywalks, and shopping malls of Lexington's city center, set in a dip on the Bluegrass Downs, crowd in on fountain-filled Triangle Park. Despite its age, the city has few buildings of architectural interest, an exception being the ivy-covered redbrick buildings of small 1780 Transylvania University, behind the Courthouse at N Broadway and Third St. On the other side of downtown, the University of Kentucky Art Museum, in the Singletary Center for the Arts, at Rose St and Euclid Ave (Tues–Thurs, Sat & Sun noon–5pm, Fri noon–8pm; ☎859/257-5716 🌐www.uky.edu/ArtMuseum; free) displays contemporary American art and Native American artifacts. The best photo opportunity comes in the form of Thoroughbred Park, at Main St and Midland Ave, where an impressive life-sized bronze sculpture depicts a horse race in progress.

Lexington's horses

Along Paris and Ironworks pikes, northeast of Lexington in an idyllic Kentuckian landscape, sleek thoroughbred horses cavort in bluegrass meadows. Some farms are still staked out by miles of immaculate white-plank fences, though most now use the cheaper but much less attractive black creosote to protect the wood. To the west, you can watch the horses' early-morning workouts at Keeneland racetrack (April–Oct daily dawn–10am; free; ☎859/254-3412 or 1-800/456-3412), and then eat a super-cheap breakfast nearby (see opposite). Tasteful dark-green grandstands emphasize the crisp white rails around the one-mile oval track, although the muted public-address system can lead to confusion over the winner, if you attend a meeting (racing for three weeks in April, Wed–Sun 7.30pm, and three weeks in Oct, Wed–Sun 1pm; call for reserved tickets; $5–40; ☎ 859/288-4299).

Tours of horse farms used to be very popular, but most owners have become reluctant to let the public get too close to the shy creatures. The easiest way to be sure of seeing at least one farm is to take a guided bus tour out of Lexington; Blue Grass Tours (March–Oct daily 9am; Nov–Feb by appointment; $26; ☎ 859/252-5744 or 1-800/755-6956, 🌐 www.bluegrasstours.com) offer a three-hour, fifty-mile itinerary that includes a stop at a private farm, plus a visit to Keeneland or Red Mile racetrack. Alternatively, a handful of farms still welcome individual visitors, special events permitting; most are free, but you should tip the groom. One such is Three Chimneys on Old Frankfort Pike, about fifteen minutes west of downtown (Tues–Sat 1pm; ☎ 859/873-7053 🌐 www.threechimneys.com), where it's best to reserve a place in advance. The Thoroughbred Center, 3380 Paris Pike (April–Oct Mon–Fri 9am, 10.30am & 1pm, Sat 9am & 10.30am; Nov–March Mon–Fri 10.30am; $10; ☎ 859/293-1853, 🌐 www.thethoroughbredcenter.com), allows you to watch trainers at work. The enjoyable Kentucky Horse Park is a little further along at 4089 Ironworks Parkway (mid-March to Oct daily 9am–5pm; Nov to mid-March Wed–Sun 9am–5pm; $9–15; ☎ 859/233-4303, 🌐 www.kyhorsepark.com). Its International Museum of the Horse traces the use of horses throughout history, from Roman chariot races through cavalry regiments, commercial haulage, and modern sports. The 1032-acre park features real live horses of over thirty different breeds, a working farm, and guided horseback rides ($22 extra). In nearby Georgetown, at Whispering Woods, experienced equestrians can ride unsupervised, while novices can ride with a guide ($20 for 1hr, up to $80 per day; ☎ 502/570-9663, 🌐 www.whisperingwoodstrails.com).

Eating, drinking, and nightlife

Lexington's large student population means it has several lively, youth-oriented eating places, besides the steakhouses catering to the horse crowd and conventioners. The streets around the corner of Broadway and Main St hold a few lively bars, which flourish despite the Baptist-inspired 1am curfew on drinking places.

Alfalfa Restaurant 557 S Limestone St ☎ 859/253-0014. Hippyish café near the University of Kentucky. A wide range of inexpensive international food, with vegetarian dishes. Live music some evenings, plus temporary art exhibits.

Atomic Café 265 N Limestone St ☎ 859/254-1969. Fun Caribbean ambiance, with good spicy food and potent cocktails. Live reggae Thurs–Sat.

Common Grounds 343 High St ☎ 859/233-9761. Popular downtown coffeehouse, open until at least midnight daily with live music at weekends. A great rendezvous for coffee, sandwiches, and simple snacks.

Ed and Fred's Desert Moon 148 Grand Blvd ☎ 859/231-1161. Wacky decor, good South-western food and pizza. Closed Mon.

Good Foods Coop 455-D Southland Drive ☎ 859/278-1813. Healthy deli, open daily for coffee, sandwiches, and self-serve hot and cold specials.

Keeneland Track Kitchen 4201 Versailles Rd ☎ 859/254-3412. The place to eat hearty homestyle breakfasts for next to nothing in the company of jockeys and other horsey folk.

Kentucky Theatre 214 E Main St ☎ 859/231-6997. Evocatively restored 1920s movie palace showing offbeat and art-house films, as well as being a great venue for rock, blues, and jazz concerts. Serves alcohol and decent snacks.

Ramsey's Diner 496 E High St ☎ 859/259-2708. Very popular and atmospheric diner, with four other outlets in town, all serving tasty sandwiches, burgers, and meals for $4–8. Open until 1am.

Bluegrass country

Other than the horse farms directly to the north, most places of interest near Lexington lie southwards, including the fine old towns of Danville and Harrodsburg, and the restored Shaker Village at Pleasant Hill. After about forty miles, the meadows give way to the striking Knobs – random lumpy outcrops, shrouded in trees and wispy low-hanging clouds, that are the eroded remnants of the Pennyrile Plateau.

The Shaker Village at Pleasant Hill

The utopian settlement of PLEASANT HILL, hidden among the bluegrass hillocks near Harrodsburg, 26 miles southwest of Lexington, was established by Shaker missionaries from New England around 1805. Within twenty years, nearly five hundred villagers here were producing seeds, tools, and cloth, for sale as far away as New Orleans. During the Civil War, the pacifist Shakers were obliged to billet Union and Confederate troops alike. Numbers thereafter declined until the last member died in 1923, but a nonprofit organization has returned the village to its nineteenth-century appearance.

The Shaker values of absolute celibacy, hygiene, simplicity, and communal ownership have left their mark on the thirty-four gray and pastel-colored dwellings, which women and men entered via different doors. Visitors can watch demonstrations of broom-making, weaving, quilting, and other traditional handicrafts (April–Oct daily 10am–5pm; $14; Nov–March 10am–4.30pm, reduced program of events; $6.50), and also take excursions on the sternwheeler Dixie Belle (late April to Oct daily noon, 2pm & 4pm; $6). An on-site  inn offers good-value rooms, and also houses a superb restaurant specializing in boiled ham, lemon pie, and other Kentucky favorites (☎859/734-5411 or 1-800/734-5611, 🌐www.shakervillageky.org; 🍴); reserve well in advance to either eat or sleep.

Berea

Thirty miles south of Lexington, just off I-75 in the foothills where Bluegrass Country meets Appalachia, the unique Berea College gives its 1500 mainly local students free tuition in return for work in any of 120 crafts, ranging from needlework to wrought ironwork. Founded in 1855 by abolitionists as a vocational college for the young people of East Kentucky – both white and black, making it for forty years the only integrated college in the South – it was briefly shut down in 1859 by mobs opposed to the board's support for John Brown's raid at Harpers Ferry (see p.453).

The college's reputation has attracted many private art and craft galleries to little BEREA. For details on all, a chance to buy representative local crafts, and general local information, visit the Kentucky Artisan Center at exit 77 off I-75 (daily 8am–8pm; ☎859/985-5548, 🌐www.kentuckyartisancenter.ky.gov). Free tours of both the campus and assorted student craft workshops leave from the sumptuous Boone Tavern Inn, a student-run inn and restaurant at Main and Prospect streets (☎859/985-3700 or 1-800/366-9358, 🌐www.berea.edu/boonetavern; 🍴). If you're on a tight budget, Mario's Pizza, 636 Chestnut St (☎859/986-2331), is a good option.

Daniel Boone National Forest

Almost the entire eastern length of Kentucky is taken up by the steep slopes, narrow valleys, and sandstone cliffs of the unspoiled DANIEL BOONE NATIONAL FOREST. Few Americans can have been so mythologized as Daniel Boone, who first explored the region in 1767, and thus ranks as one of Kentucky's earliest fur-trapping pioneers. Perhaps the most famous legend tells of the time he was captured by Shawnee Indians and initiated as “Sheltowee,” or Big Turtle. Learning of their plans to attack pioneer communities, Big Turtle escaped just in time to warn the citizens of his own settlement at Boonesborough, southeast of Lexington. Sadly, Boone failed to legalize his land claims, and, after losing everything in an acrimonious legal tussle, was forced to press further west to Missouri, where he died in 1820 at the age of 86.

Natural Bridge and around

The geological extravaganza of the Red River Gorge, sixty miles east of Lexington via the Mountain Parkway, is best seen by taking a thirty-mile loop drive from the Natural Bridge State Resort Park on Hwy-77, near the village of Slade. Natural Bridge itself is a large sandstone arch surrounded by steep hollows and exposed cliffs; for those reluctant to negotiate the half-mile climb, there is a chair-lift ($7 roundtrip). As well as hiking trails, canoeing, fishing, rock-climbing, and camping, there's accommodation at the secluded Hemlock Lodge (☎ 606/663-2214 or 1-800/325-1710, 🌐 www.naturalbridgepark.com; 📍), where weekends can be reserved a year in advance.

Toward the southeast

In 1940, “Colonel” Harland Sanders, so titled as a member of the Honorable Order of Kentucky Colonels, opened a small clapboard diner, the Sanders Café, alongside his motel and gas station in tiny Corbin, ninety miles south of Lexington on I-75. His Kentucky Fried Chicken empire has since spread all over the world. The original 100-seat restaurant, near the junction of US-25 E and US-25 W, has been restored with 1940s decor and an immense amount of memorabilia (daily 10am–10pm; ☎ 606/528-2163). The food served is usual KFC, but it's an atmospheric little spot.

On the tristate border of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, the Cumberland Gap National Historic Park is one of the most visited parts of the area. A natural passageway used by migrating deer and bison, the area served as a gateway to the West for Boone and other pioneers. Pinnacle Overlook, a 1000ft lookout over the three states, is near the visitor center, on US-25 E in Middlesboro (daily 8am–5pm; ☎ 606/248-2817, 🌐 www.nps.gov/cuga).

Louisville, central, and western Kentucky

In such a heavily rural state, the manufacturing giant of Louisville stands out, with its lively cultural and racial mix. Only occasionally does it bother with the laid-back Southern image other parts of the state are so keen to promote. In the southern hinterland, numerous small towns retain their tree-shaded squares and nineteenth-century townhouses – and their strict Baptist beliefs – while the endless caverns of Mammoth Cave National Park attract spelunkers and hikers in the thousands. The west, where the Ohio River meets the Mississippi, is flat, heavily forested, and generally less attractive.

Louisville

LOUISVILLE, just south of Indiana across the Ohio River, is firmly embedded in the American national consciousness for its multimillion-dollar Kentucky Derby.

Each year, the horse race attracts over half a million fans to this cosmopolitan and well-diversified industrial city, which still bears the traces of the early French settlers who came upriver from New Orleans. Louisville also produces a third of the country's bourbon.

The city's history revolves around a perennial rivalry with Cincinnati, a mere one hundred miles upstream. Thus, despite being pro-Union during the Civil War, it promoted itself thereafter – erecting Confederate statues and so on – as the place for Southern business to invest. Today, besides a lively arts scene and lots of citywide festivals, Louisville boasts an unrivaled network of public parks, many designed by Frederick Law Olmsted. One native son who took advantage of the recreation facilities was three-time world heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali, who used to do his early-morning training in the scenic environs of Chickasaw Park.

Arrival and information

Most major US airlines fly into Louisville International Airport (☎502/368-6524), five miles south of downtown on I-65; take bus #2 or pay a $17 cab fare to get into the city center. Greyhound terminates at fairly central 720 W Muhammad Ali Blvd. Downtown trolleys run from 7.30am to 8pm/10pm on weekdays and until 6pm on Saturdays for 25¢. The new visitor center is at Fourth and Jefferson streets (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; ☎502/582-3732 or 1-888/568-4784, 🌐www.gotolouisville.com) and offers discounts on some of the attractions. For news of upcoming events, pick up a copy of the free listings magazine LEO (Louisville Eccentric Observer).

Accommodation

Most of the year, Louisville's accommodation is plentiful and reasonably priced, though of course it's solidly booked up for the Derby. You can camp just over the river in Indiana at the central KOA, 900 Marriott Drive, Clarksville, IN (☎812/282-4474, 🌐www.koa.com).

Central Park B&B 1353 S Fourth St ☎502/638-1505 or 1-877/922-1505, 🌐www.centralparkbandb.com. Opulent seven-room Victorian B&B in the heart of the Historic District. ⑤

The Columbine B&B 1707 S Third St ☎502/635-5000 or 1-800/635-5010, 🌐www.thecolumbine.com. Six-room B&B, all with private baths, in a colonnaded mansion close to the university. Great garden and gourmet breakfasts. ⑤

Galt House 140 N Fourth St ☎502/589-5200 or 1-800/626-1814, 🌐www.galthouse.com. This massive, 25-story, twin-tower hotel on the Ohio riverfront has an unmistakable Kentucky feel, with grand ballrooms, sweeping staircases, and avenue-like corridors. ③–⑦

Hampton Inn Downtown Louisville 101 E Jefferson St ☎502/585-2200, 🌐www.louisvilledowntown.hamptoninn.com. Comfortable rooms plus a free buffet breakfast and access to an indoor pool and fitness center. ④

Comfort Inn Downtown 401 S Second St ☎502/583-2841, 🌐www.comfortinn.com/ires/hotel/ky149. About as economical an option as you'll find right downtown. Simple but perfectly adequate. ③

Central Louisville

Downtown Louisville rolls gently toward Main Street, then abruptly lunges to the river. Riverfront Plaza, between Fifth and Sixth streets, is a prime observation point for the natural Falls of the Ohio. Two sternwheelers, the Belle of Louisville and the Spirit of Jefferson, cruise from the wharf at Fourth St and River Rd in the summer (Mon–Sat noon–2pm & 7–9pm; summer only Sun noon–2pm; $14; ☎502/574-2355 or 🌐www.belleoflouisville.org).

Even non-baseball fans will likely be impressed by the Louisville Slugger Museum, at 800 W Main St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm; Sun noon–5pm; $9;

The Kentucky Derby

The Kentucky Derby is one of the world's premier horse races; it's also, as Hunter S. Thompson put it, "decadent and depraved." Derby Day itself is the first Saturday in May, at the end of the two-week Kentucky Derby Festival. Since 1875, the leading lights of Southern society have gathered at Churchill Downs, three miles south of downtown, for an orgy of betting, haute cuisine, and mint juleps in the plush grandstand, while tens of thousands of the beer-guzzling proletariat cram into the infield. Apart from the $40 infield tickets available on the day – offering virtually no chance of a decent view – all seats are sold out months in advance. The actual race, traditionally preceded by a mass drunken rendition of "My Old Kentucky Home," is run over a distance of one and a quarter miles, lasts barely two minutes, and offers around a million dollars in prize money. Churchill Downs also hosts thoroughbred races from May to July, and from October to November (☎ 502/636-4400 or 1-800/283-3729).

The excellent hands-on Kentucky Derby Museum (mid-March to Nov Mon–Sat 7am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; Dec to mid-March Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $9; ☎ 502/637-7097, 🌐 www.derbymuseum.org), next to Churchill Downs at 704 Central Ave, will appeal to horseracing enthusiasts and neophytes alike. Admission includes a magnificent audiovisual display that captures the Derby Day atmosphere on a 360° screen and you can take a tour of the racecourse for an extra $6.

☎ 502/588-7228, 🌐 www.sluggermuseum.com). Frequent tours start with a short, emotive movie featuring prominent shots of Louisville Slugger bats being used to good effect, then take in displays honoring key players and a batting cage and give a lucid explanation of how wooden bats are made. All visitors receive a souvenir miniature bat.

The town's newest museum is the excellent Muhammed Ali Center, beside the river at 144 N Sixth St (Mon–Sat 9.30am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $9), which, apart from chronicling the local lad's boxing career with entertaining multimedia displays, provides insight into his Muslim faith and spirituality.

The Speed Art Museum, at 2035 S Third St on the University of Louisville campus (Tues, Wed & Fri 10.30am–4pm, Thurs 10.30am–8pm, Sat 10.30am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free; ☎ 502/634-2700, 🌐 www.speedmuseum.org), hosts traveling exhibits and has a small, but interesting, permanent collection of art and sculpture from medieval to modern times, featuring works by Rembrandt, Monet, Rodin, and Henry Moore.

Eating

Louisville's restaurants cater to all tastes, though downtown prices are fairly high.

Bristol Bar & Grille 1321 Bardstown Rd
☎ 502/456-1702. A perennial Louisville favorite, offering good bistro-style salads and entrees, as well as great desserts. Two other locations at 300 N Hurstbourne Parkway and 614 W Main St.

Café Kilimanjaro 649 S Fourth St ☎ 502/583-4332. Dishes and drinks from the Caribbean, Africa, and South America in relaxed surroundings with tropical decor.

Lynn's Paradise Café 984 Barrett Ave
☎ 502/585-5966. Nationally acclaimed chef

Lynn Winter serves up homestyle cooking in an offbeat, friendly atmosphere.

Ramsi's Café on the World 1293 Bardstown Rd
☎ 502/451-0700. Atmospheric café open nightly until late and offering eclectic and very tasty selections from around the world. A downtown branch, at 215 S Fifth St, opens for weekday lunches only, served cafeteria-style.

Rudyard Kipling 422 W Oak St ☎ 502/636-1311. The decor has a hint of The Jungle Book, but the food is local with a few Indian dishes thrown in. Live music, usually acoustic, most nights. Closed Sun.

Seviche 1538 Bardstown Rd ☎ 502/473-8560. Stylish Latin restaurant in the busy Deer Park district, featuring ceviche as well as seafood and steak entrees cooked to South Mexican recipes. Most items are over $20.

Vietnam Kitchen 5339 S Mitscher Ave

☎ 502/363-5154. A small, basic eatery with a huge menu, fifteen minutes' drive down Third St, behind the Iriquois Manor mall. This is where the city's Asian chefs eat on their days off. Closed Wed.

Nightlife and entertainment

Fronted by several outlandish sculptures, the Kentucky Center for the Arts, 501 W Main, between Fifth and Sixth avenues (☎ 502/562-0100 or 1-800/775-7777), is Louisville's main venue for high culture. Meanwhile, the Actors' Theatre of Louisville, 316 W Main St (☎ 502/584-1205 or 1-800/428-5849), has a national reputation for its new productions. As for drinking and live music, the two-mile strip around Bardstown Road and Baxter Avenue (take bus #17) is punctuated by fun bars and restaurants; the best gay clubs are on the eastern edge of downtown.

Connections 130 S Floyd St ☎ 502/585-5752.

The pick of Louisville's gay scene. At weekends, this giant club, complete with terrace garden, holds over 2000.

Headliners 1386 Lexington Rd ☎ 502/584-8088.

Lively club that showcases local and some national indie bands.

Molly Malone's 933 Baxter Ave ☎ 502/473-1222. Enjoyable Irish pub and restaurant, with live music on the weekends and Euro soccer on TV.

Phoenix Hill Tavern 644 Baxter Ave ☎ 502/589-4957, 🌐 www.phoenixhill.com. Big bar with four separate areas; occasionally hosts national touring acts.

Stevie Ray's 230 E Main St ☎ 502/582-9945, 🌐 www.steveraysbluesbar.com. As the name suggests, a loud, rocking blues bar.

Out from Louisville

South from Louisville to Tennessee, central Kentucky offers great scope for a driving tour. There's small-town charm and well-aged bourbon in Bardstown and Abraham Lincoln's birthplace of Hodgenville, while the top natural attraction is the amazing Mammoth Cave National Park, the largest underground cave system in the world.

Fort Knox

Legendary FORT KNOX straddles 100,000 acres on either side of US-31 W, thirty miles southwest of Louisville. The bomb-proof Bullion Depository, on Gold Vault Road, surrounded by security fences, machine-gun turrets, patrol guards, and huge floodlights, stores nine million pounds of the federal gold reserve behind doors weighing twenty tons apiece. No visits are allowed at the depository; you can only stop by the road for a maximum of five minutes.

Bardstown and the bourbon distilleries

Forty miles south of Louisville on US-31 E, attractive BARDSTOWN is the place to get acquainted with Kentucky bourbon whiskey, created in earliest pioneer days, so the story goes, when Elijah Craig, a Baptist minister, added corn to the usual rye and barley. Named for Bourbon County near Lexington, Kentucky's whiskey soon gained a national reputation, thanks to crisp limestone water, strict laws concerning ingredients and production, and the skills of small-scale distillers.

Get into the spirit at Bardstown's free Oscar Getz Museum of Whiskey History, 114 N Fifth St (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; free). Fourteen miles west at Clermont, you can stop at the Jim Beam American Outpost (Mon–Sat 9am–4.30pm, Sun 1–4pm; free), which has an informative museum, a film on the whiskey-making process, an outdoor moonshine still and barrel-making museum, and a Beam family home. Maker's Mark Distillery, twenty miles south of Bardstown near Loretto, is an out-of-the-way collection of beautifully restored black, red, and gray plankhouses, in which whiskey is still made manually (Mon–Sat 10.30am–3.30pm, Sun March–Dec 1.30–3.30pm; free; ☎ 502/865-2099, 🌐 www.makersmark.com). However, don't expect a sample at either distillery; like most of rural Kentucky, the area is dry.

Abraham Lincoln's birthplace

On February 12, 1809, Abraham Lincoln, the sixteenth president of the US, was born in a one-room log cabin in the frontier wilds, son of a wandering farmer and, if some accounts are to be believed, an illiterate and illegitimate mother. Three miles south of Hodgenville, on US-31 E, the National Historic Site (summer daily 8am–6.45pm; rest of year daily 8am–4.45pm; free; ☎ 270/358-3137, 🌐 www.nps.gov/abli) has a symbolic cabin of his birth, enclosed in a granite and marble Memorial Building with 56 steps, one for each year of Lincoln's life. You can stay on the site in one of the three rustic Nancy Lincoln Inn Cabins (☎ 270/358-3845; Ⓜ). The family moved ten miles northeast in 1811 to the Knob Creek area, where Lincoln's earliest memory was of slaves being forcefully driven along the road. Here you can visit another recreation of his boyhood home (daily April–Oct varying hours; free).

Mammoth Cave National Park

The three hundred and fifty miles of labyrinthine passages (with an average of five new miles discovered each year) and domed caverns of MAMMOTH CAVE NATIONAL PARK lie halfway between Louisville and Bowling Green, ten miles off I-65. Its amazing geological formations, carved by acidic water trickling through limestone, include a bewildering display of stalagmites and stalactites, a huge cascade of flowstone known as Frozen Niagara, and Echo River, 365ft below ground, populated by a unique species of colorless and sightless fish. Among traces of human occupation are Native American artifacts, a former saltpeter mine, and the remains of an experimental tuberculosis hospital, built in 1843 in the belief that the cool atmosphere of the cave would help clear patients' lungs. It's possible to take a limited-access self-guided tour, but by far the best way to appreciate the caves is by joining one of the lengthy ranger-guided tours (2–6hrs. $5–46). Tickets are available from the visitor center (summer daily 7.30am–7.30pm; fall daily 8am–6pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 8am–5pm; ☎ 270/758-2328; ☎ 1-800/967-2283 or 🌐 reservations.nps.gov for tour reservations). Make reservations in advance, especially in summer, and keep in mind that the temperature in the caves is a constantly cool 54°F.

The park's attractions are by no means all subterranean. You can explore the scenic Green River, as it cuts through densely forested hillsides and jagged limestone cliffs, by following hiking trails, or renting a canoe from Green River Canoeing (☎ 270/597-2031 or 1-800/651-9909). Camping is free in the backcountry; however, a permit must be picked up first at the visitor center; the Mammoth Cave Hotel (☎ 270/758-2225, 🌐 www.mammothcavehotel.com; Ⓜ–Ⓟ) has cottages and motel rooms. The privately owned caves all around, many of which ruin the sights with garish light shows, and the "attractions" in nearby Cave City and Park City, are best ignored.

Bowling Green

BOWLING GREEN, thirty miles southwest of Mammoth Cave and just sixty miles northeast of Nashville, Tennessee, is a busy little town that offers a treat for sports car enthusiasts. One-hour tours of the General Motors Corvette Assembly Plant, on Louisville Road, off I-65, take a step-by-step look at the manufacture of one of the great symbols of the American Dream (Mon–Fri at 9am & 1pm; closed Dec & first half of July; $5; ☎ 502/745-8419, 🌐 www.bowlinggreenassemblyplant.com). For real Corvette junkies, there's also the National Corvette Museum, south of the plant at 350 Corvette Drive (daily 8am–5pm; $8; 🌐 www.corvettemuseum.com). Note that Bowling Green and the rest of southwest Kentucky is in the central time zone.

Tennessee

Stretching almost five hundred miles from east to west, TENNESSEE is less open to easy generalization than most Southern states. The history and traditional culture of the Smoky Mountains are a far cry indeed from the blues-soaked, cotton-picking culture of the Mississippi valley, while the more prosperous central region between the two, focused on state capital Nashville, is different once again. Nonetheless Tennessee remains as integral to the South as it has ever been since the Civil War, from its music and cuisine to its political conservatism.

Only one sizeable settlement has found a foothold above the marshlands that line the Mississippi, but it's the state's most appealing attraction for visitors – the wonderfully atmospheric port of Memphis. Tennessee's largest city, the birthplace of urban blues, and long-time home of Elvis Presley, the city is heaven on earth for music fans and an essential destination on any road trip. The fine plantation homes and tidy old towns of middle Tennessee's rolling farmland reflect the comfortable lifestyle of its pioneers; and smack in the heart of it sprawls Nashville – synonymous with country music. The mountainous east shares its top attraction with North Carolina – the peaks, streams, and meadows of Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

Some history

Tennessee's first white settlers, most of them British Protestants, arrived across the mountains in the 1770s to settle in the hills and hollows of the Appalachians. Initially relations with the Cherokee were good. However, demand for land increased, and confrontations throughout the state culminated in 1838 with the forced removal of the Indians on the "Trail of Tears." One of the main congressional opponents of this process was Davy Crockett, familiar from legend as the heavy-drinking hunter in a coonskin cap. When the Civil War came, the plantation owners of the west maneuvered Tennessee into the Confederacy, against the wishes of the non-slaveholding smallhold farmers in the east. The last state to secede became the primary battlefield in the west, the site of 424 battles and skirmishes.

Despite economic development to rival any in the country, soil erosion and farm mechanization led to a mass migration to the cities in the years before World War I. The fundamentalist beliefs of these transplanted hill-dwellers (whose folk and fiddle music served to spark Nashville's country scene) influenced a prohibition movement that kept all of Tennessee bone-dry until 1939, and still sees a majority of counties forbidding the sale of alcohol. The New Deal of the 1930s brought significant changes. In particular, the Tennessee Valley Authority, created in 1933, harnessed the flood-prone Tennessee River, providing much-needed jobs and cheap power, and ignited the transition from an agricultural to an industrial economy.

Getting around Tennessee

The airports at Memphis and Nashville have extensive connections throughout the US, though fares between the two are high. If you harbor fantasies of traveling by boat along the Mississippi, note that only luxury craft make the trip these days, at prohibitive prices (see p.561). Amtrak calls at Memphis, and while Greyhound provides a reasonable service to major towns and cities, traveling by bus through the small towns in the east is very difficult.

Memphis

Perched above the Mississippi River, MEMPHIS ranks as perhaps the single most exciting destination in the South. Visitors flock to celebrate the city that gave the world blues, soul, and rock 'n' roll, as well as to chow down in the unrivaled barbecue capital of the nation. Memphis is both deeply evocative – with its somewhat faded downtown streets dotted with characterful stores and diners, and its dramatic sunsets reflected in the broad Mississippi – and invigorating, with a cluster of superb museums to complement its frequent festivals and vibrant nightlife. If it's the Elvis connection that draws you here, you won't leave disappointed – let alone empty-handed – but even the King represents just one small part of the rich musical heritage of the home of Sun and Stax studios.

Culturally and geographically, Memphis has always had more in common with the delta of Mississippi and Arkansas than with the rest of Tennessee. Founded in 1819 and named for Egypt's ancient Nile capital, its fortunes rose and fell with cotton. The Confederate defeat that ended slavery briefly plunged the city into economic chaos, not helped by a series of severe yellow fever epidemics, but thanks to its potential for river and rail transportation it soon bounced back. The nation's second largest inland port became a major stopping-off point for black migrant farmers and sharecroppers escaping the poverty of the Delta, and many stayed, significantly shaping the city's identity.

In the 1950s and 60s, helped in no small part by the astonishing creativity flowing out of the city's recording studios, Memphis had a confidence that belied its size. The city reached its lowest ebb, however, when Dr Martin Luther King Jr was assassinated here in 1968, and for a couple of decades thereafter it tottered on the brink of terminal decline, with downtown blighted by white flight. In the 1990s, however, the city regenerated itself yet again, pouring money into such expensive projects as the transformation of Mud Island and the construction of the 321ft stainless steel Pyramid that dominates the riverfront skyline. More recently, downtown has seen the arrival of not only the huge Peabody Place mall, but also a handsome minor league baseball stadium – Autozone Field, home of the Redbirds – and a major performance arena, the Fed Ex Forum. The famous blues corridor of Beale Street is booming once more, a little ersatz but always entertaining, while the recent Rock'n'Soul Museum, Gibson Guitar Plant and superb Stax Museum keep true to the city's impeccable musical heritage. Above all, of course, there is Graceland – a refreshing change from the usual “gracious southern home” – which provides an intimate and exuberant glimpse of the city's most famous son.

Arrival and information

Memphis is on I-40 as it runs east–west and I-55 from the south. Both join I-240, which loops around the city, and cross the Mississippi River. Memphis International Airport is twelve miles south of downtown – a long and complicated bus trip, but just fifteen minutes by the Yellow Cabs limo/van service ($15; ☎901/577-7700 or 1-800/796-7750, 🌐www.premierofmemphis.com) or taxi

Civil Rights Museum, South Main Arts District & Stax Museum

Graceland (10 miles)

($15–25). Greyhound buses stop at 203 Union Ave in the heart of downtown, while the restored Amtrak station at 545 S Main St is on the southern edge of downtown.

The spacious Tennessee Welcome Center, just off I-40 downtown at 119 N Riverside and Adams – facing Mud Island at river level, and complete with statues of Elvis and B.B. King – is open 24 hours a day (staffed daily: April–Sept 9am–6pm; Oct–March 9am–5pm; ☎901/543-5333, 🌐www.memphistravel.com). There's another visitor center at 3205 Elvis Presley Blvd, on the way to Graceland (same hours and phone).

City transportation and tours

The Memphis Area Transit Authority (☎901/274-6282, 🌐www.matatransit.com) operates a useful downtown trolley along Main Street and Riverside Drive, connecting the Pyramid and neighbouring Pinch District with Beale Street, the Civil Rights Museum, and the South Main Arts District (every 10min; Mon–Thurs 6am–11.30pm, Fri 6am–1am, Sat 9.30am–1am, Sun 10am–6pm). Another trolley heads along Madison Avenue to the medical centers midtown, but this is less useful for visitors. Fares are the same for both ($1, Mon–Fri 11am–1.30pm 50¢, 2-trip pass $1.50, day-pass $3.50, 3-day pass $8).

Horse-drawn carriage tours abound downtown – prices vary but you're looking at around $40/30min. Somewhat funkier, American Dream Safari (☎901/527-8870, 🌐www.americandreamsafari.com) offers driving tours in a 1955 Cadillac. Ranging from a 2hr “greatest hits” jaunt ($200, max 5 people) to a Sunday gospel and fried chicken outing ($75), they're pricy, but enjoyable. Another lazy way to see the city is to take a river trip on the mighty Mississippi: sternwheelers leave from Riverside Drive at Monroe Ave (April–Oct at least one daily, 2.30pm; more in summer and fewer Nov–March; 90min; $18; musical dinner cruises $44; ☎901/527-5694, 🌐memphisriverboats.net).

The hip folks at Shangri-La Projects – an off-shoot of the must-visit midtown record store – offer the Ultimate Rock'n'Roll Tour (🌐www.memphisrocktour.com). This might take the form of an overview of all of Memphis's best music sites (1hr, $60 for up to 2 people; 3hr, $75) or be customized to your specific interests ($60/hr).

Accommodation

Downtown Memphis is by far the nicest and most convenient place to stay, with a good choice of historic hotels and upscale chains; you'll be lucky to find anything for less than $100 a night, however. There are cheaper options near Graceland on Elvis Presley Boulevard to the south. The visitor center can help you find a room, though it's best to book in advance at busy times, such as the anniversary of Elvis's death in mid-August and during the month-long Memphis in May festival.

Days Inn Graceland 3839 Elvis Presley Blvd ☎901/346-5500 or 1-800/329-7466. Reliable option near Graceland, with Elvis memorabilia and videos in the lobby, along with – bliss! – a guitar-shaped pool. Rates include continental breakfast. 4

Elvis Presley's Heartbreak Hotel 3691 Elvis Presley Blvd ☎901/332-1000 or 1-877/777-0606, 🌐www.elvis.com. An ideal choice for Elvis fans, this boutique hotel – next to Graceland – features a (small) heart-shaped pool, 24hr in-room Elvis videos, and peanut butter sandwiches in the Jungle Room lounge. The larger rooms come with kitchenettes, or you could splash out and stay in one of the lavish Elvis-themed suites, which sleep up to eight (and start at around $500 per night). Free downtown shuttle and breakfast. 4

Holiday Inn Select 160 Union Ave ☎901/525-5491, 🌐www.hisdowntownmemphis.com. In an unbeatable location opposite the Peabody, with good rooms at reasonable prices, an outdoor pool, and a sushi bar. 5

The Peabody 149 Union Ave ☎901/529-4000 or 1-800/732-2639, @www.peabodymemphis.com. This opulent hotel near Beale Street is the place to stay in Memphis. Don't miss the legendary mascot ducks, who waddle from the elevator (to the strains of the "King Cotton March") promptly at 11am, spend the day in the lobby fountain and then return to their penthouse at 5pm. Rooms are comfortably elegant, while the glorious lobby is an attraction in itself, with a friendly, relaxed bar. ⑥

Sleep Inn at Court Square 40 N Front St ☎901/522-9700, @www.choicehotels.com.

Offering the best value downtown, this upscale motel faces the river near Mud Island and backs onto Main Street and the trolley line. Rates include continental breakfast. Parking $5. ④
Talbot-Heirs Guesthouse 99 S Second St ☎901/527-9772 or 1-800/955-3956, @www.talbothouse.com. Characterful, friendly, and comfortable accommodations close to Beale Street. Each of the nine themed suites has modern furnishings, a kitchenette, CD player, and Internet access. Rates include continental breakfast. ⑥

6

The City

With its organic neighborhoods and revitalizing downtown, Memphis has a friendly scale that's uncommon in cities of comparable size. Downtown still retains a healthy ensemble of fine buildings from the cotton era, best admired either along the riverfront or from the trolley route down Main Street. Today these edifices are more likely to have been converted into expensive apartments than to house thriving businesses, but at least the city streets are once more busy with pedestrians. The main tourist activity is concentrated around the enormous Peabody Place mall – which has unarguably succeeded in luring locals back downtown, even if it could really be anywhere in the US – from where it's a hop away to the bars and clubs of Beale Street, the Civil Rights and Rock'n'Soul museums just beyond that, and Sun Studio not far east. Elsewhere, Mud Island on the river itself merits half a day, as does the Stax museum, while Graceland, ten miles south, should on no account be missed.

Beale Street

Beale Street began life in the mid-nineteenth century as one of Memphis's most exclusive enclaves; within fifty years its elite residents had been driven out by yellow fever epidemics and the ravages of the Civil War to be replaced by a diverse mix of blacks, Greeks, Jews, Chinese, and Italians. But it was black culture that gave the street its fame. Beale Street was where black roustabouts, deckhands, and travelers passing through Memphis immediately headed; rural blacks came for the bustling Saturday market; and, in the Jim Crow era, Beale served as the center for black businesses, financiers, and professionals.

As the black Main Street of the mid-South, Beale in its Twenties' heyday was jammed with vaudeville theaters, concert halls, bars, and jook joints (mostly white-owned). Along with the frivolity came a reputation for heavy gambling, voodoo, murder, and prostitution. One appalled evangelist proclaimed that "if whiskey ran ankle deep in Memphis . . . you could not get drunker quicker than you can on Beale Street now."

Although Beale still drew huge crowds in the Forties, the drift to the suburbs and, ironically, the success of the civil rights years in opening the rest of Memphis to black businesses, almost killed it off. The bulldozers of the late Sixties spared only the grand Orpheum Theatre, at 203 S Main St, and a few commercial buildings between Second and Fourth streets.

Beale Street has now been restored as a handsome Historic District. Its souvenir shops, music clubs, and cafés are bedecked with retro facades and neon signs, while a Walk of Fame with brass musical notes embedded into the sidewalk honors musical greats such as B.B. King and Howlin' Wolf. Although battling down Beale on a weekend night, lost in the throng of hard-partying, daiquiri-guzzling convention-

The sound of Memphis

Since the start of the twentieth century, Memphis has been a meeting place for black musicians from the Delta and beyond. During the Twenties, the city's downtown bars, clubs, and street corners were alive with the sound of the blues. Jug bands, in which singers were given a bass accompaniment by a musician blowing across the neck of a jug, were a specialty. Several songs by Gus Cannon's Jug Stompers – such as “Walk Right In” – became hits for white artists during the folk revival of the Sixties. Bukka White, Memphis Slim, and guitarist Memphis Minnie appeared at nightspots like Mitchell's Hotel and Pee Wee's Saloon, all long since defunct. After World War II, young musicians and radio DJs such as Bobby Bland and B.B. King experimented by blending the traditional blues sound with jazz, adding electrical amplification to create rhythm'n'blues.

White promoter Sam Phillips started Sun Records in 1953, employing Ike Turner as a scout to comb the Beale Street clubs for new talent. Among those whom Turner helped introduce to vinyl were his own girlfriend, Annie Mae Bullock (later Tina Turner), Howlin' Wolf, and Little Junior Parker, whose “Mystery Train” was Sun's first great recording. Later in the same year Sun was founded, the 18-year-old Elvis Presley hired the studio to record “My Happiness,” supposedly as a gift for his mother, and something prompted Phillips's assistant Marion Keisker to file away his details. The next summer, Phillips called Elvis back to the studio to cut “That's All Right,” and thereby set out toward proving his much-quoted conviction that “If I could find a white man who had the Negro sound and the Negro feel, I could make a billion dollars.” Phillips swiftly dropped his black artists, and signed other white rockabilly singers like Carl Perkins and Jerry Lee Lewis to record classics such as “Blue Suede Shoes” and “Great Balls of Fire.” Elvis – who in the words of Carl Perkins had the advantage that he “didn't look like Mr. Ed, like a lot of the rest of us” – was soon sold on to RCA (for just $35,000), and didn't record in Memphis again until 1969, when, at Chips Moman's American Studios, he produced the best material of his later career, including “Suspicious Minds.”

In the Sixties and early Seventies, Memphis's Stax Records provided a rootsy alternative to the poppier sounds of Motown. This hard-edged southern soul was created by a multiracial mix of musicians, with Steve Cropper's fluid guitar complementing the blaring Memphis Horns. The label's first real success was “Green Onions,” by studio band Booker T and the MGs; further hits followed from Otis Redding (“Try A Little Tenderness”), Wilson Pickett (“Midnight Hour”), Sam and Dave (“Soul Man”), and Isaac Hayes (“Theme from Shaft”). The label eventually foundered in acrimony; the last straw for many of its veteran soulmen and women was the signing of the British child star Lena Zavaroni for a six-figure sum.

For more on Memphis's gospel scene, see p.566.

eers, can feel like you've hit New Orleans's Bourbon Street by mistake, the place still has its own undeniable pull; blues fans in particular will be drawn to its music venues, which showcase top regional talent. At Beale's western end, no. 126 – the former home of the iconic Lansky's, tailor to the Memphis stars – was remodeled in 1997 to become an Elvis-themed restaurant; the site now stands empty, though Lansky's itself continues to thrive in a new location in the historic Peabody hotel (see p.556). Lansky's retro shirts and suits are as sharp as you'd expect, and the thrill of being measured up by the man who dressed Elvis is hard to beat.

A. Schwab's Dry Goods Store remains, however, at 163 Beale. Little changed since it opened in 1876, it's a veritable treasure trove, with an incredible array of voodoo paraphernalia familiar from old blues songs – best-sellers include Mojo Hands and High John the Conqueror lucky roots – along with everything from 99¢ neckties through jumbo-sized underpants to tambourines. It's easy to spend hours here simply browsing (closed Sun). Further east, at no. 352, the tiny former home of W.C. Handy – moved here from its original site at 659 Janette St – offers another evocative sense of old Memphis (summer Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; winter Tues–Sat 1–4pm; $3). In 1910, Handy was the first man to publish blues tunes (often blues in name only; see p.590). His “Memphis Blues,” originally called “Mr. Crump,” was the theme song for the 1909 mayoral election of Edward H. Crump, whose crooked political machine was to run the city until the early Fifties.

One block south of Beale, in the plaza of the enormous FedEx Forum, the Rock’n’Soul Museum (daily 10am–7pm, last admission 6.15pm; @ www.memphisrocknsoul.org; $9), run in collaboration with the Smithsonian Institution, is an ideal place to start a musical tour of Memphis. Presenting the story of the city’s phenomenal musical heritage scrapbook-style, making connections between such issues as migration, racism, civil rights, and youth culture, it’s a fascinating place, with a host of artifacts ranging from Elvis’s stage gear and one of B.B. King’s “Lucille” guitars to Al Green’s Bible. Personal audio tours allow you to select your favourite songs from several retro jukeboxes to listen to along the way.

Also in the plaza, the Gibson Guitar Factory offers guided tours that allow you to watch the manufacture of those classic six-string and bass guitars so beloved of musicians like King and Chuck Berry (Mon–Sat hourly 10am–4pm, Sun hourly 1–4pm; $10; @ www.gibsonmemphis.com).

Around the Peabody Place Mall

A couple of blocks west of the Peabody Place Mall – which along with its mid-range stores and restaurants packs in an Isaac Hayes-owned nightclub/barbecue joint and a 22-screen movie theater – the tiny Center for Southern Folklore, 119 S Main St (T 901/525-3655; @ www.southernfolklore.com) offers an ebullient celebration of the culture of the South, with a store full of books, folk art, and CDs, a small café, and a stage for live performances. Over the Labor Day weekend, this is ground zero for the enjoyable Memphis Music and Heritage Festival, a free jamboree of live music, spoken word, and dance, as well as arts and crafts and traditional Southern food.

Sun Studio

Second only to Graceland, Memphis’s principal shrine to the memory of Elvis is Sun Studio, where, in 1953, the shy eighteen-year-old trucker from Tupelo turned up with his guitar, claiming, “I don’t sound like nobody.” The studio, which went on to introduce rock’n’roll to the world, is located a short way east of Beale Street at 706 Union Ave. Sun Records moved out in 1959, but even when the building briefly became a scuba-diving store (not surprisingly, a commercial failure) all its soundproofing remained in place, making possible its restoration as a functioning studio in 1987. Every hour on the half-hour, forty-minute tours (daily 10am–6pm; $9.50) lead past the display cases upstairs, one of which holds Elvis’s high school diploma, and down into the single-room studio itself. Measuring just eighteen by thirty feet, the shabby room focuses around Elvis’s original mike stand, where you can pose for photos while the guide plays tapes of legendary recording sessions. Standing in this iconic space, surrounded by old photos, scratchy music, and oral testimony, is an eerie and moving experience, memories of the King sharing space with a roster of greats including Johnny Cash, Carl Perkins, and Jerry Lee Lewis.

The National Civil Rights Museum

The National Civil Rights Museum, which provides the most rewarding and comprehensive history of the tumultuous struggle for civil rights to be had any-

The Sun Studio shuttle

Visitors who tour Sun Studios can take advantage of a free shuttle bus, which leaves Sun hourly from 9.55am till 5pm and stops at Graceland, Heartbreak Hotel, and the Rock'n'Soul and Stax museums.

where in the South, is located a few blocks south of Beale at 450 Mulberry St (June–Aug Mon & Wed–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 1–6pm; Sept–May Mon & Wed–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $12, free Mon after 3pm, when there are no audio tours; $15 combination ticket with the Stax museum). It's built around the shell of the former Lorraine Motel, where Dr Martin Luther King Jr was assassinated by James Earl Ray on April 4, 1968. Dr King was killed by a single bullet as he stood on the balcony, the evening before he was due to lead a march in Memphis in support of a strike by black sanitation workers.

The Lorraine itself was one of the few places where blacks and whites could meet in Memphis during the segregation era; thus black singer Eddie Floyd and white guitarist Steve Cropper wrote soul classics such as “Knock on Wood” there, and Dr King was a regular guest. The outer facade of the motel is still all too recognizable from images of King's death, but once inside visitors are faced with a succession of galleries that recount the major milestones of the movement, from A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, who originally called for a march on Washington in 1941, through to the Nation of Islam and the Black Panthers. Dioramas and reconstructions include a Montgomery bus, on which sitting on the front seat triggers a recorded message instructing you to move to the back, and a scene from the sanitation workers' dispute. However, by far the most affecting moment comes when you reach King's actual room, Room 306, still laid out as he left it, and see the spot where his life was cut short.

Another wing, across from the motel, completes the story by incorporating the rooming house from which the fatal shot was fired. The bedroom rented that same day by James Earl Ray, and the sordid little bathroom that served as his sniper's nest, can both be inspected behind glass, with the death site clearly visible beyond. King's own family remain highly sceptical as to whether Ray acted alone, and very detailed panels lay out all sorts of conspiracy theories.

The South Main Arts District

A block west of the Civil Rights museum, the once flyblown South Main Street has been given a new and very welcome lease of life. Spanning the eight or so blocks along Main between Vance and G. E. Patterson avenues, the South Main Arts District (@www.southmainmemphis.org) is a burgeoning area of galleries, chi chi stores and restaurants, complete with a crop of condos and fancy lofts. It's particularly buzzing on the last Friday of the month, when the free “Art Trolley” (6–9pm) runs along Main and the parallel Tennessee St, and stores offer complimentary snacks and drinks. Look out for D'Edge gallery, 550 Main St (☎901/526-8737, @www.d-edgeart.com), which features the folk art-inspired work of African-American artist George Hunt, and the flamboyant diva fashions at Muse, 517 Main (☎901/526-8737; closed Mon & Tues). Despite all best efforts, the area can still feel dodgy late at night – continue to take sensible precautions.

The Stax Museum of American Soul Music

It was with huge delight in 2003 that one of the city's most famous addresses, 926 E McLemore Avenue, was lovingly resurrected. In 1960, this spot, two bleak miles southeast of downtown (at the corner of College St) was occupied by the Capitol

Theater, the central landmark of a neighborhood where blacks had just started to outnumber whites. The theater went on to become the headquarters of the Stax record label, where over the next fifteen years artists such as Otis Redding, Isaac Hayes, Albert King, and the Staples Singers cut fifteen US number-one singles and achieved 237 entries in the top 100. The studio was a veritable powerhouse of funky soul; by 1990, however, with Stax long since defunct, 926 E McLemore Avenue was no more than a derelict lot.

Now the complex has been reconstructed larger than ever, with a music academy sitting next to the Stax Museum of American Soul Music, also known, thanks to the sign on the theater marquee, as Soulsville (March–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; Nov–Feb Mon–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $9, $15 combination ticket with the Civil Rights Museum). Visits start with an honest film history of the label, using stunning footage to illuminate both the triumphs and the tensions that arose from its all-but-unique status as a joint black-white enterprise in the segregated South. The first exhibit beyond, designed to emphasize the gospel roots of soul music, is an entire Episcopal Church, transported here from Duncan, Mississippi. Then follows a glorious celebration of soul history that abounds in video footage and recordings, as well as showpiece artifacts like Isaac Hayes's peacock-blue and gold Cadillac. There's even a disco floor where you can dance along with archive Soul Train TV footage to classics like "The Push and Pull" and "The Funky Robot". The actual Stax studio has been recreated in loving detail, featuring the original two-track tape recorder used by Otis Redding to record "Mr Pitiful" and "Respect," as well as Al Jackson's drum kit. A map of the immediate neighborhood, still largely rundown, shows what an amazing assembly of talent lived nearby; Aretha Franklin was born at 406 Lucy Ave, while other local luminaries included Booker T, David Porter, and Memphis Slim.

The riverfront

The northern boundary of downtown Memphis is marked by the surreal 32-story, 321ft Pyramid, two-thirds the size of Egypt's Great Pyramid. Completed in 1991, it was intended to create a symbolic link with Egypt's Nile Delta, and certainly makes an evocative sight gleaming on the skyline. After a decade and a half hosting major exhibitions, concerts, and games it has since been overshadowed by the FedEx Forum and lain empty since 2005. While it remains to be seen what the future holds for this marvelous folly, its symbolic beauty is undeniable. The surrounding neighborhood, the historic Pinch District, is said to be named for the impoverished – "pinched" – Irish immigrants who settled here in the mid 1800s. It's a quiet area, but home to a clutch of friendly cafés and bars.

From Riverside Drive, which runs south from the Pyramid, monorail trains and a walkway head across the Mississippi's Wolf Channel to Mud Island (Tues–Sun: April, May, Sept & Oct 10am–5pm; June–Aug 10am–6pm; park access free, monorail $2 or included in museum admission, $8), which formed in 1910 when the river began depositing silt alongside a stationary boat. Highlights of the island's Mississippi River Museum, an enjoyable and ingenious romp through the history of the river, include a full-sized reconstructed steam packet squeezed into the core of the building, a morbidly fascinating "Theater of Disasters," and tales of semi-legendary characters like keelboatman Mike Fink, who in 1830 styled himself "half horse, half alligator." They've also packed in a good overview of Memphis music. Cool your feet afterwards by splashing in the waters of the half-mile River Walk, which runs to the southern tip of the island. This scale replica of the lower Mississippi River, complete with town grids, begins in Cairo, Illinois and ends in New Orleans, opening out to the "Gulf of Mexico," an enclosed lake where you can rent paddle boats at $2 per person per half hour. From the pavilion nearby, it's also possible to rent canoes ($20/hr) and kayaks ($15/hr); in summer, you can even bring a sleeping bag and join a mass campout where the tent, dinner, breakfast and entertainment is laid on (second Fri of each month April–Oct; ☎901/576-7241).

Back on the mainland, south of the monorail, Jefferson Davis and Confederate parks hold little of interest. Heading south along Front Street, however, brings you to the imposing buildings of Cotton Row. This area might have seen busier days, but it is still the largest spot cotton market (meaning actual cotton is sold here, for cash) in the world. Memphis's Cotton Museum, in the grand old Cotton Exchange at Front Street and 65 Union Ave, uses photos, videos, and quirky artifacts to outline the history of the “white gold” that has had such a huge influence on the economy and culture of the South (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $5).

Further south, Tom Lee Park, the venue for major outdoor events such as the Memphis in May festival (see p.565), runs for about a mile and a half along the river. The park commemorates a black boatman who rescued 32 people from a sinking boat in 1925 – despite not being able to swim.

The Big Muddy

I do not know much about gods; but I think that the river is a strong brown god – sullen, untamed and intractable.

St Louis-born T.S. Eliot, The Four Quartets

North America's principal waterway, the Mississippi – the name comes from the Algonquin words for “big” and “river” – starts just ninety miles south of the Canadian border at Lake Itasca, Minnesota, and winds its way nearly 2400 miles to the Gulf of Mexico, taking in over one hundred tributaries en route and draining all or part of thirty-one US states and two Canadian provinces.

The “Big Muddy” – it carries 2lb of dirt for every 1000lb of water – is one of the busiest commercial rivers in the world, and one of the least conventional. Instead of widening toward its mouth, like most rivers, the Mississippi grows narrower and deeper. Its delta, near Memphis, more than three hundred miles upstream from the river's mouth, is not a delta at all, but an alluvial flood plain. Furthermore, its estuary deposits, which extend the land six miles out to sea every century, are paltry compared to other rivers; gulf currents disperse the sediment before it has time to settle.

In the words of Mark Twain, who spent four years as a riverboat pilot, the Mississippi is also “the crookedest river in the world.” As it weaves and curls its way extravagantly along its channel, it continually cuts through narrow necks of land to shape and reshape oxbow lakes and meander scars, cutoffs, and marshy backwaters. A nightclub could operate one day in Arkansas and then find itself in dry Tennessee the next, thanks to an overnight cutoff.

A more serious manifestation of the Mississippi's power is its propensity to flood. Although the river builds its own levees, artificial embankments have, since as early as 1717, helped to safeguard crops and homes. After the disastrous floods of 1927, the federal government installed a wide range of flood-protection measures; virtually the entire riverfront from Cape Girardeau, Missouri, to the sea is now walled in, and it's even possible to drive along the top of the larger levees. The devastating flooding of New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina, however, shows just how fragile the levee system remains.

While it's no longer feasible to sail Twain's route for yourself, riverboat excursions operate in most sizeable river towns, including Memphis (see p.555). Longer cruises, between St Louis and New Orleans – or even further afield – on the luxurious Delta Queen, American Queen, and Mississippi Queen paddlewheelers, are expensive; contact the Delta Queen Steamboat Company (☎1-800/543-1949, @www.deltaqueen.com).

Graceland

In itself, Elvis Presley's Graceland was a surprisingly modest home for the world's most successful entertainer – it's certainly not the “mansion” you may have imagined. And while Elvis was clearly a man who indulged his tastes to the fullest, Graceland has none of the pomposity that characterizes so many other showpiece Southern residences. Visits are affectionate celebrations of the man; never exactly tongue-in-cheek, but not cloyingly reverential either.

Elvis was just 22 when he paid $100,000 for Graceland in 1957. Built in 1939, the stone-clad house was then considered one of the most desirable properties in Memphis, though today the neighborhood is distinctly less exclusive, its main thoroughfare – Elvis Presley Boulevard – lined with discount liquor stores, ancient beauty parlors, fast-food joints, and surprisingly few Elvis-related souvenir shops. Tours start opposite the house in Graceland Plaza; excited visitors, kitted out with headphones, are ferried across the road in minibuses, which depart every few minutes and sweep through the house's famous “musical gate,” etched with musical notes and Elvis's silhouette. No stops are made at the perimeter “Wall of Love,” scrawled with tens of thousands of messages from fans, but you are free to walk back there after the tour.

Though the audio tours, peppered with spoken memories from Elvis's daughter, Lisa Marie, and rousing choruses from the King himself, allow you to spend as long as you wish, it's not easy to get an accurate sense of the house's size and layout while here, as the upstairs rooms are out of bounds to visitors. The interior is a frozen tribute to the taste of the Seventies; choice viewings include the Hawaiian-themed Jungle Room, with its waterfall and green shag-carpeted ceiling, where Elvis recorded “Moody Blue” and other gems from his latter years, and the navy-and-lemon TV Room, mirrored and fitted with three screens that now show classic 1970s TV shows. A former garage allows you to see many personal items that Elvis kept upstairs, ranging from a spectacular white, circular, fur bed to his very ordinary bedroom slippers, and including philosophy books scrawled with his musings, his extensive gun collection, and whippet-slim suits from the 1960s. In the separate Trophy Room, you parade past Elvis's platinum, gold, and silver records, stage costumes, and outfits from many of his 31 films; footage of his early TV performances offers breathtaking reminders of just how charismatic the young Elvis was. The tour of the interior ends with the racquetball room, where he played on the morning he died. In the attached lounge, the piano where he sang for the last time (apparently “Unchained Melody”) stands eerily silent, while in the court itself his resplendent, bejeweled capes and Vegas jumpsuits stand sentinel beneath huge monitors showing his later performances. Here, perhaps more than anywhere else, you can feel the huge presence of the man who changed the face of music forever.

Elvis (Jan 8, 1935–Aug 16, 1977), his mother, Gladys, his father, Vernon, and his grandmother, Minnie Mae, lie buried in the Meditation Garden outside, their graves strewn with flowers and soft toys sent from fans. Elvis's body was moved here two months after his death, when the security problems inherent in keeping it in the local cemetery became obvious. There's often a log-jam here, as visitors crane to read the messages sent by fans, take moments to offer their own prayers, and snap countless photos of the bronze memorial plaques.

Graceland Plaza, resounding with nonstop Elvis hits, holds several enjoyable related attractions: don't miss the wittily edited film Walk a Mile in My Shoes, the “Sincerely Elvis” timeline, which follows 1956, the year he made it big, month by month, and Elvis's personal airplanes, including the Lisa Marie, customized with 24-carat gold washroom sink and blue suede furnishings. End your tour with a sit-down in the Elvis Presley Automobile Museum, which, quite apart from a Harley-Davidson golf cart and powder-pink Cadillac, shows action-packed and vaguely car-related clips from his movies. Elvis After Dark, in the shabby mall next door, ostensibly covers the notoriously playful Presley's leisure time, but compared to the rest of the complex it feels like little more than an add-on to the neighbouring gift store. Completists, however, will not want to miss the TV punctured by a bullet fired by Elvis himself (he also shot his fridge, his stereo, and even Lisa Marie's slide).

△ Graceland

The Plaza's many gift stores – which are, quite frankly, a delight, selling everything from Elvis coffee to Jailhouse Rock outfits for your pooch – and its clutch of Elvis-themed diners (try the barbecue at the Chrome Grill, and make sure to seat yourself in the 1950s Cadillac) make it easy to stay all day.

Graceland attractions

Graceland is ten miles southeast of downtown Memphis, at 3734 Elvis Presley Blvd. The ticket office is open March–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–4pm; Nov daily 10am–4pm; Dec–Feb Mon & Wed–Sun 10am–4pm. The last house tour starts at the ticket office's closing time, while the other attractions remain open for roughly another two hours.

A combined "Platinum" ticket to all attractions (allow three hours) is $30; house tours only, $22 (closed Tues Dec–Feb); parking $6. Reservations are recommended, especially in August (☎901/332-3322 or 1-800/238-2000, 🌐www.elvis.com).

Midtown and East Memphis

The centerpiece of the heavily wooded Overton Park, three or so miles east of downtown on Poplar Ave, is the Memphis Zoo (daily: March–Oct 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb 9am–5pm; last admission 1hr before closing; $13, $3 parking), entered between two dramatic Egyptian-styled towers. If the usual array of gorillas, orangutans, and giraffes doesn't satisfy you, you can pay $3 extra to visit with a pair of giant pandas, or coo at the polar bears and sea lions in the Northwest Passage exhibit. The park also holds the Memphis Brooks Museum of Art (Tues–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11.30am–5pm; $8; first Wed of the month also 6–9pm, except Jan & July), whose array of fine art features an especially strong collection of medieval and Renaissance works.

A mile or so south of the park, the Cooper-Young intersection boasts a handful of funky espresso bars and restaurants, along with a good crop of vintage stores where the city's young and hip burrow through secondhand psychedelic threads, and richer arty types muse over retro knick-knacks. It's a lively place, quite different from downtown but still distinctly Memphis, where blues and barbecue rub along with poetry readings and yard sales, art exhibits and antique auctions. Its one-day festival, held in September, attracts huge crowds for its folk arts, regional crafts, and local music.

Another couple of miles further southeast, the Memphis Pink Palace Museum and Planetarium at 3050 Central Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; $8.25) centers on the not-very pink marble mansion of Clarence Saunders, who founded America's first chain of self-service supermarkets, Piggly-Wiggly, in 1916. Saunders went bankrupt in 1923 and never actually lived here; instead, the building has acquired several new wings in the process of becoming an appealingly old-fashioned and rather quirky museum of Memphis history. It holds all kinds of stuffed animals and oddities, including a miniature automated circus, a gory exhibit on the city's early years, and a fascinating walk-through model of the first Piggly-Wiggly store, complete with 2¢ packets of Kellogg's Cornflakes and 8¢ cans of Campbell's Soup, plus a series of adverts demonstrating early teething problems – including the evolution of a new crime, “shoplifting” – in establishing this radical self-service venture. There's also an IMAX cinema and the Sharpe Planetarium.

Eating

Memphians are fond of their food, and proclaim their city to be the pork barbecue capital of the world. There's far more to Memphis than BBQ, however – soul food fans will be delighted, as will anyone who likes inventive contemporary Southern cuisine. You'll have no problem finding somewhere good downtown – note that several of the Beale Street clubs reviewed under “Nightlife” on p.566 also serve food – or in the eclectic Cooper-Young district.

Arcade 540 S Main St ☎901/526–5757. Said to be Memphis's oldest restaurant, this atmospheric landmark diner – Elvis ate here! – in the South Main District was featured in Jim Jarmusch's movie Mystery Train, among many others. Come here for large Southern breakfasts, pizzas, and home cooking, and pose for photos outside the iconic facade. Daily 8am–3pm.

Automatic Slim's Tonga Club 83 S Second St ☎901/525-7948. A Memphis institution in the heart of downtown, where you can eat delicious Southwestern-tinged global cuisine – coconut-crusted fish served with jicama slaw and avocado, for example – in arty, comfortably hip surroundings. Closed Sun.

The Beauty Shop 966 S Cooper ☎901/272-7111. The witty retro fittings – glass brick partitions, mismatched crockery, 1940s hairdryer chairs – are perfectly in tune with Cooper-Young's funky vintage-store flair, while the eclectic fusion food (lunch, dinner and Sunday brunch) is tasty and satisfying.

Café Francisco 400 N Main St ☎901/578-8002. Hunker down on an overstuffed velvet sofa, in a red leather booth, or at a rickety table in this cavernous, effortlessly boho and very relaxing coffeehouse that also serves good light meals. It's on the trolley route, near the Pyramid in the Pinch district. Free WiFi.

Four Way Grill 998 Mississippi Blvd ☎901/507-1519. Convenient for the Stax museum, this spotless little soul food joint – a favourite haunt of Martin Luther King Jr – dishes up unbeatable blue plate specials including fried chicken, ham hocks and scrumptious side vegetables at unbelievably low prices. Closed Mon.

Gus's Fried Chicken 310 S Front St ☎901/527-4877. This tiny downhome place near the South Main Arts District has reached the attention of the national press for its delicious, crackling-crisp and spicy chicken – don't miss it.

Interstate Bar-B-Que 2265 S Third St ☎901/775-2304, @www.jimneelysinterstatebarbecue.com. Legendary barbecue restaurant, south of downtown (leave I-55 at exit 7) on the way to the Delta. Try the barbecue spaghetti. Closed Sun.

Java Cabana 2170 Young Ave ☎901/272-7210. Friendly alternative coffeehouse in the Cooper-Young district, with poetry readings and live music. Closed Mon.

McEwan's 122 Monroe Ave ☎901/527-7085. At the heart of downtown, four blocks north of Beale, McEwan's has the ambiance of a cosy neighborhood bistro, serving inventive and delicious modern Southern cooking in a brick-walled room. The laid-back adjoining bar is also a local favorite.

Otherlands 641 S Cooper Ave ☎901/278-4994. Funky Midtown coffeehouse that's good for espresso, juices and fresh sandwiches. The laid-back crowd hangs out for hours in the warren of rooms, with their jumble of tatty sofas, armchairs, and even desks. Open until 8pm Mon–Sat, 7pm weekends.

The Rendezvous General Washburn Alley, 52 S Second St ☎901/523-2746, @www.hogsfly.com. Downtown Memphis's most famous pork barbecue joint, tucked away in a back alley, is colossal and very crowded. Enjoy the good-value meat feasts in a hectic atmosphere. Open Tues–Sat.

Nightlife and entertainment

Memphis's thriving live music scene is at its best during the city's many festivals, especially the month-long Memphis in May, where big-name soul, blues, and funk performances run side by side with the World Championship Barbecue Cooking Contest, and August's Elvis Tribute Week.

At other times, while it would be easy to look down on touristy Beale Street as sanitized and inauthentic, its close-packed assortment of music clubs actually has plenty to offer. The whole enclave, tightly patrolled to ensure visitor safety, is successful both architecturally and atmospherically, with street musicians adding to the ambiance. On Friday nights, a $10 wristband offers admission to all the major clubs. The stage in W.C. Handy Park, on Beale at Third Street, also features live bands – most nights for free. At the other end of the scale, the city's vibrant punk and garage scene sees some spectacularly grungy alternative bands playing steamy hole-in-the-walls.

Beyond its music, Memphis is also a good place for movie lovers, with classic films shown at the grand old Orpheum during the summer, an increasingly popular international film festival in April, and, in October, the edgy Indie Memphis, which focuses on low-budget Southern movies.

Barbecue in Memphis

In addition to the barbecue joints reviewed here, look out for the Corky's chain, which originated in Memphis and does fantastic dry ribs; TOPS, a local chain that serves BBQ fast-food style; Cozy Corner, midtown at 745 North Parkway (☎901/527-9158), where you can try barbecued Cornish hen; The BBQ Shop, also midtown, 1782 Madison (☎901/272-1277), which offers amazing wet and dry ribs; and, for a slightly alternative edge, Central, 2249 Central (☎901/272-9377), where you can also pick up homemade potato chips and a BBQ mushroom sandwich.

Gospel in Memphis: the Reverend Al Green

Memphis has been renowned for its gospel music since the Thirties, when Rev. Herbert Brewster wrote Mahalia Jackson's "Move On Up a Little Higher." Following a religious revelation, the consummate soul stylist Al Green, who scored big for Memphis's Hi Records with hits like "Let's Stay Together" and "Tired of Being Alone," has preached since the early 1980s at his own Full Gospel Tabernacle, 787 Hale Rd, in the leafy suburb of Whitehaven. Visitors are welcome at the 11.30am Sunday services; to get there, continue a mile south of Graceland on Elvis Presley Blvd, then turn west (phone ahead to make sure the Reverend is in town; ☎901/396-9192, 🌐www.algreenmusic.com). While they're very much church services rather than concerts, Green remains an astonishingly charismatic performer – and he does sing, backed by a smoking four-piece soul band. It's an unmissable – and, indeed, deeply spiritual – Memphis experience.

The best source of listings is the free weekly Memphis Flyer (🌐www.memphisflyer.com). You could also pop into Shangri-La Records, a treasure trove of Memphis music, midtown at 1916 Madison Ave (☎901/274-1916, 🌐www.shangri.com), for flyers and news of upcoming gigs.

B.B. King's Blues Club 147 Beale St ☎901/524-KING, 🌐www.bbkingblues.com. Despite accusations from purists of having "sold out," this remains Beale's most popular club. It's spacious and atmospheric, with regular blues (among other music) enjoyed by an enthusiastic crowd that makes good use of the dance floor – and the barbecue's not bad, either. B.B. himself appears once or twice a year.

Blues City Café 138 Beale St ☎901/526-3637, 🌐www.bluescitycafe.com. Popular Beale Street barbecue joint where musicians from nearby clubs dine on well-priced ribs, catfish, tamales, and gumbo. Live music nightly until late, in a down-home atmosphere. Open daily 11am–3am (5am at weekends).

Buccaneer Lounge 1368 Monroe Ave ☎901/278-0909. This grungy midtown venue – with a kind of pirate-themed junk store ambiance – is one of the city's best places to see local underground bands.

Earnestine and Hazel's 531 S Main St ☎901/523-9754. A legendary brothel-turned-jook joint, this spot was the haunt of everyone from Elvis to the Stax musicians. It's especially good late at night, when the Memphis music juke box blasts and the famed burgers start sizzling. Occasional live music.

HiTone Café 1913 Poplar Ave ☎901/278-8663, 🌐www.hitonememphis.com. From Memphis garage bands to comedians to Elvis impersonators, this eclectic Midtown bar/club is always worth checking out.

New Daisy Theater 330 Beale St ☎901/525-8979, 🌐www.newdaisy.com. Restored movie theater at the east end of Beale that attracts a young, pierced crowd for its punk, metal, boxing, and hardcore wrestling. Also makes a great venue for the occasional big-name artist.

Rum Boogie Café 182 Beale St ☎901/528-0150. 🌐www.rumboogie.com. Live blues is staged in the main room, while the smaller and more intimate Blues Hall, adjoining, is a mocked-up jook joint that regularly hosts anything from boogie blues to frenetic punkability.

Wild Bill's 1580 Vollintine Ave ☎901/726-5473. Neighborhood jook joint where visitors are welcome to join locals at the long tables for laid-back live blues and soul Fri–Sun. Located three miles northeast of downtown, in North Memphis.

Young Avenue Deli 2119 Young Ave ☎901/278-0034, 🌐www.youngavenuedeli.com. Misleadingly named Cooper-Young favorite, featuring almost nightly local and national rock, folk, punk, and alt bands.

Shiloh National Military Park

Approximately 110 miles east of Memphis and twelve southwest of Savannah, Tennessee, via US-64 and Hwy-22, Shiloh National Military Park (daily 8am–dusk; $5 per vehicle; ☎731/689-5696, 🌐www.nps.gov/shil) commemorates one of the most crucial battles of the Civil War. After victories at Fort Henry and Fort Donelson, General Grant's confident Union forces were all but defeated at Shiloh by a surprise early-morning Confederate attack on April 6, 1862. A stubborn rump of resistance held on until around 5pm, and the Confederates elected to finish the task off the next morning rather than launching a twilight assault. However, Grant's decimated regiments were bolstered by the overnight arrival of reinforcements, and instead it was their dawn initiative that forced the tired and demoralized Confederates to retreat.

Shiloh was the first encounter on a scale that became common as the war continued, putting an abrupt end to the romantic innocence of many a raw volunteer soldier. Over twenty thousand men in all were killed. Even the war-toughened General Sherman spoke of "piles of dead soldiers' mangled bodies . . . without heads and legs . . . the scenes on this field would have cured anyone of war."

The visitor center displays artifacts recovered from the battlefield and shows a twenty-minute film. A self-guided ten-mile driving tour takes in the National Cemetery, whose moss-covered walls contain thousands of unidentified graves.

Nashville

Set amid the gentle hills and fertile farmlands of central Tennessee, the sprawling city of NASHVILLE attracts six million visitors each year. The great majority – devoted fans and the just plain curious alike – come to immerse themselves in country music, whether at mainstream showcases like the Country Music Hall of Fame and the Grand Ole Opry, or in the smaller clubs and honky-tonks found not only downtown but also in Nashville's many disparate neighborhoods.

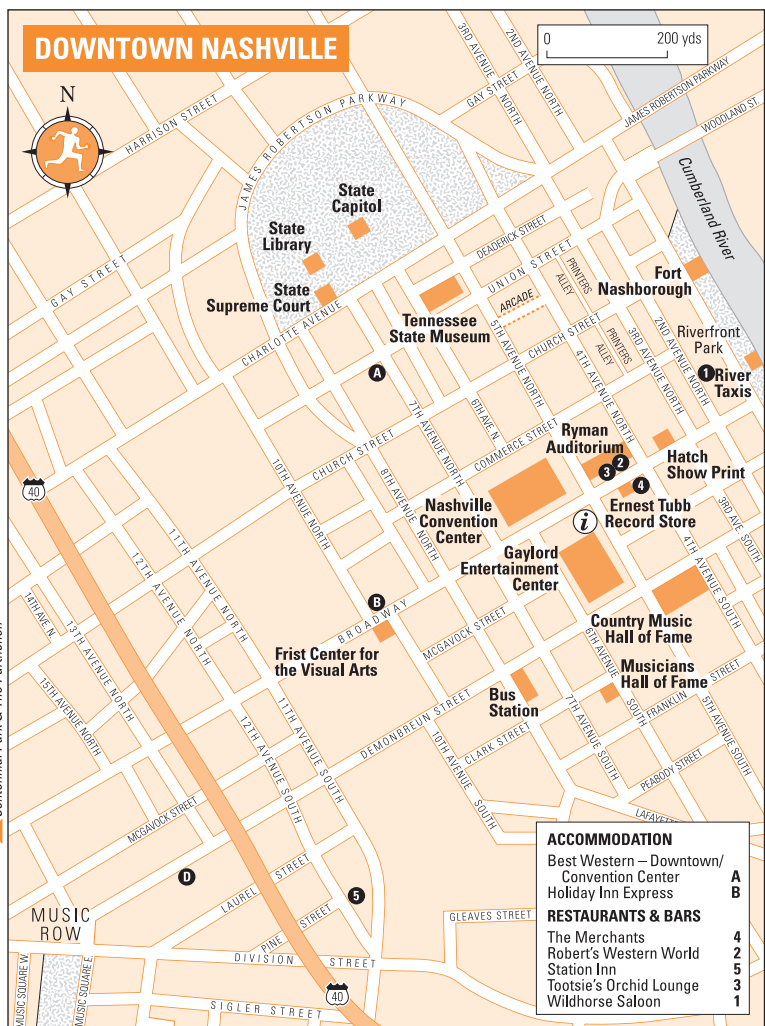

Behind all the rhinestone glitter and showbiz razzmatazz exists a hard-working, rather conservative city. Nashville has been the leading settlement in middle Tennessee since Fort Nashborough was established in 1779. State capital since 1843, it is now the financial and insurance center of the mid-South, as well as a fast-growing manufacturing base. Rapid development since World War II has transformed a once-compact town into a maze-like, often alienating conurbation, stretching out in all directions along the undulating roads, here known as pikes.

For all its "Nash-Vegas" image, the city has maintained a strong reputation for learning since planter times. As well as holding over a thousand churches – more per capita than anywhere else in the country – it has been tagged the "Protestant Vatican" for its proliferation of training colleges for preachers and missionaries, church administrative offices, and Bible-publishing plants.

Arrival, information, and getting around

Nashville International Airport is eight miles – around a $25 taxi ride – south-east of downtown. The Gray Line shuttle (every 15–20min 5am–11pm; $12 one way, $18 roundtrip; ☎ 615/883-5555, @ www.graylinenashville.com) drops off at most downtown hotels; Metropolitan Transit Authority buses leave hourly (until 5.33pm Mon–Fri, 4.35pm Sat & Sun; $1.25; ☎ 615/862-5969, @ www.nashvillemta.org). The Greyhound station is in a seedy part of downtown at 200 Eighth Ave S. There's no Amtrak service.

The best place to pick up information on the city is the excellent visitor center, downtown at Fifth and Broadway, in the massive Gaylord Entertainment Center (Mon–Sat 8.30am–5.30pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 615/259-4747 or 1-800/657-6910, @ www.visitmusiccity.com); the second branch, 150 4th Ave N (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎ 615/259-4731), is also good.

If you like your country music laid on with lots of brash, camp fun, hop aboard the “Big Pink Bus” and let the singing guides of Nash-Trash Tours dish the dirt on all your favorite stars (Wed–Sat, 90min; $29.50; reservations essential; ☎615/226-7300 or ☎1-800/342-2132, 🌐www.nashtrash.com).

Accommodation

The CVB’s Central Reservations Center (☎1-800/657-6910) offers discounted rates on most city hotels; the budget motels are concentrated a couple of miles north of downtown, off the I-65 Trinity Lane/Brick Church Pike exit (be sure to pick up discount coupons in the Tennessee state welcome centers). Rates are usually higher in June during the CMA Music Festival (formerly Fan Fair; see p.572). There's RV and tent camping at Opryland KOA, 2626 Music Valley Drive (☎615/889-0286 or 1-800/562-7789, 🌐www.nashvillekoa.com), set in 27 attractive acres and with free live music shows in the summer.

Best Western – Downtown/Convention Center

711 Union St ☎615/242-4311 or 1-800/627-3297. Cheap motel on the north side of downtown, facing the capitol. Rates include continental breakfast. ③

Cat's Pajamas B&B 818 Woodland St ☎615/650-4553. Friendly, simple, three-room B&B a short drive east of downtown. Only one room is en suite. ④

Days Inn – Stadium/Downtown 211 N First St ☎615/254-1551 or 1-800/251-3038, 🌐www.daysinn.com. Inexpensive hotel near downtown. The area can feel unsafe at night, so take a cab. ③

Gaylord Opryland Resort 2800 Opryland Drive ☎615/889-1000, 🌐www.gaylordhotels.com/gaylordopryland/. Unbelievably vast and expensive

3000-room place – included here not because it's recommended, but simply because it's used by so many tour groups – laid out around lavish gardens and glass-roofed courtyards, permeated with syrupy music. It takes an age simply to get to or from your room, let alone drive the nine miles downtown. Suites can cost as much as $3500. ⑦

GuestHouse International Inn & Suites Music Valley 2420 Music Valley Drive ☎615/885-4030. Clean, comfortable and good-value option near the Gaylord Opryland and Grand Ole Opry. Rates include continental breakfast. ④

Holiday Inn Express 920 Broadway ☎615/244-0150, 🌐www.ichotelsgroup.com. A good downtown option with pool and free breakfast buffet. ⑤

The City

Other than the venerable structures you'd expect in a state capital, such as the Capitol building itself and various imposing courthouses and banks, the major landmarks of downtown Nashville are the unmissable Country Music Hall of Fame, at Fifth and Demonbreun streets, and the gigantic Gaylord Entertainment Center sports and entertainment complex (formerly the Nashville Arena), at Fifth Avenue and Broadway.

Further afield, Music Row, which centers on Demonbreun Street a mile southwest of downtown, forms the heart of Nashville's recording industry, with companies like Warner Bros., Mercury, and Sony operating out of plush office blocks – there's little of interest to tourists.

Nine miles northeast of downtown in the Opryland area and along Music Valley Drive, you'll find not only the Grand Ole Opry – which still hosts its famed live radio show – but also several old-fashioned country music-related sights, including wax and car museums, mini-golf courses, and a number of music shows.

The Country Music Hall of Fame

Nashville's premier visitor attraction is the superb Country Music Hall of Fame, 222 Fifth Ave S (daily 9am–5pm; $16.95, $18.95 including audio tour, $23 including admission to the Ryman Auditorium, $23.95 including admission to Studio B, $29.95 including admission to both; $4 parking). The building itself is an architectural tour de force, laden with musical symbolism – the whole thing is in the shape of a bass clef; the central tower is topped by representations of a 12-inch LP, a 7-inch single, and a CD; a Cadillac fin pokes from one corner; and so on – but what really makes it special are the exhibits. These strike an appealing balance between the music itself and the memorabilia that goes with it. Alongside stage costumes and paraphernalia from countless stars, including Elvis's gold Cadillac, you get a fascinatingly detailed history of all aspects of the genre from its earliest roots, with films and recordings constantly playing. Soundproof booths are devoted to such milestone waxings as Ferlin Husky's 1956 "Gone," hailed as the first instance of the "Nashville Sound," while younger stars reminisce on video about the older generations. Songwriters and musicians give regular live demonstrations of their skills, and you can also use touch-screen technology to “interview” the likes of Dolly Parton or design your own C & W threads. The Hall of Fame itself, right at the end, is somewhat anticlimactic, simply consisting of a circular chamber filled with plaques; you may be more excited by the opportunity to burn your own custom CD.

The Hall of Fame also offers short bus tours that provide the only way to visit RCA’s legendary Studio B on Music Row. Between 1957 and 1977, forty gold records were cut here, starting with Don Gibson’s “Oh Lonesome Me” and including Dolly Parton’s “Jolene,” but it’s probably most famous for a thirteen-year run of Elvis hits (invariably recorded at night) like “Are You Lonesome Tonight?” and “It’s Now or Never.” Recently restored and rewired, it’s once again open for business, but only the most dedicated of fans are likely to find walking through the bare rooms worth the time and money.

Downtown Nashville

Most of downtown Nashville looks much like any other regional business center, dominated by office blocks and parking lots, though it’s worth strolling along both Broadway and Second Avenue to enjoy their atmospheric assortment of honky-tonks, bars, restaurants, and gift stores. In business since 1879, the unmissable Hatch Show Print, 316 Broadway (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–5pm; ☎ 615/256-2805; 🌐 www.countrymusichalloffame.com), prints and sells evocative posters from the early days of country and rock ‘n’ roll, using the original blocks, and continues to produce new work. Opposite, another institution, Ernest Tubb Record Shop (☎ 615/55-7503, 🌐 www.etrrecordshop.com), sells vintage and rare country music, and displays Grand Ole Opry costumes.

The original home of the Grand Ole Opry, the Ryman Auditorium, 116 Fifth Ave, can be seen on self-guided tours (daily 9am–4pm; $8.50; $3.25 extra for occasional backstage tours; 🌐 www.ryman.com). A church-like space, its wooden church pews illuminated by stained glass and its display cases filled with flowered frocks and bootlace ties belonging to the stars, it really evokes the heyday of traditional country. You can still catch the odd live evening performance by big-name bands, and for an extra $15 it’s possible to record your own CD.

Spreading its remit beyond country music, the Musicians Hall of Fame (Mon–Thurs 10am–6pm, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $14.95; 🌐 www.musicianshalloffame.com), a few blocks away at 301 Sixth Ave S, pays homage to the session musicians who are often overlooked in all the hullabaloo surrounding the big names. Instruments, photos, film footage, and recordings tell the story of the generations of bass players, drummers, trumpeters, and pianists who provided the backbone for some of the most famous songs ever recorded.

Downtown also has some non-music-related diversions. Housed in a gorgeous Art Deco building, the Frist Center for the Visual Arts, 919 Broadway (Sat–Wed 10am–5.30pm, Thurs & Fri 10am–9pm; $8.50; 🌐 www.fristcenter.org), is well worth a look, its changing exhibitions featuring everything from sculpture and photography to ancient art. At the other end of Broadway, Riverfront Park is a thin stretch of grass and terracing that dips down to the Cumberland River. Immediately north, set above the river on a promontory, a replica of the wooden Fort Nashborough (Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; free) serves as a monument to the city’s founders of 1779. A few blocks north again, the worthy Tennessee State Museum, 505 Deaderick St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free), is strongest on Civil War history, highlighting the hardships suffered by the ill-clad, ill-fed soldiers on both sides, of whom 23,000 out of 77,000 died at Shiloh (see p.566) alone. Other displays in this huge space focus on frontier life and on black Tennesseans, looking at slavery, Reconstruction, the founding of the Ku Klux Klan, and the civil rights movement.

West of Downtown

In 1897, Tennessee celebrated its Centennial Exposition in Centennial Park, two miles southwest of downtown at West End and 25th avenues. Nashville honored its nickname as the “Athens of the South” by constructing a full-sized wood-and-plaster replica of the Parthenon. That proved so popular that it was replaced by a permanent structure in 1931, an impressive edifice that’s now home to Nashville’s premier art museum (Tues–Sat 9am–4.30pm; June–Aug also Sun 12.30–4.30pm; $5). The upper hall is dominated by a gilded 42ft replica of Phidias’s statue of the goddess Athena – said to be the largest indoor statue in the western world – surrounded by reproductions of the Elgin Marbles.

Just across West End Avenue from Centennial Park, weather-beaten Gothic structures sit alongside more modern buildings on the campus of the prestigious, and highly conservative, Vanderbilt University. South of here, 21st Avenue S runs through the heart of the characterful Hillsboro Village, abounding in cafés, restaurants, and book and antique stores. Half a mile northeast of Centennial Park, Fisk University is one of the nation’s oldest black colleges. The excellent Van Vechten Gallery, on campus at Jackson St and 18th Ave N (Tues–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 1–5pm; closed Sun in summer; donation), holds works by Picasso, Cézanne, Renoir, and Georgia O’Keeffe; it also has changing exhibits on African-American themes.

Eating

Nashville has its share of awful chain restaurants, but it also offers many down-home Southern joints, as well as upscale places well suited for expense-account dining. Many live music venues (see p.572) also serve food.

Arnold’s 605 8th Ave S ☎615/256-4455. Classic canteen for Southern meat-and-three meals (featuring meat, three vegetables, and cornbread and/or rolls). The delicious country cooking includes fried chicken, ham, or pork chops with side dishes – macaroni cheese, fried green tomatoes, turnip greens, and the like – for around $7. Get there early for lunch to avoid a long wait. Mon–Fri 10.30am–2.45pm.

Cock o’ the Walk 2624 Music Valley Drive ☎615/889-1930 @www.cockofthewalkrestaurant.com. If you hanker for huge feasts of fried catfish, onion rings, and pickles, then don’t let the hokey environs here – there’s a kind of keelboat theme going on – put you off. The fish is fresh and very good.

Jimmy Kelly’s 217 Louise Ave ☎615/329-4349. Nashville’s favorite steakhouse for seventy years, just off West End Ave near Vanderbilt. Dinner only Mon–Sat.

The Loveless Café 8400 Hwy-100, 20 miles south of town ☎615/646-9700, @www.lovelesscafe.com. Friendly café famed for its superb country food. Breakfasts are best: hunks of salty ham with gravy, eggs, toast, and fluffy biscuits slicked with succulent homemade jams. Reservations recommended.

The Merchants 401 Broadway ☎615/254-1892. Historic downtown building housing two dining rooms; the casual grill downstairs, which is ideal for a tasty lunch – crabcakes, grilled portabella sandwiches, and the like – and the more formal restaurant upstairs, serving classic American favorites.

Noshville Deli 1918 Broadway ☎615/329-6674, also 4014 Hillsboro Circle ☎615/269-3535, @noshville.com. Great breakfasts, huge sandwiches, and wicked shakes in this beloved New York-style deli.

 Pancake Pantry 1796 21st Ave ☎615/383-9333. With more than 20 pancake choices, and wonderful flapjacks, this cheery Hillsboro Village institution is a very popular breakfast spot – expect to wait, maybe hours, for a table at the weekend. Mon–Fri 6am–3pm, Sat & Sun 6am–4pm.

Sunset Grill 2001 Belcourt Ave ☎615/386-3663, @www.sunsetgrill.com. Stylish Hillsboro Village restaurant, serving upmarket Southern and Tex-Mex fusion food. The terrace is great for people-watching. Lunch Tues–Fri only, dinner until late nightly.

Nightlife and entertainment

The two most obvious ways to experience live country music in Nashville are either to head for the cluster of honky-tonks that line Lower Broadway between Second and Fourth avenues – they're all pretty down-to-earth, hard-drinking places, though out-of-towners nonetheless make up a large proportion of the clientele – or to buy a ticket for a rather more genteel show at the Grand Ole Opry, a fair drive out from downtown. If you're in town for a few nights, however, it's worth making the effort to catch up-and-coming or more specialized acts at places like the Bluebird Café and the Station Inn; look out, too, for special events, including bluegrass nights, at the Ryman Auditorium (see p.570). Just west of downtown, the hip residential neighborhood Elliston Place boasts a number of rock and alternative music venues. With its string of tacky bars and clubs, Printers Alley, downtown, is best avoided.

Every Thursday evening in summer, Dancin' in the District, at Riverfront Park, features big-name stars (ranging from Buddy Guy to the Neville Brothers) for a token cover charge. In June, the CMA Music Festival (formerly known as Fan Fair) is a four-day series of concerts and opportunities to meet the stars (☎ 1-800/262-3378, 🌐 www.cmafest.com).

For listings, check the free weeklies Nashville Scene (Wed) and All The Rage (Thurs), or Friday and Saturday's Tennessean.

Bluebird Café 4104 Hillsboro Rd ☎ 615/383-1461, 🌐 www.bluebirdcafe.com. Having launched the careers of superstars like Garth Brooks, Trisha Yearwood, and Faith Hill, this intimate café, six miles west of downtown in the Green Hills district, is the place to see the latest country artists. Early evening entertainment by up-and-coming songwriters is free, but a cover of $8–15 is charged for the second show. Reservations are recommended if you want to sit at one of the 21 tables; you can also sit at the bar, but either way you're expected to spend at least $7 on food or drink. Sunday night (new writers' night) is free.

Douglas Corner Café 2106 Eighth Ave S ☎ 615/298-1688, 🌐 www.douglascorner.com. The Bluebird's main competitor has live music – Americana, rock, and country – six nights a week, often with no cover, and regular open-mike songwriters' nights.

Ernest Tubb Record Store Midnight Jamboree Texas Troubadour Theatre, 2414 Music Valley Drive ☎ 615/885-0028. A live radio show, recorded every Sat from midnight to 1am, in a purpose-built theater adjoining the Music Valley branch of the Tubb store (there's another on Broadway). Features promising newcomers as well as major Opry stars. Free.

Exit/In 2208 Elliston Place ☎ 615/321-3340, 🌐 www.exitin.com. Venerable venue for rock, reggae, and country, with the occasional big name – not to mention beer and pizza.

Nashville Palace 2611 McGavock Pike ☎ 615/884-3004, 🌐 www.nashvillepalace.net. Opposite the Gaylord Opryland resort, with music all day every day, big name C & W stars, talent nights, and post-Opry shows.

Robert's Western World 416 Broadway ☎ 615/244-9552, 🌐 www.robertswesternworld.com. Some of the best country music on Broadway, plus rockabilly and Western swing, in a lively honky-tonk that doubles as a cowboy boots store.

Station Inn 402 12th Ave S ☎ 615/255-3307, 🌐 www.stationinn.com. Very popular bluegrass and acoustic venue near Music Row. Shows 9pm nightly. No smoking.

Sutler's 2608 Franklin Pike ☎ 615/292-5254. Aspiring singer-songwriters make a beeline for this bar/club, south of downtown, that's hosted everyone from Nanci Griffith and Emmylou Harris to Guy Clark. Don't miss the beer cheese soup.

Tootsie's Orchid Lounge 422 Broadway ☎ 615/726-0463, 🌐 www.tootsies.net. Atmospheric downtown honky-tonk, with a raucous atmosphere and good, gutsy live performers.

South from Nashville

Southeast of Nashville, nineteenth-century plantation homes line US-31 between suburban Brentwood and historic Franklin, eighteen miles out. One of the bloodiest battles of the Civil War was fought here on November 30, 1864, when

△ Ryman Auditorium

8500 men fell in less than an hour. Twenty-two thousand Confederates forced a Union retreat to Nashville, but incurred such heavy casualties as to shatter their Army of Tennessee beyond further use. Among strategic buildings open to visitors is Carnton Plantation, a former Confederate hospital where bloodstains are still visible on the floor, a mile southeast of town on Hwy-431 (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $10). Franklin’s entire fifteen-block center, now filled with antique and specialty shops, is on the National Register of Historic Places.

Jack Daniel’s at Lynchburg

The change-resistant village of LYNCHBURG (pop. 361), seventy miles southeast of Nashville, is home to Jack Daniel’s Distillery (daily 9am–4.30pm; free). Founded in 1866, this is the oldest registered distillery in the country (hence the famous “No. 1” appellation). Entertaining seventy-minute tours lead through every step of the sour-mash whiskey-making process; ironically, you can’t actually sample the stuff, as this is a dry county (though you can purchase special-edition bottles, every day but Sunday).

Lynchburg itself is a pretty hamlet, laid out around a neat town square with a redbrick courthouse and a number of old-fashioned stores. One enjoyable throw-back is Miss Mary Bobo’s Boarding House, which serves enormous Southern dinners (fried chicken, turnip greens, country ham, and the like) at group tables in a lovely 1805 home (reservations essential; ☎615/759-7394).

Eastern Tennessee

Until the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the opening of Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and the construction of the interstate highways, life had remained all but unchanged in the remote hills and valleys of eastern Tennessee since the arrival of the earliest pioneers. Now visitors flock here for the endless expanses of natural beauty; and as a result, especially in the fall, the Smokies can get very clogged with traffic. Most communities in the area are small, and either over-touristed or just bland. Of the two main cities – modern Knoxville and picturesque Chattanooga, both of which have benefited from considerable industrial growth thanks to cheap TVA power – only Chattanooga holds much appeal for tourists.

Smoky Mountain gateway towns

Most visitors who approach the Smokies from the north or west leave I-40 twenty miles east of Knoxville, or two hundred miles east of Nashville, and sweep south on Hwy-66 and US-441 through the 25-mile procession of heavily commercialized “gateway towns” that leads to the national park. This is Tennessee’s most conspicuously touristed area, its endless motels, sprawling campgrounds, chain diners, country music theaters, and expensive novelty “attractions” consistently geared toward vacationing families. The odd motel might enjoy an appealing rural setting, but if you’re on a road trip it makes more sense to think of the various communities as cheapish overnight stops – though accommodation prices fluctuate seasonally, and also rise significantly on weekends – than as stimulating destinations in their own right.

Pigeon Forge

With fifty or so themed attractions, ranging from Dollywood (see below) to the Black Bear Jamboree Dinner and Show, there’s ostensibly lots to do in the dry town of PIGEON FORGE – though almost everything is appealing only on a kitschy level. Tucked in the relentless strip of discount outlets, diners, and motels, Pigeon Forge’s welcome center is at 1950 Parkway (☎865/453-8574 or 1-800/251-9100, 🌐www.mypigeonforge.com). Reasonable motels include the Parkview, 2806 Parkway (☎865/453-5051 or 1-800/239-9116; 📅; April to mid-Dec), and the comfortable, friendly Shular Inn, 2708 Parkway (☎865/453-2700 or 1-800/451-2376; 📅), both of which have pools. The Smoky Mountain Pancake House, 4160 Parkway (☎865/453-1947), is good for breakfast.

Dolly Parton’s Dollywood

Born in 1946, one of twelve children, Dolly Parton grew up in several modest homes around Pigeon Forge, the most isolated of them two miles from the nearest neighbor and over four miles from the mailbox. As a child she sang every week on local radio, before leaving for Nashville on the day she finished at Sevier County High School. Her first success, duetting with Porter Wagoner, came to an acrimonious end in the early Seventies, but she scored a major country hit in 1976 with “Jolene.” She then crossed over to a poppier sound, and, with her charismatic presence, was a natural in Hollywood films like 9 to 5 and The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas. Her songs have been acclaimed for their readiness to address issues like rural poverty, and as a woman, a singer, and a songwriter she has always been a strong-minded and inspirational figure.

Dollywood, Parton’s “homespun fun” theme park at 700 Dollywood Lane in Pigeon Forge (April–Dec; call or visit the website for schedule; April–Oct $45.70, children 4–11 $34.55; Nov & Dec $42.40/$24.55; ☎865/428-9488, 🌐www.dollywood.com), blends ersatz mountain heritage with the glamour of its celebrity shareholder. One section showcases Appalachian crafts, making everything from lye soap to horse-drawn carriages; a museum looks at Dolly herself in entertaining detail; and music shows are constantly on the go. The thrill rides offer plenty for adrenaline-junkies and kiddies alike, but after a full day it can all start to feel a bit precious. A water park, Dolly’s Splash Country (late May to mid-Sept; call for schedule; $36.80, children $31.20; combo tickets valid in either park for 3 days within a week $73/$58; same phone, 🌐www.dollywoodssplashcountry.com), is adjacent.

Gatlinburg

If you can't bring yourself to stop in Pigeon Forge, you'll probably end up in GATLINBURG, another five miles south on US-441. It's a marginally more attractive place, squeezed amid the foothills of the Smokies, where the odd genuine relic of its Germanic heritage still shows through. As well as being a little more upmarket, it's also "wet," so its restaurants serve alcohol. While there is at least a town center to stroll through, it's once again bursting with overpriced, gimmicky tourist attractions, including Christus Gardens, with its dioramas of the life of Christ, and a mini-golf course that "transports you back to Gatlinburg's historic past, while challenging your putting skills." It also offers a couple of chair lifts up the surrounding peaks, one of which leads to the year-round Ober Gatlinburg ski resort and amusement park.

Gatlinburg's central Parkway holds three visitor centers (☎ 1-800/568-4748, 🌐 www.gatlinburg.com). This being the closest town to the park, accommodation is relatively expensive. The good-value Sidney James Mountain Lodge, slightly up from the mayhem at 610 Historic Nature Trail (☎ 865/436-7851 or 1-800/876-6888, 🌐 www.sidneyjames.com; 📍), offers large comfortable rooms, some of them creek-side, and two pools. Central eating options include Lineberger's, 903 Parkway (☎ 865/436-9284), which serves decent seafood.

Townsend

A much less frenetic approach to the Smokies, if you're driving in from the east, is to follow the pretty Foothills Parkway through woods and across misty mountains, and then take US-321 for the final seven miles to TOWNSEND, twelve miles west of Pigeon Forge. There's no town to speak of, just a peaceful strip where the motels are laid-back and the air is clear. The peaceful Highland Manor, 7766 E Lamar Alexander Parkway (☎ 865/448-2211 or 1-800/213-9462, 🌐 www.highlandmanor.com; 📍), is a friendly place with nice grounds, great views, and a pool. You can eat fresh trout and crispy fried chicken in a country-store atmosphere at the Hearth and Kettle, opposite the hotel at 7767 E Lamar Alexander Parkway (☎ 865/448-6059).

Great Smoky Mountains National Park

The northern boundary of GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK, which stretches for seventy miles along the Tennessee–North Carolina border (see also p.507), lies just two miles south of Gatlinburg on US-441. Don't expect immediate tranquility, however: the roads, particularly in the fall, can be lined almost bumper-to-bumper with cars, and if you're not staying in Gatlinburg it's best to use the well-marked bypass rather than drive through the town.

Located within a day's drive of the major urban centers of the east coast and the Great Lakes – and of two-thirds of the entire US population – the Smokies attract over ten million visitors per year, more than twice as many as any other national park. These heavily contorted peaks are named for the bluish haze that hangs over them, made up of moisture and hydrocarbons released by the lush vegetation (a mature tree emits up to nine hundred gallons on a summer day). Since the Sixties, however, air pollution has been adding sulphates to the filmy smoke, and has cut back visibility by thirty percent. More than 120 tree species and over 1400 flowering plants clothe the mountains and meadows in color from early spring to late fall. Sixteen peaks rise above 6000ft, their steep elevation accounting for dramatic changes in climate.

While between late March and mid-May is a great time to visit for the delicate spring flowers, the busiest periods in the park are midsummer (mid-June to mid-Aug), and, especially, October, when the hills are shrouded in a magnificent canopy of glaring reds, subtle yellows, and faded browns. During June and July, rhododendrons blaze fiercely in the sometimes stifling summer heat.

Just inside the park on US-441, Sugarlands Visitor Center (daily: May & Sept 8am–6pm, June–Aug 8am–7pm, call for winter hours; ☎ 865/436-1200, 🌐 www.nps.gov/grsm) has useful leaflets covering hiking trails, driving tours, forests, and wildlife, and can provide details on each day's program of ranger-led tours and activities. Many visitors, however, do no more than follow US-441, here known as the Newfound Gap Road, all the way through to North Carolina. From the gap itself, ten miles along on the state line, a spur road to the right winds for seven more miles up to Clingman's Dome, at 6643ft the highest point not only in the park but in all of Tennessee. A surreal concrete spiral walkway on top affords a panoramic, though hazy, view of the mountains, rather spoiled by the fact that virtually all the mature balsam firs in the area have been killed off by insect infestation.

If you want to spend longer exploring within the park, the main focus of visitor activity is in the Cades Cove area, which can be reached either by branching west at Sugarlands along the scenic Little River Road, or directly from Townsend via Rich Mountain Road (closed in winter). The eleven-mile driving loop here, always jam-packed with cars in summer and fall, passes deserted barns, homesteads, mills, and churches that stand as a reminder of the farmers who carved out a living from this wilderness, before they were forced to move out when National Park status was conferred in 1934. Halfway along, there's another visitor center (daily: May 8.30am–7.30pm, June–Aug 8.30am–8pm, Sept & Oct 9am–6pm, call for winter hours). This whole loop is reserved for cyclists on Saturday and Wednesday mornings in summer, from dawn until 10am; bikes can be rented at the Cades Cove Store near the Cades Cove Campground (☎ 865/448-9034).

Perhaps the best way of all to escape the crowds is to sample the park's eight hundred miles of hiking trails.

Chattanooga

Few places can be so identified with a single song as CHATTANOOGA, in the southeast corner of Tennessee. Though visitors expecting to see Tex Beneke's

Camping in the Smokies

Hikers intending to stay out overnight must make reservations (☎865/436-1231) and obtain free backcountry permits, available from visitor centers (except in Cades Cove), campground offices, and ranger stations. For information, call ☎865/436-1297. Note that if you want to camp on the Appalachian Trail you'll need to stick to the designated areas, caged in behind iron bars to keep out the bears.

The park also has ten developed ("frontcountry") campgrounds, of which only two, Cades Cove and Smokemont, remain open year-round. Most of the rest are open mid-March through October. The three most popular grounds – Cades Cove, Elkmont, and Smokemont – are always fully booked in advance. If you want a space in the summer or fall, you should make reservations on ☎1-800/365-2267 or at reservations.nps.gov.

and Glenn Miller's "Chattanooga Choo-Choo" will be disappointed (the town is not even served by Amtrak), the place has a certain appeal, not least its beautiful location on a deep bend in the Tennessee River, walled in by forested plateaus on three sides. This setting led John Ross, of Scottish and Cherokee ancestry, to found a trading post on the spot in 1815, and its strategic importance made it a great prize during the Civil War. Victory here in 1863 helped establish the reputation of General Grant as the man who might win the war for the Union.

The Town

The centerpiece of Chattanooga's twenty miles of reclaimed riverfront is Ross's Landing (the town's original name), a park at the bottom of Broad Street. Here the splendid five-story Tennessee Aquarium traces the aquatic life of the Mississippi from its Tennessee tributaries to the Gulf of Mexico, and also shows giant IMAX movies (daily 10am–6pm; longer hours in summer; $17.95, IMAX $7.95, combined ticket $21.95; ☎1-800/262-0695, www.tnaqua.org). Cruises on the Southern Belle riverboat (☎423/266-4488, www.chattanoogaariverboat.com) leave from the foot of nearby Chestnut Street. Prices start from $12 for a ninety-minute daytime sightseeing tour.

Perched above the river, the attractive Bluff View Art District, where High meets Second, comprises a handful of galleries, workshops, museums and cafés in some lovely old buildings. Certainly the splendid Hunter Museum of American Art is worth a look, with a changing roster of exhibitions covering photography, painting, sculpture, folk art and crafts from the nineteenth century to the present day (Mon, Tues, Fri & Sat 10am–5pm, Wed & Sun noon–5pm, Thurs 10am–9pm; $8; www.huntermuseum.org).

A few blocks inland, the Chattanooga Regional History Museum, 400 Chestnut St (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm; $4), is a quirky little place, with some especially good information on early local history and the Cherokee Indians. Keep walking and you'll see some grand century-old buildings in the lively business district, such as the eye-catching Tivoli Theatre at 709 Broad St; as a general rule, however, the further you get from the river, the more run-down Chattanooga becomes.

If you long to ride a Chattanooga choo-choo, the authentic steam trains of the Tennessee Valley Railroad offer a variety of trips, from 55-minute local jaunts to stunning six-mile rides, crossing the river, running through deep tunnels, and turning round on a giant turntable (March–Oct daily; Nov & Dec limited days; from $13.50; ☎423/894-8028, www.tvrail.com). The two main stations, restored to their 1930s look, are at 2202 N Chamberlain Ave in east Chattanooga and 4119 Cromwell Rd (I-75 exit 4 to Hwy-153).

Lookout Mountain

The name Chattanooga comes from a Creek word meaning “rock rising to a point”; the rock in question, the 2215ft Lookout Mountain (www.lookoutmountain.com), looms six miles south of downtown. To reach the top, either drive the whole way along a complicated, poorly signposted road, or use the world’s steepest incline railway, which grinds its tentative way up through a narrow gash in the lush forest from 3917 St Elmo Ave, near the foot of the mountain, tackling nerve-racking gradients of up to 72.7 percent (daily: Jan, Feb, Nov & Dec 10am–6pm; March–May, Sept & Oct 9am–6pm; June–Aug 8.30am–8pm; 3 trips/hr, 45min; $10 one way, $12 roundtrip; children $5/$6; ☎ 423/821-4224).

At the top, a steep five-minute walk through Point Park brings you to Point Lookout, the northern promontory of the mountain, which commands a not-to-be-missed view of the city and the meandering Tennessee River below. This forms part of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, covering several sites around the city and in nearby Chickamauga, Georgia, that witnessed fierce Civil War fighting in 1863. The battle here that November, in which Confederate forces that had been laying siege to Chattanooga were finally forced to withdraw, was also known as the “Battle Above the Clouds”; thick mantles of fog often obscure the city below to this day. Among the many memorials in Point Park is the only statue in the country to show Union and Confederate soldiers shaking hands.

For something a little less serious, join generations of road-trippers and “See Rock City” – the iconic sign, painted on roadside barns as far away as Georgia and Texas, was the result of an aggressive 1930s marketing campaign. A valentine to

The Cherokee and the Trail of Tears

During the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, the Cherokee were the most powerful Indian tribe in the tri-state region of Tennessee, Georgia, and North Carolina. They forged close links with white pioneers, adopting white methods in schooling and agriculture, intermarrying, and even owning African slaves. The only Native Americans to develop their own written alphabet, they had a regular newspaper, The Cherokee Phoenix. They even supplied soldiers for Andrew Jackson’s US forces against the Creek Indians and the British in 1814, hoping to buy influence with the federal government.

Thirteen years later, against a background of aggressive territorial claims by settlers, the Cherokee produced a written constitution modeled on that of the US, stating their intention to continue to be a self-governing nation. John Ross, founder of Ross’s Landing, and at most one-eighth Cherokee, was elected as their first Principal Chief in 1828 in an effort to appease and negotiate with national and state governments over their lands. However, as white encroachment increased, their former ally Jackson, now US president, was pressured by the Georgians into “offering” the Cherokee western lands in exchange for those east of the Mississippi. Although the tribal leadership refused, a minority faction accepted, giving the government the opportunity they required. The Cherokee were ordered to leave within two years, and fourteen thousand were forcefully removed to Oklahoma in 1838 along the horrific Trail of Tears: four thousand died of disease and exposure on the way. In the meantime, their land was sold by lottery, and Ross’s Landing was renamed Chattanooga. Descendants of the one thousand Cherokee who managed to avoid removal by escaping into the mountains now occupy a small reservation in North Carolina (see p.507).

The Red Clay State Historic Park, twenty miles east of Chattanooga off Hwy-317, recounts the old Cherokee way of life, with replica houses, tools, and household implements. Its balsamic Sacred Council Spring was once a meeting place for Cherokee elders.

kitsch Americana, Rock City is basically a walking trail along the mountain that offers not only the pleasure of scrambling through narrow gaps and swinging on rope bridges, but also delights such as Fairyland Caverns, holes carved into the rock and populated by fairytale characters. Inside Lookout Mountain itself, Ruby Falls, a 145ft waterfall, is heralded by a mock medieval castle entrance (Rock City and Ruby Falls both $14.95, children $7.95, combination ticket $28/$14, combination with Incline Railway $38/$19).

Practicalities

Greyhound connections with Nashville, Knoxville, and Atlanta arrive on Broad Street, downtown. The visitor center (daily 8.30am–5.30pm; ☎423/756-8687 or 1-800/322-3344, 🌐www.chattanewgafun.com) is next to the Tennessee Aquarium, near the river. Countless cheap motels line the interstates, but for something special head to the elegant Bluff View Inn, 412 E Second St (☎423/265-5033 or 1-800/725-8338; 🍷), which offers a variety of rooms – some with lovely views – spread across three restored houses in the appealing Bluff View Art District. There's camping at Raccoon Mountain Campground, 319 West Hills Drive (☎423/821-9403, 🌐www.raccoonmountain.com; cabins ①–②, tentsites $15).

As for eating, the Bluff View Art District comes up trumps again with the romantic, bistro-style Back Inn Café, 412 E 2nd St (☎423/265-5033; Tues–Sat), which serves Mediterranean food and has a terrace with river views; the lively pasta house Tony's, 212 High St (☎423/265-5033), and the nearby Rembrandt's Coffee House, 204 High St (☎423/265-5033), for gourmet coffee, artisan chocolate, and light meals. Elsewhere, the Big River Grille & Brewing Works, 222 Broad St (☎423/267-2739), is a cavernous brewpub and restaurant near the Aquarium.

Alabama

Just 250 miles from north to south, ALABAMA ranges from the fast-flowing rivers, waterfalls, and lakes of the Appalachian foothills to the bayous and beaches of the Gulf Coast. Most of its industry is concentrated in the north, around Birmingham and Huntsville, first home of the nation's space program. The sun-scorched farmlands of middle Alabama envelop sober Montgomery, the state capital. Away from the French-influenced coastal strip around the pretty little town of Mobile, fundamentalist attitudes have traditionally backed right-wing demagogues, such as George Wallace, the four-time state governor who received ten million votes in the 1968 presidential election, and, more recently, controversial Alabama Chief Justice Roy Moore.

Getting around Alabama

Public transportation is relatively good in Alabama. Daily Amtrak trains from New York and Atlanta to New Orleans stop at Anniston, Birmingham, and Tuscaloosa, while the line from Jacksonville to New Orleans passes through Mobile. Amtrak buses connect Birmingham and Mobile by way of Montgomery, while Greyhound serves the major towns and cities.

Northern Alabama

Northern Alabama, on the trailing edges of the Appalachians, is brightened by the mountain lakes, rivers, and canyons of the Tennessee River Valley. The area's first white settlers were small farmers who had little in common with the big plantation owners further south, and attempted to dissociate from the Confederacy during the Civil War. Substantial mineral finds led to an industrial boom that peaked in the early Thirties.

Huntsville

Many Southern cities aspire to blend the old with the new; few achieve it as dramatically as HUNTSVILLE, a hundred miles south of Nashville, just inside the Alabama border. Its sleepy center still recalls the days when it was dominated by cotton merchants and railroad owners, a history absorbingly recounted in the Huntsville Depot Museum, 310 Church St N (June–Aug Tues–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm; March–May & Sept–Dec Wed–Sat 10am–4pm; closed Jan & Feb; $7; www.earlyworks.com). Nearby, Alabama Constitution Village, 109 Gates Ave (same hours as Depot Museum; $7, or $12 combined ticket), evokes earlier history, with actors dressed in period clothing going about their olde-worlde business in eight reconstructed Federal-style buildings.

Time was when Huntsville was content to be the “Watercress Capital of the World”; the great leap forward came after World War II, when the army consolidated its rocket and missile research efforts in the city. Spearheading the project were Dr Wernher von Braun and 118 other German scientists, who came to Huntsville after a token period of rehabilitation. Von Braun's contribution of the V-2 ballistic missile to the Nazi war effort is ignored by the city, which prefers to laud his later Space Age achievements, such as Explorer I, the nation's first satellite, and the mighty Saturn V rocket.

The giant US Space and Rocket Center, five miles west of downtown on Hwy-20, off I-65 (daily 9am–5pm; $16, $21 with IMAX; www.spacecamp.com/museum), contains a mind-boggling array of technological exhibits, hands-on displays, and weightlessness simulators, as well as an IMAX cinema. Outdoors, in the surreal Rocket and Space Shuttle parks, rockets protrude skywards in the blazing Alabama sunshine; the four-story Saturn V is laid on its side to emphasize its immensity.

Practicalities

Huntsville's visitor center is at 500 Church St, at the northern edge of downtown, reached by exit 19 off I-565 (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; ☎256/533-5723, www.huntsville.org). Chain motels on the outskirts include a Best Value Inn, near the Space Center at 2201 N Memorial Parkway (☎256/536-7441 or 1-888/315-2378; 📍). As for restaurants, Ol' Heidelberg, 6125 University Drive NW (☎256/922-0556), offers German specialties including sauerkraut and Wiener schnitzel, while Little Paul's Barbecue, 815 Madison St (☎256/536-7227; closed Sun), serves good, cheap barbecue downtown.

Birmingham

The rapid transformation of farmland into the city of BIRMINGHAM began in 1870, when two railroad routes met in the Jones Valley, a hundred miles south of Huntsville. What attracted speculators was not the scenery, but what lay under it – a mixture of iron ore, limestone, and coal, perfect for the manufacture of iron and steel. The expansion of heavy industry came to an abrupt halt with the Civil rights in Birmingham

Early in 1963, civil rights leaders chose Birmingham as the target of “Project C” (for confrontation), aiming to force businesses to integrate lunch counters and employ more blacks. Despite threats from Police Chief “Bull” Connor that there would be “blood running down the streets of Birmingham,” the pickets, sit-ins, and marches went forward, resulting in mass arrests. Over two thousand protesters flooded the jails; one, Dr Martin Luther King Jr, wrote his Letter from a Birmingham Jail after being branded an extremist by local white clergymen. Connor’s use of high-pressure hoses, cattleprods, and dogs against demonstrators catalyzed support. Pictures of snarling German shepherds sinking their teeth into schoolkids were transmitted around the world, and led to a settlement that June. Success in Birmingham sparked demonstrations in 186 other cities, which culminated in the 1964 Civil Rights Act prohibiting racial segregation.

The headquarters for the campaign, the 16th Street Baptist Church, on the corner of Sixth Avenue, was the site of a sickening Klan bombing on September 15, 1963, which killed four young black girls attending a Bible class. Two of the three murderers were finally jailed in 2000. The church’s basement contains a small shrine dedicated to the murdered girls.

Nearby, the admirable Civil Rights Institute, 520 16th St (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $9; @www.bcri.org), is an affecting attempt to interpret the factors that led to such violence and racial hatred. Exhibits recreate life in a segregated city, complete with a burned-out bus and heart-rending videos of bus boycotts and the March on Washington.

Depression; iron and steel now account for only a few thousand jobs, and new service and medical industries have helped transform what was once a smog-filled metropolis.

Arrival and information

Birmingham Airport is just four miles from downtown; call Yellow Cabs ($12) on ☎205/252-1131. The Greyhound station is at 19th Street N, between Sixth and Seventh avenues – a rough area – while Amtrak pulls in downtown at 1819 Morris Ave. Public transportation, however, is poor. The main visitor center can be found just off I-20/59 at 2200 Ninth Ave N (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎205/458-8000 or 1-800/458-8085, @www.sweetbirmingham.com). Birmingham has two free listings magazines: The Birmingham Weekly (@birminghamweekly.com) and the Black and White (@www.bwcitypaper.com).

Accommodation

Although the downtown hotels are pricier than the chain motels near the highway, many of them offer advantageous weekend rates.

Pickwick Hotel 1023 S 20th St ☎205/933-9555 or 1-800/255-7304, @www.pickwickhotel.com.

Charming hotel within walking distance of Five Points South, with all the amenities. Complimentary continental breakfast and free airport shuttle. Ⓢ

The Redmont Hotel 2101 5th Ave N ☎205/324-2101 or 1-877/536-2085, @www.theredmont.com.

Modernized, handsome historic hotel, a few blocks northeast of Amtrak. Ⓐ

Tutwiler Hotel 2021 Park Place N ☎205/322-2100, @www.wyndham.com/hotels/BHMTW/main.wnt. Luxurious restored 1920s hotel near the Civil Rights Institute. Ⓢ

The City

Downtown Birmingham extends north from the railroad tracks at Morris Avenue to Tenth Avenue N, between 15th and 25th streets. The landscaped greenery and early skyscrapers of 20th Street are not enough to save these one-hundred-plus blocks from anonymity, with shopping now firmly anchored in the malls and suburbs. The main interest is the powerful Civil Rights Institute and the 16th St Baptist Church (see box, p.581). Call in too at the lovely old Carver Theatre for the Performing Arts, 1631 Fourth Ave N, where the Alabama Jazz Hall of Fame (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm; $2; 📞 www.jazzhall.com) is a fond memorial to great jazz artists with Alabama links, from boogie-woogie maestro Clarence “Pinetop” Smith, via Erskine Hawkins (he of “Tuxedo Junction”), to jazzy space cadet Sun Ra.

Much livelier than downtown is the Five Points South district, a mile or so south of the tracks, on 20th St and 11th St S; thanks to the proximity of the university, the narrow streets and alleys are packed with bars and restaurants, and busy with revelers – mostly students – every weekend.

Northwest of downtown, the concrete colossus of the Birmingham-Jefferson Civic Center, 22nd St and Tenth Ave N, contains the Alabama Sports Hall of Fame (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $5; 📞 www.ashof.org), a tribute to sporting greats such as 1936 Olympic hero Jesse Owens, Le Roy “Satchel” Paige – legendary Negro League pitcher – and boxer Joe Louis. There’s even a space for George Wallace, on the pretext that he was state amateur boxing champion. Weave your way past the monotonous white-walled legal buildings to the nearby Museum of Art, 2000 Eighth Ave N (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free), which is strong on Oriental pieces, American landscapes, and, oddly enough, Wedgwood pottery.

East of downtown, at First Ave N and 32nd St, stand the massive sheds and tall chimney stacks of Sloss Furnaces (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun noon–4pm; free; 📞 www.slossfurnaces.com), which produced pig iron to feed the city’s mills and foundries from 1882 until 1971. Self-guided tours through the boilers, stoves, and casting areas vividly portray the harsh working conditions endured by the ex-slaves, prisoners, and unskilled immigrants who labored here. Imagining the searing heat and cramped space, the heavy loads and putrid gaseous emissions, it’s easy to appreciate why one former Sloss worker claimed “if mules had to do this work they would have banned it.”

Eating and drinking

Birmingham has some fantastic barbecue joints; for something a little more upmarket, the best bet is to ignore downtown in favor of Five Points South.

Bottega 2240 Highland Ave S 📞 205/939-1000. Elegant 1920s clothing store that now houses one of Five Points South’s classiest restaurants, serving luscious, garlic-rich Mediterranean cuisine with entrees at $25 and up; prices are slightly lower in the adjoining café.

Dreamland Barbecue 1427 14th Ave S
📞 205/933-2133. Superlative barbecue in a huge, cheery space. Enjoy a big plate of ribs with sliced white bread and sauce, cooked up right before your eyes.

Fifth Avenue Coffee House 1909 Fifth Ave North
📞 205/324-5597. Coffees, sandwiches, and salads are served in this downtown spot. Breakfast and lunch, Mon–Fri only.

West of Birmingham

Just west of Birmingham’s city limits, I-20/59 passes Bessemer, a likeable small town named in 1887 after Sir Henry Bessemer, the English engineer who perfected the steel-making process. The Hall of History Museum here, in the 1916 Southern Railroad depot at 1905 Alabama Ave (Tues–Sat 9am–4pm; free), displays Native American artifacts alongside exhibits from the industrial pioneer years. Bob Sykes, in town at 1724 Ninth Ave (📞 205/426-1400), is a mouthwatering barbecue joint.

Tuscaloosa, home of the lively main campus of the University of Alabama, but with little else of interest, lies 32 miles southwest of Bessemer. If you're hungry, combine eating with a view of the Black Warrior River at Cypress Inn, 501 Rice Mine Rd N (☎205/345-6963), which specializes in reasonably priced seafood and catfish. If you're not in the mood for fancy, Dreamland Barbecue, 5535 15th Ave E (☎205/758-8135), dishes up luscious, sweet pork ribs with wonderful BBQ sauce.

South central Alabama

Southern Alabama – memorably depicted in Harper Lee's child's-eye view of racial conflict, To Kill a Mockingbird – still consists mostly of small, sleepy, God-fearing rural communities. Only state capital Montgomery, with a population of just over 200,000, achieves metropolitan status. It lies in the heart of the Black Belt, originally named for the rich loamy soil, but these days more usually taken to refer to the region's ethnic make-up. Cotton was the major earner here until the boll weevil infestation of 1915. Now it has been supplanted (officially) by soybeans, corn, and peanuts – though surveys suggest that the leading cash crop is, in fact, marijuana.

Montgomery

MONTGOMERY's Black Belt location, ninety miles south of Birmingham and 160 west of Atlanta, made it a natural political center for the plantation elite, and led to its adoption as state capital in 1846 and temporary capital of the Confederacy fifteen years later. Despite its administrative importance, and its monumental downtown buildings, Montgomery is strangely quiet. Most neighborhoods are either exclusively white or totally black; integration sadly does not appear to be on the social agenda in the city that saw the first successful mass civil rights activity in 1955–56.

△ Civil Rights Memorial, Montgomery, AL

Arrival, information, and accommodation

Dannelly Field Airport is fifteen miles from downtown on US-80; the Greyhound station is much more conveniently located at 210 S Court St. The visitor center, in the old train station at 300 Water St (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm, Sun noon–4pm; ☎ 334/262-0013, 🌐 www.visitingmontgomery.com), suggests lots of tours and itineraries. As for accommodation, there are a couple of homey B&Bs in town, plus the usual motels alongside the highways.

Capitol Inn 205 N Goldthwaite St ☎ 334/265-3844 or 1-866/471-9028, 🌐 www.capitolinnhotel.com. Old-fashioned motel perched on a small hill fifteen minutes' walk from downtown; its location is somewhat bleak at night. ②

Lattice Inn 1414 S Hull St ☎ 334/832-9931 or 1-800/525-0652. Lovingly restored 1906 house offering four B&B rooms and a pool, a mile or so southeast of downtown in the Cloverdale neighborhood. ④

Red Bluff Cottage 551 Clay St ☎ 334/264-0056 or 1-888/551-2529, 🌐 www.redbluffcottage.com. Friendly B&B near the capitol, with comfortable rooms, a big porch, and good food. ④

The City

Although 1993 saw Alabama's state flag finally replace the Confederate flag over the white-domed Greek Revival State Capitol at the top of Dexter Avenue, downtown Montgomery still bears reminders of its white-supremacist past. You can tour the capitol itself (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–4pm; free), where a bronze star marks the spot where Jefferson Davis was sworn in as president of the Confederacy on February 18, 1861 (see p.488) – a hundred years later Governor George Wallace stood on these steps and proclaimed “Segregation forever!”

On a different note, Montgomery was jammed with mourners in 1954 for the funeral of 29-year-old country star Hank Williams, who died of a heart attack on his way to a concert on New Year's Eve 1953. An Alabama native from Butler County, Williams was as famous for his drink- and drug-sustained lifestyle as he was for writing honky-tonk classics like “Your Cheating Heart” and “I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry.” The Hank Williams Memorial, a large white-marble headstone complete with song lyrics and an image of the singer, dominates the Oakwood Cemetery Annex, 1304 Upper Wetumpka Rd, near downtown; Hank's statue stands at Lister Hill Plaza on N Perry Street. There's also the Hank Williams Museum, at 118 Commerce St (Mon–Sat 9am–4.30pm, Sun 1–4pm; $8; 🌐 www.thehankwilliamsmuseum.com), complete with the 1952 Cadillac in which he made his final journey.

Situated off Woodmere Boulevard, ten miles southeast of the city, the stunningly landscaped Blount Cultural Park gives credence to Montgomery's claim to be a regional center for the arts. It's home to the Alabama Shakespeare Festival (Nov–June; ☎ 1-800/841-4273, 🌐 www.asf.net) and the slick Montgomery Museum of Fine Arts (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm; free), which spans more than two hundred years of American art and has an impressive selection of masters including Dürer, Rembrandt, and Picasso. There's a nice café, too, overlooking the lake.

Eating and drinking

Downtown Montgomery isn't bad when it comes to eating, with some especially good soul food. A few minutes' drive southeast, suburban Cloverdale offers a selection of fancier restaurants. With its bars and jazz clubs, Cloverdale is also the place to head for nightlife; downtown, things get quiet at night.

Farmers' Market Café 315 N McDonough St ☎ 334/262-1970. Montgomery's best spot for Southern-style breakfasts, just off downtown, next to the busy marketplace. Mon–Fri 5.30am–2pm.

Lek's Railroad Thai 300b Water St ☎ 334/269-0708. Next to the visitor center, this elegant downtown oddity serves tasty pad Thai, sushi, noodles, and soups, along with lots of good

Civil rights in Montgomery

During the Fifties, Montgomery's bus system was a miniature model of segregated society. The regulation ordering blacks to give up seats to whites came under repeated attack from black organizations, culminating in the call by the Women's Political Council for a mass boycott after seamstress Rosa Parks was arrested on December 1, 1955, for refusing to give up her seat, stating wearily that she was simply too tired. Black workers were asked to walk to work, while black-owned taxis carried those who lived further away for the same 10¢ fare as buses. The protest attracted over ninety-percent support, and the Montgomery Improvement Association (MIA), set up to coordinate activities, elected the 26-year-old pastor Dr Martin Luther King Jr as its chief spokesperson. Meanwhile, the laid-off white bus drivers were employed as temporary police officials. Despite personal hardships, bombings, and jailings, the boycott continued for eleven months, until in November 1956 the US Supreme Court declared segregation on public transportation to be illegal.

King remained pastor at the small brick Dexter Avenue King Memorial Baptist Church, in the shadow of the capitol at 454 Dexter Ave (email to request tours a week in advance; $2; @www.dexterkingmemorial.org), until his move back to his hometown of Atlanta in 1960. A mural along a basement wall chronicles his life, while the upstairs sanctuary, left much as it was during his ministry, contains his former pulpit.

One block away at the corner of Washington Avenue and Hull Street, in front of the Southern Poverty Law Center (which specializes in helping victims of racial attacks), the deeply moving Civil Rights Memorial, designed by Maya Lin, consists of a cone-shaped black granite table. It's inscribed with a circular timeline of events structured around the deaths of forty martyrs murdered by white supremacists and police; the circle ends with the assassination of Dr King. You can run your hands through the cool water that pumps slowly and evenly across it, softly touching the names while being confronted with your reflection. The wall behind, also running with water, is engraved with the quotation employed so often by Dr King: "(We will not be satisfied) until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream." Displays in the Civil Rights Memorial Center alongside (Mon–Fri 9am–4.30pm, Sat 10am–4pm; $2; @www.splcenter.org) tell the story of the campaigns.

A few blocks west of the memorial, the Rosa Parks Museum, 252 Montgomery St (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–3pm; $5.50), commemorates "the mother of the civil rights movement." Exhibits cover her life, the bus boycott, and other major civil rights figures.

veggie options. Closed Sun.

Martha's Place 458 Sayre St ☎ 334/263-9135. Superb downtown Southern food, from collard greens to fried chicken. Lunch only; closed Sat.

Vintage Year 405 Cloverdale Rd, Cloverdale ☎ 334/264-8463. One of Alabama's best restaurants, with haute nouvelle Southern cuisine in a bistro setting. Dinner only, reservations recommended; closed Sun & Mon.

Selma

The tidy market town of SELMA, fifty miles west of Montgomery, became in the early Sixties the focal point of the national civil rights campaign. Black demonstrations, meetings, and attempts to register to vote were repeatedly met by police violence, before the murder of a black protester by a state trooper prompted the decision to organize the historic march from Selma to Montgomery. On "Bloody Sunday," March 7, 1965, six hundred unarmed marchers set off across the steep incline of the imposing, narrow Edmund Pettus Bridge. As they went over the apex of the bridge, a line of state troopers fired tear gas without warning, lashing out at the panic-stricken demonstrators with nightsticks and cattleprods. This violent confrontation, broadcast all over the world, is credited with having directly influenced the passage of the Voting Rights Act the following year. The full, devastating story is told in the National Voting Rights Museum, beside the bridge at 1012 Water Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–3pm; $5; @ www.nvrmi.org), which is packed with personal testimony.

Lined with independently owned stores and cafés, Broad Street is the town's busy main thoroughfare, running into the wide riverfront Water Avenue, with its frontier-style storefronts, seed warehouses, and garages. Just a few blocks away stand the beautiful homes of Selma's historic district.

Practicalities

Selma's visitor welcome center is at 2207 Broad St, north of town at the junction with Hwy-22 (daily 8am–8pm; ☎ 334/875-7485, @ www.selmaalabama.com). Downtown is very short of inexpensive places to stay; if the historic St James Hotel, close to the Pettus Bridge at 1200 Water Ave (☎ 334/872-3234 or 1-866/965-2637, @ www.stjameshotelselma.com; Ⓟ), is beyond your budget, head for the Ramada Inn, three miles west on US-80 at 1806 W Highland Ave (☎ 334/872-0461; Ⓟ). Among several soul-food restaurants is the Downtowner, 1114 Selma Ave (☎ 334/872-5933) – service can be surly, but the food is great. Major Grumbles, near the St James at 1 Grumbles Alley (☎ 334/872-2006), is an upmarket riverside pub serving burgers, salads, and hot sandwiches; you may, however, be put off by the disturbing “Indian giant” skeleton, draped in a Confederate flag.

Alabama's Gulf Coast

Alabama's narrow share of the Gulf coastline received less of a hammering than neighboring Mississippi from Hurricane Katrina in 2005, and remains blessed with fine white sand beaches, lapped by clear blue waters. The coast veers sharply inward to the port city of Mobile, featuring hundreds of antebellum buildings in a tree-shaded center. Away from the water's edge, agriculture, dominated by pecans, peaches, and watermelons, flourishes on the gently sloping coastal plain.

Mobile

The busy port and paper-manufacturing city of MOBILE (pronounced “Mo-beel”) traces its origins back to a French community founded in 1702 by Jean-Baptiste Le Moyne, Sieur de Bienville, who went on to establish the cities of Biloxi and New Orleans. These early white settlers brought with them Mardi Gras, which has been celebrated in Mobile continuously since 1704, several years before New Orleans was even dreamed of. With its early eighteenth-century Spanish and Colonial-style buildings, parallels with New Orleans are everywhere you look, from the wrought-iron balconies to street names like Conti and Bienville and gumbo specials in the restaurants, but there the comparisons end. It's a pretty place – especially in spring, when virtually every street is transformed by the delicate colors of azaleas, camellias, and dogwoods – but there's little actually to do, and though they generally liven up on weekends, Mobile's downtown bars and restaurants can be decidedly sleepy during the week.

Mobile sustained relatively little lasting damage from its flooding by Hurricane Katrina in 2005, and having also survived the torches of the Union army during the Civil War, it possesses enough antebellum buildings to designate four sizeable areas as historic districts. The obvious place to start exploring is Fort Conde, 150 S Royal St (daily 8am–5pm; free), a reconstruction of the city’s 1724 French fort, built to mark the nation’s bicentennial in 1976. Dioramas in the low-ceilinged rooms cover local history; don’t miss the atmospheric old photos of carnival, the old city, and local African-American figures. Nearby, you can tour the World War II battleship USS Alabama (daily: April–Sept 8am–6pm; Oct–March 8am–4pm; $12, parking $2). Fanning out north of the fort, the Church Street Historic District holds fifty-nine, mostly pre-Civil War buildings. Don’t miss the terrific Museum of Mobile, in the airy old City Hall at 111 S Royal St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $5; 📞 www.museumofmobile.com), which tells the story of the town from its earliest days.

Twenty miles south of Mobile, off I-10, the 65 acres of landscaped color that make up Bellingrath Gardens (daily 8am–5pm; $10, $18 with house tour; 📞 www.bellingrath.org) – once the home of a Coca-Cola magnate – include a quarter of a million azaleas.

Practicalities

Downtown Mobile is somewhat under the shadow of I-10 as it sweeps to meet I-65 a few miles west. The Amtrak and Greyhound stations are centrally located, at nos. 11 and 2545 Government St, respectively. Mobile’s resourceful visitor center, in Fort Conde (see above), can help with accommodation (daily 8am–5pm; 📞 251/434-7304, 📧 www.mobile.org). Cheap motels cluster around exit 3 of I-65; it’s nicer, however, to stay downtown. Set in an 1862 twin townhouse, the atmospheric 🏠 Malaga Inn, 359 Church St (📞 251/438-4701, 📧 www.malagainn.com; 📍), has huge rooms, a pretty courtyard, and free continental breakfast. Another historic hotel, the Admiral Semmes, 251 Government St (📞 251/432-8000, 📧 www.rash.com; 📍), is a Radisson-owned property with all the usual amenities.

Unsurprisingly, Mobile abounds in places to eat fish: the 1938 🏠 Wintzels’ Oyster House, 605 Dauphin St (📞 251/432-4605), serves good-value seafood platters and fresh oysters in a diner-style atmosphere. If you want views of the water, take Hwy-98 across the bridge and beyond the USS Alabama; the Original Oyster House, on the bay (📞 251/626-2188), is a lively family restaurant dishing up fresh seafood – try the fried blue-crab claws.

Nightlife in downtown Mobile is concentrated along a few lively blocks of Dauphin Street. The Bicycle Shop, at no. 661, is a popular, laid-back pub with an extensive drink selection; at Grand Central, no. 256, an array of eclectic bands play for no cover; while Soul Kitchen, no. 455, hosts good jazz, blues, and reggae on the weekends. Lagniappe is the free weekly listings paper (📧 www.lagniappemobile.com).

Mississippi

Before the Civil War, when cotton was king and slavery remained unchallenged, MISSISSIPPI was the fifth wealthiest state in the nation. Since the war, however, it has consistently been the poorest, its dependence on cotton a handicap that leaves it victim to the vagaries of the commodities market.

From Reconstruction onwards, Mississippi was also infamous for being the strongest bastion of segregation in the South. It witnessed some of the most notorious incidents of the civil rights era, from the lynching of Chicago teenager Emmett Till in 1955 to the murder of three activists during the “Freedom Summer” of 1964. Not until the early Seventies did the church bombings and murders come to an end. Even today, no one could claim that racial tension has ceased to exist, and many visitors are shocked to encounter the truly scandalous poverty that still lurks down many a rural backroad.

The legalization of gambling during the early 1990s stimulated the economy to a certain extent, with the giant casinos of Biloxi in particular drawing visitors to the Gulf Coast. However, the shoreline suffered such appalling devastation from Hurricane Katrina in 2005 that it currently cannot be considered as a potential tourist destination.

Mississippi’s major city is its capital, Jackson, while historic river towns like Vicksburg and Natchez provide good reasons to stray off the interstates. Literary Oxford has an appealing ambiance, while blues fans will need no encouragement to go exploring sleepy Delta settlements such as Alligator or Yazoo City.

Getting around Mississippi

Although Greyhound serves most of Mississippi, including the Delta, only along the coastal stretch are services at all frequent. Jackson has the only airport of any size, while Amtrak trains from New Orleans head north to Memphis by way of Jackson and Greenwood; northeast to Atlanta, passing through a succession of unexciting small towns; and along the coast to Florida, stopping at Biloxi. Trips on the Mississippi itself are run on expensive luxury cruisers (see p.555).

The Delta

That Delta. Five thousand square miles, without any hill save the bumps of dirt the Indians made to stand on when the River overflowed.

William Faulkner, Sanctuary

“That Delta” is not in fact a delta at all; technically it’s an alluvial flood plain, a couple of hundred miles short of the mouth of the Mississippi. The name stems from its resemblance to the fertile delta of the Nile (which also began at a city named Memphis); the extravagant meanderings of the river on its way down to Vicksburg deposit enough rich topsoil to make this one of the world’s finest cotton-producing regions.

The Delta is a land of scorching sun, parched earth, flooding creeks, and thickets of bone-dry evergreens, best seen at dawn or dusk, when the glassy-smooth waters of the Mississippi reflect the sun and the foliage along the banks. Just containing the sheer volume of water is a never-ending battle, with giant levees in place to protect the farmland. Though the main thoroughfare south is the legendary Hwy-61, exploring is best done on the back roads, which are characterized by huge, empty views, interrupted only by roadside shacks, tiny churches, and the sound of the blues.

Clarksdale

CLARKSDALE, the first significant town south of Memphis, has an unquestionable right to consider itself the home of the blues. Its quite phenomenal roll call of former residents – stretching from Muddy Waters, John Lee Hooker, Howlin’ Wolf, and Robert Johnson up to Ike Turner and Sam Cooke – is celebrated in the Delta Blues Museum, housed at 1 Blues Alley (March–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Nov–Feb Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; $6; ☎ 662/627-6820, 🌐 www.deltabluesmuseum.org). The centerpiece among the photos, instruments, personal possessions, videos, and recordings is the “Muddywood” guitar, created by ZZ Top using wood from Waters’ old cabin; the cabin itself has been reassembled nearby.

Long a rundown rural community, Clarksdale has been boosted by an influx of money and visitors triggered by the large complex of casinos a dozen miles north at Tunica. Attempts to revitalize, and build on the town’s blues heritage, currently focus on the Blues Alley district, a general name for the area around the restored passenger depot of the Illinois Central Railroad, through which many black Mississippians, including Muddy, started their migration to the cities of the north. Each year, around the second weekend in August, the town holds the Sunflower River Blues and Gospel Festival (free; ☎ 1-800/626-3764, 🌐 www.sunflowerfest.org).

Practicalities

The most unusual and characterful accommodation near Clarksdale is at Hopson Plantation, two miles south of town on US-49. The old sharecroppers’ cabins still look much as they did when this was a working cotton plantation, though several have been converted, with the addition of air-conditioning and kitchen facilities, to serve as the 🐘 Shack Up Inn (☎ 662/624-8329, 🌐 www.shackupinn.com; 🍷), where B&B stands for “bed and beer.” Another option is the very basic Riverside Hotel, 615 Sunflower Ave (☎ 662/624-9163, 🌐 www.cathead.biz/riverside.html; 🍷), which used to be a hospital, famous as the site of Bessie Smith’s death in 1937 after a car crash. If you do spend the night, be sure to talk to “Rat,” the son of the original owner, and learn the “true history of the blues.”

As for eating, Abe’s, 616 S State St (☎ 662/624-9947), is a good central bar-becue joint. The more upscale 🐘 Madidi, 164 Delta Ave (☎ 662/627-7770; closed Sun & Mon), which offers a classy French take on Southern cuisine, is owned by a consortium that includes Morgan Freeman; the group also operates the Ground Zero Blues Club, nearby at no. 387 (☎ 662/621-9009, 🌐 www.groundzerobluesclub.com), which books top local musicians on weekends. Otherwise, catching a live blues show takes a bit of luck, as long-standing juke joints find it impossible to compete with the Tunica casinos. Ask at the Delta Blues Museum about upcoming events at more authentic venues like the Red Top Lounge (aka Smitty’s), 377 Yazoo Ave (☎ 662/627-1525), or Red’s, 395 Sunflower Ave (☎ 662/627-3166).

Delta towns

Seventy miles south of Clarksdale, GREENVILLE is the largest town on the Delta. Still an important riverport, it hosts the Mississippi Delta Blues Festival (☎ 1-888/812-5837, 🌐 www.deltablues.org) every year on the third weekend of September. Tree-lined avenues lead from the characterless outskirts of town into the business district, beyond which pallid warehouses stand in the shadow of a huge levee. One good, safe accommodation option near the river is the Greenville Inn, 211 Walnut St (☎ 662/332-6900; 🍷). For a meal, stop by Doe’s Eat Place, 502 Nelson St (☎ 662/334-3315), which serves arguably the best down-home cooking in the entire Delta.

INDIANOLA, 23 miles east of Greenville on US-82, is the home of the largest catfish-processing company in the world (they’re called Delta). Each year in June, there’s a “Home-Coming” celebration for B.B. King, who was born here, though of late he hasn’t always returned for the open-air concert that’s organized by Club Ebony, 404 Hannah Ave (☎ 662/887-9915, 🌐 www.clubebony.biz).

As recently as 1900, much of the Mississippi Delta remained an impenetrable wilderness of cypress and gum trees, roamed by panthers and bears and plagued with mosquitoes. Bit by bit, land was cleared for cotton plantations – but, though the soil was fertile, white laborers could not be enticed to work in this godforsaken backcountry. After emancipation, the economy came to depend on black sharecroppers, who would work a portion of the land on a white-owned plantation in return for a share (often pitifully small) of the eventual crop. As a rule, this lifestyle entailed long periods of poverty and debt interspersed with occasional windfalls. In the Delta, however, the returns tended to be greater than elsewhere, and blacks moved here from all over Mississippi.

In 1903, W.C. Handy, often credited as “the Father of the Blues,” but at that time the leader of a vaudeville orchestra, found himself waiting for a train in Tutwiler, fifteen miles southeast of Clarksdale. At some point in the night, a ragged black man carrying a guitar sat down next to him and began to play what Handy called “the weirdest music I had ever heard.” Using a pocketknife pressed against the guitar strings to accentuate his mournful vocal style, the man sang that he was “Goin’ where the Southern cross the Dog.”

This was the Delta blues, characterized by the interplay between words and music, with the guitar aiming to parallel and complement the singing rather than simply provide a backing. Though a local, place-specific music – the “Southern” and the “Dog” were railroads that crossed a short way south at Moorhead – it did not simply spring up from the ground, but combined traditional African instrumental and vocal techniques with slave “field hollers,” as well as the reels and jigs then at the basis of popular entertainment.

The blues started out as young people’s music; the old folks liked the banjo, fife, and drum, but the younger generation were crazy for the wild showmanship of bluesmen such as Charley Patton. Born in April 1891, Patton was the classic itinerant bluesman, moving from plantation to plantation and wife to wife, and playing Saturday-night dances with a repertoire that extended from rollicking dance pieces to documentary songs such as “High Water Everywhere,” about the bursting of the Mississippi levees in April 1927. Another seminal artist, the enigmatic Robert Johnson, was rumored to have sold his soul to the Devil in return for a few brief years of writing songs such as “Love in Vain” and “Stop Breakin’ Down.” His “Crossroads Blues” spoke of being stranded at night in the chilling emptiness of the Delta; themes carried to metaphysical extremes in “Hellhound on My Trail” and “Me and the Devil Blues” – “you may bury my body down by the highwyside / So my old evil spirit can catch a Greyhound bus and ride.”

Both Patton and Johnson died in the 1930s. However, within a few years the Delta blues had been carried north to Chicago by men such as Muddy Waters and Howlin’ Wolf. Their electrified urban blues was the most immediate ancestor of rock ‘n’ roll.

In addition to towns such as Clarksdale (see p.588) and Helena, Arkansas (p.597), blues enthusiasts may want to search out the following rural sites:

Stovall Plantation Stovall Road, 7 miles northwest of Clarksdale. Where tractor-driver Muddy Waters was first recorded; a few cabins remain standing, though Muddy’s own is now in the museum at Clarksdale.

Sonny Boy Williamson II’s Grave Outside Tutwiler, 13 miles southeast of Clarksdale.

Parchman Farm Junction US-49 W and Hwy-32. Mississippi State Penitentiary, immortalized by former prisoner Bukka White.

Dockery Plantation On Hwy-8, between Cleveland and Ruleville. One of Patton’s few long-term bases, also home to Howlin’ Wolf and Roebuck “Pops” Staples.

Charley Patton’s Grave New Jerusalem Church, Holly Ridge, off US-82, 6 miles west of Indianola.

Robert Johnson’s Grave Payne Chapel in Quito, off Hwy-7, roughly 6 miles southwest of Greenwood, where he was poisoned.

Forty miles east of Indianola on US-82, GREENWOOD, a sleepy town of twenty thousand people, is the country's second largest cotton exchange after Memphis. The nineteenth-century offices of downtown's Cotton Row overlook the shady Yazoo River, and graceful mansions line pretty Grand Boulevard. The Cottonlandia Museum (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat & Sun 2–5pm; $5; @ www.cottonlandia.org), about two miles west of the town center on the US-82 W bypass, is a rag-tag collection of old hardware, Native American beads, stuffed birds, intriguing artwork, and oddly long wooden benches polished by the tongues of mules. Greenwood has recently begun to play up its connection to Robert Johnson (he died here), though the Cotton Capital Blues Festival in October remains the city's current contribution to the Delta Blues music legacy.

Of the many motels along US-49 and US-82, the Travel Inn at 623 US-82 W (☎ 662/453-8810; 🍷) is basic, clean, and good value, with an outdoor pool. By far the best food in Greenwood is the Italian/Cajun cuisine at Lusco's, on the wrong side of the railway tracks at 722 Carrollton Ave (☎ 662/453-5365). Each table in this eccentric old place is hidden away in a small booth, veiled by chintz curtains – an arrangement dating from the days of Prohibition, when Lusco's was the haunt of cotton barons who came here to drink moonshine.

Northeastern Mississippi

Cutting its way south through Mississippi, I-55 acts as an approximate boundary between the Delta and the luscious green forests of the northeast. Of the area's small market towns, the most appealing are the old-style shopping center of Columbus, and Holly Springs, whose oak-lined streets hide one of the most extraordinary attractions in the state. The only other places of major interest in the region are genteel Oxford and tidy blue-collar Tupelo, birthplace of Elvis Presley and John Lee Hooker.

Holly Springs

Centered on a neat courthouse square, HOLLY SPRINGS is a time-warped little town that's said to have changed hands 62 times during the Civil War; the minutiae of its otherwise uneventful history fill three splendidly eclectic floors in the local museum, at 220 E College Ave (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat 10am–2pm; $3). However, were it not for Graceland Too, 200 E Gholson Ave (open 24hr year-round; $5), Holly Springs would today be of little note. The home of Paul McLeod and, at times, his son Elvis Aaron Presley McLeod, this shrine to the King is a quite remarkable labor of love. Walls, ceiling, and stairwells are crammed with memorabilia from the kitsch to the priceless, and, just as in Graceland, the upper floor is blocked off – the stairs lined with glassy-eyed mannequins kitted out in Elvis and Priscilla outfits. Mr McLeod insists that this is above all an archive and research center; as well as collecting records, cuttings, and books, he works around the clock to monitor and log every reference to Elvis transmitted on TV and radio. Tours last up to three hours, depending on the mood of your host and how busy he is compiling Elvis info, but are sure to include the chance to buy an infinitesimal snip of rug from Graceland's Jungle Room.

There's no reason to spend a night in Holly Springs, but it's well worth pausing for a meal here. Housed in a former "blind tiger" (brothel) beside the railroad tracks east of town, Phillips Grocery, 541 E Van Dorn Ave (☎ 662/252-4671), is a ramshackle old grocery store that serves sublime fresh-ground hamburgers and Southern vegetables.

Oxford

Twelve thousand residents and eleven thousand students enable OXFORD, an enclave of wealth in a predominantly poor region, to blend rural charm with a busy nightlife. Its central square is archetypal smalltown America, but the leafy streets have a vaguely European air – the town named itself after the English city as part of its campaign to persuade the University of Mississippi, known as Ole Miss, to locate its main campus here.

It's an undeniably pretty, appealing place today, but in September 1962, this was the site of one of the bitterest displays of racial hatred seen in Mississippi. After eighteen months of legal and political wrangling, federal authorities ruled that James Meredith should be allowed to enroll as the first black student at Ole Miss. The news that Meredith had been sneaked into college by federal troops sparked a riot that left three dead and 160 injured. Despite constant threats, Meredith graduated the following year, wearing a "NEVER" badge (the segregationist slogan of Governor Ross Barnett) upside down. A memorial commemorating his achievement was finally unveiled in September 2002, on the fortieth anniversary of his admission. Also on campus, the Blues Archive (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; free; ☎ 662/915-7753) holds thousands of recordings and B.B. King's personal memorabilia, while the Center for the Study of Southern Culture looks at Southern folkways (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; free; ☎ 662/915-5993).

From Ole Miss, a ten-minute walk through lush Bailey Woods leads to secluded Rowan Oak, the former home of novelist William Faulkner, preserved as it was on the day he died in July 1962 (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; $5). The fictional Deep South town of Jefferson in Yoknapatawpha County, where the Nobel Prize–winner set his major works, was based heavily on Oxford and its environs. Each year, during the last week in July, the University holds a Faulkner and Yoknapatawpha Conference.

In town, a walk around the square brings you to Neilson's, a delightfully old-fashioned department store (the oldest in the South, in fact), little changed since 1897. You can pick up a piece of quirky Mississippi folk art at one of the offbeat gift shops here, or join the students sipping lattes and reading on the balcony of the exemplary Square Books, at Van Buren and Lamar streets.

Practicalities

Oxford's visitor center (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; ☎ 662/232-2367 or 1-800/758-9177, 🌐 www.touroxfordms.com), next to Neilson's in the town square, hands out good walking-tour leaflets. Accommodation options include the Downtown Oxford Inn, 400 N Lamar Blvd (☎ 662/234-3031 or 1-800/606-1497; 4), and the comfortable B&B Oliver–Britt House, 512 Van Buren Ave (☎ 662/234-8043; 3). On the town square, you can eat homestyle meals at the Ajax Diner (☎ 662/232-8880; closed Sun), or more sophisticated Southern cuisine at City Grocery (☎ 662/232-8080; closed Sun). The Bottletree Bakery, 923 Van Buren Ave (☎ 662/236-5000; closed Mon), is a friendly café with soups and sandwiches.

Tupelo

On January 8, 1935, Elvis Presley and his twin brother Jesse were born in TUPELO, an industrial town in northeastern Mississippi. Jesse died at birth, while Elvis grew up to be a truck driver. Their parents, Gladys and Vernon Presley, who lived in poor, white East Tupelo, found it hard to make ends meet. Such was the financial strain of rearing the young Elvis that his sharecropper father was reduced to forgery in a desperate attempt to raise cash, and was jailed for three years. Their home was repossessed, and the family moved to Memphis in 1948.

The Tupelo CVB, 399 E Main St (Mon–Fri 8am–5pm; ☎662/841-6521 or 1-800/533-0611, 🌐www.tupelo.net), has details of a four-mile driving tour that takes in Elvis’s first school and the shop where he bought his first guitar. The town doesn’t go in for overkill, however; Main Street is a long, placid stretch of nondescript buildings, with nary a gift shop to be seen. The actual Elvis Presley Birthplace, 306 Elvis Presley Drive (May–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–5.30pm, Sun 1–5pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $2.50; 🌐www.elvispresleybirthplace.com), is tiny. A two-room shotgun house, built for $150 in 1934, it’s been furnished to look as it did when Elvis was born, with the judicious addition of a large can of lard in the kitchen and a love-seat swinging from the porch. The separate museum alongside (same hours; $6, or $7 combined admission) is filled with memorabilia collected by a family friend of the Presleys, Janelle McComb, and includes her photos of, poems about, and shrines to the King, as well as selling everything from matchbooks to Elvis pendulum clocks. Nearby, a modern meditation chapel was built with donations from fans (but, oddly, the pews and altar remain roped off to visitors).

Among local motels, there’s a central Comfort Inn, 1190 Gloster St (☎662/842-5100, 🌐www.comfortinn.com; Ⓜ), while the Wingate Inn, just off Hwy-78 at 186 Stone Creek Blvd (☎662/680-8887 or 1-800/228-1000, 🌐www.wingateinns.com; Ⓜ), is a more upscale, business-oriented option. Park Heights, 825 W Jefferson St (☎662/842-5665; closed Sun & Mon), serving seafood, salads, steak, and pasta, is the best restaurant in town.

South central Mississippi

South of the Delta, the rich woodlands and meadows of central Mississippi are heralded by steep loess bluffs, home to engaging historic towns such as Vicksburg and Natchez. Driving around the area is a real pleasure, especially along the unspoiled Natchez Trace Parkway – devoid of trucks, buildings, and neon signs – which runs through Jackson and on up to Tupelo.

Jackson

JACKSON, set two hundred miles from both Memphis and New Orleans, has been Mississippi’s state capital since 1821. Only in the twentieth century, however, did it become the largest conurbation in the state, flourishing as a center for health and technological industries.

Following extensive damage caused by Hurricane Katrina, the state’s official history museum, housed in the Old Capitol, is closed until further notice. A block west at 528 Bloom St, the Smith-Robertson Museum and Cultural Center (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–1pm, Sun 2–5pm; $1), housed in what was Jackson’s first public school for blacks (open from 1894–1971), tells the story of black Mississippians since the French first imported slaves in 1719.

Practicalities

Greyhound buses arrive at 201 S Jefferson St, and Amtrak trains at 300 W Capitol St. The main visitor center is at 921 N President St (Mon–Fri 8.30am–5pm; ☎601/960-1891 or 1-800/354-7695, 🌐www.visitjackson.com).

Central rooms can be had close to the State Capitol at the Edison Walthall Hotel, 225 E Capitol St (☎601/948-6161, 🌐www.edisonwalthallhotel.com; Ⓜ), or in the Old Capitol Inn, a tastefully converted former YMCA at 226 N State St (☎601/359-9000 or 1-888/359-2001, 🌐www.oldcapitolinn.com; Ⓜ). Downtown Jackson more or less closes down at 6pm, with the exception of Hal & Mal's Restaurant & Brewery, 200 S Commerce St (☎601/948-0888; closed Sun), which specializes in New Orleans cuisine and puts on live bands throughout the week.

Vicksburg

Forty-four miles west of Jackson, the historic port of VICKSBURG straddles a high bluff on a bend in the Mississippi. During the Civil War, the town's domination of the river halted Union shipping, and led Abraham Lincoln to call Vicksburg the "key to the Confederacy." It was a crucial target for General Grant, who eventually landed south of the city in the spring of 1863, circled inland, and attacked from the east. After a 47-day siege, the outnumbered Confederates surrendered on the Fourth of July – a holiday Vicksburg declined to celebrate for the next hundred years – and Lincoln was able to rejoice that "the Father of Waters again goes unvexed to the sea."

Entered via Clay Street (US-80) just northeast of town, Vicksburg National Military Park preserves the main Civil War battlefield (daily: summer 8am–7pm; rest of the year 8am–5pm; $8 per vehicle; ☎601/636-0583, 🌐www.nps.gov/vick). A sixteen-mile loop drive through the rippling green hillsides traces every contour of the Union and Confederate trenches, punctuated by statues, refurbished cannon, and over 1600 state-by-state monuments. Also at the site are the substantial remains of the squat black ironclad USS Cairo, which was sunk without casualties by a "torpedo," as mines were then known, in 1862, and salvaged a century later. It now stands protected by a giant canopy, with a museum alongside of artifacts retrieved from the waters. Nearby, in the Vicksburg National Cemetery, 13,000 of the 17,000 Union graves are simply marked "Unknown."

As the Mississippi has changed course since the 1860s, it's now the slender, canalized Yazoo River rather than the broad Mississippi that flows alongside the battlefield and most of downtown Vicksburg. The core of the city has changed little, however, despite the arrival of four permanently moored casinos. It's a bare but attractive place of precipitous streets, steep terraces, and wooded ravines, where the entire downtown area is progressively being restored to its original late-Victorian appearance. Most of its finest buildings were destroyed during the siege, so the place is largely characterized by middle-class homes, not sumptuous mansions.

The fascinating Old Court House Museum, 1008 Cherry St (summer Mon–Sat 8.30am–5pm, Sun 1.30–5pm; rest of year closes at 4.30pm; $5), covers the Civil War era in great depth, even selling genuine minié balls (bullets) for $2. The museum also holds displays on Vicksburg's first settlement, Nogales, which was founded in 1796, as well as the postwar years. One room is devoted to Confederate president Jefferson Davis, who started his career here with a speech from the balcony in 1843; the victorious Ulysses Grant returned to Vicksburg as president in 1869, and addressed thousands of ex-slaves from that same balcony. A small museum at the Biedenharn Candy Company, 1107 Washington St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1.30–4.30pm; $2.75), marks the spot where Coca-Cola was first bottled, with vivid displays on how it all came about.

Practicalities

Vicksburg has two major visitor centers, both just off I-20: the Mississippi Welcome Center, at exit 1A beside the river (daily 8am–6pm), and the town's own tourist information center near exit 4, opposite the battlefield entrance on Clay Street (daily: summer 8am–5.30pm; winter 8am–5pm; ☎601/636-9421 or 1-800/221-3536, 🌐www.visitvicksburg.com).

The military park is the prime area for motels, such as the spartan Hillcrest, 4503 Hwy-80 E (☎ 601/638-1491; ❶), which has a pool, and the comfortable Battlefield Inn, at 4137 I-20 Frontage Rd (☎ 601/638-5811 or 1-800/359-9363, ④ www.battlefieldinn.org; ❷), which includes use of the pool, two free cocktails, and a free breakfast buffet. Among appealing central B&Bs are Anchuca, housed in the town's first colonnaded mansion, at 1010 First East St (☎ 601/661-0111 or 1-888/686-0111, ④ www.anchucamansion.com; ❸), which has seven guestrooms, including a gorgeous suite extending through the former slave quarters, as well as a pool and fine breakfasts; and the 1868 Victorian-Italianate Annabelle, 501 Speed St (☎ 601/638-2000 or 1-800/791-2000, ④ www.annabellebnb.com; ❹).

When it's time to eat, tuck into superb all-you-care-to-eat "round table" lunches of fried chicken and other Southern delicacies at 🍷 Walnut Hills, 1214 Adams St at Clay (☎ 601/638-4910; closed Sat). At The Biscuit Company, 1100 Washington St (☎ 601/631-0099), you can eat pizza or po'boys, drink till late, and hear live jazz or blues most weekends.

Natchez

Sixty miles south of Vicksburg, the river town of NATCHEZ is the oldest permanent settlement on the Mississippi River. By the time it first flew the Stars and Stripes in 1798, it had already been home to the Natchez people (see below) and their predecessors, as well as French, British, and Spanish colonists. Unlike its great rival, Vicksburg, Natchez was spared significant damage during the Civil War, ensuring that its abundant Greek Revival antebellum mansions remained intact, complete with meticulously maintained gardens. Interspersed among them are countless simpler but similarly attractive white clapboard homes, set along broad leafy avenues of majestic oaks, making Natchez one of the prettiest towns in the entire South. Horse and carriage tours (see p.596) explore the downtown area, while fourteen individual mansions stay open all year round, among them the elaborate, octagonal Longwood, 140 Lower Woodville Rd (daily 9am–4.30pm; $8), with its huge dome, snow-white arches and columns, and the palatial Stanton Hall, 401 High St (daily 10am–4pm; $8). All these and more can be seen on tours that set off from 200 State St during the twice-yearly Natchez Pilgrimage (mid-March to mid-April & first two weeks in Oct; $32; ④ www.natchezpilgrimage.com).

While Natchez proper perches well above the river, a small stretch of riverfront at the foot of the bluff constitutes Natchez Under-the-Hill. Once known as the "Sodom of the Mississippi," it now houses a handful of bars and restaurants, plus the 24-hour Isle of Capri riverboat casino, a cacophony of slot machines and craps tables (④ www.isleofcapricasino.com).

Natchez takes its name from the Natchez Indians, regarded as one of the most significant flowerings of the widespread Mississippian culture. They survived here until 1729, when they rose against French plans to replace one of their villages with a tobacco plantation. Joined by African slaves, they killed 250 colonists before the French and their Choctaw allies crushed the rebellion. The former Natchez spiritual center known as the Grand Village, home to a leader revered as the "Great Sun," can now be explored at 400 Jefferson Davis Blvd (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1.30–5pm; free). It's an atmospheric place, holding a visitor center and reconstructed dwellings, as well as a large park-like area with an imposing ceremonial mound at either end. Another Natchez site, the much larger Emerald Mound, stands just off the Natchez Trace northeast of town (free 24hr access).

Natchez's rich African-American heritage – Richard Wright, the author of Native Son, was born nearby and lived in the town as a small boy – is chronicled in an excellent 26-page free booklet, available from the visitor center.

Mississippi's Gulf Coast

Previous editions of this book have included an extensive description of Mississippi's Gulf Coast, where fine beaches, and the resort atmosphere of Biloxi in particular, attracted considerable numbers of summer visitors. However, the storm surge that accompanied Hurricane Katrina in August 2005 caused such extensive damage to the region that for the moment it makes no sense to consider it a potential tourist destination. Here, unlike in New Orleans, the coastline was battered by colossal waves, and entire towns were simply obliterated from the map. Though businesses like the giant casinos of Biloxi have been steadily reopening, vast desolate gaps remain, and while in time a full recovery will surely be achieved, the disaster area that is the Gulf Coast is no place to spend a vacation.

6

Practicalities

Natchez's vast Visitor Reception Center occupies a panoramic location overlooking the river at 640 S Canal St, alongside the Mississippi River bridge (March–Oct Mon–Sat 8.30am–6pm, Sun 9am–4pm; Nov–Feb Mon–Sat 8.30am–5pm, Sun 9am–4pm; ☎ 601/446-6345 or 1-800/647-6724, 🌐 www.visitnatchez.com). It's the starting point for all kinds of trolley and bus tours of town, and sells tickets for the carriage tours ($12; 45min) that leave from Canal and State streets, slightly closer to downtown.

As for accommodation, the Ramada Inn, across from the visitor center at 130 John R. Junkin Drive (☎ 601/446-6311 or 1-800/256-6311, 🌐 www.ramada.com; 📍), enjoys much the same magnificent views, while the Natchez Eola, 110 N Pearl St (☎ 601/445-6000 or 1-866/445-3652, 🌐 www.natchezeola.com; 📍), is a venerable downtown hotel of considerable charm. The Mark Twain Guesthouse, 33 Silver St (☎ 601/446-8023, 🌐 www.underthehillssaloon.com; 📍), is an atmospheric option down by the river; its three simple rooms share a bathroom. For a quintessential Natchez experience, consider staying in a more upmarket B&B, such as the opulent Burn, 712 N Union St (☎ 601/442-1344, 🌐 www.theburnbnb.com; 📍), which has a beautiful pool.

For food, Cock of the Walk, on the bluff at 200 N Broadway (☎ 601/446-8920), serves irresistibly tasty catfish, while the Marketplace Café, 613 Main St (☎ 601/304-9399; closed Mon), occupying most of a large open-sided market building downtown, sells good, inexpensive breakfasts and lunches. Biscuits and Blues, 315 Main St (☎ 601/446-9922), combines burgers and barbecue with live blues on weekends.

Arkansas

Historically, ARKANSAS belongs very much to the American South. It sided firmly with the Confederacy in the Civil War, and its capital, Little Rock, was in 1957 one of the most notorious flashpoints in the struggle for civil rights. Geographically, however, it marks the beginning of the Great Plains. Unlike the other Southern states on the east side of the Mississippi River, Arkansas remained very sparsely populated until almost a century ago. Westward expansion was blocked by the existence of the Indian Territory in what's now Oklahoma, and not until the railroads opened up the forested interior during the 1880s did settlers stray in any numbers from their small riverside villages. Only once the Depression and mechanization had forced thousands of farmers to leave their fields did Arkansas begin to develop any significant industrial base. In 1992, local boy Bill Clinton's accession to the presidency catapulted Arkansas into national prominence. Four towns lay claim to him: Hope, his birthplace; Hot Springs, his "home town"; Fayetteville, where he and Hillary married; and, of course, Little Rock. Of the four, only sleepy Little Rock and the nearby spa resort of Hot Springs are really worth a trip, whatever the tourist brochures may say.

Though Arkansas encompasses the Mississippi Delta in the east, oil-rich timber lands in the south, and the sweeping Ouachita ("Wash-ih-taw") Mountains in the west, the cragged and charismatic Ozark Mountains in the north are its most scenic asset, where the main attractions for tourists are the uncrowded parks and unspoiled rivers. Incidentally, "Arkansas" is a distorted version of the name of a small Indian tribe; the state legislature declared once and for all in 1881 that the correct pronunciation is "Arkansaw."

Getting around Arkansas

While driving the state's relatively unspoiled highways, lined by mom-and-pop motels and surrounded by greenery, can be a pleasure, it's extremely difficult to venture beyond Little Rock and Hot Springs using public transportation. Greyhound runs intermittent services, while Amtrak cuts diagonally east-west through the state, calling at Little Rock, which also holds the only sizeable airport. To see the Ozarks you'll certainly need a car.

Eastern Arkansas

What's surprising about the eastern Arkansas deltalands is that they are far from totally flat: Crowley's Ridge, a narrow arc of windblown loess hills, breaks up the uniform smoothness, stretching 150 miles from southern Missouri to the atmospheric river town of Helena. Helena has plenty to recommend it, not least its strong blues heritage; the pine-clad woodlands of the Gulf Coastal Plain in southern Arkansas, however, despite their profusion of scenic rivers and sleepy bayous, offer little incentive to stop.

Helena

The small Mississippi port of HELENA, roughly sixty miles south of Memphis, was once the shipping point for Arkansas's cotton crop, when Mark Twain described it as occupying "one of the prettiest situations on the river." A compact historic district bordered by Holly, College, and Perry streets reflects that brief period of prosperity, before the arrival of the railroad left most of the river towns obsolete. Nowadays it is feeling the strain of living in the shadow of the enormous casinos across the river; most of what little activity there is takes place along the run-down Cherry Street on the levee.

Nonetheless, Helena is a laid-back place, with great appeal for fans of the Delta blues. In 1941 it was the birthplace of the celebrated King Biscuit Time Show, broadcast on radio station KFFA (1360 AM). Featuring performances from legends like boogie pianist Pinetop Perkins and harmonica great Sonny Boy Williamson II ("Rice" Miller), the show was the first in the nation to broadcast live Delta blues. With a huge influence that belies its tiny size – musicians from BB King to Levon Helm quote it as a major inspiration – the show has been on air continuously ever since, hosted since 1951 by living legend “Sunshine” Sonny Payne. Broadcasts (Mon–Fri 12.15–12.45pm; www.kingbiscuittime.com; ☎870/338-4350) are recorded from the foyer of the excellent Delta Cultural Center Visitor Center, 141 Cherry St; observers are welcome. Even if you miss the show, make sure to stop by the visitor center’s music exhibit, complete with listening stations and great video footage.

Blues fans can also buy – and hear – a thrilling assortment of records at Bubba Sullivan’s Blues Corner, nearby in the small mall at 105 Cherry St (☎870/338-3501). Bubba himself is a mine of friendly information on local gigs and music events, not least the town’s superb free Arkansas Blues and Heritage Festival (formerly known as the King Biscuit Blues Festival; www.kingbiscuitfest.org), which, held every fall on the weekend before Columbus Day, attracts big-name blues, acoustic, and gospel performers.

The Delta Cultural Center has another site a block south of the visitor center, in a restored train depot at 95 Missouri St (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm; free). Exhibits cover all aspects of the region’s history, from the first settlers of this soggy frontier to contemporary racism, with, of course, lots of good stuff about the region’s musical heritage. From here you can walk along the levee to River Park, which has fabulous views of the Mississippi. For some unexpected historic artifacts, stop by the Phillips County Museum, next to the Phillips County Public Library at 623 Pecan St (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm; free). Here, in addition to paintings, period clothing, and Native American arrowheads, you’ll find intriguing letters written by General Lafayette, Charles Lindbergh, and Robert E. Lee, as well as Samuel Clemens (aka Mark Twain).

Practicalities

The 1904 Edwardian Inn, 317 Biscoe St, on the main highway into town north of the Mississippi Bridge (☎870/338-9155, www.edwardianinn.com; 4), is an opulent B&B with large oak-paneled rooms, slightly marred by views from the front over a chemical plant on the river. For food, Cherry Street Deli, 420 Cherry St (☎870/817-7706), has good soup and sandwiches, while Oliver’s, 101 Missouri St (☎870/338-7228), serves catfish, steak, and the like. If you want to hear some live blues, stay on Cherry Street and check out Sonny Boy’s Music Hall, no. 301 (☎870/338-8719), or Fonzie’s, no. 400 (☎870/817-7736).

Central and western Arkansas

Little Rock sits right in the middle of the state, just fifty miles west of the quirky spa town of Hot Springs, which marks the eastern gateway to the remote Ouachita Mountains. The rippling farmland of the Arkansas River Valley is sandwiched by the Ouachita crests on the south side and the craggy ridges of the Ozarks to the north. Mining and logging communities dot the east–west roads, and former frontier towns like Fort Smith and Van Buren retain their Old West flavor. Fayetteville and Hope are both in west Arkansas; there’s no reason to stop at either.

Little Rock

The geographical, political, and financial center of Arkansas, LITTLE ROCK is at the meeting point of the state’s two major regions, the northwestern hills and the eastern Delta. The town today has a relaxed, open feel, a far cry from the dramatic time of 1957 (see below), and, since the election of William J. Clinton to the presidency in 1992, a certain cachet that's lacking in the rest of the state.

The city's main attraction, the William J. Clinton Presidential Library and Museum, directly east of downtown at 1200 President Clinton Ave (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $7; www.clintonlibrary.gov), is housed in an elevated, glass-and-metal building attractively set on the river. Revitalizing a once-depressed district of abandoned warehouses, it's a dazzling structure, a visual metaphor for Clinton's oft-repeated avowal to build a bridge to the twenty-first century. But its location also acts as a canny way to draw visitors to Little Rock's vibrant River Market District, with its splash of restaurants and bars, farmers' market, and thriving food hall. A few minutes away from the library, at 610 President Clinton Ave, the museum store (www.clintonmuseumstore.com) not only sells some marvelous gifts – from “I Miss Bill” stickers and Socks the cat mousepads, to compilation CDs of Mr President's favorite music. Also nearby, at 500 President Clinton Ave, the Museum of Discovery is a favorite with kids (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $7), while, along the river, Riverfront Park, a thin strip of greenery and fountains, runs for several blocks. A commemorative sign here marks the “little rock” for which the city is named (it's not particularly striking, but then the name probably gives that away).

Crisis at Central High

In 1957, Little Rock unexpectedly became the battleground in the first major conflict between state and federal government over race relations. At the time, the city was generally viewed as progressive by Southern standards. All parks, libraries, and buses were integrated, a relatively high thirty percent of blacks were on the electoral register, and there were black police officers. However, when the Little Rock School Board announced its decision to gradually desegregate its schools – the Supreme Court having declared such segregation unconstitutional – James Johnson, a candidate for state governor, started a campaign opposing interracial education. Johnson's rhetoric began to win him support, and the incumbent governor, Orval Faubus, who had previously shown no interest in the issue, jumped on the bandwagon himself.

The first nine black students were due to enter Central High School that September. The day before school opened, Faubus, “in the interest of safety,” reversed his decision to let blacks enroll, only to be overruled by the federal court. He ordered state troopers to keep out the black students anyway; soldiers with bayonets forced Elizabeth Eckford, one of the nine, away from the school entrance into a seething crowd, from which she had to jump on a bus to escape. As legal battles raged during the day, at night blacks were subject to violent attacks by white gangs. Three weeks later, President Eisenhower somewhat reluctantly brought in the 101st Airborne Division, and, amid violent demonstrations, the nine were at last able to enter the school. Throughout the year, they experienced immense intimidation; when one retaliated, she was expelled. The graduation of James Green, the oldest, at the end of the year, seemed to put an end to the affair, but Faubus, up for re-election, renewed his political posturing by closing down all public schools in the city for the 1958–59 academic year – and thereby increased his majority.

Today Central High School – an enormous brown, crescent-shaped structure, bearing no little resemblance to a fortress – is on the National Register of Historic Places and has been designated as a National Park site. It's at 1500 S Park Ave, about a mile from the capitol. Across the street in a restored former gas station at 2125 Daisy L. Gatson Bates Drive, the Central High Visitor Center (Mon–Sat 9am–4.30pm, Sun 1–4.30pm; free) has a good exhibition about the 1957 crisis; a larger visitor center is due to open in late 2007 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the events.

Surrounded by smooth lawns and shaded by evergreens, the Old State House Museum (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; free), in the old capitol building at 300 W Markham St, is well worth a visit. The displays – everything from Civil War battle flags to African-American quilts – do an admirable job of covering Arkansas history, with strong sections on women, and, naturally, political history. Don't miss the two senate chambers, restored to their original grandeur. This was where Clinton announced his bid for the presidency on October 3, 1991, and made his acceptance speech thirteen months later – and then again in 1996, when he became the first Democrat since Franklin Delano Roosevelt to be elected to a second term.

The Historic Arkansas Museum, 200 E Third St (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 1–5pm; $2.50), is a living museum of frontier life, incorporating original buildings peopled by well-meaning actors garbed in gaiters and jerkins; the museum's Hinderliter Grog Shop, Little Rock's oldest standing building, dates from around 1827. A gallery displays locally made crafts from the last two centuries, temporary historical exhibits, and contemporary Arkansas art.

Another point of interest, MacArthur Park, features the elegant Arkansas Art Center (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11am–5pm; free), with work by local and international artists, a collection of drawings dating from the Renaissance to the present, and a nice selection of contemporary crafts, and the Macarthur Museum of Arkansas Military History (Tues–Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 1–4pm; free), which has a variety of hardware from the territorial period onward.

Practicalities

Greyhound arrives at 118 E Washington Ave in North Little Rock, across the river. Amtrak has a more central location at Markham and Victory streets. The visitor center is at 615 E Capitol Ave, near MacArthur Park (Mon–Fri 8.30am–4.30pm; ☎ 501/370-3290 or 1-800/844-4781, 🌐 www.littlerock.com).

Finding accommodation downtown should be no problem; the luxurious Rosemont B&B, 515 W 15th St (☎ 501/374-7456, 🌐 www.rosemontoflittlerock.com; Ⓜ–Ⓟ) offers home comforts like a full breakfast and a stocked pantry, while at the Comfort Inn & Suites Downtown, a short walk from the Clinton Center at 707 I-30 (☎ 501/687-7700; 🌐 www.comfortinnlittlerock.com; Ⓜ) you'll find large rooms, a pool, and a hearty free breakfast.

As for eating, the bustling 🍷 River Market District food court (Mon–Sat 7am–6pm) provides a wealth of choice unheard of in these parts, with stalls dishing up organic soups, Middle Eastern salads, down-home BBQ, and Japanese noodles. Andina, next door at 400 President Clinton Ave (☎ 501/376-2326), does great gourmet coffee, sandwiches, and pastries, and you can pick up fresh fruit from the farmers' market outside. Vino's, 923 W Seventh St (☎ 501/375-8466; 🌐 www.vinosbrewpub.com), is an unpretentious, friendly brewpub serving ales and pizza; a popular spot for office lunches, after dark it takes on a more alternative edge, featuring live punk music. There's more music at Juanita's, 1300 S Main St (☎ 501/372-1228; 🌐 www.juanitas.com; closed Sun), an atmospheric and imaginative Mexican restaurant that hosts live rock in their club room. Perhaps Little Rock's most renowned restaurant is Doe's Eat Place, 1023 W Markham St (☎ 501/376-1195), a branch of the Greenville, Mississippi, restaurant, that serves excellent steak and tamales in unpretentious surroundings; it's a longtime favorite of former president Clinton and still a hotspot for sundry hungry politicians.

Hot Springs

Fifty miles southwest of Little Rock, the low-key, historic, and somewhat surreal spa town of HOT SPRINGS nestles in the heavily forested Zig Zag Mountains on the eastern flank of the Ouachitas. Its thermal waters have attracted visitors since Native Americans used the area as a neutral zone to settle disputes. Early settlers fashioned a crude resort out of the wilderness, and after the railroads arrived in 1875 it became a European-style spa, its hot waters said to cure rheumatism, arthritis, kidney disease, and liver problems. The resort reached its glittering heyday during the Twenties and Thirties, when the mayor reputedly ran a gambling syndicate worth $30 million per annum, and players included Al Capone and Bugsy Siegel. Movie stars and politicians, aristocrats and prize fighters flocked to “quaff the elixir,” and Hot Springs became the place to see and be seen. The resort’s popularity waned, however, when new cures appeared during the Fifties, and all but one of the bathhouses closed down. There was a surge of interest in the place after Clinton’s election – he lived here between 1953 and 1964 – and today, with its combination of vaguely artsy stores, faded grandeur, and charming small-town sleepiness, it has a strangely haunting appeal.

Downtown Hot Springs threads through a looping wooded valley, barely wide enough to accommodate the main thoroughfare of Central Avenue. Eight magnificent buildings here, behind a lush display of magnolia trees, elms, and hedgerows, make up the splendid Bathhouse Row. Between 1915 and 1962, the grandest of them all was the Fordyce Bathhouse, at the 300 block of Central, which reopened in 1989 as the visitor center for Hot Springs National Park – the only national park to fall within city limits. Apart from the Buckstaff (see below), this is the only bathhouse you can actually enter: the interior, restored to its former magnificence, is an atmospheric mixture of the elegant and the obsolete. The heavy use of veined Italian marble, mosaic-tile floors, and stained glass lend it a decadent feel, while the gruesome hydrotherapy and electrotherapy equipment, including an electric shock massager, seem impossibly brutish (daily 9am–5pm; free; ☎ 501/624-2701; 🌐 www.nps.gov/hosp).

It’s still possible to take a “bath” – an hour-long process involving brisk rub-downs, hot packs, a thorough steaming, and a needle shower – on Bathhouse Row. The only establishment still open for business is the 1912 Buckstaff, 509 Central Ave, where a thermal mineral bath costs $20.25, a twenty-minute massage $23 (March–Nov Mon–Sat 7–11.45am & 1.30–3pm, Sun 8–11.45am; Dec–Feb Mon–Fri 7–11.45am & 1.30–3pm, Sat 7–11.45am; ☎ 501/623-2308; 🌐 www.buckstaffbaths.com). This is good fun, but Aveda it’s not; swathed in cotton sheets, you are marched by no-nonsense guides from bath to shower to massage table in a municipal, rather prosaic, atmosphere. Full bathing facilities are also available at several hotels. Hot Springs’ water lacks the sulfuric taste often associated with thermal springs; fill up a bottle at any of the drinking fountains on and near Central Avenue. Most of them pump out warm water – if you prefer it cold, head for the Happy Hollow Spring on Fountain Street.

Behind the Fordyce, two small springs have been left open for viewing. The Grand Promenade from here is a half-mile brick walkway overlooking downtown. Trails of various lengths and severity lead up the steep slopes of Hot Springs Mountain. To reach the summit, take a short drive or any of several different trails, including a testing two-and-a-half-mile hike through dense woods of oak, hickory, and short-leaved pine. The observation decks of the 216ft Mountain Tower at the top (daily: summer 9am–9pm; spring and fall 9am–6pm; winter 9am–5pm; $6) offer superb views of the town, the Ouachitas, and surrounding lakes.

Quite apart from its waters, Hot Springs prides itself on its small galleries, plenty of which line Central Avenue. Even better, it boasts some wonderfully weird Americana. Disregarding the woeful National Park Aquarium at 209 Central Ave – which bears more resemblance to a classroom project than anything else — those of an eccentric disposition will enjoy the Josephine Tussaud Wax Museum, 250 Central Ave (June–Aug Sun–Thurs 9am–8pm, Fri & Sat 9am–9pm; Sept–May Mon–Thurs & Sun 9.30am–5pm, Fri & Sat 9.30am–8pm; $9). “They Seem Alive!” shrills the brochure, referring to their atrocious dummies; you can thank your lucky stars that they aren’t. Combo tickets ($19) include admission to a local winery and a 75-minute amphibious “duck tour”, which circuits downtown and has a quick splash on Lake Hamilton (usual price $14, $8 children; ☎ 501/321-2911; 🌐 www.rideaduck.com).

Practicalities

Greyhound pulls in to 1001 Central Ave; most places of interest, including some good accommodation options, are within easy distance of Central Avenue, the city’s main thoroughfare. Though rates can rise during the lengthy high season (Feb–Nov), luxury accommodation is surprisingly inexpensive, and there is a good choice, from spa hotels with their own bathhouses to chain motels and B&Bs. Dominating the town center, the atmospheric 1920s 🏡 Arlington Resort/Spa, 239 Central Ave (☎ 501/623-7771, 🌐 www.arlingtonhotel.com; 📍; bath and whirlpool $26, massage $34), is by far the nicest place to stay, oozing faded grandeur — Al Capone rented the entire fourth floor when he stayed in town, and President Clinton attended his junior and senior proms in the ballroom. The tasteful rooms are airy and comfortable, if a little small. Nearby, the Downtowner, 135 Central Ave (☎ 501/624-5521, 🌐 www.angelfire.com/ar/downtownerhs; 📍; bath and whirlpool $19, massage $20), is another timewarped old hotel, far less fancy with large but dark motel-type rooms. The nearest place to camp is Gulpha Gorge Campground in the national park, two miles northeast on Hwy-70 B, off Hwy-70 E (☎ 501/624-3383; $10 per night).

Hidden among the cheap family restaurants along Central Avenue, Rolando’s at no. 210 is a cheery Nuevo Latino place serving up delicious, creative food (☎ 501/318-6054). Nearby, the Arlington’s restaurant presents Hot Springs’ version of haute cuisine — including a fine Sunday brunch — in elegant environs. Mollie’s, near downtown in an old house at 538 Grand Ave, specializes in tasty comfort foods like chicken in the pot and matzo ball soup (☎ 501/623-6582; closed Sun), while at McClard’s Bar-B-Q, three miles south of downtown at 505 Albert Pike (☎ 501/624-9586; closed Sun & Mon; no credit cards), the mouthwatering pork ribs, slaw, beans, and hot tamales are all prepared by hand. 🏡 McClard’s is not to be missed; even Bill and Hillary stopped by here on their wedding day.

As you might expect, Hot Springs’ nightlife is marvelously cheesy, ranging from variety shows and jamborees to The Witness, an outdoor musical of Christ’s life as sung by the Apostle Peter; it’s held six miles from downtown at 1960 Millcreek Rd (June–Sept Fri & Sat 8pm; $12; ☎ 501/623-9781, 🌐 www.witnessproductions.com). Those with more secular tastes might prefer the Theater of Magic, 817 Central Ave (summer Tues–Sat 8pm; $14; ☎ 501/623-6200, 🌐 www.maxwellblade.com), starring “Master of Illusion” Maxwell Blade. On a different note, there’s a prestigious documentary film festival held each October (🌐 www.hsdfi.org), and a classical music festival in June (🌐 www.hotmusic.org).

Western Arkansas

West of Hot Springs, US-270 cuts through the Ouachita Mountains, unique to the continent in that they run east–west rather than north–south. On its way to Oklahoma, the road passes over uneven crests separated by wide valleys speckled with tiny communities, so isolated that, in the Thirties, hill-dwellers supposedly spoke a form of Elizabethan English. Separating the Ouachitas from the northerly

Ozarks, the Arkansas River Valley, a natural east–west path for bison, was used for centuries by Native Americans and white hunters before steamboats arrived in the 1820s.

On the Oklahoma border, FORT SMITH, an industrial city of roughly seventy thousand people, has a pronounced Western feel. Until Isaac C. Parker – the “Hanging Judge” – took over in 1875, this was a rowdy pioneer town uncomfortably close to Indian Territory, a sanctuary for robbers and bandits. Parker sent out two hundred marshals to round up the fugitives; in 21 years he sentenced 160 to death and saw 79 go to the gallows.

Near the banks of the Arkansas River, on Rogers Avenue at Third, Fort Smith National Historic Site (daily 9am–5pm; $3) features remains of the original fort, Parker’s courtroom, two jails, and a set of gallows, while the adjacent Museum of History, 320 Rogers Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm and Sun 1–5pm in summer; $5), tells the story of the town and serves old-fashioned ice cream in its 1920s soda fountain.

The Ozark Mountains

Although the highest peak fails to top two thousand feet, the Ozark Mountains, which extend beyond northern Arkansas into southern Missouri, are characterized by severe steep ridges and jagged spurs. Hair-raising roads weave their way over the precipitous hills, past rugged lakeshores and pristine rivers. When ambitious speculators poured into Arkansas in the 1830s, those who missed the best land etched out remote hill farms that were no better than what they’d left behind in Kentucky or Tennessee. They remained utterly isolated until the last few decades; the Ozarks have now become the fastest-growing rural section of the US, a major tourist and retirement destination. Much-needed cash has flooded in, bringing with it the cafés and souvenir shops that have converted centers such as Harrison into cookie-cutter American towns.

The word “Ozark” is everywhere, used to entice tourists into music shows or gift emporia, which owe more to Nashville and Branson, Missouri, than to these mountains. With all the hype, it’s getting increasingly difficult to tell the genuine article from imitations – which is a good reason to visit the state park at Mountain View, a serious attempt to preserve traditional Ozark skills and music. The region’s most popular destination, Eureka Springs, just inside the Missouri border, is a pretty mountainside Victorian spa town that has developed an appealingly laid-back and almost alternative scene.

Mountain View and around

Roughly sixty miles north of Little Rock, the state-run Ozark Folk Center, two miles north of the town of MOUNTAIN VIEW on Hwy-14, is a very good living history museum that attempts to show how life used to be in these remote hills, not reached by paved roads until the Fifties. Homestead skills are displayed in reconstructed log cabins, and folk musicians and storytellers perform throughout the park. Special events, including regular Ozark and roots music concerts, are held most evenings (craft displays mid-April to end Sept Wed–Sat 10am–5pm, Oct Tues–Sun 10am–5pm, $9; concerts mid-April to end Sept Wed–Sat 7.30pm, Oct Tues–Sat 7.30pm, $9; combination ticket $15.50; ☎ 870/269-3851, @www.ozarkfolkcenter.com).

Mountain View’s visitor center, 107 N Peabody Ave (April–Nov Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 10am–4pm, Sun 12.30–3pm; Dec–March Mon–Fri 8.30am–

4.30pm; ☎ 870/269-8068, 🌐 www.ozarkgetaways.com), can help with accommodation; there is plenty of choice, particularly if you like the personal service of a B&B or the rustic charm of a mountain cabin. The Dry Creek Lodge (☎ 1-800/264-3655; 📍) is a good-value option on the grounds of the Folk Center, while the friendly Inn at Mountain View, 307 W Washington St (☎ 870/269-4200, 🌐 www.innatmountainview.com; 📍), is a pretty B&B owned by folk musicians; they serve a full country breakfast. Good restaurants include the Folk Center's Iron Skillet (☎ 870/269-3851) and Tommy's Famous..., an award-winning pizzeria and rib joint at 205 Carpenter St, four blocks west of the town square (☎ 870/269-3278). For entertainment, even in winter, it's hard to beat the friendly jam sessions in the square, and naturally there are also a number of good music festivals. Reserve a room well in advance for the venerable Arkansas Folk Festival (music, crafts, food stalls, parades), held in April, and the Bean Festival (beans, cornbread, music, outhouse races), held on the last Saturday in October.

In the Ozark National Forest, fifteen miles northwest of Mountain View off Hwy-14, you can take a variety of tours (times and rates vary; 🌐 www.fs.fed.us/oof/ozark/recreation/caverns.html) of the Blanchard Springs Caverns, an eerily beautiful underground cave system that also boasts a crystal-clear swimming hole surrounded by towering rock bluffs.

The Buffalo River – a prime destination for white-water canoeing – flows across the state north of Mountain View. In the sweet little settlement of Gilbert, off Hwy-65 at the end of Hwy-333 E, Buffalo Camping and Canoeing (☎ 870/439-2888, 🌐 gilbertstore.com) rents canoes for trips on the middle section of the river, which is at its most spectacular around Pruitt Landing. They also offer a few log cabins, most of which sleep at least four people (🌐 www.buffalorivercabin.com; 📍–📍).

Eureka Springs

Picturesque EUREKA SPRINGS, set on steep mountain slopes in Arkansas's northwestern corner, began life a century ago as a health center. As that role diminished, its striking location turned it into a regular tourist destination, filled with Victorian buildings and streets linked by flights of stone stairs. Today it has a relaxed, progressive feel, with kitsch outdoor movie events (🌐 www.lucky13cinema.org), special "Diversity Weekends" (🌐 www.eurekapride.com), and plenty of places offering alternative therapies. One delightful way to enjoy the surrounding wooded valleys is to take a ride on the Eureka Springs and North Arkansas Railway, whose rolling stock includes a magnificent "cabbage-head" wood-burning locomotive; trips depart from the depot at 299 N Main St (mid-April to Oct Mon–Sat 10.30am, noon, 2pm & 4pm; $10; 🌐 www.esnarailway.com).

Three miles east of town on US-62 E, a seven-story Christ of the Ozarks – a surreal statue of Jesus with a 60ft arm span – sets the tone for a jawdropping religious complex known as the Great Passion Play (end April to end Oct). It's the brainchild of one Elna M. Smith, who, worried that the holy sites of the Middle East would be destroyed by war, decided to build replicas in the Ozarks. Thus the two-and-a-half hour New Holy Land Tour gets you a mini-bus ride past scaled-down versions of the Sea of Galilee, the River Jordan, and Golgotha, complete with living, breathing Biblical characters (every 15min Mon, Tues & Thurs–Sat 10am–3.30pm; $15; reservations required). The complex also includes a Bible Museum and a Sacred Arts Center (both open the same days the play is performed, 10am–8pm; admission included in price of tour), and the Museum of Earth History (9am–8pm; $8.50), which puts a very particular spin on the theory of evolution. The Passion Play itself re-enacts Christ's last days on earth with a cast of 250, including live animals, in a 4100-seat amphitheater (same months; nightly except Sun and Wed 8.30pm, after Aug 7.30pm; $23.25, includes Bible Museum and Sacred Arts Center; ☎ 1-866-566-3565, 🌐 www.greatpassionplay.com).

Practicalities

In town, US-62 becomes Van Buren, where you'll find the visitor center at 137 W Van Buren (daily 9am–5pm; ☎ 479/253-8737, 🌐 www.eurekasprings.com).

Log cabins and B&Bs abound, many with staggering views, and there is plenty of inexpensive lodging along Hwy-62 E. There are two particularly delightful options downtown: Trade Winds, next to the visitor center at 141 W Van Buren, is a funky, gay-friendly place with wittily decorated theme rooms and a pool (☎ 479/253-9774; 🌐 www.eurekatradewinds.com; 🍷); ten minutes' walk away, at 27 Glenn (Hwy-62 W), the superb 🏡 Sherwood Court offers individually decorated cottages, some with Jacuzzis, surrounding flower-filled courtyards (☎ 479/253-8920 or 1-800-268-6052; 🌐 www.sherwoodcourt.com; 🍷–🍷 including continental breakfast).

For food, the artsy Mud Street Café, 22 S Main St, serves good espresso, light lunches and desserts, plus dinner on Friday and Saturday (☎ 479/253-6732; closed Wed). The friendly local institution Chelsea's Corner, 10 Mountain St, off Spring St (☎ 479/253-6723), features live music most evenings. Eureka Springs also holds the very fine Ozark folk festival in October (☎ 501/253-7788), and an acclaimed blues festival in June (🌐 www.eurekaspringsbluesfestival.com).

Florida

CHAPTER 7

Highlights

- * Kennedy Space Center, Space Coast Some of the world's most high-tech machinery just a stone's throw from a wildlife refuge. See p.636
- * Ocean Drive, Miami South Beach's finest Art Deco showpiece, buzzing with cosmopolitan cafés, flashy vintage cars, and wannabe models. See p.616
- * Sarasota Culture-vultures will enjoy the museums and bookstores of this unassuming town on Florida's west coast. See p.661
- * Key West This funky, anything-goes place feels like it's at the end of the world. See p.628
- * St Augustine Sixteenth-century Spanish town packed with historic interest and a handful of lovely beaches. See p.640
- * Walt Disney World, Orlando Pure entertainment, planned down to the last detail. Simply irresistible. See p.648
- * Everglades National Park Bike or hike through the vast sawgrass plains of the legendary Everglades, or canoe through alligator-filled mangrove swamps. See p.664

△ Key West, FL

Florida

Brochure images of tanning tourists and Mickey Mouse give an inaccurate and incomplete picture of FLORIDA. Although the aptly nicknamed “Sunshine State” is indeed devoted to the tourist trade, it’s also among the least-understood parts of the US. Away from its overexposed resorts lie forests and rivers, deserted strands filled with wildlife, vibrant cities, and primeval swamps. Contrary to the popular retirement-community image, new Floridians tend to be a younger, more energetic breed, while Spanish-speaking enclaves provide close ties to Latin America and the Caribbean.

By far, the essential stop is cosmopolitan, half-Latin Miami. A simple journey south from here brings you to the Florida Keys, a hundred-mile string of islands known for sports fishing, coral-reef diving, and the sultry town of Key West, legendary for its sunsets and liberal attitude. Back on the mainland, west from Miami stretch the easily accessible Everglades, a swampy sawgrass plain filled with camera-friendly (but otherwise unfriendly) alligators.

Much of Florida’s east coast is disappointingly urbanized, albeit with miles of unbroken beaches rolling alongside. The residential stranglehold is loosened further north, where Kennedy Space Center launches NASA shuttles. Farther along, historical St Augustine stands as the longest continuously occupied European settlement in the US.

In central Florida the terrain turns green, though it’s no rural idyll, thanks in most part to Orlando and Walt Disney World, which sprawls out across the countryside. From here it’s just a skip west to the towns and beaches of the Gulf Coast, and somewhat further north to the forests of the Panhandle, Florida’s link with the Deep South.

Weather-wise, warm sunshine and blue skies are almost always the norm. The state does, however, split into two climatic zones: subtropical in the south and warm temperate in the north. Orlando and points south have a mild season from October to April, with warm temperatures and low humidity. Down here, this is the peak tourist season, when prices are at their highest. Conversely, the southern summer (May to Sept) brings high humidity and afternoon storms; the rewards for braving the mugginess are lower prices and fewer tourists.

North of Orlando, winter is the off-peak period, even though daytime temperatures are generally comfortably warm (although snow has been known to fall on the Panhandle). During the northern Florida summer, the crowds arrive, and the days and nights are hot and sticky. Keep in mind that June to November is hurricane season, and there is a strong possibility of big storms.

Some history

The first European sighting of Florida, just six years after Christopher Columbus reached the New World, is believed to have been made by John and Sebastian Cabot in 1498, when they spotted what is now Cape Florida, on Key Biscayne in Miami. Nothing much came of the sighting, though, as the Cabots did not take formal possession of the land. At the time, the area's 100,000 inhabitants formed several distinct tribes: the Timucua across northern Florida, the Calusa around the southwest and Lake Okeechobee, the Apalachee in the Panhandle, and the Tequesta along the southeast coast.

In 1513, a Spaniard, Juan Ponce de León, sighted land during Pascua Florida, Spain's Easter celebration; he named what he saw La Florida, or "Land of Flowers." Eight years later he returned with a mandate from the Spanish king to conquer and colonize the territory; this was the first of several Spanish incursions prompted by rumors of gold hidden in the north of the region. When it became clear that Florida did not harbor stunning riches, interest waned – but the arrival of French Huguenots in 1562 forced the Spanish into a more determined effort at settlement.

Three years later, the conquistador Pedro Menéndez de Avilés, sent to the continent by empire-minded King Philip II of Spain, founded St Augustine – site of the longest continuous European habitation in North America. In 1586, St Augustine was razed by a British naval bombardment led by Francis Drake. The ensuing bloody confrontation for control of North America was eventually settled when the British captured the crucial Spanish possession of Havana, Cuba; Spain willingly parted with Florida to get it back. By this time, indigenous Floridians had been largely wiped out by disease. The area's Native American population now largely comprised disparate tribes that had arrived from the west, collectively known as the Seminoles, who were generally left undisturbed in the inland areas.

Following American independence, the US began to think in terms of controlling Florida. As a result, in 1814, the US general (and future president) Andrew Jackson – on the pretext of subduing the Seminole, but with the actual intention of taking the region – marched south from Tennessee, killing hundreds of Indians and triggering the First Seminole War. Following the war, in 1819, Spain ceded Florida to the US, in return for American assumption of $5 million of Spanish debt. Not long after, Jackson was sworn in as Florida's first American governor, and Tallahassee was selected as the new administrative center.

Eleven years later, the Act of Indian Removal decreed that all Native Americans in the eastern US should be transferred to reservations in the Midwest. Most Seminole were determined to stay and, as a result, the Second Seminole War broke out, with the Indians steadily driven south, away from the fertile lands of central Florida and into the Everglades, where they eventually agreed to remain. Florida became the 27th state on March 3, 1845, coinciding with the prosperity brought by the railroads. As a member of the Confederacy during the Civil War, Florida's primary contribution was the provision of food – a foretaste of its post-war economic role after being re-admitted to the Union.

At the beginning of the twentieth century, the country's newspapers extolled the curative virtues of Florida's climate, and northern speculators began to invest in the state. These early efforts to promote Florida as a tourist destination brought in the wintering rich: the likes of Henry Flagler and Henry Plant extended their railroads and opened luxury resorts on the east and west coasts, respectively. After World War I, it seemed that everyone in America wanted a piece of Florida, and chartered trains brought in thousands of eager buyers. But most deals were on paper only, and in 1926 the banks began to default. The Wall Street Crash then made paupers of the millionaires whose investments had helped shape the state.

What saved Florida was World War II. During the war, thousands of troops arrived to guard the coastline, providing them with a taste of Florida that would entice many to return. Furthermore, in the mid-Sixties, the state government bent over backwards to help the Disney Corporation turn a sizable slice of central Florida into Walt Disney World, the biggest theme park ever. Its enormous commercial success helped solidify Florida's place in the international tourist market: directly or indirectly, tourism now makes up 20 percent of the total state economy.

Behind the optimistic facade, however, lie many problems. There's a broadening gap between the relative liberalism of the big cities and the arch-conservatism of the northern Bible Belt: while Miami promotes its multicultural make-up, the Ku Klux Klan holds picnics in the Panhandle. Gun laws remain notoriously lax, and the multimillion-dollar drug trade shows few signs of abating – at least a quarter of the cocaine entering the US is said to arrive via Florida. Racial issues continue, too, with tension on several fronts: between Anglo-Americans and nouveau riche Cubans, between blacks and whites, blacks and Hispanics, and between police and the inner-city poor. Increased protection of the state's natural resources has been a more positive feature of the last decade and impressive amounts of land are under state control – overall, wildlife is less threatened now than at any time since white settlers first arrived.

Getting around Florida

Surprisingly compact, Florida is fairly easy to navigate if you have a car: crossing between the east and west coasts takes just a couple of hours, and determined drivers can make one of the longest trips – between the western extremity of the Panhandle and Miami – in a full day's drive. Getting around by public transportation, on the other hand, requires adroit advance planning. Major towns and cities are linked by Greyhound buses – and, in some cases, infrequent Amtrak trains – but many rural areas and some of the most enjoyable sections of the coasts are not covered. Although inadvisable in the cities, cycling is a great way to see large parts of Florida – miles of cycle paths follow the coasts, and long-distance bike trails cross the state's interior.

Miami

Far and away the most exciting city in Florida, MIAMI is an often intoxicatingly beautiful place, with palm trees swaying in the breeze and South Beach's famous Art Deco buildings stunning in the warm sunlight. Away from the beaches and the tourists, the gleaming skyscrapers of downtown herald Miami's proud status as the headquarters of many US corporations' Latin American operations. Even so, it's the people, not the climate, the landscape, or the cash, that makes Miami so noteworthy. Two-thirds of the two-million-plus population is Hispanic, the majority of which are Cuban. Spanish is the predominant language almost everywhere – in many places it's the only language you'll hear – and news from Havana, Caracas, or Bogotá frequently gets more attention than the latest word from Washington.

Just a hundred years ago Miami was a swampy outpost of mosquito-tormented settlers. The arrival of Henry Flagler's railroad in 1896 gave the city its first fixed land-link with the rest of the continent, and cleared the way for the Twenties property boom. In the Fifties, after World War II, Miami Beach became a celebrity-filled resort area, just as thousands of Cubans fleeing the regime of Fidel Castro began arriving here as well. The Sixties and Seventies brought decline, and Miami's dangerous reputation in the Eighties was well deserved – in 1980 the city had the highest murder rate in America.

Since then, with the strengthening of Latin American economic links and the gentrification of South Beach – which helped make tourism the lifeblood of the local economy again in the early Nineties – Miami is enjoying a surge of affluence and optimism.

Arrival and information

Miami International Airport (☎305/876-7000, 🌐www.miami-airport.com) is six miles west of the city. A cab from the airport costs $22–43, depending on your destination. You can opt for one of the 24-hour SuperShuttle minivans, which will deliver you to any address in Miami for $14–19 per person (☎305/871-2000, 🌐www.supershuttle.com). Via public transportation, take the #7 Metrobus to downtown, a trip of 30 minutes or so ($1.50; every 40mins), or the #J Metrobus ($1.50 plus a 25¢ surcharge to South Beach; every 20–40mins) to Miami Beach farther on. Late at night, the Airport Owl shuttle runs in a loop through South Beach, downtown and back to the airport ($1.50; once hourly). Of several Greyhound stations in the city, the busiest is near the airport, at 4111 NW 27th Street (☎305/871-1810). Most buses, however, also stop at the downtown stop, at 1012 NW 1st Avenue. The Amtrak station, at 8303 NW 37th Ave, is seven miles northwest of the city center. There is an adjacent Metrorail stop (see below) that provides access to downtown Miami and beyond; bus #L stops here on its way to Central Miami Beach.

There's no official tourist information booth downtown: the two best-equipped sources are both in South Beach. These are the Miami Beach Chamber of Commerce, 1920 Meridian Ave (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–4pm; ☎305/672-1270, 🌐www.miamibeachchamber.com), which is packed with leaflets and staffed by helpful locals, and the Art Deco Welcome Center, 1001 Ocean Drive (daily 10am–7pm; ☎305/672-2014, 🌐www.mdpl.org), which has details on walking tours and events.

City transportation and tours

Downtown and South Beach, the two main tourist areas, are eminently walkable – and, indeed, are best enjoyed on foot. However, if you want to see more of the city, driving is the most practical option. An integrated public transportation network run by Metro-Dade Transit (☎305/770-3131, 🌐www.miamidade.gov/transit) covers Miami, making the city easy – if time-consuming – to get around, at least by day (nighttime services are more skeletal). Metrorail trains ($1.50) run along a single line between the northern suburbs and South Miami; useful stops are Government Center (for downtown), Vizcaya, Coconut Grove, and Douglas Road or University (for Coral Gables). Downtown Miami is also ringed by the Metromover (free), a monorail that doesn't cover much ground but gives a great bird's-eye view. Metrobuses ($1.50, with a 25¢ surcharge for transfers) cover the entire city, but services dwindle at night.

Taxis are abundant in Miami; either hail one on the street or call Central Cab (☎305/532-5555) or Metro Taxi (☎305/888-8888). If you want to rent a bike, you can do so from one of the many outlets around town, such as the Miami Beach Cycle Center, 601 5th St, South Beach ($5/hr or $20/day; ☎305/674-0150).

For an informed stroll, take one of Dr Paul George's Walking Tours from the Historical Museum of South Florida (call for schedule; no tours July & Aug; $15 and up; ☎ 305/375-1621, 🌐 www.hmsf.org). Or, try the various excellent Art Deco walking tours of South Beach (Wed & Fri–Sun 10.30am, Thurs 6.30pm; $20), which begin at the Art Deco Welcome Center on Ocean Drive (see p.613). The latter organization also offers a self-guided audio walking tour of the district (available daily 10am–4pm; 90mins; $15).

Accommodation

Accommodation is rarely a problem in Miami – though you should expect rates to go up on weekends, holidays, and in the main winter tourist season (Dec–April), when you'll pay $75–110 (or upwards of $250 in the swankier places) per night. Though it can be great fun to stay in one of the numerous Art Deco South Beach hotels, note that they were built in a different era, and, as such, rooms can be tiny. Elsewhere, Coral Gables and Coconut Grove, though somewhat out-of-the-way, both have an appealing option or two; downtown is filled with expensive chain hotels.

Albion Hotel 1650 James Ave, South Beach ☎ 1-877/RUBELLS, 🌐 www.rubellhotels.com. A sensitive conversion of a classic Nautical Deco building, this is one of the best-value hotels on the beach. Rooms are hip but simple; the raised pool – with portholes cut into its sides – is also a big draw. 6

 Catalina 1732 Collins Ave ☎ 305/674-1160. Simple white rooms are filled with luxe touches like flatscreen TVs and marble bathrooms, plus there's an outdoor pool, a sundeck, and a bamboo-filled zen courtyard for reading or meditating. 6

Clay Hotel and Hosting International 1438 Washington Ave, South Beach ☎ 1-800/379-2529, 🌐 www.clayhotel.com. This beautiful converted monastery serves as the city's best budget hotel and youth hostel. Dorm beds $23–27; private rooms from 3.

Gables Inn 730 S Dixie Hwy, Coral Gables ☎ 305/661-7999, 🌐 www.thegablesinn.net. Basic but clean Mediterranean Revival-style motel on a busy road (so can be noisy). 4

Hampton Inn 2800 SW 28th Terrace, Coconut Grove ☎ 305/448-2800, 🌐 www.hamptoninn-florida.com. Bright and cheery accommodation, geared to the business traveler – though the free local calls, free breakfast, and on-site coin laundry are attractive for budget travelers, too. 5

International Travelers Hostel 236 9th St, South Beach ☎ 305/534-0268, 🌐 www.sobehostel.com. Friendly, centrally located hostel with beds in four-person dorms ($14–16), as well as private singles and doubles 5.

Miami River Inn 118 SW South River Drive, Little Havana ☎ 305/325-0045, 🌐 www.miamiriverinn.com. B&B with forty comfortable rooms decorated with antiques and housed in four cottages clustered around a tree-shaded pool. Not in the best neighborhood, so stay here only if you have access to a car. 4

Park Central 640 Ocean Drive, South Beach ☎ 305/538-1611, 🌐 www.theparkcentral.com. Recently renovated colonial-safari-style rooms (soundproofed against the noise from nearby clubs) with reasonable rates for South Beach. 6

Pelican 826 Ocean Drive, South Beach ☎ 1-800/7-PELICAN, 🌐 www.pelicanhotel.com. Each room at this campy, quirky hotel is individually themed and named – try the lush red bordello known as the “Best Little Whorehouse.” 6

The Shore Club 1901 Collins Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/695-3100, 🌐 www.shoreclub.com. Ultra-trendy hotel on the beach, with minimalist, brightly colored rooms and several swanky bar-restaurants, like the poolside Sky Bar (see review p.624). 9

 The Standard Miami 40 Island Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/673-1717, 🌐 www.standardhotel.com. The Miami outpost of hip hotelier Andre Balazs's Standard chain has finally opened, transforming a forlorn hotel on Belle Isle into spa accommodation complete with Turkish baths and a yoga center. 5

 Townhouse 150 20th St, South Beach ☎ 1-877/534-3800, 🌐 www.townhousehotel.com. Small but stylish white rooms, great staff, free breakfast, and squishy rooftop waterbeds – all at a fraction of most boutique hotel prices. 5

The City

Each of Miami's districts has a character very much its own. Separated from the mainland by Biscayne Bay, the most popular is Miami Beach, especially the world-famous South Beach portion. This is where many of the city's famed Art Deco buildings can be found, all pastels, neon, and wavy lines. Though touted as a chic gathering-place for globe-trotting fashionistas, South Beach is not as exclusive as you might expect, especially on weekend afternoons, when families and out-of-towners join in the fun along Ocean Drive right with the washboard stomachs and bulging pecs.

Back on the mainland, downtown has a few good museums, but is most appealing for its pervasive Latin American vibe. To the north, the earthy, Caribbean enclave known as Little Haiti is gradually starting to attract more visitors. Meanwhile, southwest of downtown, there's nowhere better for a Cuban lunch than Little Havana. Immediately south, the spacious boulevards and ornate public buildings of Coral Gables are as impressive now as they were in the 1920s, when the district set new standards in town planning. Independently minded, but equally wealthy, Coconut Grove is also worth a look, thanks to its walkable center and a couple of Miami's most popular attractions. Lastly, sun-worshippers should make time for Key Biscayne, a smart, secluded island community with some beautiful beaches, an easy five miles off the mainland by causeway.

Miami Beach

A long slender arm of land between Biscayne Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, MIAMI BEACH, three miles off the mainland, has been a headline-grabbing resort town for almost a hundred years, from its first heyday in the Art Deco-dominated 1920s, through a slick-as-Vegas era in the 1950s, to the hip hedonism of today. Until the 1910s – when its Quaker owner, John Collins, formed an unlikely partnership with a flashy entrepreneur, Carl Fisher – it was nothing more than an ailing fruit farm. With Fisher's money, Biscayne Bay was dredged, and the muck raised from its murky bed was used as landfill to transform this wildly vegetated barrier island into a carefully sculptured landscape of palm trees, hotels, and tennis courts. After a hurricane in 1926 devastated Miami (and especially the beach), damaged buildings were replaced by grander structures in the new Art Deco style, and Miami Beach as we know it appeared. Since then, its history has been checkered: by the 1980s, crack dens and retirement homes were equally commonplace in South Beach, but the 1990s saw a renaissance spearheaded by a few savvy hoteliers and Miami's gay community. It's still a popular resort with the tanned and toned, though the gay pioneers have now largely decamped to quieter quarters up the coast in Fort Lauderdale.

South Beach

Occupying the southernmost three miles of Miami Beach is gorgeous SOUTH BEACH, with its hundreds of dazzling pastel-colored 1920s and 1930s Art Deco buildings. By day, the sun blares down on sizzling bodies on the sand – though it's worth braving an early morning wake-up call to catch the dawn glow, which bathes the Deco hotels in pure, crystalline white light. By night, the ten blocks of Ocean Drive become one of the liveliest stretches in Miami, as terrace cafés spill across the specially widened sidewalk and crowds of tourists and locals saunter by the beach.

Loosely bordered north/south by 5th and 20th streets, and west/east by Lenox Avenue and the ocean, the area referred to as the Deco District actually incorporates a variety of styles: take one of the excellent walking tours offered at the Art Deco Welcome Center (see p.613) to learn the difference between Streamline, Moderne, and Florida Deco, not to mention Mediterranean Revival.

The most famous buildings lie along Ocean Drive, where revamped hotels make much of their design heritage. Amid the hotels, Casa Casuarina, at the corner of 10th Street, was the former home of the murdered fashion designer Gianni Versace. It's now an invitation-only members club.

If the tourist hordes get to be too much, head a block west to Collins Avenue, lined with more Deco hotels and fashion chains, or on to Washington Avenue, which tends more toward funky thrift stores and cool coffee bars. At 1001 Washington Ave, the Mediterranean-Revival Wolfsonian-FIU (Mon, Tues, Sat & Sun noon–6pm, Thurs & Fri noon–9pm; $7; free after 6pm on Fri; ☎ 305/531-1001, 🌐 www.wolfsonian.fiu.edu) houses an eclectic collection of decorative arts from the late nineteenth century to 1945. The displays of old books, photos, paintings, posters, and all manner of domestic objects are impressive, if a bit muddled.

Throughout Miami Beach's history, one group that has kept a constant presence is its sizable Jewish population, which includes many Holocaust survivors and their families. This contingent is the reason for the moving Holocaust Memorial, near the north tip of South Beach, at 1933–1945 Meridian Ave (daily 9am–9pm; $2 donation for brochure; ☎ 305/538-1663, 🌐 www.holocaustmmb.org). A complex, uncompromising reminder to their experience, the monument depicts a defiant hand punching into the sky. Life-sized figures of wailing people attempt to climb up the arm, which is tattooed near the wrist with an Auschwitz number.

A few blocks northeast is the Bass Museum of Art, 2121 Park Ave (Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 11–5pm; $8; ☎ 305/673-7530, 🌐 www.bassmuseum.org). The only fine art museum on the beach, the Bass is housed in a 1930s building designed by Russell Pancoast, the architect son-in-law of beach pioneer John Collins. Recently, the museum unveiled a showy expansion by Japanese architect Arata Isozaki – the white box he grafted onto the original building along Park Avenue has tripled the exhibition space. The museum's permanent collection consists of fine, if largely unremarkable, European paintings, although its temporary exhibitions are often lively and worth visiting.

Miami beaches

If you took away the Art Deco, the beautiful people, and the glittering nightlife, you'd still be left with the simple truth that Miami Beach has a fabulous choice of beaches. With twelve miles of calm waters, clean sands, swaying palms, and candy-colored lifeguard towers, you can't go wrong picking a spot. The young and the beautiful soak up the rays between 5th and 21st streets, a convenient hop from the juice bars and cafés on Ocean Drive. From 6th to 14th streets, Lummus Park – much of whose sand was shipped in from the Bahamas – is the heart of the South Beach scene; there's an unofficial gay section roughly around 12th Street. North of 21st, things are more family-oriented, with a boardwalk running between the shore and the hotels up to 46th. To the south, First Street Beach and South Pointe are favored by Cuban families, and are especially convivial at weekends. For good swimming, head up to 85th, a quiet stretch that's usually patrolled by lifeguards.

Downtown Miami

Back on the mainland, DOWNTOWN MIAMI divides into distinct halves: big business and big buildings line Brickell Avenue south of the Miami River, while the commercial bazaar around Flagler Street to the north hums with jewelers, fabric stores, and cheap electronics outlets. Latin culture is comfortably dominant here – from office workers grabbing a midmorning cafecito, or Cuban coffee, to the bilingual signage in almost every store. If at first it seems a little too chaotic, persevere: downtown is compact, holds two of Miami's best museums, and provides the clearest sense of Cuba's continuing influence on the city.

At the western end of Flagler Street, downtown's loudest, brightest, busiest strip, is the Metro-Dade Cultural Center, an ambitious attempt by architect Philip Johnson to create a postmodern Mediterranean-style piazza. Art shows, historical collections, and a library frame the courtyard, but Johnson overlooked the power of the south Florida sun: rather than pausing to rest and chat, most people scamper across the open space toward the nearest shade. The center's Historical Museum of Southern Florida (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun noon–5pm, 3rd Thurs of each month 10am–9pm; $5; ☎ 305/375-1492, 🌐 www.hmsf.org) provides a comprehensive look at the region's history, with an especially strong section on refugees, including two shockingly small genuine refugee rafts.

On the east side of the plaza, the Miami Art Museum (Tues–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat & Sun 12–5pm, 3rd Thurs of each month 10am–9pm; $5, Sun free; ☎ 305/375-3000, 🌐 www.miamiartmuseum.org) houses a well laid out collection of post-1940 art, and showcases outstanding international traveling exhibits. The museum will eventually relocate to a waterfront space close to I-395 to be called Museum Park; no timeline for this move has yet been decided (check the website for the latest news).

The eastern edge of downtown is bounded by Biscayne Boulevard, near which is the Bayside Marketplace, a large pink shopping mall with pleasant waterfront views from its terrace. Across the boulevard, the striking Freedom Tower built in 1925 and modeled on a Spanish belltower, earned its name by housing the Cuban Refugee Center in the 1960s. It is now part of the nearby Miami-Dade Community College.

South from the marketplace, in Bayfront Park, the Torch of Friendship was meant to symbolize the good relations between the US and its southern neighbors. When it was built, there was a pointed space left for the Cuban national emblem among the alphabetically sorted crests of each country. However, the memorial is so neglected now that several missing emblems are noticeable, making Cuba no longer appear the pariah.

Fifteen minutes' walk south from Flagler Street, the Miami River carves downtown in half. The river's southern bank is dominated by Brickell (rhymes with "pickle") Avenue. Named for William Brickell, one of the original Miami landowners, this was the address in 1910s Miami. While the early grand homes have largely disappeared, money is still the avenue's most obvious asset: its half-mile parade of bank buildings is the largest grouping of international banks in the US. The rise of the banks was matched by new condominiums of breathtaking proportions (and expense) but little architectural merit.

Little Haiti

Continuing on north from downtown, along NE 2nd Avenue, you'll cruise into LITTLE HAITI, an immigrant area filled with Caribbean colors, music, and smells, its trilingual shop signs making sales pitches in English, French, and Creole. In its former incarnation as Lemon City, this neighborhood was the oldest inhabited European settlement in the area, alongside Coconut Grove (seeopposite). Today, the best place to soak up the atmosphere is 54th Street, which is lined with stores known as botanicas, providing supplies for the voodoo-like religion Santería.

Little Havana

The impact on Miami by Cubans, unquestionably the largest and most visible ethnic group in the city, has been incalculable. Unlike most Hispanic immigrants to the US, who trade one form of poverty for another, Miami's first Cubans had already tasted success when they arrived during the late Fifties. These non-traditional immigrants – many of the first wave driven out by Castro were doctors, lawyers, and other professionals – were soon enjoying more of the same in Miami, and some now wield considerable clout in the running of the city.

The initial home of Miami Cubans was a few miles west of downtown in what became LITTLE HAVANA, whose streets, if the tourist brochures are to be believed, are filled by old men playing dominoes, while puffing on fat, fragrant cigars, and exotic restaurants whose walls vibrate to the pulsating rhythms of the homeland. Naturally, the reality is quite different. Little Havana's parks, memorials, shops, and food stands all reflect the Cuban experience, but the streets are quieter than those of downtown (except during the Little Havana Festival in early March). Today, many successful Cuban-Americans have moved to Coral Gables, or elsewhere in the city, to be replaced by immigrants from parts of Central America, especially Nicaragua.

Make a beeline here for lunch at one of the many small restaurants on SW 8th Street, or Calle Ocho, the neighborhood's main drag. Between 12th and 13th avenues, check out the cluster of memorials that underscores the Cuban-American experience in Miami. Here, the simple stone Brigade 2506 Memorial remembers those who died at the Bay of Pigs on April 17, 1961, during the abortive invasion of Cuba by US-trained Cuban exiles. Veterans of the landing, aging men dressed in combat fatigues, gather here for each anniversary to make all-night-long pledges of patriotism.

Coral Gables

All of Miami's constituent neighborhoods are fast to assert their individuality, though none does it more definitively than CORAL GABLES, located southwest

Cubans in Miami

During the mid-Fifties, when opposition to Cuba's Batista dictatorship began to assert itself, a trickle of Cubans started arriving in a predominantly Jewish section of Miami that was then called Riverside. The trickle became a flood when Fidel Castro took power in 1959, and the area became Little Havana, populated by the affluent Cuban middle classes who had the most to lose under communism.

These original immigrants were joined by a second influx in May 1980, when the Maríel boatlift brought 125,000 islanders from the port of Maríel to Miami in only a few days. These arrivals were poor and uneducated, and a fifth of them were fresh from Cuban jails – incarcerated for criminal rather than political crimes. Bluntly, Castro had dumped his misfits on Miami. The city reeled and then recovered from this mass arrival, but it left Miami's Cuban community utterly divided. Even today, older Cuban-Americans claim that they can pick out a Maríelito from the way he or she walks or talks.

That said, local division gives way to fervent agreement when it comes to Castro: he's universally detested. In Miami, Cubans have been killed for being suspected of advocating dialogue with Castro, and one museum was bombed in 1989 for displaying the work of Castro-approved artists. It remains to be seen whether or not the Cuban exile community in Miami will return to their homeland after Castro's death.

of Little Havana. Twelve square miles of broad boulevards, leafy side streets, and Spanish and Italian architecture form a cultured setting for a cultured community.

Coral Gables's creator was a local aesthete, George Merrick, who raided street names from a Spanish dictionary to plan the plazas, fountains, and carefully aged stucco-fronted buildings here. Following the first land sale in 1921, $150 million poured in, which Merrick channeled into one of the biggest advertising campaigns ever known. Unfortunately, Coral Gables was taking shape just as the Florida property boom ended. Merrick was wiped out, and died as Miami's postmaster in 1942. But Coral Gables never lost its good looks, and it remains an impressive place to explore. Merrick wanted people to know they'd arrived somewhere special, and as such, eight grand entrances were planned on the main approach roads (though only four were completed). Three of these stand along the western end of Calle Ocho as you arrive from Little Havana.

The best way into Coral Gables is along SW 22nd Street, known as the Miracle Mile. Long dominated by fusty, no-name ladies'-wear boutiques, it's finally being redeveloped to attract some funkier, livelier tenants (see "Eating," p.622, for some of these). Note the arcades and balconies, and the spirals and peaks of the Omni Colonnade Hotel, at 180 Aragon Ave, one block north, completed in 1926 to accommodate George Merrick's office. Further west, along Coral Way, the Merrick House (open only for tours on Sun & Wed 1–4pm; $5; ☎ 305/460-5361) was George's boyhood home. In 1899, when he was twelve, his family arrived here from New England to run a 160-acre farm, which was so successful that the house quickly grew from a wooden shack into an elegant dwelling of coral rock and gabled windows (thus inspiring the name of the future city).

While his property-developing contemporaries left ugly scars across the city after digging up the local limestone, Merrick had the foresight to turn his biggest quarry into a sumptuous swimming pool. Opened in 1924, the Venetian Pool, 2701 De Soto Blvd (June & July Mon–Fri 11am–7.30pm, Sept–Oct & April, May & Aug Tues–Fri 11am–5.30pm, Nov–March Tues–Sun 10am–4.30pm, year-round Sat & Sun 10am–4.30pm; $9.50; ☎ 305/460-5356, @www.venetianpool.com), is an essential stop on a steamy Miami afternoon. Its pastel stucco walls hide a delightful spring-fed lagoon, with vine-covered loggias, fountains, waterfalls, coral caves, and plenty of room to swim. The café isn't bad, either.

Wrapping its broad wings around the southern end of De Soto Blvd, Merrick's crowning achievement was the fabulous Biltmore Hotel, 1200 Anastasia Ave (☎ 1-800/727-1926, @www.biltmorehotel.com). With a 26-story tower visible across much of low-lying Miami, everything about the Biltmore is over-the-top: 25-foot fresco-coated walls, vaulted ceilings, immense fireplaces, custom-loomed rugs, and a massive swimming pool hosting shows by such bathing belles and beaux as Esther Williams and Johnny Weissmuller. Today, it costs upward of $200 a night to stay here, but a fascinating free tour leaves from the lobby every Sunday at 1.30, 2.30, and 3.30pm; meet at the birdcages. There's also a free ghost history tour Thursdays at 7pm.

Coconut Grove

COCONUT GROVE, on Biscayne Bay about four miles southwest of downtown, has come a long way since the 1960s, when it was peopled by down-at-the-heel artists and writers: these days it's full of expensive bay-view condos, as well as some fashionable cafés and restaurants.

A century ago, a mix of Bahamian immigrant laborers and New England intellectuals laid the foundations of a fiercely individual community, separated from the fledgling city of Miami by a dense wedge of tropical foliage. In 1914, farm-machinery mogul James Deering blew $15 million on re-creating a sixteenth-century Italian villa within this jungle. A thousand-strong workforce completed his Villa Vizcaya, 3251 S Miami Ave (daily 9.30am–4.30pm; free house tours every 20min; $12; ☎ 305/250-9133, 🌐 www.vizcayamuseum.org), in just two years. Deering's madly eclectic art collection, and his desire that the villa should appear to have been inhabited for four hundred years, result in a thunderous clash of Baroque, Renaissance, Rococo, and Neoclassical fixtures and fittings. The fabulous landscaped gardens, with their many fountains and sculptures, are just as excessive.

Key Biscayne

A compact, immaculately manicured community, KEY BISCAYNE, five miles off mainland Miami, is a great place to live – if you can afford it. The moneyed of Miami fill the island's upmarket homes; Richard Nixon had a presidential winter house here. The only way onto Key Biscayne is along the four-mile Rickenbacker Causeway ($1.25 toll), which runs from SW 26th Road just south of downtown. On the way to the island, the causeway soars high above Biscayne Bay, passing over the small, mostly residential Virginia Key, and giving a breathtaking view of the Brickell Avenue skyline.

Crandon Park Beach, a mile along Crandon Boulevard (the continuation of the main road from the causeway), is one of the finest landscaped beaches in the city, with crystal-clear waters, barbecue grills, and sports facilities (daily 8am–sunset; $4 per car; ☎ 305/361-5421). Three miles of yellow-brown beach fringe the park, and give access to a sand bar enabling knee-depth wading far from the shore.

Crandon Boulevard terminates at the entrance to the Bill Baggs Cape Florida State Recreation Area, four hundred wooded acres covering the southern extremity of Key Biscayne (daily 8am–sunset; $5 per car, pedestrians & cyclists $1; ☎ 305/361-5811). An excellent swimming beach lines the Atlantic-facing side of the park, and a boardwalk cuts around the wind-bitten sand dunes toward the 1820s Cape Florida lighthouse. Only with the ranger-led tour (Thurs–Mon 10am & 1pm; free, but limited to the first ten people to arrive) can you climb up through the 95-foot structure; it was attacked by Seminoles in 1836 and incapacitated by Confederate soldiers aiming to disrupt Union shipping during the Civil War.

Eating

Cuban food is what Miami does best, and it's not limited to the traditional haunts in Little Havana. The hearty comfort food – notably rice and beans, fried plantains, and shredded pork sandwiches – is found in every neighborhood, and you'll also want to try Cuban coffee: choose between café cubano, strong, sweet, and frothy, drunk like a shot with a glass of water; café con leche, with steamed milk, and particularly good at breakfast with pan cubano (thin, buttered toast); or café cortadito, a smaller version of the con leche. Cuban cooking is complemented by sushi bars, American homestyle diners, as well as Haitian, Italian, and Indian restaurants, among a handful of other ethnic cuisines.

Coral Gables is best for upmarket cafés and ethnic Italian and Greek places, while Coconut Grove has American, Spanish, New Floridian (sometimes known as Floribbean; a mix of Caribbean spiciness and fruity Florida sauces), and even British. Seafood is equally abundant: succulent grouper, yellowfin tuna, and wahoo, a local delicacy, are among five hundred species of fish that thrive offshore. Stone-crab claws, served from October to May, are another regional specialty.

Ayestaran 706 SW 27th Ave, Little Havana
 ☎ 305/649-4982. This sprawling Cuban restaurant offers hearty and cheap daily specials and superb café con leche that you can mix to your liking.

Big Pink 157 Collins Ave, South Beach
 ☎ 305/532-4700. Come here for large portions of comfort food: mashed potatoes, ribs, macaroni and cheese, and classic "TV dinners," all served at long communal tables.

 David's Coffee Shop 1058 Collins Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/534-8736. Locals' favorite Cuban restaurant on the beach (there's another location at 16th St and Meridian Ave). The food is authentic, and there's eat-in and takeout at both restaurants.

El Palacio de los Jugos 5721 W Flagler Ave, Little Havana ☎ 305/264-1503. A handful of tables at the back of a Cuban produce market, where the pork sandwiches and shellfish soup from the takeout stand are the tastiest for miles. Also serving refreshing jugos (juices).

The Forge 432 41st St, Miami Beach ☎ 305/538-8533. A memorable upscale dining spot where the hearty traditional food and huge wine cellar combine appealingly with a vibrant atmosphere and eclectic clientele.

 Front Porch Café 1418 Ocean Drive, South Beach ☎ 305/531-8300. This local hangout is refreshingly low-key, considering its location: the delicious, dinner-plate-sized pancakes will easily take care of both breakfast and lunch.

 Garcia's Seafood Grille 398 NW N River Drive, downtown ☎ 305/375-0765. Wonderful waterfront café with ramshackle wooden benches and superb, fresh fish dishes for around $11. Breakfast and lunch only.

Greenstreet Café 3468 Main Hwy, Coconut Grove ☎ 305/444-0244. The terrific breakfasts make this café a real scene at weekends. There's a large number of outdoor tables: great for watching the world go by.

Joe's Stone Crabs 11 Washington Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/673-0365. Specializing in succulent stone crabs and always packed – if you're impatient, do as the locals do and head to the takeout window. Crabcakes, fresh fish, and the crispy fried chicken are also good. Open Oct–May.

La Sandwicherie 229 W 14th St, South Beach ☎ 305/532-8934. Gigantic sandwiches stuffed with gourmet ingredients such as prosciutto and imported cheeses and starting at around $8. It's open until 5am, so good for a post-clubbing refuel.

News Café 800 Ocean Drive, South Beach
 ☎ 305/538-NEWS. This mid-priced sidewalk café has front-row seating for the South Beach promenade – although the food's unremarkable. Open 24hrs at weekends.

 Pacific Time 915 Lincoln Rd, South Beach
 ☎ 305/534-5979. For a splurge, you can't beat the Modern American cooking with strong Asian influences served at this pricey but excellent restaurant.

Picnics at Allen's Drug Store 6500 Red Rd, Coral Gables ☎ 305/665-6964. Low-priced home-style cooking – great freshly made burgers – in an old-fashioned drugstore, complete with a jukebox that blasts golden oldies.

 Pizza Rustica 863 Washington Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/674-8244. Mouthwateringly fresh gourmet pizza, with slab-like slices costing around $4.

Rascal House 17190 Collins Ave, Miami Beach ☎ 305/947-4581. Large, loud, and reasonably authentic New York-style deli. Huge portions are served by waitresses who look like they've worked here since the place's heyday in the 1950s.

Scotty's Landing 3381 Pan American Drive, Coconut Grove ☎ 305/854-2626. Tasty, inexpensive seafood and fish 'n' chips consumed at marina-side picnic tables. It's tucked away on the water by City Hall, and so can be hard to find – ask if you get lost.

 Tap Tap 819 5th St, South Beach
 ☎ 305/672-2898. Tasty, attractively presented and reasonably priced Haitian food. The upstairs gallery featuring Haitian art is also worth a look. Dinner only.

Versailles 3555 SW 8th St, Little Havana
 ☎ 305/444-0240. Local families, Cuban businessmen, and backpackers congregate here for the wonderfully inexpensive Cuban dishes, served by friendly staff amid kitsch decor of chandeliers and mirrored walls.

 Yambo 1643 SW 1st St, Little Havana
 ☎ 305/642-6616. Step out of the USA and into Central America at Yambo, an undiscovered gem serving up good, inexpensive Nicaraguan food.

Nightlife and entertainment

Miami's nightlife is still unsurpassed in Florida. Almost every dancefloor is attached to a restaurant or a bar, so you could end up dancing anywhere. At the full-fledged clubs, house and techno beats are most popular, followed by salsa or merengue played by Spanish-speaking DJs. Most of the action is centered in South Beach, and cover charges are around $20. Door policies are notoriously fierce at current in-spots; the places listed below include laid-back local haunts as well as some of the hotter bars and clubs. For live music, your best bet is reggae. Miami has a sizable Jamaican population, and local as well as out-of-town acts appear regularly. The free New Times magazine, published every Thursday, offers listings of what's going on where and when – including gay and lesbian info.

If you want to try out the local sports scene, the Marlins major league baseball team and the Dolphins, Miami's pro football team, play at the Pro Player Stadium, sixteen miles northwest of downtown at 2269 Dan Marino Blvd (☎ 305/623-6100, 🌐 www.proplayerstadium.com; take bus #27 from the main bus station).

Bars and live music venues

The Abbey Brewing Company 1115 16th St, South Beach ☎ 305/538-8110. This small, unpretentious microbrewery serves the best beers on South Beach. Try the creamy Oatmeal Stout – their best and most popular brew. Open until 5am.

Churchill's Pub 5501 NE 2nd Ave, Little Haiti ☎ 305/757-1807, 🌐 www.churchillspub.com. A British enclave within Little Haiti, with soccer and rugby matches on TV, UK beers on tap, and live rock music. Check website for schedule.

Club Deuce Bar & Grill 222 14th St, South Beach ☎ 305/531-6200. This grimy, noisy grunge bar is a remnant from pre-fabulous South Beach. Drinks are cheap, the crowd's indie, and there's a dartboard and pool table. Open until 5am.

Hoy Como Ayer 2212 SW 8th St, Little Havana ☎ 305/541-2631, 🌐 www.hoycomoayer.net. Despite the city's sizable Cuban population, this dark, smoky joint is about the only place in Miami to hear decent Cuban music. Check website for schedule.

Jimbo's inside the park at Virginia Key Beach, Virginia Key ☎ 305/361-7026. Renowned ramshackle bar where you can help yourself to a beer from a wheelbarrow filled with ice. A good place to chat with the old-timers.

Monty's Raw Bar 2550 S Bayshore Drive, Coconut Grove ☎ 305/858-1431. Drinkers often outnumber the diners (it's also a restaurant) at this tiki-style bar, drawn here by the gregarious mood and the views across the bay; the loud reggae music can be a bit overpowering, though.

 The Pawn Shop Lounge 1222 NE 2nd Ave, downtown ☎ 305/373-3511. Massive converted pawn shop eccentrically decorated with boots and chandeliers dangling from the ceilings. Cocktails are available – but most of the regulars drink beer.

 Purdy Lounge 1811 Purdy Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/531-4622. An unheralded beachside gem, this large neighborhood bar avoids clogging crowds of out-of-towners by its location on the less-touristed western side of South Beach. Open until 5am.

The Raleigh Bar inside the Raleigh Hotel, 1775 Collins Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/534-6300. This elegant hotel bar, with its lushly restored wood panelling, is a throwback to the heyday of cocktail culture.

Sky Bar inside the Shore Club hotel, 1901 Collins Ave, South Beach ☎ 786/276-6772. Sprawling outdoor bar draped around the hotel pool, with giant overstuffed square seats: dress up and expect a tough door unless you're staying at the hotel. Check out the smaller, attached Sand Bar, with its view of the beach and ocean.

 Tobacco Road 626 S Miami Ave, downtown ☎ 305/374-1198, 🌐 www.tobaccoroad.com. This friendly bar – Miami's oldest, from 1912 – is a favorite with locals for its exceptional live R&B. Check website for schedule.

Nightclubs

Cafe Nostalgia inside the Versailles Hotel, 3425 Collins Ave, Miami Beach ☎ 305/531-6092. This legendary (and itinerant) Cuban club has found yet another new home. Live music for an older crowd prevails early on; from 1am it's Latin hip-hip for 20-somethings.

Crobar 1445 Washington Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/531-8225. The hardest-partying club on the beach, playing heavy-hitting house mixed by well-known DJs. Expect a fairly large gay crowd.

Mansion 1235 Washington Ave, South Beach ☎ 305/532-1525. Large nightclub complex with six VIP areas, nine bars, and five dancefloors, each with its own style of music, hip-hop being the most popular.

Mynt Ultra Lounge 1921 Collins Ave, South Beach ☎ 786/276-6132. Lounge/dance club, washed in green light, with an enormous bar and large, black leather sofas. Expect a fierce door any night of the week.

Nocturnal 50 NE 11th St, downtown ☎ 305/576-6996. The spaced-out will enjoy the trippy images projected on the rooftop terrace's 360-degree IMAX-style screen as the deep house music thumps in their ears.

Club Space 34 NE 11th St, downtown
☎ 305/375-0001. This downtown pioneer has a rough decor and an illicit ambience: most people migrate here when the other venues shut down, for after-hours dancing until dawn – expect a friendly, loved-up, youngish crowd and big-name DJs.

The Florida Keys

7

FLORIDA | Key Largo

Folklore, films, and fiction have given THE FLORIDA KEYS – a hundred-mile chain of islands that runs to within ninety miles of Cuba – an image of glamorous intrigue they don't really deserve; at least, not now that the go-go days of the cocaine cowboys in the 1980s are long gone. Rather, the Keys are an outdoor-lover's paradise, where fishing, snorkeling, and diving dominate. Terrific untainted natural areas include the Florida Reef, a great band of living coral just a few miles off the coast. But for many, the various keys are only stops on the way to Key West. Once the richest town in the US, and the final dot of North America before a thousand miles of ocean, Key West has vibrant, Caribbean-style streets with plenty of convivial bars in which to while away the hours, watching the spectacular sunsets.

Wherever you are on the Keys, you'll experience distinctive cuisine, served for the most part in funky little shacks where the food is fresh and the atmosphere laid-back. Conch, a rich meaty mollusc, is a specialty, served in chowders and fritters. There's also Key Lime Pie, a delicate, creamy concoction of special Key limes and condensed milk, that bears little resemblance to the lurid green imposter pies served in the rest of the US.

Getting around the Keys could hardly be easier. There's just one route all the way through to Key West: the Overseas Highway (US-1). The road is punctuated by mile markers (MM), starting with MM127 just south of Miami and finishing with MM0 in Key West, at the corner of Whitehead and Fleming streets. As per Keys convention, addresses are given by the closest mile marker, along with the appellation of either "Oceanside" or "Bayside," depending on whether the place in question faces the Atlantic Ocean or the Florida Bay.

Key Largo

The first and largest of the keys, KEY LARGO, is a disappointing jumble of filling stations, shopping plazas, and fast-food outlets. The town does, however, provide a fine opportunity to visit the Florida Reef, at the John Pennekamp Coral Reef State Park, at MM102.5–Oceanside (daily 8am–sunset; $3.50 per car and driver, plus $2.50 for first passenger, 50¢ for each additional passenger, pedestrians and cyclists $1.50; ☎ 305/451-1202, 🌐 www.pennekampark.com). This protected 78-square-mile section of living coral reef is rated as one of the most beautiful in the world. If you can, take the snorkeling tour (9am, noon & 3pm; 2hr 30mins; $28.95, plus $4 for equipment), or the guided scuba dive (9.30am & 1.30pm; 1hr 30mins; $50; diver's certificate required). The glass-bottom boat tour (9.15am, 12.15pm & 3pm; 2hr 30mins; $22) is less demanding. For information and to make reservations for all of these tours, call ☎ 305/451-6300. On any of them, you're virtually certain to spot lobsters, angelfish, eels, and jellyfish along the reef, and shoals of silvery minnows stalked by angry-faced barracuda. The reef itself is a delicate living thing, comprising millions of minute coral polyps extracting calcium from the seawater and growing from one to sixteen feet every thousand years. Sadly, it's far easier to spot signs of death than life: white patches show where a carelessly dropped anchor, or a diver's hand, has scraped away the protective mucous layer and left the coral susceptible to terminal disease.

Practicalities

Key Largo has some of the widest selections of reasonably priced accommodation in the Keys, with many of the motels offering diving packages. Among the cheaper options, there's the basic but clean Ed & Allen's Lodgings, MM103.5-Oceanside (☎ 1-888/333-5536; 🌐 www.ed-ellens-lodgings.com; 📶), or the gloriously quirky, adult-only 🌟 Largo Lodge, MM101.5-Bayside (☎ 1-800/468-4378, 🌐 www.largolodge.com; 📶); for something more luxurious, try the huge, stylish chalets at the Kona Kai Resort, MM97.8-Bayside (☎ 1-800/365-7829, 🌐 www.konakairesort.com; 📶). Delicious, fresh seafood – including conch fritters – is available at 🌟 Crack'd Conch, MM105-Oceanside (☎ 305/451-0732), while Ballyhoo's Grill and Grog, in the median at MM98 (☎ 305/852-0822), serves good breakfasts.

Islamorada

Lying on Upper Matecumbe Key, ISLAMORADA (pronounced “eye-lah-more-RAH-da”) is a much more welcoming place to dawdle than Key Largo, fifteen miles to the north. Once there, make sure to take a trip across to Indian Key, one of many small, mangrove-skirted islands off Lower Matecumbe Key, once a thriving settlement founded by wrecker Jacob Houseman, but now boasting a riot of exotic plants and evocative ruins. At the southern end of Islamorada, there's good hiking at Long Key State Botanical Site, MM67.5-Oceanside (daily 8am–sunset; $3.50 per car and driver, plus $2.50 for first passenger, 50¢ for each additional passenger; ☎ 305/664-4815), a 965-acre expanse of tropical foliage and mangroves. Long Key has an excellent beach (a rarity in the Keys), and is a great base for deep-sea fishing, too.

